Mr. McClellan: I'm interested in the number of cases and then the breakdown of beneficiaries. I don't want to belabour the point. If it's difficult for the officials to pull it together on the spot, maybe the minister could submit it to me at a more convenient time. I don't want to waste the time of the House with a statistical overview, but I'd be grateful to receive that material.

Anxious as I am to participate in this estimate, I was in midflight during the estimates of the Workmen's Compensation Board downstairs and I'm kind of anxious to get back to them; I would make a couple of observations, however.

We will pay the price of this government's failure to undertake any serious measures on job creation for the last two years; we will pay that price in increased welfare costs, as we are already seeing in the supplementary estimates.

We will pay the price of the federal government's vicious folly in cutting back on unemployment insurance benefits, as though cutting back on unemployment insurance is somehow going to get rid of unemployment. It simply will transfer the burden of unemployment costs on to the province and then down on to the municipalities and on to the property tax. I think probably the minister shares my view to some extent with respect to the seeming obsession of the Liberal government in Ottawa to mutilate and destroy the unemployment insurance program at a time of astronomical unemployment.

Again, that will show up. It hasn't shown up yet, I suspect, as fully as it will over the next fiscal year when the full impact of the recent changes to the act begin to take place and people are cut off unemployment insurance and put on to the municipal welfare rolls.

The solution to each dilemma lies in the serious commitment on the part of government at both levels, though for now I direct my attention to the provincial government, to a serious program of job creation. We've gone through a winter with the worst unemployment, at least since the Diefenbaker years if not since the depression, with a complete absence of any serious winter works program that could have put people back to work. Yet we are prepared to spend scores of millions of dollars on general welfare assistance at a time of enormously high unemployment. That doesn't make any sense.

I don't know whether the government intends to go through this exercise year after year. In times of high unemployment, it seems to me that it is the height of folly. The government has moved, at least in the throne speech announcement, to speak to the need for work incentive programs. We are anxious to hear the details of work incentive programs. The minister knows we have been arguing for the past three years for a serious commitment on the part of the government—

Mr. J. Reed: Ask Gordon Walker.

Mr. McClellan: —to job creation and job placement and job training for social assistance recipients in this province. Let me say in passing, since the Minister of Correctional Services is in his chair, that we are not interested in work-fare. Thank you very much, we are not interested in slave labour.

Hon. Mr. Walker: You are not interested in work at all.

Mr. McClellan: We are not interested in your bully-boy approach to the problem. We are interested in changes to the legislation that will make it possible for social assistance recipients on family benefits to go back to work and to keep a generous portion of any earnings that they make. We are anxious for the legislation to be amended so that the current artificial restrictions on the number of hours that, for example, a single parent mother is entitled to work be removed altogether.

We are anxious that the earnings exemption of $100 a month be raised. We are anxious that the earnings exemptions for children under the Family Benefits Act for single-parent mothers be raised, and I suggest at least as a minimum, to $50 per child per month. We are anxious that the tax-back rate, the 75 per cent tax-back rate on single-parent mothers on family benefits allowance who are working part-time be revised drastically.

I am not able to produce the figure because I don't have the staff resources to be able to calculate the combination of tax-back rate and breakeven point that would be desirable. That is a job that requires technical people in the ministry.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order. I think the honourable member is straying somewhat and I wish he would return to the expenditures of the money under those supplementary estimates.

Mr. McClellan: I am pleased to see that you are paying attention, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. J. Reed: It is very hard, you know.

Mr. McClellan: I have made the point. Those are the kinds of things that need to be done if we are to provide employment opportunities for social assistance recipients that will permit them to return to work, either full time or part time, to raise their incomes to a level of adequacy through earnings which they are permitted to keep, rather than the present practice, frankly, of robbing social assistance recipients of their earnings, because that's what the legislation does now—

Mr. Warner: No wonder you are embarrassed.

Mr. McClellan: —and that the breakeven point and the tax-back rate be set at a point so that a person is able to work and still receive benefits to a level of real generosity, and by that I mean a level approaching $10,000-$12,000 a year.

In the meantime, we have supplementary estimates, Mr. Chairman, and you will be asking yourself what relevance does this have to the supplementary estimates. We have dollar amounts in the amount of $7.2 million which represent, I suppose, the tag end of the latest six per cent rate increase. What marvellous generosity this government displays, a six per cent increase in a year when the consumer price index rose 12.1 per cent.

Mr. Kerrio: Give them 20 per cent.

Mr. McClellan: Social assistance recipients in this province are living in poverty.

Mr. Warner: The minister knows that.

Mr. McClellan: I don't have to repeat chapter and verse. We make the point every estimate; and every year the minister shrugs and smiles and confesses his charming, sincere concern, and does nothing. He does nothing to give real purchasing power to social assistance recipients who have no other source of income but this ministry. They can't eat concern.

There is no way that your rent allowances cover rents; there is no way that your food allowances cover food; there is no way that anybody can live up to any adequate or decent standard on the kinds of rates provided under the Family Benefits Act or under the General Welfare Assistance Act.

We will pursue this again in the estimates when we get there in a couple of weeks. I say in passing again tonight that you are cheap with respect to the amount of money you are prepared to allocate. You are causing real hardship. You are causing real hardship to families in this province. Because, Mr. Chairman, you know as well as I do that it is not possible to stretch the family benefits dollar in today's rental market. It is not possible to purchase adequate, nutritious meals for families on the miserly pittance provided under the Family Benefits Act. That is not an exaggeration; the rates are too low.

I hope that we will hear in the budget, as well as more work incentive measures, a measure of social justice with respect to the rates. I hope that there will be—

Mr. Chairman: Order. We are not on the budget debate.

Mr. Warner: Seven million dollars!

Mr. McClellan: We are on the estimates debate with respect to the rate increase. We are on an estimates debate with respect to the last increase of income maintenance.

Mr. Breithaupt: Fourteen million dollars.

Mr. Chairman: The income maintenance.

Mr. McClellan: I will be concluding shortly.

Mr. Breithaupt: Good.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank heaven for small mercies.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Well at least you haven't called for my resignation tonight yet.

Mr. Warner: The evening isn't over.

Mr. Wildman: We might get Walker.

Mr. McClellan: I would invite the minister to respond now as to whether or not he intends to raise the family benefits rates; even to restore lost purchasing power since the previous rate increase let alone to bring them up to any adequate or decent standard of living.

Mr. Warner: It gets worse every year; it gets worse instead of better.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the honourable member opposite that I will not be recommending any rate increase out of the estimates that are before the committee at this point in time.

Mr. Warner: Of course not.

Hon. Mr. Norton: These are moneys that have already been expended in the past fiscal year and his question relates more clearly to estimates for the next fiscal year.

Mr. McClellan: Don't be so slavish to the agenda.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't know whether he wants me to continue to respond to the other matters he raised, or whether it was just that one specific response he was eliciting at this point. I would point out, just as a matter of interest—

Mr. McClellan: Make sure he doesn't stray out of order, though.

Mr. Warner: You never disappoint us.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —and this is not to try and suggest that the persons who are in receipt of assistance in this province, under either of the programs in force, are in any way living in the lap of luxury.

Mr. Wildman: Oh we wouldn't believe that, either.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would point out to you, though—

Mr. Warner: It's called poverty.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —that concepts of poverty are really relative in a very real sense—

Mr. Warner: Three hundred and fifty thousand in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —and I would suggest to you, in spite of the fact that I acknowledge there are persons living with considerable difficulty on their limited incomes—

Mr. Warner: In poverty; in poverty.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —they in fact, in real and relative terms for example, are doing better than persons who are gainfully employed in some of the medium-income groups in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Warner: In poverty; in poverty.

Mr. Wildman: Are you comparing them to southeast Asia?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would also point out to you that when one considers the increase that was awarded in January, although this other item is not part of our estimates, if one takes into consideration the tax credit change which the federal government made with respect to family allowance, which actually follows a pattern we had been recommending to them for some time in terms of tax credits as opposed to some of the other approaches that have been traditionally used, a family with two children in receipt of provincial benefits will have approximately a 13 per cent increase in their benefits—

Mr. McClellan: What period of time?

Hon. Mr. Norton: In this year.

Mr. Warner: Over what?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Over the level of benefits they received last year.

Mr. Warner: Doubling zero.

Hon. Mr. Norton: One has to look at the total income. I am obviously not suggesting this government is in any way trying to take credit for the tax credits, but it is also part of the income of those persons we seek to assist.

On the matter of work incentives I am very pleased the honourable member has, consistently, verbally been as supportive as he has of my efforts to get the support of other provincial governments—

Mr. McClellan: I see you weren't supporting my efforts.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —and also the federal government to seek the kind of flexibility that in my opinion is necessary under the Canada Assistance Plan so that we can introduce some truly realistic incentives for the persons who are on benefits to assist them to make that transition which too often is very risky and chancy if they have a young family for whom they have responsibility. I was hopeful I would have the response.

As I have told the honourable member before, I had discussions with the federal minister at the federal-provincial conference in the fall following an interprovincial ministers' conference where the other provinces endorsed our proposals. At the senior staff level, discussions have been taking place since January and I understand we are making significant progress. I had recently, at the senior staff level, requested that we receive a response early in April. With current developments at the federal level I am not sure I will get a response until after May 22. Perhaps good fortune will be on the side of the people of Ontario and this country and we will get a more responsive government following May 22. I am not suggesting—

Mr. Wildman: Cheering for Broadbent, are you?

Mr. Warner: Thank you very much. We appreciate it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I won't name names, of course, but I could suggest one person I wouldn't mind seeing as—

Mr. Warner: Nobody knows who his last name is.

Mr. Breithaupt: George Hees.

Mr. Warner: Joe Who.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Coming back to the question of work incentives, just to wind up, I think that is an area in which we will make studies, given the opportunities. It is very difficult for us to go it alone without co-operation from the federal government.

Mr. McClellan: Quebec appears to be going it alone. I haven't seen all the details in the Quebec scheme but they seem to be willing to go it alone.

Hon. Mr. Norton: As I understand the scheme, and I am waiting for a complete analysis of it, that is an income supplement program more than a work incentive program. They are not totally unrelated, but that does not necessarily agree with what we are talking about in terms of the work incentive program.

Mr. Warner: Bring the study in.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You did ask, and I can give you very briefly, a breakdown of the recipients and the difference between forecast and actual numbers of recipients. It is still the current fiscal year, isn't it?

We anticipated among the employables on general welfare assistance at 26,792. In fact the forecast average—we don't yet have the figures for February and March—but it appears the actual figure will be 29,813. Among those who are unemployable the projection was 65,827, and it would appear that the actual number of cases will be about 69,267 in total. For the unemployables, the figures are 39,035 projected and 39,454 actuals. The previous figures of 65,827 and 69,267 were the totals for both.

[9:15]

Mr. J. Reed: I find it a little awkward tonight talking about supplementaries. I know I would be out of order talking about supplementaries in general; so I won't. I will not mention the other $82 million of the total supplementaries of $96,165,000, because I suppose that would be out of order; so I will have to confine my remarks to the ministry at hand.

This supplementary is an admission by government of miscalculation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Oh no; we kept to our total spending.

Mr. J. Reed: Oh, it is not an admission of miscalculation?

Hon. F. S. Miller: We didn't change the totals.

Mr. J. Reed: This is something that the government planned at the beginning so it could keep it back to convince us that the budget really showed restraint and then bring on the supplementaries a little later to the tune of $96,165,000; is that it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The total doesn't change. It is totally opposite to savings.

Mr. J. Reed: You know, you fellows have been miscalculating this way ever since I've been here.

Mr. Kerrio: And 30 years before that.

Mr. J. Reed: I'll just go back to the beginning of this decade. It seems that every time we have a budget, we are bombarded at the last moment with a supplementary—in this case—a supplementary for the Ministry of Community and Social Services to the tune of about $14 million. I hope that's in order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: We are not talking about the last decade. We are talking about right now.

Mr. J. Reed: I don't deny for one minute the fact that we do need the money. As my colleague from Sarnia pointed out, there is no way we can deny the approval of that request for the $14 million. But I deplore the fact that we are having to approve it at the end of the fiscal year, at a time when the money has been spent, when the train is pulling out of the station, and there is no way we can really change this. So let's call it what it is: a gross miscalculation.

I would ask the minister—because I can't ask all the ministers; that would be out of order—how much is he going to miscalculate or change for next year's budget? What is he going to bring in for next year's budget to convince us that it is a budget of restraint, to convince us that he is doing the best job for the taxpayers in Ontario, and then turn around in the early spring of 1980 and say, "Oops, we need another $14 million or $15 million"? Or maybe it will be an escalated $14 million; maybe it will be $20 million the next time. I do deplore that, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Chairman, I have often admired the honourable member opposite as he slid about on his most recent popular television commercial. I also admire the way he attempts to slide a few things into this discussion tonight which perhaps don't properly belong here. I won't respond;

I'm sure he has already heard the Treasurer indicate that, in spite of the fact that these are supplementary estimates, they are within the total projected year's spending.

I would also ask him, rhetorically, what he would consider a reasonable percentage error might be, especially when you are dealing in an area of human services? I know the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan), who has now disappeared, has frequently criticized us in some areas for some slight underspending in terms of our projections. The member opposite has expressed concern about some overspending. I point out there was no error in terms of projection with respect to the six per cent increase. That was not a question of error, that was something that was introduced part way through the year and accounts for almost half of the $14.6 million. Even if you include that, if you take the whole of the $14.6 million as a percentage error in our budget, it is approximately one per cent.

I really don't think you can seriously suggest that in the development of very complicated projections in an area of human services, where we don't know accurately, certainly, how many people are going to face greater hardship because of unemployment 12 months hence, there was an error.

Mr. Wildman: Neither does the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Our analysts, some of whom are here before me tonight, are extremely competent people, as is evidenced by the fact that they can estimate and project that closely.

Mr. Kerrio: Sure you didn't borrow it from Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Norton: In fact, if you removed the six per cent increase as part of the $14.6 million figure, we are within about one half of one per cent on a budget of almost $1.3 billion. That, I think, is very careful, accurate, competent planning on our part.

Mr. B. Newman: Very poor.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Very poor? Oh come on, Bernie. I ask you to show me anybody in the private sector anywhere, or any other area of government, where they do such a fine job of planning as we do in my ministry.

Mr. J. Reed: I would just like to ask the minister two questions. First of all, does he think we should, from now on include a factor within every ministry estimate as to some projected percentage of overrun every year? Do you think that would be a suitable thing? The next thing I would ask him is why are supplementaries consistent virtually every year? Why are we locked into this?

Perhaps I am a little out of order in singling out the Ministry of Community and Social Services on this, but I find at the end of every year after the money is spent, we are faced with this kind of necessity to approve money which is simply added to the provincial deficit.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that in many instances there probably is some leeway that is worked into the calculations, but regardless of how you approach it you certainly cannot possibly be accurate on all of the possible variables.

Let me give you an example of one thing which occurred in this past year. I cannot speak for other ministers and I am sure the Treasurer can give you more accurate figures on this than I—

Mr. Wildman: I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —but it had a massive impact upon us in the province of Ontario that was entirely unexpected and beyond our control. It started last summer following our Prime Minister's conversion on the road to Bonn; or on the road home from Bonn, wherever his conversion took place.

Mr. J. Reed: Whenever you get in trouble you blame it on the feds.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, no; just let me give you an example of how complex the planning we engage in is. Among other things, a $55 million block fund transfer, increased funding which we were planning for this year, suddenly disappeared. It was a unilateral decision. In addition to that, there were significant changes introduced in the unemployment insurance system, which has an impact directly upon the programs of my ministry.

In addition to that, there were a whole host of other things which I toss out as a figure, and the Treasurer may or may not wish to confirm this, but in total, by the time these changes at the federal level are fully matured it's going to cost in this province somewhere between $400 million and $500 million. We cannot take the blame for those kinds of things. I'm sure the changes in unemployment insurance benefits alone have accounted for a significant part of this. It may yet be too early to say. We don't know for sure, it's hard to know yet exactly what the impact of them has been. Undoubtedly, they will have an impact upon us, probably about as much as half of this difference.

Mr. Wildman: I have a short question. Can the minister explain if this increase is mostly caused by increase in caseloads, or by the problems he mentioned with the federal government or through miscalculation? I think he's going to say it's not miscalculation. If it isn't one of those first two, is it the increase that he finally gave last summer? If he can answer that, then I would like to ask him a further question.

Hon. Mr. Norton: As I've already indicated, we would attribute about half of it, $7.2 million, to the rate increase. It's very difficult to break down all the other factors in terms of dollar figures but I would point out that it's not all in those programs alone.

For example, the drug program accounts for $1.6 million of it, and we can pretty clearly attribute that to factors such as inflation. In addition to that, additional drugs have been added to the list over the course of that period of time, which have had some effect upon it. There is an increased rate of usage; for whatever reason we can't be certain, but probably because more people are aware of the availability of the medication or more doctors are using prescribed medications for their patients. All those factors have contributed to a $1.6 million increase.

Mr. Wildman: If that's correct, is the minister aware, in considering his rate increase and the total income allowances for people on assistance, whether it be family benefits or whatever, that in northern Ontario today the fuel allowances are completely inadequate and that his rate increase in their incomes doesn't deal at all with these increases in inflation and so on?

I don't care if this is in order or not, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make the point that in northern Ontario people are really in trouble in terms of their fuel allowance.

Mr. Chairman: That is not quite the point.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It's unfortunate the honourable member chose that example. I believe he is aware of the fact that we will pay the actual costs of fuel under our program. In fact, the figures he cites are the minimum. Within the past two years, we have introduced a more flexible billing system, a system which will allow the people to submit their bills almost on a monthly basis so that they can receive the additional fuel allowance. There is no reason, under those circumstances, why persons ought not to be receiving full reimbursement for their increased fuel costs.

Mr. Sweeney: I have two questions for the minister. First of all, the minister referred earlier to the $11 million on municipal allowances and benefits. He also referred to his work incentive programs. I've brought this to his attention before and he keeps telling me it can't happen, but it happened in the city of Kitchener last week where a woman who was working and who couldn't get municipal assistance for day care had to quit her job and go on welfare. That's the kind of thing that builds up this $11 million.

On the second question, recently the city of Kitchener and the region of Waterloo, meeting with the social services department and also with the children's aid society have had serious conflicts and serious confrontations as to how much money they were going to approve. In both cases the social services administrator, particularly, indicated clearly that before the year was over he was going to need much more money than the municipality was going to approve. They just went through this charade year after year after year.

What kind of communication is there between your ministry and the local municipalities for dealing with this kind of situation where you both know that by the end of the year you're likely to have more cases and more need? Yet we have this tremendous public outcry, and it looks as if the social services department, the children's aid department, is asking for outrageous increases when year after year, just as you have indicated yourself, you've got to come back and say, "The need has gone up and we need more money." Isn't there some communication mechanism that we can get between you people and the municipalities and the public in those municipalities to prevent this kind of public confusion?

Mr. Wildman: That is the job for that member.

Hon. Mr. Norton: First of all, on the first point you've made relating to an individual who did not qualify for assistance with day care, I believe you said, or was unable to get it, it's difficult to respond to that without knowing something more about the specifics of the case.

Mr. Conway: It is happening.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You say it's happening, but all I'm saying is let's be more specific. There may be some reason for it. If you wish to give me the particulars of the case I'll certainly check into it and see what I can find out about it. But to answer it in the abstract is very difficult because I don't know why the persons might have been found not to be eligible if they were employed—a single mother I presume is what you're suggesting. I would have thought they would have had a high priority for a space for their child in the day-care program. Perhaps there were other factors of which I can't be aware at this point. I don't know, but I would be quite happy to check into it for you.

As far as the children's aid society and the local—I wasn't sure whether you were referring to children's aid society budgets or the local social services budget of the municipality or both.

Mr. Sweeney: Social services, but children's aid faces the same problem.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Sure, certainly. All right. There are certain things that are almost impossible to project accurately. The children's aid societies know when we approve their budgets it does not take into consideration the full possible, or even maybe expected, caseload during the course of that year. Rather than saying to them, "You have this amount of money and that's it, regardless of whether the number of children in care goes up or goes down or whatever," we approve the level of estimates in their budget at the beginning of the year based upon the previous year's experience. Then whatever increase in caseload they do experience during the ensuing fiscal year we cover at the end of that fiscal year by way of supplementaries. I don't know of any easier way to do it.

Some of them will say, "Why don't you give us the money at the beginning of the year?" But we don't know what their caseload increase is going to be 12 months in advance; nor do they, and it's almost impossible. You don't have a regular curve that you can project upon. In fact there has been in the past few years an occasional decline. So it's not as accurately predictable as one might wish. We're dealing in human services. We're not dealing in building bridges or something like that.

The same thing applies to the experience of the municipal welfare budget. Again, it's almost impossible to know. They have the same difficulties in terms of projecting figures and caseloads as we would, but we agree and they know we will meet the cost of any increased caseload. It's not as if we're leaving them high and dry, without support, with that responsibility. It's just that there is no way at the end of one year to be able to project what the economic conditions are likely to be 12 months later—what the increase might be in the caseload.

I really think that is a reasonable way to approach it—to say to the children's aid societies, "We will meet those costs when we know what they are, but we don't know what they're going to be yet." Basically, we say the same thing to the municipalities with respect to their general welfare assistance budget.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Chairman, I'm accepting the premise that both of these agencies cannot necessarily predict accurately. My concern is this. Since you have to do this sort of thing provincially each year, and since it seems that almost on an annual basis the municipal or regional social services department and children's aid society have the same problem, isn't there some way your ministry can communicate with the local regional government or the local municipal government and, through them, to the public—that is, explain that these things are almost inevitable? Can you not somehow avoid these annual confrontations and conflicts which end up with the local news media, the local public, the local municipal council and the local regional council calling these two agencies every name under the sun, and saying they're coming in with unrealistic budgets? Isn't there some way we can avoid that? We're creating a public climate.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't know whether the honourable member opposite is suggesting we should somehow try to eliminate the equivalent, at the municipal level, of the estimates debate when increased expenditures are being considered. I certainly would not suggest we do that at the provincial level. I don't think it's desirable at the local level. I don't think you can reasonably suggest that, after all these years, municipalities and children's aid societies don't know this is necessary. Surely they have some responsibility to communicate with their electorates, as we do with the people of this province.

To suggest there should not be some discussion, sometimes very controversial, about the expenditures of even the children's aid societies, and particularly those of the municipal governments—discussion that takes place at the times when they recognize increased expenditures—surely that is healthy in a democratic society. Surely it is just as healthy as it is for me to be accountable to you in this forum and in this type of discussion about my ministry's increased expenditures.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I didn't expect to get into the discussion. But I wanted to ask the minister whether or not this type of problem is prevalent in his ministry. This was brought to my attention concerning senior citizens and their old age pension and other supplementary cheques. They receive them a little too late, in some instances, to take advantage of discounts on utilities. Is this a problem with the Ministry of Community and Social Services?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'm not aware that we have received particular complaints. I know that as a member representing a constituency I have received complaints, but again they are usually related to Gains cheques or old age security cheques. I'm not aware of any serious problems with regard to paying municipal utility rates relating to the timing of our cheques.

Occasionally there are complaints around Christmas but that doesn't relate to utility cheques; it relates to the availability of funds for the Christmas season.

I might just point out that I think the provincial Gains cheques go out in the middle of the month. That shouldn't be a problem. I should think they would have them well in advance of the end of the month. The old age security cheque goes out about the 25th of the month. But I would point out that we do not send out the old age Gains cheques; that is done through the Ministry of Revenue.

Mr. B. Newman: I was just wondering whether you had a problem similar to the problem of these senior citizens with their old age pension cheques and Gains cheques?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Not that I'm aware of. There may be some individual cases.

Vote 2802 agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF TREASURY AND ECONOMICS

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The next items are those of the Treasurer. Do you need the table and the supporting staff, Mr. Treasurer?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I probably need all the support I can get.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That was a foolish question I asked. The items are found on page four.

On vote 1103A, economic policy program; item 1, economic policy:

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will give a brief statement on this. The supplementary estimates I have before the committee today relate to a portion of Ontario's share of the grant to the Ford Motor Company for the construction of the engine plant in Windsor.

It is estimated Ontario's share of the grant to Ford in the fiscal year 1978-79, just ending, will equal $5.3 million. Of this amount, $700,000 has been constrained from within my own ministry. The total spending by Ford on the engine plant for the period ending March 31, 1979, is expected to equal $12.7 million. The federal government will pay $7.4 million of this amount.

For the assistance of the honourable members I would like to review briefly the background of the decision to make the grant to the Ford Motor Company of Canada. In early 1978 the Ford Motor Company announced its intention to build a $533 million engine plant in North America. A number of preferred site locations were mentioned but it was quickly established that the company would either build a new facility in Windsor or expand an existing facility in Lima, Ohio.

Mr. Grande: You were taken in by that.

Mr. Warner: They held you up for ransom. Corporate blackmail.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Ohio was willing to offer assistance to Ford.

Mr. Warner: It's corporate blackmail.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If getting 7,000 jobs required blackmail, I will be blackmailed.

Mr. Warner: You know it is corporate blackmail.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am not calling it anything at all.

Mr. Warner: No, just give them the money and let them run.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Ohio was willing to offer assistance to Ford if Lima was chosen as the site for the new engine plant.

Mr. Warner: Nothing in return.

Hon. F. S. Miller: May I read, Mr. Chairman? In order for Ontario to receive this investment, some sort of assistance for Ford would be required. Ford indicated the cost disadvantage of locating a new facility in Canada totalled $67 million US. As a result of discussions among the Ford Motor Company, the federal government and Ontario, Ford decided to locate its new engine plant in Ontario. It was agreed a grant of $68 million would be made to Ford. The Ontario government would be responsible for $28 million of this amount.

Mr. Warner: A mere pittance.

Mr. Grande: You wanted to give them $30 million, didn't you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: This agreement was confirmed by an exchange of correspondence between the Premier of Ontario (Mr. Davis) and the president of the Ford Motor Company of Canada in August of last year.

I would like to review for members the nature of the investment which Ford has undertaken and to review conditions prevailing in the auto industry within Ontario and particularly in the area of Windsor. This major investment by Ford is both timely and a much needed investment for the Windsor area. The engine plant is a parts facility having economic characteristics that are highly favourable to the industrial development of Canada. The jobs this investment will produce are relatively high-skilled, providing higher income and a more stable job base. Moreover, the investment will make a positive contribution towards closing Canada's trade gap in auto parts with the United States. This deficit in 1978 was $3 billion.

Mr. Cooke: You don't even have the skilled workers. You are blind.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is everybody's fault, just remember that.

Reflecting the problems of the auto industry, the economic climate in Windsor was poor. Unemployment was close to 10 per cent.

Mr. Cooke: Twelve.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is close to 10 per cent, well above the provincial average.

Mr. Warner: Yes, that is close, Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There were prospects of a number of further layoffs in the auto industry. Bendix employment was down 150. Gulf and Western Bumper had long-term layoffs of 160. Ford had announced temporary layoffs of 1,500.

Mr. Cooke: And they have more.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Chrysler was moving one of its production facilities to Michigan. The depressed status of the Windsor economy made it important that every effort be made to get the Ford engine plant.

Investment by Ford will have significant impact. The new plant will represent a net direct addition to total employment in the area of 2,600 jobs. In addition, because the plant is a parts facility, it will require a substantial input from directly related feeder industries. The impact on this group could equal the 2,600 employment gain from the plant itself.

The Ministry of Industry and Tourism has estimated the additional economic activity generated from these workers and the income they bring into the area could raise the overall employment impact to between 7,500 and 8,000 workers.

Mr. Warner: Nothing in return. No equity.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Moreover, the new tax revenue that the Ford plant and its workers would generate for both Ontario and Canada could cover the public funding of the new plant in as little as 13 months.

Mr. Chairman, as a result of the Ford decision—

Mr. Warner: You wanted to give away money.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —the situation in Windsor is now much improved and investors are reacting to the renewed interest in this area.

Mr. Cooke: Unemployment is still 10 per cent.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Monarch company, for example, has announced a $65 million vegetable oil refinery for the area. Encast Incorporated of Switzerland is locating a $9 million casting plant in Windsor. United Cop is spending $21 million on a new deep water terminal on the Detroit River and, as a direct spinoff from the engine plant, Ford has announced a $52 million new aluminum casting plant to be located next to the engine-plant site.

This grant provides real and direct benefits for the economy and for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Ford is laughing all the way to the bank. You guys were conned.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on this particular supplementary estimate as it relates to my concern in the business world. I'm afraid this is a dangerous road that we're beginning to tread. I am somewhat disappointed that some of this same type of assistance isn't going to be made available to some of the smaller industries that, in fact, provide more of the job opportunities throughout Canada and Ontario than any other facet of government or industry.

Mr. Warner: It has to be an American corporate.

Mr. Kerrio: My background is free enterprise, truly free enterprise in the sense we don't get this kind of money available to us, we don't have the advantages of the multinationals in the arranging of prices. We don't have many of the advantages and I wonder if the government is going to make the same kind of commitment that we're making to these large corporations, to the very backbone of small business throughout the province. I hope that might be done. But if it is done, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you it should be done in the proper way of investing money which is on an equity basis. Those corporations, if they were truly the—

Mr. Samis: That's not the right thing, Vince.

Mr. Kerrio: —free enterpriser that needs help, would be most willing and prepared to buy back the equity the taxpayers of this province put up—

Mr. Samis: Do you support Petrocan, Vince?

Mr. Kerrio: —to finance the kind of program we're talking about here.

Mr. Wildman: You'd better rethink your position.

Mr. Samis: Are you a Petrocan man, Vince?

Mr. Kerrio: I don't know why those people over there are interjecting; I don't know what they know about business or free enterprise or working.

Mr. Warner: More than you do.

Mr. Samis: We pay taxes.

Mr. Kerrio: You people are takers, you have never given anything to this society—

Mr. Warner: A lot more than you do. You couldn't run a peanut stand.

Mr. Kerrio: —except a bunch of interjections on a subject you know nothing about.

Mr. Cooke: What did your leader say last July?

Mr. Kerrio: In any event, Mr. Chairman, we have very valid reasons for putting money into areas that will create jobs for the people of Ontario, but I submit to you that I'd like to see it done on an equity basis—and I don't mean stock purchase either. I mean an equity basis where a company, big or small, cannot take too much profit before the equity is repaid to the taxpayers of Ontario. I think that's a valid way to put up money in a very helpful manner.

Mr. Warner: We appreciate your support.

Mr. Kerrio: The other thing I have to mention, and I suppose the federal government could be criticized for this too—

Mr. Wildman: Really?

Mr. Kerrio: —is the fact that if we are somewhat comparable to the United States on about a 10 per cent basis in the use of automobiles and all the related trades, I think we're entitled to the manufacturing as it relates to the market in Canada. I can't believe that we should be entitled to a great deal more or a great deal less. If the government of Canada and the government of Ontario took the kind of stand they should take, I can't believe that Ford Motor Company and General Motors, which incidentally is making one of the best profit ratios of any of its plants in the world, and every other corporation with good management and good regulations wouldn't be building plants without this money.

Mr. Samis: Good free enterprise.

Mr. Kerrio: I would suggest, in winding up my remarks, that certainly I concur with what the government is doing in making moneys available to those people who need the money and in such a way that they are allowed to buy back the equity that the government would have in the corporation, and also with the stipulation they would not be able to take any kind of profits out until the money is repaid.

Mr. di Santo: The position of the NDP caucus on the grants to Ford has been made known since last year—

Mr. Kerrio: Nationalize them. You've only got one way to go.

Mr. di Santo: —contrary to the position of the Liberal Party which has been fluctuating. I can understand the torture of the free enterpriser who all at once—

Mr. Kerrio: Certainly you don't. You have never been there, so how could you understand it?

Mr. di Santo: —finds himself in a position to give $6 million to $8 million to one of the largest multinational corporations even though he preaches small business every day. I understand that as well as I understand the position of the Treasurer who said that this grant was unorthodox.

Mr. Warner: He just gives the money away.

Mr. di Santo: I think he tried to reconcile his position with the position of the previous Treasurer who was opposed, and who in his speeches made it quite clear he was opposed to this kind of grant.

At this point, for the record I would like to correct the statement of the Treasurer which is inaccurate historically because it is true that Ford in its presentation said that initially it needed $75 million and subsequently that it needed $68 million. It isn't even true and the Treasurer knows it. He can check with his tax and fiscal policy branch that the comparison made by Ford was between an entirely new greenfield plant to be built in Ontario and an addition to the plant existing in Lima, Ohio. Therefore the cost differential was distorted in favour of Ford.

Apart from that, according to TEIGA calculations, the Ontario tax comparison is in our favour. But if our sales tax is higher, it certainly could not be as much as $14 million higher than Ford mentioned in its presentation. The reason given by the Treasurer for the grant to Ford was that the government was motivated by the fact that unemployment was high in Windsor and that it would create 2,600 jobs. I don't think it's possible for the minister to rationalize that the new investments he mentioned in his statement, except for the aluminum plant and Ford, are a direct result of that grant because it just doesn't follow.

To give to Ford $20 million from Ontario is not only unorthodox but it's a wrong way of choosing priorities because we know that the problem of jobs in the manufacturing industry will not be solved by buying job by job. We know that even if we are creating 2,600 jobs in Windsor, in January 1979 we had an $89.3 million deficit in the auto pact and if each job in Windsor costs $190,000, in January we lost only 470 jobs as a result of the deficit in the auto pact.

This means in effect that the problem is much more complex and goes to the very concept of the auto pact, the way it is operated and the way it has been administered by both the federal and the provincial government. A very high responsibility falls on this government because we know 90 per cent of the automobile industry is in Ontario and we have more than 105,000 workers employed in it in this province.

We know that since 1971 we have had constantly a very huge deficit in the auto trade in general, but especially in parts and accessories. As the Treasurer mentioned, in 1978 we had $3 billion deficit which, at the cost of $190,000 per job, means a net loss of 15,600 jobs in the parts manufacturing sector for Ontario.

Mr. Grande: That is how you create jobs.

Mr. di Santo: How much does the government intend to spend in order to create 15,600 jobs? Where is the government going to beg jobs—from General Motors for another plant somewhere else in Ontario, from Chrysler and from American Motors?

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this government doesn't understand, even though they pretend to be free enterprisers, what a modern enterprise is. Above all, since 1975, they didn't understand, despite our suggestions and the suggestions of the auto workers—and there was a very long correspondence from the treasurer of the United Auto Workers on the dangers he saw inside the auto pact and how staggering the trade deficit was becoming for Canada.

I would also like to make a final point, because we want to come to the supplementary estimates for Health. Despite the optimism of this government, we know that the auto pact will work against the best interests of Canada. There won't be a balance in the trade between Canada and the United States, because the four big companies are practically dictating to Canada the policy that they want, especially in the parts sector which is crucial to the manufacturing sector of Canada.

Not only that, but there is another aspect that is really frightening. That is that despite what the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) has been saying recently—as recently as March 15, 1979—last year in Canada, we had in a vital sector, research and development, spent only $8 million. According to the calculations of the Science Council of Canada, $230 million went to the United States from Canada. For this reason we think that to give one grant to a company doesn't solve the problem of our economy.

We also know from a study made in Canada by Data Resources of Canada that the calculation of the deficit is in the range of $10 billion in 10 years. That's without calculating the $60 billion in investments that the four major automobile companies have decided on in the next years, in order to change their cars to models that consume less oil.

Last spring, the former Treasurer, Darcy McKeough, published a paper which called for a fair share of the North American market for Canada. I don't think one of the ways he lists to achieve that goal is legitimate. Because, if we are one-tenth of the North American market we should retain one-tenth of the $60 billion investment if the auto pact is to work in the best interests of Canada and the United States. I don't think we solve that problem, which is a very crucial problem—the problem of the major investment which will revolutionize the automobile industry in the next few years. We think that creating 2,000 jobs is good electorally, it is good demagoguery, but it doesn't solve the economic problems of this province. For this reason, we oppose that grant, even though we cannot vote against the supplementary estimates at this time.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I think we spent some time on this—I believe the date was in June, if I remember correctly. At that time we had quite a discussion on it. I think, no doubt, we supported it at that time and I am willing to stand up and support it here today.

I suppose we would all like to figure out some way to have that money back in the government coffers as soon as possible. No doubt it will remain with that industry because of the amount of employment it will bring to the district.

The strange thing about all this, I suppose, is what this much money, in grants of $28 million from Ontario and $40 million from the federal government, would have meant to the parts industry. They claim they need more money for investment to build more parts in Canada. I think the Reisman report on the auto pact claims that the auto parts industry is not doing as much expansion in Canada as it could do, although the parts manufacturers disagree with that to some extent.

The interesting part about this, Mr. Chairman, is that the members to our left, of course, have been adamantly opposed to this, to some extent. They are opposed to it in a way, but yet when the sod-breaking ceremony went on down there and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) represented the Premier (Mr. Davis) who couldn't be there—

Mr. Cooke: It was a free lunch at Ford.

Mr. Ruston: —and the Prime Minister of Canada was there with the shovel—

Mr. Wildman: You have been around with a shovel for some time.

Mr. Ruston: —and Mr. Bennett, the president of Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited, it was interesting that the members for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) and Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) were following the Prime Minister around closely, hoping they would get a glimpse of the camera. There was the CBC cameraman going around; there was the member for Windsor-Sandwich—he is only five foot five or something—just checking around the Prime Minister, trying to get his face in the picture, you know. It was amazing.

And who was in the front row? Well, I thought maybe a Liberal—I might get a chance to get up there some place—but oh no, the member for Windsor-Riverside was right in the front row. Do you want it a little louder, Mr. Chairman? Right in the front row. He wanted to get his hand on that silver shovel.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Point of order, Mr. Chairman: I don't mind his commenting about the NDP, but talking about short people is not fair.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I agree with the Treasurer.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Minister, I have no objection to short people. My wife is only five foot two, so I can't talk against anybody who is short.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: And she is the boss.

Mr. Ruston: And she is the boss, yes.

Mr. Warner: Somebody should be.

Mr. Ruston: But, you know, in the debate in June, not one of the Windsor members spoke on that. The member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) did, but not one of the members from the third party. They didn't want to get up and speak against their leader and then go down and help to break the sod. It's strange what goes on there.

Mr. Chairman, I don't want to take up any more of the time of the House.

Mr. Grande: You made your contribution.

Mr. Cooke: I find those comments very interesting. Ford paid for the lunch and I couldn't—the plant is being built in my riding.

Mr. Ruston: There's no such thing as a free lunch.

Mr. Cooke: The member for Essex North really didn't talk about the issue, and this is a very important issue in Ontario. It is very important to Windsor. Instead, he decided to spend his time talking about how I sat in the front row at the sod-turning of the Ford plant. It is a waste of his time and it shows what his understanding of this very important issue is.

Mr. Gaunt: It shows how you fellows act when you are not home.

Mr. Cooke: I want the members of this Legislature to understand, I know the people of Windsor-Riverside understand, that we in Windsor—my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) and myself—very much appreciate the jobs that will be created in my riding. There is no doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Say it again.

Mr. Cooke: But we don't think the end justifies the means; and in this case we disagree with the means by which that plant is there.

Mr. Warner: Your corporate giveaway program.

Mr. Cooke: The Treasurer tonight referred to the health of the auto industry—

Interjections.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Windsor-Riverside has the floor.

Mr. Cooke: The Treasurer referred to the health of the industry in Windsor; and he mentioned a plant, Gulf and Western, which is established also in my riding. I would like to point out to the Treasurer—if the Treasurer will listen—that Gulf and Western, which produces bumpers for Chrysler in Windsor, has gone down from 400 employees just a few years ago to below 100 at present—something like 85 as of the last layoffs that took place two weeks ago.

One of the reasons the number of employees at that plant has decreased is because Chrysler is sourcing those parts not from Windsor where they are available, but from Detroit. That's how the auto pact works. Chrysler's Mr. Hurly, when he decided to close down—I shouldn't say Mr. Hurly decided, we all know those decisions are made in Detroit—but when Chrysler decided to close down the truck plant in Windsor a year ago and eliminate 750 jobs, Ted Bounsall and I went and talked to the president of Chrysler Canada. He told us the problem with the auto parts sector was that if more companies were established and they could source more of the parts from Canada, they would; but there are just no more manufacturers.

Here is a case where Gulf and Western can produce the bumpers, but the latest contract from Chrysler in Windsor went to a Detroit firm rather than a Windsor firm. Of course, we know the federal government does nothing under the auto pact. As far as the provincial government is concerned, I have written to the Minister of Industry and Tourism and the letter I got back from him said, "That's just a problem of the nature of a foreign-owned economy."

Mr. Wildman: What is he doing about it?

Mr. Cooke: He is not doing anything about it, and I guess we can't expect him to do anything about it. From the government's past record we know what to expect.

Another parts manufacturer in my riding, Champion Spark Plug, which produces, obviously, spark plugs, has had layoffs this year; it had layoffs last year, and is expecting more layoffs in the future. Why are they expecting layoffs? Because the parent company in Toledo will not allow that plant to export any of its products outside Canada. It is only allowed to supply our own economy, our own market.

I again wrote the Minister of Industry and Tourism regarding that problem, and again he answered, "That's the nature of a branch-plant economy."

What is your government doing about the problems of a branch-plant economy? Nothing at all.

What was your government willing to do when Chrysler decided to eliminate 750 jobs by moving the truck plant from Windsor to Detroit? Nothing. You said, "There is nothing we can do about it, because the plant was 62 years old." You knew as well as we did they were moving the production to a plant in Detroit, the age of which is the same, 62 years.

The Treasurer might remember that 25 years ago in Windsor the Ford Motor Company made another very major move, but that time they eliminated 5,000 jobs from Windsor. They moved those jobs and put 5,000 of our people out of work. Maybe the next time the Treasurer is in Windsor he will let me know, and I will take him on a tour of the Drouillard Road area that happens to form part of my riding. That happens to be the area that has the highest crime rate and is the most rundown area of our whole city. I suggest to him that the time that area started to decline was when Ford moved out and that is what we see from a multinational corporation that has no particular allegiance to any community or any country. They simply moved out of Windsor, picked up and left, and destroyed a very significant area of my riding and of the city of Windsor.

Mr. Warner: They pillage and you reward them for it.

Mr. Cooke: Let's take a look at the grant and let's take a look at the guarantees that the provincial government got from Ford.

Were there any guarantees that the contracts for construction of that plant would go to Canadian firms? No. I believe there were five companies that bid for the contract and out of those five two were foreign owned.

Were there any guarantees that the skilled tradesmen that would be required for that plant would be Canadians or people from Ontario? No, there was no guarantee of that. In fact the case is that by 1982 in Windsor we are going to need approximately 1,300 skilled tradesmen. We have a requirement for 300 right now. The facts are that the needs are not going to be met. They can't be met. The people from the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, the industrial training branch, confirmed that to me when I talked to them.

So what is going to happen? It is already beginning to happen. The Ford Motor Company certainly will get their skilled tradesmen. They will put an ad in the papers and the skilled tradesmen from the small tool and die shops in Windsor and other areas will move to Ford because the salary rates are higher and the small tool and die companies will go out of our country and ask the federal government to loosen up the immigration rules so they can import workers. The Treasurer may say that won't happen, but the facts are that the small tool and die companies have already approached the federal MPs in our area and the mayor of our city to see if that could be accomplished.

The results from the establishment of this plant have not all been positive, let me tell you, in Windsor.

Hon. F. S. Miller: My father was an immigrant. I don't mind that.

Mr. Cooke: Well, I think the reason for spending $68 million on the Ford plant was not to import people to fill the jobs. The purpose was to create the 2,800 jobs for people in Ontario and Canada.

Mr. Warner: You will do whatever the Americans tell you to do.

Mr. Cooke: Let's take a look at some of the things that have happened in Windsor since this plant was announced. The price of housing has gone up 25 per cent since August of last year.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It was depressed.

Mr. Cooke: The market might have been depressed but now if you want to bring our housing prices up to the price of housing in Toronto so that no one can afford a single-family dwelling—if that's what you want to see done then again another city will be faced with the people from low-income families and middle-income families who will just never be able to afford a single-family dwelling. The cost of housing has gone up 25 per cent since August of last year.

What is your government willing to do now to come in and make sure that lots are put on at a reasonable cost so that ordinary people, working people who move in to fill these jobs, can afford housing?

I would like to know from the Treasurer tonight what the actual cost of establishing that plant in Windsor is. We know there was a $68 million grant. What about the other money—the money that has to be put in to speed up the construction of the expressway—millions of dollars to supply the other services that had to go in? I would suspect that the cost of that plant, with all the services taken into consideration, is well over $100 million. A lot of the initial money is going to have to come from the mill rate, local property taxes, and we will not see the benefits of increased revenue for the city until well into the future. It is certainly not going to happen until 1982 or thereabouts.

The Treasurer thinks that the government of Ontario has done something that's very popular all across Ontario and I would suspect that he thinks it is very popular in Windsor. I might indicate to the Treasurer that in my last Queen's Park report one of the questions in the questionnaire was, "Do you favour government grants to companies in order to create jobs, i.e. Ford?" Well, I got 600 replies and 47 per cent of the people that replied agreed and 46 per cent were opposed. The people in Windsor and the people in Windsor-Riverside are very divided on whether the proper means was used to get this plant.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It was 75 per cent in favour in my riding.

Mr. Cooke: Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the Treasurer and the members of the Legislature that many people in Windsor laugh at the provincial government, and the federal government and even some of the contractors and people who are going to be supplying machines to Ford are laughing, because Ford were already beginning negotiations with some of the machine companies before the government ever gave the grant.

We knew that plant was coming into Windsor, and I suspect if the provincial government and the federal government had really pushed Ford to the wall that plant would be built. Ford has owned that property for many years and it would have been there anyway.

Mr. Warner: The government was taken, you know it.

Mr. Cooke: Instead, $68 million has been given to Ford. Now in Windsor we're having—as we are all across the province of Ontario—hospital cutbacks, beds cut back. People are phoning my constituency office and saying: "If we can afford to give $68 million to Ford, why can we only afford to give one per cent to the children's aid society as an increase in Windsor?" That's what it is, because you're penalizing them for over-expenditures last year.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is a little different.

Mr. Cooke: You know the process that's used with children's aid societies.

Mr. Warner: You have to do what Ford tells you.

Mr. Cooke: In the past, the provincial government has picked up the deficit. This year, because of your restraint program—you've used a different procedure.

People of Windsor call my constituency office and ask: "Why should people have to wait in line and stay overnight in emergency rooms in hospitals when you give $68 million to Ford Motor Company, a company that's made $.5 billion profit in the last four years?"

I could go on and on and on, because this whole issue is very upsetting to me.

Mr. Kerrio: Please don't.

Mr. Cooke: I do want to conclude by saying we in Windsor are very pleased we're going to get 2,800 jobs, but we don't think the end justifies the means.

Mr. Kerrio: You can't have it both ways.

Mr. B. Newman: Coming from the city of Windsor I certainly have a responsibility to make a few comments concerning the $68 million that is being given by the two levels of government to the establishment of the Ford Motor Company plant in the community.

I don't agree with giving money to buy any type of industry, but at this time it looked as if our backs were against the wall and we either had to do this or we may have lost it. I say "may," because I don't think that Ford Motor Company would have gone anywhere in the province of Ontario or even in any of the US states. Their production from this plant was essentially for the US, and common sense would say it would be better to be manufacturing those motors or engines and shipping them approximately 15 or 20 miles to the Dearborn plant, or maybe 35 miles to a Flat Rock plant, rather than bringing them in from Ohio, which is possibly three or four times the distance.

I think the plant would have been established in the city of Windsor rather than in the state of Ohio, in spite of the incentives Ohio may have offered to the plant. We, in Windsor, appreciate the plant coming in. Even though we don't appreciate buying a plant, we think that in this instance we didn't really have a choice, and the government didn't think it had a choice.

But does the minister realize that General Motors is spending $435 million on updating their transmission plant without one cent from the provincial and/or federal government? There's a $435 million addition going on that plant and I think it's going to create about 1,700 jobs in the Windsor area.

One of the things that disturbs me is we're always talking about dollar balance of trade and saying if we export $3 billion worth of products from Canada we should balance it off by importing approximately the same from the US. Instead of looking at the dollar point of view, I would rather see us look at the job point of view. If our products are made by providing, let's say 100 million job hours for a whole year, then we should be importing from that other jurisdiction the same amount we sell to them. If we consume 10 per cent of the automotive manufacturing in the North American continent, then we should be exporting 10 per cent.

Instead of in dollars and cents, we should have more of a balance in jobs. I know one can't strictly have it as jobs because some jobs don't balance off as easily as we think they do. When it comes to parts manufacturing, I understand that parts manufacturing is highly automated, so it may not create as many jobs as the assembly. But when we talk to our American friends, we should not only ask for jobs for the assembling of cars and manufacturing of parts, we should also ask for the jobs that are involved in research and development.

That's a thing we're forgetting about. We're allowing all of that to be done in the United States, whereas we should be having our share of it. All I ask for is our fair share, I don't necessarily say in Ontario, which would be the logical place, but at least in Canada, preferably in Ontario.

This issue has been debated earlier this year, or sometime last year. I don't intend to make any more comments on this, other than to say we appreciate the fact that the Ford Motor Company is setting up there.

Mr. Warner: You have a new position now.

Mr. B. Newman: I don't think it's going to create the number of jobs that you mention. I hope it does, I hope it creates a lot more.

Mr. Cooke: Mark MacGuigan says it's going to produce 16,000 jobs.

Mr. B. Newman: But it is causing one problem that has not probably been mentioned by any of the previous speakers. We are getting a lot of people coming into the community thinking that the jobs are going to be there tomorrow. We know that the jobs won't be available up until the time the plant has been completed and has been in operation.

As far as the E. C. Row Expressway is concerned, actually I was on city council at the time we had planned that. That was supposed to have been completed, if I am not mistaken, some six or seven years ago. It is now probably going to be completed, or almost completed, as a result of a need for this E. C. Row Expressway because the products from the Ford plant are essentially going to use the E. C. Row Expressway to Huron Church Road and across the Ambassador Bridge to the US—not all of the products but some of the products.

That's the complete content of my remarks; I hope the minister makes some reply concerning them.

Mr. Warner: On today's position.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'd like briefly to respond to most of the speakers. I will begin by saying that I don't think the previous Treasurer, nor myself, basically believe in giving money to corporations.

Mr. Warner: But you did.

Mr. di Santo: That's what you do.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact remains, as I've said, that the problem is not just Canada-US, it has become worldwide.

Mr. Warner: They're lined up at the door.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was reading last week in the London Times about the dealings going on currently in Europe between Italy,

Spain, France, Germany and now even eastern communist countries—

Mr. Samis: Darcy McKeough couldn't stomach it and left.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —to try to get a major plant from Ford over there. It makes our money look like peanuts.

Mr. Samis: That doesn't make it right.

Mr. Wildman: Multinational pirates.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I've looked at the letter the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada which was read into the record here, which said in effect: "For goodness' sake, don't let Ontario blow this one. Make sure you give them money and Ontario gives them money." I looked at some of the comments from members of the NDP from Windsor around the time the Ford deal started to be discussed, stating that we had to do something like grants, giveaways or whatever it was.

Mr. Samis: Let's hear it again.

Mr. Warner: An NDP member never said that.

Mr. Grande: Go on and quote them.

Mr. Warner: That's not true and you know it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: "Would the minister consider making an analysis of what parts may well be produced in this area and think of giving whatever loan incentives may be necessary to encourage the manufacturers in Ontario to move into those proven areas?"

Mr. Wildman: That's not a grant or a giveaway.

Mr. Warner: Loans? You wouldn't know the difference between a loan and a giveaway.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That was the member of the NDP for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall).

Mr. Lawlor: You think you can blind us with your jacket, don't you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm going to finish, with some luck. I've tried to remain calm and quiet. Obviously small business is the part we want to see grow in Canada. Obviously small business has to be the focus of my employment development fund. Those are the people we have to see grow to become big.

Mr. Lawlor: Taking partisan advantage. Talk about giveaways. You'd sell the province down the river to whatever multinational came along.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There's no use pretending a small business can become a manufacturer of automobiles. Even the big companies are having trouble.

Mr. Lawlor: You can't even look serious, or you shouldn't.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Chrysler is having trouble surviving. American Motors is having trouble surviving. Ford, in spite of the profits referred to, has had some troubles.

Mr. Warner: Give them some more money.

Mr. Lawlor: They are all terrifyingly in debt. Everybody is in debt to them.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You talked about equity. Basically equity is something socialists believe the state should have. I'm not totally opposed. There are days and times when equity is justified.

Mr. Lawlor: Equity.

Mr. Warner: To people. Only to people.

Mr. Lawlor: When you come to that, talking relates—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Please, my friend. Your poems may be great but your interjections are lousy. Full of sound and fury, signifying nothing.

Mr. Lawlor: Isn't it funny what perceptions we have?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Ah, perceptions, projections, perpetuations.

Mr. B. Newman: He's going to write another book.

Mr. Eakins: Will this cut back on Ontario Development Corporation funding?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I won't comment on that because that will be properly a budgetary item.

Mr. Lawlor: You'd sell your province down the river.

Hon. F. S. Miller: My friend from Lakeshore, we'll miss you. We'll miss you.

Mr. Lawlor: With your atavistic throwback, your antediluvian—

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am not an atavist. I came from England.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order.

Mr. Grande: Top that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The real return to a capitalistic government is the employment opportunities offered in the country—

Mr. Samis: Capitalist. Return to Darcy now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —the return to the state in its legal involvement, the collection of taxes from employed people, the collection of taxes from corporations that are making profits—

Mr. Warner: Everyone chokes on that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —the general wealth generated by having a parts producer of this nature in Canada, basically exporting to the States, buying many of its supplies from Canadian companies.

Mr. Warner: Just keep giving them money, handing out money.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Remember, the independent parts manufacturers in Canada are basically Canadian companies. These people will be given a basic incentive by having a major parts components plant here.

Mr. Warner: You were conned.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's the parts side we are in deficit on. It has been said many times: $3.2 billion deficit in parts; $2 billion surplus on the production or assembly of automobiles.

Mr. Warner: You were conned. They took you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would only suggest that if you got a 46-43 split on your return, it really wasn't characteristic of the southwestern Ontario reaction.

Mr. Warner: Don't ever wander down the midway at the CNE.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have no idea what other reactions people got, but we also did some checking. I can tell you that anything I heard from members said 60 to 70 per cent of the people in southwestern Ontario were firmly in favour.

Mr. di Santo: Bravo. Bravo.

Mr. Grande: That's 130 per cent. How did you get that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was in Chatham during the election campaign down there, and I tell you, the fellows from International Harvester understood there were jobs being created and that they were profiting.

Mr. Wildman: There was one guy in Chatham who didn't agree with it though.

Mr. di Santo: Darcy McKeough.

Mr. Wildman: Right.

Mr. Warner: Tell us what Darcy said.

Mr. Samis: The member for Chatham-Kent.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We have in our agreement the fact that Ford must shop and buy Canadian, providing Canadian components are available and competitive in quality, performance and price in that plant.

Mr. Warner: Don't ever wander down the midway. They'll pick your pockets.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You know, if I listened to the arguments of the member for Windsor-Riverside, really, we should go down and implore plants to close so housing would drop out of sight, so there would be no need to build any roads, so that in fact we could have a nice return, but we had to do nothing and nothing had to be invested by any municipality in the services that are required for industry.

Mr. Cooke: Get serious.

Mr. Samis: Straight face.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Read what you said tomorrow, and if you weren't telling me that in fact every municipality—

Mr. Warner: Go back to Santa's Village.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —that is lucky enough to have an industry come in faces certain requirements for infrastructure—

Mr. Cooke: Now get in there and build some housing and get your Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) to do his job.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —and I'll tell you that most of them are just delighted to have the problem of providing infrastructure so there will be jobs for the citizens in that community. Windsor is no different.

Mr. Warner: You look better in Santa's Village.

Hon. F. S. Miller: My colleague on my left just gave $3.3 million extra to the city of Windsor.

Mr. Cooke: What about the $50 million we lost, Mr. Treasurer?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No one can ever say we chose Windsor and assisted it because a lot of our own party members were there.

Mr. Cooke: And you will never ever; remember.

Hon. F. S. Miller: This party showed it was willing to help a community in Ontario because we represent all of the people in Ontario, not just those communities where people elect our members.

Vote 1103A agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

The committee met at 3:51 p.m.

ANNUAL REPORT, 1977,
WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr. Chairman: I'm going to call the meeting to order. The Liberal members are on their way, I understand. Mr. McClellan is the first to speak.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to spend a few minutes on a section of the act, section 42(5). Let me say, first, that I feel that section 42(5) is one of the most important sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act because it provides the financial underpinning to the rehabilitation service. It provides an opportunity for the wage-loss supplement. It gives a measurement of financial security to an injured worker who has to go back to modified employment, to a person who can't go back to his old job, and therefore it's an enormously important part of the act.

I say in passing that we're pleased to note that over some recent period of time the granting of awards under section 42(5) has been much more common and has been expedited. I want to congratulate the board for making much more use of section 42(5) and to continue to make even more use of it in the future, because rehabilitation, as Mr. Laughren pointed out when he was giving his remarks yesterday, is absolutely top priority with us. When we get to rehabilitation I want to say more about the rehabilitation program, but let me just deal now with section 42(5).

First, I'd like somebody at the board to explain to me, in simple language for my benefit, how a benefit is calculated. I'm assuming a maximum benefit, a total benefit under 42(5). What is it that the Workmen's Compensation Board provides to an injured worker under section 42(5) and how is it calculated?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I'm going to ask Mr. Kerr to answer that.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Thank you. As indicated the purpose of section 42(5) is to supplement a permanent disability award which has been granted under section 42(1). It's recognized that the permanent disability award under section 42(1) is for the clinical physical disability, but there are some cases where the nature of the disability, in accordance with the wording of section 42(5), creates an impairment of earning capacity which is significantly greater than is usual for the nature and degree of his injury. That's where section 42(5) comes into play. When we have a case in that category we have the authority to provide a supplementary award, supplementary to the clinical pension, but it's not to exceed what the person would have received had he been 100 per cent permanently totally disabled.

Mr. McClellan: That is to say the award cannot exceed—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's the total of the two, the total of his clinical pension plus his monthly supplement, cannot exceed what he would have received had he been permanently totally disabled. That's the limitation.

Mr. McClellan: When you're sitting down to calculate somebody's entitlement under section 42(5), and here we're assuming somebody is receiving the maximum possible entitlement, how do you calculate it in relation to old and new earnings? Could you explain to me the formula you use in calculating a maximum entitlement under section 42(5)?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I suppose, to do that, I should indicate how we calculate the pension for the clinical disability under section 42(1), since that is the starting or base point.

Let's take, as an example, somebody who is earning the maximum under the act: $16,200 a year. That works out to earnings of $311.54 a week. So if we take his earnings basis as $311.54 a week, from that we take 75 per cent of that amount—the same as we would if he was temporarily disabled—and we apply the percentage of permanent disability. Let's say, for example, he is 50 per cent clinically disabled.

Mr. McClellan: You don't have to elaborate on that.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: So, whatever that works out to be—in actual fact, it would work out to $506.25 a month in the example I gave you. So, that is his clinical—

Mr. McClellan: Fifty per cent?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Fifty per cent. So, in the example I give you his clinical disability would produce a monthly pension of $506.25.

Now, section 42(5) can be applied, under the circumstances described, and he could receive another $506.25 a month. This would be equivalent to 100 per cent permanent total disability.

Mr. McClellan: This is assuming that he is not working?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, sir.

Mr. McClellan: What if he is working?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If he is working, we take into account his earnings; so that his earnings, plus his permanent disability pension and his supplement, would not exceed $1,012.50 per month.

Mr. McClellan: This is the point where I am having trouble. You say that when he is back at work his earnings, plus his permanent partial disability, plus his wage loss supplement under section 42(5), may not exceed his total disability?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes. In the application of 42(5), we have regard for income related to the disability. Obviously, he has been placed by the vocational rehabilitation division—or through the efforts of his employer—in suitable employment. He can't go back to his former employment, but he is capable of earning a certain level of income. Therefore, that income is considered when determining the amount of the 42(5) supplement.

Mr. McClellan: I have clarified that in my mind. Now, tell me how you go about calculating the entitlement under 42(5), if a man is working. What kind of formula do you use? Tell me how you go about calculating it if a man is back at work.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think I just described that to you.

Mr. McClellan: There are a number of ways you can do it and, depending on how you do it, you end up with a larger or a smaller supplement under 22(5).

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Section 42(5).

Mr. McClellan: Section 42(5). I am having trouble with that number.

I understand that you take the average of his pre-accident weekly earnings, his earnings base before the accident, and—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That is correct. We do that for all—

Mr. McClellan:—subtract that from current weekly earnings and then make up 75 per cent of the shortfall. Is that an accurate statement of how you would go about it?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, that's for temporary partial disability. When the man is temporarily partially disabled and goes back to modified employment he is paid 75 per cent of his wage loss during the period of temporary partial disability. We are now talking about temporary permanent disability. You are quite right in saying that when we are calculating these things for the basis we take the man's earnings for the 12 months prior to the accident, when considering the permanent disability award and the supplement.

[4:00]

Mr. McClellan: The formula you gave me—current earnings plus permanent partial disability plus supplement under 42(5)—can only add up to a maximum of total disability entitlements. That's the formula, is it?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Permanent total disability, yes.

Mr. McClellan: Yes. Where is your authority in the act to add in earnings in calculating the amount of supplement under 42(5)? As I read the act, it says: "The board may supplement the amount awarded for permanent partial disability for such period as the board may fix, provided that the total sum of such supplement and award shall not exceed in any case the like proportion of 75 per cent of his average weekly earnings during the 12 months immediately preceding the accident."

I don't see why you have authority under the act to limit the amount of the 42(5) supplement in combination with the PPD award by an adding in of current earnings. Do you understand the point I am making?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I understand your point. The wording as you read it says the board "may" supplement the amount awarded; then it states the maximum that can be paid. Although it does not refer specifically to earnings that the man is capable of earning after the accident, the approach is that he is capable of earning a certain amount and he has been rehabilitated to that level at that time. One should have regard for his capability to earn and then make this additional supplement on a temporary basis until his earnings come up to his pre-accident level.

The way I read the act it doesn't say we have to ignore it—it's permissive.

Mr. McClellan: My problem is that the act doesn't talk about earnings at all. The act talks about a significant impairment of earning capacity. In the case of workers who were injured years ago and have a relatively low earnings base—say someone who was working in construction in the early 1950s or 1960s, before construction wages approached the kinds of adequate levels they do today, and who sustained an injury in the late 1950s or 1960s—they cannot be adequately compensated for the significant impairment of earning capacity under the way the board is interpreting the act at the present time.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Perhaps I could carry on a little further and just relate how we interpret part of this section: "impairment of earning capacity of the employee is significantly greater than is usual for the nature and degree of his injury." Perhaps if I explained that it may become a little more clear as to how we apply it.

"In determining whether or not the impairment of earning capacity is significantly greater than is usual for the nature and degree of the injury, the evaluation is to be based on the injured person's ability to perform the pre-accident job or a particular post-accident occupation. In making this determination, consideration must be given to the whole-person concept. Under the provisions of section 42(5) regard must be had to the particular occupation affected by the presence of the residual permanent disability and whether the disability by itself or combined with such other factors as education, ability to communicate; age and co-existing non-compensable physical or psychological conditions; availability of employment and physical requirements at the pre-accident job; preclude the employee from returning to his pre-accident occupation. Earning capacity"—and that's important—"is interpreted to mean the ability to earn as usually demonstrated by the amount earned during the 12 months immediately preceding the accident, or such lesser period as he has been employed." And it's expressed in terms of dollars.

Mr. McClellan: That's the directive—the policy manual you're reading from, I take it?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's an excerpt from it, yes. It's in a public policy manual.

Relating that, if the person is able to earn something, then we know there has been a significant change in his ability to earn. He hasn't been able to go back to his pre-accident job, that's why he's making less money on this new job that has been obtained or provided for him. So we do know that he has a certain level of earning capacity and we're trying to supplement the rest of that loss in earning capacity in accordance with 42(5).

Mr. McClellan: Yes, but you've imposed a limitation, you see. You've imposed a limitation through what I assume is a decision of the corporate board in passing that policy directive. The limitation is that you will not provide wage loss supplement in excess of an injured worker's entitlement to permanent total disability. That is a correct statement, I assume?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Would you repeat that, please?

Mr. McClellan: You have imposed a restriction on the amount of wage loss supplement that you are prepared to pay; and the restriction is that you will in no circumstances pay a wage loss supplement that is in excess of an injured worker's entitlement to permanent total disability.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's what the act says.

Mr. McClellan: No, that's not what the act says. The act says that the total sum of the supplement and award shall not exceed 75 per cent of the average weekly earnings. It doesn't say that you—this is difficult ground but it's important, because it represents significant dollar losses to injured workers who are on wage loss supplement. If an injured worker has a very low entitlement under your formula of restricting his income, his total income package, to earnings plus permanent partial disability, plus supplement under 42(5), the whole package being no more than his entitlement to permanent total disability benefits, then that is different from what it says in the act. The act says that you can give income solely from the Workmen's Compensation Board, disregarding his current earnings altogether, of 75 per cent of his average weekly earnings.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think we have to take section 42 as a whole and also have regard for the total intent of the act. If we go back for a moment to temporary partial disability, when a man returns to work to temporary partial disability, and let's say he is 50 per cent temporary partially disabled, we do not give him 50 per cent compensation and disregard his earnings. We have regard for his earnings.

So I think the act is based on two concepts. One is that we compare his present earnings with the pre-accident earnings; that is inherent all the way through the act. Secondly, that we have regard for his ability to earn, such as in return to modified employment.

Mr. McClellan: What you're telling me is how you have chosen to interpret the act. What you're saying to me is how the corporate board has chosen to interpret, through the equivalent of regulation, what the meaning of impairment of earning capacity is. I'm saying to you that the act is open to an entirely different interpretation. That's why I'm pleased the minister is here.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: What you're saying in essence is—

Mr. McClellan: Let me just try to summarize it. The alternative interpretation is the Workmen's Compensation Board could have the flexibility, according to the circumstance of the individual case, to disregard an injured worker's current earnings if his earnings base was exceptionally low and award him 75 per cent of his pre-accident weekly earnings as a combination permanent pension and supplement under section 42(5). There's certainly nothing in the act that prevents you from doing that; in fact, that's the way the act reads, but the board has chosen to calculate in current earnings. I know that imposes a significant hardship on workers who were injured a relatively long time ago, workers who, if they had been able to stay on the job, would have been able to take advantage of improvements in wages as a result of collective bargaining in their trade, or patterns of more adequate wages and salaries in their trade, but because they were injured, they couldn't. They're locked into a low wage level.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes. I recognize the point you're making.

Mr. McClellan: The other point I want to make is that this matter has been before the courts, and there is a decision in the Ontario divisional court with respect to precisely this matter. Mr. Justice Osler ruled in the Gianoukakis case, the case of Mr. Ted Gianoukakis, and the Workmen's Compensation Board, May 23, 1978.

It is my understanding Mr. Justice Osler ruled that there was nothing in the act that required the Workmen's Compensation Board to calculate in the current earning factor. The act did not limit you. Is that a correct understanding of that case?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: I don't have his statement here, but I believe he asked the board to rehear it and have regard to significant impairment of earning capacity.

Mr. McClellan: I'm not asking about the disposition of the Gianoukakis case. I'm asking about the ruling of the Ontario divisional court.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If I may comment on that, I remember reading that. I don't have a copy here either.

Mr. McClellan: I have a copy of it here.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I'm not sure, but I believe that was a comment he made, but he was making a ruling on something else. He wasn't ruling on that particular item, but he did make a comment in his statement. I believe he was making a ruling on another matter.

Mr. McClellan: Let me read what he said, quoting from page seven of his decision: "In neither case is it stated that present earnings are to be taken into account when fixing the ceiling. There can be no more justification for reading section 42(5) as though it read 'such supplement and award and present earnings shall not exceed in any case the like proportion of 75 per cent, than there would be for reading section 42(1) as though it read 'the compensation shall be a weekly or other periodical payment not exceeding with existing earnings the like proportion of 75 per cent of his average weekly earnings.'"

Mr. Hamilton: I don't want to get too deeply involved in the legality of the matter—and I'll leave it with Bill Kerr and the other people—but the courts were not dealing with that specific issue you raise. That comment would be in the judgement, but the judgement and the particular matter the court was dealing with was did the appeal board panel ask themselves the question in the first part of the act? The ruling of the court was we had no right to proceed to deal with what we dealt with in relation to calculations of the various incomes until we had asked the first question, was the earning capacity of the employee significantly greater than is usual for the nature and degree of the injury? And he said in the judgement—and I haven't the exact wording—that we must first address ourselves to the first question before we could proceed to make any calculations, and then we had to rehear the matter.

Mr. McClellan: I am not interested, as I said, in the disposition of the Gianoukakis case; I am interested in the board's interpretation of the act in the light of a comment of the Ontario divisional court which stated that the only dollar limit under section 42(5) was pension and supplement not to exceed 75 per cent of average weekly earnings. That is the only limitation under 42(5).

You have imposed an additional limitation. The board, by policy and practice, has imposed an additional limitation. You calculate in current earnings. The point I am trying to make is that you shouldn't do that because there are cases in which it causes hardship, hardship which impedes the rehabilitation process.

The point of the supplement in the first place is to provide a cushion of economic security so that an injured worker doesn't have to experience the whole range of psychological and emotional stress that results from the loss of earning capacity, but can have that set of stresses dealt with so that he can return to productive employment in society.

That is why it is there. That is why we support it.

I want to say to you that you are making a mistake in limiting yourselves, in taking away a measure of flexibility. It is all discretionary anyway. You are doing yourselves and the act and the injured workers a disservice by imposing that artificial restriction. You should have the flexibility to make decisions on cases around the merits of the case.

I can go through my files—I won't do it now but will subsequent to the session—and give you some illustrations of situations of injured workers who were injured a long while ago and would be materially benefited if you would pay them benefits equal to 75 per cent of their pre-accident earnings on top of their current low wages.

Mr. Hamilton: I hear you loud and clear. I understand exactly what you are saying. Bill Kerr understands exactly what you are saying. The only reason I came to the microphone was that you were leaving the impression, with me at least, that the court ruled on this specific issue. The court order which you read from had nothing at all to do with the issue that you raised; it had to do with an entirely different issue.

You were reading some words out of that judgement which had nothing at all to do with the court order. That's all I'm saying. That case was not dealing with the point that you raised. That is all. I understand your point. I look at it and I appreciate what you are saying, but you get no comfort out of that court order in regard to this case. That is all.

Mr. McClellan: I did get comfort out of the court case. Back to the point: why doesn't the board do what I am suggesting it do? I am sure you considered this. I assume you have made a deliberate decision not to follow the literal wording of the act. I would like to know why. All I am asking you to do is follow the act.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, if I may, just from a claims services point of view, explain why we recommended it to the board, perhaps that would be a starting point.

Mr. McClellan: Yes.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We recommended that we do consider whatever earnings he is capable of earning because we are taking a look at his impairment of earning capacity. From what I understand, you are suggesting that we pay him the equivalent of 100 per cent total permanent disability pension and disregard the fact that he is capable of earning money following his accident.

Mr. McClellan: What if the man is working at a place like the Rehabilitation Foundation for the Disabled? He is working in a sheltered workshop that doesn't even pay the minimum wage.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think when we get around to vocational rehabilitation, sir, you will find that there are different arrangements for that kind of situation. We are talking about a man who has been placed in industry for gainful employment. That isn't part of a retraining program or job acclimatization, or whatever one wants to call it.

Mr. McClellan: What if the man is working at the minimum wage?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, in the example you have cited, I would like to think that the amendments have been applied and that if he is receiving a supplement from us, of course, the amendments apply to the supplement. Now, perhaps that doesn't completely answer the problem or the situation.

Mr. McClellan: A 20 per cent award to a man who was a casual labourer in 1959-1962; what are you able to do for him under the existing provisions?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: He has already had the benefit of the escalation of his pension; his pension itself could exceed his original earnings, in some cases.

Mr. McClellan: We would hope that all of the benefits paid under the act reflect fully at least, the basic cost-of-living increases. I am saying to you that a legitimate interpretation of impairment of earning capacity must take into account what a man would have been able to earn if he had stayed in the trade; if he had taken advantage of increases in wages or salaries over the years. I don't think your formula—the way you are interpreting the section—permits you the flexibility to do that.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I see your point. The way we read the act is that we are obliged to consider the current earnings that the man is capable of earning and compare that with the earnings prior to the accident. That goes back to your section for temporary partial disability. As I said a little earlier, it is that way throughout the act: that we compare the man's present earnings—

Mr. McClellan: The act doesn't require you to do that; the act is very clear. The only limitation in the act is that the supplement, plus the award, may not exceed 75 per cent of average weekly earnings before the accident. That is the only dollar limitation in the act. Anything else you choose to do is a matter of policy; it is a matter of interpretation of the act; but it is not in the act. There is no limitation around this in the act and you understand that.

Let me ask you, and I don't want to beat this point to death—I think I have made it; I think it is a valid point—I would like to ask the corporate board, I know the minister will pursue it, to look at this again and give itself the necessary flexibility. That is all we are asking for.

As I said, again, it is discretionary anyway. It is an important tool for—

Mr. Hamilton: There is no question about the ceiling.

Mr. McClellan: Well, I see the act as the act reads. I am not getting into the appropriateness of the wording of the act. That is an entirely different argument. All I am saying is, as the act reads now, you have the power to give an injured worker a supplement, plus an award of 75 per cent of his average weekly earnings before the accident; and you should at least have the flexibility to do that. There is absolutely no reason not to do that.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. McClellan, before I say anything about the points you have made, about the validity of your argument, may I say this: As I see it in my own mind, it would have to be a very strict segregation of those who would be eligible and those who would not be. In other words, I think the guidelines would have to be set as to who would be eligible for it. Having said that, in view of your presentation here, I think we will have to take a good hard look at the whole situation and get our legal advisers to see that we are not overstepping any bounds in trying to implement something such as you have put forward today.

Mr. McClellan: Okay, I appreciate that and I'll look forward to a report back. I invite you to take comfort, the same comfort, that I took from Mr. Justice Osler, while you are reviewing it—

Hon. Mr. Starr: We are all comforted.

Mr. McClellan: —with your legal people because I'm absolutely convinced there are no legal barriers to your providing more generous benefits under section 42(5).

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of questions that I would like to raise. What is the policy of the board with regard to expenses for doctors, chiropractors or any other practitioner who comes to testify before the appeal board?

This morning one of our assistants spoke to a Mrs. Irwin, I believe her name is, in the appeals administration, and she was told that it would be up to the appeal board to decide at the time of the hearing whether they would hear the testimony of the chiropractor. If they decide to hear the testimony then his expenses would be paid. If, on the other hand, they decide that the testimony of the chiropractor is not necessary, she was told that his expenses would not be paid. This chiropractor has to travel all the way from Sudbury in order to give testimony before the board. What is the policy regarding that?

Mr. Hamilton: I don't know if there's any hard-bound policy or not in the context of the question that you've raised, but it would seem to me that if any advocate brings a proper witness, whether he be a chiropractor or whatever he may be, and he's there at the invitation of the advocate to make an appearance, we would hear him and the minute that he would be heard he would be paid his fees. I don't see any problem.

Mr. M. Davidson: Then would you explain to me why we would be told this? Can you explain to me why the woman who made the inquiry would be told this, that it would be up to the appeal board to decide whether his evidence would be presented and if he was allowed to present his testimony his expenses would be paid? If, on the other hand, the board decided his testimony was not necessary to the case, his expenses would not be paid. That was this morning. That was a phone call to Mrs. Irwin. I don't know who Mrs. Irwin is.

Mr. Hamilton: I don't know what she would tell you or why she would tell you that, but I'm simply giving you the practical experience at the appeals level. If any advocate brought in witnesses to a hearing and said the witnesses were important and necessary to the presentation of his case we'd hear those witnesses. I don't think it makes any difference whether he's a chiropractor or an orthopaedist or a plant superintendent or a fellow worker or whatever, if an advocate says that that witness is necessary to the presentation of his case he'd be heard, and when he's heard there is a schedule of fees which are paid. That's simple to me; there's no problem that I can see in this.

Mr. M. Davidson: I'm sure, though, Doug, that when this type of inquiry is made and that kind of an answer is given, you see the difficulty that the chiropractor is faced with in the sense of coming down. He's not sure whether his testimony is going to be required, at least from the information that was received, and he's told that if his information is not required his expenses will not be paid. I understand what you are telling me, but what I am trying to find out is why would that kind of information be coming out of the appeals branch on an inquiry such as that?

Mr. Hamilton: I don't know.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I'm sure that now you've brought this matter up, Doug will investigate to see why that answer was given to you. I don't think we can answer that.

Mr. M. Davidson: I understand that.

Mr. Hamilton: Very rarely, but occasionally, you have people who bring witnesses who really have nothing germane to contribute to the case in question. As you proceed with the hearing, you realize that a certain witness has nothing to do with the case at all and you don't call him. If you don't call them then they normally don't get paid as witnesses because we do pay for all witnesses.

When you graduate from that to professional witnesses, I think you're in the hands of the advocate. If the advocate makes a statement to the panel that, "Yes, he is required and necessary to his case," I just can't for the life of me see a panel not hearing the witness, whether they agreed with his evidence, or whether it was bad evidence, or whether it was germane evidence.

But he may be in difficulty if he brings a chiropractor to give psychiatric evidence or orthopaedic evidence. Then I would think the advocate would be told he is ill-advised to do this again in the future and he might not be paid. But I just don't see any difficulty with this problem.

Mr. M. Davidson: If it is necessary I can give you the claim number and maybe you can check up on it if you would do that. The number is 10933896. I thank you for that, but I wanted you to be aware that sometimes this type of information is provided on an inquiry and it does cause some confusion among the people who are trying to put together a proper case to bring before the appeal court. As I say, this chiropractor was a little bit concerned that he may come all the way from Sudbury to Toronto and suddenly somebody will say, "Well, we really don't need your evidence," and as a result of that the trip would be more or less at his own expense.

I don't know who to direct this to, but I imagine it is probably Mr. Kerr. Where a claim has been established but an employer comes before the board and protests the establishment of the claim and the board feels the claim should be allowed, is it normal practice that you then call the employer and explain and discuss the pending decision?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: When I answer this, of course, we should recognize that this claim we are talking about is in the claims services division and not in the appeals system; it is the initial decision in the claims services division.

We talked yesterday about some employers who rather routinely express an opinion that the claim shouldn't be allowed or the claim should be investigated. I said at that time that we do not automatically send that claim out to the field investigator to have it investigated; we evaluate the circumstances and the information we have. On some occasions when an employer has said he didn't think the claim should be allowed for some reason or other, and we didn't agree with that, he has asked for a local investigation although we felt the claim should be allowed. We don't write the employer and give him an opportunity to make a further submission, but the claims adjudicator will call the employer on the telephone and tell him we don't think this claim should be investigated, we have enough information to indicate to us the claim is compensable and therefore we are going to allow the claim.

In most cases the employer says, "Fine, as long as you are satisfied it is a compensable claim, go ahead." If they say, "We still don't think this is a compensable claim," we say, "We are convinced this is a compensable claim; we feel it should be allowed. You have the right to appeal or object to the decision." And we go ahead and process the payment.

That telephone call does not delay the handling of the claim. It would delay the handling of the claim if we wrote a letter and asked the employer for a submission, which we do not do, but we do contact him by telephone.

Mr. M. Davidson: There is a bit of a problem there, however, because that telephone call gives the employer, you might say, one more shot at the dog to try to convince somebody that that claim should not be accepted and there is no comparable procedure for a claimant to get a phone call when the case is denied. He's not phoned and told, "I'm sorry, your case is denied," which would allow the claimant the same opportunity to get one more kick at the dog.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We haven't had a problem in that regard. Frankly, if we found that sort of thing developing we couldn't stand for that because you're quite right, we're not in the process of giving people a second kick at the dog. I am sure the employer, if that happened, would have to have some pretty resounding information. Another thing we do not accept from an employer is hearsay evidence. Sometimes we're advised that they have been told so and so, and so and so. We just don't accept that. So we're very careful because we get no medals for delaying the adjudication of claims and we watch that very carefully.

Mr. M. Davidson: Maybe you can explain something else to me. I have a situation where approximately a year ago a claimant was granted a claim by the board and he was off work for approximately three weeks. I am talking about a year ago when he got three weeks' pay from the board. Last week he received a letter to the effect that the company had protested the claim and some kind of an investigation had taken place over this great long period of time. They had now reversed their decision and the adjudicator would be in touch with him for repayment of the moneys received. At no time during that period was that claimant aware that that investigation was going on.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Without knowledge of the case I really can't comment on that.

Mr. M. Davidson: I don't have it here with me. I'll get the claim number.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I'll be happy to take a look at that and give you an explanation of what happened.

Mr. M. Davidson: It will be before the board again because we're appealing it.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Was this decision made by the appeal board?

Mr. M. Davidson: The claims review branch.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: The claims review branch. We have no knowledge of that now but I would be happy to look at it for you.

Mr. M. Davidson: I know it happened because I read the letter from the board.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I don't doubt that it happened but I just say I can't respond without looking at it.

Mr. M. Davidson: What I am trying to suggest to you is, surely that is not proper procedure. If, in fact, there is an investigation taking place as to whether or not that claim should have been allowed, surely the claimant should be made aware of that, surely he should have knowledge of the fact that an investigation is taking place.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, our routine is that when a claim is referred for investigation a letter is sent to that individual, so when you give me the claim number I'll check that out too.

Mr. M. Davidson: Fine.

Can you tell us the approximate caseload for each of the adjudicators you have at the present time?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We feel the recommended caseload for claims adjudicators varies, depending upon what level they're working at. For instance, for adjudicators who are working on initial adjudication, the allowance of the claim, we feel their caseload should be in the area of 170 claims. Then we have three levels of degree of complexity of what we call the continuing claims after they're allowed, the ongoing claims which go on for months and months and perhaps longer. The junior continuing adjudicator who usually handles the shorter-term claims after they have been allowed has around 250 claims. They're not too complex. The person who handles the intermediate continuing adjudication, a little more complex, has 245. The senior person who handles the really long-term continuing claims has a caseload of 230.

Mr. Wildman: That would make Elie Martel senior senior.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: There's a difference between handling inquiries and adjudication, but I won't argue over that. Until January of this year we were never down to these recommended caseloads. The board had authorized us to increase our staff during the past couple of years and it takes time to hire and train people. By January of this year we reached the stage where we had reduced the caseloads to this level, approximately. They do go up and down a bit.

The caseloads are reviewed by a Mr. Darnbrough, the director of the claims adjudication branch, and his senior staff on a regular basis and adjusted to try to keep them in balance. As our staff increase their skills they'll have more ease in handling claims and they should be able to handle them more quickly and in a bigger volume.

We're concerned about volume. We feel we have it at a proper level at this time. The number of accidents reported so far this year has increased a little bit and we hope that's not a trend for the rest of the year.

Mr. M. Davidson: But you're satisfied at the moment that with the staff you have you're able to meet the figures you just gave us.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: There are certain areas where I'm not satisfied, and we're reviewing them and taking action in that regard. But I think in the overall picture I'm satisfied.

Mr. Wildman: Could I interject for a moment? I may have missed it. Did you say how many claims adjudicators you have on staff in total?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, I didn't. We have different categories of claims adjudicators and I have the figures here for you. The total of the adjudicators who do not have any supervisory or semi-supervisory function is 230. This includes our adjudicators in the primary adjudication section, the adjudicators in the extended disability section, the pension adjudicators, the adjudicators in the industrial disease section, and we have adjudicators in the no-lost-time claims section. Although there's no lost time, those claims have to be adjudicated. We have a small group of adjudicators at the hospital and rehabilitation centre. We have 230 adjudicators at the present time. That does not include supervisory staff or what we call co-ordinators.

Mr. M. Davidson: Has there been a greater percentage of denials of claims recently?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No. I have figures on that. It's been pretty consistent, although it varies up and down a little bit. For instance, let's go back to 1975. In 1975, for all claims—which includes lost-time and no-lost-time claims—seven per cent; in 1976, eight per cent; in 1977, 7.2 per cent; 1978, 7.6 per cent. There's a little variation there, but it runs in that area.

Mr. M. Davidson: It's been fairly consistent.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes. As a matter of interest, I have contacts with my counterparts in other compensation boards across Canada. Last year I was discussing this with people from the two other large compensation boards out west and we're about comparable in this regard. I think that's an indicator.

Mr. M. Davidson: I think that's all for the moment.

Mr. McGuigan: Having had some experience personally with back problems, I realize this is one of the most difficult areas in the work of the compensation board. But there was a case recently in my riding where a man had injured his back in an industrial accident but was rehabilitated, was able to return to work and some time later he hurt his back again, allegedly helping to push a car out of the snow. That claim was denied both in the first instance and then on the appeals.

I wonder what your policy is there. It is quite possible that on occasion you forget about your back. Perhaps you compulsively do something you are not supposed to do. I find myself, having hurt my back—not too seriously but enough that I have to guard myself so I don't do those things—that occasionally I forget about it. What is a man supposed to do in that situation? Live in a cocoon the rest of his life?

Hon. Mr. Starr: If his original accident was compensable, no doubt if it is a permanent injury he would be receiving a monthly pension from us. This would entitle him to the assistance of vocational rehabilitation or any other service we might be able to render to help him.

Mr. McGuigan: His appeal for compensation was lost.

Hon. Mr. Starr: You are talking about an appeal which occurred as a recurrence of the old injury, not at his work but rather outside of his job?

Mr. McGuigan: The board alleged that. I don't know whether it was proved or not.

Hon. Mr. Starr: It would be difficult to discuss a case, sir, without seeing what the circumstances were in the files. Possibly, as a general principle in a case such as you outline, Mr. Kerr might be able to tell you how the adjudicators would go about adjudicating that claim.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Your concern is the second injury where he was pushing the car?

Mr. McGuigan: Yes.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Normally we wouldn't be in a position to accept the disability on the injury as a result of pushing the car, assuming he wasn't pushing the car for the purpose of his employment. Obviously in the claims services division we did not accept it. From what you have said it was appealed and the appeal section did not accept it either.

The rationale for that would be that the accident was a non-occupational accident. Had he been pushing that car at work as part of his job, that would be a different situation because it is a work injury. But from the circumstances you have given, the second injury was as a result of an accident which was not a work injury and the act only enables us to compensate for work injuries.

Mr. McGuigan: Don't you think it quite possible the second accident was related to the first?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: In that instance did you not say the first accident was not accepted either?

Mr. McGuigan: It was accepted.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Here again I can only speak in generalities; we don't know from what is said what the conditions were of that first accident. It may have been a simple sprain—a very temporary thing.

Mr. McGuigan: No, it was an injury to the vertebrae.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We really don't know and we have to take a look at the total picture—what the original injury was for which we were responsible and paid compensation, his condition from that time until this unfortunate incident, which did not happen at work, took place, and the diagnosis at the time of the second injury.

When we are talking in generalities it is pretty difficult but we would be happy, in that instance—I know it is in the appeal system but I am sure the registrar of appeals, or myself, if you let us know the claim number, can provide you with full details on that.

Mr. McGuigan: I would be happy to do that, thank you.

Mr. Wildman: I apologize for not being here earlier but I was up north trying to mediate a dispute between a township council and MTC. This occurs from time to time in my riding.

I wonder if before I go on to dealing specifically with the matters under claims I could have a response to a couple of questions I asked last night in regard to the problem of light duty, for instance, in small communities in northern Ontario where you may have one store, one restaurant or one motel. It gets a bit funny after the fifth time going to ask the guy at the motel if he has a position for this guy to sweep the floor. What happens to this guy? Does he have to move in order to be able to qualify for vocational rehab and assistance on that basis, if there aren't any rehab facilities in the area and nothing for light duty?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think I will give Mr. Wisocky an opportunity to explain it to you.

Mr. Wisocky: I guess I can only answer you in general terms in the sense that I have to have more specifics to be able to answer—

Mr. Wildman: I am asking you a general question.

Mr. Wisocky: Okay. If a person is fit for light work I assume he has further entitlement under his claim and I assume the case has been referred to vocational rehabilitation.

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Mr. Wisocky: Okay. As far as vocational rehabilitation is concerned, I think we are trying to be very realistic about the situation.

If you are talking of a small town, the counsellor also has some knowledge as to what job opportunities may be available there and also the extent to which a person should look for work. But in the final analysis I think it is reality that takes over. In other words, the man has to make a pretty basic decision, "What do I do for myself? Either I stay here, or maybe I will ask the board to consider relocation."

We don't relocate too many people and that is a choice that a man has to make. In terms of the act, I think claims will consider benefits for the degree of disability for, I suppose, up to a pension level. It is hard to say on a general basis, but that is, generally speaking, the way we handle it.

Mr. Wildman: Okay. Can I add a couple of things then? I am thinking of a particular case and I use it as an example.

A person has lived all his life in a town, owns his home, doesn't have to pay a mortgage, has worked in timber operations all his life, perhaps doesn't have a great facility with English. Is it really feasible to suggest relocating him into southern Ontario, let's say, or a large centre in northern Ontario?

Mr. Wisocky: That depends on the man, but I think in that case our responsibility would be to work with the accident employer as much as possible to see if it can take him back in some capacity. If that is not possible, then we look elsewhere in the community. But in the final analysis if nothing is available I think our hands are tied. We don't want to force the man to relocate if he doesn't want to.

Mr. Wildman: Well, you see, that's the catch 22 he is in. You are saying to him, "We are not going to force you to move, but we are not going to pay you or help you if you don't move."

Mr. Wisocky: But he is being paid; I assume he is being paid some form of compensation.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, that's true. But everyone knows what he can live on and he has got a partial disability and he can't live on it. So I don't think you can really say you are not forcing him to move.

Mr. Wisocky: The decision is entirely up to the man. We will explain as best as possible what the options are. We will even go to the extent of trying to get him other benefits from other social agencies if that is applicable and so forth. But in the final analysis what do you do with a man who is unemployed because of the general labour market? Does that man have to make a decision on his own in that situation? He worked for the sawmill and there is a general layoff and he is off work, he is on UIC benefits and there is no job. What does the man do in that situation? I realize it is very sad—

Mr. Wildman: I will tell you what he does if there is a general layoff, because that has happened in my riding, too. The whole town comes to its MPP and MP and says, "What the hell are you going to get the provincial government and the federal government to do about this?" You can't do that when you are one guy and everybody else is working.

Mr. Wisocky: This is why we try to assist in every way possible, but we have our limitations and there is reality.

Mr. Wildman: All right, I will leave that. I just want to point out I was talking about a particular case there, using it as an example, but it is not an unusual case in northern Ontario. The board is aware of the fact there is very little light duty available in many small towns in the north.

Mr. Wisocky: I fully agree with you, Mr. Wildman. This is why we have one employment specialist working out of the Sudbury area at the present time. He started last August and in the year 1978 he was able to find 111 jobs, a few in the Sault area. We hope we can add another employment specialist principally for the Sault area, and we will try to help to find jobs. There are few jobs but if we can help to find some and get some people back I think it's better than nothing.

Hon. Mr. Starr: If you'd care to be helpful to this person by giving the claim number to Mr. Wisocky, we probably could review this case.

Mr. Wildman: I'll do that later; that would be helpful. But I'm talking about the general problem.

I want to point out that my riding isn't just in the Sault area; it extends to 260 miles north and 90 miles east of Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Wisocky: I used the word "area" very loosely.

Mr. Wildman: All right. I want to follow up a question I raised last night regarding surgical consultants. I asked whether it would be conceivable or likely that a gynaecologist might have given some advice to the board on a back claim. I want to point out that apparently it did occur; and I have the permission of a woman to use her name here. Luckily, this person appealed, it has gone through the appeal and it has been accepted now. The claim number is C-7812411, and her name is Helen Shankland. The doctor who was used as a surgical consultant was a Dr. Hopper. He's a general surgeon but his specialty is gynaecology, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Maybe Dr. McCracken would like to make a comment on that.

Dr. McCracken: Dr. Hopper is the senior surgical consultant on permanent staff with the Workmen's Compensation Board. There are three other surgical consultants. Dr. Hopper's primary training and his qualification is a fellowship with the Royal College of Surgeons in general surgery. He also has a second degree, which is a British degree in obstetrics and gynaecology.

At the time Dr. Hopper took his training, similar to myself, general surgeons were trained as traumatic surgeons and were trained to do orthopaedic surgery; at that time there were very few orthopaedic surgeons, and general surgeons were responsible for carrying out the vast majority of all traumatic injuries and orthopaedic procedures.

Dr. Hopper received that training in the area of trauma and orthopaedics. It is his fellowship to the Royal College of Surgeons in general surgery that is the degree that would apply for his work with the board. The other degree is an additional degree indicating that he carries his expertise beyond the field of trauma and general surgery.

Mr. Wildman: Don't misunderstand me. I'm not casting aspersions on his expertise.

Dr. McCracken: Well, that's the explanation.

Mr. Wildman: All I am saying is, when you have a report from an orthopaedic surgeon—for instance, from someone of the stature of Dr. Bateman—which suggests that a claim should be accepted, and it is disputed by another doctor who is a general surgeon with some training in orthopaedics, it seems somewhat strange to me.

Dr. McCracken: No, not really. Bear in mind, aside from Dr. Hopper's prior training in his clinical experience, the period of time that he has been with the board. He was in private practice for a period of 29 years. He has been with the board seven and a half years.

During the majority of that seven and a half years he has spent eight to 10 hours per day, five days per week, evaluating reports from orthopaedic surgeons, neurosurgeons—all the surgical specialties. He has been required to develop the expertise to carry out these evaluations, whereas Dr. Bateman, at the very outside, would probably spend in his practice, I would estimate, possibly no more than half an hour to one hour per day doing a similar type of specialized work.

In other words, what I am saying is that Dr. Hopper, similar to the other three surgical consultants, is trained to carry out this evaluation, which requires the development of an expertise that is usually not found in surgeons who are outside in general practice.

Mr. Wildman: When a surgeon with the reputation of Dr. Bateman states, "The history of her injury and the present findings indicate the present indisposition should be related to her previous accident," I wonder, frankly, why that claim wasn't allowed without going to appeal.

Dr. McCracken: I couldn't comment on that, obviously, unless I were to look at the entire claim. I understand from what you say the claim is now in the appeal system.

Mr. Wildman: No. It has been approved after appeal. It has been accepted.

Dr. McCracken: What this represents is indeed a divergence of medical opinion. This is not restricted to board operations. It is extremely common, especially and particularly in very senior specialist groups, that there continues to be a difference of medical opinions on any number of issues in any number of cases, because of the complexity of those particular cases.

If you have a simple illness or injury, you can expect there will be no divergence of opinion. If you get a complicated case, indeed you can expect there well might be.

Mr. Wildman: Which is what it is all about right here today. As has been said many times in this committee hearing this year and at other times in the past, if you get hit on the head with a sledgehammer, you usually get your claim accepted; but if you strain your back, then you have problems.

Dr. McCracken: Not necessarily so. But I certainly agree with you that back disabilities are one of the problems we deal with; in that area we expect we will get the complicated, obscure, complex cases, as I mentioned yesterday, I believe.

Mr. Wildman: I am still confused about this, but I will go on to claims. I have here a very well-written and detailed letter from a gentleman who lives in Sault Ste. Marie and who has been on compensation. He was severely burned. Finally, he has gone back to work in a lower job class. He is being paid differential, but he points out that he is still losing money.

He describes the increases which have taken place in the various job classes in his local over the last few years. He has dropped from job class 20 to job class seven. He points out that in a very short time from now his job class seven pay will catch up to what his job class 20 pay was at the time he was injured, and he is not going to get any compensation any more. So he is not being compensated for the very severe burns he received. I am not sure if he is right on this and I would like some clarification, but apparently he can't claim disfigurement for burning of the legs whereas a woman could.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If I may comment, the act is pretty specific on that. Under section 42(6), the act is specific that we can make an award for burns, and I believe the wording is "around the face and neck." Let's just take a look at the exact words. They're "face and head," so we have no authority really to make an award for any disfigurement except in that area of the body because the act is specific and it applies to both men and women.

I can recall a case of a woman who was seriously burned on her legs and there were scars, but unfortunately in that instance we couldn't make an award for disfigurement because of the wording of the act. It is very specific.

Mr. Wildman: Okay. Then I accept that and obviously we should be looking at changing the act, but this person is unable to stand in the cold for very long, and he can't stand up for very long. He has got to live with this the rest of his life. In this case, he can get a lighter-duty job. It is an easier job, and he is able to do some work. His local has been successful in negotiating decent increases over the years, but eventually he is not going to be compensated for the continuing problems he faces for the rest of his life.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I guess there are two points there. One, I gather you are suggesting we should have regard for how much he would have been making had he been able to carry on his former job, which is related to what the previous member discussed.

Mr. Wildman: Exactly.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: With respect, I mention there are places in the act, if you take the act as a whole, where it says we have to base compensation on the earnings prior to the accident. In section 41, temporary partial disability, it refers to it again. I don't wish to open up that argument, but I just want to mention that.

Mr. Wildman: No, I understand.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: So, as of now, our policy is, as the claims services division reads the act, we are limited in that area. I really don't think I can be helpful to you in a case.

Mr. Wildman: This guy is getting what he should according to the act and the policy.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: What I was going to suggest was, if there was any doubt in that regard we would be pleased to review it to make sure he is because I want to make sure he gets everything to which he is entitled.

Mr. Wildman: Oh, no, he makes that quite clear in his letter. He is getting what the board says he should.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Is the issue just the one you have mentioned?

Mr. Wildman: Exactly, and since you raise that, I have another individual who makes a case. I am not going to raise an individual case here. This is just a man who is very vociferous on behalf of other injured workers in his area. He was injured in 1949 when he fell about three storeys on to a cement floor. He is getting total disability now and he has been collecting disability of various types, depending on his condition, over the years since 1949. Think of 75 per cent of what he made in 1949. Luckily for him, he belongs to a large industrial union that has negotiated extra benefits. He is collecting extra benefits, but if he didn't—

Mr. J. F. McDonald: I think one thing you should keep in mind is the provision of the minimum under section 43, which is $509, and is probably above his earnings at the time of the accident.

Mr. Wildman: I know. He has had those adjustments, but it is nowhere near 75 per cent of what his job class is making today, nowhere near it, and he makes that very clear every time I meet him.

I have one other major thing I would like to raise with the chairman and also with the ministry and that is the whole controversy that has been surrounding the board and local 2251 in regard to the scarfers at Algoma Steel. Let's, so we don't fuzz the issue, make quite clear at the beginning that we all realize that scarfers at Algoma Steel have, various ones on an individual basis, had back claims accepted by the board. Excuse me, that is elbow and sometimes shoulder claims, but not back claims, so let's not talk about elbows and shoulders.

Hon. Mr. Starr: And wrists.

Mr. Wildman: That's right. I would also like to make it clear I would accept perhaps that originally the local may not have advised the individual employees who filed for back injuries they felt were related to scarfing to do so in a manner that fell under the right category under the act. I'll accept that. But that's all in the past. That, I hope, has now been straightened out. In the future, if there are any more back claims from Algoma Steel, people will be advised by the local to make the claim in the correct manner, which may or may not lead to its being accepted, but it may have a better chance of being accepted.

That still leaves us with a large number, in the range of 14 claims, that have not been dealt with in that manner, many of whom are retired now. I'd like to know what's really going on.

First off, I had some correspondence with the chairman. We argued with each other in the press. We got a little vitriolic, on both sides perhaps, last spring. Then I said I'd better cool it. I went to the local and said: "Obviously Mr. Starr is so mad at me he's not going to deal with me on it."

Hon. Mr. Starr: I was just trying to point out the facts.

Mr. Wildman: You missed the facts a couple of times.

Mr. Martel: Don't be vitriolic.

Mr. Wildman: I won't go into that. It will make me too angry. For one thing, a couple of times your Adamson fellow ignored things that I had said and talked about other things. Anyway, that's under the bridge.

The local then made some changes at their own executive level. They got a new fellow working on it. They arranged to meet with you and other members of your staff in December. Quite coincidentally, there was a by-election on in Sault Ste. Marie. I want to emphasize "coincidentally." The reaction they got when they arrived at the meeting indicated some people didn't think it was coincidental, but it was, and I don't understand why anyone at the board would be concerned about whether or not there was a by-election in Sault Ste. Marie at the time.

At any rate, they came and they met and they arranged for some people at the board, medical people, to come and look at the scarfing operation in Algoma Steel. They came up, I believe, in January and they toured with the members of the executive of the local and went and looked at the scarfing operation. They said they would go back and look at the whole thing and would be in touch with them.

They also informed the local executive that they would review the 14 outstanding claims. On February 2, I think it was, they were called down to a meeting in Toronto. They went down. They found when they arrived, first off, that the board people who were there were unaware there were 14 claims; there were now nine as far as the board was concerned. Therefore, they hadn't reviewed all the claims.

They were also informed by one of the medical people that scarfing was no more difficult—I understand this was the term used—than typing. The work wasn't any harder on a person than a typist's work. The reaction of the local president to that is that that probably is true if the typist has to hold the typewriter on one hand and type with the other. Basically, they were told that all these outstanding claimants would have to file new claims and go through the whole process all over again; that they weren't going to deal with it.

The fly in this whole thing is that back claims related to scarfing have been accepted at Stelco. The board knows it; the executive at Algoma knows it, and I know it. As a matter of fact, in my correspondence to you I pointed to a couple of claims numbers from Stelco. At that meeting in February the health and safety rep mentioned a claim number from Stelco at which point he was asked how he got it. I think he told the board it wasn't any of their business.

The fact is over a number of years a number of back claims related to scarfing have been accepted at Stelco. It seems to me that what is good enough for Stelco is good enough for Algoma. I would like to know the reason this hasn't been dealt with in a more judicious and fair manner.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think in order to clarify the whole situation it is necessary to begin with the medical people who made this policy decision from a medical standpoint and then with the adjudication people.

I'm going to ask Dr. McCracken to relate to us the incidences from a medical standpoint.

Dr. McCracken: First of all, the request was made that scarfing operations at Algoma be looked at, and one of our medical consultants went to Sault Ste. Marie with a representative from the claims services division. Mr. Kerr can speak to that. They observed the scarfing operations at Algoma. They had been asked to observe the operations at Algoma and they had been told before they left what the situation was in relation to scarfing operations at Stelco so they would have some idea if there was any major difference in the two operations that would be of significance from a medical standpoint, on my part, and from a claims adjudicator standpoint so far as Mr. Kerr was concerned, with regard to the mechanism of the work and interpretation of the act.

They did this, and the report that came back discussed the operations they had seen, reviewed and made notes on with the operations that had been reviewed previously at Stelco by one of our other medical staff who is currently now the director of the medical branch. In essence they concluded the two operations were most comparable. There were certain minor differences but from a medical standpoint they felt this didn't make any difference, they were comparable enough, and that the minor differences they did observe would not be of significance. That is about as much as I can tell you from a medical standpoint except to say that they had also concluded there was nothing specific or characteristic in the scarfing operations to lead them to believe that back disability would be considered as an industrial disease peculiar to and arising out of the scarfing operations. In other words, they said a scarfer could injure his back just the same as any other person in Algoma can injure his back.

Mr. Wildman: Right.

Dr. McCracken: They were not able to demonstrate that there was anything peculiar about the scarfing operations.

The only other thing I would like to say is that when the union representatives came down to Toronto to discuss the matter, during the course of discussion—and I wasn't present at that meeting but it was reported to me afterwards—the director of the medical branch made the statement that typists or secretaries could do something in the course of their work that could result in a back strain that would be considered by the board as a compensable injury; similarly, a scarfer could do something in the course of his work, some unusual event, that could give rise to a back strain.

In so far as I can determine, this comment was unfortunately misinterpreted to mean that a scarfer's work was the same as a typist's work. That was not the intent of it at all and I would like to get that matter straight here and now.

Mr. Wildman: I would hope that is the case.

Dr. McCracken: It is.

Mr. Wildman: Scarfers do a rather strenuous job.

I want to follow up on one thing you said. That's the whole crux of the problem when you start talking about scarfing claims as industrial disease claims. That's what the problem is. It's the crux of the whole problem because that's the way the claims were made before and the board's opinion is that there's nothing specific to scarfing that would make it qualify as a possible industrial disease.

Dr. McCracken: That is correct.

Mr. Wildman: What has happened at Stelco is that those guys down there have had close contact with the board and good cooperation, I think, in this particular instance. They have realized that in order to be able to get anywhere on a scarfer's claim, even if the claim may relate to an ongoing problem, they have to identify a specific incident. They identify specific incidents and make claims on that basis.

Dr. McCracken: Mr. Kerr can speak to that. From a medical standpoint, I would hope and expect that the incident would indeed be a valid incident from a medical standpoint.

Mr. Wildman: I am sure it is. I'm not questioning that, but the point is these 14 claimants may have had specific incidents, but they can't identify them now because they were years ago. What happens to them because they didn't know that was the way they should have made the claims in the first place? I blame the local for not advising them correctly, but that's the case. That's the way it is.

Dr. McCracken: I think Mr. Kerr should speak to the way in which claims should be filed because that is in his purview.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I appreciate what you're saying, Mr. Wildman, but it is true in the Stelco situation those claims were not accepted as being a condition that is peculiar to or characteristic of—

Mr. Wildman: I know that.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: —I'm just explaining it to you, sir—scarfing operations. You're right about those claims that were accepted by Stelco. They were related and reported to us and we established a causal relationship with something that happened on the job, immediate onset of pain, immediate reporting and immediate attention by medical people. That's the way we adjudicate any back case. The claims accepted at Stelco were not accepted in the category that you feel they should be.

Mr. Wildman: You are misunderstanding me again. I'm willing to play your game if you want, but I want to deal with those 14 people. So you tell me how I am able to find the specific incident that caused their problems and I'll do it, but I don't know how to do it.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It is very difficult now. I see your problem.

Mr. Wildman: So what do we do for these guys? Do we say: "Too bad. It's unfortunate you didn't know how to do it in the first place. The first time you felt a pang of pain you should have reported it, but you didn't do that"? Maybe that was 1956.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Of course, that isn't quite enough. We can't accept a claim just because the condition comes on during the course of employment. We must establish a causal relationship. Just because a person is working and feels a pain, that doesn't necessarily mean the condition is compensable. We must relate the disability to something at work that caused it.

Mr. Wildman: There is the fact that they bend over and have a very high pressure hose they have to use. When they bent over, they felt a terrible pain. That's how you're going to get claims from now on and that's how you get them from Stelco.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It's up to the individuals to report the claims as they occur. I'm glad to hear that you're not casting any aspersions on Stelco.

Mr. Wildman: No, I'm not.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: They are reporting it as it occurs.

Mr. Wildman: Exactly. I have admitted that the Algoma local probably didn't advise these fellows correctly originally. They will now. They have finally learned with discussion through all of this hassle with the board the way they have to deal with these claims. They may not appreciate my expressing it on those terms. The fact is that if there are any more back claims at Algoma in the future they will be filed in that manner.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I appreciate your concern. I suppose what you're saying to me is how do you appeal these decisions when things occurred so long ago.

Mr. Wildman: Yes.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: All I can suggest is that anything you can get you submit, anything you can get that would tend to support it.

Mr. Wildman: They've all gone through long ago.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: All right.

Mr. Wildman: There are two other things I want to remark on. I want to know why on earth the board didn't advise the local and say, "Look, you can't make claims for scarfing on this basis" in a general sense, and say, "The only way a scarfing claim will be accepted is as any other claim might be accepted at Algoma for a specific incident." Why wasn't that made clear to the local when they were filing all these claims under so-called scarfers' disease?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If I may comment on that, we've had claims representatives up there dealing with the local for years. They've had seminars; they're fully aware of the definition of accident which includes disablement arising out of employment. I suggest to you they are aware of the requirements of the act.

Mr. Wildman: That wasn't my question. I was talking specifically about scarfing. I want to know why there wasn't consultation when all of this hassle started between me and Mr. Starr. It didn't just come out of a vacuum.

Mr. Johnson: Easy now, control yourself.

Mr. Wildman: I want to know why there wasn't a meeting between the board and the local where they would say; "Look, we're having a problem here, let's solve it."

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I guess I can't answer your question because I didn't come on the scene until the investigation was completed at Sault Ste. Marie. That's when I became involved directly in this. I'll just check with my colleagues to see if they have any information on it.

I'm advised that the union asked for the investigation and the investigation was carried out at their request.

Mr. Wildman: In December. I was writing to Mr. Starr in May and June and February.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I'm sorry, I can't answer your question.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Actually all the claims had been submitted and they had been rejected when Mr. Wildman started to correspond with me, or we started a tiff going. It wasn't until December that they were assembled and a meeting was held and it was played from there.

What you're talking about, Mr. Wildman, is that when these claims were coming in systematically or otherwise—one by one, or two by two or whatever—I think you feel that someone in the claims adjudication should have said: "Well, we know what the circumstances are; they should be told how it should be done."

Mr. Wildman: That's right. I don't know when the dates were, but let's say there was a claim back in 1962 from a scarfer with a back problem. The claim was made on the basis of an industrial disease, something that had arisen out of and in the course of the employment, but there was no specific incident identified. Of course it was rejected. Why didn't the claims people or someone at the board get in touch with the local and say: "Look, you'd better check to find out how these things are happening and how these claims are going to have to be made from now on, if there are any legitimate claims"? I'm not saying they are all legitimate; some of them may not be.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: I think one thing Mr. Kerr mentioned earlier is that there are 230 adjudicators and there are many claims coming in from Algoma. I would question very much how many of those claims from Algoma were handled by any particular adjudicator. You are talking about 14 claims out of approximately 400,000 in a year.

Mr. Wildman: There are more claims than that. The 14 are the ones that are back ones that are—

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Okay, there are 14 claims over a period of years which were denied. I would suggest to you the probability exists that there was no commonality among the adjudicators who handled that claim. When the advice was sent to the union, the union would be more aware of a common problem than the board would be.

Mr. Bounsall: Can I ask a supplementary at this point? I'd like to refer to the computer program you're going to put into place, hopefully no later than two years from now, which will cross-reference groups and have cross-referencing by companies of claims that come in. Would that be programmed to pick up a similar claim like scarfing that's coming in from a particular company so you don't have the problem with 14 or more claims spread over 14 different claims adjudicators?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, I think our program in the future will do it by disability but I don't think we'd have it programmed to do it by occupation such as scarfers, miners, truck drivers or what have you. We will be doing it by disability. But the whole thing we're missing is that when these claims were put in—and I'm not familiar with what years they were submitted to us—they were submitted as a condition.

No one put in a claim for industrial disease. Nobody said, "I have an industrial back disease as the result of employment. They applied in the normal way: "I've got a back disability." The claim was adjudicated in the normal way as we would for any other back, sir. So I don't really think it would be identified as a so-called industrial disease at that time. It was just a back claim.

Mr. Wildman: Okay. I'll accept that. If I can come back to the other thing, the one time you finally got all of those claims together and you got somebody raising them all at once was when I wrote to Mr. Starr. At that time there wasn't any attempt, as far as I can see, to get together and solve the problem with the local—the problem that had been identified by me—not by me, it was raised by the executive with me. It seemed to me, and I don't think I'm being unfair here, the main concern was to beat this thing in the press.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I'm not involved in that in any way and I can make no comment, Mr. Wildman, I'm not aware of anything of that nature.

Mr. Wildman: Is it not true that Dr. Dowd of the Workmen's Compensation Board carried out a study of scarfing at Stelco in 1968?

Dr. McCracken: Yes. As I mentioned before, Dr. Dowd was the physician who, in conjunction with members of the claims staff, took a look at and evaluated the scarfing operations at Stelco; that's right.

Mr. Wildman: What were his conclusions?

Dr. McCracken: His conclusions were the same as the current ones; namely that he was unable to identify any specific characteristic of scarfing operations that would lead him to conclude we had identified a causal relationship between the operation of scarfing and back disease.

Mr. Wildman: Then am I right in assuming that led to consultations between the local 1005 executive and the board as to how they should deal with future scarfing claims, since Dr. Dowd had concluded there wasn't anything specific related only to scarfing that would lead to a particular kind of back disorder?

Dr. McCracken: I'm not aware of any consultations. That, presumably, would be consultations that might have taken place with some claims personnel. I don't know whether Mr. Kerr is aware of anything.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I have no knowledge of that at this time.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Dr. McCracken was not with us at that time nor was I.

Mr. Wildman: I may be wrong in that but I think that's what occurred.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I wasn't in my present position at that time, Mr. Wildman, so I don't know anything about it.

Mr. Wildman: I just wish it had occurred at Algoma as well at the same time. It seems to me that if there was a conclusion from Dr. Dowd's study in Stelco in 1968, since scarfing takes place in other steel works as well, it might have been useful to spread that information around a bit.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Mr. Wildman, are you aware of whether or not there was any consultation between the unions at that point in time, between local 1005 and management?

Mr. Wildman: No, it wasn't until later when they started getting a lot of scarfing claims at Algoma.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: You asked a question of Mr. Kerr as to whether there was any consultation between the union and the board at that time as to how the claim should be filed. There was not, to my knowledge, and I did work with them around that time.

Mr. Wildman: I still haven't been able to come to any conclusion and, obviously, the board isn't going to be able to do anything or isn't willing to do anything about the back claims that have been denied in the past. I'm sure the claims in the future will be filed in a more acceptable manner to the board. Some of them may be accepted and some of them may not be—but at least 14 guys are out in the cold.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: You can hardly expect us at this point, Mr. Wildman, to accept an accident history some 20-odd years ago which wasn't reported at that time.

Mr. Wildman: No, wait a minute. These were all reported and denied.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Not as accidents, sir.

Mr. Wildman: I pass.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Chairman, the point I left yesterday and suggested I would come back to on claims relates to a specific. I would like to note the name of Glenn Snider, case number C-11921118. The reason I raised this specifically is because I have dwelt on the waiting period in London. I understand—I haven't been corrected, so I have to assume this is correct—that there is a five-week waiting period. But, in the case of this gentleman, he was injured on October 12, and reported the injury that day. He has been off work since January 19, 1979, and has been dealing with, I understand, the compensation office directly since February 6 and indirectly prior to that. He was told within this past week that for a variety of reasons because the file was unlocated—it was “in dictation”—once it was located, he would have to wait in line, as it were.

For example, on March 15 he and we were informed that there were 47 investigations ahead of him at that point in time. On March 26 we were told the file couldn't be found and at that point there were now 60 investigations ahead of him. When it was found he would fall in line.

My secretary tells me this afternoon that there is some indication this might be speeded up. But you can imagine the frustration of that person. You can imagine our consternation. We tried to accommodate him by calling the people we were supposed to call, then have this delay of practically one month, and then find out, at that point in time, that there is still considerable waiting yet ahead of us. I would like the specifics investigated. I understand someone is moving on it more quickly now.

Secondly, when we are told there is a waiting list of five weeks, we have to consider the five or six weeks the person has already waited. In other words, are these figures and dates and times of waiting really accurate? I would submit, in this case, that they are not.

Hon. Mr. Starr: You are talking about a recurrence?

Mr. Van Horne: No, this is a new one. I don't wish to debate it because time is running out on us and I understand we will be called to vote within another seven minutes or so. Let me leave that specific case with you and leave this question about the accuracy of this waiting period.

Secondly, assuming I am relatively accurate, what can be done about it? Not just for London, the area I represent and the area for which I must speak, but also for Thunder Bay, which has a six-week waiting period, and St. Catharines and Windsor? Those four stand out in the table of local office communities that were described to me and to my secretary, and through the resultant information we obtained.

I would submit it is incumbent upon you to look at these four communities and try to speed things up, or else see why there is that greater time gap for them.

Mr. Chairman: There is time enough for Mr. Kerr to make a comment.

Mr. Van Horne: I have a second point I want to make, if I may, and then let him respond until time runs out. In this instance, my understanding is that the person involved has been dealing with his family doctor. His family doctor has recommended therapy, aside from having given this gentleman whatever treatment he could himself. The claimant, Mr. Snider, understands that Highland Institute in London, which has a fine reputation, will not undertake the recommended treatment because there is a question about payment because of varying opinions within OHIP and, I gather, within WCB.

The question, then, is this: Is it common practice for someone to step in and say, “I am sorry, until we have investigated ourselves we are going to interfere with or change the recommended treatment that your family physician has ordered”?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I would like to respond to Mr. Van Horne. The figures you have on the delays in adjudication in the local area are correct. You are also correct in saying that there has been a time lapse before the claim has been sent for the local investigation in the community. So the figures you have are correct, but there is also other time involved.

Mr. Van Horne: I would like to know who is at fault there because in this instance we know of a man who is relying on his neighbours and is on welfare until things are sorted out.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I can't say anybody is at fault because in this instance the accident occurred in October 1978 and apparently he didn't cease work until January 1979.

Mr. Van Horne: That is correct, even though he had treatment in between those dates.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I suspect there is some problem we are having in relating his present disability to the October date. I am only speculating because I don't know the claim. Obviously they have tried to resolve this by correspondence but it hasn't worked out. That is why they have asked for a local investigation.

Mr. Van Horne: If I may interject, I have been told the accident was reported on that day of October 12, 1978.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That is good; I am glad it was reported then. You were also talking about Thunder Bay.

Mr. Van Horne: The other four communities. Thunder Bay has a six-week waiting period; St. Catharines, four to five and Windsor, four to five.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: What Mr. Stewart, the director of the claims information and counselling services branch, who is here today, has been trying to do to clean up these is to shift the investigators around the province from areas where we can afford to move them to an area where the caseload is high. He has done that for Thunder Bay. The people are up there now. He is making arrangements for extra claims investigators to go to London next week. That's probably why your office was advised that there is a chance it will be done earlier. He is shifting people, which has been our pattern for the last little while, to send some people to London to try to clean up that backlog.

Mr. Van Horne: What is a little while? A month?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: How long have you been shifting people around, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Stewart: We have been doing it since last September.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Since September 1978, Mr. Stewart has been consistently shifting his investigators around to try to keep things in balance.

Mr. Bounsall: When are they going to St. Catharines and Windsor to clear up the long backlog?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Mr. Stewart hasn't booked that yet. I mentioned to you yesterday—and I make no bones about it—that we have a problem in this area which we intend to resolve.

Mr. Bounsall: Is that a staff problem?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Bounsall: That is the meeting on April 6?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That is right.

Mr. Bounsall: Just as a very quick supplementary, do you have staff in this area who recognize that their job is to act as a floater, to move from community to community as the backlog exists? Do you have such a category, the floating worker who goes to different areas?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No.

Mr. Bounsall: Part of his or her job would be to move to the different area offices as the need requires.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: The answer to your question is that we do not have a floating group. In the job description when people are hired, they realize and accept the fact that they can be moved from one office to another on a temporary basis, but we do not have a floating group from a pool from which we can draw.

Mr. Sweeney: I would like to know what the board's present procedure is with respect to people who have an identified previous back problem—whatever you call it—but who aggravate that problem with a specific accident at work and then at some later date further aggravate it, but not necessarily through a specific accident. The difficulty when I appear before the appeal board is trying to convince them that a lot of us live with some kind of a back problem and, as long as it isn't aggravated by a specific accident, we continue to live with it and continue to do our job. But once it has been aggravated, it is that much more easily aggravated at a later date, and the second, third or fourth aggravation may not be related to a specific accident.

I have had great difficulty getting any kind of consistency with these kinds of problems and I suspect I am not unusual there.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Mr. Sweeney, I guess it is unfortunate you weren't here earlier because I think Mr. McGuigan started on this particular problem and Mr. Kerr responded to it in part. Perhaps Mr. Kerr could add to what he suggested before with the additional factor you have brought in of continued aggravation.

Mr. Sweeney: It is the second and third time of the problem. We usually get acceptance the first time because there is a specific incident at work.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: This is a problem area and obviously it is a problem because the cases have also gone to the appeals system.

I suppose the thing we look for in adjudication, in trying to determine whether the second and third episodes are the results of the original disability, is a continuity of symptoms from the time of the last recurrence and whether or not he has had trouble and has had to go to his doctor and have treatment. We also take a look at what precipitated the current episode or the current problem, and put it all together and try to come to a conclusion with the help of medical advice as to whether or not his present condition, this second or third time, is a result of the original condition for which we assumed responsibility.

I don't think my answer is very conclusive or helpful because each one varies in its problem. Dr. McCracken might have something to add from the medical point of view about the problems of trying to determine whether the second or third episode is the result of the original condition in a back case. Determining these things is a real problem area for us. If the episode happens as a result of an incident at work, we are in a good position because it was another work accident. We can accept it as either a new claim or as an aggravation, a recurrence. If it is something that has occurred as a result of a second accident that is not in employment, that's unfortunate, but it is one we can't accept because it is a non-occupational accident.

When we have the case of a man with a permanent disability who has a recurrence from time to time, if the medical evidence indicates to us, yes, this is a flare-up, if you want to call it that, we can accept it. I don't like to use the word "exacerbation," but if it is a flare-up of his condition and it is related to the compensable permanent disability, yes, we can accept that. There are shades of grey areas that are very difficult to determine.

Mr. Sweeney: May I interject for just a second? The problem also occurs when we get an orthopaedic surgeon in the community who says; "Yes, the guy has had a history of back problems but he has lived with them"—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Sweeney: —but the kinds of recurrences that are happening now, in his medical judgement, relate back to the aggravation. He feels there is no good reason medically for him to have the kinds of recurrences based upon his history prior to the aggravation. Then we speak to your people and they say, "Oh, no, the record shows there is that previous back history." From that point on he simply assumes that whatever happens of a subsequent nature is due to the previous disposition and we have this mix in the middle.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It is pretty difficult if the man has a pre-existing condition prior to his work injury and we accept the claim on an aggravation basis. It is very difficult at times to determine whether this subsequent second, third or fourth episode is a result of the accident for which we accepted responsibility on an aggravation basis of the pre-existing condition, or is the condition really the result of the pre-existing condition. I appreciate what you are saying but it is very difficult at times to make those determinations.

Mr. Sweeney: Are you telling me there is no common practice or procedure to deal with this?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think each one has to be dealt with from the information on file that you can get to relate the current condition to the portion the board has accepted as a responsibility. When you add the pre-existing condition, that makes it even a little bit worse, depending upon his condition prior to the accident for which we accepted responsibility.

Mr. Chairman: I think we will have to adjourn until 8 o'clock sharp, because there's a vote in the House.

The committee recessed at 5:49 p.m. and resumed at 8 p.m.

On resumption:

Mr. McClellan: While we are waiting for Mr. Sweeney to digest his dinner, I would just pick up a point on another section of the legislation, if I may, Mr. Chairman, and it is section 21 of the act, which reads:

"An employee who claims compensation or to whom compensation is payable under this part shall, if so required by the employer, submit himself for examination by a legally qualified medical practitioner provided and paid for by the employer."

I would like to know under what circumstances this section is invoked. Is it applied as it reads, that wherever a company requests that a worker report to the company doctor for examination that worker is obliged to report to the company doctor for examination?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Mr. Kerr, would you like to comment on that?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Section 21(2) states clearly that an employee shall not be required to submit himself for examination otherwise than in accordance with the regulations. I think we have to take that into consideration when we are considering section 21.

Mr. McClellan: That is precisely why I am raising it. I am raising it for information firstly, to see if there is a problem. I would like to know what are the regulations and what are the qualifications on 21(1)?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I would be glad to explain that. This section has been in the act since the original act in 1915. There never have been regulations promulgated under this section. I suppose the reason for it, looking back in retrospect, is that from our point of view it hasn't really become a problem in this sense.

When an employer feels that a person should be examined because the length of disability is becoming prolonged, we tell the employer that our procedure is: "Contact us and we will take a look at the case and have it reviewed by our medical branch to see if any further action is required." If we are of the opinion that the man is still disabled and everything is going along nicely, we just say that no further action is required, we are quite satisfied that everything is in order.

Mr. McClellan: Can you give me an unqualified assurance that in the past—I will pick a figure out of the hat, five years—no injured worker has been required as a condition of processing his application for compensation to report to a company doctor, in the words of the act to a medical practitioner provided and paid for by the employer? Can you give me that unqualified assurance?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: In so far as we are concerned section 21(1) is inoperative. We feel there is nothing in our act that obligates a man to do that. There are some employers who do have their employees examined. We know of some employers who have that as a condition of employment. This is beyond the scope of the Workmen's Compensation Act, I might say, because there is nothing in the act that says the man has to. But if he wishes to do so voluntarily, or as a condition of employment or it happens to be in the union contract—and I don't know if it is in union contracts—then that is something beyond our purview. There is nothing in our act that forces a workman to be examined under section 21 because there are no regulations, and therefore we consider section 21(1) inoperative.

Mr. McClellan: Can I stop you at this point and just ask a question?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, sir.

Mr. McClellan: You say that there are some companies where it is a condition of employment that an injured worker is required to report to the company doctor in any accident claim?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Not just for accident claims, but for sickness too. It is an overall condition, regardless of the reason. How that would stand up legally, I don't know. It is what I have heard at a meeting I attended and it has nothing to do with us. Whether that stands up legally that is beyond us, but they also applied that in that instance for insurance purposes and other reasons not associated with accidents.

May I explain why we prefer to work on the basis we do? If there is any reason for a man to be examined, we would prefer that our medical branch bring a man in for examination or arrange for a more senior medical examination because we don't wish to pit the injured person against the employer, or vice versa pit the employer against the injured person.

Mr. McClellan: Precisely the problem with this section is that it entrenches the adversarial system in the act; that is why I am raising it, because that is the procedure that is used in civil litigation.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: As I have just said, it is in the act, but it is inoperative and has never been operative since the day it was put in the act in 1915.

Mr. McClellan: You are saying that an employer has never invoked this section in the history of the act.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: They have asked us about it and we have said it is inoperative. There is nothing in the act that makes it mandatory under the Workmen's Compensation Act for a man to be forced to undergo such an examination.

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you just take it out of the act?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I believe that is in one of our recommendations to the board for changes in the act.

Hon. Mr. Starr: There are a number of things, Mr. McClellan, which for house-keeping purposes should be amended or eliminated. We have never had an opportunity in the past few years because the only amendments that were brought forward were amendments having to do with remuneration ceilings et cetera.

Mr. McClellan: Maybe I should ask you to provide for the committee a package of legislative amendments that the corporate board feels need to go forward.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I suppose if we do put forward an amendment for the minister's decision and eventual amendment to the act, the committee studying the act would then have the opportunity of going clause by clause and studying these amendments or deletions.

Mr. McClellan: In other words, no.

An hon. member: You read that in there, didn't you?

Mr. McClellan: The thing I find interesting is that the act has been amended on numerous occasions since 1915 and yet this section has never been taken out, and this is the section that is absolutely explicit that the procedure is an adversarial procedure.

Hon. Mr. Starr: It was only in 1974 when the act was amended that certain house-keeping amendments were made. There are a great many others that have to be made and one of these days I'm hopeful that the minister would bring the act before the House, before the Legislature and before a committee of the House to study it clause by clause.

Mr. McClellan: A final comment: I am taking this particular concern from the brief presented to the royal commission on the confidentiality of health records by the United Steelworkers of America. They have a concern about this provision remaining in the act, precisely because, as they say in their brief, this kind of a section has no place in a no-fault, non-adversarial system and it ought to be removed.

I accept what Mr. Kerr is saying, that it's never invoked; and I hope it never will be, until such time as we get it out of the act.

Mr. Chairman: Is there any more discussion under claims? If not, we go to rehabilitation.

Mr. McClellan: I have some comments about the vocational rehabilitation program. I spoke last year and the year before about the way vocational rehabilitation is recorded in the annual report. I remain utterly dissatisfied with the reporting format for the board as a whole. We don't have the kind of basic statistical information about what you're doing, which I would think you would want to share with the Legislature and with the public.

Most of the other ministries not only provide a pretty comprehensive overview of what they're doing but they also provide the Legislature with briefing books and briefing material. I have a copy here of the Community and Social Services briefing book which provides statistical breakdowns on each one of their programs. It tells us exactly how many people are being served by each program. It shows the cost of each program, the staffing of each program, the categories of people that are being served by each program. We had to fight to get that.

Elie Martel battled for many years and finally had this blue book produced in Community and Social Services. It remains the model, as far as I'm concerned, but other ministries now provide similar material. I would like to ask the board when it's going to get around to giving us the kind of briefing material that will permit us to do our job in the estimates without having to waste an awful lot of time asking you nuts and bolts questions.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think it's an excellent suggestion on your part. We'll have a look to see what the basis of this report is. I'm sure we've got many records that we're pretty proud of that we could incorporate into our annual report, and I want to say without you even having to struggle.

Mr. McClellan: I make an issue out of it because I've made an issue out of it in previous years. I don't know if Dr. McCracken recalls or not, but we got into some discussion last year about the numbers of people who were being served by vocational rehab and we had an enormously difficult time trying to understand the size of the caseload and what was happening to the vocational rehabilitation caseload on a year to year basis.

I asked in the estimates last year if we could have the figures from 1975 to 1978. I asked Dr. McCracken for those figures but I still don't have them and I still don't have a way of understanding, in the absence of this statistical material, what's happening to the 28,934 cases that are cited in the annual report as having been dealt with.

The only figure I have with all the reports is, "During 1977 28,934 cases were dealt with." I don't know what that means. It's particularly difficult to know what it means, because the figure for 1977, as of the estimates last year, in March 1978, was 23,072. I don't even know which is the accurate figure for 1977, whether it's 23,072, as I was told in March, or whether it's 28,934, as I'm told in the annual report on page—I don't have the same copy that you have; I have the cheapo copy, you have the deluxe edition—it's on page 15 in my copy, under improved vocational rehabilitation services.

Maybe we could start by asking John Wisocky if he could give us a kind of a quick statistical overview of the 28,000 cases that were "dealt with," to use the board's phrase.

Mr. Wisocky: The 28,000 includes all the activities for the vocational rehabilitation branch at the time and encompasses many areas. I agree with you that there may have been confusion in past years about statistics, and for that reason, starting in mid-1977 we have re-formatted statistics and broken them down into specific areas and specific figures so that people can understand it. We have referrals to board staff where people are primarily in need of suitable work. We have referrals to social workers, to our counsellors at the hospital and rehabilitation centre and to our service controllers. We have specific figures for training assessment and figures for jobs found and utilized. We have interviews in various settings and so forth. I have all the specific figures and I can run over those if you like.

Mr. McClellan: You could start by helping me to understand where the figure 23,072 comes from, which was given to me as the vocational rehabilitation caseload for 1977.

Mr. Wisocky: I have 28,934. That encompassed all the referrals for the year 1977 to the vocational rehabilitation branch at the time. It included the patients we saw at the hospital and rehabilitation centre, all the training and assessment programs and referrals for specialized services, for instance to the community resources person at Downsview. That is a person who helps people where there may be no further entitlement under the act, but where we feel we have a responsibility to make sure that a person gets everything he is entitled to from other agencies. It includes referrals to unemployment specialists, commutations, figures on those going to the rehabilitation specialists, interviews and figures going to the rehabilitation service controller and so forth.

Mr. McClellan: I am not able to pursue what I wanted to pursue because when we had left off last year we had a total caseload of 23,072 of which 4,800 had returned to employment and 328 had been considered as not rehabilitable. That 328 figure is still with us in the annual report this year, but then 17,000 were referred on to different parts of the program. What I had hoped to be able to do was to find out what had happened to the 17,000 who had been referred on, that is carried over from one year to the next on the program.

What I want to understand is very simple, namely, how many people who are being serviced by vocational rehabilitation are getting back to work, where are they getting jobs, what kind of jobs are they getting, what kind of money are they making and how long are they staying at those jobs. The bottom line is jobs and job placement in terms of employment.

I don't want to pursue it now because we are operating on a different set of statistics. Somehow the statistics have changed from last year to this year. I don't want to make an issue out of that at all, but I would ask you if you could provide as quickly as possible a statistical overview of the vocational rehab operation. I will repeat the request I made last year, if it is possible and if your data system is still operating on the same basis. Could you provide it from 1975 up until the end of 1978 so that we can have a sense of what is happening from year to year, in particular how many folks are getting placed back in jobs?

I have a concern that a certain amount of evaporation is taking place in your caseload from year to year. I don't know whether you can account for that, but those folks have to be accounted for.

Let me ask another question that relates to last year's estimates. What is the policy now, Mr. Starr, on job searches? What is the policy of the Workmen's Compensation Board with respect to the annual requirement that an injured worker receives supplement on the basis that he is available and looking for modified employment? What is the requirement with respect to job search?

Hon. Mr. Starr: It is quite relaxed at the present moment due to economic conditions, as you know. I think probably this matter can be explained to you more succinctly by John Wisocky.

Mr. Wisocky: Is the question the policy about job searches? I guess each case is handled on its own merits. I do remember last year there was some comment in some areas that some counsellors were insisting a person do 15 searches per day and produce lists. I want to assure this committee that has never been official board policy but it has been a practice with some other social agency—I believe it is the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Maybe the habit was picked up by some of our junior staff, but that has been corrected. We have issued directives to the effect that each case has to be handled on its own merits and depending on a man's capabilities, depending on the geographical conditions and depending on the rehabilitation plan that is agreed upon between the injured employee and the counsellor, that is the action they take.

In other words, if the counsellor and the man agree they should look for a specific type of work, they may also agree on a method, number of contacts and so forth. All we ask of the injured employee is to remember where he may have gone so the details can be reviewed with a counsellor if necessary. The reason for that is the counsellor may know a particular firm and be able to intercede and assist the man in a particular area. There is no official policy about job search lists, it just depends on conditions.

Mr. McClellan: Normally, for example in the case of an injured construction worker in the Toronto area, you wouldn't be requiring him in 1979 to be trying to fill in a job search list with a quota of job contacts per day?

Mr. Wisocky: No.

Mr. McClellan: Rather you would be doing what I suspect you think makes much more sense, that is to say trying to help the injured worker through a program of identifying job placements and referring the injured worker to those job placements in a very positive kind of way.

Mr. Wisocky: Yes, you have put it very well.

Mr. McClellan: I think we have made some progress, Mr. Chairman, over the past year. The minister may want—well I am sure he wouldn't want to look at the Hansard for last year when we had the most incredibly stupid and acrimonious debate on precisely this topic. I just want to say I am pleased to see some progress taking place. I know from my own caseload that nothing is more damaging psychologically to a disabled worker, particularly an unskilled worker, than to have to go pounding the pavement in a totally futile search for employment when there is no employment to be had.

That leads me to a couple of comments about the vocational rehabilitation program. I had the opportunity last week to have a very useful and excellent conversation with Mr. Wisocky and Mr. Brownell. It was enormously helpful to me to understand what they are doing, and I think more important what they want to do in terms of developing a full and comprehensive vocational and rehabilitation program within the Workmen's Compensation Board. I wish them well in their endeavours. I think the training on the job program is a sound program, it is a good program. The only thing wrong is that it is too small, it is too limited.

I am concerned lest the same thing happen within the Workmen's Compensation Board as happened within the Ministry of Community and Social Services in the 1960s. The Ministry of Community and Social Services at one point in time had the glimmer of an understanding that maybe it shouldn't just be providing poverty-level social assistance allowances to people, that maybe there was a role for vocational rehabilitation services. They set up an excellent vocational rehab department under Jack Amos. It grew and developed and was a model program, but it remained a tiny enclave within a ministry that continued to operate without any focus or emphasis on rehabilitation. Eventually, it began to go downhill and it never got anywhere. It never became the major component of the ministry's program, as it should have done.

We have had this discussion before in your own estimates in the Ministry of Labour, Mr. Minister, and you know what I am talking about. I don't want to see that happen within the Workmen's Compensation Board. We won't be content with a small program operating with a small number of enormously dedicated and competent staff offering a tiny service. That's what you have now. I think the number of people who were placed in 1978 through the training-on-the-job program was 418 people. Again, we are talking about a vocational rehabilitation program with a caseload of 28,000 or 30,000 people a year. So if you are placing 418 individuals through this training-on-the-job program, you have got an awfully long way to go.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: I think Mr. Wisocky would like to comment.

Mr. Wisocky: If I may, you are quite correct with that figure. The 418 training-on-the-job programs were secured by our employment specialists. In fact, they found over 1,400 job opportunities. But we must remember that our counselling staff are also looking for jobs and placing people. Last year, the counsellors in the field and the employment specialists together placed almost 2,800 people—2,787, to be precise—which is an increase of almost 400 or 500 from the previous year and well over 1,000 from 1976. So I think we are on the right track, in spite of the economic conditions in Ontario.

Mr. McClellan: As I said, I believe that Mr. Wisocky and his staff are on the right track. I think the challenge is not even with the Workmen's Compensation Board; the challenge is with the Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie)—that's your new title, or will be soon. You can assume it as an honorific for purposes of the discussion this evening. You have a major responsibility as your ministry is redefining its mandate. We in this party have argued for a long time that there was a significant and unique role for the government of Ontario in manpower policy, and a major part of that role—not the whole role, but a major part of it—is to provide a specialized employment service for people who have disadvantages in competing in the work force.

Unless your ministry is prepared to move into a comprehensive, co-ordinated government program of providing jobs, job placement, job training, job counselling and the kinds of support services to provide employment for people who are disadvantaged in terms of their ability to compete in the economy then Mr. Wisocky's operation is going to remain isolated within the Workmen's Compensation Board, as vocational rehabilitation services remain isolated within the Ministry of Community and Social Services, as efforts to find jobs for the mentally retarded remain isolated within another branch of the Ministry of Community and Social Services, as efforts to deal with the difficulties that women have encountered re-entering the labour force remain scattered through a number of ministries, and sub-departments of ministries.

I would like to suggest to you that I think 1980 is going to be designated as the year of the handicapped person; I may be wrong, since this is the year of the child. It seems to me you ought to start planning seriously now to expand the kinds of job-creating, job-placement and job-training programs that this government can make available for disadvantaged and handicapped people. You should be ready to put into place a major government program; not as a minor activity, not even as a minor serious activity but a major government program in response to the year of the handicapped person. A program which would result in a serious, co-ordinated government effort to provide jobs and job opportunities.

Part of that co-ordinated government program, I suggest, should be legislation which would establish a quota system for disabled workers. I don't believe a quota system, in isolation, is going to solve the problems of injured, handicapped or otherwise disabled workers in getting into the work force, but if it was introduced as part of a major government commitment, the same kind of major initiative that has been taking place with respect to services for children in the Ministry of Community and Social Services over the past two years, then it would have real impact. The impact would be in providing a legislative mandate to all the people in this province—employers, workers and everybody. It would demonstrate the intention of the government and the Legislature to create openings in the economy for injured workers or otherwise disabled people who can't compete.

The significance of quota legislation is that it expresses a will and a determination by both government and the Legislature. It gives momentum to an overall campaign to create space in the economy for the physically handicapped. That is the importance of quota legislation.

I don't pretend that you can pass a law which says three per cent of all jobs will be set aside for disabled workers, period. You can't expect that, somehow you can take a sledgehammer and hammer people into those job slots. We don't have that kind of crude understanding of quota legislation. That is not what we are talking about.

Quota legislation would be accompanied by precisely the kind of program that Mr.

Wisocky and his still small staff are now engaged in: that is to say discussing with employers all across the province, the kinds of jobs that disabled workers can do, the kinds of contributions disabled employees can make to their organizations; sitting down and discussing and negotiating, in a serious way, the opening up of job spaces for injured workers, plant by plant, trade by trade, sector by sector. You can't do that with the eight people you have now.

You have a relatively small and dedicated staff trying to deal with an enormous problem on a province-wide basis. In the absence of any evidence of an overall government commitment that will stay small, and it won't generate the kinds of jobs on sufficient scale to provide job opportunities for the many tens of thousands of people who need those job opportunities.

I don't think you can do it apart from that kind of major campaign; and that is what we are talking about, a major government campaign to create space in the economy. Quota legislation is part of it, as is an expanded vocational rehabilitation service that does on a large scale what is beginning to be done on a small scale within vocational rehabilitation in the Workmen's Compensation Board.

There is an enormous opportunity for you, as Minister of Labour, to design that program. You have a mandate to do it. You have expertise within your own Ministry of Labour and within the Workmen's Compensation Board to develop that kind of a program, to convince your colleagues to do it, to begin to plan it and to try to have it in place as soon as possible.

It would be a marvellous accomplishment if we could transform our economy so that it would be able to accommodate every disabled worker in Ontario who wanted to work; I believe that is every disabled worker in Ontario. I happen to believe that; certainly the people I talk to in my constituency want only the opportunity to be productive, contributing members of society; to make their contribution and receive a fair measure of financial reward for that. That is what most people want out of life in that realm. We know how to do that; I believe that very deeply. What we have lacked so far is sufficient will and commitment to make that kind of thing happen. You have a unique opportunity to develop precisely that kind of program, and I hope you will. Otherwise, if the program remains a small and isolated program within the Workmen's Compensation Board, I don't see it developing on a sufficient scale, with sufficient urgency to make sufficient impact, to open the economy up for all the injured and physically disabled workers who live in this province.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, there are two or three areas of vocational rehabilitation that I would like to speak on. One is a followup to some comments that have just been made; so I will continue with that right now.

How many employees are there in the group that is running this on-the-job or affirmative action program with employers to hire injured workmen in their organizations? Is it still pretty small at the moment?

Mr. Wisocky: At the moment we have one administrator and seven employment specialists, three in Toronto and four in the province, one each in London, Sudbury, Ottawa and Hamilton.

Mr. Bounsall: Is that intended to be on a pilot scale, or can one anticipate, based on what you are able to produce, that you are going to be making a recommendation at some time in the future to expand that group rather dramatically?

Mr. Wisocky: I have been given board approval to try it to this scale to see what the possibilities are. So far it has been very successful and the board is considering other personnel in this area.

Mr. Bounsall: I think it has been quite successful. If I might say to the minister and to the chairman of the board, I think my colleague was completely right when he said this is the right avenue to be taking. This so far small pilot group running affirmative action programs with employers and pointing out the on the job training program in which employers can qualify for a subsidy from the board while the injured worker is being trained is certainly an advance over the situation that existed in the past in finding employment opportunities for the injured worker.

I have one comment though. I am not at all sure we needed to set this group up within the board if on employment application forms one was not still able to ask the question which is asked on most employment forms around the province: "Have you ever been a recipient of WCB benefits?" If they check off the "yes" it kills the application. When they check off "no" and the employer subsequently finds out they have, they are fired if they are not in an organized place and not beyond a certain time period. I think in Chrysler it's an 18-month period beyond which, if your work is satisfactory you can still be retained even if you have lied on your application form about being a WCB recipient. That 18-month rule is not an invariable rule with every corporation, unionized or otherwise.

What I am saying is I am not sure this group would need to have been formed and be doing the affirmative action in the on-the-job training, with WCB subsidy moneys going to that employer if the Human Rights Code had been amended to include physical disability as one of those criteria for which one could not be discriminated against in terms of employment. It has been hanging since 1974 as an amendment, Mr. Minister. That has been promised since the fall of 1974 by people occupying your position.

If that had been passed those questions would disappear from the form and injured workmen would not have to state upon an application that they were a recipient of WCB. By that simple fact alone they could more easily obtain the employment that's there.

This group has to operate in the context in which we find ourselves in Ontario. Every employer can still ask that question; so operating in that context this group is very necessary. If those amendments were made to the Human Rights Code, I am not sure the board would have had to set up this pilot group and consider the expansion of it because of the problems injured workers had in getting re-employed if they couldn't go back to their former place of employment.

Certainly under the current situation in which we operate, with every employer viewing with suspicion any person who has ever received WCB benefits, you have got to have that group there which has been formed in order to give injured workers a chance to get back and be retrained on the job with an employer who is getting subsidized to do that training and the full affirmative action program that takes place with the employee. They explain the on-the-job training program to the employer. All employers should know this. I don't know why they don't pick it up more clearly, but they have this opportunity to explain it to them again in person. A re-injury of an old injury is not charged to them but to the former company at which the original injury took place.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Second injury fund, we have a pamphlet on that.

Mr. Bounsall: I know you have, and I know that this special group is now using it and maybe many of your normal vocational rehabilitation counsellors in the community are using it. I know that of late I have said to the people who have come through my office who are about to go to vocational rehabilitation: "Go down and ask for retraining and get on their scheme in the Windsor office." I have said: "They have pamphlets which explain the second injury fund. Ask for a handful of them which you can take and give to the employers you try to solicit work from." I don't know whether they do that. I suspect they would. The pamphlets are not very expensive but most employers, until maybe now, or until they are approached by this group have not grasped the point that if a man or woman has had a back injury somewhere and a new employer takes a chance on that back, if there's a re-injury or recurrence of that same old injury, that new employer is not going to be charged, and that has been some of the problem in getting a job with another new employer. But certainly if the question wasn't even asked, Mr. Minister, which is going to require an amendment to the Human Rights Code, that would also help the injured worker in finding a job with a new employer.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Bounsall, if the Human Rights Code was amended it would not necessarily eliminate the question on the employment form at all, and as long as that question was there and was answered it would be difficult to say why the employer refused a job to this person. It would be difficult to say it was on that basis. It would have to be almost eliminated from the form.

Mr. Bounsall: That's what I am saying. If you amended the Human Rights Code to add physical disability as a prohibition for discrimination on the basis of employment, that question would not be able to be asked. It would be off the employment forms, so that would be helpful.

Let me offer one other comment in this same general area. I think your group should still continue. If we get surprised next week and the Minister of Labour and Manpower brings in the amendments we have been waiting for since 1974, amending the Human Rights Code in that respect, I think your group should still continue.

Interjections.

Mr. Bounsall: We would all faint with surprise, but I think your group should still continue and I think it should be considered to be expanded.

Hon. Mr. Starr: We intend that it should.

Mr. Bounsall: When, may I ask—I suppose it's determined by the corporate board—is the date you have in mind for this analysis of what this newly formed group has done so far, analysing whether it has been successful and whether or not there should be an expansion of it? What sort of general date do you have in mind?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think Mr. Wisocky, as director, would be able to answer that.

Mr. Wisocky: Yes, I can answer that just by looking at the statistics. In 1977, the employment specialist group—I think it was about two—found 289 job opportunities during that year, of which 131 were utilized. In 1978, we received permission from the board to add five more employment specialists and they were recruited and placed by, I would say, July 1978, so you are talking about six months. During that six months they found over 1,400 job opportunities—1,425 to be exact—of which 418 were utilized. Again, it is just not any job opportunity. It's the types of jobs that disabled workers can do.

I feel that with the expertise we have created we can become more proficient in the area in the sense that we will have the facilities in knowing the types of jobs that we should find for placement of disabled workers, and I think our objective for 1979 is to fill at least 600 jobs. I feel we should be closer to 1,000, but again let's remember that we also have a good number of rehabilitation counsellors out in the field who also look for jobs and place injured employees, so I think through the co-ordinated efforts of both bodies we will find even more jobs and then, with our advertising program and the assistance of members of Parliament, we may be fairly successful in spite of the economic conditions.

Mr. Bounsall: We don't have the time to search for jobs on behalf of our constituents.

Mr. Wisocky: No, but you do address various employer groups and an extra word here and there can help.

Mr. Bounsall: Imperial Oil invites me often; and Chrysler and Ford.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Invites you to do what often?

Mr. Bounsall: There is one other general comment I would like to make, and I made roughly the same comment last year but it wasn't recorded and I want it there for posterity in a sense. Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Minister, and to the people in the area, the localization in the local offices of your vocational rehabilitation branch with the full power to do all the work at the local level is working. You are talking about decentralization in the future. I can assure you that the decentralization of that service is working.

I am going to be a little historical. There used to be a person in the Windsor office, the local office, who was an amputee—I guess a former WCB recipient himself—whose name was Paul Wheeler and who is now not working for the board.

Paul was, I think for a long time, the only one in the Windsor local office. When Paul was the rehab officer there and someone came into the office and he or she had reached the point where they had either received a letter cutting them off of compensation, or were about to, you knew that the last medical report had gone in, you said, "Go down to the local office and apply for vocational rehab," and you never saw the person again. Whatever happened down there between that recipient and Paul Wheeler was a positive one. I don't know whether Paul found him a job or got them all on retraining, whatever proportion that was, but you never heard from the chap again because he was being handled properly.

Then Paul quit. You went through a period, let me tell you, where every person I sent down ended up angrily back in my office the next day because of the treatment he'd received from the then employees sent to replace Paul. Those employees are no longer there and, for the last couple of years, the staff you have had in the local Windsor office—and I can't speak for all the local offices in Ontario—are excellent. They're simply excellent.

Again, it's a sort of Paul Wheeler thing. You send them down to vocational rehab and if you hear anything back it's a fairly positive story. They might say to me, "Miss So-and-so, or Mrs. So-and-so wants me to do this. Do you think that's the right thing to be doing?" That might get a question back. I say, "Yes, if that is what she is asking you to do, try it. Do you see anything wrong with your trying that?" Then they may say, "No, I just wanted to check."

Mrs. Campbell: I like it.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: What's going on here? What is this all about? What's the centre of this experience?

Mr. Bounsall: In other words if you hear back, it's positive. All I'm saying is that the decentralization program, providing they have the proper staff—with Paul Wheeler in the past and the current staff you have now and have had for the last year at least—has worked well. They're a good staff, they're working well and what's happening in the local offices, at least the local Windsor office in vocational rehab is good. So don't hesitate to decentralize the checks you may need from head office to see that there is the consistency required based on vocational rehab situations, because it's working.

I think you just added another staff member in Windsor, a fourth one, which makes the caseloads fairly reasonable in the vocational rehab office so they can do some real, meaningful followups.

They would like to follow up. When they get someone placed in a job I'm sure they'd like to make a phone call to them three months later and ask, "Are you still at the job and is it working out?" That's something they've never had time to do. Now, with a reasonable caseload of maybe, what, 60?

Mr. Wisocky: The average at the moment is 61 per counsellor.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, they're now down to 60 in the Windsor office and they're going to be able to do some of that followup which, heretofore, they've not been able to do with a caseload of nearly 90 or 100.

In your manual which goes to the people involved in vocational rehabilitation, you have this nice section on page C3 on policy: "The file of any workman who falls into the eligibility category"—and those categories are outlined for those persons who would be eligible to receive vocational rehab—"should be referred to the vocational rehab department so that these services could be considered."

This is a manual for vocational rehab people. That's nice that the vocational rehab people should be told that these people who are eligible should come and see them. That statement has to be in the operational manuals of the people who are dealing with claimants as they're approaching the point where they need vocational rehab and it should be being applied in another part of the board. It's nice to see it here but what I find that with most of the claimants who come into my office, it's me who acquaints them of the fact that there is a vocational rehab service at the board.

Now, that's an untrue statement in only one respect. For those who have been to the Downsview hospital, as they are about to exit from the Downsview treatment, the Downsview medical rehab people explain to them about the vocational rehab which is back in their local area. As they go from this contact with the Downsview hospital, they're told about both vocational rehab back in the community. But if they're not associated with Downsview, they don't seem to find out if theirs is just a normal claim and they're getting a normal report back in and that report is a light duty report.

Claims do not seem to be making any effective contact with most of the recipients in terms of acquainting them with the vocational rehab opportunities in the local office. These are the people who, when I say to them, "Have you been down to the local office to talk about vocational retraining?" say, "What's that?" They don't know about it.

Somewhere in the board—other than the vocational rehab department, because they don't know who these people are until they turn up to see them—there should be a re-referral from claims to vocational rehab for injured workers. That's not taking place unless they've been at the Downsview hospital. They are not being placed effectively.

Mr. Wisocky: Dr. Bounsall, actually it is taking place. What is happening is that the majority of our referrals come from the claims adjudicators because as part of the process they have these instructions also. They watch cases and if they feel that the vocational rehabilitation services may be indicated, they refer a copy of the file at the present time to our service controllers who determine the eligibility. I can say that the majority come from the claims adjudicators, but you're quite correct. Other referrals do come from people like yourself or a hospital or even outside treating physicians.

We have now developed a public brochure that is available in all offices for injured employees where they can look at the information and find out what vocational rehabilitation is all about and apply on their own if they feel that they may qualify. There have been some changes in this area.

Mr. Bounsall: Are those fairly recent changes?

Mr. Wisocky: No, this has been a practice for many years.

Mr. Bounsall: Then I would have a look at whether that practice is really working effectively because those that come through my office who are at vocational rehab eligibility time, if you like, or where you can look six months down the road and see that they're going to have problems at that time since some of them are still under medical treatment, have not heard of vocational rehab. When I say, "Go down to the local office as they have good people in that area down there and discuss it with them," I don't hear back from them. Or I hear back, "Yes, Mrs. So-and-so or Mr. So-and-so is doing this for me down there." When they got down there they must have found they could have been helped, but they had not yet heard about it through other channels in the board.

Mr. Wisocky: Another major development is our computer system for vocational rehabilitation purposes. One of the key ingredients will be the ability of identifying cases from the claim computer system that could be eligible for vocational rehabilitation services, at which time some of our staff will be contacting individuals who are monitoring the case and making sure it's referred at the appropriate time. As everybody knows, early identification of cases for services is the key factor. I think through the computer system we will have that facility so that the counsellors can become involved at the time of the accident or three months after the accident rather than a year later.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Mr. Bounsall, I think Mr. Kerr would like to make some comments as well.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I would. I would not like a misunderstanding to be generated. For years the claims adjudicators have been the ones who identify from the medical reports that come in when they are adjudicating the claim and authorizing payments. They identify the claims that should be referred to vocational rehabilitation division for service. For instance, all serious disabilities where permanent disability is going to result are automatically referred, such as paraplegics and major amputees.

Mr. Bounsall: They're pretty obvious.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, they're pretty obvious. Then you have other types of cases. Let's take the case where the proverbial back is a problem. At that point in time when the claim is first reported, it may not indicate to us in the initial report that it's going to be a problem for vocational rehabilitation. But, as that claim develops, as soon as it's identified that there is going to be a problem with vocational rehabilitation in returning to a job and it's indicated that he can't go back to his former job, that case is referred to the vocational rehabilitation division.

There are guidelines set down for our claims adjudicators and the referral of these cases. In addition to that, when our new adjudicators come in, Mr. Wisocky's division is kind enough to provide somebody from his training area to come and speak to our new adjudicator-trainees so that from the beginning we try to make them rehabilitation aware. As Mr. Wisocky said, we are the major referrals to his division. But in addition when Dr. McCracken's medical staff are reviewing claims from the point of view of treatment, they would also refer cases to vocational rehabilitation. So for a good many years this has been ongoing.

In the area offices I can understand your feeling that perhaps the claims counsellor hasn't referred anybody to the rehabilitation counsellor in the area office, because this identification normally—I say normally—takes place at head office where the claim file is.

Mr. Bounsall: I didn't say the local claims officers didn't make referrals. I know the position the local claims officers are in, I know it would have to come from Toronto—the local voc rehab—it wouldn't come within the office, necessarily or easily.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's right. But what has developed recently in the area offices, and this is a good thing, we want the claims adjudicators and the claims counsellors and the rehabilitation counsellors to work closely together as a team. In the area offices the support staff, such as the receptionist counsellor, do the reception work for these people who are coming in to see either the rehabilitation counsellors or claims counsellor. We do have this kind of intermingling so that people are vocational rehabilitation aware. We think this combination is developing quite nicely.

I just wanted to let you know that for a long, long time—as long as I can remember—we have had a vocational rehabilitation operation; these referrals have been coming from the claims area and the medical area.

Mr. Bounsall: I don't want to ask you a percentage or have you digging for figures, but let me just put it this way: I wonder if you are sending as great a number to voc rehab as you should be. The amputees, the back injuries, are obvious ones. I know if your claims files are showing that someone is being designated medically as 100 per cent recovered, and that person, from what your files show you, does have a job to go back to when that person recovers, I can see you obviously don't send those cases. But is every other case sent to voc rehab, and if not, why not? Because there's where the shortfall may be coming.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: They are referred at the appropriate time. In the example you've given, it sometimes develops from the information we have—it looks as though this man has a job to go back to when he's completely recovered, but then when we get quite a way along the line the employment situation is such that he does not have a job to go back to. So there could be a late referral, not from the point of view that we have erred but because we haven't had any information to indicate the referral is possible or is necessary.

As far as we are concerned, we have guidelines for referrals and our people are referring these claims to the vocational rehabilitation division. Mr. Wisocky knows how many are referred. In the claims area we don't keep a record of that particular statistic. Mr. Wisocky has reported the number of referrals he has received. My answer would be, yes, I think that all the cases are being referred, if you allow for the human error factor.

There is the point Mr. Wisocky has mentioned that a computer-assist program should help eliminate that small percentage of human error. I think this is why he mentioned it to the committee—that in addition to referral by human beings, if we can have a computer assist to take care of that human error, then I think that makes the system pretty well foolproof.

Mr. Bounsall: Okay, I would be delighted to have no one in my office asking me what it is they should do now, as their pay cheques from the board are ending and they have nowhere to go. That's where I say go down to voc rehab right away. Those would account for a third of my caseload on WCB and they are very easy ones. I can now send them, as I did when Paul Wheeler was there, down to voc rehab and know I am not going to hear back from them.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We keep asking them about employment in the workmen's progress report, form 41, which we get from time to time. And from time to time we get a report from the employer in prolonged cases, whom we've asked whether modified employment is available. So I keep repeating, as soon as we can identify, or we're told or we're aware from the information coming in from the various sources—from any source—that there is going to be a vocational problem related to the injury, then it is referred to Mr. Wisocky's division.

Mr. Bounsall: Let me put it this way: What you're not picking up is the case in which it is not clear that there is going to be a problem and there is nothing to indicate that there would be a problem; you're just assuming that there isn't one.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We're not assuming. The information on file does not indicate that there is going to be a problem. As soon as the information indicates there is going to be a problem, it is referred.

Mr. Bounsall: But where the shortfall is coming is that you don't get all the input you need in the system. You're not receiving all the input you need in terms of knowing whether or not in each case there is a problem.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I would have to admit that's correct. For instance, some of the injured employees do not complete all the questions on our workmen's progress report. So you're quite right, I'm sure there must be cases where, from various sources, we don't have all the information.

Mr. Bounsall: It might be best just to take a chance. If you don't have it all, you might just suggest that they go down and talk to the vocational rehabilitation people; it would help inflate John Wisocky's figures for future years.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: In our referrals we don't suggest the man go; we refer the case to Mr. Wisocky, and his staff look at it to decide whether or not service should be given.

Mr. Bounsall: If there is no problem, and if your vocational rehabilitation people are as good as they are in the Windsor office, it's going to be a five-minute conversation with a pleasant vocational rehabilitation officer, with the final line being: "Look, if you ever have a problem with your job related to the fact you've had a WCB claim, come back and see me. I don't expect you'll ever walk through my door again, but I'm here."

That's not bad PR for the board to have out amongst injured workers. If they do have a job and they do walk in and say, "Somebody said for me to come in and see vocational rehabilitation down here in Windsor. Why am I here? I have a job," they can say, "That's fine; we just wanted to make sure you did have one. If you ever have any problem, come back and see us."

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I would like to be guided by what Mr. Wisocky requires, because I could refer the whole 160,000 lost-time claims, but that wouldn't make any sense. We're quite happy to work with Mr. Wisocky and provide him with any kind of referral that he deems necessary to give the best service to the injured person. We're open to any suggestions and requirements that Mr. Wisocky has in that connection. You can count on our co-operation.

Mr. Bounsall: If you want to inflate your figures and make your case, you might ask for a few more so we don't get any of them in our office; although it's a fairly positive contact, because you know they're going to walk out and be directed to a place where—at the moment, at least, with the staff that is there in the Windsor office—they are going to receive the proper kind of attention that it is intended they should receive.

The other area of vocational rehabilitation that concerns me is referred to on page C2, dealing with services outside Ontario; it says, "Field service is not normally provided outside Ontario." That word "normally," from my experience, can be read as "invariably." Why is that?

I am not getting into cases, but let's say there is a person who has a bad back injury, who knows he is always going to have problems, and who is a member of an evangelical church in which the training for ministers in that church takes place in Illinois. He says, "What I should do is become a minister of my church, since I'm not going to be in any shape to do anything physically for the rest of my life." Let's say he is in receipt of straight compensation, because the back injury is certainly nowhere along the way where that person can do anything; he doesn't know enough to go to vocational rehabilitation, and hasn't been told, because he's still in the full-receipt category—he's not even approaching half recovery but can sit in a chair.

If he takes off to take training as a minister in Illinois, the board—I suppose using this term "normally," and looking at the list of approved institutions, most of which are not outside Ontario—says: "You didn't ask us whether you could go and because you didn't, we are not very impressed that you didn't. We don't pay outside Ontario, anyway. So what do you mean when you say that you expect us to continue with some compensation for you while you are still completely disabled?" At the same time he happens to be on a course which will definitely lead to employment. It just doesn't happen to be in Ontario.

What I am saying is this: Here is a person who has gone out and helped himself almost immediately. He finds himself in a situation where it is just unfortunate that the ministerial training he has taken is in Illinois rather than in Ontario.

Mr. Wisocky: Well, if I may, we are just in the midst of doing a massive revision of the policies and procedure manual and hopefully, later this year you will see an entirely different format, because changes have taken place and so forth. That is number one.

Two: As I read it in the context of the paragraph it means that normally our people don't provide services to people who leave the province. But we do have an inter-provincial understanding with the other provinces in Canada. So, if a person goes to Vancouver, for instance, we can ask the BC board to handle the case on our behalf. We do the same thing for them and so forth.

Now, in the example you give, hopefully we can find similar training in Ontario and help that individual, if it is within his entitlement. But there are instances where we do approve training in border cities like Detroit or the Sault.

Mr. Bounsall: Okay. I am not saying we really want to get into the individual case. But let's say that training, as it is in this case, is a little bit beyond the border—you know, only about 200 miles beyond the border. Illinois is that close to Windsor. How far beyond the border can you stretch it?

Mr. Wisocky: Well, Dr. Bounsall—

Mrs. Campbell: How far beyond the border?

Mr. Wisocky: If we have a blind person, the only training we can get for this individual is in New Jersey. We do approve of that. So, if there are no facilities in Ontario, but there is something specialized elsewhere that we need, we do go outside of Canada per se. But it is rather the exception.

Mrs. Campbell: Maybe he should change his religion.

Mr. Bounsall: I mean that's where that church has training; that's where that person had to go.

The other thing is this whole provision of service outside Ontario. It is normally only done in Ontario.

You say that the BC board picks it up. Well, in vocational rehabilitation, I have one problem and this relates to—again, I am not getting into the individual case—

Mrs. Campbell: You are so and you know it.

Mr. Bounsall: I am using it as an illustration. I promise that I will not give him the compensation number.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, good. They couldn't find the file, anyway.

Mr. Bounsall: Now or later.

The chap who went to vocational rehabilitation in Windsor went through all the retraining. He is an iron worker in his 40s. He was all lined up to go to St. Clair College and take a course that would have retrained him as an inspector. This guy has all kinds of clerical ability and, all of a sudden, nothing happened. He was tired of waiting around here. A relative out in BC offered him a job at about 15 hours a week, so, rather than starve, he went to BC. I finally got a letter from him: "Has anything happened to any decisions back in Ontario about my voc rehab?" I phoned and said, "Have you not placed this guy? He has managed to go outside the province—unfortunately for him, probably—to find himself some employment which is barely keeping body and soul together. He is interested in that retraining which looked as though it might be offered."

Well, let me tell exactly what happened here. The voc rehab worker or workers who were there after Wheeler but who are now no longer there found when they passed his file over, that there was nothing in it indicating the tests he took; nor his contacts with St. Clair College. Nothing. He would have to come back to Windsor and start the whole thing over again in order to see whether he was eligible for that kind of assistance. What do I tell him? Voc rehab says: "Well, we can't make an analysis of him out in BC. Come back to Windsor and we will see." He is worried about leaving his 15-hour-a-week job in BC because at least that is 15 hours a week, to come back to Windsor possibly to be told no.

What about services normally provided only in the province? What can you do with this guy? Do you have it set up with the board so that someone who finds himself in another province for whatever reason who needs vocational rehabilitation assessment—and this person can come back to Ontario for it if he is eligible—can have that assessment done in BC?

Mr. Wisocky: Yes, he can. At any given time we have 60 such cases for all of the provinces in Canada. If you give me a claim number, I can pursue it.

Mr. Bounsall: No, I will get your local staff to do it because that is the only time they have aired that in recent months, when they have said to me that he should come back here rather than saying they will arrange for his retesting out in BC. If that is the answer and they can do that, they will arrange for his retesting out in BC then?

Mr. Wisocky: Please bring it to the attention of local staff and I can assure you something will happen.

Mr. Bounsall: I have one small series of questions on medical rehabilitation, but because we have been so thoroughly on vocational rehabilitation, why don't I leave off and come back in on it later?

Mr. Chairman: Is there anyone else?

Mrs. Campbell: Yes. I wonder if we could get a breakdown, if it is available, of these jobs that you have been successful with. How many have been jobs you have found for women and how many for those whose language is not English and who are not fluent in the English language?

Mr. Wisocky: We don't post the jobs specifying a man or woman because I think it is discriminatory.

Mrs. Campbell: But don't you have a record of the ones you have found?

Mr. Wisocky: We can get that for you; there is no problem there. In fact, we can get also the figures for the second question you asked. The only figure I have available is that I believe 17 per cent of our constant active caseload involves female claimants, but if you would like I can get those figures for you.

Mrs. Campbell: And could you tell me when someone is going into rehab, how do you approach the kind of rehab you give? I will give an example too.

Mr. Bounsall: Not the number.

Mrs. Campbell: No, not the number. In the case of a woman whose experience is in the nursing field, while your vocational rehab was in motor vehicle radio installations until we got it corrected, how would she get into that from nursing in the vocational rehab? Would you not somehow try to relate the kind of work experience she had with what you wind up with in the end?

Mr. Wisocky: Generally speaking, you are right. What we try to do is get the person back with the accident employer, if at all possible, in a former capacity and a modified capacity; if not, then with a new firm; and, if not, then training. I believe you inquired a while ago about a nursing assistant with a back injury?

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, and I did get it corrected and she didn't continue installing radios in cars.

Mr. Wisocky: Right. She is being trained as a medical health records technician, I believe.

Mrs. Campbell: What I am getting at is how did she get into this other thing in the first place?

Mr. Wisocky: She expressed an interest in that sort of work. In fact, she was installing it in her own car.

Mrs. Campbell: Of course, that isn't what she said to me. When she got into it, she said that that was the alternative offered to her.

Mr. Wisocky: I think it was through her brother-in-law who was a manager of one of the outlets.

Mrs. Campbell: That you got her in there?

Mr. Wisocky: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Are you sure you don't know the number?

Mrs. Campbell: I think he knew I was coming.

Mr. Wisocky: If you would like the name, we will give you the name too.

Mrs. Campbell: No, I don't want the name. Generally speaking, you do try, I assume, to get them in something related to their work experience if it is possible.

Mr. Wisocky: Yes, you're quite correct.

Mrs. Campbell: Do you have an ongoing difficulty in this area, as you have certainly had in the past, with those people who really have difficulty with English and who probably have difficulty in some areas with their own native language? Those are the ones I've had most difficulty with, in the course of my experience with the board in the vocational rehabilitation.

Mr. Wisocky: Language limitations are always a problem. There's no question about that, Mrs. Campbell.

Mrs. Campbell: Then how do you go about it? What do you do?

Mr. Wisocky: We can send a person to school to learn English as a second language and we've even started a program now where we are going into the Italian community to find job opportunities there for placement of injured employees. I was just looking at a statistical survey we did recently and I believe our success in placing people with limited language problems was almost the same as the ones without any problems, but I'm just trying to get a figure for you here.

By the way, in that particular survey, 11 per cent were female, and 89 per cent male, so it gives you a rough idea.

Mrs. Campbell: You do have some nice words.

Mr. Wisocky: Oh yes, we do, we're trying anyways.

Another factor is, through Dr. McCracken's auspices we've allowed Frontier College to come to the hospital and rehabilitation centre to get their people to help our injured employees if they choose, so they can get started at the hospital and continue when they go back into the community. There are several things we are doing.

Mrs. Campbell: If you have someone who is not able to study in his or her own native language, do you make any provisions for, first of all, training them in that language before training them in the English language? It's almost impossible for them to learn English if they don't know how to read and write their own language.

Mr. Wisocky: We don't. We have never had a request and also there are so many dialects.

Mrs. Campbell: There are indeed.

Mr. Wisocky: Yes. Also, the facilities may not be available, and this is why we concentrate on training in the job because that is something practical they can learn and do with their hands. I think that's the approach we use there.

Mrs. Campbell: Let's get to the nitty gritty of it. If they can't do work with their hands and they're in this position, what do you do?

Mr. Wisocky: We try very hard to get something. There's no doubt there, but if in the final analysis we can't get anything because of a combination of many factors like language, education, disability and so forth, then if the worst comes to the worst we try to get a person all the benefits to which they are entitled from the board and other social agencies. I guess that's the best we can do, but certainly we will entertain or try anything we possibly can. In some cases, it's just reality. There's nothing we can do.

Mrs. Campbell: Is age a factor and if so, at what age do you sort of give up?

Mr. Wisocky: There is really no age limit, but I do want to mention there are some cases where a person may be a couple of years from retirement and we've tried everything possible to get him back and it's not possible. Then we ask the claims services division if they would consider some sort of supplementary award until retirement age. In most cases, they look at that factor and give favourable consideration.

Mrs. Campbell: Would that type of approach be before or after the Ombudsman committee tackles that?

Mr. Wisocky: It's well before. I even remember my days in claims. It was the practice then and it is the practice now.

Mrs. Campbell: What if there are some slippages in that fact, as there have been?

Mr. Wisocky: I can't answer that. That's Mr. Kerr's responsibility. I'm sure there aren't, not deliberate ones anyway.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, nobody is suggesting they are deliberate.

[9:30]

Mr. M. Davidson: There are a couple of questions I would like to ask Mr. Wisocky. Just following up a bit on what Mrs. Campbell said, referring to the age factor, you said a couple of years from retirement. Can you put a firmer figure on that? What would you consider a couple? Are you talking about a couple as two?

Mr. Wisocky: I think I'll have to ask Mr. Kerr to explain that. I think it's more than a couple.

Mr. M. Davidson: More like 10?

Mr. Wisocky: Usually it's around 60 years of age or over, Mr. Kerr tells me. But, again, we don't necessarily just give up. When a person is 60 years old we don't just say, "We can't do anything for you," and that's it. We try our best to place these people. In fact, Mrs. Campbell, I just remembered that we had a 58-year-old female injured employee whom we successfully trained as a bookkeeper for $275 a week to start with, so it helps.

Mrs. Campbell: I am delighted with that statistic. It makes me feel better.

Mr. M. Davidson: Perhaps you could explain to me what would happen in a situation—and, again, I'm not going to give you the claim number—where vocational rehabilitation sent a man to Centennial College and he attended from August 1977 until June of 1978, and during that period accumulated all As in his courses, with the exception of one course in which he had a B. That was kind of a pre-educational warmup to lead him into business administration and accounting, and then they suddenly told him that they weren't going to let him complete the course.

Why on God's earth would he waste almost a year going to school at a cost to the compensation board and then be told they weren't going to allow him to complete the course? How would that situation develop and why would it develop?

Mr. Wisocky: I don't really know, Mr. Davidson, because it doesn't make sense, but if you give me the case number I would be most happy to pursue it. Generally speaking, the objective is to sit down with the injured employee to see what the limitations are and what the possibilities are and jointly develop a rehabilitation plan. Then it's implemented by both parties. I think if the person was sent to Centennial College for the purpose of business administration it must have been thought out in the first place. For the life of me, I don't see why there would be a change in mid course, but, again, without having the specific case it's pretty hard to answer.

One thing I can add is that we've added a lot of rehabilitation counsellors and maybe the case got transferred to one of our newer people, and maybe there is something wrong in that area. I'd like to look into it, if you would give me the number later.

Mr. M. Davidson: I'd be glad to do that later, but not right at the moment. I think you're probably going to hear about it anyway, because I understand it's now before the Ombudsman.

Mrs. Campbell: So many of them are.

Mr. M. Davidson: It just seems ridiculous to me. I had the opportunity to sit down with this individual and discuss this case with him. For the life of him he couldn't understand why this had happened and, when he had completed telling me the situation, I couldn't understand how it could possibly have happened. It just didn't seem feasible that you would send someone to Centennial College from August 1977 to June 1978 and then suddenly tell him, "We're sorry, we're not going to allow you to complete the course."

I expect one of the possibilities or reasons may be what I just heard Mrs. Campbell say. The gentlemen happens to be about 58 years old or somewhere in that neighbourhood.

Mr. Wisocky: There is one case we know of where we did stop training in mid course because we suddenly discovered that the person has been working full-time in real estate earning well in excess of $20,000 a year. I'm sure that's not the case here.

Mr. M. Davidson: I doubt it very much. He didn't look like he was earning much of anything.

Mr. Wisocky: If you sent it to the Ombudsman's office, I'm sure we'll have an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. M. Davidson: Can you give me some idea, Mr. Wisocky, of the budget that is set aside for vocational rehabilitation in the province?

Mr. Wisocky: The expenditures? In 1977, almost $6 million—$5,951,286 was spent in section 53 expenditures. That's direct expenditures. In 1978, they went up to $6,843,469. That's in direct section 53 expenditures, but we must remember that we have sections 41(1)(b) and 42(5), where supplementary awards under claims services indirectly tie in too.

Mr. M. Davidson: Discounting the other sections, under section 53 it was $6 million?

Mr. Wisocky: In 1978, $6.9 million, to round it off.

Mr. M. Davidson: That's a pretty small percentage of the overall budget of the board, isn't it?

Mr. Wisocky: It's a long way from the $99 in 1925.

Mrs. Campbell: What was it in 1898?

Mr. Wisocky: Sorry, there was no act then.

Mr. M. Davidson: I'll forget you ever said that.

Mr. Wisocky: My apologies.

Mr. M. Davidson: Could I ask you a question? I had the opportunity to meet with Mr. Brownell and—I forget the other gentleman's name; he works out of the London office, I believe.

Mr. Wisocky: Steve McGillen?

Mr. M. Davidson: That's right, with regard to the new program you have. I, too, feel it's probably going to be an excellent program. I say probably going to be because my own opinion is that right at the moment you're very much understaffed in terms of trying to provide jobs for disabled people in the province of Ontario.

I think the work that is being done and has been done by the very small staff you do have has provided excellent results up to this point, but as I mentioned during my leadoff on Tuesday, we're still a long way from providing job opportunities to disabled workers. Hopefully, that group will expand and will be able to carry out its operations in a better manner than it is able to at the present time.

I say that because Mr. McGillen, who works out of the London office, covers somewhere in the neighbourhood of an area from Windsor over to Cambridge, and I think he goes up into the Grey-Bruce area or somewhere up in there. When one person is trying to provide that kind of service in that area, I would think he's probably spending more time on the road than he is on the job. That doesn't make life too easy for him, nor does it provide him with the opportunity to carry out his function in a manner it probably should be done.

I am a little concerned though because—and I won't tell you where it comes from—I did hear that a recommendation had been made by you to add more people but the possibility of that taking place is pretty remote. Is that true?

Mr. Wisocky: No. I think it's under consideration, but for your information we have a posting going up as of today for another employment specialist for the western area, and he will help Steve in that particular area. Quite frankly, I think we need a further period of assessment to make sure we're on the right track, and we're also thinking of other changes which will supplement the efforts of the employment specialists.

I think you'll see that the year 1979 will give us a better picture of what direction we should go in.

Mr. M. Davidson: Let me ask you a more pointed question than that. In your view, or in the view of Mr. Brownell, how many of these special counsellors would be required in order to do a proper job in the province?

Mr. Wisocky: Ideally, you should have one in every major city where there is an area office or information service office, and I think we will have that in the not too distant future. Right now I feel it's no good to add hundreds, or even dozens, of new employees. It takes a while to integrate people, to train them and so forth, and still try to maintain a higher service level than before, so I'd like to do it on a gradual basis.

All I can say is that I've never had any difficulties in giving the corporate board the facts, and so forth, and asking them for additional staff. But, again, it has to be on a responsible basis and it has to be something we feel is meaningful for injured employees.

I'd like to do it on a gradual basis myself, but, again, once we define our direction in the future and once we have the other capabilities that we're working on right now, we'll be in a better position to determine just what to do.

Let's not forget that the rehabilitation counsellors also have a heavy responsibility in finding job opportunities. It's not as if these people, the employment specialists, are doing it in isolation.

Mr. M. Davidson: I can only say that I hope the near future doesn't expand as the two years expanded to five years. I'd like to see a greater thrust put in that direction; I think this is the direction that rehabilitation programs should be going. With that kind of service, perhaps we can get many of our disabled workers back on the job and doing something that makes them feel more useful in society.

I'm not at all certain I have anything more right at the moment.

Mr. McClellan: A short followup question; it relates to who makes decisions on spending money around the rehabilitation program. I understand that decisions with respect to section 53 would be made within the rehabilitation services section by their staff. Is that correct, Mr. Starr?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes.

Mr. McClellan: But the decisions with respect to financial support under section 41(1)(b) or section 42(5) would be made in claims. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes.

Mr. McClellan: I would like to suggest to the members of the corporate board—to Mr. Starr and the other members of the board—that they have a look at the validity of claims making rehabilitation decisions.

I'm experiencing some difficulty with the rehabilitation service in terms of people being cut off in claims when they're in receipt of rehabilitation service and occasionally being cut off against the advice and recommendation of rehabilitation staff.

Administratively, it would make more sense to me if rehabilitation decisions were being made by rehabilitation staff on the basis of rehabilitation criteria. I don't think the claims staff always operate from a rehabilitation perspective; in fact, I know they don't.

I know you have different levels of perception from claims person to claims person; and if a file ends up on somebody's desk who doesn't have a rehabilitation orientation, that can be too damned bad for some injured worker who is under the rehabilitation program. I know that happens. I suspect Mr. Kerr knows it happens, I suspect Mr. Wisocky knows it happens, and I suspect Mr. Starr knows it happens.

I believe there is a real need for the board to look at some mechanism to supplement the financial support under section 41(1)(b) and section 42(5) so that those decisions are made solely on the basis of rehabilitation criteria and no other considerations. That's not happening now.

I'll be coming back to that again at the next opportunity we have a chance to discuss it in the committee.

I said before I think that the vocational rehabilitation people are making real progress. I notice the progress in my own case-load. I'm willing to compliment the board when I feel that good service is being provided. It remains a problem, though. It remains a problem around getting the financial rug pulled out from underneath you in the middle of a program. That shouldn't be happening.

I am anxious for some response from Mr. Starr as to whether this is something that has been discussed or is of similar concern to the board.

Hon. Mr. Starr: It may happen occasionally; it's not the general practice. Maybe we should ask John Wisocky to tell us whether he experiences any difficulties of the nature that you describe.

Mr. McClellan: I'm anxious to hear from Mr. Wisocky, but I'd be surprised if he would be prepared to say in front of this committee that he was having the rug pulled out from under him by claims.

Mr. Wisocky: I suppose you are quite correct in that sections 41(1)(b) and 42(5) are being administered by the claims services division. The rehabilitation counsellors provide the necessary input for the adjudicators to make that decision.

One thing I do know is that there are several factors taken into consideration by claims adjudicators, besides the content of the rehabilitation counsellor's report, in making the decision about entitlement. One of the variables, I suppose, is continuing entitlement and degree of disability. Those are two.

In the past while I think the co-ordination between the two areas has improved even more. Yes, we have people who sometimes let things slip by, but we try very hard to ensure a co-ordinated effort. After all, we are all serving the injured employee. I don't know if Mr. Kerr wants to supplement that or not?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think you have summed it up nicely, John.

Mr. McClellan: I'm having some problems around this with my own caseload. I bring it to your attention. If I continue to monitor my own caseload—and I relay those cases to the board with more thoroughness now than I have in the past 12 months—it is a point of concern with me because I see it happening to people.

Hon. Mr. Starr: But it's not a general practice. In any case of that nature, we are glad when you bring it to our attention so we can rectify it.

Mr. McClellan: It is enough of a problem in my caseload that I am bringing it to your attention as a general concern—granted on a small sample of cases. I have no way of assessing the extent to which it is a problem, but it is a problem.

Mrs. Campbell: Do you get the feeling, Ross, that you wish you were in Windsor instead of Toronto?

Mr. Bounsall: Leaving vocational rehab, for the moment, to go to medical rehab: I'm sure when I make this statement that my colleagues will all jump on me tomorrow if they hear I've made it.

Mrs. Campbell: They'll do it tonight.

Mr. Bounsall: They can deny my general impression immediately.

Mr. M. Davidson: We'll let you start; but there are no guarantees that you will finish.

Mr. Bounsall: In other discussions we have had about medical rehabilitation in other years—and we went through a period of a couple of years, at least, where there was great dissatisfaction with some of the stuff that went on at Downsview such as the attitudes the workers ran into, the things they were asked to do and so on; I am sure these gentlemen remember those discussions—have you made any changes at all at Downsview? I won't tell you why I am asking the question. If I told you, my colleagues would lynch me immediately.

Mr. McClellan: You're not saying everything is rosy?

Mr. Bounsall: No, I'm not saying everything is rosy. But we are not getting the type of complaint we used to get some two and three years ago from people who had been to Downsview. Two or three years ago, people who went to Downsview were asked to go back. Then they were on the phone crying to me, "Do I have to go back?" with voices shaking and tears in their eyes because of what had happened when they were there the time before.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: All that over the phone?

Mr. Bounsall: We have the latest electronic equipment in our office, I tell you, Mr. Minister. But that is not happening now. Have you made significant changes in Downsview, at least in the way you approach people who are there, so that is not now occurring—at least to the same extent as it appeared to be occurring two and three years ago, or more?

Dr. McCracken: I think the best way to answer that is that, yes, many changes are occurring. They are occurring on a progressive, ongoing basis. In other words, we have done nothing in a given interval of time and completed it and then gone on to something else.

A good example is, we decided we should change our admission criteria and that we should develop the admission data from the hospital rather than from head office. In other words, we felt it would be an excellent idea to communicate with the outside doctor and with the patient who is going to come into the hospital—give him some information beforehand. In order for the personnel at the hospital to get a handle on this, we developed a pre-admission form which we asked the medical staff at head office to complete—why did they want the person admitted to hospital?

In the past there have been quite a number of patients at the hospital who felt like fish out of water. They were unhappy and certainly if they were asked to come back for readmission they were greatly upset. In the first place, there had been a series of rather erroneous assumptions made between the treating doctor and the doctor at head office. The patient ended up out there and we really were not able to accomplish what everybody thought we were going to. In other words, it was either the wrong time for the patient to be there or possibly it was even the wrong case to try to apply further treatment at Downsvlew.

We changed all this and we moved the admission data to the hospital and rehabilitation centre. So that now goes out from our admission and discharge office. They are in the picture before the patient ever arrives on the scene. This has improved it considerably. Over and above that, I think there are quite a number of things we have done on an ongoing basis.

But there is another way to approach it. With certain patients such as major amputee cases, we insist these patients should be admitted as quickly as possible following the definitive surgery—hopefully within the first week following definitive surgery, so that we can get started at the process of getting them adapted to their amputation and fitted with their new prosthetic devices as quickly as possible and thus help them. In other words, this is the real key to early rehabilitation.

Other than cases such as that, the reason a large percentage of the patients are at Downsvlew is because every effort which has been made on their behalf by the treating physicians and treating specialists—if one is involved, and usually there is—has really not reached the point where they have been able to resolve the medical rehabilitation. The patient has not recovered fully and has not been considered capable of returning to work. This is the type of case we get.

Having said that, the staff at the hospital started asking ourselves, why it is these people have not been able to return to work. There are many reasons, but the one very common factor is pain. We estimate at least 95 per cent of the patients who are admitted to the hospital rehabilitation centre have a major pain factor. The causes are many and sometimes compound in a given case.

We thought it high time we addressed ourselves to identification of pain and we have set up the pain identification and measurement unit there staffed by our staff plus consultant staff. It has proved very successful. The beauty of it is that what they have found has, by osmosis, gone to the rest of our medical and paramedical staff, so now they are very conscious of the fact they have to address the patient's problem with pain.

Another factor is, there is no question at all there has been improved communications between the patient and the physician and the rest of the treating team. We felt many of the problems these patients had were due to the pressures of medical practice, that their family physician and the specialist had really never had time to sit down and explain to them what it was all about.

When we started to analyse this we found an amazingly high percentage of patients coming to the hospital who really didn't understand what had happened to them. They really didn't understand why they hadn't recovered from it.

Again we made the decision this was to be part of our program, we had to explain to the patient what was preventing them from returning to a normal home life, to productive employment. This has been a big factor too, this marked improvement in communications. We still run into cases where, despite this effort, we fail to communicate with the patient, but these are becoming fewer all the time, so it has been a major step.

Some of these decisions take time to come to fruition, but we made a decision three and a half years ago that the type of patient in the hospital and rehabilitation centre was ideally suited to what is known as the problem- or patient-oriented medical record system. Rather than try to approach it as is done in a general hospital, which is to arrive at a medical diagnosis and from that you arrive at a recommended treatment, we felt the best way to approach these cases was to utilize the problem-oriented medical records so that we looked at the whole patient.

In looking at the whole patient, every member of the treatment team—the physician, the occupational therapist, the physiotherapist, the remedial gymnast, the social worker and the vocational rehabilitation counsellor of Mr. Wisocky's group, who sit on each treatment team—could address this problem. The problem might be not a diagnosis but, "I have pain in my knee I can't get rid of," or, "I feel wretched and unable to even think about going back to work because I can't sleep at night, despite all the sleeping pills my doctor has prescribed for me," or, "I am worried about the fact my bills are piling up at home and I don't know what to do about this." It covers the whole spectrum and this has made a big difference, there is no question about it.

There are many things we have done that we feel improve the situation. One of the most important, of course, is that Dr. Johnson, the director at the hospital, really tends to set the whole pace because he decided shortly after he was appointed as director of the hospital that he wanted to communicate with the patients. He didn't want to sit in his office.

He started to make it a point, and continues to do so—and in fact he has enlarged his activity in this direction—that he will not only address any problem the patient feels he might have by having them come directly to his office, but just about every morning you will find him talking to the patients or in the patients' cafeteria having coffee with them and seeing exactly what their problems may or may not be.

This is an excellent thing because, again by osmosis, he sets a good example and the rest of the staff pick it up.

Mr. Bounsall: I don't suppose you could relate it to any one thing you have outlined but the combination seems to be—I hesitate to say working, lest you become complacent—but it is working better than it was in the past and people who were there a year ago, when asked to go again, go because the experience they had was not what was happening three and four years ago in the hospital. That is all I can report. They say, "They want me down at the hospital again. This is when I am going" and you don't hear from them that they are afraid to go. I can relate that to you.

One other area is, how are you fixed up for language communication? You were talking about improved communications. Do you have staff and counsellors out there who can handle all the major language groups who will appear in Downsview?

Dr. McCracken: Yes. Last year in 1978, we again increased our staff of full-time interpreters by one and the new interpreter is fluent in five languages. We now have four full-time interpreters, all of them doing an excellent job. The major language to be interpreted is Italian; the second largest language, Portuguese; the third largest language, I believe, Spanish, and the fourth, French. Over and above that, at any given time we have slightly in excess of 55 members of our paramedical staff who are fluent in the more common languages.

Mr. Bounsall: Do you have members of your psychology and psychiatry staff who are fluent in those languages as well?

Dr. McCracken: Yes.

Mr. Bounsall: Do you have group therapy being run in Italian?

Dr. McCracken: No, I don't think we have it being run in Italian. They haven't gone into a full group psychological counselling treatment in the Italian language that I'm aware of. But they will have a situation where they will have two or three Italian-speaking patients and then they will conduct it in Italian. But there's no formal setup that I'm aware of.

Mr. Bounsall: One of the faults I have—and it's really not a fault—is that when the patient leaves there seems to be rather a positive exit, compared to what it was before. The patient is sat down and as a result of the communications as to why he or she is not functioning well or what he may expect in the future, this is when he is told about the voc rehab, which they may find available back in the nearest local office. This all takes place, it seems, at some point near their exit.

Sometimes they are a little optimistic. For instance, the recipient comes to me and says: "When I left Downsview they told me I'd be able to, but I come back and I'm not getting it." But at least they leave Downsview with a positive attitude of what they might get. That's really being a little over-optimistic sometimes about what's going to happen to them when they get back in their home community.

It's the psychological area I want to address myself to. I suppose it results from your pain analysis on a person, but it must often become clear to you that there is a major psychological component to their pain, if you can't find the physical disability easily or at all.

Dr. McCracken: I don't think it's a matter of not being able to find the physical disability. Something very important that I should mention has happened, that is, in the approach taken by the staff of the hospital—and I think it's a very realistic approach. When a patient arrives there and part of the inquiry reveals that he is suffering from continuing pain, which is the thing that is getting to him and is really dragging him down, the approach is to say: "All right, you've told us that you are suffering from pain. Now we're going to tell you something. What we're going to tell you is we believe you have pain."

This comes as quite a surprise to many of the patients because nobody has really told them that before. As a matter of fact, all too often unfortunately they have been told: "We can't find any reason for your pain." Ipso facto the doctor implies they don't have it. The approach we take is to say: "You say you have pain and we believe you have pain. What we want to try to do now is find out why you have it and what's causing it."

Mr. Bounsall: I don't suppose you can generalize in an answer. I'm tempted to ask what percentage of the pain do you find to be psychological. On an individual case, do you find a real component of psychological pain with most people you deal with? Maybe that's the best way to put it.

Dr. McCracken: It depends in part on the type of case. For instance, we have identified that in the current complicated back cases that are going through the back assessment and rehabilitation clinic, almost 70 per cent of those have a very significant psychogenic factor. We know that for sure now.

Mr. Bounsall: That is where some of the problem comes; they are told this, and they leave the centre. We all have the same problem of the middle-aged person not really wanting to accept that somehow his pain is psychological, as you have been telling him; that implies something else to him, that it is in his mind rather than down in his back where he is feeling it. We have that problem of convincing those people, as you do, that there can be a psychological component or a psychogenic factor.

Many of them leave, having gone through that conversation, saying that some of it is psychological. But the next thing that happens, when you apply for psychological treatment on behalf of the patient, is that a letter comes back from the board, saying: "We can't see any connection; it is clearly psychogenic. You certainly have a functional overlay, but we can't establish the connection between that and your injury. Therefore, you are off benefits as of a certain date." There is something not happening there.

If you can say that 70 per cent of chronic back injuries have a psychogenic factor, then why do they not automatically get treatment back in their home communities under the auspices of the board? Too often they are cut off without getting that treatment.

Dr. McCracken: Actually, something is going on and something is happening. Another thing is that, more and more, I am convinced that assessment and evaluation is the direction we should go; in fact, we are becoming more and more assessment-and-evaluation-oriented. Many of these patients have been through six weeks of physiotherapy and then another six weeks of physiotherapy; they have seen this doctor, that doctor and the other doctor. It is really rather pointless for us to start all over again and recycle them through the same thing.

We are getting into evaluation and assessment so we can try to identify what the problem is and see whether some stone has not been turned and whether something can or cannot be done. In the process of doing this, as we identify patients who do indeed have an identifiable psychogenic component, then we are involving Mr. Kerr's claims people at the hospital. We are putting the question to them: "This is what we have found. There is a psychogenic component here. What we require is a claims ruling as to whether or not there is entitlement." We are doing this more and more all the time as Mr. Kerr can verify.

When that patient does leave the hospital, the matter of the entitlement has already been settled. I am not saying it is done in every case, but it is being done more and more all the time. This is what is going on in the pain identification unit for instance. This is what is going on in our back education program. This is what is going on in the psychological social evaluation unit, which now has been operational since September 1975; in excess of 1,000 cases have gone through there by now. Again, there are claims people there who are part of the assessment and evaluation team. Right at that time, as soon as we have been able to determine whether there is a psychogenic component and whether there is a psychological diagnosis to be made, the determination is made by the claims personnel as to whether there is entitlement for this condition flowing from the compensable injury. This is going on in all those areas.

I say again, we haven't got all these holes plugged, but we are really getting there; no question about it.

Mr. Bounsall: Let me make a statement and then ask you one further question. When I hear from a recipient that has been told at Downsvew—and often they don't want to accept the report they have heard—"They told me out there that there is a psychological component of this pain; there is a psychogenic thing," or I see it written in a letter from the board, I immediately assume there is some way that can be relieved.

I think maybe I differ from some of Mr. Kerr's claims people, who are resident at Downsvew, who perhaps take the opposite view. You've told them it's psychogenic and they maybe are a little bit unsure as to whether there's any way that can be removed. That may be where some of the problem lies. I merely assume it can be. Do you? What would you recommend as the best means—it could vary with the person of course—once they're back in their home community, of having that psychogenic problem worked on and removed? Is it removable in your opinion to a large degree? What would you recommend as the means of removing it? What kind of treatment? I wouldn't think one-to-one in-depth psychiatry, but I'm not a psychiatrist. I tend to like groups in this area, but maybe that's my bias.

Dr. McCracken: Well, there's no ready answer to whether or not a psychogenic disability can be corrected, reversed, cured or not, just the same as with a non-psychogenic or organic component. Any doctor who makes the statement, "I can cure any disease I see," really is not facing realities. Indeed, this is doubly true when you come to the psychogenic group of diseases.

We know this, and of course we have proved this by the operation of the psychological social evaluation unit. We do know the whole key to it or the great part of the key is to identify the problem as early as you can, the same as in vocational rehabilitation. If you want vocational rehabilitation to work, the vocational rehabilitation counsellor almost has to chase the ambulance into the hospital. If we could identify those cases who are not going to recover, this would be ideal. It is a similar situation with the psychogenic component.

Mr. Bounsall: John would need some more staff for that, though.

Dr. McCracken: Ambulance chasers. It is similarly true with the psychogenic component that you have to develop methods of identifying these cases as quickly as you can. Jointly between the medical services division and the claims services division, we did set about and we have developed these flags we look for. There are any number of things.

For instance, if we suddenly get a drug account and the patient is receiving a psychotropic drug for an injury for which ordinarily you would never think of prescribing that, that's a flag that immediately goes up and the question is raised, why is that person receiving that type of mood-controlling drug? Similarly, we may get a report from the doctor and the objective clinical findings are minimal or even nil and the doctor in his report says it would appear he still is unable to return to work. There may be some factor here that is not being identified, and that's another flag that goes up.

We use any number of these flags to identify these cases. We know if we get them early enough—and when I say "early enough" I mean within three months of the identification being made—I would say almost 100 per cent are reversible if we can identify them and get them into a unit like the psychological social evaluation unit. In other words, three months from the time the doctor at home thinks things are not going well or we identify that he's on a psychotropic drug, something like this, we have a high success rate.

From three months to 12 months, I would say our success rate is currently running at over 50 per cent. Then comes the bad news. From 12 months on, it starts to deteriorate very rapidly. By the time you reach the situation where it hasn't been identified for whatever reason until it's been going on for two years plus, the only way we know you can help these cases is not to recycle him back through the whole medical system. The one thing we know is you mustn't get that patient into a situation where he is recycled through the whole medical system again. All that does is make him that much worse. It seems like the logical thing to do, or has seemed like the logical thing to do for a long time.

A doctor, I suppose in desperation as to what to do next when the patient appears on his office doorstep, takes one look at it and he really doesn't know what to do next, because in actual fact there is nothing more to be done from a medical science standpoint. But doctors, I guess, hate to admit defeat, so they will say, "I am going to give you a prescription and try you on these pills." Then off he goes on the merry-go-round again, because all the pills do is build up a resistance; they don't really control the pain; they really don't control the patient's inability to get his sleep. Then comes another round of physiotherapy and then maybe comes another session in the hospital lying in bed and then maybe another orthopaedic consultation and—hopefully very, very rarely—another operation, in desperation.

Mr. Bounsall: Okay.

Dr. McCracken: The way you cure it, you don't do this; but one of the things you do, we're finding out now, is explain to the patient what he has and what he can do without damaging himself, even though it hurts, and what he can do to live with the residual pain he has. I guess it's a confrontation time.

This is going on every day in the back education program. These people are being told: "This is what your problem is; we're not miracle workers; you're going to have to participate in this with us. This is what you can do, even though it hurts; you're not going to damage your back any more; you're not going to damage your knee any more. These are the things you can't do; this is what you can do to help yourself; these are the tricks of the trade."

I think this is the only thing that's left to help these people who are in the phase when the psychogenic component has become so chronic and so intransigent that you certainly can't cure it from a purely medical standpoint.

I don't know whether that answers your question or not.

Mr. Bounsall: Are you saying that after two years of what you suspect is a psychogenic problem, that cannot be treated by psychological means?

Dr. McCracken: This is my opinion. I think psychotherapy is probably a total waste of time. I think psychiatric consultations are of very limited, if any, value at that stage of the game, except when you're trying to identify the problem. In other words, investigation, evaluation and assessment; yes, psychological testing, psychiatric consultation; but so far as treatment I really don't think they work.

Mr. Van Horne: I'm wondering; you've used the terms evaluation, assessment; is this sort of a combined history-taking process along with some standard format testing? Could you elaborate a little bit on that term?

Dr. McCracken: Yes. It's coupled with the problem-oriented medical records. The purpose of the problem-oriented medical record is to identify what the problems are, not necessarily to get at a medical diagnosis. They might be social, they might be medical, they might be economic, they might be anything. Once you've done that the appropriate person who is trained in that particular field can then address the problem.

Mr. Van Horne: This is done by one of your medical staff?

Dr. McCracken: No, this is done by the whole team. The physician takes the medical history and then the treatment team develops the problem-oriented medical record. In taking the history, part of the history will elicit part of the story and the treatment team will develop the rest of the story, and involve the patient, obviously. In other words, the social worker will sit down and talk to the patient and determine what the problem might be, in the home environment for instance. The social worker in fact will make a visit to the home and speak to the person's wife and figure out exactly what has gone on and what the problem is in the home environment. Similarly, the psychologist will carry out the necessary psychological testing and evaluation to determine what the component might be there.

We're not trying to identify what treatment we're going to give the patient, because we feel that in many of these instances the patient really doesn't need any further medical treatment per se, but he needs to have a very thorough and exhaustive series of interviews, examinations, tests, et cetera so that we can come to some final conclusion as to what happened to this person, as to why is this person in hospital instead of at work?

Mr. Van Horne: Is it during this process, by some or all of the team, that clients are questioned about their marital sex life; about the habits they had prior to marriage related to sex? Questions that, according to some, are rather offensive and questions they would choose not to answer?

Dr. McCracken: About the only place that occurs, to my knowledge, is as part of psychological testing. It is the Minnesota multi-phasic indexing. There are, I think, approximately 300 questions in that test, out of which I believe four or five relate to the sexual aspect. This is part of recognized psychological information required in order to establish a baseline.

Mr. Van Horne: To the best of your knowledge then, there is no in-depth questioning about the number of times a person had intercourse prior to the accident or after the accident, the time of day, et cetera? This is not part of the questioning?

Dr. McCracken: It is not part of the MMPI testing, no; no question about it. Over and above that, in carrying out the tests the patient does not have to answer any question, be it related to sexual habits or any other part of the questioning if that patient does not wish to do so. It is not mandatory. It is not forced upon the patient. It is part of the information the psychologist wants to develop, but in-depth questions, no.

Mr. Bounsall: To whom are these tests administered? Just those you have flagged?

Dr. McCracken: Not even that. Of the patients admitted to the centre where the problem may have been identified, in other words the suspicion exists that some psychogenic component is interfering with this person's recovery; of that group currently 20 per cent have this test carried out. So you are probably looking at about 300 or 400 such tests per year out of 7,500 patients.

Mr. Van Horne: One final question, if I may. Yesterday, I asked you about research that might be called innovative, or experimental perhaps, in so far as treating or accommodating amputees or people with very special problems. Is there any other form, other than what you have referred to as your psychosocial unit, of experimentation; or anything you would describe as experimental in treating or assisting people for what are perceived to be psychological or psychiatric problems?

Dr. McCracken: First of all, there is really no experimental medicine going on out at the hospital. The medicine there is medicine that has had its roots in prior basic research and the basic research has indicated that these various methods of treatment are worthwhile. Examples of that are biofeedback. Biofeedback has been well established for some time now, but unfortunately it has not been utilized to the extent we feel it should have been. We utilize biofeedback at the hospital in cases where the psychology staff or the medical staff feel it will be of assistance. This is a case where, by using special equipment, electromyographic machines, the patients can visually see or can hear by an auditory tone what is happening to their muscle spasm, and with training, they can learn how to relax and alleviate that spasm and, therefore, alleviate the pain.

Another thing that's going on is the utilization of transcutaneous nerve stimulators. These are small units that look like miniature radios that the person carries around. They have a couple of little metal electrodes that the patient places on the skin in predetermined areas.

Again, this is based upon exhaustive research that has been carried out by persons who have been involved in pain research. We believe it works by introducing an electrical impulse that is carried up a large nerve fibre to the brain and the brain receiving this impulse. The impulse acts as a blocker to the pain impulses that are carried up the small nerve fibres. When you hit the right spots to place these electrodes, and the person adjusts the amount of current and the frequency of the current depending on the type of unit we find works for him, he can put the electrodes on, adjust the current and apply this stimulus to the skin surface, which has an effect upon the nerve endings deep in the muscle and carries out this blocking process to alleviate his pain either totally or in part.

This is being done out at the hospital now. In the cases where it works they are given one of these units to take home with them.

Currently, on the latest figures, we now have over 700 of these units that we have issued and patients have used.

Do they work? We are in the process now of starting to carry out our first analysis, but we already have a fairly reasonable indication because we have had in excess of 60 of them already returned over a period of 10 to 18 months since they were put into use. The reason they've been returned is that a person will send one back and say: "I no longer need to use this because my pain has improved to the point where I find I just don't need it and I'm returning this to you." This is one of the things we do; we instruct them that when they don't need it, don't use it and let us know.

Over and above that, in our followup we're going to see how many others we have made a difference in. We know there are patients who have gone back to work with pain and they have been able to carry on at their work with pain because they can now control it by using a transcutaneous nerve stimulator. The beauty of this is that it does them no harm whatsoever and it keeps them away from something that can do them a tremendous amount of harm, namely a lot of pharmaceutical preparations. People who well might have become very dependent on drugs which would not control their pain at all, now are away from drugs and utilizing this piece of equipment. This is the sort of thing that's going on.

Over and above that there is the research activity. The research activity is not experimental; it's investigating the effects of certain treatment procedures carried on outside the hospital and obtaining the end results.

I guess the best example of that is our research into back surgery. We're into the third year of our back surgery research project to find out what the indications were for the surgery, what surgery was done, and what the end result was, then feeding this information back to the treating surgeons in the province. In our computer printout on back injuries in 1975 there were 1,060 major surgical procedures to the spine. In 1978 it had dropped to 300. This means there were all those other people who had been operated on in the past who are now not being operated on.

I had an orthopaedic surgeon from Haifa, Israel, make the statement that he felt what we were doing will probably have been one of the most important things in back surgery in the preceding 25 years. So that is a very positive aspect in our research going on in the hospital.

Mr. Van Horne: I wish you hadn't said that with Dr. Elgie here. They will be sending Marvin Shore back to further investigate.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As long as he stays in the same party, he'll eventually end up there.

Mr. Van Horne: Or stays in Israel for a long period.

Mr. Bounsall: Could I make a comment here?

Mr. Chairman: Before anything is said, we have lost half an hour today. Some of the members stated when we started we would put in 15 hours. We agreed to that. In order to finish at one o'clock tomorrow, we would have to go until 11 tonight. That is up to yourselves, whatever you want to do.

Mr. Bounsall: No way, we are too tired.

Mr. Chairman: If that is the wish of the committee, it will be adjourned until after question period tomorrow.

Mr. Van Horne: In light of the interesting comments made by the doctor, I can't find here any indication that either the unions or industry, for that matter, have made large donations to accommodate research in this area. Is that a fair statement?

Hon. Mr. Starr: The money industry puts up through its assessment is used for that purpose.

Mr. Van Horne: You are satisfied that there is enough money coming in from industry and from the unions?

Hon. Mr. Starr: There is no problem with that aspect of it.

Mr. Van Horne: Where is it identified in here?

Hon. Mr. Starr: In the medical rehab budget.

Mr. Van Horne: You are the only person I have ever met who said he had enough money for research. You obviously aren't a medical person.

Hon. Mr. Starr: We haven't got enough.

The committee adjourned at 10:32 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 1979

The House met at 10:03 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

PUBLIC SERVICE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the members that a tentative settlement has been reached in the negotiations with the Ontario Public Service Employees Union, representing the 51,000 employees in the bargaining unit. The union will recommend acceptance of the settlement at ratification meetings which will be held in various locations across the province, beginning next week.

Mr. Kerrio: Is that a profit-sharing plan?

Hon. Mr. McCague: It has been agreed by the parties that details will not be released—

Mr. Kerrio: The leader will be sorry.

Hon. Mr. McCague: —until the employees have had an opportunity to consider the proposed settlement.

[Later (10.20)]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, might I revert to statements?

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent to revert to statements?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: This time will be added to the question period.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes. I apologize, Mr. Speaker. By the way, it was not a riding event that I was at; it was a very interesting meeting with a prenatal teachers' group which happened to be held in Don Mills.

Mr. Nixon: What was the minister doing at that meeting?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Why was I there?

Mr. Van Horne: Share it with us.

Mr. Bolan: What's her name?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I was a scout once, and they said something about being prepared.

AIR AMBULANCE SERVICE

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the members that our helicopter ambulance service has been extended in its present form for an additional year, until March 31, 1980.

Over the past 19 months, as a pilot program, this service has proven its value for the transport of critically ill patients over a medium range, within a radius of roughly 100 miles of Toronto. The helicopter utilization committee, composed of representatives of the Toronto teaching hospitals, the Ontario Medical Association and the ministry, has recommended continuation of this service.

To date, the helicopter ambulance service has transported 222 critically ill people to hospitals in Toronto. Approximately 35 per cent of the 222 patients transported were premature newborn babies. In the recent bus tragedy near Barrie, the helicopter ambulance proved a vital link between the Royal Victoria Hospital and the Toronto teaching hospitals, transporting four young patients.

The helicopter ambulance service is also beneficial to small communities where hospitals cannot support the medical specialties or the equipment required for all critically ill patients. It allows physicians, without having to leave their communities, to transport patients in safety, with the help of critical-care personnel and specialized equipment, at greater speed than by standard land ambulance.

We are convinced a medium-range air service is a necessary part of our ambulance system. Now we need to assess ways to broaden the area served and the nature of service provided. In that context, we will look to taking advantage of both the flexibility of helicopters and the availability of fixed-wing aircraft. We must also examine the best way to provide such a service, be that by charter, contract or in co-operation with other government agencies, or a combination of these arrangements.

The estimated cost of the helicopter ambulance service for the extended year of service is approximately $1 million.

The helicopter ambulance service has received considerable positive support from both the public and the medical profession. We believe it is essential to extend this service so that we can continue to meet the air and land ambulance requirements of this province.

[Reverting (10:06)]

ORAL QUESTIONS

FEDERAL ENERGY BILL

Mr. S. Smith: I will direct a question to the Minister of Energy. Regarding the Ontario intervention on the federal energy bill—the intervention delivered by the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), the parliamentary assistant—can the minister tell us whether he ever read that intervention before it was delivered; whether he, in fact, approved of it; and where it was he read it and when? And could he tell us whether that intervention was written by a member of the ministry or by a consultant to the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I read the intervention. I read the final draft and I read two previous drafts. I agreed with it, although it was being rewritten during the plane trip to Ottawa by the parliamentary assistant and deputy minister for delivery to the House of Commons committee that evening.

I might say we were notified by Telex the preceding Friday afternoon, I believe, that if we wished to appear the committee could accommodate us. They had originally suggested Wednesday afternoon or perhaps Thursday afternoon. We indicated that we couldn't be prepared by then and they finally kindly agreed to receive us on Thursday evening.

I guess the final version that was delivered was a joint effort of a number of people, including myself, the deputy minister, and the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister says he approved of it and allowed the parliamentary assistant to deliver the report. Will the minister not confirm that apart from any last-minute commas or little changes that may have been made on the plane the bulk of the report prepared for his review, and which eventually found its way into the presentation, was, in fact, prepared by a consultant, rather than by a member of the ministry? If so, could he tell us whether or not that consultant was Ralph Hedlin, the chairman of the "Elect Joe Clark committee" at the Tory convention? And can he tell us how much was paid for that consultant's report?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can certainly inquire. I frankly don't know. I'm glad to hear, though, that Mr. Hedlin was involved in the "Elect Joe Clark committee." I think we will all be happy about that in a month or two.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: The minister referred to his deputy minister. Could he confirm that this is the same person who was deputy minister when the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) was Minister of Energy—when the former minister indicated that he had been "mugged in the corridors of power by the deputies and the mandarins from the Premier's office"? Is this the same deputy who assisted in the writing of that report?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The present deputy minister has been deputy minister for some time. There have been several ministers, but only one deputy, for some time.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct my second question to the Minister of Health, but I don't know if he is going to be here. Perhaps, with the consent of the party to the left, I could wait for the Minister of Health and deliver my question at that point after the two questions of the leader of the third party.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: We got into trouble a little earlier by deferring leaders' questions, so you can take your turn in the go-around.

Mr. S. Smith: If the members of the New Democratic Party cannot agree to something as simple as that, I will take my first turn.

Mr. McClellan: With respect, there was no disagreement.

Mr. Kerrio: Oh yes, there was. Your leader shook his head.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I sought that from the House the other day and it was refused to me. I do not see why that privilege should be given to one party and not to the other.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre has the privilege of putting his first question.

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question which I wish to address to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development in the absence of the Minister of Health.

Last Tuesday, I mentioned the case in this House of a Mr. Nicola Laurella, a pensioner who now is threatened with a collection agency for a bill of $167 from his surgeon, a bill which is a surcharge on top of the amount paid for his operation by the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. I want to tell the minister that clearly is not a unique kind of case.

Between February and November of 1978 a Mrs. Ljuba Morog, also a pensioner, and now deceased, had three operations from two doctors. Her family now is facing doctors' bills of $426.58 in addition to what OHIP had paid—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Cassidy: I will come to the question in a minute.

Mr. Speaker: No. You will come to it now. What is the question?

Mr. Cassidy: —and is being asked to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order!

An hon. member: Fling him out.

Mr. Cassidy: Since these two people are both threatened by collection agencies—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order! The honourable member and leader of the New Democratic Party has been around long enough that he knows how to put his question, given his journalistic background. Now, put your question forthwith.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain why, in the discussions with the Ontario Medical Association, the government has failed to reach agreement that no physician will charge interest on overdue medical accounts and that in no case will any physician in Ontario submit his or her bill to a collection agency; and will the government act now to stop doctors using collection agencies to collect these surcharges from patients?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, when the honourable member put this question to the Minister of Health last week, the minister said that he was as concerned as the honourable member and that he would look into the situation. The minister will be in the House very shortly, and he may have an answer for the honourable member at that time.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: Since the minister does not appear particularly concerned, and since during this minister's tenure a regulation was passed which allows doctors to charge interest on overdue accounts—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Cassidy: —where previously that had been a matter of professional misconduct, will the Provincial Secretary for Social Development intervene with the Minister of Health to protect the patients of Ontario against these unjustifiable and unacceptable practices by doctors?

Mr. Swart: Yes or no?

Ms. Gigantes: Not a word.

Mr. Cooke: You're the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. Some minister!

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ontario Centre with his second question.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Health, I have a question for the Premier.

The government statement yesterday with respect to the Ontario Medical Association agreement has been interpreted as meaning that all medical services in public hospitals in Ontario will be provided at insured Ontario Health Insurance Plan rates. Can the Premier clarify that this is the case and that in future all medical services in public hospitals in Ontario will be provided at OHIP rates; and can the Premier say how that will be achieved?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the legitimacy of the question. I would only observe to the honourable member that if he had demonstrated a certain degree of flexibility in acknowledging that on occasion a minister is delayed for some reason or another, and that this question should appropriately be put to the Minister of Health, and if the Leader of the Opposition had been given the right to ask his questions when the minister arrived the leader of the New Democratic Party would then be able to do the same thing.

Mr. di Santo: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. Really. Where are the rest of you today? Are you all out canvassing in Wentworth and Scarborough West?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you all canvassing in Scarborough West?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question dealt specifically with a health-related matter. If the Premier wants to refer the question to the Minister of Health that's his pleasure to do so, but not to ramble all over the ballpark.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Where was I rambling. All over the ballpark?

Mr. Warner: No beer in the ballpark.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The distinguished member—and I say that in the loosest sense of the word—from wherever—Ellesmere is worried about beer in the ballpark. I really was concerned about their health. That's why I was rambling a little bit. But you're quite right.

Mr. McClellan: Question, question.

Mr. J. Reed: Name the Premier.

Mrs. Campbell: Name the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The question should properly be put to the Minister of Health, and he will be here shortly. I know he will take great pleasure in answering it for you.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: When the Minister of Health gets here you can direct your question to him. The question was taken as notice and there can't possibly be a supplementary to a question that was taken as notice.

Mr. Kerrio: And you'll take your turn.

Mr. Speaker: You've had your second question.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order. I would ask you to clarify the matter about the deferral of questions or the answering of questions which are referred by a minister to another minister at a future time.

Mr. Kerrio: Another ballgame now.

Mr. Speaker: No. I think it's quite clear what the procedure is during question period.

Mr. Sargent: Tell us about it.

Mr. Speaker: You'll have an opportunity to place your question at a later time or if the question was referred to a specific minister, when he answers there will be ample opportunity for supplementaries.

RETAIL BUSINESS HOLIDAYS

Mr. Van Horne: I have a question for the Solicitor General. In the light of his legal branch director's recent indication that he is considering suggestions for amending the Retail Business Holidays Act, 1975, can he tell us when these amendments will be made?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I can't, Mr. Speaker. I'm not familiar with the document to which the honourable member has just referred. We've had a number of submissions with respect to this legislation and they're still being reviewed very carefully, but I can't tell him when any amendments are likely to be introduced. I think it's unlikely during this session.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: I'm referring specifically to an article in the Toronto Star, March 3, 1979. There's an indication in that article that the Solicitor General is open to suggestions for amendments and particularly as there has been some harassment of operators of such things as flea markets, that he would specifically consider amending section 3 to add exemptions for coins, tokens, paper currency, postage stamps and crafts.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes. This matter is under active consideration. I thought the question was directed to when legislation was likely to be introduced. I'm just advising the honourable member that it's unlikely to be introduced this spring. But we are reviewing these suggestions and I think we can say we have a very open mind on the subject.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Now that the Minister of Health is in the House—and I do understand he had an engagement in his riding—I wish to ask a question of the minister to clarify the statement he made yesterday with regard to his discussions with the Ontario Medical Association.

The statement by the Minister of Health has been interpreted as meaning that all medical services in public hospitals in Ontario will be provided at insured OHIP rates. Can the minister clarify his statement of yesterday and assure the House that that is in fact the case and that in future all medical services in public hospitals in Ontario will be provided at the insured OHIP rates, and can he tell this Legislature how that will be achieved?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let me see what I've done with my extra copies of my statement from yesterday. I'll be glad to send a copy over to the honourable member. I think it's fairly clear. It states that the services will be available at opted-in rates where the individual insists. Also connected with that, of course, is the reinforcement of the principle that the individual must agree beforehand in order that they can proceed to be treated and subsequently billed on an opted-out basis.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary will relate to the OHIP fee schedule.

Mr. Cassidy: To the first question that I asked of the minister; that is correct.

Mr. Speaker: To the first question, yes. Three minutes will be added to the question period.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary in response to the minister's reply: The minister is saying that the right to insured services in hospital at insured rates will only be available if the patient insists. Can the minister explain exactly how patients who may be intimidated by a doctor, or who may suffer from language difficulties or other problems, will be able to insist? Can he assure the House that this right to health at the insured rates will be available from all medical practitioners within a hospital, or will it only be from some?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it will apply to every citizen of this province. As I indicated, the two principles go in tandem. First, we have the right as individuals, if we insist, to have services provided at the opted-in rates. Secondly, if we do not agree beforehand, we do not pay. I think that will cover the situations which concern the member.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister be a little more explicit about what he means by "insist"? Surely he recognizes that people who are about to undergo surgery, for instance, and are visited by the surgeon and/or the anesthetist the night before the operation and asked with a steely-eyed glint whether they insist on not paying the full fee, are hardly in a position to stand up for what might be their economic wellbeing.

Would the minister agree that if there is such a so-called "insistence" to be done, it be done in the pre-admission formalities or at the office of the hospital by merely ticking off whether you are willing to pay more than the OHIP rate, and that the patient should not be forced to have to stare down the doctor in dire circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as you know, and as the honourable Leader of the Opposition knows, the medical association and the hospital association have undertaken to come up with a mechanism. I would anticipate that in practical terms the kind of situation the member described is what would pertain.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not the steely-eyed part.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I could arrange some surgery for the member for that, if it would help.

Mr. Conway: Can you imagine meeting the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) under those circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, you'd be fortunate to have her services. She'd likely take one look at you and say, "I won't operate."

Mr. Conway: Blundy would have me next.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is interrupting. I can't finish my answer.

Mr. Speaker: He is indeed. Perhaps you could have a private talk with him.

An hon. member: It's the vest.

An hon. member: Where is the Minister of Education anyway? Is it her day off?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I said, in practical terms that's what will happen inasmuch as most surgery comes under the elective or urgent category, which is planned ahead of time. In the mechanism which will be developed, I'm sure we will provide for that.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Health. In his fumbling around for an answer to the problem which he helped to create—

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is just no charity in your heart at all.

Mr. Warner: —why did the minister reject the suggestion put to him and agreed upon unanimously by the health committee, including the Conservative members, as to how to handle the problem of the opted-out physicians in the province? Why did the minister reject that suggestion out of hand?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In point of fact, we didn't. If the honourable member will take out his copy of the select committee's report, he will recall that there were concerns expressed about this and the select committee said that one area in particular to be addressed was—

Mr. Warner: It suggested a multi-year contract along the lines of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —that of general practitioners' incomes. If the member will take note of the recent schedule, and even prior to the recent schedule in fact, the increases for general practitioners have been significantly higher than even the average overall increase.

The member undoubtedly saw some of the recent press. I said this to him at the select committee, if he will recall, when I was there on September 15 last for a lengthy discussion with the committee at which time we engaged in discussion on a number of subjects. I indicated that we wanted to give more emphasis to the general practitioners' income as a means of encouraging them to stay within the plan and to also take note of the pressures on the physicians' income.

Mr. Warner: You can't evade the question that way. You are evading the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member will recall that we did discuss at some length the question of the Quebec plan.

Mr. Warner: You rejected it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I indicated to the member that I thought it was inappropriate to Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Your Conservative members agreed.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On this side of the House we can disagree. I was just telling my colleague the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) yesterday about the time seven years ago, when I sat over there as a backbencher, when I voted against the government, and a member of that party came over to me and said, "God, I wish I could do that. I can't vote against my party. I can't disagree with them." Over here we can disagree.

Mr. Mackenzie: Hallelujah.

Mr. McClellan: You can do it again when you're a backbencher again.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On that one I, as the minister responsible, have to say I don't agree. The present plan we have in operation works extremely well. The members opposite have taken a few examples—they are no less important because they are few in number—and tried to take the specific and make it into a general condemnation of the plan.

Mr. Warner: You're playing games.

Ms. Gigantes: You're looking bad.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you sit down? You're playing games. You're playing games with a serious question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: When last year we paid claims for 56 million services to the health insurance plan—

Mr. Warner: You may as well sit down. You're playing games with a serious question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —the member's arguments cannot in any way possibly be logically construed to condemn the health plan.

Mr. Renwick: Why didn't you pay that? What has that got to do with it? It wasn't your money that you paid out.

Mr. Mackenzie: It wasn't your money. It borders on dishonesty.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Mackenzie: It wasn't your money at all.

Mr. Renwick: What were you going to do with it, bank it?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: With regard again to the negotiating process outlined in the statement the minister made, does the minister have any concern about the fact that—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. I don't know whether Hansard picked it up, but the member for Hamilton East made the side comment that "it borders on being dishonest." I ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. Mackenzie: I said, "It borders on dishonesty." That's not the minister's money; that's the people's money and he knows it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am keenly aware of that, more so than the member.

Mr. S. Smith: Does the minister share my concern about the negotiating process in which the OMA is recognized, as the minister stated, to be the sole negotiating agent with regard to the OHIP schedule? Does the minister not recognize that the OMA is counselling many of its members to opt out? In fact, if they are to be the negotiating agent on behalf of the opted-in doctors, there is a certain difficulty in the bargaining process.

In particular, can the minister assure us that if agreement is reached in this bargaining committee, the OMA, as part of the agreement, will advise its members to opt in? Otherwise, does the minister not recognize the OMA might be party to negotiating a set of OHIP fees and then turn right around and tell its members to opt out, leaving us no farther ahead?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member knows, it has been the stated philosophy of his profession for decades, generations, that physicians should deal directly with their patients. That notwithstanding, the bulk of the profession deals directly with the health insurance plan for their billing.

With respect, I think it is slightly incorrect to say they are counselling opting out. To my knowledge, they are not engaged in any campaign to promote opting out. I know sometimes this can be distorted in the reporting of the answer to the question, but if asked, they will state honestly their principles are, their philosophy is and always has been, that they feel they should deal directly.

That notwithstanding, the bulk do deal directly with the plan. It is 82.1 per cent currently.

If the new negotiating mechanism works as well as we hope it will to arrive at reasonable settlements that will be seen to be reasonable, that will have a very positive impact on the whole question of the option activities of physicians.

Mr. Cassidy: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, surely the problem is not whether the doctors wish to bill the patients directly or bill through OHIP. The problem is now that opted-out doctors are charging an average of 42 per cent higher than the OHIP fee schedule, and that is having to come from people who in many cases are not in a position to afford it.

Since this began by talking about doctors in hospitals, can the minister assure the Legislature that every doctor practising in a hospital will provide services at the OHIP rate to patients even if, as he says, they have to insist?

We think it should be a right, but if people insist, will every doctor provide that, or only some?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We believe it should be a right for a patient to choose his doctor and for the doctor to choose his option status.

Again I would point out, when he considers the number of times in a given day or a given week and a given month of a given year these services are being provided, compared to the kinds of situations he is trying to take from the specific to the general, the plan has worked well.

Mr. M. Davidson: Where did the patient get the right to choose?

Mr. Warner: Try answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What we have done is indicate the principle of access to services on an opted-in basis is and has been ingrained.

Mr. McClellan: There should be one fee schedule.

Mr. Cassidy: Every doctor should be able to provide the services.

Mr. Renwick: You have weaseled.

Mr. Warner: Try answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, this is interesting. Last week the member for Ottawa Centre was for opting everybody in. As of Tuesday, he was against draconian measures. As of Wednesday, he was going to tell the world and Hamilton the solutions of the New Democratic Party to health care.

An hon. member: You were so mixed up you didn't know what he was saying.

Mr. Samis: The campaign is not on yet, Dennis.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: He is like the old politician who said, "Here are my principles. If you don't like them, I do have others." He is flip-flopping all over the place.

Mr. Cassidy: And you are steadily dismantling the system. You are taking it away. You spend $2 million a year on those hospitals.

Mr. Swart: We are saying what we said in 1960: there should be one fee schedule.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Renfrew North with a new question.

Mr. Conway: I had intended a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. Cassidy: Take it, Sean.

LAKE ST. CLAIR COMMERCIAL FISHING

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources.

The minister is aware of a recent meeting between officials from his ministry and the sportsmen's group in the Windsor area. The great concern of the sportsmen's group is that the ministry is going to allow commercial fishing to resume once again in Lake St. Clair.

Can the minister, at this time, tell us his decision? Is there going to be commercial fishing this year in Lake St. Clair?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is correct. I believe I announced some time ago the ministry was prepared to re-establish a commercial fishery in Lake St. Clair when the fish inspection branch of the federal Department of Fisheries advises us, it will allow those to be sold when they meet the contaminant standards.

The commercial fishery we were talking about though will be based on coarse fish only—species such as carp, bullheads, bullfin. There are a number of species like this which have a market, particularly in the US, but which individual anglers are not particularly anxious to catch.

Mr. Kerrio: How do the fish know which nets to go into?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The real concern in the area, I believe, has to do with the possibility of commercial fishing for yellow pickerel. I have indicated there would be no licences issued for commercial fishing of yellow pickerel and also that we would not be permitting gill nets, so they would be using live gear and any pickerel that would be caught could be returned to the water.

Mr. Kerrio: What pickerel? There are no pickerel there.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We still have not heard from the federal people but in the view of my staff, it will improve the anglers' fishing by keeping a balance between the sports species and the so-called coarse fish species.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Health. You must be aware, aren't you, Mr. Minister, that your budget limitations of—

Mr. Speaker: Do you mean is he aware?

Mr. Swart: Is he aware? I said, "Are you, or aren't you?" That perhaps is a question too, Mr. Speaker.

Is the minister aware that his budget limitations of one and a half per cent to the Welland County General Hospital have forced them to close 30 out of their 287 active treatment beds effective two days from now? Does he know that 27 of their active treatment beds are occupied by non-active treatment patients, most of them chronic care, and there's no place else for them to go because the chronic wing is operating at 99.7 per cent of capacity and there are additional chronic cases still in the community which are eligible for admission?

In view of this will the minister reinstate funds in the Welland hospital so it can operate some of those beds scheduled to be closed as chronic care beds?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, if the local health council in assessing that situation were to be able to show there is a need for additional chronic beds, we would indeed add them back in.

Mr. Swart: A supplementary then: can I ask the minister whether he will provide the additional funding for those beds that are being used for chronic care to stay open until he gets a report from the health council? If not, will he tell me where he is going to place the 12 chronic care patients occupying 12 of those exact beds that are to be closed two days from now?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm sure they'll stay right where they are until their condition is such that they can be discharged from the hospital—

Mr. Warner: With some funding? With the needed funding?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —as we are doing in any number of centres. When we receive a report indicating a need for additional chronic beds, at that point we will work with the individual hospitals to add it back in.

Mr. McClellan: Right on top of things, Dennis; right on top.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: For instance, my friend from Huron-Bruce (Mr. Grant) and I are meeting a week today with a group of hospital people from his great part of the province, and that's exactly what we're going to talk about with them—how to do an assessment of need for additional chronic facilities—

Mr. Warner: The Artful Dodger.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —which can then be added back in over and above the four active treatment beds per 1,000. It bears repeating again. When we talk about the planning standard for active treatment beds we're talking about purely active treatment beds. If there's a need for chronic or rehab beds over and above that, we want to see those needs met—

Mr. McClellan: You could be replaced by a computer.

Mr. Mackenzie: Say you are not going to close them then.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and we're prepared to add them back in.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Since the budgetary cutbacks take effect next Monday, actually on Sunday, and there is probably a good deal of confusion in the minds of hospital administrators, if not in the mind of the Minister of Health, as to what they should do when there is pressure from the medical people and the community at large to continue the utilization of some beds—even four or five beds—simply to relieve the transition for a few weeks, who is going to pay that additional cost? It would simply be an overrun on the local budget with no resources to pay it.

Is the minister saying that if in the opinion of the local authorities they must overrun the budget cutback, at least by a few weeks, he is prepared to give them that amount of flexibility, as he did in part in Brantford when they applied for it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Brantford is a very special case inasmuch as the hospitals there have been working together for more than a year now on a hospital rationalization study. As the member knows, I gave them assurances that certain amounts of money would be added back, but not until they sign a rationalization agreement. Any deficit above that would be recovered from the savings as a result of rationalization.

Mr. Nixon: If they don't sign, who is going to pay?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As of midnight tomorrow night, the fiscal year begins and the budgets have been allocated. What I am saying is that at this point every hospital knows very well the budget formula and the implications of it and they are responsible for living with those budgets.

I am looking ahead to the future through this fiscal year and beyond. Where additional chronic needs are identified and, for that matter, where additional extended care needs are identified through the local planning process, we are quite prepared to meet those needs and to add them back in. In many cases, that will mean the conversion of active-treatment wards to chronic wards, staffing them accordingly and setting up proper chronic programs.

TURKEY QUOTAS

Mr. Yakabuski: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the large numbers of inquiries we are having from individual farmers in our own ridings and across the province with regard to the raising of turkeys, could the minister bring us up to date as to where this matter might stand at this time?

An hon. member: You are raising all kinds of them over there.

An hon. member: Gobble, gobble, gobble.

Hon. W. Newman: Listen, you turkeys. Yes, we have had a lot of discussion with the Ontario Turkey Marketing Board over the period of the last number of weeks. Many members on all sides of the House have written to me and many of our own members have brought their concerns directly to me. As a result of the Ontario Turkey Marketing Board meeting yesterday, I believe a satisfactory solution was reached last night by the board which will have to be confirmed by regulation. I would like to make it clear that every farmer or every producer in this province will be allowed to grow 50 turkeys—no permit, no licence, nothing.

Mr. Van Horne: Would you settle for 49 and a goose?

An hon. member: And a partridge in a pear tree.

Hon. W. Newman: Sometimes the members opposite make more noise than they do, but I would like to finish answering the question. I could say something, but I won't because we have some young ladies in the gallery.

For those producers who up until 1979 were producing more than 50 birds and up to 400 birds, the Ontario Turkey Marketing Board will provide a new basic quota so that they will not be hurt. Any producers who were producing—and there are a few—prior to 1970 who never did get involved with the board and can substantiate that they were producing at that time and how many birds they were producing, will be allowed a quota.

Mr. Sargent: That's a fowl statement.

VIOLENCE IN SCHOOLS

Mr. Bradley: I have a question for the Attorney General. It is a question which could equally be directed to the Minister of Education but it deals with crime to a certain extent. In the light of the fact that there were media reports and there are continuing media reports of violence and vandalism, particularly in secondary schools in the province of Ontario, including a contention by a

Hamilton secondary school principal that drugs, booze, vandalism and defiance of authority are in every school—

Mr. Speaker: I have heard no question.

Mr. Bradley:—would the minister indicate to the House whether he has, in consultation with the Minister of Education, discussed this matter and planned any legislative or regulation activities which would deal with this problem, particularly from the point of view of law enforcement?

[10:45]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Minister of Education is away at the present time, so I haven't had an opportunity of discussing—

Mr. Conway: You are fairly fortunate in that regard.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—with her these recent news reports. But I would say that I have no legislative initiatives in mind because my own personal view is that these very distressing media reports really reflect growing forms of alienation in society, which are the product of a whole host of problems and of social ills.

Mrs. Campbell: You are a law and order man.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would be very pleased to hear any suggestions from any of the members of the Legislature as to how one can effectively alleviate the growing incidence of violence and of vandalism.

Mr. Cooke: How about some jobs?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It is a matter that has concerned law enforcement authorities and the courts in recent years.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier appointed Judy LaMarsh to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have urged the crown attorneys in this province to seek stiffer sentences in relation to vandalism, for example, because of the serious problem and the enormous cost that it represents to the taxpayers. We have pressed for tougher sentences in relation to crimes of violence as well.

The courts do not always respond to our pleas in this respect, but we are continuing to do our best.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: In the light of the fact that a specific problem exists with intruders into the school buildings, which apparently cannot be dealt with adequately under the Education Act or the Petty Trespass Act, would the Attorney General then look into those specific areas and deal with that specific problem, recognizing that the other problem is much broader?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I would be very pleased to discuss this with the Minister of Education upon her return. Again, I would just make one further observation: In this particular problem, I think the honourable member can appreciate that the police resources are stretched very thin at the present time.

I say that because there is some suggestion that there should be more police resources allocated to schools to keep out these trespassers. The presence of police officers on school grounds can perhaps create the wrong impression, but I will be discussing this matter with the minister.

Mr. S. Smith: They don't have to be police.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question for the Minister of Energy. Would the Minister of Energy explain to this House why the Three Mile Island nuclear accident could not happen in the Ontario Hydro system, in spite of the fact that internal working documents of the Atomic Energy Control Board and the interorganizational working group, of which Hydro is a part, which were tabled with the Porter commission and with the select committee on Hydro, provide clear evidence that the emergency core cooling system of the existing Ontario Candu plants are not satisfactorily reliable?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I missed the beginning of that question.

Ms. Gigantes: I asked for an explanation.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It will take me a little time to get the various information together. If I may, I will take it as notice and try to report back shortly, next week.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It has been taken as notice. There will be ample opportunity then.

Mr. Cassidy: As the Minister of Energy, he should know there are people across this province who want to know if it could happen here.

Mr. Speaker: He hasn't responded. He has taken the question as notice. There will be ample opportunity when he responds.

Mr. Cassidy: What kind of Minister of Energy is he?

Hon. W. Newman: A very good minister.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the Minister of Energy not have any communication with his own people?

DEER HERDS

Mr. Kennedy: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. In the light of a radio news report recently that said the deer herds of Ontario are dwindling and in view of the harsh winter that they have been through, would the minister comment on the success of remedial measures or feeding measures that have been taken and also tell the House if indeed deer herds are dwindling as was reported?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It has been a very difficult winter in a number of parts of the province for deer herds. Remedial action has been taken by the ministry in three main areas, cutting browse and providing other feed in the form of grain in the deer yards, and making tracks—because of the high snow and little or no crust—so that the deer can move around and get to their food. I do not have the final total, but I would think that something in the order of about $100,000 has been expended for material and casual labour to do these things.

It is not yet apparent what damage has been done. There has been some problem, as usual, with dogs chasing deer because of the fact that the deer cannot manoeuvre in deep snow. But we are a little more optimistic now than we were, say, about six or eight weeks ago. As honourable members are aware, part of the problem is that when deer are unable to protect themselves by moving away, particularly from dogs, the does are liable to lose their fawns. That is what happened, I understand, a year ago. How much of that has happened this winter we do not know yet.

The only other thing I would want to add is that I am delighted to say that we have had a great deal of volunteer assistance from individuals—sportsmen, hunters and so on—who have been helping our own staff in getting these things done.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain why it is that he should have kept himself as well informed as he is on the question of deer herds, but that two days after the worst nuclear power plant accident in North America—

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Cassidy:—he should not have sought any information from his staff in his role as Minister of Energy?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable member would like a very short explanation, I can tell him that the Pickering operation and the Bruce operation—

Mr. Speaker: Order. In fairness, the honourable minister took that question as notice. He cannot go back to it.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the minister: In view of the fantastic potential of spills and leaks in this province, and in view of the fact that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Ontario Hydro are famous for their coverup of the spills that we have had in this area, why does Hydro not have a team down there now finding out what the hell is going on? I phoned them yesterday, through our research department, and they have done nothing about it yet.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, Hydro does have people down there.

Mr. Sargent: Where are they now? In Harrisburg?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have not heard what room they are in at the hotel, but I know they are there.

Mr. Sargent: Who is down there?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do not have the names of the people down there. I was informed yesterday that Hydro sent people down as soon as they heard about it.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Grey-Bruce take his seat?

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, does he not think he might advise a spokesman for Hydro not to do propaganda on TV, saying Candu is absolutely safe and Three Mile Island cannot happen, until he assures himself that is true and until he looks at the documents which indicate that it is not?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, any comments made yesterday by any spokesman for Hydro about this event, to my knowledge, were based on information which was conveyed to that spokesman by the media and which came from press reports over there. My understanding is that Mr. Morrison had indicated that, based on sort of hearsay, he could make certain comments. I think it is always a mistake to try to answer a hypothetical question.

As I say, Hydro has people there. The United States authorities are making an investigation.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Minister of Energy might undertake to create a public statement regarding the two different technologies that apply in this situation, and the fact there was a problem with this pressure container type of light-water reactor in the United States; and that while Candu may have its own set of problems, whatever they are they are not necessarily parallel in any way.

I wonder if the minister would undertake to make some sort of factual statement which would help the people of Ontario to really understand this whole question, to understand that the problem really results from the fact that information is not getting out from either Hydro or AECL to the public about the technology.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I thank the honourable member for his informative question. It is quite true that while there are some similarities in the machinery, the processes are quite different—enriched uranium and light water as opposed to natural uranium and heavy water, and quite different steam pressures involved. Our plants all have a vacuum building which is connected to the reactor room, so anything that leaks goes into the contained room, where it can be dealt with.

Mr. Sargent: You have had numerous occasions of spills at the plants, too.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Just as a matter of interest, the system which is used here—well, I agree with the honourable member that I should give a complete statement—

Ms. Gigantes: You better go back and find out.

Mr. McClellan: Come back when you know.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —once everybody knows what we are making a statement on and what we are comparing.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Philip: A question of the Minister of Health: Can the minister inform the House what action, if any, he is contemplating to fulfill the promise made by his assistant deputy minister, Dr. Dyer, to representatives of the administration and board of the Etobicoke General Hospital at a meeting last June in which Dr. Dyer promised to try to provide additional funds for that hospital as savings were created in other areas? One of the justifications for his promise was that the ministry's own study, published in November 1978, indicated that at that time there was a shortage of hospital beds in the borough of Etobicoke.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As a matter of fact, I had the great privilege of speaking at the annual meeting of the auxiliary of Etobicoke General about two weeks ago Tuesday, I think it was, and I also toured the hospital. Prior to that, I had also had some discussions with the chief administrator of the hospital.

Members of my staff, if they haven't already been in to talk with him will be talking with him very soon, in particular about two aspects of the operation of that hospital; namely, obstetrics and psychiatric beds. We will work with that hospital, as we have in the past, to assist them in meeting their needs.

It is part of the Metropolitan Toronto hospital centre, and the hospital centre as a whole is, roughly speaking, right on target with our planning standards. But I recognize that the Etobicoke General in particular is in a growing part of Metropolitan Toronto and one that bears constant scrutiny. That is why we are working with them, particularly on obstetrical and psychiatric needs.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: I am pleased the minister recognizes the problem of the obstetrics ward, which I believe has been allotted 29 beds and is now averaging 40 to 43. I wonder if the minister will be taking into his considerations the fact that the Etobicoke General Hospital in 1974 went on its own cutback and austerity program and trimmed the budget and the operating expenses of that hospital considerably before the ministry even decided to go on its cutback program?

Will the minister also advise us what he plans to do about the present situation where the Etobicoke General Hospital is now about 3,000 patient-days over budget?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The Etobicoke General Hospital is, by the last report I had, managing its budget very well for fiscal year 1978-79. I would anticipate, given the excellence of the board and administration of that hospital, that will continue in the future. [11:00]

Mr. Philip: Why don't you answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have. I think it is a well-run hospital. As regards their past performance, I think I've mentioned in this House before that since I have been minister we have been progressively updating and revising the budget formula to try to find even more equitable ways to distribute the available sums of money. Through 1978 we worked very hard at trying to see if we couldn't develop a formula that would tie in with the peer group comparisons, which members would receive from time to time—we send them out to all the members—that compare all the hospitals by various standards.

We have found, frankly, that if we had been able to do that it might have taken account of the kind of argument that one hears from hospitals that feel they are more efficient than most. Frankly, we were not able to come up with such a formula that wouldn't have been so bureaucratic and really just unworkable.

What we did instead was to bring in the new financial incentives that provide for the use of moneys resulting from efficiencies to be applied against agreed-on new programs, to be applied against unanticipated deficits, to be applied against capital cost associated with the costs of making an operation more efficient or of providing a new and agreed-upon program.

In addition, four or five months ago, in recognition of the fact that we had not been able to arrive at that kind of a formula, we asked the Ontario Hospital Association and the Ontario Council of Administrators of Teaching Hospitals to form a tripartite group with the ministry to come up with an entirely new budget formula for the future to take into account these and many other concerns. For instance, recently we have also discussed in this scenario what is of particular concern to me, the problems of the very small hospitals.

NURSING HOMES

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Minister of Health. In view of the commitment of that ministry to alternative care, and in view of the fact that on December 12, 1978, the minister stated: "I am advised we will likely be able to table the recommendations flowing from the report on nursing homes of 1977 on February 1 or about February 1," when is he going to table those recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker. I regret that we did not make that deadline. Frankly, the reason is very simple, that all of the same senior people who would work with me and advise me on those matters are the very same senior people who have been working with me and advising me on hospital matters, and that has taken a great deal of time. It has not been completely put aside; work is progressing on that. Rather than pin myself to a specific date I will just say that it will be done as soon as possible.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: In view of the concerns of the public at large about this matter, and the minister's commitment in closing hospital beds to alternative care, is it not top priority with him to get those recommendations forward so that we can look at them this session?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the recommendations as such came forward in the fall of 1977 and I, frankly, have not heard reactions from those. I don't want to be unkind, but I don't think I have had reactions to those recommendations from anybody over there.

The question is severalfold. First of all is the review of the act and the regulations. The other is in regard to the supply question. The member's concern would be Metropolitan Toronto. We have asked the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto to do an assessment of the nursing home bed needs of Metropolitan Toronto so that we can determine how many nursing home beds should be added in this area.

DEPARTMENT STORE TAKEOVER BIDS

Mr. Samis: My question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

In view of the two recent bids by the Thomson interests and the Weston interests to take over the Bay, and in view of the fact that Ontario is the largest retail market in Canada, can the minister tell the House what position, if any, his ministry is taking on the takeover bids and what he intends to do in terms of making meaningful representation to the federal minister on the whole matter?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, for some days, even prior to the current activity, the Ontario Securities Commission has been keeping a watching brief on the situation just as it did at the time of the purchase of Simpson's by Hudson's Bay and, prior to that, the attempted acquisition of Simpsons by Sears Roebuck.

Secondly, in terms of what the province might do: it really depends upon the culmination of the present flurry of activities surrounding the acquisition of Hudson's Bay by one or more parties. Indeed, there may not be any acquisition.

Mr. Samis: In view of the vague answer, could I ask the minister—and I realize this question is partly out of date, in view of Mr. Trudeau's action—that is, the incumbent federal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did say he intended to proceed with the reintroduction of a competition bill. Could I ask this minister if it would be his policy to support a reintroduction of such a bill? Does he recognize the need for such a bill, in view of the recent spate of corporate takeovers and the ever-increasing concentration of power in the hands of fewer and fewer people?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, I want to correct the record. My answer to the honourable member was not vague.

Mr. McClellan: Yes it was.

Hon. Mr. Drea: If no takeover bid has been achieved how can he ask me what I am going to do about it?

Mr. Samis: I asked what your stand was.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Secondly, on May 23 I will be absolutely delighted to support any and all activities of a Conservative Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Ottawa.

Mr. McClellan: Lord help us.

Mr. Kerrio: Things can't be that bad.

ENERGY FROM WASTE

Mr. J. Reed: I have a question of the Minister of Energy: Recent press releases by the Ministry of Energy indicate there is a renewed interest—

Interjections.

Mr. J. Reed: —in creating energy from waste in resource recovery. The observation is that this is now the second ministry that has taken up this issue.

I wonder if the minister could tell us, first of all, the size of the commitment to energy from waste. Secondly, does this indicate that the government is prepared to change the financing base which in the past it has had through the Ministry of the Environment? Is it going to broaden that base so that now municipalities can get into energy from waste projects on a choice basis, or on a broader basis?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can't give the honourable member the figure for next year's budget, but I will have it, I would think, in another couple of weeks. However, we are very interested in energy from waste. We are discussing with the government of Canada a joint program. In fact, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is discussing with all the provinces a share program which would include these kinds of projects. It is still not clear just on what basis that would be done: whether, for instance, it might be a program that was available to every municipality; or whether it would simply be a program that would pick one or two projects of each kind, as pilot or demonstration projects.

Also, I can't tell the honourable member whether we will be starting what in effect would be a new, continuing capital subsidy program to municipalities to deal with what has always been considered a municipal responsibility, paid by local taxpayers, for the disposal of waste. There are still a number of questions. In other words, I can't give answers today to a couple of those questions.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Mr. Cassidy: I want to rise on a matter of privilege. In the House today, the Minister of Health said that I had said doctors should all be opted back into the plan. I believe he was commenting in some way on my speech last week in East York.

I said then that the government of Ontario must act to guarantee that no citizen has to pay extra on top of the insured rates to get medical services. I made no reference to doctors being forced to opt in. Would the minister please correct that misstatement and not repeat it at every opportunity?

Mr. Speaker: You have already done so.

PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: Dealing with petitions, yesterday the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) tabled what purported to be a petition pursuant to standing order 33, signed by 20 members, the purpose of which is to refer the compendium of background material on Bill 19 of last session, An Act to amend the Mental Health Act, to the standing committee on social development.

I must point out to the honourable member and to the House that the provision contained in clause (b) of standing order 33 for the referral of reports on petition of 20 members applies only to statutory reports of ministries, and reports of boards and commissions and other agencies reporting to ministers, such reports being for the last reporting period. It does not apply to compendia even for the present session. I must, therefore, rule the petition out of order.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, perhaps with the unanimous consent of the House we could have that particular sessional paper referred to the committee.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Cassidy: It was blocked by the Conservatives.

Mr. McClellan: By the Minister of Health.

Mr. Cassidy: It was the Minister of Health who blocked it.

Mr. Gregory: What is the member going to be when he grows up?

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS

On vote 903, Regional Priorities and Development Program; item 2, Northern Roads:

Mr. Chairman: Does the minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Chairman. For the convenience of members, particularly those from northern Ontario, who may wish to be fully informed of the request we are making today, which is in the amount of $3.1 million, I would like to read into the record a short statement which clarifies the need for this request.

We are requesting your approval of an additional $3.1 million appropriation for northern roads, which is part of our regional priorities and development program. You will recall that when the 1978-79 estimates for my ministry were before the Legislature we asked for your approval of a total of $46.9 million for northern roads construction. These supplementary estimates of $3.1 million will bring the total appropriation for northern roads construction to $50 million in 1978-79.

Approximately $1.5 million of the additional funding is required as a direct result of the unusually good weather conditions which were experienced in the late fall and early winter months of last year. This weather permitted contractors to continue work beyond the normal closed period of mid-November to well into December.

Mr. Chairman: Order. I'm sorry to interrupt the minister, but there are a number of private conversations by members and others under the galleries and I wish the members would refrain.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

This could thereby increase significantly expenditures on both carryover projects from the previous year and new projects tendered in the current year.

A further $980,000 expenditure was necessary to expedite a resurfacing program on Highway 11, from Beardmore easterly. The 14.6-mile resurfacing project was necessary in order to salvage the existing road base, which had deteriorated more rapidly than expected.

A reconstruction project on Highway 65 from the north junction of Highway 560, Elk Lake, northerly for 10.5 miles was accelerated in order to maintain a continuous program on Highway 65 following the last project which had been completed in 1977. This project resulted in an additional expenditure of $620,000 in 1978-79.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Chairman, I just have one question in this connection and it relates to this item.

Mr. Minister, you will recall that a year ago in this supplementary budget the then Treasurer, the honourable Darcy McKeough, in dealing with the OHIP difficulty, tabled a supplementary budgetary statement in which he indicated that the government would effect one of its cuts to make moneys available for that OHIP premium decrease, as it was then. He indicated on April 25, 1978, that $9 million would be taken out of the Ministry of Northern Affairs and, in particular, the regional priorities program. I personally felt that was an unhappy choice, but that was the Treasurer's decision.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You were part of it.

Mr. Conway: I was certainly part of the overall decision.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The north will remember that.

Mr. Conway: The choice, in this instance, was not something recommended by me and I felt particularly unhappy that the then Treasurer took such an insensitive view of northern Ontario.

What I wanted to know, since it was a decision taken by your government at that time—I was looking at this particular supplementary estimate and it reminded me of the progress of that cut. Does this $3.1 million in any way relate to difficulties growing out of that $9 million cut? Could you indicate at this time whether that $9 million cut that was talked of in that vote was taken out of or shifted back into this vote? Whatever became of that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm pleased the honourable member has brought this up. I would have to remind him that it was the opposition parties that forced the government into that position, that forced the Treasurer's hand in removing $9 million from the Ministry of Northern Affairs' budget. I regret, as you do, sir, that that had to happen, but nevertheless that was the decision of this Legislature. The Treasurer did it, but I just want to reassure the honourable member that the $9 million was taken out of the regional priorities and the community priorities budgets, not out of the road construction program.

Roads, as you are very much aware, are important to those of us who live in northern Ontario, and I am particularly pleased that I am able to come back two years in a row for supplementary estimates for the road construction program. It's that kind of enthusiasm that we have in this ministry to get on with a needed program—much welcomed, I might say, in northern Ontario.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, as a northerner I'm certainly pleased to support any revenues the minister might be requesting from the Legislature for road construction in northern Ontario.

Certainly the construction of highways has long been neglected in that part of the province. Some of the people in the southern part, of course, don't understand what a road really means. It is one of our main development tools. Without proper highways, we are not going to develop properly.

The main highway, the Trans-Canada, goes through the northern part of the province—Highway 17 being part of the Trans-Canada Highway system. I would like to refer a couple of questions to the minister relating to a couple of projects which I think have high priority on Highway 17, in the extreme northern part. I'm referring to the area between Terrace Bay and Marathon, and some resurfacing west of Schreiber, and between Wawa and Montreal River Harbour.

These two stretches of Highway 17 are in dire need of repair. I just wonder what the delay is in getting at these two projects.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm pleased to advise the honourable members of the Legislature that I will be in Thunder Bay on Monday to table in northern Ontario the capital construction program for the coming fiscal year. If memory serves me correctly, I think at least one of these areas to which you refer is in that construction program, but I'll make sure you get a copy on Monday afternoon.

Mr. Germa: I would like to ask a further question relating to Highway 17, and the problem at the Garden River reserve with obtaining right-of-way from the band council. Can the minister bring us up to date on that particular project?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: My colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) has been in constant discussion with the Garden River band. My last information is they are making progress. How fast it is going to develop is not known at this time, but I can report some progress.

Mr. Germa: This project has been in the works for several years now. I am a little frustrated with the delay. I wonder if the ministry, the government, is sincere in obtaining right-of-way. Why hasn't it taken assertive action to ensure the right of way is available?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have to recognize the rights of the native people. As the honourable member is very much aware, this road does go through the middle of a federal Indian reserve. Discussions and negotiations are lengthy and protracted, and it is with that kind of an attitude we move into these discussions. We don't want to ride roughshod over our native peoples; they should be involved in the negotiations.

I just further repeat, we are taking this program seriously. There is a commitment to put a four-lane highway between Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie and in no way do we intend to back away from that commitment.

Mr. Germa: We have a unique situation, Mr. Chairman. The town of Killarney, while it is only 32 miles from the town of Espanola, has no direct communications link with Espanola. In fact, all communications are through the city of Sudbury, some 75 miles removed, to the extent that children going to secondary school have to spend over three hours a day on a bus.

For many years the Ministries of Transportation and Communications and Northern Affairs have been rumbling about a road which would connect the village of Killarney with the town of Espanola and would open up a whole new avenue for these three or four hundred people living in the town of Killarney.

Could the minister explain why we haven't got some action on this particular project?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the honourable member is very much aware, the proposed road link would connect Killarney with Whitefish Falls. It is an issue which has been discussed in many circles of northern Ontario. The cost benefits of that road are undergoing some very careful review at the present time.

The honourable member is further aware the road would pass through the Killarney Provincial Park, which raises some concern with the Ministry of Natural Resources.

I can report to you that there is a very intensive study going on at the present time that will look at the cost benefits of putting a road through this very difficult terrain. I am not aware of the exact timetable, but I would be glad to find out and let you know.

Vote 903 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: That completes the supplementary estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On supplementary supply for the Ministry of Correctional Services, page six.

Mr. Conway: If it walks, pension it; if it doesn't, pave it.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

On vote 1502, institutional program, care, treatment and training:

Hon. Mr. Walker: I would like to make a few remarks of interest in clarifying the request for $2.8 million in supplementary funds.

The primary reasons for the overrun are—

Mr. Conway: Can't you balance your budget, Walker? Come on, we need some old line Tories over there.

Hon. Mr. Walker: —expanded community resource centre programs. This was announced by my predecessor as a means of alleviating severe overcrowding in many of our institutions. During the year, 10 additional community resource centres were opened providing 188 additional bed spaces at an additional cost of $665,000.

It was planned at the time of the announcement to extract these funds from the budgets of the institutions. As you understand, when you remove 188 inmates from the institutional system, they do not come from one specific institution, but from across the whole system. However, the reduction in the number of inmates in our longer-term institutions has allowed us to close down a number of units within individual facilities.

In 1978-79, we experienced an overall seven per cent increase in the use of our jails and detention centres. However, the facilities in Toronto and Hamilton experienced a 25 per cent increase in their utilization. The ministry's problem is that it does not control intake when the police arrive at the front door of an institution with an inmate and a warrant of committal. The institution has no choice but to accept that inmate. We cannot say there is "no room at the inn." The increased workload for the three Toronto facilities and the Hamilton-Wentworth detention centre necessitated the use of unclassified staff and overtime, at a cost of $800,000.

As a result of the decision not to raise OHIP premiums, the government placed a hiring freeze on the civil service in order to reduce expenditures. Although the hiring freeze had the desired economic impact across the government, and in some areas of our own ministry, it did create a real problem with regard to the correctional staff. As you know, our facilities operate on a 24-hour basis and in the interests of public safety must be properly staffed at all times. To maintain these proper staffing levels, it was necessary to incur overtime expenditures amounting to $200,000.

During the past year, community work programs by inmates were greatly expanded by this ministry. Across the province, inmates were escorted into communities to shovel snow for senior citizens and to clear and maintain conservation areas and parks; to help the handicapped and older citizens in many ways, and to perform tasks for the community that otherwise would not have been carried out because of lack of funds. The cost of escorting and transporting inmates amounted to an additional $200,000. I should say that I strongly support this program begun by my predecessor. It has received a very positive response from many of the honourable members, as well as the recipient communities.

It is our intention to expand this program in the coming year. We estimate this initiative provided approximately $1 million worth of service to the community.

We expanded our industrial work programs, primarily in manufacturing mattresses from non-flammable, very low toxicity materials. We also started manufacturing signs for use by other ministries. These supplementary estimates contain an amount of $225,000 which represents the cost of raw materials for these programs. The cost of the materials is recovered by the sale of these items, with the moneys going to the government's consolidated revenue fund. We are rather proud of our mattress operation. The mattresses we produce are probably the safest in the world. They are certainly not flammable. The only one less flammable would be a waterbed.

We undertook research, in conjunction with the Ontario Research Foundation, in order to determine the most appropriate kind of mattress. When we could not find a suitable producer in our private sector, we went into production ourselves. Now we're selling mattresses to other ministries, to federal institutions, and we are receiving international inquiries.

The ministry had also to bear the cost of increased OHIP premiums for our employees and these totalled approximately $100,000.

Mr. Bradley: We saved you some money on that.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Two facilities, Kitchener Jail and Glendale Adult Training Centre, were scheduled to close by April 1, 1978, but incurred costs beyond that date for which no budgetary provision had been made. The cost amounted to $610,000. The Kitchener Jail, which was built in 1853, was replaced by converting a maximum security unit of Grandview Training School into the Waterloo Detention Centre. A commitment was made not to occupy the facility until a security wall was completed. The work on the wall was carried out by an inmate work force. Expenditures of $350,000 were incurred because the Kitchener Jail remained open after April 1 while the wall was being completed. Due to overcrowding of the jail, it was necessary to house intermittent inmates in a section of the former Grandview facility.

In addition, part of this expenditure was for the on-site training of staff at the new facility. The overrun of $260,000, with regard to Glendale adult training centre, resulted from efforts to fully co-ordinate the closure of this facility with the transfer of children's services programs and staff from Hagersville.

Those figures, Mr. Chairman, represent the division and distribution of the components of our overrun of $2.8 million which we are asking the House to approve today.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Chairman, I will keep my remarks relatively brief in view of the fact that we will be beginning the next year's estimates in the upcoming weeks.

The interesting point that the minister makes, I think, is the fact that the additional funds are going where some of us in the opposition have suggested that they do go. We are not necessarily delighted with the overexpenditures within the ministry, but at least the money is being channelled into areas which we feel are important, namely, the community resource centres.

What is perhaps a little disappointing is the fact—and the minister has mentioned some of the reasons—that the savings have not been effected in other areas. I think we recognize the same thing, for instance, in education; when there's a declining enrolment, so to speak, in education, you still have certain fixed costs. We recognize that, within institutions where some of the people are removed from institutions for other purposes, the costs are still going to be there, or that you are not having these people going into jails, so to speak, and instead into community resource centres. We recognize that you are not going to realize the same dollar reduction in other areas.

However, I would express the concern of those who are genuine advocates of the community resource centres and the other programs that they consider to be progressive. I would be concerned that there would be resistance to these programs from those who are employed in the existing institutions. Perhaps a little later I could get a comment from the minister as to whether he feels that one of the reasons for a lack of reduction in costs in institutions when he embarks upon community resource centres and the other institutions—the jails—might be as a result of certain resistance in the old-fashioned type of institutions. I should not say they are old-fashioned, because some of them are obviously going to be necessary, but those institutions that have existed for a number of years and are called jails.

We recognize, I think, the problems that have existed both in Toronto and in the Hamilton-Wentworth situation. There are some who would question the use of overtime as opposed to perhaps hiring additional employees, but no doubt the ministry took that into consideration before making that particular decision. Those of us in opposition who ask questions in this regard recognize that there was a situation existing in each of the institutions mentioned that necessitated the further use of employees of the ministry. Of course, some of that perhaps results from the fact that the institutions themselves are overcrowded but, as the minister once again points out—and I do not wish to be an apologist for the minister—neither he nor his ministry has control over the fact that the police officers deposit these people at these particular institutions.

We would hope that the pre-trial programs that are in the early stages now will eliminate the need for some people to be confined to institutions for long periods of time before actually coming to trial or perhaps actually being sentenced. With the improvement in the bail situation, with the kind of supervision that could exist outside of institutions and be undertaken either by volunteer groups or by others who have a standing in the community of such that they would be trusted with this responsibility, perhaps further savings could be effected. I know that we will get into that in next year's estimates when we deal with that particular problem.

I think it is significant as well that the minister mentioned that $1 million worth of service has been done in communities. We have expressed some concern that the services provided are not going to be those which would otherwise be done by employees hired by a particular community. With the consultation that takes place with the labour union movement, for instance, and with others, I think the ministry has made a genuine attempt to avoid that particular situation.

When we look at the additional expenditure that we see in the Ministry of Correctional Services, I think we have to take into account the fact that approximately $1 million worth of services is being provided to the community at the same time so there is a little bit of a balancing off there. I shouldn't even say a little bit; a substantial balancing off that can be pointed to with some satisfaction.

The other point I found rather intriguing, being a minister who is probably noted for his great faith in the private enterprise system and a member of a government which has extolled the virtues of the private enterprise system on many occasions, I find it interesting that there is a competition taking place in the mattress business. He says that it simply can't be done as well otherwise or that there aren't others prepared to do it. Perhaps that can be expanded upon a little later on today or when we get into next year's estimates, as to why this situation exists. Apparently you are not receiving competition or no one else really wants it. Therefore, the ministry either is so efficient that competition is not possible, or for some other reason these companies don't wish to get into that business.

The last comment I would make is in regard to Glendale and the fact that perhaps some criticism—and the minister no doubt will defend the situation—might be directed to the fact that perhaps the closing was not planned as well as some would have expected and, therefore, the extra expenditures that resulted might draw one to the conclusion that it was poor planning. The minister and his officials might be able to explain otherwise.

In that we will be dealing extensively with 10 hours of estimates beginning next week, I will conclude my formal remarks and look for some replies from the minister.

Mr. Ziemba: Mr. Chairman, the minister is asking for $2.8 million for 10 additional community resource centres. I would like to know where those resource centres will be located and, specifically, whether one of them be in the Sault Ste. Marie area. I visited the Sault jail and it is a dangerous situation. It is not only overcrowded, it is also understaffed and, while we hear about a hiring freeze, I think it goes against all common sense to have a situation where there is an old building, jammed full of prisoners, some of them dangerous, and then have two or three guards to supervise 40 or 50 prisoners. The Sault Ste. Marie area is one that cries out for a community resource centre as an alternative to the present system.

The other thing the minister mentioned was that the Toronto area has had a seven per cent increase in its prison population while Hamilton and some other jurisdictions have had a 25 per cent increase. That tells me that some of the judges are not co-operating with the program of alternatives to imprisonment that this government has been promoting and I would like to focus on this in the estimates by asking the minister to provide the justice committee with a list of those judges who prefer to jail people as opposed to assigning them some community work or to a restitution program; in other words, those Neanderthal judges who believe in the old hanging idea.

It really bothers me that we have 5,000 people locked up in our provincial prisons and half of them are there serving sentences of 30 days or less for minor driving and drinking offences. Even in the Don Jail, the notorious Don Jail, a large number of people are there every weekend serving time for parking offences, for Pete's sake.

Mr. Nixon: Why don't they pay their fines?

Mr. Ziembra: Well, maybe they can't. Times are tough out there, you know. You might not know that, but there is an awful lot of unemployment here in Toronto.

Mr. Nixon: It is amazing the way they can run those cars around without any money.

Mr. Ziembra: Some of them are running those cars around trying to find work.

Mr. Germa: Keep them in debtors' prison.

Mr. Ziembra: That is what we have got here in this province, debtors' prisons, people serving time because they can't pay their fines and the judges who impose those sentences should be exposed. They are costing the taxpayers—

Mr. Nixon: You mean they are making the sentences in secret?

Mr. Ziembra: If there are some enlightened judges I would like to commend them, but there may be others who believe in throwing people in jail for not paying a parking ticket. They are making a habit of this and they are costing the taxpayers $50 a day over a parking ticket that may be worth $2.

Mr. Chairman: Order. I wish the honourable member would return to the item before the committee.

Mr. Ziembra: I would like from the minister, as I said, the list of the 10 proposed community resource centres. I disagree with the minister as far as overtime is concerned. I don't know whether he has spent much time in jail, but it isn't the kind of place you want to spend more than eight hours. Temperatures can get very short and in some of these prisons that are really overcrowded you are creating a dangerous situation by allowing overtime. I would rather see more staff hired working eight hours each and have a situation that doesn't deteriorate as far as the relationship between prisoner and guard is concerned.

We have heard an awful lot of brave new initiatives by the former Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) though not much has changed in the meantime. We still have the women in the Kingston prison, although the former minister promised us they would be home by last Christmas. Now we are hearing stories that this Kingston prison, which is a human jungle, is a place where women want to remain. I think you, Mr. Minister, have an obligation to repatriate the Ontario women prisoners. Bring them back to Ontario prisons as your predecessor has promised the justice committee, and the sooner the better. I don't think because there is a kind of permissiveness allowed in Kingston that you should be going along with it.

I am worried about the money you are collecting from offenders. You collect $25 a week for being involved in the parole program, and are also charging prisoners at Mimico and other prisons rent every month. You smile, but I wonder whether you in fact may be breaking the law by collecting that money.

Mr. Nixon: You are smiling at this important matter.

Mr. Ziembra: The Criminal Lawyers Association has stated what you are doing by collecting this money is imposing another sentence, another fine. I would agree with that. You have $160 stashed away, collected from people serving these intermittent sentences and you make out a way of teaching them responsibility is by making them pay rent. In fact, you may be doing something illegal to extract this money. I don't think any of them want to be there and it is ludicrous to suggest they are paying you rent for space for the weekend. I think you might want to hang on to that money because you may have to give it back to them with interest if you are ever brought to task for that.

The success of your ministry is based on the fact that you have so many volunteers who dedicate countless free hours to working with prisoners, such as the Salvation Army, the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society and many others. Your new corrections act would limit the scope of the volunteers. Although I haven't had any complaints from any of these volunteer agencies, I wonder whether you have rethought your ministry's position with regard to control over these volunteer groups? Some concerns were expressed during debate on that particular bill in this regard. I wonder whether you have had occasion to review your position on that?

I wonder, also, whether any of the $2.8 million is going to be funneled into the probation and parole services branch of your ministry? It seems to me most probation officers have a caseload of about 90, while the experts claim that 30 or 40 is a reasonable number one individual can handle. I wonder whether this field is being properly funded with this money you are seeking today?

I have a number of other points that I will raise, as Mr. Bradley indicated, during the estimates. We will save them until then.

I objected to the $40 million your ministry spent in 1978 building new prisons. That was a bad mistake. Every one of these new prisons you have built was immediately jammed to capacity. Most of them were designed for 200 prisoners and you have got 400 and 500 —

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member is straying from this particular vote.

Mr. Ziemba: Am I straying from it?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Ziemba: It is interesting, though, isn't it? Did you ever visit any of these new prisons?

Mr. Chairman: It would be very interesting under the general discussion.

Mr. Ziemba: Yes, you are quite right, Mr. Chairman. In any case, now that the minister has admitted the $40 million was a total waste of money and has gone along with opposition members' suggestions that alternatives to prison are the answer, I am pleased to see he is putting his money where it can serve the best purpose. It certainly doesn't make sense to lock up someone at a cost of $50 a day when these alternatives can cost the taxpayers $5 or $10 a day.

With the closing of Glendale, as my colleague Mr. Bradley stated, I think you have admitted that your ministry isn't interested in rehabilitation any more. I don't think it ever was. I don't think rehabilitation ever existed in the provincial prisons. They are just simply holding situations. With the closing of that, I think you have just admitted you are not interested in education or rehabilitation, or any sort of cure-all for the offender syndrome.

I'll have a few comments, Mr. Chairman, if the minister can explain where the resource centres are going to be located and whether some of this money will be directed to the probation and parole service branch of his ministry.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I thank the members opposite, the member for St. Catharines and the member for High Park-Swansea, for their comments. I will try to answer seriatim the questions they have posed.

The first question raised by the member for St. Catharines involved the fact that the increased expenditure in community efforts had not been properly reflected in our institutional decreases. One would expect that as we remove people from the institutions there should be a corresponding decrease in costs, because there is a corresponding increase in costs for individuals who go into community resource centres.

It is fair to say one cannot turn it on and turn it off like a tap and suddenly have a huge saving in the institutions. For instance, the 188 people who went into community resource centres over the last year, during the period when these supplementary estimates stand, were not depleted from one institution. Had they been, then perhaps one institution would be considered redundant. There might be a significant saving of perhaps $3 million to $5 million which would normally be the cost of about 200 inmates.

So the saving is not quickly picked up, because the inmates are spread across the entire system. You will have 15 out of one place and 30 from another. All we can say is that during the year some of the institutions, Rideau and Burtch had closings of units so that there was some saving realized in each institution.

I would, however, like to say it does appear in our estimates this year. We feel we are reflecting now the changes which occurred over the past year. Of course, 188 inmates didn't necessarily come out on one day on April 1 last year, rather they came out spread over the year. The saving would not be fully appreciated until a full year is in front of us.

In the new estimates, the institutional figure has increased from $98,404,000 to $101,424,900. That increase is about three per cent. Given that inflation is running somewhat higher, members can see we are starting to show appreciable savings in our institution from that type of activity. We are quite pleased with it and quite confident our estimates for the institutions in the ensuing year, which we will talk about next week, do reflect precisely the point the member made, that there has been some saving, but it takes a while for it to occur.

The next point he raised involved community work. This is done by institutions, whereby the inmate resides in the institution and goes out for some form of community work during the day and is under supervision. There is a certain cost, as he indicated there. As I indicated in my opening statement, the cost is $200,000. That additional cost is offset by the amount of work done by the individuals, as he properly put forward. We had 177,400 hours of service of community work extended during the past year.

We attempted to put a price on that. If we put a price of $3 an hour, which I suppose is minimum wage, though we think it's worth much more than that, the range is upwards of $600,000. If we put a greater price on it, then it approaches the $1 million mark. That is the offset, and we are quite impressed by the offset. We think it's very much worthwhile.

It was a deviation of policy over the past year to go into community work and we're quite happy and very impressed, frankly, with the results over the past year. Really there have been no incidents to be concerned about in all the community work. There were 177,000 hours of community work and scarcely an incident to report. We're very impressed.

I think the member is well aware of some of the work being done by his own Niagara Region Detention Centre on the Welland Canal, which I believe he encouraged very strongly over the past year. We recognize the resistance of which he made mention. However, it has not reached any proportion that causes any alarm. I am sure all of our correctional officers realize that we have 500 more people today than we had a while back, so it does not appear that we are shrinking the size of our correctional staff.

In fact, what we are really doing is ensuring that through community programs, such as community service orders, people who do not properly belong in jail are not in jail. I think our officers are appreciating that. They now realize that there really isn't that much difficulty. If anything, we are hiring additional officers, it would appear.

The member for High Park-Swansea raised a number of points that I think are worth mentioning. Before I go on to those points, the member for St. Catharines was particularly concerned about private enterprise and whether or not I was in conflict of my principles by setting up this industry within our institutions. I have to tell him that my principles are intact. Please be advised that the Mimico mattress-making operation operates with a private enterprise. The name of the company, as I recall, is Sleepmaster Limited, who are the private entrepreneurs in there providing that service. Our inmates work for them. That was a somewhat tendered proposal arrangement that is working extremely well for us.

Mr. Germa: Slave labour, eh? Slave labour for private profit.

Hon. Mr. Walker: The mattresses are really very impressive. Nowhere in the world could we find any mattress more flame-retardant, except, as I mentioned, the waterbed. The one thing about the mattress we now have is that the cotton that goes around it and the cotton within is, basically, sufficiently flame-retardant to avoid the kind of incident that occurred in the Stratford Jail type of situation.

We're impressed by the fact that we are now selling these mattresses to federal penitentiaries, to other provincial correctional institutions, and inquiries have come from as far away as Italy and Bermuda.

Mr. Ziemba: Who is saving money on it?

Hon. Mr. Walker: The provincial Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller).

Mr. Ziemba: No, no. But it's a private outfit that runs it, though. Where do they get their cut?

Hon. Mr. Walker: We are quite confident this is a very fine operation. In fact, our institutional program in Guelph is a private enterprise arrangement where we have an abattoir operated by an outside firm. That abattoir engages between 40 and 50 inmates at any one period of time. The inmates are members of the union and receive union rates of pay and go away with money in their pockets. We have a fine operation; we go away with an excellent service being rendered by the company. They handle all the administration. As you know, in a good many cases when government tackles some form of industrial business that private enterprise should be doing, it usually ends up not achieving the mark. We are impressed by the fact that—

Mr. Warner: Your government. You should feel badly about that.

Hon. Mr. Walker: —in this case, this particular operation is working very well. Indeed, the meat you may eat today will probably come from the abattoir at Guelph—meat butchered there. We're doing something like 1,700 head a week. That's quite a butchering feat.

In previous years, when the ministry tried to operate it itself, it did not reach that figure. In fact, it was probably doing about 500 head a week. There's a significant improvement in productivity.

We have other private enterprise operations in our jail system. In Maplehurst, there's an automotive business. Muffler parts are being manufactured on a contract basis. The lessee leases space from us and pays the inmates and we provide the inmates, who earn a very reasonable rate of pay.

In our food servicing — our food operations — something like nine of the institutions have outside catering firms. That's working extremely well. No complaints about that. However, I'm deviating a bit from the actual estimates.

Let me return to a point raised by the member for High Park-Swansea about the community resource centres. In my statement, I didn't indicate that any of the money would be going into providing 10 new community resource centres. Rather, my statement was that, during the year, 10 additional community resource centres were opened. None was in Sault Ste. Marie. They were in other places. I could provide you with a list of those.

With respect to Sault Ste. Marie, we are exploring the possibility of a community resource centre there. We already have a form of one operating in Sault Ste. Marie in the front building, which I'm sure you toured back in December when you were in Sault Ste. Marie. I think there are 17 inmates in that particular front-end portion. They are not under maximum security; they come and go under the supervision of the operator of that portion of the facility.

Sault Ste. Marie presents a very difficult problem. As you can appreciate, it's the crossroads of America, in many respects. It's the crossroads of Canada, being on the Trans-Canada Highway. It's the crossroads, from the United States, of that eastern seaboard road that comes north. There, we have a lot of inmates who do not have community ties. They're basically on the road, going to and from somewhere. Without those community ties, they have basically to be incarcerated awaiting their trial.

Mr. Warner: It's like a description of some cabinet ministers.

Hon. Mr. Walker: It seems to have more than its share of serious criminals on remand there at any one time. It's not unusual to have upwards of 10 people in the remand area accused of severe crimes such as murder. That makes it very difficult to give much thought to CRCs in a large way.

With respect to the 25 per cent increase in days stay within the institutions in the Toronto area, which is quite different from the seven per cent across-the-board increase across Ontario, the 25 per cent increase has been somewhat alarming to us. We did not expect that large an increase. We had, based on our previous experience, budgeted for two per cent. In fact, it turns out across the province to be a seven per cent increase. The Toronto area has been mildly alarming to us because the increase in days stay has been 25 per cent in Toronto and Hamilton.

You made reference to what the judges are doing. We are impressed by the degree of co-operation that the judges are extending at this very moment. During the months of January and February, I spoke with almost all of the provincial court judges in Ontario at four of their sentencing seminars spread throughout the province—at Kingston, the Sault, London and Toronto. In the process of that, we had a very good and frank discussion. We've noticed since then a significant increase in community service orders.

I'd like to give you these figures. In the first nine months of operation there were 1,000 community service orders. I can recall late in December saying that we'd had 1,000 community service orders applied. These are people who would otherwise have gone to jail in most cases, some perhaps not, but in most cases they would otherwise have gone to jail and the judges had seen fit to put forward community service orders. That was until December 1—1,000 community service orders.

I can say at this very moment that we have just under, a fraction under, 1,000 community service orders actually in place today, and considering that some community service orders last maybe just a few weeks or a few months, you would probably have, at the rate we're going now, upwards of 2,000 to 3,000 community service orders a year. We are impressed by the fact that the judges in the last two months have responded magnificently to a request that they consider additional community service orders. It's a new program. A year ago it really wasn't that well known, obviously, so in speaking with the judges we were able to share with them our experiences and how best CSOs worked and how they might make use of their CSO co-ordinators.

In that regard, we placed a number of CSO co-ordinators around the province to work with the courts. That has had a very significant effect. We can now say that we have 1,000 people on CSOs today and our view is that we're going to surpass 2,000 for the entire year, or at least the fiscal year that we're coming into. I suspect we will hit around 2,500 CSOs. We are impressed that the judges are responding, and my suspicion is that that is going to show dramatically on the amount of days stay in the Toronto area.

We don't know precisely why the days stay had increased. We think it may have been somewhat related to more serious crimes being dealt with. It's possible that judges who gave two-month sentences a few years ago were giving three-month sentences in the past year. For some reason they are increasing the length of stay. Of course, that has quite an effect on our budget. We are simply the recipients of whatever the judges may do. If they sentence twice as many people to jail we have to provide space for them, and it's very difficult. It causes very difficult problems at some of the institutions. The Sault is one, and there are other places in the province, such as Barrie jail, that have that type of situation. We have had some very difficult times responding to the number of people coming in.

You made reference to the federal penitentiary at Kingston, the prison for women. You have, of course, gathered in the last few weeks that there is disinterest on the part of some of the people in the prison for women to come to, say, Vanier or some other facility in Ontario. You suggest that I have an obligation to repatriate those people from Kingston. I'm not sure I really can say repatriation is the proper word, because it's from one edge of the province to the other edge of the province. We're not really repatriating them.

I suppose what you're saying is that Ontario has a responsibility to look after all women who may be Ontario women in jail, rather than arbitrarily applying the two-year rule, that those serving less than two years would be in an Ontario institution and those serving more than two years would be in a federal institution. I suppose that then raises the question: Should we be looking after all the men as well?

Mr. Ziembra: No. It's something the former minister (Mr. Drea) promised us.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes. I have to tell you there have been discussions during the year on the question and we are in a position where we have not really had too many advances made to us. We have discussed it with the federal people. I talked to the federal Solicitor General not too long ago, a week or so ago. It was a very casual chat for just a few moments in a courtesy visit I was making. I got the impression he wanted to sit down and spend more time trading turkey on the question. He was very anxious to encourage a move.

Of course, we'll hear more about that in the future, but obviously if we're going to discuss it with the federal government we have to see what they're saying in respect to cost. That's a very healthy cost for us to look after the people from there. There would be about 66 women from the prison for women who would quite possibly come to Ontario. Before that can be done they have to solve the problem with British Columbia and with Quebec, as to what they would do with respect to French-speaking people and what they would do with respect to the western women, where they would go. Those issues probably have to be resolved before we solve our problem with them.

If they do come to Ontario's jurisdiction, we would have to provide a maximum security facility for some of them, and Vanier is not a maximum security facility. We would have to provide different programs, because people who are in jail for seven years or more require a different approach from those who are in jail for maybe 15 months. We have a lot of serious problems and a lot of cash questions to deal with.

Thank you for your comments about the volunteers; we agree with them. They are excellent and make a real contribution. We have rethought the question of section 9 of the act which was passed, and we have indicated that we do not intend to emphasize the question of volunteer control. I made that very clear just a day or two ago to a meeting of our private agencies, including the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry societies.

One last point: You made reference to our estimates of $2.8 million and ask if any of that goes into probation and parole. We have a new budget coming in as of April 1 and we will be attacking those next week, but, in short, let me just say that our community programs have increased by 25 per cent in dollar value from last year's estimates to this year's estimates. I think that probably answers your question quite well. The institutional cost has only increased by three per cent.

Vote 1502 agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NATURAL RESOURCES

On vote 2402, land management program; item 8, conservation authorities:

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, there are two actual projects involved in the conservation authorities item of $4,975,000.

The first item has to do with property acquisition, and it is part of the waterfront plan for 1977-81, phase two, of the Metropolitan Toronto Conservation Authority. In that plan, a total of $11 million in provincial grants towards a total cost of $22 million for property acquisition in phase two, to be expended over a five-year period, was agreed to.

In 1977, $1.4 million of that was flowed. In 1978, with this amount included, there will be a total of $5.6 million. It is anticipated that within the next three years we will again be at approximately the $1.4 million level, to give a total of $11 million.

Specifically, in here there is $4.2 million, which is one half of the total price for the acquisition of the Guild Inn and the 88 acres of land which go with the inn along the Scarborough Bluffs; also included are four residences and an administration and storage building.

The other item is $755,000, which was allocated to the Chesterville dam and reservoir project on the South Nation River and the Chesterville channelization project.

The dam project is expected to be completed and operational in 1979, and the increased costs associated with that component relate to accelerating the contract to have the structure available for the spring of 1980.

Money was applied to the Chesterville channelization project, which is a flood relief channel immediately upstream of the town of Chesterville and which will provide some relief from summer and late spring flooding in the Chesterville area. It is anticipated that the Chesterville channelization project will take approximately three years to complete, and construction funding is currently contemplated for federal and provincial financing.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, further to the conservation vote in the amount of $4,975,000, at this point I am more concerned about the conservation of life.

About an hour ago in the House I asked the minister, "Why in the hell don't you get somebody down to Harrisburg to check out what is going on down there?" He told me, "We have someone down there." Those were his words. I said: "Who are they? Where are they? When did they go?" The minister did not rise to answer my question.

I challenge the minister at this point. I have been talking to Mr. Dennis Dack, the head of public relations for Hydro. He said to me, "We have no one down there."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I say to the member for Grey-Bruce—

Mr. Sargent: With the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, this is a very serious matter.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. We are dealing here with supplementary estimates of the Ministry of Natural Resources. It has nothing to do with energy at all.

If you have risen in your place to speak to these estimates, and not to anything in the energy field, I would ask you to limit your remarks to that.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, it is important. If the minister has misled this House, we should know about it at this point. Give him a chance to defend himself now.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Now is not the time to do that. If you want to ask any questions on natural resources, we would be very pleased to have you continue, but not on the matter of energy.

Mr. Sargent: I appreciate that we are talking about natural resources, Mr. Chairman, but human life is one of the main factors in natural resources. It is all tied in together.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am afraid you can't stretch that over into this vote.

Mr. Sargent: I would challenge the minister to answer my question.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would advise the minister not to answer that question. If there are any questions on natural resources—

Mr. Sargent: It is very important, in view of what is going on in the nuclear field, that we know exactly what Ontario Hydro and this minister are doing about it. If he has misled the House, we should know about it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You will have your opportunity on Monday to question the minister in the matter of energy.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, in the interests of saving time I'd like to say something. As it happens, about half an hour ago, I learned I had misunderstood the information given to me yesterday. I called the Speaker to ask him how I might deal with that. It was suggested it might not be improper to rise when I was dealing with this and indicate that in fact what Hydro had indicated to me was that it was monitoring the situation closely. They did not tell me they had a person there. I misunderstood. In fact, I am told the authorities investigating that situation in the US would not have other observers with them. Hydro, as I say, is monitoring the matter very closely.

Mr. Sargent: They're not there.

Hon. Mr. Auld: There is no one from Hydro on the site in Pennsylvania and I want to apologize for making that mistake. I had intended when we had completed this estimate to make that statement.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister obviously knows a great deal about deer. That was quite an explanation in the House this morning.

The moneys have been spent for the acquisition of land in order to try to complete the waterfront project. It's a good project. It will enhance the beauty of Metropolitan Toronto. I am pleased to see the project going ahead. In Scarborough, we have benefited already from Bluffers Park. The landfill project has provided us with an access to boating facilities and to recreational facilities which we didn't have before, so the project has been of benefit to us.

Similarly, I would take it that the acquisition of the Guild Inn site is of benefit or will be of benefit to residents of Scarborough, particularly those who live in the southerly portion of the borough. It preserves a little spot of history that I think a lot of us in Scarborough would prefer to preserve.

My question to you is: Keeping in mind that these projects are important, or at least projects we would like to see go ahead, why did they take precedence over the preservation of the bluffs? There are a couple of spots in particular where restoration is needed, and where some work has to be done in order to try to preserve the bluffs area. I understand some of that work would likely involve landfill, and of course an expense would be involved. I'd just briefly like to know why that project didn't take priority over the projects you've cited where the money was spent?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, this of course is a separate project, I know the honourable member agrees with me that the conservation authority gets support from ourselves and also from the constituent municipalities and decides its own priorities. However, I have had some concern about the situation to the west of the Bluffers Park restoration project, which has been very successful. I have been in touch with the authority and I am informed they are going ahead this year and have reallocated some of their normal budget funds for work to start on the area to the west where there is quite severe erosion. In fact, the erosion is right up to the south edge of one of the streets, and I've observed it myself.

That is being done, but I just want to reiterate this is separate from the property acquisition project. My recollection is there has been discussion going on with the Guild Inn company for some time. It just happened, I guess, that it came to fruition now rather than next year or two years ago. It is part of that separate project, which is waterfront property acquisition.

Mr. Warner: One final question: When should the acquisition be completed? When will all the lands required—I take it this is only part; it's not the end of it—be acquired?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is a five-year program which is anticipated to finish in 1981.

Mr. Warner: Is there any estimate of how much more money needs to be expended between now and the completion of the project?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In the amount that was allocated over the five-year period, in 1976-77 when this was put together, there would be approximately $4.2 million that we have undertaken to put forward in the next three years.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, the minister has answered all my questions—not quite as vividly as his description of the deer but none the less appreciated.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister briefly for his views on some matters pertaining to conservation authorities which have come to our attention recently and which I believe would have some bearing on the amount to be voted.

The recent floods, and the reaction of the conservation authorities to them, have left a lot of people in doubt as to the efficacy of the flood control and warning system of the Grand River Conservation Authority and, to some extent, of the Thames Valley Conservation Authority. I believe the staff in each case is competent, and I believe the people from the municipalities and those appointed by the government by order in council are competent and certainly committed to the good of the responsibilities normally associated with conservation.

Having said that, however, I would like simply to say that, in the area I represent, confidence in the conservation authority is somewhat reduced and is continuing to be reduced. There were people involved in the community, such as myself, the works manager for the town of Paris, members of the council of the town of Paris and the former mayor, who publicly indicated they felt the warning system was inadequate and that the conservation authority had not taken the responsibilities and initiatives that it might have taken during the unexpected flooding caused by the ice jam.

It came down to this: The people in the town wanted the ice jam dynamited. The chairman and the officials of the conservation authority said: "This is only done for grand-standing or public relations reasons. In fact, it can do no good. Furthermore, it can only be done by the municipality itself." Also—and this was in direct reference to me—the chairman indicated he felt I should know better than to indicate they might dynamite it, since the dynamiting would of course come directly under the Attorney General's (Mr. McMurtry) responsibility. I naturally phoned the Attorney General, and he said he had never heard anything about it. To be fair, the chairman has more or less withdrawn the indication he's sorry I didn't know such an obviously well-known fact, because evidently he is the only person who knew anything about it.

I am not here to have a big fight with Mr. Bauer, who has served extremely well as the government's appointee on the board for many years. But for him and the officials to indicate there is nothing they can do under those circumstances, and whatever dynamite is used is strictly for public relations reasons, seems to me to be irresponsible. I say that deliberately. If it is for grandstanding purposes, then they certainly should not do it anywhere—and they have done it at the mouth of the Grand previously, as well as at the mouth of the Thames even this year.

The idea that it should be done by the municipality is absolutely absurd, because the flooding is usually caused by an ice jam that may very well be and almost always is in a downriver municipality and it backs up. What is Paris going to do about an ice jam that is in Brantford township? I do not even want to talk about it, it is so patently absurd.

The thing that concerns me is that these conservation authorities now are mature. They are old. Many of the people on their boards have been there a good long time; they have gone forward and built very large structures to house their administrative staff. They have spent the money, for example, to put remote-reading water-level gauges in many places in the river system that read back at their headquarters; but really, if there is an emergency they seem to be wound up in red tape or simply have their feet set in the usual inertia situation associated with very comfortable public servants.

It is true that 99.9 per cent of the time they need do nothing except go around and in a very responsible way indicate that the conservation authority is looking after its responsibility; but when the river gets on the rampage, then we expect some of these people, who are adequately paid no doubt, to have a plan and to come down and say: "This is what we are planning to do, people, and we are going to do it. We are going to take the responsibility; and if it needs a helicopter we will get a helicopter"; instead of telling the public works person in Paris that he should contact the police, who might have a helicopter and it won't do any good anyway.

The organization always seems to be looking for reasons why they can't do anything. I am very much concerned, because although the minister has a large number of officials who could probably make the public relations speeches as well as the conservation authorities, his responsibilities lie directly in northern Ontario largely and really the value of the conservation authority is becoming a remote question.

The minister may have even seen that the report of the royal commissioner looking into local government in the Waterloo area recommended the abolition of the conservation authority. I do not join in that recommendation at this time, but I tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is time we had a very careful look at what the conservation authorities are supposed to do. They run great parks; the park at Pinehurst in the Grand River Conservation Authority is one of the finest in Canada. But we have to remember that there is a federal parks board, a provincial parks board, a municipal parks board—and whether we really need them all, I don't know. The park is run by the authority and they do it very well, but they should bring forward other initiatives in the community.

They have taken a very strong role in planning decisions; as a matter of fact every proposal in the flood plain—which is an extremely large area indeed, including almost the whole of the town of Paris, for example—any planning decision has to go to the conservation authority. They have a map and they have very competent people—I know some of them, recent graduates from some planning course in Ontario—who have mapped out where the high water level would be if Hurricane Hazel had dumped on the Grand River and they have drawn the line. Everything in there seems to be under their veto and control.

We can argue that this may or may not be a good thing. Maybe the town of Paris should be moved up into the hills in preparation for the once-in-a-century flood. And maybe that is your policy, as long as there isn't a flood. It is not mine. It really concerns me, because it has dislocated so many of the planning decisions, both with delays and what amounts to veto.

I have written to the chairman and indicated that the impression we have is that he runs a "nay" saying organization; and very properly he wrote back and disagreed—in very moderate tones, as is certainly proper. He even indicated at one time, being critical of the mayor of Paris, that the present mayor of Paris was getting exercised about the former mayor of Paris because he happens to be a candidate for election in the present campaign. It may be that the very fact the chairman is not ever a candidate for election means that his approach to public affairs is so far removed from the reality in the community as to be approaching uselessness.

I am getting concerned about the conservation authorities and I just want to indicate my concern to the minister. We will talk about it again sometime, I think.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I just want to reiterate a little of what was said by the previous speaker, that the conservation authority, with the staff they have and the planning ability they should have, should be doing some monitoring. It seems to me they should be able to tell within a day or two what is going to happen.

I know that in the Lower Thames Valley Conservation Authority area in 1937 they had the worst flood they ever had. We had no conservation authorities and the people lived through it with losses and so forth. But now that we have a conservation authority, the Upper Thames River Conservation Authority, and we have planning, it seems to me that we should be able to monitor the levels all the way up the system and know pretty well what is going to happen, with the studies and with the things that have happened over the past number of years.

It seems to me that the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) would be here today if he knew this was on, because it is very important in Dover township. There was a major catastrophe in that township in the last flood just a few weeks ago. It caused great disruption to that township. We know it is excellent farm land because the dikes pumped it out. That is probably some of the choicest land and the most productive land in Ontario. That disrupted that municipality a great deal and it is going to be a long time getting over it.

It seems to me that conservation authorities should be able to monitor what is going on in the upper levels of the Thames River. They should be able to tell within a few days lower down how long it takes for that water to get down. There should be some warnings and something should be done.

I think this is very serious. It seems to me what the conservation authorities in our own area are mostly doing is buying up land. I don't think they are doing much studying as far as any flood control is concerned. They may have some studies made on it. If they have, they haven't reported them as far as I am concerned. They are mostly interested in buying park land; which is nice to have, but in areas where the possibility of flooding comes once in a while I think they should be looking at that much more seriously.

Hon. Mr. Auld: If that is the last of the comments, I might very briefly say that we have some concern too about communications in these flood emergencies. That is why I established the committee which is presently working in the lower Thames area to look at, among other things, the question of communications and responsibility and how these things are carried out.

I won't attempt to comment on the question of methods because I am not an expert in dealing with ice jams and floods and so on. We have some concern about this and I am expecting that we will learn about some things that happened, and hopefully find ways of improving them. I am tempted to say that the conservation authorities were originally set up specifically to deal with flood problems.

Mr. Gaunt: They have gone far beyond that now.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think as a result of having to acquire flood-plain lands for reservoirs and one thing and another, and then finding they were not necessarily used for that purpose all the time, they have expanded into the recreation field with the approval of the municipalities, which are paying their share obviously. But I think we have to concentrate on the primary objective and the original intent.

That is what we are looking at at the moment; and we will be looking at more, because of the fact that there are not unlimited funds and there is still remedial work to be done. In fact as far as the Grand is concerned, which is not involved in this estimate, but just for the information of the honourable member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), I am told the environmental study on the dam is almost completed and will be completed in a month or so. When that is available there will be the Environmental Hearing Board hearings. Staff of my ministry are meeting with staff of the authority in a preliminary way to look at what may be involved in financing and so on, assuming the project is to go ahead. In fact, they have a meeting next week.

Vote 2402 agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES,
MINISTRY OF HEALTH

On vote 3101, ministry administration and health insurance program; item 11, health insurance.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: A number of unforeseen factors have developed since the ministry's 1978-79 estimates were prepared. Vote 3101, item 11, health insurance, will therefore require $66 million in supplementary funds for the current fiscal year.

During February and March of the 1977-78 fiscal year, there was an unpredictable surge in OHIP claims. The impact of this surge carried over into this fiscal year and, since it occurred subsequent to the preparation of our 1978-79 estimates, the base calculation for the estimate was understated. The OHIP estimate was based on some anticipated service reductions, but after lengthy consultation with the medical profession regarding the impact of these planned reductions on overall patient care, it was deemed inappropriate to proceed with the reductions.

The original estimate provided for a 1.1 per cent increase in the use of medical services. However, the actual increase experienced this fiscal year is in excess of two per cent. There was no provision in the 1978-79 estimates at that time for the January 1979 average fee increase of 6.6 per cent. To improve service to the public, the ministry wishes to reduce the inventory of claims submitted, but not yet processed, to a minimum. The funds requested for the claims inventory reduction represents eight days normal processing volume.

The factors I have outlined will result in actual OHIP expenditures of approximately $1.024 billion, compared to the 1978-79 estimate of $958 million.

Mr. Conway: I want to use this opportunity this morning on the supplementary estimates as presented by the Minister of Health to elicit a few comments from him about this rather topical and timely issue of payment for physicians' services in the government plan.

I was rather interested in the minister's comment that among the reasons for the rather substantial $66 million additional amount was, to use his phrase, "an unpredictable surge in OHIP claims" submitted during the course of the previous year. What certainly strikes me in this instance is that on the one hand some of us are encouraging—and I make no apologies for that—increases on a sectoral basis within the physicians' community. I want to reiterate my concern about the rate at which general practitioners are presently being paid. But as we increase that—and the minister pointed out that some of the $66 million is a result of 6.6 per cent increase in the fee schedule—we seem to be experiencing, on the other hand, a phenomenon of, to use his figures, a rather substantial surge in the rate of utilization. If that is not so, then the minister can take this opportunity to correct me.

Clearly, the present situation within the OHIP program in Ontario is one that is increasingly unsatisfactory to a number of people in this House and outside. I am, for one, deeply concerned about the redress that has been offered most recently by the minister. It is a step clearly in the right direction; I want to make no comment to the contrary in that connection. He has moved, finally, I think in the right direction, to establish a sense of government initiative with respect to a developing deterioration, apparent or otherwise, in the general community.

I look at the minister's statement of yesterday and I see difficulties, administrative and otherwise, that concern me a great deal. I sincerely hope he is able to deal with the medical community, as he indicates he is going to be able to, in developing new mechanisms to control the opted-in opted-out problem that has developed.

In that connection, since we are dealing with that vote in particular, I was most impressed yesterday by the minister's response to what was really an administrative inquiry on my behalf with respect to the burden placed on the system by substantially increased percentages of opted-out physicians. I see the very distinguished general manager of OHIP here and I am sure he will be able to answer some of the points I would like to raise in this connection.

Doctors really opt out at rates of what is now 20 per cent, on average, despite the fact I think the figure used is 17.9. My sources indicate the actual percentage opted out is in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent; roughly 22 to 24 per cent in the specialist category and 13 per cent in the GP category. The minister shakes his head very strongly in the negative, but that information comes to me from informed sources outside the ministry but well within the medical profession, organized medicine in particular, and I presume they would know what they're talking about.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Is the honourable member saying the overall rate is in excess of 20 per cent?

Mr. Conway: I am saying I had informed information presented to me that the actual per cent of opting out is more properly in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent, since the denominators being offered by the minister are apparently not totally accurate ones. If that is incorrect, then the minister can indicate how that figure of 17.9 per cent opted out is being arrived at. Perhaps he might take this opportunity to elucidate for us how he sees what his officials indicate is the relative breakdown between specialists opting out versus general practitioners opting out.

In that connection, it strikes me one of the serious concerns for those of us in the Legislature is that, administratively speaking, with so many more doctors opting out surely the burdens being placed on the OHIP administration are not only increasing in terms of work load but clearly have to be increasing the cost within the system. As you stop dealing with one physician on behalf of all his patients, upon his opting out you start dealing with, in a payment sense, his 800 or 1,500, or however many, patient episodes with which he is being associated with respect to the plan. Obviously, the cost of sending out 800 cheques or 1,500 cheques on a monthly basis has to be greater than it was previously where the doctor was opted in and the payment was being made on a monthly basis.

If, as the minister suggested yesterday, there really has been capacity at OHIP to deal with this and there is no additional burden, I have to wonder just how much unused capacity there is at OHIP, because I would think from what has been made clear to me in recent months there is a substantial increase in the opting out. I was never aware there was a substantial amount of unused capacity in that connection. I was aware as well, from another source, that it costs roughly three or four times as much to process the claim of the patient of an opted-out physician on a per unit basis as it did to process the claim of a physician and a patient who are entirely part of the plan. If that is not the case, I would appreciate being told how it is possible to have no additional burdens on manpower or overall costs in that connection.

I found it interesting yesterday that we finally got a statement from the government, a government which I imagine must have had some very rigorous late-night sessions with organized medicine, on Wednesday in particular, to try to stem the tide. To the minister's credit, he did exact from organized medicine one or two concessions I hadn't heard them publicly admit before. There seems to be, in his statement of March 29, 1979 a concession finally extracted from organized medicine that they will yield their previously sacred right to apply a means test. If that is indeed a concession won, it seems to me it's one that is so obvious that it should not have ever been required, but it's certainly something that should not be let go of.

I do sympathize with the difficulties facing the government in this connection, because the relationship between this government and organized medicine has been a very close and intimate one. I was thinking the other day of how, when the former Premier (Mr. Robarts), the member for London North, retired in 1971 he apparently said in his final press conference that perhaps among his greatest failures as Premier was the way in which he allowed this province to be brought into this medicare system, which was, in his own words, a Machiavellian scheme of the federal Grits and he would have liked to have had it otherwise.

This government's commitment to medicare is, from where I stand, an uncertain one, on the basis of a number of past and present experiences. That it should have taken this minister and this government this long to make a few things clear and to extract a few commitments from organized medicine is, in my view, an indication of that uncertainty. The minister may not share that view entirely, but I want to make that point at this time.

My leader drew attention to this today. Let's not make any mistake about where it is the Ontario Medical Association stands in all of this. Ed Morand, Bill Vail and such luminaries in that association are well known to me.

Mr. Hodgson: That great Liberal Vail.

Mr. Conway: The member for York North proffers some advice about their partisan political connections. He is a far greater seer in that connection than am I.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If I might interrupt the member for Renfrew North for a moment, I understand there was some hope we might complete these estimates today, being the last day of the fiscal year. If that's not so, that's fine, but I wanted to be sure that we allowed equal time to the third party and a little time for the minister's reply.

Mr. Conway: I wasn't aware of that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I just understand that's a hope.

Mr. Conway: Your injunction is well made. I shall restrict my remarks accordingly.

I want to say one or two things about organized medicine with respect to this plan, and I hope the government understands. The OMA, in my view, has never really varied from its early position that it doesn't like medicare, it doesn't want medicare and it is committed to the abolition of medicare in a direct or phased-in mechanism. I have never heard anything to the contrary.

I find it remarkable that, indeed, we have the government saying in this document yesterday that the Ontario Medical Association is going to become the sole negotiating agency—and it's not surprising that it should. But again, as my leader pointed out in this morning's question period, I am totally confused as to how they are going to negotiate for two groups of people, one opted in and one opted out, and how they are going to negotiate with a government that ostensibly maintains its commitment in the long and short term to getting government out of medicare. I see in this scheme all kinds of inherent difficulties.

I hope this minister, who according to recent press accounts has certain unofficial campaigns under way, will undertake in the public interest one official campaign, and he will make it clear to organized medicine on behalf of the people of Ontario that medicare is a fundamental social commitment of this government on behalf of the people who, in my view, share a very strong majority commitment to its being sustained.

If this minister wants to, on behalf of any campaign, enhance his public reputation he would do well, in my view, to make it as clear as it can be made clear to special interests in this sector that government will not retreat from its commitment to medicare, a social value system about which all of us feel very strongly. I hope the minister understands that. I believe yesterday's statement showed some signs of his at last coming round to understanding that. I hope he will go forward and make it clear, in a public way, where he stands on behalf of this Legislature of the people in respect to those special interests which continue to maintain a position of dismantling medicare in Ontario.

Mr. Cassidy: I have to say that I cannot share the optimism of the member for Renfrew North about the agreement, announced yesterday by the minister, concerning his discussions with the Ontario Medical Association.

I do want to make a few comments about the supplementary estimates; about what is happening within medicare; and about the continuing danger that the whole system will be dismantled while the government stands by and tries to reassure the public that nothing is actually happening.

I would point out, with regard to this particular supplementary estimate, Mr. Chairman, that in the current fiscal year with this supplementary estimate the remuneration to doctors will rise by 11.5 per cent overall; a half a per cent up or down—I don't have my calculator with me. In the two years from 1976-77 to 1978-79, the overall increase in remuneration to doctors in this province by the people of Ontario will be of the order of 28 per cent.

I do want to point out, however, that doctors who chose to opt out from last year to this year are, in addition to those big increases which are taking effect under the OHIP plan, taking further very substantial increases. To the point, in fact, where the fees of OMA doctors are, on average, about 42 per cent higher than the fee schedule of the Ontario Medical Association.

For example, the surcharge on a general assessment, under the OMA schedule, is 37 per cent over OHIP. For a colecystectomy it's 39 per cent; for a minor assessment, the surcharge is 49 per cent; and, for a routine consultation, it is 52 per cent.

The following are, on average, 43 per cent higher, Mr. Chairman:

A standard office visit under OHIP $7.70; under the OMA opted-out fee schedule, $3.30 more. A house call under OHIP is $14.65; under the opted-out schedule it is $6.35 more. An appendectomy under OHIP is $132.55; under the OMA schedule, it is $190. For an obstetrician providing services for a pregnancy, the difference is $100—a surcharge of 43 per cent in each of those cases.

The minister keeps on saying, "You're bringing up individual cases." The individuals whose cases we have brought forward cannot comfort themselves with general averages. Because they are finding in their communities that there are no opted-in doctors who are genuinely accessible. Or they are finding, in the case of their particular hospitals, there is no opted-in surgeon accessible. Or they are finding out that in their particular cases their doctors are not prepared to have any mercy at all when it comes to insisting on bills being paid; or about going to collection agencies.

Here is another example, Mr. Chairman. This is the case of a Toronto woman who went to her allergist on referral from the GP and was billed extra. It took about 10 minutes in the doctor's office. The doctor's consultation cost was $73 and allergy tests cost $14.30. The total remuneration from OHIP was $60.80. The surcharge she had to pay was $26.50, or 44 per cent over the OHIP rate. This woman has refused to pay the bill. But, as others in her situation have found, there is a grave risk of harassment from a collection agency and possibly a risk to her credit rating. That's one of the fears people have brought before us.

I want to comment on the answer given about this problem by the minister in his statement yesterday.

First, he said clearly patients should have the option to go to a doctor of choice. That will not be an option, Mr. Chairman, as long as certain doctors a patient might choose levy very substantial surcharges on that patient. There cannot be freedom of choice for the patients if they find that they cannot afford to pay any opted-out rates. Therefore, they can only choose among those doctors who are still opted in; particularly in places like Amherstburg and Tottenham, where no physician is opted in at all. Or, as in the case of the many hospitals at this time, where substantial numbers—or all doctors in particular specialties—have opted out of the plan. The principle of choice is not a reality until every doctor in the province is providing care at the insured rate.

Secondly, the minister indicated to the press two days ago that all doctors would be providing services in hospitals at the insured rate. It's clear that the wording of the statement—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, with all due respect, I think I was very clear on the point that the services would be available on an opted-in basis. If I inadvertently said that I certainly apologize, but I think I've been very clear every time I've commented on that matter that services would be available. I did not say or even mean to imply that all doctors would be opted in.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister has been clear within the House, and certainly in re-examining his statement I found it said what I thought it said. However, the impression that was left with the press was clearly different.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You've been a reporter.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister will say that was, in fact, not correctly reported. I've had that happen to me as well. Therefore, I'd like to talk about what the minister has had to say in the House.

It's clear then, from the statement and from his confirmation now, that only some services in hospitals, which are publicly funded, will be provided at the insured rate, not all services; only some patients will be assured of that service—that is, those patients who insist—and only some doctors are guaranteeing that they will be providing services at the insured rate, because the minister once again has indicated that he is not about to insist that every doctor practising within a hospital has to provide services at the insured rates.

That, it seems to me, is a long way away from the guarantee of universally accessible service at the insured rate, which we thought we had for the past 10 years under medicare.

The minister said in the House on Tuesday that it was illegal to publish a list of opted-out and opted-in doctors, and he has maintained that position. He has not yet explained how it is then legal for the Ontario Medical Association to publish the names of certain physicians who are opted in or opted out. I have checked with my colleague from Riverdale, an eminent lawyer, who assures me that if an OMA hotline gives the name of an opted-in or opted-out doctor that is every bit as much publication as if the minister were to publish the lists. It's certainly clear to us that section 44 of the Health Disciplines Act is there to protect the confidentiality of information about patients, and not to prohibit this kind of valuable information for consumers.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If I may help the member, it's the Health Insurance Act.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm sorry, with the time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to finish what I have to say.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The minister will have an opportunity to reply.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I was just trying to help him. He has the wrong act.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg your pardon, the Health Insurance Act is the act the minister referred to. It's section 44 of the Health Insurance Act. Thank you.

I had the chance of checking informally with people from the OMA yesterday, senior people, and it is clear that this is not a brand new service which is suddenly going to be accessible to everybody in the province. They said, "Look, if somebody calls up asking for the name of a physician who is opted-in we'll give him the name of one or two, and if he calls back we'll give him the names of a couple more." I was not able to find out what would happen in those communities where no doctor is, in fact, opted in.

Third, my friend from Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) will tell the House that when a trade union bargains and is the sole negotiating agency for its workers, it makes a commitment that all of the workers whom it represents will, in fact, honour that agreement. That's what collective bargaining is all about. If you want to apply this to a profession, people in the teachers' federations are very familiar with that because when they bargain for their members everybody abides by that agreement.

If the minister had told us that since the OMA was becoming the sole negotiating agency it had also made a commitment that every doctor in the province would respect and abide by the fee schedule resulting from the bargaining, then that would have been very welcome. We think no doctor in the province should charge more than the agreed-upon rate. The minister himself has said that the remuneration will be accepted as fair by both the people of Ontario and the medical profession. There is no cause then to have anybody in the province charged an unfair rate by a doctor who decides to charge more than the agreed-upon rate.

However, it is a factor that there are doctors who are not even members of the OMA at this point. It seems to me it would be very difficult to bind those doctors.

I want to conclude. We are going to ask that this debate be continued early next week, perhaps only for a short time. It does make it difficult if a minister has not had a chance to reply.

[1:00]

Mr. Nixon: If you conclude, he could make a statement.

Mr. Cassidy: There is a suggestion I might conclude in a minute and then have the minister make a statement.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Being five minutes to one, if you will complete your statement in a minute, that will allow the minister four minutes to reply.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Perhaps you can help me. I think the honourable member is suggesting that somehow we can extend the fiscal year.

Mr. Conway: Not even you can do that, Dennis.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think we are wasting valuable time.

Mr. Cassidy: I understand your vision is a bit blurred as far as the clock is concerned.

Mr. Nixon: I am sorry about this, but mine isn't blurred as far as the clock is concerned. There is plenty of opportunity to debate this. I don't know if you want to go over, we just don't do that. You are the people who don't do that.

Mr. Cassidy: With great respect, if the House leader of the Liberal Party doesn't wish to even give the Minister of Health an opportunity to comment on a $66 million budget—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, who made the ruling that this had to pass before the end of the fiscal year? It doesn't make sense to me. We passed a resolution last night empowering the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) to pay all the bills. We can pass this supplementary estimate a year from now if we want to. What is the rush, other than to get it over?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: There was just a hope that it might be cleared up.

Mr. Nixon: I hope too.

Mr. Cassidy: It might be proper, then, if I adjourn the debate. I am sure the House leaders can agree on a definite period of time to continue this debate sometime during the course of business, either next week or perhaps after the throne debate is concluded. I would so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nixon: Why don't we just carry the vote?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am looking for some advice. My understanding is that can't be done. The agreement among the House leaders was that we would conclude—

Mr. Nixon: There was no agreement.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —by one o'clock and carry all the estimates.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The time for adjournment has come and since there is no agreement, I would ask the minister to move the committee rise and report.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have been passed a note and I am looking for some advice. We cannot issue cheques without funds and we cannot do that without approval.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell moved that the House extend its hours of sitting this afternoon to conclude the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Would the member for Ottawa Centre try to keep his remarks brief?

Mr. Cassidy: I would have liked more time. However, I was commenting on the real concerns we have that so far we have only begun to find solutions. I would say the full question of medicare remains in grave jeopardy, despite what the minister had to announce in the Legislature two days ago.

Just under a year ago, it was professional misconduct for a doctor in the province to charge a patient more than about 11 per cent above the OMA rate, the OHIP rate, unless he informed the patient in advance. It is now permissible for a doctor to charge up to about 42 per cent more without incurring the risk of professional misconduct.

We have suggested, and I suggest again to the minister, the regulations to the Health Disciplines Act should be amended because the OMA already says in principle that physicians should inform the patient if they are opting out of OHIP.

That adherence in principle is not proving effective in practice. Since the OMA is opposed to those kinds of regulations anyway, even if a doctor is charging more than the OMA rate, it seems to me this is a case where it is up to the minister and the province to protect the health of consumers of Ontario and ensure they get a fair deal and ensure not just that they have access to medicare at insured rates if they insist, but that in fact they are provided medical care at insured rates without having to go through enormous tortuous difficulties in order to get it.

I would remind the House that under the premium assistance plan of the government which exists right now, under which premium assistance is available not as a privilege but as a right, there are approximately 330,000 people who do not exercise that right—who do not even insist, in other words, that they get the premium remission—despite being of very modest means.

The other day, when I was in Peterborough where close to 70 per cent of the doctors in the city are opted out, an old fellow came up to me and said, "Old people have their pride, and they don't like to ask for favours." Some people on small incomes are literally afraid to ask, or they may not know that they can challenge a doctor's bill or that they can insist in advance that they get the services at the Ontario Health Insurance Plan rate.

In our opinion, the idea that a patient has to insist and lay it on the line, risking not being able to see that doctor because the doctor refuses to see that patient, is not good enough. Surely under an insured medical scheme in Ontario, every patient in the province should have access to medical care and should be able to choose from all the doctors who are available and know that he can get the care at insured rates.

Our principle should be, therefore, that no medical service should be provided while requiring a patient to pay a surcharge in Ontario. That is a principle which the Minister of Health and the government of Ontario should have been defending. We have seen them try to pass the responsibility on to the Ontario Medical Association, on to consumers and on to people who might get health clinics started in various communities.

It is about time that the Minister of Health and this government stood up to defend medicare. We fought for it for many years; it has done an enormous service for all our citizens for many years. For God's sake, let's keep it intact in Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order: I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the procedure to go past the normal point of adjournment is going to lead to nothing but difficulty in the future. Since you have indicated the clock is five minutes fast, I would suggest that we could very well carry this. Now that the leader of the third party has heard with about five people sitting—

Mr. Cassidy: You want to muzzle the minister after agreeing to the minister's motion.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, I want to muzzle you; you give me a pain in the neck.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's not covered by OHIP.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, he can make a statement any time. We have just been rehashing the old baloney that we have heard three or four times.

Mr. Cassidy: Boy, are you ever sensitive. If your party were committed to medicare, you wouldn't—

Mr. Nixon: The money has already been spent. In spite of the fact that the government House leader's third assistant sent in a note saying "We cannot pay anybody," the money has already been paid. We have every authority to pass a resolution later in the week. There was no agreement to carry the thing. It is a supplementary estimate anyway. Let's hear from the minister during statements on Monday or some time.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, if we carry on here—we do not even have a quorum; there are three or four interested taxpayers and somebody from the press gallery, so this may be headline news somewhere—if you call this democracy, I call it a ridiculous charade.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right, Mr. Minister, having noted what the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has said, you would have opportunities to make statements.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would be very brief and simply say that there are a number of points which I can respond to in estimates—

Mr. Nixon: Heaven help either of you. If you don't want this session to continue—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can do estimates later this spring or whatever.

Mr. Nixon: You have objected to it every time, you and your House leader.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There is just one statement that the member for Ottawa Centre made. He said it was his understanding about what medicare was supposed to be all about—I'm quoting him; we can check the Hansard report—that it was universally accessible service at the OHIP rates in hospitals. That is exactly the principle we have been operating under and exactly the principle we reaffirmed yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: A stereotyped response to a stereotyped attack.

Mr. Cassidy: You're really hurting, aren't you, Bob?

Mr. Nixon: Hurting? It's boring; it's not hurting. You're a bore.

Vote 3101 agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Timbrell, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

Clerk of the House: In the absence of Mr. Edighoffer, Mr. MacBeth from the committee of supply reports the following resolution:

That supply in the following supplementary amounts and to defray the expenses of the government ministries named be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Dispense?

Reading dispensed with. (See appendix A.)

Resolution concurred in.

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

The committee met at 11:25 a.m.

ANNUAL REPORT, 1977,
(concluded)

Mr. Acting Chairman: Members of the committee we now have a quorum. I just don't recall who our last speaker was. Is it Mr. McClellan? Would you like to start this morning, sir?

Mr. McClellan: Some of my questions, I guess, would be handled by Dr. McCracken; he may want to come up.

I have read with interest a list of research projects that was provided to the committee. Some of them are completed and some of them are continuing. What is the status of the four reports—26, 27, 28 and 29 on the sheet you handed to the committee—that all deal with the effect of asbestos exposure? Are any of those completed?

Dr. McCracken: Pardon me, which numbers did you have particular interest in?

Mr. McClellan: It was 26, 27, 28 and 29—the four studies dealing with aspects of asbestos exposure.

Dr. McCracken: Number 26 was a study commissioned back in 1974 and it went into 1975 and early 1976. It was carried out by Professor Ritchie, a pathologist at the University of Toronto, who is the consultant in asbestosis and asbestos-related diseases. That study is completed now.

Number 27 was part of the initial study Professor Ritchie carried out. It was a study where we made the determination that it was not necessary for the worker to have X-ray evidence of asbestosis before a lung cancer he might have developed would be considered as an allowable claim for an occupational disease. This study is now completed and we have the guidelines for mesothelioma which we've had in place now for more than two years.

Number 28 was the study commissioned to Dr. Miller, the director of the epidemiological unit of the National Cancer Institute. Flowing from that we were able to establish the guidelines for certain gastro-intestinal cancers as they related to asbestos fibre dust. We have those guidelines in place and that is now completed.

I say completed, but with all these studies we maintain a watch on any new studies that are published. We periodically will conduct a search several times a year—for instance on the computer med-line and tox-line and chem-line, as well as the journals we get, to see if anything new is occurring. If there is we will then take that into consideration as it relates to the guidelines that we now have. So while they're completed they continue to be ongoing in that we're monitoring what's going on.

Number 29 is a study we commissioned to Dr. Miller, once again. We requested that he carry out an epidemiological study in the form of case control study in a person's developing cancer of the voice box, the larynx. This study is still ongoing. We got the initial result at the end of the first year of the study, and on the basis of that information we were able to develop the guidelines for laryngeal carcinomas as they relate to asbestos dust and nickel aerosols, but that study is still ongoing. Dr. Miller several weeks ago told me he hoped he would have it completed some time in the third, possibly the fourth, quarter of 1979, when he will have his full number of cases that he wants to get into the study. It will be the largest study that has ever been done in his field—over 200 cases.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you. I would like to ask if you could make available the three studies that are completed and the fourth, number 29, when it is completed. Is there any particular problem with this?

Dr. McCracken: No, as a matter of fact the study in 26 and the study in 27 are already public documents and they were released several years ago.

Mr. McClellan: It would be helpful if you could make at least one copy available to our caucus; and I would guess that the Liberal Party would appreciate a copy of the completed studies, as well and of number 29 when it's available. Thank you.

We have the list of the studies and we know what the board's history of action and inaction has been with respect to asbestos and asbestosis. May I ask you, Dr. McCracken, whether any claims have been submitted to the board for compensation for industrial disease as a result of exposure to fibreglass dust?

Dr. McCracken: No, to my knowledge we have not had any claims submitted.

Mr. McClellan: Are you familiar with the study that was reported at the national cancer institute by Dr. Tatsuo Sono of—I'm sorry I don't know what institute he is with in Japan. It was a study of the effects of exposure to fibreglass dust in a fibreglass panel construction plant in Japan that showed evidence of pneumoconiosis after a relatively short period of time, as short a period of time as two or three years I believe. Are you familiar with the study first of all?

Dr. McCracken: I'm not personally familiar with it, but I'm almost certain that that's one of the documents the chest disease consultant has already read on the fibreglass matter. There have been recent documents that he has received from the United States where they apparently have had no findings as they relate to the development of pneumoconiosis from fibreglass, so that there are, at the present time, conflicting reports as you can appreciate.

Mr. McClellan: I gather as far as the board is concerned fibreglass is classified as an inert dust, that it is relatively harmless, that's the status; am I wrong?

Dr. McCracken: No. I don't think that is the board's stance at all. Our stand is that we're monitoring the research into fibreglass and we haven't made any decision one way or the other, because there is not enough evidence to make such a decision. So that we're not prepared to say it's inert, at the present time, any more than we're prepared to say it gives rise to lung disease; we just don't know.

Mr. McClellan: Again, in the absence of the minister it is difficult to discuss the full picture, but you would probably know: I gather there are no dust exposure limits to fibreglass dust in effect in Ontario work places; is that correct?

Dr. McCracken: The source that you would have to go to, of course, would be the occupational health and safety division, Ministry of Labour, but I haven't seen any figures indicating that TLV's have been established for fibreglass.

Mr. McClellan: That's my understanding too. My understanding is that there are no threshold limit values for fibreglass dust at all. Has the board been in contact with Dr. Irving Selikoff with respect to the study he is doing of the effects of fibreglass inhalation on workers' health?

Dr. McCracken: We had contact with Dr. Selikoff, I believe it was about a year or better ago, when we asked him to give us an up-date on his studies of his cohort group he is following along in the Insulation Workers' Union. That would include the fibreglass too, of course, and we didn't get anything back from him about fibreglass.

Mr. McClellan: He is currently engaged in a study. I don't believe the study has been completed, but I would like an assurance from the board that it is in touch with Dr. Selikoff and will receive the reports of that study as soon as it is completed. Is that a function of the board or of the occupational—

Dr. McCracken: It would be my opinion that, primarily, it is the responsibility of the occupational health and safety division. But having said that, we certainly intend to pick up any and all documents, as I have indicated. I can't give you any guarantee we will be able to obtain that report until such time as Dr. Selikoff has published it. As you may be aware, in the past and currently he has been working on a number of studies for quite some time. For his own reasons he has elected not to publish them. Therefore, we are not privy to that information and we have found it extremely difficult to get information from Dr. Selikoff.

Mr. McClellan: The findings of the study by Dr. Sono—I am not able to assess the adequacy of the study, but the findings were, to me, of enormous concern because they showed the onset of pneumoconiosis which can lead to mesothelioma.

Dr. McCracken: I am afraid I must disagree with that, because it has never been proven that a pneumoconiosis will lead to a malignancy.

Mr. McClellan: I am concerned that Dr. Sono's study indicated the onset of serious lung disease in an enormously short period of time. Symptoms showed up two to three years after the initial exposure in the plant, as opposed to the situation with respect to asbestos exposure where the symptoms show up 15 to 20 years after exposure.

I wonder why the board wouldn't undertake to follow up Dr. Sono's study with studies of its own, or take a more systematic look at the potential danger of exposure to fibreglass dust?

I hope we don't have to go through what we went through with asbestos. That is the point I am trying to make. I hope we don't have to do a body count in order to come to an understanding that exposure to fibreglass dust is disastrous for workers' health. It seems to me that as soon as we have any kind of scientific study indicating a relation between serious lung disease and exposure to a particular dust, in this case fibreglass dust, then we should begin to pursue that with enormous urgency. Maybe I will turn the question over to the minister; that is whether or not studies are taking place in the occupational health division with respect to the effects of exposure to fibreglass dust, which as we have been discussing is currently unregulated in terms of threshold limit values in Ontario work places.

I was calling attention to a study done by Dr. Tatsuo Sono of the National Cancer Institute—a completed report—and an ongoing study being done by Dr. Selikoff. What work is being done in the division—to make the point, finally—so that we don't have to have a body count before we impose threshold limit values?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think there is no doubt you have hit on an important problem. I met with the staff about this two or three months ago when the issue first came up in the news article and was assured by them that to date there was no valid report relating to it. A lot depends on the size of the fibres, as I am sure you know.

Recently, when I was in Sarnia, I met with the oil, chemical and atomic workers about this very same issue and asked if they had any concerns. Mr. Sullivan, who is the head down there, indicated that to date they were satisfied it wasn't a problem in the fibreglass industry in Sarnia; but that shouldn't stop us from continuing to monitor what is going on.

As to whether or not we have any specific research projects going on, I can't answer that at the moment but I would be glad to look into it.

Mr. Acting Chairman: All through, Mr. McClellan?

Mr. McClellan: Yes, thank you.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Mrs. Campbell.

Mrs. Campbell: My question is more general; and I guess it is, first at least, to the minister. According to my information you really don't have the capabilities in your ministry to monitor new materials generally. Is that a fact? Are you doing anything to improve that situation; and how does that relate to the Workmen's Compensation Board so that they are not left in a vacuum, as they were on the asbestos issue because of the lack of proper research taken quickly?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Well Mrs. Campbell, as you know we now have, or will have when the act is proclaimed, the legislative authority to require certain information about new material.

Mrs. Campbell: Well I know that, but what do you do with it?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Did you have something to add? I am also hopeful that in a reasonably short period of time, new facilities and large facilities will allow us to do some testing ourselves if we are not satisfied. As you know, the act allows us to have companies provide the information about material. If we are not satisfied I hope that in the not too distant future new facilities will allow us to do some of our own testing.

So I want you to know that we are on the same wavelength. I am not sure that I can answer you exactly at the moment but that is the general philosophy, and your question related to the general approach.

Mrs. Campbell: What disturbs me is that I understand where they do somewhat extensive testing, in the United States, by the time they have monitored some of the older materials they really don't have the opportunity to test more than a very limited number of new materials coming into the work place. If we don't even have that at this moment how are we going to keep pace, for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Board, with new materials which are coming onto the market, as I understand it an increasingly accelerated rate?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The very definition of "new" is a problem, too, as you know. It is one we have met about. I hope you will agree that the new legislation does give us the authority to make certain demands with regard to new material; and I hope, also, you will agree as the months go by that we are endeavouring to deal with new materials as they enter upon the work place.

Mrs. Campbell: For instance, when you seek information on new materials, from the manufacturer or whoever, what do you require of them; are they required to file reports they have initiated on the effect of these materials, or do you simply know what the materials are?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Well Mrs. Campbell, if you would like me to bring some of the staff up to answer the mechanics of it, I would be glad to. That really wasn't an issue we felt would be coming up in WCB matters.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, I know, but it flows from this. May I ask Dr. McCracken what is his position with reference to these new materials? You rely, I take it, on the ministry, although not entirely, but would you initiate any sort of evaluation yourself if you get reports from the United States or elsewhere on new material, or would you be relying on the ministry to do the testing or to prepare the necessary reports on the effects of such new materials?

Dr. McCracken: When data is brought to our attention, namely running checks on the computer storage of new research that has been published in the various occupational health journals we receive and which the consultants examine each time as they come out, or if our contacts with people in the research community bring something to our attention, then we share that information with the people in the occupational health and safety division and vice versa. If it is something which does require action and if it appears it will have a primary impact on compensation claims, then we are quite prepared to step in and take whatever action is necessary to follow through on the studies.

On the other hand, if it is not all that clear but there does appear to be some hazard from a toxic substance, that would tend to fall into the area of the occupational health and safety division. I think that is the best way to answer it for you.

Mrs. Campbell: Then I take it you are really developing a new type of procedure? In the asbestos case it was a matter of years of criticism and concern before anything was really done about it. Are we going to face that with new materials in the future, from your point of view?

Dr. McCracken: From my point of view, I would say we will not; and I will be quite upset if this does happen.

As you can appreciate, under the act the Workmen's Compensation Board is not considered to be a research organization. But having said that, I made the decision in 1975 that we had to identify where vacuums existed in research where no outside researchers had interested themselves in a certain problem. Since they weren't I felt we had a responsibility, and this is what I have been attempting to do ever since.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Thank you, Mrs. Campbell. Are there any further questions of the workmen's compensation staff by members of the committee?

Mr. M. Davidson: Not on rehab, but can we move on to the next one?

Mr. Acting Chairman: We are up to vocational are we not, according to the list?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: We just completed that.

Mr. Bounsall: We are just going to hit benefits.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Very well; Mr. di Santo.

Mr. di Santo: I don't know if this question has been asked in the last three days, I wasn't able to participate in that period. Is the minister considering review of the schedule of benefits this year to introduce possible changes as a result of the cost of living increase?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Your colleague—and I hate to say it this way—to the right of you, far to the right—

Mrs. Campbell: He doesn't have one on the left.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I don't know; sometimes many of us feel pretty close to where he is.

Mr. Bounsall: That's quite true in every respect.

Mr. McClellan: You just made his whole day.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: We spoke about this earlier. There is an internal committee reviewing the Wyatt report, which as you know dealt with the matter of benefits. In addition I have asked the joint consultative committee of the Workmen's Compensation Board to review the Wyatt report. When I have all those recommendations they will be taken into consideration and something will be prepared for cabinet. That is all I can tell you at this time.

Mr. di Santo: Do you have any idea how long it will take to have the recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Do you want timing on it?

Mr. di Santo: No, but did you set a deadline?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: No, but I expect the first preliminary report—we tried to prioritize items; I can't remember the exact priority list, but I have been expecting them to meet with me about the first order of priority within the very near future.

Mr. di Santo: Thank you. I would like to make some comments on a statement made by the chairman of Workmen's Compensation Board, on February 7, 1979, to the Star, and by the newly appointed ethnic co-ordinator, Rocco Lofranco.

A group called APIO, which operates in the east end and which the minister knows very well—it is a very peaceful group of pensioners and disabled people which operates from a small office in the Danforth area—expressed anger at the level of pensions and because of all the problems it is having in dealing with the Workmen's Compensation Board, which problems are real and, of course, are not reflected in the statement made by the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board at the beginning of these hearings.

Mr. Starr says that last year, when these people said they were forced to demonstrate and dared to switch from the Workmen's Compensation Board to Queen's Park, it was because the political decision was made here in Queen's Park. The demonstration, as all of us know, was pretty bitter, because for three years the injured workers had received no increase whatsoever.

We now know that the minister at that time had been telling us she didn't know how much money was needed, or what the situation was with the Workmen's Compensation Board, and she ordered an expensive study. In the end, we knew that not only was there money, but also there was no need for further assessment of the employers to secure it.

Finally, after a very long time, three years, and the tension resulting from that delay, the workers demonstrated peacefully in front of the Legislature. Finally last June, on the last day the Legislature was in session, we passed amendments which we didn't think were totally satisfactory but in a way were a remedy to the inaction of the government for the past three years.

Mr. Starr said, and I quote: "The increases were going to be announced by the minister, but they went ahead with the protest for political reasons. I have said that before and I say that again." Unfortunately, Mr. Starr made the same statement before the last provincial election, in an attempt to campaign for the Conservative Party, I suppose.

The newly appointed ethnic co-ordinator, Rocco Lofranco, says that agitators have links with leftist organizations in Italy and they are trying to do the same things they did in Italy in the 1950s. This is a quote: "They are telling immigrants the compensation board won't give them a penny more without a fight. They want to stir up unrest. That is how they work."

I would like to ask the minister, because he is politically responsible to this Legislature, is there any evidence that this group, APIO, which you know very well, has any connection with leftist organizations in Italy? If there is any evidence, would it be possible for you to table it in the Legislature? If there is not any such connection—as I know—then would the minister tell us if the statement made by the ethnic co-ordinator reflects the policy of the government of the province; and if not, how is it that the ethnic co-ordinator can make such statements?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, if you wouldn't mind me suggesting this, I think you're asking what basis the board had for allowing the communications division to publish that material, and I think the people to ask that of are the people who are here. We have Mr. Weaver, the director of communications, and the chairman of the board. So if you wouldn't mind putting those questions to him, and then if you have some follow-up, following the report from the board, I'd be pleased to respond.

Mr. Weaver: Mr. Chairman, I think the comments made by Mr. Lofranco were comments to Mr. Serge, the reporter at the Star, and whether or not they were in context or out of context or accurate I really don't know. I do know that they are Mr. Lofranco's personal opinion as executive director of communications. I don't know the situation that is written about here. It was an interview done with Mr. Lofranco, and with the chairman of the board, and whether it's not accurately quoted I really don't know.

Mr. McClellan: Maybe Mr. Starr can confirm the evidence behind those allegations.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Lofranco did not confer to me when he made the statements to the writer of the article, who has been identified by Mr. Weaver as Mr. Joe Serge of the Toronto Star. I only saw the words of Mr. Lofranco when I read the article that was published.

Mrs. Campbell: Did you make any investigation of this?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Of this organization?

Mrs. Campbell: No, of Mr. Lofranco's statements? As chief administrator of the Workmen's Compensation Board, since your name was so conspicuous in this interview, didn't you feel that you should make some investigation, since the allegations are so serious; and did you, in fact, ask Mr. Lofranco to substantiate his accusations?

Hon. Mr. Starr: This actually had nothing to do with the function of the Workmen's Compensation Board whatsoever. Mr. Lofranco made his own comments, based, I presume, on his experience with these groups in the past.

Mr. McClellan: It has a lot to do with Mr. Lofranco's job and his role within the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Not at all.

Mr. di Santo: Oh come now.

Hon. Mr. Starr: He is performing his role very well; to our satisfaction, as a matter of fact.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Chairman, if I can revert to the minister because he is politically responsible to the Legislature, I'd like to ask the minister whether he doesn't think that this is a very serious allegation, because at this very moment the Minister of Labour of the province of Ontario is undertaking a series of discussions with the Italian authorities in order to settle the problem of the Italian-Canadian injured workers.

Doesn't he think that if there are such links which are prejudicial to the normal operations of any agreement that you will make and that they will stir up unrest, that's a very serious allegation that should be investigated, despite the fact that the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board has the gall to claim that the ethnic co-ordinator is doing a great job?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: You know the sort of things that are going on at the present time within my ministry. We have set up an Italian advisory council, which consists of the majority of the groups within the Italian community; and as you very kindly commented, we've initiated negotiations now for reciprocity with regard to permanent pensioners who wish to return to Italy. So naturally, any statements like those, certainly if they are inaccurate, concern me greatly and I will ask the board to report to me about it. Thank you for bringing it to my attention. [12:00]

Mr. di Santo: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I think that's satisfactory, because all of us here, regardless of which political party we belong to, are interested in solving the very serious problems of the workers. I can assure not only the minister but the chairman of the board that we have such an enormous amount of work in going there every day that we would rather see the problems solved without complications. There is no one who makes political gains out of injured workers.

I want to go back to the benefits now. In my experience, I have noticed that in setting the benefits in the administration of the act there is a restrictive tendency on the part of the board in interpreting section 42(5) of the act which grants supplements to injured workers once they are assessed for permanent disability.

Last year there was an internal memo in the Workmen's Compensation Board stating—and this continued a disgraceful practice that had been going on for a long time—the requirement that workers go out and get a certain amount of signatures every day. Despite that fact, the problem has not been solved because of the way the board interprets this. What the act calls co-operation on the part of the worker is interpreted in a very restrictive way.

My experience suggests that we have a very high number of workers even today who are denied the supplement, supposedly because they are not co-operating with the board. Many times that depends on the fact that they are unable to prove that they are looking for a job. Also, as you know, it's extremely difficult for an injured worker to get a job at this time of high unemployment. Any employer has a very large choice of workers who are healthier or younger and who are not a risk for the company.

I have noticed that the communication isn't very good. In fact there isn't a sufficient number of rehabilitation officers who speak the languages of the injured workers. There are misunderstandings that sometimes are really ludicrous but which every time have a negative impact on the workers.

Just this morning, I had an injured worker who went to the board. He is a tile setter who speaks Italian and speaks almost no English whatsoever. He was asked to go to Manpower where all at once they classified him as a clerk. It seems facetious, but for this poor guy—and I can submit a script—it's a real tragedy because he has been denied the supplement by the Workmen's Compensation Board on the basis that he cannot work. He has a knee injury which prevents him from working. On the other hand, he is willing to work. The board said that he had to do a modified job. Manpower then suggested that perhaps he could work as a clerk. We have a very high number of cases of injured workers who are denied supplement on this basis.

I know that you have previously discussed the medical assessment. Most of the time there is a sharp contrast between the opinion of the family doctor and that of the specialist or the consultants of the Workmen's Compensation Board. That brings up a most serious problem that all of us who deal with the board find every day, and that is that the opinion of the family physician is not taken into any account whatsoever by the board.

Obviously, I think there is also a question that should be asked, which is why the board keeps paying fees to physicians when the board disregards their opinion? I think there should be a ruling on the part of the board saying that injured workers cannot go to their family doctors if the board doesn't accept their opinion. Of course that reflects also on the level of the pensions, because we know that in many instances we have injuries which also have psychological complications. I had an appeal yesterday where an injured worker probably had complications as a result of the accident, but she was examined by psychiatrists and psychologists and she has been denied benefits because she was found to have a handicapped daughter and perhaps that had created psychological problems with her; this despite the fact that the family doctor, who has been seeing her for the last 19 years, said that this woman has always functioned perfectly, as a mother and as a worker, and never lost a day before the accident.

I think that section 42(5) should be changed. The onus should be shifted from the worker to the board. I think the board should provide the worker with: One, rehabilitation, both medical and vocational; and two, possible ways of getting back to the labour market. If the worker refuses to go back to the labour market, then he should be denied benefits; not as it is now, that they ask the worker to prove he is willing to co-operate and he is actively seeking a job.

In this case I think that we have to realize that this is not only a technical problem, it is a moral problem. We have an injured worker whose injury has been ascertained. We recognize that he had an accident, yet we put on him a further burden, asking him to prove that he is looking for a job when we know that in many instances a job is not available. I think when we are in this situation the board should also consider a further element, that has been raised many times in this committee; ever since I have been elected, every year we repeat the same litany.

There is a very high number of workers in this province who cannot perform certain jobs because of their skill, or because of the language barrier. Now for these workers, I think the board should have special consideration, because if we think that the spirit of the act is to give a supplement to workers who have an injury until the time they can get back to any kind of occupation, we should certainly consider that language is a major factor in many instances, and skill is a major factor in many instances. If you have a bricklayer or a carpenter from Italy or from Portugal and they do not speak English, it is much more difficult for them to find a different kind of job because the labour market has no jobs for them, period.

The moral problem is, if these workers are in a situation that prevents them from getting a job, why should they be penalized? As I have said before, we have been repeating the same things year after year; I think it is time that the government changed its approach in this particular instance; I think an amendment to the act is needed.

I would like to have an answer from the minister, and I will see if I have anything else to ask.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Just to get the relationship straight here; I like to think my role here is to respond to the board's response, Odoardo. If that is not correct I would be glad to have your views on it, since this is really the board answering these questions.

Mr. di Santo: What I really want to know is whether you think it is proper to have an amendment to the act.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: On 42(5), we had an interesting discussion about it the other day. I am sorry I wasn't able to stay for all of it, Ross, but I did speak to my deputy about your comments. I was interested, during the discussion, to hear that there has been some broadening of the application of 42(5) in recent time. Mr. Kerr I believe it was, went into great detail about the criteria for the application of 42(5). I think it would be appropriate for you to review that again for Mr. di Santo and then we can go on from that point. I thought it was a pretty broad application, including employability, that you were putting on in your policy.

Could you cover the general question of what the board means now when it requires co-operating for work, and in the application of 42(5) in general?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think there are two aspects to this, Mr. di Santo, and I would like to deal from a claims point of view.

We have, in recent years, broadened this considerably in that we take the whole person concept approach in determining whether or not the individual is entitled to a supplement. I will just review, as the minister has requested, a couple of the points we discussed yesterday.

One is that we take into consideration the points that you mentioned, such as inability to communicate in English, lack of skills and lack of employment of that nature. We apply this in trying to determine the application of the supplement to his pension.

Last year, of all the pensions that were awarded, not all of the permanent disability awards because some of them were lump sums, but the pensions that were awarded for life, 51 per cent of those pensioners received a supplement on the basis we have been discussing.

When it comes to co-operating with rehabilitation, Mr. Wisocky is in that area, and his rehabilitation counsellors, of course, are responsible to work with the man to try and develop a back-to-work type of program. These supplements are reviewed every six months and considered for renewal. So we do have a number of supplements that are being paid to injured people who have difficulty in communicating and have difficulty in developing skills.

Mr. M. Davidson: The 51 per cent that you mentioned, is that a higher number or a lower number of supplements granted comparable to other years, say for the past five years?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Let's see. I have 1978 here. Life pensions granted 5,544; temporary supplements awarded 2,836; which is a percentage of 51.2 per cent for 1978. In 1977, life pensions awarded 6,414; number of temporary supplements awarded 3,028; the percentage was 47.2 per cent. There were fewer supplements awarded in 1978, but there are also considerably less life pensions awarded. Life pensions went down 13 per cent in 1978 compared with 1977, and the number of temporary supplements went down by six per cent; but the percentage of supplements to life pensions was 51.2 per cent for 1978 and 47.2 per cent for 1977. I don't have figures for previous years but I can tell you they were much lower in previous years.

Mr. McClellan: That accounts for the increase percentage in recent years, because there is not a correlation in any given year between the life pensions and the supplement. You will be giving supplements to people who had been awarded life pensions in previous years. There is not an automatic correlation; when you say 51 per cent of the awards were supplement, you are not relating that to people who had received life pensions in that current year; or are you?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I am. That's exactly what I am telling you, sir.

Mr. McClellan: I see.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's exactly what I am telling you.

Mr. McClellan: Good.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If you want, I can go back and have calculated the years 1976 and 1975 if you are interested. I don't have that with me, but I am giving you exactly what you want. Each year you will be able to ask me, and compare from year to year how it goes.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Could I also comment, Mr. McClellan, that section 42(5) was only added to the act in 1975.

Mr. McClellan: Yes.

Mr. di Santo: Can you give us the percentage of the supplement granted, and what is the average length of time for which the supplement is granted; since 1975.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I can't give you the average percentage granted, because as was said yesterday when we were talking in here, when the man is not working the supplement can take him right up to the amount he would be receiving had he been totally permanently disabled, but if the man has gone back to modified employment and has some earning capacity and is earning some money, we supplement him but not to the same amount as the man who is not working. This was the point where there was a difference of opinion; your colleagues expressed their thoughts to us and the board agreed that would be looked at.

Mr. di Santo: I would just like to ask a last question. Are you aware of the fact that many workers who are on supplement, as soon as they are assessed for pension are advised by the board to apply to the Canada Pension Plan for disability pension. Is that a policy of the board or the initiative of the individual board counsellors?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I can't speak for all the board because that person would have contact with my pensions adjudicator; would have contact with our doctor, who would be examining him; and also contact with the rehabilitation counsellor. There may be occasions when it might be in the man's best interest to suggest that he do that. One thing that we have been rather anxious to do in recent years is to make sure that the individual knows that he may be entitled to some benefits over and above the workmen's compensation benefits in other areas; we have been rather anxious to make sure that the people know that they might be entitled to other benefits. Just a moment, I'll check with the claims aspect. I just checked with the director of the claims adjudication branch, and our pension adjudicator says it is not their policy to so advise the man, but it could well turn out that a counsellor, in due course, might in the best interests of the man suggest that he look into that. I can't speak for Mr. Wisocky.

Mr. di Santo: Well okay—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Mr. Wisocky says my answer is right; that it is possible that might happen.

Mr. di Santo: Thank you; perhaps the responsible official of the board can answer the question. My question is don't you think it is contradictory that when you know that the board has granted 15 or 10 or 20 per cent disability, you suggest a worker apply for Canada pension disability, although you know that either he is totally disabled and he can apply for Canada Pension Plan, and then your rating is not accurate to say the least; or he doesn't qualify because you have assessed him for partial permanent disability.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I have no knowledge that we have advised a man who has a 10 percent permanent disability from us to apply for Canada Pension Plan. The only situation I can think of, just to peruse it for a moment, might be if that is the extent of our responsibility and he is totally disabled from a non-compensable injury, I am sure that somebody in the board would suggest to him, in his own best interest, that he should look into it. But if a man is just 10 percent disabled as a result of his Workmen's Compensation accident and does not have any other disability, I cannot see where we would advise him, because your statement is correct, there will be no point in advising him to apply to CPP.

Mr. di Santo: Well if I bring to you a number of examples of this type, what will you do?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We'd be very pleased to look at them, Mr. di Santo.

Mr. di Santo: Well that's not satisfactory to me. Will you change the assessment of the board if in fact the board has advised a number of disabled workers to apply for Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: The answer to that, Mr. di Santo, is regardless of the advice to the man to contact CPP, the assessment we have given him represents the amount of his entitlement under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Regardless of the advice to go to CPP or not to go to CPP, the way to handle that is that if the individual is not satisfied with the board's assessment of his permanent disability, as you well know he has the right to appeal that assessment.

The fact that he has or has not been advised to go to CPP has no bearing on his rating, he gets that to which he is entitled under our act.

Mr. di Santo: Well it seems strange to me anyway.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: You may not agree with the assessment, but that's the procedure.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Mr. di Santo, if I might comment. You talked about the CPP benefits, I am not totally familiar with all of the provisions of their act, but within their information brochure it requires that the disability be permanent and prolonged, it does not necessarily refer to total.

Mr. di Santo: Well severe.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Yes, permanent and prolonged.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That's right.

Mr. di Santo: It tends to prevent them from—

Mr. McClellan: If the people at the board don't understand that they should, that if you are in receipt of CPP disability that means that in the opinion of the Canada Pension Plan you are unable to work.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: What Mr. Kerr is saying is that that total disability does not necessarily all relate to the compensable conditions.

Mr. McClellan: I understand that, but that's a different point than the one you made.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Are there any further questions under benefits?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Well there were some other things that Mr. di Santo asked that we may not have covered. One was the language capability of the board. I don't know who is the best person to discuss that. John Wisocky.

Mr. Wisocky: I think Mr. di Santo covered many areas, including the language capabilities. We recognize that this is a serious problem in some instances and we do everything possible, at least the counsellor tries to do everything possible to counteract it, including training in English as a second language if possible or some other course if we can. In other words, in a lot of cases it's not possible for the individual to go to school and learn English, because he hasn't got the capabilities. Once we recognize that, there's no sense in putting the man through the frustration of trying to teach him English, so we have other areas, like the basic job-search technique program that the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission gives, where they provide a little more basic type of English teaching, so that the person can prepare him or herself for finding work in the labour market. But if at all possible we do send the person on training in English as a second language, if we can do it.

Mr. di Santo: I understand the situation if the injured worker cannot attend a course of English for the reasons that you outlined, because of age or because he's illiterate. But don't you think that becomes a further reason for which the worker should be considered disabled until the time he can go back to some sort of gainful occupation?

Mr. Wisocky: As Mr. Kerr pointed out there are two facets. There's vocational rehabilitation assistance, and our job is to assist the man in getting back to some form of gainful employment as you say. Then there's the payment and authorization of payments, which is done out of the claims service division; and a counsellor will provide the information. If in the final analysis the counsellor, with the assistance of a community agency, finds that the person is totally unemployable due to a combination of factors including language, age and so forth, we bring this to the attention of claims services division and that is considered under a supplementary grant.

Mr. di Santo: I haven't seen any single case in which, for instance, a disabled worker is considered totally disabled because of a combination of factors including language and skill. I'm really curious to know if there are any cases.

Mr. Wisocky: It's right in the section 42(5) policy. I think it's stated in those type of words; but possibly, as Mr. Kerr suggested, if you do have cases we could sit down with you and discuss them. I'd also like to spend a lot of time with you to point out what the board is doing to try to find additional jobs. One of the things we have been doing during the last two months is to go into the Italian community to find job opportunities there. So far we've found, I think 13 or 15, which sounds very small but it's a start. There have been about four people placed in the 13 or 15 job opportunities. So there'll be further work in this area. Our counsellors will try to find job opportunities there too. I think that in the future we may have some answer, but certainly we cannot come up with a total answer to the problems that you raise.

Mr. di Santo: Of these opportunities that you found, do you know if there are any cases of employers where you placed injured workers with a financial contribution from the Workmen's Compensation Board; and do you know if there are any cases in which the workers have been employed when the grants of the Workmen's Compensation Board have expired?

Mr. Wisocky: Yes, there have been a few; but we learn from experience and we are collecting a list of those types of firms. Secondly, we are following the cases very closely to ensure this does not happen; and on top of that we even check with our assessment department or revenue services to see just what kind of firm the company may be in terms of reporting their operations to the board. We try to take every step possible to circumvent that type of problem, but it's the exception rather than the rule.

Mr. di Santo: I'm well aware of that, and that's why I'm asking the question. I had a recent case of a worker who was placed in a restaurant and then after four weeks he was dismissed because the board decreased his grant to 25 or 20 per cent. You said that we will make sure that doesn't happen. Can you tell me how you can make sure that doesn't happen?

Mr. Wisocky: Several ways. Number one, at the moment we have a manual way of recording that firm. We make a follow-up visit with that particular firm or restaurant to tell them that it's not appreciated and that's not the way to do business. In the future we will have a computer capability to have that done for us automatically.

Mr. di Santo: Have you given any consideration to the possibility of making it mandatory for the companies to hire a certain number of partially disabled workers? I'm asking this question, because as you know within the Ministry of Labour there was an affirmative action task force or group or branch, and I know that the present minister is trying to revive that group. I had two or three cases, and I was probably particularly unlucky but despite the efforts of the people in charge, and I should say that it was quite expensive, I have a very thick file, they contacted almost every possible firm without success. Have you given any consideration to the possibility of introducing a bill which makes it mandatory for companies to hire or rehire a certain percentage of injured workers?

Mr. Wisocky: The board is not in a position to introduce bills. I think you are referring to a quota scheme and so forth. I think we've had some extensive discussions with your colleagues and I personally feel there are at least four different re-employment schemes that can be considered. We've looked at them, and maybe a combination of factors can help, but the co-operative and voluntary system through affirmative action programs hasn't, I think, been tested sufficiently to say that it will not work. I think there's also a lot of work to be done in the area of industrial workshops that we've addressed and have brought to the attention of one of the inter-ministerial committees on rehabilitation services, and I think that can be pursued. On reserve job schemes; I don't really know, but I think we should try the first step first, in other words try the voluntary approach. I think with the advertising program that the board has and the extra employment specialists in the field, we are finding quite a few job opportunities. As I mentioned to the committee before, in six months of 1978 we found over 1,400 jobs of which we utilized a little over 400; but when you look at the counsellors also, besides the employment specialists, we've put almost 2,800 people back to work. I think there's a lot of merit to pursuing this, and I fully recognize and appreciate that, in principle maybe, the direction in future is something that you're talking about, but it's being addressed right now by committees, and let's see what they say.

Mr. di Santo: Excuse me; how many jobs did you find through this new mechanism that you have enacted recently?

Mr. Wisocky: If you're talking of the employment specialists it's over 1,400; but let's talk of placement of injured employees in 1978 and that was 2,787.

Mr. McClellan: In 1978?

Mr. Wisocky: Yes.

Mr. McClellan: And what was it in 1977?

Mr. Wisocky: In 1977 it was 2,386; in 1976 it was 1,774.

Mr. di Santo: What type? I'm a little bit at loss, because I have 460 cases, for the record, and it's rare. I think I can count the people who went back to work. Your total of 2,787 isn't a very great number, but it shows that there is a possibility. What kind of what disabled workers were those who went back to work?

Mr. Wisocky: It's a wide assortment. I don't have any information as to the types of workers, but I can say that from our surveys about 50 per cent are unskilled and about 30 per cent are skilled and about—

Mr. di Santo: Excuse me, how many?

Mr. Wisocky: About 50 per cent unskilled and about 30 per cent are skilled; the rest are a combination of professionals and so forth. But in terms of success in getting people back to work, and again I can only quote from the isolated two samplings that I've taken, there seems to be no material difference. In other words, we're just as successful with an unskilled person as with a skilled person; generally speaking now.

Mr. di Santo: Do you have any breakdown; for instance the people working in the building trades, how many of them went back to work?

Mr. Wisocky: No, we don't have that type of breakdown.

Mr. di Santo: Or the steelworkers; you don't have any breakdown?

Mr. Wisocky: No.

Mr. di Santo: I think that would be extremely important to determine, at least from my point of view.

Mr. Wisocky: Mr. di Santo, if I may; I think it would be helpful to ask if we could sit down with you to explain the program and go over some of the basic information and data, and also review the cases you have; maybe we can tie it in and resolve a lot of cases.

One thing you have to remember is that we only handle cases that are referred to the vocational rehabilitation division; and of the 400,000 accidents reported in a year a very minuscule number ever reach vocational rehabilitation, because they don't need services.

Mr. Van Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I apologize for coming in at this late point in our hearings on this topic, which may already have been covered in my absence. I would explain that I had delivered to me earlier this morning a case which is a classic appeal problem and I absented myself to present this to Mr. Farquharson. So if these questions that I am raising now have been answered please tell me and I will read Hansard to find what the answers are.

First of all, in going back to the minister's statement of June 19, 1978, what additional evaluation is in fact being done, and I am referring to your predecessor Mr. Minister, the Honourable Bette Stephenson's statement of June 19, in which she says: "In introducing the bill it is recognized that there are benefit areas which require prompt adjustment. It is also recognized that the implications of the report will demand much additional evaluation."

I am wondering if you could indicate to us what additional evaluation is in fact going on; is it an ongoing evaluation or an intermittent one?

Secondly, and I realize there is a degree of naivety in asking this second question, but surely when a piece of legislation such as this comes along it should be introduced early enough in the session that it can get more proper debate, and my understanding is, again, that this particular Bill 126 came rather late and that virtually no meaningful debate took place because of the time factor.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: We did mention it before, a couple of times; but very briefly, as I've said there are two, there are really three things going on.

The first is that an internal committee was established, from all ministries that are involved, to review the recommendations of the Wyatt report in greater depth and detail. We met several months ago to try and prioritize those items we saw as having particular importance and I hope that the committee will be reporting to me on at least some of the items very shortly.

Secondly, I've asked the joint consultative committee of the board to review their report and to present their views to me. Thirdly, as you know, Miss Haley is head of the pensions commission, which is reviewing the whole question of pensions, which includes indexing I believe. We are waiting for her report, which I understand is forthcoming within the next month or two.

Once all that material is in, then it will be considered and any recommendations brought forward together. I can't give you a timing on it though, Mr. Van Horne.

Mr. M. Davidson: My understanding, and I guess it's accurate because it is in the Wyatt report, is that the benefits payable to an injured worker start the day following the injury. I understand that over the years there's been quite a bit of discussion on that, but the position that our party has, and has had for a number of years, is that the benefit period should start on the day the injury occurs.

I'd like to bring to the attention of both the board and the minister, if I may, something in the Wyatt report which I think, and my colleagues think, creates a situation whereby injured workers in the province of Ontario are not granted equity.

The Wyatt report, for example, says: "We are aware of no pressure to require payment for the partial day of lost income." That's not entirely accurate, as I've said, because we as a party, and I am sure injured workers' groups throughout the province, have requested over the years that the compensation be payable from the day of the injury. But it goes on to say that employees who are not in fact paid by the employer in full for the day of injury are free to bargain for such payment.

I don't think that that's possible in all cases. Certainly if a worker in Ontario happens to work in a plant where he has a union and has a bargaining agent as such that can negotiate those types of benefits for him into the contract, he may very well be getting payment for the lost time on the day of the injury, but there are countless thousands of people in the province of Ontario who do not have bargaining agents.

I would suggest to you when you're considering some of these recommendations that it's pretty damn hard for that injured worker to negotiate payment with his employer. As a matter of fact—and I don't think I have to go too far to point it out to you—there are cases where injured workers are released from their jobs by employers who are not unionized, simply because they are injured workers. Maybe they don't perform the function in a manner that they were able to do prior to the accident and maybe they don't come up to the standard that the company would like to see on their return to the job, or maybe the company doesn't want to take any further risk with them, given the fact that they are injured workers. I would just like to suggest that when these recommendations, Mr. Minister, come from your task force and then from the joint consultative committee that you give some consideration to the fact that that kind of a statement in the Wyatt report is not entirely accurate and that perhaps you could consider making compensation available from the time of accident rather than the day following.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I listened to your remarks and I agree with your comment about comparing the union and non-union sector. One would hope that as your colleague, Dr. Bounsall, suggested, when the Human Rights Code is amended to include physically disabled some of that problem may disappear. I don't know, but certainly he's very hopeful of this and so am I, but if it isn't then we'll have to look at that again. The other comment about when payment should commence, of course, is a matter that the committee will be reporting upon. I was interested to note—you can correct me; I don't have the figures before me—that it's about a week in Quebec before they commence payment, isn't it?

I recently spoke to Dr. Johnson and asked if he intended to change that and he indicated that he didn't and perhaps that's why one of the headlines in the Globe today is "Group Plant Threatens Johnson's Life." I don't know! But anyway, that will be a matter we are considering.

Mr. M. Davidson: It varies throughout Canada. There's no question about that. I think the consideration that must be given however is that we are dealing with legislation for the province of Ontario and as the most highly industrialized province in Canada perhaps we should be providing some leadership. I would also point out to you that there's—

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I'll make a quote of that: we should not consider what goes on in other provinces. Is that what you're saying?

Mr. M. Davidson: I said in that kind of a situation.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That'll be very useful in the future.

Mr. M. Davidson: Well I'm quite sure that you ignore some of the things that Conservative governments do in various provinces also on occasion. I mean, I—

Mr. di Santo: In Alberta they are much more advanced than in Ontario.

Mr. M. Davidson: But really it is a problem and, as I say, I don't believe that the statements contained in the wire report regarding it are totally accurate when they say that there has been no pressure. I'm sure that if you go through countless numbers of briefs that have been presented to the Minister of Labour over a number of years, both from the Ontario Federation of Labour and other groups that represent and deal with injured workers, you would find that one of the recommendations has in fact been that compensation start from the time of accident.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I understand that.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Any further questions, Mr. Davidson?

Mr. M. Davidson: Not right at the moment.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Do the members of the committee have any further questions under benefits? If not, then we could proceed to payment levels. Any questions under payment levels?

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Chairman, we have no further comments on the report period.

Mr. Acting Chairman: How about pensions? Any questions under pensions? Mr. di Santo.

[12:45]

Mr. di Santo: I have only one question for the chairman of the board or for whoever is responsible. Since I think that there is a tendency to consider that there are other factors that determine the disability of a worker, then do you think that the present chart to rate the level of disability should be applied literally as it is now, or should it have some flexibility?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Well, the chart is universal for specific injuries, loss of hand or foot or whatever it is. It is assessed on the same basis. As far as other disabilities are concerned we have to rely on our medical advice and the medical reports we have on file for that individual.

Mr. McClellan: The chart is an absolute. You lose your little finger, you are given a certain pension rating under the terms of the chart. Now the problem with that is that I don't know whether it has any validity in terms of averages or not. I suspect not. But I know that it has no validity in terms of the individual circumstance of an individual injured worker with respect to the impairment of earning capacity.

That's always been our problem around that. Again it is the same principle that applies with respect to 42(5)—you have chosen to limit the definition of impairment of earning capacity with respect to pensions. We discussed the other day how you were limited with respect to 42(5) and the limitations is that the chart is an absolute: there is no real possibility for assessing the individual circumstance of an individual worker.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Except through 42(5).

Mr. McClellan: Right, but that's not a permanent award. I understand that and that's why 42(5) is so important to us. That's why we focused in on 42(5) because that's what saved injured workers from disaster in this province. Because you can't live on the kinds of awards that you get under the permanent pensions. I just don't understand—you are anxious to speak to me and I know that time is running out. I just don't understand why you don't have the flexibility; why you insist on operating on the basis of absolutes; why you don't have the flexibility to develop a criterion additional to the schedule of benefits—what do you call that thing? The little green booklet? What is it formally called? I want to use it.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Permanent disability rating schedule.

Mr. McClellan: "The meat chart" is what the workers call it—why you don't have sufficient flexibility to be able to assess the earning capacity of an individual worker with respect to the individual circumstance. You just don't have that flexibility; you have taken that flexibility away from yourselves.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: There is an anomaly in what you are saying of course. And I notice that in the manifesto that Mr. Laughren presented as the suggested basis for a comprehensive scheme and universal coverage he indicated that permanent disability should be based on impairment of earning capacity as a concept. I suspect you are reading in many ways from the Saskatchewan proposals which are currently going to be translated into a bill, we understand.

Now essentially I think you should know that to adopt an earnings-related pension basis will in fact reduce at least 75 per cent of the awards we make to zero. We start out with a clinical rating which comes from this chart, or in the case of a non-scheduled rating is estimated on the medical reports, and it is a clinical rating which is translated into an award based on the man's earnings prior to the accident and—

Mr. McClellan: I'm not talking about either/or. Please don't misunderstand me. I am not talking about an either/or situation. If you are interpreting what I said that you should withdraw the rating schedule and not have a minimum award, let me correct that.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: May I finish, though?

Mr. McClellan: Yes, but let me make that absolutely clear. I support the rating schedule insofar as it establishes a minimum rating. Now what I am saying is that you ought to have the capacity to go beyond that. You will need to develop your criteria, obviously, but you should give yourselves the flexibility that the act gives you. In a circumstance where there is an impairment of earning capacity that is obviously above the amount that is grantable under the rating schedule you should be able to implement the intent of the act. That's the point that I am trying to make. Okay?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Well, as I understand what is going to happen under the Saskatchewan scheme is that you are going to have a $10,000 lump sum or equivalent for pain and suffering. And the rest of the award will be purely a function of the actual loss in earnings.

Mr. di Santo: Okay, can I just illustrate with the words of the minister the very day that he was appointed? He said in fact, if I lose—I'm far from thinking that you should lose it—my finger, as a surgeon I am totally disabled, as a minister I can function. Now what I'm saying and what my colleague is saying is, given the schedule that you have to set the rates of disability, shouldn't you take into account those factors that the minister mentioned?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: We very definitely do and that's what happens under 42(5).

Mr. di Santo: Well, we are talking now of the rates of pensions, not of the supplement.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Well, actually—and I will ask Mr. Kerr to amplify on this—in fact in establishing a disability rating for that kind of individual that can get put into the original pension as well. Would you like to—

Mr. di Santo: It never happens. Never.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: In the sense that it can become a permanent award, yes. In the sense that it can become permanent rather than temporary.

Mr. McClellan: If there was a statutory entitlement to 42(5) benefits we probably wouldn't be making the argument.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: In the situation you've described we do occasionally run across, not surgeons but something equivalent to that, where they've lost an index finger which is important to the job. Our approach at the present time, under the present provisions of the act, is to carry on with the 42(5) as Mr. MacDonald has said. It's a combination of the 42(5) plus the efforts of vocational rehabilitation. I suppose in a lot of cases we've been very successful over a period of time in rehabilitating that kind of individual.

But I realize the point that you are after Mr. di Santo, is that if we run into a situation that we can't resolve the employability of the individual, this is what you're getting at. You're looking for something that's permanent rather than something that's on a temporary basis that's renewed.

Mr. di Santo: No, I'm talking—I know that the time is running out—we are talking of situations which are permanent, like the loss of a finger. In that case, how do you apply 42(5) when you know that that is a situation which will perpetuate itself, possibly for the life time of the injured worker?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It's not unusual for us to—I'm sorry.

Mr. di Santo: What I am saying is shouldn't that be part of the assessment of the rate of the pension for the injured worker?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, at the present time—I am repeating what's already been said—the clinical disability rating is for the clinical disability. We have a fair number of cases where there is a low permanent disability award, 10 per cent, which is a pension, and we have granted a 90 per cent supplement, bringing him up to a total permanent disability level. At the present time within the terms of the act we have to renew that on a renewal basis, on a temporary basis.

And the present wording of 42(5)—I am covering your point; I am not arguing against you, sir, I am just telling you what exists—under 42(5) it says temporary and it doesn't give us the authority to do it on a permanent basis. So there is a problem there, but we've tried to resolve that problem by being as fair as we can with the renewal of 42(5), in combined efforts of the individual and vocational rehabilitation to get that individual into a fairly decent economic situation.

Mr. di Santo: Our original question was, are you moving towards changing that situation or not?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think, sir, that I can't answer that question, because as I recall this is a matter in the Wyatt report, that has been covered.

Mr. di Santo: Who is the person to be asked?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Whoever is studying the Wyatt report, I would say.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That will be one of the items that will be reviewed by the committee. I can't tell you what's going to come out of it yet.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It's out of our hands, sir.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Any further questions, Mr. di Santo?

Mr. di Santo: No.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Are there any further questions under pensions? Investments?

Mr. di Santo: How much money does the Workmen's Compensation Board have invested at this time?

Mr. Acting Chairman: Mr. Cook, please.

Mr. J. G. Cook: At the end of December this year at amortized cost there was a $1,243,279,251 invested.

Mr. di Santo: That was in 1978?

Mr. J. G. Cook: That's correct, sir.

Mr. di Santo: What was the amount in 1977?

Mr. J. G. Cook: At the end of 1977 the amount was $1,013,935,505.

Mr. di Santo: Did you lose any money during 1978 because of bad investments?

Mr. J. G. Cook: No, we did not.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Never mind the bad investments.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Any further questions?

Mr. M. Davidson: Could you advise us as to who makes up the investment group?

Mr. J. G. Cook: By percentage or by dollars.

Mr. M. Davidson: No, you have an investment group, I understand; the advisory group.

Mr. J. G. Cook: Basically, we have an investment policy committee, which meets with four outside advisers. This advisory group is made up of four individuals: Mr. Ken Cork, the vice-president and treasurer of Noranda Mines; Mr. Bob Sillcox who joined us in February, 1978, he's the senior vice-president of funds of the Bank of Montreal; J. P. S. Mackenzie who is currently with a consulting firm Mackenzie and Sarlos; and the fourth member is a vice-president and treasurer of Canada Life Assurance Company, Mr. R. D.

Radford. They are the four outside advisers; and inside we have an investment policy committee, which are mainly Mr. MacDonald, Mr. Brewerton, myself and Mr. Thompson.

Mr. M. Davidson: So you do not have, in fact, anyone representing what could be called workers' groups within the province of Ontario sitting on the investment board.

Mr. J. G. Cook: I can assure you that the outside advisers are very conscious of doing as good a job as possible.

Mr. M. Davidson: I'm not doubting their ability whatsoever. I'm simply posing a question. You do not have on the board a representative of the working people in the province of Ontario?

Mr. J. G. Cook: No, sir.

Mr. M. Davidson: Do you feel that there should be one?

Mr. J. G. Cook: I would think that we should get the best advice possible.

Mr. M. Davidson: You're aware, of course, that labour groups do have some very capable people and they do a lot of investing on their own. I would suggest that's something you should take into consideration very seriously.

Mr. di Santo: Or perhaps the minister should recommend the board take that into consideration.

Mr. M. Davidson: It just doesn't sit right, somehow, that in an organization that deals primarily with working people in the province of Ontario, the group that invests and handles the money for that corporate board doesn't have a workers' representative sitting on it, and I think that's something that should be changed.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The board is prepared to think about that.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Any further questions from the members of the committee under investments? If not, this concludes consideration of the Workmen's Compensation Board's 1977 annual report.

Mr. McClellan: There are a number of follow-up items that came out during the course of the three days. I would ask the chairman and the minister to pursue them and that follow-up material be provided. Thank you.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. McClellan; thank you very much members of the committee.

The committee adjourned at 1:00 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 2, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker: Last Friday in the Legislature the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) stated, and I quote: "With respect, I think it is slightly incorrect to say [the doctors] are counselling opting out"; that is, through the Ontario Medical Association. He went on, and I quote: "To my knowledge, they are not engaged in any campaign to promote opting out."

I wish to bring to the attention of the Legislature a document that I have received, which was sent out unsolicited to a practitioner in the province, entitled Ontario Medical Association Kit for Members Considering Opting Out of OHIP. It is dated May 1978. I would suggest that means that the minister's statement that the OMA is not engaged in any campaign to promote opting out was not, in fact, accurate.

Mr. Martel: Hear, hear. He should be forced to withdraw it.

Mr. Foulds: That's putting it mildly.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

Hon. Mr. Parrott: First of all, Mr. Speaker, may I apologize that I do not have a copy of this statement for the critics. Oh, you have just received it this minute? I think it is on the way over. I'm sorry. We have been redrafting it very recently, and I think that likely is the statement.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is in a brown envelope.

Mr. Speaker: That is an integral part of the standing orders, and I think the honourable minister should—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it's there now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: We've got it.

Mr. S. Smith: It came in an Energy envelope, but it says "Environment" on it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We work very closely together; so I think we fulfilled those—

Mr. Martel: We don't have one yet, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) also has a statement to make; if I may, I will defer to him to make sure copies of my statement are in the hands of the critics before I give it.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of the Environment can proceed if he wishes. I think they're in the hands of the opposition spokesmen.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the members of the steps which the government and Ontario Hydro have taken since last Wednesday to monitor and to assess the implications for Ontario of the accident at the nuclear generating plant in Middletown, Pennsylvania.

Immediate and direct contact was established by Ontario Hydro with officials in the Pennsylvania - New Jersey - Maryland power pool. Constant and up-to-the-minute technical information was available to us as events took place. The Ministry of Energy was kept fully advised and was given a full briefing by Ontario Hydro last Thursday.

Second, a special co-ordinating committee was set up comprising the Ministries of Energy, the Environment and Labour and Manpower, and Ontario Hydro, to review events and to recommend action.

Third, last Saturday an Ontario assessment team of four qualified scientists was dispatched to Middletown, Pennsylvania, to provide up-to-the-minute information on the procedures being taken to restore conditions at the plant to normal, and to observe the precautionary public-safety measures which have been put into effect by the responsible United States agencies.

The assessment team comprises representatives of the Ministry of Energy, the occupational health and safety branch of the Ministry of Labour, and Ontario Hydro. The team will remain at the plant as long as it is required; we think that will be approximately four or five days, based on the information we have now.

I am pleased to add that our team was welcomed by plant and government authorities and that, in addition to providing us with on-the-spot information, the team has been able to assist the US officials in a consultative capacity.

I am pleased to advise the House that representatives from the assessment team report conditions in the plant appear to be stabilizing and that there is greater optimism now than there was even 24 to 36 hours ago. This does not mean that all problems have been resolved. We are told there are a number of difficult problems still remaining which will take time to overcome.

We have been in contact on a day-to-day basis with the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada and, through it, with the other federal departments and agencies concerned with this situation and with appropriate agencies and authorities in the United States.

My colleagues the Ministers of Energy (Mr. Auld) and of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie) will also make statements. The Minister of Energy will report tomorrow on the operation of the three nuclear generating stations in Ontario and on the safety control measures which are in effect in these plants. The Minister of Labour will comment later today on Ontario's contingency plan, setting out procedures designed to deal with an incident at one of Ontario's nuclear stations.

Today, I should like to advise the House on the potential implications for Ontario of the Middletown, Pennsylvania, plant.

First, based upon reports from the federal Department of National Health and Welfare, and on other reports from Canadian and US authorities, I am satisfied that the release of radioactive material to this point has been limited and does not constitute any problem to Ontario residents. On Sunday morning we were advised that radiation levels at ground level on the perimeter of Three Mile Island, where the plant is located, were very low and almost back to normal readings.

I was informed this morning that efforts to reduce the hydrogen bubble within the plant, and to reduce levels of gases within the plant, are proceeding satisfactorily. As a matter of fact, I have here a message, received at 1 p.m. today, from Dr. Aitken of our team; he reports as follows: "As of now, Nuclear Regulatory Commission reports that the hydrogen bubble is greatly reduced in size, and the risk of explosion is correspondingly reduced. Radiation levels outside the plant are approximately at normal values. There is little likelihood of requirement for further evacuation of residents."

Mr. S. Smith: Do you not think we have radios here?

Hon. W. Newman: We didn't think you could hear.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I want the Leader of the Opposition to know that we have seen various reports—as I'm sure he has—in the newspaper—

Mr. S. Smith: It was on this morning's news.

Hon. Mr. Parrott:—and I think it's appropriate to put on the record the exact latest reports we have had. I'm sure the House would find us guilty of not doing the right thing if we didn't do that. This statement today is so the members have what we have at our disposal in the way of information.

Mr. Laughren: It's all madness.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have monitored meteorological conditions consistently in an effort to detect any change in the movement of air masses passing over the Harrisburg area. I am thankful that I can report the movement of air masses has been such that no emissions from the plant reached Ontario.

Last night, however, the wind direction changed for the first time in several days with the result that upper air which passed over the Harrisburg area reached parts of southwestern Ontario early this morning. The wind direction is beginning to change again and the forecast is that by midnight air from Pennsylvania will again be moving northeast and will not pass over Ontario.

In any event, emissions at the Middletown plant are now limited and readings of radioactivity are so low that the change in weather last night is not of any concern to us in Ontario.

We will continue to monitor the movement of air and other meteorological factors as we assess the possible impact of any future emissions. We are fortunate that we have in Ontario a network of radiation monitoring stations operating on a regular basis.

My ministry operates an extensive system of high-volume particulate sampling stations throughout the province. Filters from 35 samplers are regularly analysed at the Ministry of Labour's radioactivity laboratory. This procedure takes several days since these filters are also used to provide information on general air quality readings prior to testing for radioactivity. In the light of Middletown, however, we have been analysing for radioactivity as quickly as tests can be made. We have a total of 160 high-volume samplers throughout the province which provide data on air quality. This emergency procedure has been in effect during the weekend and technical staffs of the two ministries have been at work to keep data as current as possible.

Second, a system of seven stations in Ontario is operated by the radiation protection bureau of the federal Department of Health and Welfare which obtains samples and analyses of particulate matter from stations in Thunder Bay, Sault Ste. Marie, Moosonee, Ottawa, Windsor, Hamilton and Toronto. The department has announced that a report on data on radiation received from this system will be made today.

Third, Ontario Hydro operates two types of radiation monitoring systems, a total of 87 stations organized in two systems. The first system, consisting of 19 stations, monitors each of the three nuclear stations in Ontario at Douglas Point, Pickering and Rolphoton. Twelve more of these instruments are situated throughout the province. This system is geared to provide long-term readings. Hydro also maintains a system of airborne radio-iodine monitors which are used on a continuous basis. This system is designed for measuring release of iodine in an emergency situation.

We will maintain contact with authorities in Ottawa and in the US and our team of scientific experts in Middletown is reporting regularly. We are monitoring meteorological information and we are keeping data from the radioactivity monitoring system as current as is possible. We believe that consistent and accurate information is essential to the public interest and we will keep the members of this House and the public fully informed of all future developments.

Finally, I would like to add that the developments at the Three Mile Island nuclear station confirm the importance of viewing preparedness and contingency planning in a continental context. What we need in North America is a better system than we have now to cope with all eventualities. Consequently, with an eye to the future, our government is proposing that a North American nuclear monitoring and advisory centre be established among the appropriate jurisdictions. We envisage the need to design and create the necessary permanent linkages, perhaps including computer and telephone hookups, formal and written procedures, and a process for the accreditation of personnel.

We shall be discussing this proposal with the federal government in order to establish the necessary international planning group.

Mr. Laughren: And the madness will continue.

[Later (2:18):]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, in view of the events at Three Mile Island during the past week, many people in Ontario have quite naturally been asking what would happen if a similar accident occurred here? In particular, people want to know whether we have plans to deal with an incident which could endanger the public. I would like to assure the House, and the people of Ontario, that we do have plans, in the unlikely event that such an incident occurred in Ontario.

The first point I would like to make is that plans for a contingency at Pickering were incorporated in the station development plan. When the station become operative in 1971, the Emergency Measures Organization was responsible for a provincial response. The first approved interministerial plan, now in effect, was completed in 1974. This plan has been continuously updated.

In 1975, the cabinet established the "lead ministry" concept which designates the Minister of Labour and Manpower as having prime responsibility. This means that my ministry has the responsibility for co-ordinating the government's response, in the event of a nuclear accident with off-site implications.

Having said that, I would like to point this out: As in most accident situations, immediate and urgent responses, to be most effective, must be initiated by someone on the spot. The shift supervisor at a nuclear generating station would be the first to know of a dangerous situation. Although he would notify government officials immediately, he would have to make some rapid decisions on his own, decisions required for the protection of nearby residents. It is an essential part of the plan that these initiatives be taken by the shift supervisor and carried out with the co-operation of local authorities.

Once the government assumes control of the situation, Hydro relinquishes its jurisdiction for off-site safety to this interministerial control group. In addition to members of my ministry, the group includes representatives of Hydro, the Ministries of Health, the Environment, and Agriculture and Food, the Ontario Provincial Police, local authorities and senior physicists at the University of Toronto.

Arrangements have been made to keep the public informed of what has happened through releases to the media, at first by Hydro and later by the control group. I and other cabinet members would be briefed on the situation by this stage of activity. Meanwhile, residents living near the station would be advised on a continuous basis of what actions were required for their protection.

Should such an incident escalate, decisions would be made and announced concerning the safety of things like drinking water, milk and other food supplies. I should mention that all activities relating to the safety of personnel inside the station would continue to be the responsibility of both Hydro and the Atomic Energy Control Board. In the event of injury to station personnel, the local authority would be responsible for any medical treatment that may be required. Should evacuation be required, this would be under the control of local authorities who are represented on the control group.

I have many details but these are the essential features. To date there have been three full-scale exercises, the last in October 1978. In addition, there have been a number of smaller exercises to test its effectiveness. All of these are in addition to Ontario Hydro exercises which are conducted on a regular basis. As an aside, I might say the outside referees of the most recent mock full-scale exercise commended the whole group for the efficiency and the adequacy of the operation.

We are well aware that there can always be unpredictable aspects to an accident situation. In fact, it is in the nature of accidents that they are unpredictable, but we believe our approach is one that would allow us to deal effectively with off-site nuclear emergencies.

ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, today I would like to table the Ministry of Transportation and Communications' and the Ministry of Northern Affairs' road construction program for 1979-80.

During this fiscal year my ministry plans to spend an estimated $275,600,000 for construction on the King's Highway system in southern and northern Ontario, an increase of approximately $50,000,000 over last year's expenditure. In addition, we will be subsidizing municipal road construction to the tune of a further $200,000,000. This generates about $340,000,000 in total expenditures, when you include the municipalities' share.

Considering these factors, then, approximately $615 million will be spent on construction of roads, highways and streets in Ontario throughout the fiscal year.

Mr. Laughren: Jim Snow for Minister of Health.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As the members know, this government has been reassessing its overall budget requirements and priorities over the last couple of years—

Mr. Cassidy: What have you got that Dennis Timbrell doesn't have?

Hon. Mr. Snow: —because it is intent on priming the job market and, therefore, the economy. Recognizing the importance of highway transportation in the economic development of Ontario, I feel road tax dollars invested in highway construction not only create jobs but generate business for related industries and local businesses.

Therefore, keeping this in mind, the projects included in this year's program are those we judge most essential to preserving the present high quality of our highway system, while providing the necessary expansion.

Briefly, then, in southern Ontario we're proposing new work on a total of 797 kilometres of provincial highway system, primarily on two-lane highways. In northern Ontario my ministry will continue to carry out the planning, design and construction of some 776 kilometres of the provincial highway system during 1979-80. This latter system, as I'm sure all members know, is the partial responsibility of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. It allocates the funds for capital road construction.

Again, the majority of the work is primarily on two-lane highways, although the construction of passing lanes, remote and municipal airports, are also included in this year's program.

Mr. Martel: It's just another layer of bureaucracy.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Details of all these projects, and others, are contained in the program I am tabling today, copies of which will go to each member's mailbox this afternoon.

[Later (3:18):]

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order or a point of clarification, I believe I inadvertently misled the members of the House when I made that brief statement on the tabling of my ministry's book, when I stated that the provincial roads program was increased by $50,000,000. That should have been $15,000,000.

Mr. Nixon: We thought we were back to the old days.

Mr. Swart: Do you know what is going on in your ministry?

Hon. Mr. Snow: It is the total ministry budget that has been increased by approximately $50,000,000.

Mr. Warner: You can get a calculator for $29.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I twigged that that figure was wrong, but only when I saw it in front of me.

[Reverting (2:24):]

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: In the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the House leader (Mr. Welch), perhaps I could direct a question to the Minister of Energy, to whom I have served notice regarding the question.

Will the minister support the notion we have been putting forward that the select committee on Hydro affairs begin immediately an investigation of the safety of nuclear generating stations in Ontario? Further, if he does agree, would he be prepared to accede to the recommendation that Dr. Arthur Porter be seconded from the royal commission to the select committee as a consultant for the purposes of this investigation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As the Leader of the Opposition says, he sent me a copy of the statement. I appreciate that and thank him for it. The select committee, with the consent of the House, can pursue any course it wishes. I would have no objection; in fact, I think it would be a good thing for the select committee to take a look at the regulations under which Hydro operates. On the other hand, I think it is important to remember that the controlling body for safety in nuclear matters is the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada. It would seem to me that might be the agency that should also be taking a look at the record.

I might take this opportunity to expand on what the Minister of the Environment said just a moment ago. I intend tomorrow to make a statement that will indicate both the regulations under which Hydro operates and the comparison, where it is comparable, between our kind of operation and the operation in Pennsylvania that is causing all the concern. The reason I don't have it today is that it is taking a little time to put together because it took a little while to find out exactly what has happened there.

I will certainly pursue this. I might say it is the Atomic Energy Control Board that we have to satisfy, but in connection with Dr. Porter I read some press accounts of an interview he had yesterday. I thought the House might be interested in them. Apparently, Dr. Porter was interviewed on CKFM today at 12:10. I have some highlights of what he said, which were handed to me, but I didn't hear him.

Mr. Martel: He said it was more dangerous.

Hon. Mr. Auld: He said that taking the human factor into consideration, it was conceivable accidents could happen in Ontario's reactors. He also indicated the probability of serious problems in our reactors was very, very small. He said the instrumentation in our reactors is such that several fail-safe systems would have to go wrong at the same time before problems could develop, and if humans make an obvious error, the instrumentation will not accept it.

Finally, in response to the question, "Do they, Hydro personnel, know what they are doing?" Dr. Porter said, and I believe this is a quote: "They are the most impressive bunch of people I've ever met. Sheer dedication is the operative word." Then, in connection with Hydro's operational record: "The best on earth is evidence that these people really know what they are doing."

Mr. Martel: He also said it was more likely to happen.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, and accepting the fact that there could well be a federal forum for this as well, would the minister encourage his cabinet colleagues to put forward the necessary motion before the Legislature at the earliest possible moment so that if there is assent required from the House it might be granted? Would the minister agree that, surely, it's the public that needs to be satisfied at this point with regard to the safety provisions and that the select committee seems to be an efficacious and immediate way that this can be dealt with, and by bringing Dr. Porter into the committee it diminishes the possibilities of duplication or, for that matter, excessive partisanship?

Mr. Bolan: Self-serving evidence.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, not being the leader of the government, I'm not in a position to commit the government, but I will certainly convey that message to the Premier if he's not here before the end of question period. I would agree that there is a wide misconception of the basic differences between the Candu system, which is the one used in this province—and, as my honourable friend pointed out last Friday and has pointed out before, a very great difference in the records of the two systems—and the enriched uranium system in use in the United States and elsewhere in the world. It is increasingly difficult, particularly at times when there is an incident elsewhere, to get this across to people and anything we can do to achieve that end is important as far as the people of the province are concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, since the select committee was planning to examine the nuclear option including the safety factors in it this summer—and what has happened at Three Mile Island simply suggests it would be advisable we do it sooner in order to provide a public forum to allay concerns and, indeed, to satisfy the impact of this whole thing on the nuclear industry, no matter whether one is a pro or a con in the nuclear industry at the moment—would the minister through his leader give immediate consideration to authorizing from the House that the select committee proceed with this in whatever is deemed to be the most appropriate relationship with the royal commission and Dr. Porter?

If I may just add here, Dr. Porter is busy doing his report and he has a mass of evidence that he has got from all of the experts. I can tell the House that the staff of the select committee has read that evidence and I would think Dr. Porter and his experts coming before the committee as witnesses could elaborate on that. Whether one calls it consultant or witness, I think is neither here nor there for the moment. In whatever is deemed, after serious consideration, to be the most appropriate relationship with the royal commission in view of the fact that they have all that evidence there now, what we want to do is just to bring it out, take a look at it and come to a conclusion.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will convey that to the Premier.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Do I understand the minister correctly when he said he thought AECB would be the appropriate people to take a look at nuclear safety in the Candu system? That they would be the people? Does the minister not realize, as my leader has stated, that it is the public who have to be satisfied and that the kind of information we get from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited does not agree in every way with information that we get from other sources?

I'll just give you one example, if I may have the latitude, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Porter is reported on the radio this morning as saying that while the probability of a meltdown in the Candu system is not very great, it is 100 times greater than those figures touted by Atomic Energy of Canada. Would the minister not agree that a public forum is the place where all of the facts have to be revealed and that Dr. Porter would provide that element of neutrality in that kind of group that would build the trust of the public in the decision that was made?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Repeating myself, as I said a moment ago, I agree that it is important that we get across to people the system we have in this country. I simply am pointing out that it is the Atomic Energy Control Board that sets the rules and issues the licence to the plant, as the honourable member knows. It seems to me any public perusal of the rules should involve the Atomic Energy Control Board. We want to make sure we remember the difference. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is the crown corporation that has developed the Candu system and licences it. The Atomic Energy Control Board is a different regulatory agency.

Mr. Renwick: By way of supplementary question, is venting into the atmosphere part of the emergency procedure that would occur at Pickering in the event of a mechanical breakdown in the cooling system?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No. I think I mentioned on Friday very briefly that in the Pickering and Bruce plants there is a separate chamber under a constant vacuum which is connected to the reactor chamber. Any leakage that goes on in the reactor chamber is automatically taken to this other chamber where it can be filtered so that in the event there were a continuous emission, there would be no radioactive iodine and stuff like that put into the outer atmosphere, as apparently may have happened at Three Mile Island.

[Later (2:43):]

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Ministry of Energy which reflects the very substantial concern now about safety standards in Ontario Hydro plants, public concern that I believe should not wait to be satisfied until after the reports of the Atomic Energy Control Board or, for that matter, of the various commissions and committees that are working at the provincial level.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that last fall—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that last fall Ontario Hydro was a member of the interorganizational working group that recommended the Atomic Energy Control Board relax its standards on emergency core cooling systems and relax its standards in terms of the allowable radiation hazard in case of a nuclear power plant accident, will the minister direct Hydro to oppose any such relaxation of standards as it was proposing in the fall until the consequences of the Middletown disaster are fully explored and we know whether or not any relaxation of that nature is in fact justified?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will look into that matter. I am not aware of the technical aspects of what the honourable member is referring to. Without knowing that I am not in a position to comment at the moment.

But obviously, in the whole field of safety as far as I am concerned we don't propose to relax anything that is necessary.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: If the minister says the government doesn't intend to relax any standards that are necessary, and since the interim report of the Porter commission stated Hydro's estimate of a likelihood of a catastrophic accident could be generous to Hydro by a factor of as much as 100, will the minister make it absolutely clear there will be no relaxation of standards and that Hydro will not advocate any relaxation of standards until we have had a thorough review, both in public and also within the ministry, about whether such relaxation of standards can be justified? There is very real concern, Mr. Speaker, across the country—

Mr. Speaker: That is clearly a repetition of the original question.

Mr. Cassidy: —and will the minister assure us that Hydro will take no further action on relaxing standards until these matters have been fully explored?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The honourable member knows full well that Hydro can't change the rules that the Atomic Energy Control Board sets.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will Hydro withdraw its support for the report of the interorganizational working group of the AECB in which it participated and which suggested very substantial reductions in safety standards—reductions in safety standards which, in the light of the disaster in Harrisburg, are now very much in question?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I said I would inquire about that and find out exactly what had been said. I will do that and I will report.

[Reverting (2:33):]

MULTICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT BRANCH

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Culture and Recreation concerning the resignation of Philippe Le Blanc. Can the minister confirm there is a Mr. Bob Cook in the Premier's (Mr. Davis) office who is in charge of co-ordinating the government's multicultural activities? Can he explain the necessity for such a person and such an office, when within the ministry represented by this minister is a department supposedly co-ordinating all the government multicultural activities?

Is the co-ordination being done by this Mr. Cook of such a nature as to have prompted the resignation of Mr. Le Blanc on grounds which Mr. Le Blanc refers to as "what is happening in the ministry is a totally unacceptable and corrupt practice"? Does he agree that his ministry, which should be dealing with the problems of a multicultural and multiracial society, is using its public funds for partisan purposes, as suggested by Mr. Le Blanc?

Mr. Ruston: Ask the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor).

Mr. Breaugh: Has the minister been discovered?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I don't know if it is really necessary to confirm to this House that there is such a person as a Mr. Cook working in the Premier's office. I think that has been public knowledge for a long time.

Mr. Conway: A marionette type of mandarin perhaps?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can assure members he is not a clandestine kind of figure. He is the chairman of the interministerial committee that was established by cabinet two years ago. That committee was to act to provide a forum for continuing internal review of policies and programs relating to multiculturalism in 10 ministries. So it can hardly be called a clandestine operation.

Mr. Martel: Patronage.

Mr. McClellan: Cash or cheque?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I think everybody on both sides of the House would agree, multiculturalism is something that affects not only one ministry. It is not something that one simply points out to the Ministry of Culture and Recreation as being its job and that nobody else needs to worry about multiculturalism. It is something that, in effect, impacts on 10 different ministries. Mr. Cook in that interministerial committee—

Mr. Makarchuk: It sort of becomes the organizing arm of the Tory party at public expense. That is what it is.

Mr. Warner: It's a political weapon at public expense; we pay for it.

Mr. Martel: We'd better conduct an investigation into that.

Mr. Makarchuk: If you're going to do your organizing, pay for it yourself and don't use public funds.

Mr. Hennessy: Back in your cage.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the reasons that have led to M. Philippe Le Blanc's resignation are concerned, I find it regrettable that he did not talk to me about it. I have known Mr. Le Blanc for at least eight or 10 years personally; we are not total strangers. If he felt that there were some practices in the ministry that could be regarded as corrupt or political, or something like that, I wish he would have had a talk with me on that subject. He never once on any occasion even hinted that that was his impression. Moreover, he never even mentioned that to his own supervisor. So, quite frankly, I cannot take as too serious the charges that he makes to the press; and that is when I first heard it, when a reporter from the Globe and Mail told me, "Here is what Mr. Le Blanc says in his letter of resignation."

Hon. Mr. Norton: It was a political resignation—politically motivated.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As my colleague says, it could have been a political resignation. I do not know. But that is about all I can say at this point—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Have you got the letter yet?

Mr. Martel: Lorne, you wouldn't get caught.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You've got the letter.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think I will have to terminate the answer to the first part of that question. There is a lot of noise here on both sides of the House.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the chairmanship of the Interministerial Committee on Multiculturalism was assumed by Mr. Cook in March 1977, and since that was not the subject of my question, but rather the fact that as recently as the end of February 1979 the Premier appears to have set up a small section in his "office" under Bob Cook in an effort to co-ordinate the government's multicultural activities, will the minister now attend to the question which I put to him, which was, what is the necessity for this new initiative on the part of the Premier to have a small section in his office under Mr. Cook handling multicultural activities when there already exists not only the minister's own ministry, but also an interministerial committee supposedly handling these things?

Does the minister not realize that a man of principle appears to have resigned, with very serious charges about being controlled by mandarins from the Premier's office—mandarins that the Premier airily dismissed the other day?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Premier in his wisdom chose to step up the work of multiculturalism some months ago reflects the deep commitment on the part of this government to develop a multicultural society.

Mr. Makarchuk: You've got as much commitment to multiculturalism as an alley cat has to morality.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Brantford try to control himself?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I wish to assure members opposite that, as the minister of multiculturalism, or of Culture and Recreation, I will continue to step up in my ministry—and they will be hearing more about this in the estimates—the work of multiculturalism in my ministry. We here are committed to developing a multicultural society in Ontario. If some of the members opposite happen to perceive this as political opportunism, I suggest that is in the eyes of the beholder and has nothing to do with our motives, which are simply to develop a multicultural society.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary; the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker; I have to say that I read the letter from Mr. Le Blanc with great concern. By way of supplementary: Will the minister undertake to establish a committee of inquiry that will investigate and report publicly on each of the incidents reported in the letter of resignation by Mr. Le Blanc, and will the minister indicate what steps he intends to take to assure the people of Ontario that multiculturalism will no longer be used by this government as a political tool?

Mr. Rotenberg: It is okay for you to do it. Why don't you stop doing it, Michael?

Mr. Cassidy: Buying votes.

Mr. Bradley: Must have hit a raw nerve there.

Mr. Warner: You should be ashamed of yourselves.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: After I finally received Mr. Le Blanc's letter of resignation this morning I spent several hours with my staff on the subject. I inquired about the various charges that had been made in Mr. Le Blanc's resignation. I talked to his supervisors and his colleagues—

Mr. M. Davidson: You convinced yourself he was right.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—and I am convinced that these charges are totally unfounded—

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, it might be too embarrassing.

Mr. Swart: Yes, it might be embarrassing.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—and I haven't one intention in the world of setting up a commission of inquiry for this kind of charge.

Mr. Cassidy: That is stonewalling.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is not stonewalling. I only wish that if he had these concerns he would have come to me or would have at least gone to his immediate supervisor—

Mr. Swart: So you could shut him up.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —and said, “Look, this thing is becoming corrupt or politicized,” or whatever other charges he was making.

[2:45]

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Treasurer, who I guess is busy preparing the budget for next week.

Mr. Nixon: No, it has gone to press.

Mr. Cassidy: It's all done, as a matter of fact.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Economic Council was meeting in the Prince Hotel today, and it said that none of the remedies he wants to propose is going to work.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has recently indicated that in the last six years close to 60 per cent of the jobs in the private sector were created by small businesses, and that in manufacturing 55 per cent of the jobs were created by small firms, can the Treasurer tell this House what share, if any, of any proposed incentive schemes will be made available to small and medium-sized businesses to reflect whether job creation has actually been taking place over the course of the last few years?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to address that issue on April 10.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister reassure both this House and small businessmen and the federation of independent business by saying what proportion of any incentive schemes will be given to small business? Or is it the government's intention to give all these incentive funds to large corporations that in many cases have been destroying jobs, rather than creating them, in this province over the course of the last 10 years?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am a great admirer of small business. I am sure the member will see that reflected in my actions.

TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question that may involve three different ministries, and each can take a chance. They will probably have to supplement the information the previous minister gives. The question involves the Minister of Energy, the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Is the minister aware that on Sunday, February 25, 1979, an article in the Detroit Free Press was headlined, “Trucks Defy US Atomic Waste Laws”? Is the minister also aware that on June 1, 1978, Tri-State Motor Transit of Joplin, Missouri, transported five wooden boxes of contaminated radioactive material from Consumer Power Company's Palisades nuclear plant in South Haven, Michigan, through the state of Michigan by way of Interstate 94 to Interstate 96, through Detroit, then across the Ambassador Bridge?

Will the minister contact the Atomic Energy Control Board to ban any further shipments through southern Ontario, as there are already excellent alternative routes through the states of Michigan, Ohio and New York to disposal sites in the east?

Mr. Haggerty: Don't all jump at once.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I might say to the honourable member that the Atomic Energy Control Board sets the rules and issues the permits. We have nothing to do with it. If they are not aware of it, I will certainly pass this information along, although I would suggest to the honourable member that, inasmuch as I do not read the Detroit Free Press that often, it would be helpful if he sent that material along to the control board.

Mr. B. Newman: By way of a supplementary, the information is already with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. Every ministry we ask seems to shove it off on another ministry. The Department of Transport in Ottawa says it is a responsibility of the Ontario Highway Transport Board.

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a supplementary question?

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the minister can give assurances to the public of Ontario that any shipments that may be allowed to pass through—and I hope we do not allow any—will meet Canadian and Ontario criteria, and that both federal and provincial authorities will be informed of the contemplated shipment of these radioactive wastes?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why I am so foolish as to volunteer. But if the member would look at the proposed legislation that was introduced last week, he will find the definition section is broad enough that if any harm should occur from that transportation it would be construed as a spill and therefore would be their responsibility.

That doesn't answer all of the question, I'm aware of that, but I think it important to know—

Mr. S. Smith: I am so delighted.

Mr. Kerrio: That's what you call reaction.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Well, I guess they really didn't want to know anyway.

INCO DISPUTE

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Labour and Manpower: Because of the contradictory information being given to the media and the community about who made the last offer in the dispute at Inco, can the minister indicate who made the last proposal and who failed to respond to that proposal? Would the minister and his staff, when they meet with both parties on Wednesday, cost the offer of the company and the counter-proposal of the union?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It is my understanding that when the parties last met for 11 days in February, the last suggestion for a settlement did come from the union. The company's response was it was so unrealistic that it didn't feel it had to respond in any formal way to it.

In answer to the question directly, the last suggestion for a settlement was made by the union, the company not formally responding but indicating they considered it too unrealistic to bother responding.

With regard to the question of costing, I am sure the member knows the role of mediation staff is not to get into the costing of offers and counter-offers. They do first have a very good, albeit moderately rough idea of the cost of each offer from whichever side it comes, but it is my feeling it wouldn't benefit the forthcoming negotiations that are going to start this Wednesday to have mediators getting involved in costing offers. I would be pleased to talk to the member about it if he has another view, but that's my feeling at the moment.

Mr. Martel: In view of the company's attitude towards the Sudbury workers in the community, both now and for the past two years, as evidenced by the layoff and a different proposal for Port Colborne workers as opposed to the Sudbury workers in the form of pensions; and in view of their refusal to put any monetary item on the table, despite the fact that Falconbridge Nickel which lost $8½ million could; and because of their failure to this date to put the COLA clause on the table until September 1980 when they put it on the table in the first round of negotiations with the Thompson workers; doesn't the minister figure it is time he and his government indicated to Inco their displeasure at Inco's conduct towards the Sudbury area? Would the government consider withdrawing three benefits bestowed on Inco, which are the 60,000 acres given last year to Inco for exclusive exploration; the reinstating the 720 tons of daily emission standards required by the former control order; and removing the right of Inco to write off its offshore processing costs against profits earned in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The member well knows that in spite of the feeling that was generated following meetings with the senior negotiators of both parties two weeks ago—namely, the feeling that there was no point in resuming negotiations—I nevertheless took the liberty of having my senior staff go to Sudbury and again discuss matters both with the union in Sudbury and with the company last Wednesday. As the member knows, they still remain very unhelpful, if I may put it that way, with regard to the offer of settlement.

However, I felt so strongly about it, as it has been almost two months now since the parties have been to the bargaining table, that I have suggested they return to the table on Wednesday. I think it wouldn't do those negotiations any good for me or anyone to get involved in the criticism of either party and I am therefore going to decline answering at this moment.

With regard to the question of benefits, the member knows he can ask the Ministers of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) and of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) and the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) about each of those items if he is serious about them.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a supplementary. In view of the fact that the strike in Sudbury has been going on since last September, and the one in Fort Frances and Kenora since last July, an obviously long, involved and bitter strike, is there anyone in the ministry working on new approaches to collective bargaining in this province so that the communities that are so adversely affected by such lengthy and prolonged strikes will not be as badly affected and we can come to a new pattern of bargaining in this province so that these problems can be avoided?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As the member knows, it was about a year ago—maybe a little more—that the ministry introduced its program of preventive mediation in the hope that this very sort of thing in companies and in unions that have had difficulties in the past could be avoided in the future, and we continue to do that.

Similarly, we've now instituted a program, even without preventive mediation, where there have been difficulties in previous negotiations. Those particular negotiations receive extra attention.

With regard to the Boise Cascade problem in Kenora and Thunder Bay—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Fort Frances.

Hon. Mr. Elgie:—the member knows full well—as I explained in the House three weeks ago—my view and the view of the two members of the disputes advisory committee is that the only way that matter can be resolved, in our opinion, is through voluntary binding arbitration, a view that neither party to date has chosen to accept.

Through the more frequent use of disputes advisory committees, through preventive mediation and through particular attention to issues which have caused problems in the past, we think we're being fairly innovative in trying to approach such difficult situations as the member referred to.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the company has termed the union request "unrealistic"—I think that was the term the minister used—I wonder if the minister would take into consideration the fact that Inco is funnelling money to the tune of $50,000,000 a year to its Ray-O-Vac subsidiary in the US to modernize its plants there? Does the minister think that's good corporate behaviour for a company that's destroying the heart of a community in Sudbury right now and for the last seven months?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, so that the member really understands and appreciates, I have the same concern about that particular community that he does, and he knows the effort and the honest, sincere effort—

Mr. Laughren: No, I don't. You haven't told the company to make the offer either. You are playing silly little games.

Hon. Mr. Elgie:—that I have always put into that particular dispute and that particular community.

Mr. Laughren: You never will tell them to make the offer either. What kind of nonsense is that?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Let's not try to suggest there's any difference in the way we see the problem up there. I think it would be inappropriate for anybody to get into the position of criticizing any party at this time when they're about to get into negotiations on Wednesday.

PCB REPORT

Mr. Gaunt: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Since the ministry staff indicated that the report called PCB Formation in Sewage Chlorination would be released within six to eight weeks from March 1978, has the report been completed, why has it taken so long and when will it be released?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can tell the honourable member that it has been completed. It's extremely difficult for me to tell him why it has taken so long, and I guess I'd better not try. Having been given a little notice of that question, let me assure the member that I share his concern and I have instructed staff that we should have that report in his hands in four to six weeks. That's a fairly firm commitment. I know it's a little longer than he wished, but I can tell him the report is completed. It's undergoing what they call editorial corrections.

Mr. Riddell: That's a little better than "in the fullness of time."

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think he'll have it in his hands before long.

Mr. Gaunt: Will the minister table the report in the House when it is completed, in view of the study's far-reaching implications?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, and I will be sure to send the member the first copy.

CBC CONNECTIONS PROGRAM

Mr. di Santo: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. In view of the fact that the recent sensational series, Connections, on CBC projected a bad image of the Italian community as a whole, as minister responsible for multiculturalism what does he intend to do in order to rectify the image that many Canadians have of the Italian Canadians, to repair the damage done, and to protect the reputation of thousands of innocent people and law-abiding citizens who have been innocently slandered by the CBC?
[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, although I did not see the TV production, I have heard about it and I have had a synopsis done for me. I could say that I share the view of the member opposite that it did a dreadful disservice to the Italian community in this province and in this country. I, as Minister of Culture and Recreation for the province, am shocked by it. I will be in touch with the Italian community, probably later today, to see what steps we can take to correct what I think was a most unfortunate image projected by the CBC—that great federal organization that is supposed to bring the country together and develop multiculturalism here. Then it comes up with this kind of garbage.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, come on.

Mr. Nixon: Does the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) want to respond to that, too?

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: While the minister is trying to arrange a meeting with the Italian community—and we would like to know with what sector of the Italian community—can he tell the House if he doesn't think it appropriate that Ontario educational TV start devoting some time to the ethnic communities in order to foster racial harmony? Second, doesn't he think the government of Ontario, through the Premier (Mr. Davis), should ask CBC to devote time to the ethnic communities so that the positive aspects of those communities can be known by all other Canadians?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think it's rather interesting that the questions of the possibility of TV Ontario doing something more to further the concept of multiculturalism should be raised, because just this morning, in a meeting with some of the senior officials of TV Ontario, we discussed that very possibility. I cannot, of course, at this time, report any kind of specific or concrete proposals we are planning to undertake. But I certainly see that as one real possibility.

I would be quite happy to discuss this further with the member opposite, or anyone else in this House who has ideas about TV Ontario developing programming designed to further this particular objective.

Mr. Conway: Just keep it out of the Premier's office.

TOURISM

Mr. Eakins: To the Minister of Industry and Tourism, Mr. Speaker: In view of our existing deficit in tourism, and in view of the success of British Columbia in reducing its deficit, will the minister give consideration to a program similar to British Columbia's in which low-cost funding will be made available to assist resort operators in upgrading their premises in a structural sense, so that they are able to operate and so that we can encourage more four-season resorts in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, of course. I would point out to the honourable member that essentially this is something this government has been doing for a great number of years through the development corporations, particularly in northern and eastern Ontario. They get preferential rates.

Mr. Eakins: They're very difficult to get.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member has indicated the money is very difficult to get. I might say that throughout our estimates I did not hear any of those complaints, either from the member opposite or from anyone else. I think the experience by and large has been this: Where there has been some unusual delay in the Ontario Development Corporation programs supporting the tourist industry, a few telephone calls have got to the heart of the problems. The experience has been very good.

I might also take this opportunity to remind the member opposite that in our early statements with regard to some of the target groups for the new employment development fund, the tourist industry had already been preselected as one of those industries to get some special attention from that fund.

Mr. Eakins: We treat you royally.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You bet.

Mr. T. P. Reid: If the government is doing all these great things for the tourist business, particularly in northern Ontario, when does it intend to stop foreign tourists from camping freely on crown land, often beside tourist facilities been built and invested in by people? This government through its crown land free camping policy is in direct competition with this kind of investment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can assure the member the whole question of camp grounds is one I have been speaking with my colleague about at some length—

Mrs. Campbell: Who's winning?

An hon. member: Can't win them all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and perhaps at a later time, he and I might have more to say about that matter.

Mrs. Campbell: Together?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course.

EMPLOYEES' HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr. Mackenzie: Can the Minister of Labour and Manpower explain the lengthy delay in implementing Bill 70, the safety and health legislation? What is holding up the regulations? When can we expect to receive the regulations?

Mrs. Campbell: Too busy.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I would like to think there has not been a delay. We have been working very hard on getting the regulations together, which is not an easy task, as I am sure the member knows. I can assure him I am personally making every effort to see the bill is proclaimed within the next month or two.

Mr. Mackenzie: A supplementary: Can the minister tell us if he has allowed for any real input into the regulations from the workers and their unions who will be working with this particular piece of legislation?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I am afraid I can't answer that specifically. In a general way, however, it is my understanding there is input, but if the member has reason to think that is not so, I would be glad to look into it.

WELCOME HOUSE

Mr. O'Neil: I have another question for the Minister of Culture and Recreation.

Going back to the Le Blanc resignation, I wonder if the minister could tell us whether or not he does have present plans to move the Ontario Welcome House to another location and if so, when is that planned and at what direction is that move being made?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we do have plans to move Welcome House from the Harbourfront site to a more central site on University Avenue. This move is simply a further step which reflects our increased work in the multiculturalism field. We hope when this move is completed there will be some 25 or 26 different ethnic groups and languages being spoken there.

Mr. S. Smith: They all speak Tory.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We hope all the various communities in the Metro area particularly will take advantage of it. I would like to emphasize that we hope every member of every party in this Legislature will also take full advantage of that facility as a way of building bridges and developing communications with all the many cultural communities here in Toronto and in Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: Between the Premier's office and multiculturalism.

Mr. Nixon: The mandarins are striking again, lurking in the corridors.

Mr. O'Neil: The minister didn't completely answer my question; that was at whose direction? I would like to know.

Is it going to cost approximately $1,000,000 to move? Does that move come because of the letter the Premier sent to the minister on February 27 in which it was suggested it would be an excellent idea to relocate the complete multicultural package in a highly visible area with its own building? He concludes in the last part of that letter: "We might soon regain the recognition lost in the past few years because of the wide proliferation of our multicultural efforts."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The decision to move Welcome House to its future location was the result of recommendations made by a number of people.

Mr. Breithaupt: What about the old Hydro building?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It did not originate only from the Premier's letter of February 27.

Mr. Gaunt: But it has a big influence; those mandarins are at it again.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is a move which I think makes a great deal of sense. It will certainly provide far greater and ready access to the many people from the various cultural communities living in the city.

Frankly, here again, instead of criticizing this move, I had hoped the members opposite would have applauded that because surely they are as much interested in the development of multiculturalism in this province as we are.

Mr. S. Smith: It is the motive for the money we are against.

Mr. Turner: Don't you talk about motives.

An hon. member: Why not?

ACTIVITIES OF WCB ETHNIC CO-ORDINATOR

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising out of the letter of resignation of Mr. Philippe Le Blanc.

Will the Minister of Labour and Manpower explain to me why the ethnic co-ordinator for the Workmen's Compensation Board, Mr. Rocco Lofranco, attended a meeting at the First Canadian Portuguese Club on March 9 for the purpose of trying to censor a banquet list which had been prepared by the executive of the First Canadian Portuguese Club in order to ensure that no elected politicians, including MPPs, were invited—

Mr. Ruston: NDPs.

Mr. McClellan: NDP or Liberal I may say—were invited by the club who were not acceptable to the Portuguese Conservative Party of Ontario?

Mr. S. Smith: He wanted to avoid occupational injury.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'm sure the member knows that the president of the Portuguese club denies that such a request was made by Mr. Lofranco.

Mr. McClellan: The request was made.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: He still denies that.

Mr. McClellan: It was made.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That's in the press this morning too. As to why he was there, it's my understanding that because of his understanding of problems and his relationship with the ethnic community it was thought his views would be of value.

Mr. Makarchuk: More like the relationship with the Conservative Party.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: But if the member feels it was something he'd like me to discuss and review, I'd be pleased to do it.

Mr. Laughren: He is asking you right now.

Mr. McClellan: I have substantiated this morning the presence of Mr. Lofranco and the performance of Mr. Lofranco at that meeting. In the light of this incident and in the light of the incident brought to the minister's attention last week in the estimates—that is, Mr. Lofranco's vicious attack on APIO—I want the minister to explain to me why Mr. Lofranco should not be immediately dismissed from his job as ethnic co-ordinator at the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: In last week's board estimates I indicated to the member that I would review the activities referred to about Mr. Lofranco and report, and I'll be glad to report on this matter to the member.

FOUR-DEATH CRASH

Mr. Stong: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Now that four people have been killed on Highway 7 just east of Bayview—three being members of one family—and in view of the fact his ministry has steadfastly refused the pleas of residents in that area to establish overhead lighting, the lack of which was a contributing factor to that accident, would the minister now consider the construction of adequate lighting to prevent further such carnage in that area?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I believe the honourable member is referring to an accident that took place about four weeks ago—

Mr. Stong: March 10.

Hon. Mr. Snow: —a very serious and unfortunate accident. Yes, there have been discussions between the municipality and the ministry with regard to improvements at that intersection. My staff in the normal process had planned on construction work, I believe in the years 1980 or 1981, to reconstruct the intersection with turning lanes, et cetera. That would involve lighting and different signal arrangements at that time.

I have asked my staff to review this. I must say that in that particular accident I don't believe lighting or turning lanes or anything else would have prevented those unfortunate fatalities. As I recall the report that I had with me for a few days following that, expecting such a question, the one automobile went right across the median into the other lane. Nothing, other than a concrete median barrier perhaps, would have prevented that accident.

But, yes, I have instructed the staff to see if we cannot in some way make some of the required improvements in 1979 rather than leaving it until 1980.

Mr. Stong: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Well really, there has been a commitment made.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that the minister ought to be aware that the accident happened one half a mile east of the intersection on a curve. I wonder what steps the minister has taken, or what steps he will endeavour to take, to protect the rights of the eight-year-old orphaned survivor to claim against the ministry without the intervention of a limitation period?

[3:15]

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would not wish to make any comment. I would refer that question to the Attorney General who, I am sure, would be more familiar with what the legal rights of that unfortunate child might be.

Mrs. Campbell: He wouldn't want to make a comment either.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Ms. Bryden: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. We are all well aware from newspaper reports that the deadly chemical dioxin has been discovered in Bloody Run Creek which leads into the Niagara River in New York state and that the pollution appears to emanate from another old chemical dump of the Hooker Chemical Corporation similar to the Love Canal dump.

In view of the fact that toxic chemicals do not recognize international boundaries, has the minister personally contacted the governor of New York state to urge that the highest possible priority be given to containment and cleanup of this very serious pollution which may affect both the Niagara River and Lake Ontario ultimately and could endanger the health of Ontario residents?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, I have not personally contacted the governor, but I am sure that there's no doubt in the minds of officials of his department that we are very concerned, and we have had a good deal of contact with those officials. I think that might be the appropriate thing at this time. There's not much doubt from following the situation that the governor is quite concerned and is well aware of our concern.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Has the minister been in touch with the federal minister of the environment, urging him to contact the New York authorities and the Canadian government to make representations regarding this very serious matter?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it would be more than fair to say that the Honourable Len Marchand and myself have had several conversations, not specific to that creek but certainly on the aspect of international problems and his role in it. Along with the minister from the federal government, we had a meeting with the Minister of the Environment for Quebec and discussed at some length those aspects of our international concerns.

TOURIST INFORMATION CENTRE

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Is the minister aware of these comments made by his colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), while attending a meeting with the Niagara region council? Quoting from the Niagara Falls Review of March 23, 1979, "Mr. Wells appeared appalled that Fort Erie doesn't have a permanent tourist information centre and promised to bring it to the attention of the appropriate minister?"

While visiting Fort Erie, the minister's predecessor made similar comments a year ago and showed displeasure with the present government policy of doing too little to improve Ontario's tourist needs, in direct contrast to the theme "We treat you royally."

After years of debate in the Ontario Legislature and outside, can the minister indicate to the Legislature when he will announce the tender call, in conjunction with the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson), for the construction of a tourist information centre at the entrance to the Peace Bridge, Canada's largest port of entry at Fort Erie, Ontario?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Here is your chance to say you are already doing it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am already doing it. I quite seriously hope to be able to make that announcement within the next two or three months. I will probably be down there with Gordon Dean to make that announcement at that time.

Mr. Haggerty: Is the minister aware that funds are now available in the Ministry of Government Services estimates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Quite seriously, I am satisfied that between my budget and the budget in MGS we will be able to find funding to get something substantial up in that area this current year.

CABLE TV SERVICE IN OHC PROJECTS

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Housing. Will he confirm that he is ending all bulk-purchase agreements for cable TV service for residents of Ontario Housing Corporation units, including the senior citizens? Would he not agree that will raise the cost of cable TV to senior citizens and those others by at least 60 per cent and in some cases as high as 200 per cent? And would he not admit that there is no alternative for the residents but to either pay that huge increase or revert to the rabbit ears because OHC will not construct any new receiving towers? Therefore, will he reconsider that policy and renegotiate the bulk-purchase agreement?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, we have been for some time looking at the bulk-purchase agreements in Toronto and, indeed, in the rest of the province. When the OHC first got involved in bulk-purchase agreements there was a very substantial discount for bulk purchase, which meant 100 per cent of the residents must subscribe to the system whether they wished to or not. As a result of the passage of some years, that bulk rate has climbed consistently to the point that it is now very close to the actual fee that would be charged to an individual who wished to hook into the system.

We have looked at it very carefully from OHC's point of view and we have discussed it with the cable television people. We have looked at the benefits that can accrue to the tenants of OHC, whether they be families or seniors. We have also looked at the fact that there are write-off charges every year that the government, the people of this province, pick up for unpaid bills for cable television to those tenants.

It is the consensus of the board of directors of OHC, concurred in by the minister and by ministry people, that we would go on the individual subscriber position throughout the OHC portfolio. We have discussed it very completely with the various groups, and may I say that there has been some resentment by OHC tenants that they were forced to accept cable television in their building whether they wished to have it or not, or whether they had a television or not and that they had to pay a monthly charge for that particular service because in the bulk agreement we had with the cable people it was 100 per cent or nothing. We have now decided, because of cost factors and because of resentment by some tenants, that we would go on the individual subscriber rates.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

[Applause]

Mr. McClellan: Give 'em hell, Jim.

Mr. Martel: Come on, tiger.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Thank you. I must say—

Mr. Gaunt: This is your chance, Jim; this is your chance.

Mr. McClellan: Have no mercy.

Mr. Conway: The man who put Bill Davis in his place.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —in standing up, you would almost think that I had announced that I wasn't going to run again. I must say I was overwhelmed with the applause.

Mr. Conway: You have to get a federal nomination first.

Mr. Philip: After your free time broadcast on the weekend, you had better not run again.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I didn't hear that, but I would be happy to respond to any repartee or interjections from across the floor as I have in the past.

Mr. Conway: What nomination are you looking at now, Jim?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Have you any suggestions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. After the ovation I think everybody would be anxious to hear what he had to say.

Mr. Breaugh: There shouldn't be any interjections from the chair.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I did want to make some comments, off the cuff of course and maybe somewhat far ranging, in regard to a number of matters that are of interest I think not only to this House but to the members of the community.

I have had some interest as you know, Mr. Speaker, in community affairs.

Mr. Bolan: What happened to our friend up there?

Mr. Grande: Jim, your friends are all leaving.

Mr. Breaugh: Did you ever empty that front bench when you stood up, Jim.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I didn't hear that but I would be happy to respond.

Mr. Turner: No, don't, it wasn't worth it.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: It wasn't worth responding to? Then I won't respond.

I was saying that I have had some considerable interest in community affairs. As you know, some years back I had occasion to serve in the capacity of Minister of Community and Social Services. It was a very challenging period in my life, I must say.

Mr. Makarchuk: No question about it.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I suppose I am still somewhat scarred from those days.

Mr. Conway: I gather.

Mr. Makarchuk: There are a few CASs that feel the same way.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: But it really hasn't scarred my mind, I want you to know—

Mr. Grande: I don't think you will ever heal.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —nor affected my—

Mr. Makarchuk: Your psyche.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —my psyche or my personality, no.

Mr. Makarchuk: I didn't think anything could affect that.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: In other words, I don't have to visit the Liberal leader in a professional capacity.

Mr. Makarchuk: I wouldn't visit him in a professional capacity, either.

Mr. Conway: Do you prefer the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson)?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I do want to say this, though. I was born in what I consider to be a rather normal community.

Mr. Conway: Oh, pray tell, where was that?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: It was Timmins. I see the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development sitting here—

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Good spot.

Mr. Conway: Oh, I don't believe it.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —and applauding because he is aware of the north and the problems of the north. Maybe in some of the earlier days we weren't quite as sophisticated as the southerners, and Timmins, as the minister for resources development knows, was somewhat back in the hinterland, certainly in the early part of this century. That really puts some perspective on things, doesn't it? You felt that you lived so far back in the bush that you had to come out of the bush to hunt. But it taught me a few things and one was the concept of a normal community.

In those days we had a community that was made up of all kinds of people. I am not only talking about ethnic background now and we heard something of ethnic background in the question period today. We had people whose heritage or ancestry might have been from any part of the world, and we accepted this. We had people who were of different colours. I am not talking about political colour now, I am talking about the colour of their skin. In addition to the colour of one's skin and the difference in one's language was the difference in mentality. We had people who were very intelligent and some who were not so swift.

Mr. Conway: That seems obvious.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: We had some who were mentally handicapped. I see the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk entering the chamber and I don't think that was circumstantial.

Mr. Nixon: Don't bracket me in that statement. I may be overweight. Tell us about the bald ones.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I cast no aspersions on the immense intellectual capacity of that member.

Mr. Nixon: I knew you when you first started in politics. You were ripping off the select committees.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I just want to say that we had that kind of person in that community—a very intelligent person—and we had, as I mentioned, some who weren't so intelligent. And we had some people who were physically handicapped. We had young people, and we had old people; and we seemed to take all of this in our stride. The citizens of that community were interested in what was going on.

[3:30]

We kept our old people in our homes; many of us did that. If someone was disabled, we helped the disabled, whether that was physically or mentally. It was interesting to accept what I thought of as normal in those days, which turned out to be something in subsequent experience in large metropolitan areas and, I suppose, with the passage of time. There was an evolution. There seemed to be an urge on the part of larger communities to start taking what I considered was a normal community and to dissect that community and institutionalize so much of it.

If you were young, exceptionally young, you had day-care centres, and then you had nurseries and kindergartens. You had other facilities for persons who were handicapped in one way or the other, either physically or mentally. You had institutions for the elderly. We seemed to take society and dissect it and institutionalize what was a normal society. This, I may say, somewhat troubled me; because I discovered when I was Minister of Community and Social Services that we had literally thousands of agencies that were tending to the needs of these various elements in our society.

I wish the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) wouldn't exist, because he was the critic at that time.

Mr. Breaugh: He still is the critic. Are you still the minister, Jim? He has outlasted you.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I appreciate his political motivation in trying to upgrade the image of his party, and to display a sensitivity for people that is somewhat lacking in larger communities. I applaud the member for that; and if the member for Oshawa wouldn't interject, I think he would accept on behalf of his colleague that type of compliment.

Mr. Breaugh: I'm just trying to help you. Someone should.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Here we had an evolution. We had concerned citizens who would, on an initial basis, volunteer their help. They would perform the actual duties in caring for one. They would enlist the support of their fellow members of the community and be responsible for the carrying out of that particular program. If it was to assist the youth, again I could show you the evolution of the children's aid societies, and there are some 50 in Ontario; societies that were created because of a genuine concern on the part of citizens for the youth of this province of ours; societies which were operated by very sensitive people who raised their own funds and cared for the children who were either unwanted or neglected.

What happened then was what we have seen happen so much of late; and that is, the organizations take on a professionalism. The professional takes over and the volunteer becomes a fund raiser, often relegated to the role of selling tickets.

That type of attitude where you extracted the milk of human kindness and the genuine sincerity and concern on the part of citizens for their neighbours, troubled me greatly and continues to trouble me. We have, as I have said in the past, taken charity and made it a crown corporation. We have turned the Good Samaritan into a civil servant and we look to the government more and more for funds to keep these agencies going. They are all well-intentioned people and they are agencies that all do good, there's no question about that. Yet in my estimation it is important not only for the developmental services for the mentally retarded but for all services to be de-institutionalized as much as possible, to normalize the setting of people who are not as gifted as others, who suffer some type of handicap.

It was in that regard that I had hoped to take our Developmental Services Act and to ensure that other handicapped persons not covered by any special or specific legislation be included in a new Developmental Services Act so that there could be some equity in terms of funding and approach; some balance.

I noted when I was Minister of Community and Social Services that as the capital funds for all areas except the mentally retarded ceased flowing, there was an inclination on the part of some agencies that looked after persons who suffered both mentally and physically to orient their activities and to accentuate the aspect of mental retardation, so you had that manoeuvring within a system which I didn't think was right nor did I think it was necessary.

The participation houses, for example, are places where I think the person is looked upon as a whole and where funding was very difficult to come by, and I dare say still is. I looked at the problem in terms of the process of normalization; and as you know these were the buzz words, and I guess they still are—deinstitutionalization, normalization, use of the generic services of the community. I know in my own riding of Prince Edward-Lennox there was at one time a proposal to build a swimming pool in the institution apart from the community at Prince Edward Heights and the price tag for that was about $1,000,000. We had developed a good rapport within that community, a rapport with the retarded that appreciated the differences between the normal community and those who were afflicted by either a physical and a mental handicap or simply a mental handicap.

It was for that reason that I was anxious to see that swimming pool put within the community—at great saving, I may say, to the government, because we now had the community interested. We had the board of education interested; we had the town interested; we had different groups that were interested. Unfortunately that didn't transpire. The government, I suppose, in assessing what became necessary, didn't think it was in a position to spend a much lesser amount of money to normalize that facility.

That is just one example, because one of the biggest challenges in terms of normalization, Mr. Speaker, as you very well know, is to ensure that you have a receptive community. How can you inject into a community people who are not accepted as normal and then expect normalization? It's a process of education, of understanding, of preparing a community. I think that's one of the biggest jobs we face. That's why I mentioned initially my experience in a smaller community as a young man and the acceptance at that stage in my life of a community made up of people from all walks of life, with all manner of abilities and disabilities. It's our philosophy to get back into that particular type of community.

As I indicated, the preparation of the normal community now for that full integration is difficult indeed. If you go to Orillia and look at the problems that community has exhibited in terms of the institution there for the mentally retarded, you will find they're less than receptive. I think they are a lot of well meaning people who have good intentions, but you just can't accomplish the type of normal setting you would want overnight.

I mention that because I feel we have to normalize our own ministry. I felt that change within that ministry had to be made, and I'm seeing it made now as a matter of fact. I'm seeing the rationalization in terms of child care. I just hope we don't create another dichotomy in regard to child care when we get involved in the rationalization of services for the elderly so you develop two—I hesitate to use the word bureaucracies; empires, is that more charitable, Mr. Speaker?—

Mr. Renwick: More accurate.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —within the ministry, so that they never come together—

Mr. Lawlor: How about bureaucratic empires?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —and you don't have an overview of the entire service you're trying to provide. That can happen in the field as we decentralize and provide those field offices if we're not careful.

Another area that concerned me was the rationalization of family benefits, general welfare assistance and the federal program. You notice we have at the federal level programs such as unemployment insurance, and the Canada Pension Plan program with provision for disability payments within that. We have, with old age security, a guaranteed income supplement. At the provincial level we have this broad spectrum of family benefits for persons who are not able to work, people who suffer some type of disability, whether it's permanent disability or whether one is permanently unemployable; I will touch on that in a moment.

In the field again, we have the municipal programs of general welfare assistance, the temporary type of help that is afforded people in true need. I can see where people were lining up, and are, in the municipalities at a municipal welfare office to complete that application process, only to be directed to a provincial office because the person is a likely candidate for a family benefits allowance. I feel very strongly there is considerable duplication and overlap in that area.

I remember attending a number of federal-provincial conferences at which time there was some hope to rationalize these services, except that when I first came on the scene the areas of federal jurisdiction had been carved out of the talks. Instead of looking at the total picture and taking into consideration programs such as unemployment insurance, which covers those persons who are able to work but aren't working, the manpower training or retraining programs and some of the aspects of the old age pension or supplement as they affect the overall welfare picture, these matters had been extracted from the discussions. It seemed to me that what we were really talking about was funding. It was apparent that the funding was to be block funding so that the costs of the federal government were not going to escalate in perpetuity.

I think there has to be a rationalization of the permanently disabled and the permanently unemployable. I wish the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) was here, because she has been particularly concerned about that for a number of years. I would like to see the family benefits program and the general welfare assistance program administered together. This would probably be best done at the local level.

What I'm really saying, and I won't dwell on this particular aspect too long because I know there are other speakers, is that we have to put our whole social welfare system together. Maybe I should say together again, because in my view, at one time we did look at the individual as a whole and as a true part of his or her community.

Within these communities we have seen a breakdown in terms of child discipline. This is a very interesting phenomenon in current days, because it goes right through the system, from the home to what's happening in the churches, the schools and streets. We have had what we call an open society. It seems we've taken the laissez-faire out of the economic system and put it into the social system, so that anything goes. I wonder about that; I think we've made a mistake.

When one looks at the current debate about drug use and abuse and at the desire on the part of many to decriminalize the use of drugs, which is merely a step toward legalizing the use of those drugs, I wonder whether we've lost our senses. I truly feel that if we continue on this path—and one sees it again in terms of respect for the law, of civil disobedience and of openness—we're going to have a nation of dependants.

Then I would wonder what the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) would do with the new candidates for his OHIP scheme when they come through the process of utilizing not only the types of activity that are detrimental to health today, and I could talk about liquor and tobacco, but added to those the legitimization of drugs. In some cases I think we'll see an evolution from the softer drugs to the harder drugs. That is not the whole problem, but I fear opening up this area and legalizing use is going to cause us great problems indeed.

A lot has been said about OHIP. When I am talking about welfare I like to talk about health, because they are so often inter-related; and they account for about one third of the total provincial budget.

If you look at health budgets, running at something like $4,000,000,000 a year; and if you look at the number of OHIP claims processed, they are something in the neighbourhood of 60,000,000 a year, that's 5,000,000 a month; you wonder again how much of that is overutilization of the system.

I guess I disagree with many of my colleagues when I say we should try a deterrent fee. It has been tried in other places; but I don't look to other places, I think we could look after those who couldn't afford that fee, whether it be $2 or whatever. It is not a question of the money that $2 would raise; it is the fact that it might discourage some people who really are just looking for someone to talk to or who have problems of a nature not really requiring medical attention from attending a physician.

I would like to try that. Just looking at you now, Mr. Speaker, relaxed as you are and seeming to suck in every word, I think maybe you would be in agreement with me.

Mr. Ruston: I thought it was going right through.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: No, I don't think it was.

Mr. Ruston: He is listening, yes.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: He is indeed. He always listens and he always understands; and he so often contributes.

Mr. Ruston: Make sure you are in order.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I wish you would conjure up all the resources at your disposal, not only as a member of this Legislature but as Deputy Speaker, and assist the Minister of Health in trying to convince people that perhaps we have to take another look at our program.

Maybe we should look at Quebec. We have been looking at Quebec in terms of national unity and other matters; maybe we should look at Quebec in terms of its medical or OHIP-type program as well.

I am truly concerned, if we find the program disintegrating because of the exit of doctors, and I think my friends across the House would agree with me.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, I am buying a one-way bus ticket to Texas.

Mr. Taylor: I don't think that is a realistic approach.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: But surely you are in or you are out?

Mr. Makarchuk: Also suggest legislation where they can't sue you to collect the bill and they will all be back in OHIP.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I think maybe we should review that schedule of fees. They are much higher, I know, in Quebec. But either a doctor is a member of that program or he is not. If he is not, there is no way his patient is going to recover anything from that plan. It may not be the answer here but maybe it would bear looking at.

I am also concerned in terms of some minor things we do that come out in the media as major events. I am happy, again, to have my colleague the member for Peterborough (Mr. Turner) here, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health, because he has some first-hand knowledge of these matters, especially in his own riding. I know he is attentive.

Mr. Renwick: He represents the hallmark riding.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I'm glad you recognize it as the hallmark riding, but I was mentioning communications. There may be some deficiency in terms of our communications media, I don't know, but the way I sensed things out in the field in my community is people are genuinely concerned, if not afraid, of what is happening in terms of the disintegration of our health services in this province. Now that may be right or it may be wrong, but what I'm saying is there is that genuine concern, if not fear, out there.

The imposition of the $9.80 co-payment fee for the chronic care patients is an example. I appreciate what has been done to accommodate the people who can't afford that. I understand the revisionism that's gone on in terms of the health program, but you cannot erase the matters that are on the minds of the people. They are concerned that they are going to be harmed in some way; they are going to be rendered penniless, they are going to be victimized or their husbands or their loved ones are going to be victimized by the system.

Maybe that's communication, and poor communication. Maybe once you do something then it's hard to undo it. It may be that when we are talking about programs like that we're really talking about small amounts in terms of the overall budget of the Ministry of Health, which I mentioned was about $400,000,000.

The figures that have been given to me indicate there would be something like $24,000,000 saved through this co-payment, of which 25 per cent would go to the hospitals. I don't know, I've been trying to verify that, but if those are the figures we are talking, $18,000,000, all I can say is it's an awful lot of aggravation and grief and torment on the part of people in this province.

Another area I think could be pursued is the area of prescriptions. I know we're not anxious to take away any services given to people now, but I mention prescriptions because I think there's an obligation on the part of the doctors, the medical profession and the druggists not to unnecessarily prescribe. When they prescribe they should not write prescriptions for patent medicines or aspirin. I've heard of this type of thing happening. It may not be a big item, but I think it discredits the system we're trying to make operate. I think we all want to make it operate. I think we're all committed to the type of protection we deserve, that the people of this province deserve in the way of health care.

Another matter that troubles me, and one I think is of grave importance to the people of this province, is the area of industry. I'd like to talk about tourism in a few minutes, if I can. It's the approach of management and labour which concerns me.

I know the New Democratic Party have views about this, very strong views I'm sure. I'm sure they're sure their views are correct. I haven't tried to examine those views, but I feel that unfortunately we seem to have taken on a very adversarial position in labour relations. It's developed more in terms of a contest and we paint the bad actors. It can be the unions, it can be management. We seem to lose sight of the fact that it's essential that all the people work together.

I take my mind back to days, and the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) I'm sure would appreciate the earlier days, when some of the problems in the legal system had to be rectified. I'm sure he's familiar with the Fatal Accidents Act and the need for reform in those areas.

If you want to go back to the Hammurabi code of law: "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." We would wonder about that today. In our legal system we have put a price on an eye, a tooth, a leg and an arm. We don't take someone's arm or leg or eye. We try to compensate in terms of money. We feel that's more civilized, and I think it is. But in the field of labour relations, it strikes me that we haven't become and we are not civilized.

Surely a system must be developed whereby we can settle disputes, knowing that there are a number of parties involved besides the striking worker and the management, whether it's the family of the worker, the community or the health of the economy. I feel we have to make a determined effort to resolve this.

I am sure that members across the way have examined it at great length. There were commissions on this type of thing. There was the Rand commission, for example. I am sure they probably wouldn't subscribe to much of this, but at least it was a start in dealing with the matter by bringing it out in the fresh air and trying to establish some credibility in the process. That report was made a decade ago by a commissioner who, I think, had some credibility in the field of labour relations.

I wanted to mention that today because I think as members representing constituencies that are made up of all kinds of people, who surely must have some common purpose of creating a sense of well-being for others and of enhancing our lifestyle, we must take these things, put them on the table and ask how can we resolve these matters.

I know we can't go to countries like Japan or some other country to extract from those environments a system that seems to work there which we think might work here. I do believe, however, that it's time we explored more deeply the labour relations process so that we don't see the type of polarization that takes place today, the building up of hate on the part of people, a hatred and an uneasiness that permeates an entire community and which is going to be very difficult to discharge. It is going to take a long time to erase those memories from people's minds, regardless of who wins. We talk in terms of victories when we shouldn't be talking that way. Regardless of the outcome, we are going to have that feeling of ill will that I think is so terrible in our communities. I won't mention some of the strikes that are prominent today, but I do feel we have to tackle that area.

When I mentioned industry, I wanted to talk something about tourism because I represent and live in a riding which, as members know, is just a veritable jewel nestled in Lake Ontario. It is just a delightful piece of geography. When God Almighty made that first garden, I sometimes think it was Prince Edward county and that piece of Lennox on the mainland. I invite you all there as tourists.

Mr. Gaunt: Do you suspect that Norris Whitney and his sheep had something to do with it, too?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Well, we have those pastoral settings and a delightful sense of humour that I think no one should miss. I am sure my predecessor, who served my riding so well for 20 years, would be just delighted, if the members were to visit him and his sheep ranch and maybe breathe a little of that good country air; in some of the members' ridings, one can't really appreciate what good air is until one breathes ours.

But the same thing doesn't go for all our waterways. Maybe that is for another day, but I am happy to say they are improving. In improving I think they assist the tourist industry because, again, we were noted, and still are, for our fishing, both on a commercial basis and from the point of view of the angler; good fishing all round.

Of course, in terms of commercial fishing, it is more difficult lately because of the restrictions, restrictions that manifest the fear of PCBs, mercury, mirex, and, maybe, some other things that we haven't measured yet or haven't discovered.

But let me say we are graduating students every year in the sciences, with their sophisticated measuring mechanisms, who will be able to determine new dangers to our health. Then, of course, we can implement new regulations and new prohibitions to further reduce our tourism and our commercial fishing.

But seriously, in the eastern basin of Lake Ontario we have one of the major commercial fishing industries. It is a delight indeed.

Our tourist industry, I think, needs a shot in the arm. I am happy our Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) has become more aggressive in regard to this area. In a recent speech he indicated that steps would be taken to grade accommodation. So that when a tourist comes into an area he will know the type of accommodation he will be getting. I think that's good. We haven't had that in this province.

Mr. Makarchuk: We will be watching the budget.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I am sure it won't cost anything or we might not have it.

Something that will cost something is the announcement that the sales tax will be rebated to tourists; I think that could be important to our tourist operators.

I am somewhat concerned about the price of our gasoline—and the fact that gasoline is now being sold in litres instead of gallons. If the Imperial gallon wasn't confusing enough to the American tourist, I am sure the litre will be. But in any event there is supposed to be an education program, or an indication on the pump explaining just how the litre converts into an American gallon.

Mr. Gaunt: Just multiply by five.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: That might take away some of their apprehension in terms of the acceptance of costs in this country. As the members know, in the past I have been concerned about our service centres—at least some of those I know. Some have been accused of highway robbery because of ever-escalating prices—

Mr. Makarchuk: Right on.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —and I think that's an area that we as a government have some control over; it's an area we must get into. It is not just a question of adding a few folders or brochures about tourism. We could develop along these great highways of ours, centres, stops, or maybe even picnic areas.

Sometimes as I drive home during the week, and at the beginning or end of a week, I note those spots where we have these beautiful vistas often overlooking Lake Ontario. It is rolling country, and down in the valley there is a historic site. We have a tremendous history in our area and I am sure the history that is in some of your areas is a history that is not known, let alone exploited. We could have a place where tourists could stop off without feeling they are going to be victimized by some huckster, where he could maybe have a large map and see, through this information centre, some of the points depicted on that map, or some brief indication of the history and the heritage of these areas, and little detours where he could drive.

We don't have that now. I hope we do this because I think we could put tourism on a much higher profile in this province if we would do some of these things, which again, in my estimation, wouldn't have to involve a lot of money. The trouble is, as the members know, with government an idea, maybe a small idea, becomes a very big thing. By the time it goes through the machine, it is a major production. I don't look for that kind of a production. I am looking for something more modest and meaningful.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism has indicated he is going to ensure the tourist gets a fair exchange on the American dollar as well. I think public relations is a good thing.

Mr. Chairman—or Mr. Speaker, I am sorry; I see the Speaker has changed in body if not in spirit. I think we have to be very careful when we entertain our visitors in this province that we manifest the good will this province is known for, and that we be most vigilant in regard to imposing more regulations and fees. The announcement of a non-resident fishing licence, for example, of $35 is something I believe is tragic. I don't think there is any need for that. I think it will do irreparable damage if we start advertising in that way. There may have been, again, a lack of communication on the part of the ministry or the media or the recipient of that information, I don't know. It is certainly not something that would attract visitors to Ontario.

I hope we don't get involved in an angler's fishing licence, either. There has been some suggestion that we have to generate more staff in the Ministry of Natural Resources, provide more fingerlings, more stocking, more management of our lakes, and we then have to attack the angler and extract a fee for that.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, no. You just improve your fisheries regeneration program. You read the reports, Jim. They will tell you the same thing.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Surely to God there should be something in this province of ours we can do without lining up for a licence.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's right. Put a little energy into that department.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: If I feel on occasion I want to wet a line and then realize I don't have a licence in my pocket, I just wonder what the next step is going to be. I would think we are spending as much on maintaining clean air as we are clean waters.

Mr. Makarchuk: Too damned little.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: It may be there will be a licence for that next. In any event, again, don't blame the angler for the pollution in the waterways.

Mr. Makarchuk: Right on. Blame the government.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Don't blame the angler.

Mr. Makarchuk: Put the finger right where it is. Blame the government.

Mr. J. Reed: He is going as far as he can go. Give him a chance.

[4:15]

Mr. J. A. Taylor: If I were to put my finger on anything or anyone in this Legislature, I would put it on the member for Brantford. That's what I would do. That's the only way one could exercise equity.

Mr. Makarchuk: You're totally unfair. You are assigning powers to me that are beyond my capabilities.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I understand he is omnipotent. At least, he indicates that in his committee work.

Mr. Makarchuk: I don't even smoke.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: He is a man of infinite ability; I read some of the stuff he writes. He is a man with tremendous ambition; I can sense that. In any event, as long as he helps us with our clean air and our clean water, and doesn't assess blame on the angler—

Mr. Makarchuk: What are you getting paid for, Jim? What is the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) getting paid for?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I wouldn't want to comment on that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Neither would I.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: He might question that pay. I can tell the member he is performing more than his pay would represent. There is no doubt about that. I sometimes wonder why one would subject himself to such punishment as to be Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well, why doesn't he start doing his job?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: It certainly can't be for the money.

Mr. Makarchuk: We are trying to provoke him to act, that's all.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: He is doing the best he can. In fairness, the members know it is a very difficult task, regardless of who might hold that portfolio. It could even be a member of the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party. I can tell the House, it is not an easy task. Leave politics aside, as the members may do—I was going to say as the members may have done in the past although I don't think so, but hopefully as they may do in the future—and be fair. They know darned well it's a tough job and it's going to be a long process to clean up our environment. I am talking about our total environment.

Mr. Makarchuk: Have you ever considered not messing it up initially?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: It took a long time to mess it up; and we are not going to clean it up in a few days or a few years.

Mr. Gaunt: I agree it is a tough job, and it is even tougher for an aging government.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I look at the member and his youthful pose and I just wonder about the credibility of the opposition in that comment. It sort of destroys that remark.

Mr. J. Reed: Are you generalizing?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I am generalizing now.

Mr. J. Reed: I hope so.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I was looking at the youthful appearance and vigour of our Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: He got mugged in the corridors, too, you know, the other day.

Mr. Gaunt: By the mandarins. By the mandarins in the Premier's office.

Mr. Acting Speaker: There is a little too much banter going on here. The member for Prince Edward-Lennox has the floor.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know whether you are getting me out of a tough spot, or whether—

Mr. Acting Speaker: I'm trying to get myself out of a tough spot.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I wonder about that. In any event, Mr. Speaker, I did promise I wouldn't speak too long, because there are some to follow me who have a tremendous contribution to make.

Mr. Ashe: Not likely.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I had hoped some time to speak on this whole issue of Ontario's involvement in terms of constitutional change. I see the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) has a resolution, if I am not mistaken, before the House. I think it is important that we as representatives of our people, of our constituents, have some forum and have a voice in what posture our government is going to take. I hope the government then can get a sense of how the people we represent feel about this very major issue, a most important issue. That type of negotiation isn't performed in the isolation of this House, and I am convinced that it won't be. I am sure we will have an occasion later to debate that. I look forward to that particular debate.

We have a problem in terms of the economic health of this country and this province. We have things happening in our economy that are illusory in a way, that are deceptive in a way, that seem to lull people into a false sense of security. I don't think this year is going to be a happy economic year. I don't think people have begun to suffer as they may suffer, but hopefully won't have to if government and the people have the will and the determination to do something about it. Again, communication and levelling with the people is so important, but I will reserve some comments in regard to that for the budget debate.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you very much for your attentiveness and almost politeness in keeping not only order in the opposition but the remarks of the members to a minimum. Now, if I may, I would—

Mr. J. Reed: You can have another hour yet.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: No, I don't want any more time.

Mr. Nixon: You could use a previous speech.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I was anxious to get on to some other things and I keep pulling myself back. I haven't talked about the milk marketing board, I haven't talked about our cheese factories, I haven't talked about our cheddar cheese people, I haven't talked about our mandarins and the bureaucracy, nor the back alleys. I haven't talked about Ontario Hydro, nor have I talked about energy and the policy of the federal government. I haven't talked about the confrontation-type of politics that I am afraid is going to adversely hurt this country in dealing with other provinces and dealing with the federal government in terms of energy.

I haven't talked about those things—and I don't think there's time today to talk about them, because of the speakers who have indicated an interest to speak this afternoon—but some time I would like very much to talk about those and to give examples and to give my views in regard to those areas that are so essential in the period in which we live. The absence of energy, if one can contemplate it, is just incomprehensible. We don't have a civilization without it. The job—and we have the parliamentary assistant to the minister here—that this government has to ensure a secure supply of energy for the people of Ontario I think is one of the most important jobs in the country today.

I think the biggest problem we have, of course, is to convince the people of this province that we have a problem and if there was ever a need for communication there is a need for communication there. If there was ever a need for provincial policy and provincial strategy and a national policy—not a federal policy where provinces are disregarded, but a truly national policy where you have the consensus, where you have the co-operation of the provinces which have the energy and those who don't have the energy but may have other things—it's right now. We have to do that.

There's a lot of work to be done in terms of good provincial relations and there's a lot of work to be done in terms of federal-provincial co-operation, and in my view we don't get that through confrontation-type politics or confrontation-type dealings. I hope and I am sure that this province certainly will take up that challenge and iron out some of these matters.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to dwell on that matter today because I know there are speakers who are anxious to get on before 6 o'clock.

Mr. McKesock: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure today for me to respond to some of the things presented in the throne speech on March 6 and perhaps add a few other comments.

Coming from the large rural riding of Grey, I naturally look for items that would be of benefit to agriculture, small business, industry, tourism and senior citizens. I say senior citizens because we have an above-average number of senior citizens in our area compared with other areas of the province and below-average accommodation for them in regard to senior citizens' apartments and homes for the aged.

A Grey county committee started to work on a home for the aged for the town of Durham in early 1975. They found out that in the province the home for the aged system utilizes 28 beds per thousand residents over 60 years of age. In Grey county there are only 17 beds per thousand and in the Durham area, where this new facility is proposed, only four out of every 1,000 residents use a home for the aged. This points out that people cannot use it if it isn't there.

But if it has been proved beyond a doubt that the need is there, which it has, then I think we should move to get these places in place.

I have delivered anniversary scrolls to couples in the Durham area who have celebrated their 50th and 60th wedding anniversaries and also their 90th birthdays. They ask me: "When is Durham going to get a home for the aged and more senior citizens' apartments?" They tell me they are unable to maintain their residences any more and shovel the snow, et cetera, but are forced to remain there because there are no facilities. The villages of Holstein and Chatsworth are other areas that are going through this gruelling process of trying to obtain senior citizens' apartments.

When these are all well-established government programs that don't really cost the government much money and ones in which the community participates, and when it has been established that the need is there, why do we have to drag out these procedures for years and waste a lot of time and money before we get on with the job?

With these homes for the aged in place, it will take pressure off hospital beds as well. I will tell members why a little later. The Ministry of Health wants to keep people out of hospital and is trying to do this by closing hospital beds. This seems to me to be a backward way of taking pressure off hospital beds.

My son veals calves at home on the farm. He has several hospital pens for sick calves. He likes to have one or more of these pens always empty in readiness for an emergency. I have an interest in this business, as the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) has an interest in the hospitals. If I said to Steve that his expenses were too high and he must close some of these hospital pens, he would object strongly. Furthermore, if I forced it, he would have more dead calves.

I just can't see closing hospital beds. Of course, I will admit it is better than closing hospitals. But some people feel the government is still trying to close these small hospitals by cutting beds, putting the hospitals in an uneconomical position and then saying they must close because they are inefficient.

The government had to admit that these rural hospitals were efficient when they tried to close them before. It was consistently proved that they were economical, and much more so than the large city hospitals. Our rural hospitals were operating from about $70 to $90 per bed per day while the large city hospitals were operating from $200 to $300 per bed per day. We understand the large hospitals have more equipment, which makes up some of the difference, but not all the difference.

The Ministry of Health feels that doctors are putting patients in hospital beds without a good reason. In our area, it could be that some of these hospital patients could go to nursing homes, if there were any nursing-home beds available, which there aren't. Some of these people might not have reached a position that put them in a hospital, if there were adequate homes for the aged where supervision and facilities would be available to them.

If you were a doctor, Mr. Speaker, what would you do with a person who is living alone who you find is not sick enough to go to a hospital but too sick to be left alone, when there is no room in a home for the aged and no nursing home beds? There's nothing else for the doctor to do but to put the patient in the hospital.

I believe there is money to be saved in the health system, but closing hospital beds is not one of the ways. It is a great concern why we have so many health problems. It is a great concern how to cut health costs. There is one place where we could kill two birds with one stone, and that is with tobacco and alcohol.

It is a well-known fact that alcohol and tobacco are injurious to our health. Anything that injures our health is bound to increase our health-care costs. We could put enough tax on all alcoholic beverages and tobacco to double or triple the cost of the product. This would discourage its use, and all the tax collected could be turned over to the health budget. Advertising of these products could also be banned.

On December 12, 1977, the Ottawa Board of Education passed a resolution, which reads as follows: "Whereas the attitudes of students are deeply influenced by the media, that the Ottawa Board of Education deplore the advertising for alcoholic beverages carried on television and radio networks; that the Ottawa Board of Education invite the provincial and federal governments to take action to correct the present situation; that the Ottawa Board of Education invite other boards of education and separate school boards in Ontario to support this motion."

This resolution was endorsed by the Grey County Board of Education and sent to me. I wrote to the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick (Mr. Grossman), the then Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, sent him a copy of the resolution and said I supported it and felt that such advertising should be banned. The minister's reply to me states: "Interestingly, those jurisdictions which have banned advertising have seen the largest increases in per capita consumption. Any change in our current philosophy of controlling and monitoring beverage alcohol advertising would cost many hundreds of jobs, loss of industry and perhaps only result in increased exposure from US television, over which we have no control."

At the start of the paragraph he says that where they banned advertising there was more consumed; but, before he finishes, he says that if advertising were banned there would be a loss of industry. In my response to that paragraph, I would start with the same word he used: "Interestingly." Interestingly, that paragraph does not make sense.

Mr. Ashe: There is an advertising industry, you know. That's what he's talking about.

Mr. McKessock: Oh, it's not the liquor industry?

Mr. Ashe: No.

Mr. McKessock: Does the member agree that liquor consumption would increase if we banned advertising?

Mr. Ashe: I don't know. If that's what he says, that's what he says.

Mr. McKessock: That's what the minister has stated.

Mr. Ashe: At least I listened to the letter once and knew what he was saying; that's more than you obviously did.

Mr. McKessock: I am glad the member has helped him out in this regard, but there is part of this that is awful hard to understand.

I sent the same resolution to the Minister of Health, and, interestingly, he never replied.

I believe the doctors have to take some responsibility and make some input into how these savings can be made. They are in a good position to know in what areas money can be saved and should come forward with some good advice to the Minister of Health.

I also believe that all doctors should stay in the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. If their fees are too low, then negotiations should take place about the OHIP fee schedule. A user fee could be charged for each office visit or doctor's visit. This could also help in cutting down on frivolous calls.

I am sorry that we seem always to have to react and fight against things that have happened to us that should not have happened to us, such as hospital bed closings and registry office closings. The Niagara Escarpment Act is another thing that should not have happened to us. I am pleased that, after all the presentations to the government and the Niagara Escarpment Commission and complaints from people in all parts of Ontario about the proposals brought out in February 1978, and the presentation of my bill, Bill 62, An Act to amend the Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act, the government backed off on the area it was going to control under this act.

Although it is good that the area has been cut down, for those of us who still live in the area under these controls not much has changed. We hear rumours that the final plan—and I am glad the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) is in the House—when it is put before us later this year will be more acceptable. It had better be, or the government will have a bigger fight on its hands as this plan comes down to the wire.

I fail to see how this plan for the Niagara Escarpment area will ever be acceptable until it is turned back to the local municipalities to control through their own official plans and zoning bylaws. This could be done right now: disband the Niagara Escarpment Commission and stop this useless waste of money and duplication of planning.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: You don't mean that, do you, Bob?

Mr. McKessock: I do mean that, sir. I have here a newspaper article headlined "Maloney Justifies Firing Investigator." Interestingly enough, he has been hired by the Niagara Escarpment Commission. I hope this isn't where the government picks up all its personnel—from among people who have been fired because they have had extensive police investigations done on them. In the statement, Maloney says after he read the police report on Mr. David Cossett. "I was even more alarmed. The public would have been outraged if I had kept him in my employ." Members know my objection to the things which have been happening in the Niagara Escarpment. We wonder if this is where the government obtains its staff.

I might also mention that last Friday night at a meeting in Warton of the Northern Ratepayers' Association, at which 400 people turned out, they were just as alarmed as they were one year ago. It is too bad, and I certainly hope this new plan will soon be before us in a much transformed way from what the proposals were last year. Cutting back the area was fine, but for those of us who still live in the development control area, really nothing has happened.

I receive letters from people who say they don't know who to support because it seems all three leaders are in favour of the Niagara Escarpment Act. To be fair to both opposition parties, I must point out that in 1973 when this act came into force, it was supported only by the majority Conservative Party.

The NDP did not support it because they didn't think it was strong enough. It is a lucky thing this country was developed before the NDP party and some of these environmental groups were around.

Mr. Makarchuk: The NDP is not the NDP party, which is being redundant. Let's be accurate: New Democratic Party or NDP, not NDP party.

Mr. McKessock: I apologize. It is lucky this country was developed before the NDP and some of the environmental groups were around—

Mr. Makarchuk: If we had been around you would still have some of the country left. As it is, it is owned by somebody else. You have sold the damned thing.

Mr. Ashe: If you were in power, we would still be back in the horse and buggy days, I agree.

Mr. McKessock: This country would never have materialized.

Mr. Makarchuk: At least you would own the horse. Right now it is owned in New York.

Mr. McKessock: We would still be in the bush and—

Mr. Ashe: I would rather have it owned in New York and be able to drive it.

Mr. McKessock:—no one would have been allowed to cut a tree or build a log cabin.

Back to the party leaders: I was at a public meeting in the St. Lawrence Centre in Toronto the night it was jammed to the rafters with environmentalists and Toronto folk. The NDP leader was there together with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, the minister in charge of this whole mess for the government, the Liberal leader (Mr. S. Smith), and Mr. Gertler, who dreamed up some of this protection plan back in 1963. We have been spending needless millions of dollars on the plan ever since.

Of the three party leaders that night, the Liberal leader was the only one who stood up and said we must support the landowners and their property rights, and he was booed for doing it.

The NDP would take away all property rights.

Mr. Makarchuk: Baloney.

Mr. McKessock: This country was built on property rights and ownership of land.

Mr. Van Horne: They don't draw many votes in Grey county, do they, those NDPers?

Mr. McKessock: Call it tradition, call it culture. call it whatever you like, but do not destroy our country by dismantling the pride we have in ownership of property and the expected and cherished rights that go along with it.

Mr. Makarchuk: Like who owns our manufacturing industries, who owns our oil industries, who owns our resources? How about answering that question, if you want to talk about the country?

Mr. McKessock: In Grey riding, we're more concerned about our land.

Mr. Makarchuk: Look after your own selfish ends, is that what you're saying?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. McKessock: When you have a Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act that infringes on your rights, then it's up to you to defend them.

Mr. Makarchuk: How come you don't defend the takeover of resources?

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Grey has the floor. Will he please ignore the interjections and proceed.

Mr. McKessock: The members have seen what the Conservative government wants to do to them. They brought in the act at a time when they had a majority government, when very little could be done to stop them. The 1975 election slowed them down, and 1977 made them choke. If they would just choke once more and swallow the Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act, we could proceed with some sense of accomplishment.

I notice in the Niagara Escarpment Commission's latest issue of Cuesta—

Mr. Makarchuk: Who has to pay for the escarpment?

Mr. McKessock:—the chairman, Mr. Ivor Mullin, is still saying: "We welcome your comments and we value your input; let's hear from you." They've heard plenty from us but they don't listen very well. Their own advisory committee, set up by the commission and comprising people felt to be knowledgeable and fair about the subject, told them to scrap their proposals before they were made last February 1978 because the advisory committee knew they were not acceptable. To my knowledge, the commission members have never met face to face with their own advisory committee but only through staff. They seem to want to keep a certain distance between the Niagara Escarpment Commission and their own advisory committee. "Let's hear from you," he says. They still have hope that from somewhere out of the Niagara Escarpment will come some supporters.

Now I'd like to switch to agriculture. I'm sorry the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) isn't in the House; he was here a few minutes ago. Out of a 28-page throne speech, four small paragraphs were devoted to agriculture. If that shows the emphasis this government puts on agriculture, it is very small. Agriculture has always been regarded as the backbone of our country but it won't stay that way unless some attention is directed to it.

Ontario has always been a leading province in agriculture but Quebec is gradually leaving us behind. Most of us free enterprisers do not like many handouts and subsidies. But what do you do when a neighbouring province gives all kinds of incentives to farmers and allows them to update their facilities and become more sufficient? It happened with milk. We in Ontario are complaining because we don't have enough milk quota now, although we did not fill our quota a few years ago. That allowed Quebec to take some of it.

We used to be the Canadian leaders in hog production. Because of low-interest loans and capital grants to Quebec farmers by the Quebec government, Quebec is now the leading hog producer in Canada. One year ago the Ontario agriculture minister, at the southwestern conference in Ridgetown for Ontario pork producers, said Ontario hog producers should consider expanding their enterprises. He noted that Canada now imports large amounts of pork. He regretted that Ontario was no longer the largest producing province. He said Quebec killed 131,500 more hogs last year than Ontario. While the minister was saying Ontario should consider expanding, Quebec already had given its farmers the means to expand. They responded, pushing Quebec into number one position in pork production. They moved from a 72 per cent self-sufficiency in 1974 to 105 per cent now. [4:45]

Where would the government get the money to support agriculture the way it should? It could start by shifting a little and putting first things first. It could take the $6,500,000 used to subsidize the Ontario Racing Commission for starters. Right now Quebec is giving grants of $20,000 to a farmer who wants to get into the feedlot business. I don't like grants but if we want to maintain the industry and have our farmers competitive with Quebec farmers, then we must see that we have the same opportunity.

Mr. Makarchuk: Ford has no reticence about accepting grants and I don't see why you should worry too much.

Mr. McKessock: Right, I am glad the member brought up that point. The government was not long in giving Ford Motor Company $28,000,000 to keep the car business booming in Windsor and in Ontario and make it competitive with the US. Is agriculture not as important in Ontario as the Ford Motor Company?

Mr. Makarchuk: I agree with you.

Mr. McKessock: We must keep a close eye on agriculture in Ontario both in the farmland preservation area and in our production units. If we are going to have a tile drainage program that gives six per cent money to some farmers to tile drain, we must see that enough money is available so all farmers who tile drain receive this money. We cannot credit ourselves with a program that only helps some. I believe in equal opportunity for all and this is not what we have been getting. If we are going to have a dairy herd improvement program to test and record milk production in herds, we must provide this service to all who want it and not just to some.

I would like to talk about industry and small business for a while. The same thing applies here. If we are going to give grants to Ford Motor Company to expand in Windsor, we had better be prepared to give grants to Kroehler furniture company in Durham to expand. If we are going to give grants to Reed Paper to install pollution control equipment, then we had better be prepared to give grants to Pepler-Sklar in Hanover to put in pollution controlling cyclone systems that the Ministry of the Environment is pushing for. We must not lose sight of the fact that these small industries are just as important as, or even more important than the large ones. If anything crippled Pepler-Sklar in Hanover, which employs 365 people, everyone in town would be affected from the barber to the tax collector. I doubt if Windsor would have fallen if Ford had not built its addition there.

We must remember also that at least 60 per cent of our jobs are in the area of small business. Eighty per cent of the jobs created last year were from small business enterprises, businesses employing fewer than 20 people. Seventy-two per cent of all jobs created in the last eight years have been created by such small enterprises and these figures are from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. This proves how important small business is and how we must encourage and support it.

The section in the throne speech on tourism, another important part of Ontario and Grey riding, was two short paragraphs, mainly on the "We treat you royally" program, a program that nobody seems to care too much for. What has it done? It has made a lot of lapel buttons. They say this year they are going to train 25,000 tourism employees on how to treat people. I feel the resorts in Grey are already treating people royally and would rather have seen the 10 per cent tax dropped off meals in restaurants over $6.

I would like to say a few words about our so-called energy problem. I am quite sure we do not have one. We could be self-sufficient in energy if we wanted to without any trouble. We have enough farmland to grow energy crops unless we allow our farmland to get paved over. Methane gas production from manure could make most farmers self-sufficient. We could make more use of the wind and sun. As for nuclear power, it appears to be unlimited.

It is unfortunate that the government has spent so much of our money on nuclear power and gone so far beyond our needs. If I were the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) or the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), I would not cry about it too long but would take steps to sell it, even if incentives had to be given to do this. Here we have power we cannot store, sitting there ready to be used, costing us money whether we use it not.

I am one of the eight per cent who heat their homes electrically, and I like it. My wife likes it even more; there is no dust, no drafts, even heat in each room, or different heat in each room if you prefer.

Mr. Martel: And the price is right.

Mr. McKessock: Yes, it costs a little more, but it is better. You drive a better car at a little more cost, too.

Does it not make sense to give a $500 or $600 grant to those who would install electric heat? It turns something that is sitting idle into a money-maker. You start to use that energy and get paid for it; you will not be long getting your $600 back, and then it is gravy.

Before I close, I want to come back to another issue to do with senior citizens. We need some form of subsidized taxi service in our small towns and villages to allow senior citizens to get to the stores, doctors' offices, et cetera. I am thinking of small places such as Palmerton, Harriston, Clifford, Chatsworth and Dundalk, where the population ranges from 500 to 1,800 people; they are not large enough to support a full-time taxi.

Surely, when the Toronto Transit Commission is subsidized to the tune of $105,000,000 a year, there could be a few dollars to help the senior citizens in places like Palmerston get to the store.

Mr. Speaker: it has been a pleasure for me to respond to some of the things in the throne speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Applause]

Mr. Warner: Almost all my colleagues applauded. I will have to work on that.

Before I begin, I realize that all members of the assembly would want to indicate that the throne speech should in no way reflect upon the integrity and good office of the Lieutenant Governor. She is a fine person; I have had occasion to meet her, and I know she would not wish in any way to be held responsible for the speech we had to endure.

I might also say before I begin that I certainly appreciate the reappointment of yourself as Deputy Speaker, and I would like to say to the Speaker, who is not with us at this moment, that I also appreciate his reappointment.

New Democrats across this country fought for some long time to bring good medical health care to the citizens of this country. Both at the federal level and throughout many provinces my colleagues in the New Democratic Party fought hard over a long period of time to wrestle medical care away from the private interests—those who viewed it as an opportunity to make money—and to bring instead a program which said that every person had the right to proper medical care and that it was a social responsibility of the government to provide medical care.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that when we finally got it, when we finally convinced the Liberals in Ottawa that they had to bring in the program, it was written into the agreement that universal access must be guaranteed. We progressed in Ontario along those lines and, until a little while ago, we had almost reached that stage where we could say with some pride that we had a public health program which was available to every citizen and was available with equal access to all. Now in the last few months we see that universal access is being threatened.

In fact we see that the very existence of a medicare program in Ontario is being threatened. And for what reason? It is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, and you know it as well as I do: Because those private interests are sharpening their talons; they are sitting on the sidelines ready to pounce at the very opportunity when our public program disappears and they once again can enter into the insurance market and once again assure us that some citizens in Ontario will not have access to the health care program: health care at a price; health care to the highest bidder.

It is quite interesting, I had several calls on the weekend from my constituents. One gentleman in particular phoned and said, "You know, I believe in the private enterprise system. I have no quarrel with doctors offering their services to whoever can afford to pay the extra amount. That's fine. They are perfectly free to do that in my opinion, but not in our publicly-funded hospitals. Surely I, as a citizen, when I go into that hospital, can be guaranteed that the fees I paid for OHIP, through my premiums and taxes, will cover the services. I, as a believer in private enterprise," he said, "do not understand why that should be allowed to occur in the public hospitals."

Of course, I said, "I agree with you completely. I don't understand why the government is allowing this. I have no idea why they would do such a thing; but they have." This man gave me his case of having attended the Scarborough General Hospital where he required the services of an anaesthetist—I always have trouble with that one, but Hansard spells it properly so I don't have to worry.

Mr. Van Horne: Just call him the gas man.

Mr. Warner: Because all the anaesthetists are opted out at Scarborough General Hospital he received a bill. He has no choice. He cannot select an opted-in anaesthetist because there isn't one. He received a bill. He was incensed. How was it that someone could use publicly-funded facilities, after he has paid his premiums and after he has paid his taxes, and then get a bill? I don't understand it either.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read you a suggestion: "Commends to the attention of the government a system of negotiating fees and utilization rates concurrently, so as better to promote the two objectives of quality care and cost containment without economically penalizing medical practitioners.

"If, for example, the government were to negotiate a multi-year agreement with the profession, incorporating a substantial increase in fees in exchange for a commitment to hold constant the level of utilization [decelerate the revolving doors] both these objectives could be achieved. To ensure cost containment the fee increases for subsequent years could be made contingent on the utilization performance in the first year.

"Such a scheme has now been successfully and amicably negotiated in Quebec and seems to be working very well on the basis of early anecdotal reports. It appears that such a scheme would address the legitimate concerns of the medical profession over the level of fees, as well as the need for responsible cost control by the government. If so, the vexing trends in medical practice and in opting out might be reversed or at least mitigated."

[5:00]

Did I make that suggestion? Sounds reasonable enough to think that I would have made such a suggestion. That suggestion was put forward and agreed to by the members of the New Democratic Party, the members of the Liberal Party and the members of the Conservative Party who were sitting on that select committee on health-care costs; there was unanimous agreement on that suggestion. The committee, also unanimously, went on to say that: "User fees—" and that's what the extra billing is—"by definition shift costs to those who are sick and therefore undermine one of the basic foundations of the scheme. The committee contends that, to further penalize those who are sick, usually a condition beyond the control of the patient, would have a very adverse, compounding effect upon what are already unfortunate circumstances.

"In summary, having weighed all the evidence presented to it very carefully, the committee concludes that user charges for medical care are inappropriate at this time. Since supplementary charges by opted-out physicians are a form of user charges, the committee is concerned about recent increases in the rate of opting out, particularly in some communities where most physicians have exercised this option. The committee is sensitive to the underlying causes of the dissatisfaction of these physicians and urges the government to reconsider the mechanism for establishing the level of benefits under OHIP."

Committee members, including the Conservative members of that committee, were unanimous. We saw that we have a serious problem in the province with opting out, and we have a serious problem with access to our medical care system. The committee put forward a reasonable solution to the problem; a solution which is being used currently in the province of Quebec, and used successfully.

What was the government's response to this? Nothing. The Minister of Health refused to take part in the debate on the select committee report. He was given the opportunity; he was offered time in the debate, it was to be set aside for him to participate, and he refused. He again refused in the House, under questioning, to consider seriously the suggestion put forward by the committee. It appears to me that the committee's work was a waste of time.

The committee had excellent counsel. It had the use of economic specialists, people who were specialized in medical economics. It had the use of top officials in the Ministry of Health. It had the undivided attention of several members of this assembly. It applied itself for quite a few weeks, and came up with a pretty comprehensive report and a very reasonable suggestion as to how to handle the current problems; and they are serious problems.

They are serious problems, because unless we solve them the public health care system we fought so hard for is going to disappear, there is no question about that. When one examines the facts; when one examines what is happening in our system, how access is being denied to those who cannot afford to pay; when one looks at the change in the regulations allowing doctors to bill not only in their office but to use the public facilities in order to extra-bill—to have their cake and eat it too—then one knows that our health care system is under attack.

Now we are into the political forum where we can do nothing else but fight, opposition against government, fight hard to retain our public health care system. The shame of it is that a select committee of this assembly, with representation from each of the three parties, sat down and in a spirit of co-operation examined the problem and came up with some reasonable suggestions; and this government, particularly the Minister of Health, in a cavalier fashion tosses those reasonable suggestions aside. Instead, it decides to kowtow to the private interests. I suppose the minister will receive an award from London Life at some point as they wait for the day when they can bring in their inequitable solution.

Mr. Speaker, I tell you very plainly that I will not rest until we have won public health-care coverage for the people of Ontario. It is a right; it's not something that's open to the shop. When one runs a public hospital or operates a doctor's office, it isn't like running Mr. Submarine. It's just not that kind of business. It's a social responsibility and one which this government should be taking seriously.

I know as well as any member of this assembly that the doctors have concerns. I understand some of those concerns. After all, I not only sat on the committee but I went and personally visited two hospitals and spent a couple of days there talking with the doctors, the nursing staff and the patients. I got a much better and deeper understanding of the problems which physicians face.

Certainly, I would be very upset if I had done work and wasn't repaid for three months. That's what happens to a lot of physicians. They put their bills into OHIP, and because the government doesn't know how to run a computer system it's three or four months before they get back their cheques. That's a legitimate concern of a doctor and it should be of any person who is paid a salary. I understand that. I also understand that in this age of computers the government should know how to run a computer system.

Mr. McClellan: You should get Allen Gordon to show you how to run it.

Mr. Warner: What's interesting is that when one examines the health-care system in the province of Saskatchewan, one finds that under similar circumstances most doctors aren't unhappy. One of the reasons they're not unhappy is that within a couple of weeks of putting in their submissions they get paid. Their system is so well refined that a doctor can see a patient and opt in, and see the same patient the next day for a different matter and opt out, go through the billing system and receive his cheque within a couple of weeks. No wonder the doctors in Saskatchewan are happy.

Our doctors in Ontario would be happy too if they had the benefit of that good government scheme, but they don't. Instead, they have a fumbling government which doesn't know how to run a computer system.

They're not hollow words, Mr. Speaker, I sat watching in awe as officials from the Ministry of the Treasury battled with officials from the Ministry of Health over whose figures out of the computer were correct.

Mr. McClellan: They don't even know how many subscribers they've got.

Mr. Warner: Do you know what happened, Mr. Speaker? When we talked about those people who would be eligible for premium assistance, the Ministry of Health told us in round figures that there were about 1,000 people who were eligible for partial premium assistance; but the Ministry of Treasury in the same government said 163,000 people. As it turns out under scrutiny, the people from Treasury were right. The people from Health didn't know how to run the computer.

That's one of the reasons the doctors are so upset. They call it bureaucratic harassment. Why they say harassment is that unless that claim is settled within six months the claim is denied. The physician may have entered his claim on time and may have provided what he thought was the correct information, but through the government foul-up in the computer system he ends up by having his claim take six months and then be disallowed so that the work he did is not credited. No wonder they're upset.

The reason the committee proposed taking a look at a multi-year contract with the doctors is that we understood clearly from the doctors that because they haven't had what they view to be a sufficient increase in the rates they have decided to see more patients. In our common language, that is a revolving-door medical practice. If the rates don't go up for visits, just get more people through the office. They feel they have to do that.

We said: "Fine; why don't we enter into a two-year or a three-year contract, with the second year being dependent upon the utilization rate of the first year? If the utilization rate doesn't go up, you will get an increase in your rates. If the rate does go up, you won't get an increase in your rates. Fair?" It was fair to the doctors in Quebec, it works there.

But oh no; that can't even be considered by the Minister of Health. He won't even discuss it in this chamber, as I challenged him to last week. He prefers instead to evade the question and to cater to the private interests.

The minister should no longer enjoy the confidence of this House; that's for sure. He's made a botch of this whole thing, from start to end. The result of it is that in some communities in Ontario they don't have the luxury of a choice. In some hospitals, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, there isn't any choice.

He had the audacity to stand in this House the other day and say the patient will have the choice if he insists. I ask him to put himself in the position of a patient lying in a bed in the hospital waiting surgery when the anaesthetist comes in and says: "If you insist we can get an opted-in anaesthetist, except there aren't any in this hospital. I'm sure if you insist and lie here for a while we'll find one from some other hospital."

That is total nonsense; that isn't going to happen. A patient isn't going to insist on his right for an opted-in doctor as he lies in his bed waiting for surgery the next day. The minister doesn't even choose to be reasonable.

What bothers me as well about the hospital situation is that because of the cruel cuts which have taken place the hospital staff are forced to work under some extraordinary circumstances.

I was astonished, quite frankly, when I visited Scarborough General Hospital on Friday, February 23 of this year, and spent six and a half hours there, to learn that, on average, each day there are 275 patients in the emergency ward to be dealt with by a handful of staff and that they are dealing with them in cramped quarters. When I say cramped quarters, I'm talking about the total emergency facility space being smaller than the space of this chamber in total. That includes operating rooms, the X-ray facilities and the waiting room. The supervisor in charge of the total emergency service has a broom closet, a real broom closet, with the world's smallest desk placed in it.

The conditions under which that staff are operating are absolutely phenomenal. If that's not bad enough, the chief nurse in charge, Ms. Nora Murphy, the supervisor of emergency services, told me it has reached such a crucial situation in Scarborough General that she is afraid that one of these days she is going to misplace a patient in the emergency ward.

There are so many people that they cannot handle them. When they come in they are assessed quickly and sent off to different places, some to X-ray, some to the operating room and some to be seen by a specialist. She said: "We have too many people for the space and not enough staff. I am going to misplace a patient one of these days."

During last year more than 100,000 people came through the emergency doors of Scarborough General Hospital. Many of those people had to wait in the corridors on stretchers. Many of them waited six, eight and 10 hours for help. Many of those were elderly people, because Scarborough General is forced to serve the needs of elderly people from nursing homes from as far away as Stouffville and Port Elgin, down into the southern portion of Scarborough, and out into Pickering and Durham, and into the York region. Those elderly patients, if they do not have a truly emergency situation, will wait six, eight, 10 hours to get help.

[5:15]

It's not the fault of the staff. The staff was more than diligent. The staff was more than cheerful in the way it went about its business. The doctors, the nurses, the nursing assistants; all of them were trying to move as quickly as they could and cover as much territory as they could.

I guess the real crunch for me came when Ms. Murphy said she'd been at the hospital 21 years—she was there at the time when the hospital was run by the sisters—and over this period of time the worst change she had seen, because of the cruel cuts of the government, was that no longer was there time for tender, loving care by the nursing staff.

Some members may think that's not important. They may think that's something frivolous. Unless you've been in a hospital as a patient trying to convalesce, you can't really appreciate what "tender, loving care" means. It's that extra attention from a nurse to find out if you are comfortable. "Would you like some reading material? Do you need a visitor? Have you had a visitor for a while? Would you like someone from the clergy to come and visit you? Is there something we can do for you besides the purely medical treatment you're receiving?" That's not possible any longer at Scarborough General—

Mr. Hennessy: Tender, loving care.

Mr. Warner:—nor, I doubt, anywhere, including Thunder Bay, because of the hospital cuts, because of this government's activities.

Mr. Hennessy: More so.

Mr. Warner: That's not the worst. This visit, I remind you, was on February 23. As of April 1, Scarborough General was being ordered to cut back a further three quarters of a million dollars.

I don't know where they're going to cut. There is no plush carpet to roll up. There are no fancy chairs to get rid of. I saw all of those administrative facilities. Do you know where they're going to cut? They are likely to close down one of the operating rooms one day a week.

Do you know what that does? That cancels electives; which in turn means that someone, at 10 a.m. on the morning he was going to go into the hospital, will be phoned at home and told: "I'm sorry, despite all the arrangements you made at work, the arrangements for day care, and your psyching yourself up for this operation, don't come in today. We don't know when you should come in, but we'll let you know." That's what's going to happen. It happened about 300 times at Scarborough Centenary Hospital last year. It's likely to happen more often this year.

It's obvious that I, or any member of the opposition, could go on at great length regarding the public health-care system, because I feel very deeply, as I know members over here do as well, that this system for which we fought so hard is under attack, and that unless we maintain our vigilance, unless we're able to confront the government directly, that system is going to disappear.

Mr. Ashe: Don't worry about the money; easy come, easy go.

Mr. Warner: While the member for Durham West has absolutely no concern for the public health-care system, while he's rich enough to pay the bills—

Mr. Ashe: Give it away.

Mr. Warner:—his constituents aren't.

Mr. Ashe: No. I'm worried about my constituents; that's the difference. They pay the taxes too.

Mr. Warner: As long as I can breathe I'll fight for a health-care system, because it's a basic right and because it's a necessity in this society. No matter how hard this government punishes the health-care system, I'll fight and I'll fight, and this public will be heard.

Mr. Nixon: As long as you draw breath.

Mr. Ashe: Hurray, hurray.

Mr. Hennessy: For God's sake don't fight Rotenberg, that's all.

Mr. Villeneuve: Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, I do want, first to congratulate the mover and the seconder to the speech from the throne. I'd like to say that we have the addition of two very capable representatives in the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) and the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Ramsay).

I do want to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, for the way you keep order in this Legislature. Sometimes it is not easy, but nevertheless you meet those responsibilities very well, and so does the Deputy Speaker.

A lot has been said about hospitalization and OHIP. I happened to turn on the television a few weeks ago. The President of the United States was making his address on the state of the union to the Senate and Congress. He spent a great deal of his speech assuring the American people that his government would do everything possible to keep down the cost of hospitalization.

They are not, in that rich country, covered the way we are here. It is quite easy to criticize and find fault. It is costing us almost $11,000,000 a day. Yet, some of these people who fought so hard to keep down the OHIP costs to the individual are now demanding that we have better services. In any business you have to tailor your costs to your means.

We would like to be as humanitarian as they are. Nevertheless, hospitalization costs are very burdensome on all taxpayers in this province.

I have a slip here. I spent nine days in Toronto General Hospital. I asked for my bill because there had been a lot of discussion and I was curious. I waited for a week or two before I got it. It didn't cost me a cent. I happen to be in that golden age group, I do not pay any stipend. The rate was $206.55 a day; for nine days that amounted to $1,858.95, but it didn't cost me a nickel.

On top of that, because I happen to be a member of the Legislature, as is every other member, I am covered by London Life with semi-private protection. That bill came to another $99.00. All I had to pay was 40 cents a day for the use of the telephone—$3.60.

I just tell you about that, Mr. Speaker, to give you a general idea of what the actual costs are for people hit with sickness. That could be higher today. Admittedly, the cost is not as high in rural hospitals because they don't have the same facilities that hospitals in Toronto have. Still, it is a very costly business.

It is very true that we are all concerned because doctors are opting out. I have spoken to doctors in the rural communities. They are well satisfied because a small municipality has a medical centre. They talk matters over and say: "We will charge you a fair rate. We should get more, but you are performing a service in the community that we need. We will spread it on the taxpayers."

Mr. Nixon: Usually the doctors own it.

Mr. Villeneuve: They are reasonably well satisfied. I do know they may be a little slow. That is new to me—it wasn't brought to my attention about the bills coming in—but I know they are very happy that they don't have to collect most of their bills themselves.

Admittedly, in an urban area like this where you have specialists with high rents to pay, who have to pay increased salaries and one thing and another, there is an understandably serious problem. But the minister is working with the OMA and trying to resolve it as best he can.

I heard the member refer to Quebec. Let me say they can force their people and say: "Here, you've got to do that."

An hon. member: Why not?

Mr. Villeneuve: But that has not come about in Ontario. We are still a province of free enterprise where we have the right to worship and do as we like as long as we're within the law. That does not always exist in Quebec in that manner.

Mr. Nixon: They have compulsory church in Quebec?

Mr. Warner: They worked out a deal with the doctors.

Mr. Villeneuve: That's quite all right, but at a much higher rate than we pay here. That may be some of the fault, but where does the money come from? It's costing over $4 billion a year right now.

Mr. Warner: Less than the United States.

Mr. Nixon: The federal government pays that.

Mr. Villeneuve: They put in their share, but they equalize it across the country. In Newfoundland it's a lot cheaper than it is here, as the member knows—

Mr. Nixon: We're better off than they are there.

Mr. Villeneuve: They take the average right across, so as a result our dollar shrinks every way, percentage shrinks as well.

But I'm not finding fault; it's a wonderful service. Limited as it may be according to some, it's still perhaps one of the best services there is in the world today.

Mr. Warner: Fight to keep it there.

Mr. Villeneuve: Some find fault today with community services.

Mr. Nixon: Probably yours.

Mr. Villeneuve: But no matter what service there is, once the government takes the initiative to try to serve the public they demand; they demand more and more, but when it comes to an increase in taxes they become furious. Whose fault is it today if there is an enrolment falloff in the schools? Who are you going to blame, the government, because the people are not raising the families they did?

Mr. Worton: No, the pill.

Mr. Nixon: What have you done lately?

Mr. Villeneuve: We are caught in a position where the costs are going up, and yet I think it's about a four and one half per cent increase the school boards are given to settle with their teachers this year. There's not one board I know of that has settled within that percentage range. So again, somebody has got to pay the difference and the poor taxpayer is going to be involved.

In these times it is not easy to govern at any level, whether municipal, provincial or federal. We are all prone to find fault. But some of us who lived in the depression will realize we are living in a great country; it is a happy world as far as this country is concerned, with not too much trouble. Yet there is more discontent in households than there ever has been. The poor are trying to live like the rich; there's no distinction. Everybody is driving good cars; they've all got the facilities in their homes they need; whether they are bought on credit cards or anything else, nobody does without. But when it comes to having to pay, that's a story that's altogether different.

Mr. Warner: Come on, Osie; 25,000 in poverty right now.

Mr. Villeneuve: I'm not going to dwell on this too much. I think the government has taken a sound approach to the economic problems that are confronting not only this province but this country—

Mr. Warner: Should take a sound beating.

Mr. Villeneuve: I think a government that's been in power—they may say that we're tired and old, sometimes we can't deny that; but you compare this province to—

Mr. Nixon: Not you, Osie.

Mr. Warner: Decrepit; decrepit, worn and senile.

Mr. Villeneuve: —the rest of the governments in this country and you can understand why 50 per cent of the immigrants who came to Canada since the war have come to settle in Ontario. Something has attracted them here. It wasn't because it was a Conservative government, it's because it was a good government; that's what attracted the people.

Mr. Warner: If this government keeps it up they will ask to leave.

Mr. Hennessy: Because of loving care.

Mr. Warner: Punishing everyone.

Mr. Villeneuve: I have different things to speak about, but one thing I do want to speak about is the dairy industry in general. I'm not being too critical because, after all, I have 160 of the best dairy farmers in my constituency who enjoy a very valuable market in the city of Montreal. They ship their milk daily there and have been doing it for 70 years.

[5:30]

I also have another 80 or 85 who ship to industrial plants, but the federal government—and rightly so—has voted so much money for so much production of industrial milk across this country. Agreement has been made for a certain allotment. That was set in 1971. I'm not blaming anybody in general, but we never had too much of a problem in eastern Ontario until the new chairman of the dairy commission in Ottawa came on the scene.

The gentleman's name is Mr. Choquette who was a very valuable organizer for the Liberal Party in Quebec. They like him there, and I can understand that.

Mr. Nixon: We should have made him chairman of Hydro.

Mr. Worton: He had an axe to grind.

Mr. Villeneuve: Facts are facts.

Mr. Nixon: It was terrible of those Liberals to do that.

Mr. Villeneuve: We agreed in 1971 on the overall picture of industrial milk production in Canada on a total allotment of 443 million pounds of butterfat. Admittedly, there was no doubt that that had to be revised because a surplus was created. The federal government lost millions of dollars and just had to place the surplus in storage and sell it off at a very low price on the world market. In April 1977, the figures were revised. I want to give this here so that members will understand exactly what I am trying to say.

Mr. Nixon: We will listen.

Mr. Villeneuve: Ontario came into this system in 1970, the same as Quebec, which is the major producer of milk. Quebec had for its share 196,800,000 pounds butterfat. Ontario had 148,000,000 pounds butterfat. That was later revised. Admittedly, in eastern Ontario, we had very poor years in 1972, 1973 and 1974.

Mr. Nixon: We voted a lot of money to help you.

Mr. Villeneuve: In the case of our producers who were in pool one, that milk was transferred to supply the needs of the city of Toronto, which was fine. That was the best market, the best return and the most essential place to look after in diverting that milk. But the pool two shippers who shipped their milk for use as industrial products were penalized for it because that was used against them when the revision came in 1976. Strange as it may be, Quebec province kept building their herds and kept building their production in spite of going over their allotted production, they still were given a far more favourable consideration when this revision was made. Of all the millions of dollars that were spent to support butter and to support skim milk, 80 per cent of it was caused by overproduction in one province, Quebec.

I am not at this time trying to divide this country. Goodness knows, we are trying to bring it together.

Mr. Nixon: No, they are all good fellows.

Mr. Villeneuve: But facts are facts. When this revision was made, Quebec was cut from 196,800,000 to 177,600,000 which meant—and this is what tells the story—their reduction was 9.6 per cent. In Ontario our production declined from 148,800,000 pounds to 116,000,000 pounds butterfat, or 32,800,000 pounds butterfat, which is a reduction of 22 per cent.

The provinces in the west—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—produce less than 15 per cent of the total production, while Quebec and Ontario produce more than 80 per cent, but they were cut 27 per cent, Saskatchewan 37 per cent and Alberta 32 per cent.

Production in the Maritimes only amounts to 15,000,000 pounds butterfat altogether, and their quotas were revised very little—they were just about the same. They have enough for their own consumption.

What I am coming to is this: We have processing plants in eastern Ontario that closed last year. A plant in Gananoque which employed 80 people could process 1,000,000 pounds of milk daily. The firm that owns that plant bought a plant in Rouyn-Noranda, Quebec, opposite northeastern Ontario. They are operating that plant, which has a capacity of 1,000,000 pounds when the full milk flow is on in the summer. Every pound of that product is manufactured and diverted to the city of Toronto to supply the Ontario market, and not one pound of that milk is produced in Ontario.

Our cheddar cheese factories are crying for milk. Cheese plants are operating at 49 per cent of their quota capacity. You cannot do that indefinitely in any kind of business, because operating expenses are going up, irrespective—the costs of hydro, oil, labour and everything else—operating costs of every kind are going up. But if you have a lesser amount to process, it means the finished product cost you more per pound.

The result is that we are putting the few small operators that are left to the wall. They are going out of business.

This is an independent report and this is what it says about the dairy products. I say to the Ontario Milk Marketing Board that they have some responsibility in this. They made this deal.

When we talk about the dairy industry, let me tell you why I speak of the cheese industry as being so important. Back in 1904, Canada exported 234,000,000 pounds of cheese, and more than 90 per cent of that was manufactured in Ontario. Eastern Ontario has never gone away from the manufacture of cheese; east of Toronto is where 90 per cent of it is produced. But since November and until Saturday, which was the end of March, we have had trucks that were hauling milk from St. Claire, Quebec, which is 25 miles west of Quebec City. In other words, so that you will understand it clearly, it is like leaving the Ontario-Quebec border at the east end of my riding, right at the border, coming to Toronto, and going back every day, trucking milk; and yet we have people with no quota. The plants are operating at 30 per cent of capacity in order to supply the chain-store outlets here or lose that market during winter months.

That has been the situation for the last two years, and that is what is important. We have dropped 16.2 per cent in the production of cheddar cheese; Quebec's production has increased by 15 per cent in 1977 and 1978. I heard the member for Grey (Mr. McKessock) talk about the hog-raising business. What he said was very true. It may be true the farmers who wanted to go into dairy herds were given cheap money during those years to increase. I am not denying that at all, but when a rule is made and we agree to that on a national basis, on a percentage, what I want is a fair deal for the people I represent.

I am concerned. Mr. Speaker, let me give you a few figures. In 1966 when the marketing board took over, we had 16,221 producers in Ontario. Today we have 12,254 a decrease of over 24 per cent.

Mr. Nixon: How much more milk?

Mr. Villeneuve: Just a minute. In Quebec in 1966 they had 12,987 producers; today they have 24,984, an increase of 94.4 per cent.

Mr. Nixon: They had a Liberal government down there most of the time.

Mr. Villeneuve: Very true, and they had a Liberal government that was looking after their friends in Ottawa as well, if you want to be political.

Mr. Nixon: The federal Liberals thought we wanted atomic plants.

Mr. Hennessy: That's your boss. Don't talk about your boss.

Mr. Villeneuve: Let's give the facts. I am going to give a few facts the member is not going to like. This milk subsidy is a wonderful thing to the milk producers of Ontario. Nobody is going to deny it. But let me tell you this: Of the $1,331,333,000 that was expended from 1971 to 1977, over 50 per cent of that—in other words $667,973,000—went to Quebec.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Typical.

Mr. Villeneuve: I just want the members to know that. It is over 50 per cent. Ontario received $426,886,000 which is 32 per cent. According to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), our percentage of payment in the form of taxation in one way or another to the federal government is 42 cents on every dollar. If you figured out the whole volume it cost Ontario $130,000,000 more to receive that amount of money in that period of six years than we got out of it. So that is how it works there.

Butter: Quebec has averaged 130,000,000 pounds of butter per year. The consumption is roughly around 10 pounds per capita. They have 6,250,000 people, so the members can figure where the surplus has gone: to the Canadian Dairy Commission. Ontario averaged 78,000,000 pounds of butter per year. At 8,300,000 people, we are still importing butter. We still have two million more people to feed than Quebec.

It is interesting to note that over 80 per cent of the butter and skim milk powder purchased by the Canadian Dairy Commission in seven years was produced in one province, Quebec. All we are asking for is a little fairer deal for our people who can supply the milk, taking into consideration population and the market needs of our own province. After all, surely a farmer is entitled on a fair and equal basis to have a right to market his product on his own market. That is being denied the industrial shippers of eastern Ontario.

In 1976-77 and 1977-78, when Mr. Choquette appeared on the scene—

Mr. Rowe: The villain.

Mr. Villeneuve:—of the skim milk offered to the Canadian Dairy Commission, of the total of 239,100,000 pounds, 81.4 per cent was produced in Quebec in 1976-77. In 1977-78 the total Canadian production was 237,000,000 pounds of skim milk powder; the portion of percentage that was sold to the Canadian Dairy Commission was 82.5 per cent from Quebec.

When we have establishments that have to go to northwestern Quebec to buy plants to supply the market in case they lose it here in Ontario, and we cut down the production of cheese by 15 per cent because there is no milk allotted for it, something is wrong.

I am not trying to denounce the other fellow for getting everything he can, but I like to see fairness. An Anglo-Saxon couldn't get up and say what I am saying, because they would say over there that he was a bigot, but I will say it, because I am representing the people in my area. It doesn't matter whether it is a Frenchman, Scotsman or Englishman; when he hasn't got the dollars in his pocket, that's a different story. He is quite all right, and willing to go along, but he doesn't want the other fellow with his hand in his pocket all the time.

I could talk about the DREE program, but I am not going to bother about that, because we will have an occasion, perhaps, shortly.

Mr. Gaunt: Go ahead.

Mr. Villeneuve: Well, if you want it, I'll tell you. Last year over $160,000,000 was spent in Quebec and $25,000,000 in Ontario. What is it going to be this year? Perhaps I shouldn't say that; the agreement is not signed yet. They have cancelled ARDA. We are hoping to have the agreement signed for drainage and so forth, which we need.

Mr. Nixon: Look at all the federal dollars in our atomic program.

Mr. Villeneuve: But here's something that's worthwhile looking at. The reason I say that is that we have industrial shippers, and so have Huron, Perth, Grey and Oxford.

Mr. Nixon: Concrete mausoleums.

Mr. Villeneuve: Those are the counties that are adversely affected with pool two shippers, as we call them. But I have one message for the milk marketing board: It now has control, with pool one, of 85 per cent of the total production of milk. Take the whole family into pool one, and see that they all get fair treatment, that the poor do not get the crumbs, that they are all treated alike—provided they produce the right kind of product. They are equipped to do that.

This is very interesting: the total consumption of dairy products in terms of milk has declined by 22.6 per cent, comparing the five-year average for 1972-76 to that of 1952-56. This decline has been primarily the result of steady decrease in apparent consumption of fluid milk, which was more than 30 per cent less per capita in 1976 than in 1952.

I have no fault to find with those well-established farmers who have enjoyed that market and produced. But they are living in an ivory tower. Nobody can get into that market unless there is a shortage, nobody in this province. They are protected. They also produce industrial milk, and almost 60 per cent of the milk they produce in pool one fluid is skimmed down to two per cent or skim milk, which causes another 4,900,000 pounds of butterfat that is taken from the industrial shipper in the members' areas and in mine.

The result is that of the 2,200 or thereabouts—2,179, I believe—of pool two, according to the last figures, in terms of quota that means 60,000 pounds MSG apiece. Let me tell the House, there are a lot of farms in my area where, although it wouldn't solve their problem, it would resolve a lot of their financial burden if they were only given that opportunity to increase quota.

I repeat, with factories that are operating at 30 per cent, hauling milk with a roundabout as far away as 580 miles, and farmers who cannot sell it and these trucks going by their door—something is wrong. I do not blame the Canadian Dairy Commission altogether for it. The milk marketing board has performed a very wonderful service in general for the dairy herds and the dairy farmers of Ontario. But they did not do the job for the industrial shipper that could have been done. I will go that far.

I read this: "The per capita volume of fluid skim milk apparently consumed in 1975-76 was about eight per cent of the volume of partly skimmed milk. Per capita consumption of skim milk powder has remained relatively stable over 25 years. The five-year average is varying between four and a half to seven and a half pounds per person.

"On the other hand, some dairy products have shown trends towards increase in apparent consumption over the 25-year period. Per capita disappearance of both cheddar and process cheese has increased 140 per cent."

Based on the five-year averages for 1972-76 compared to 1952-56, we are allowing that industry to go down the drain. I do not blame the people of Quebec. They are building a plant that will process as much as 50,000,000 pounds of process cheese. In Ontario last year we had six applications for renovations to already existing plants or permits to build new ones. They were turned down, every single one of them, because there wasn't a sufficient supply of milk to go around.

I can only say we want justice; fair treatment. That is all we are asking for.

In 1976, cheddar, apart from that used as an ingredient in the manufacture of other food products, constituted 23 per cent of the total cheese consumed, and process cheese about 39 per cent. The remainder was under other varieties of cheese made from whole milk and creamed cottage cheese. Although relatively small in amount consumed, it has shown a generally steady increase over the past 25 years. Ice cream also has shown a generally increasing consumption trend over the years, although consumption appears to have stabilized at about two and three quarter gallons per person annually during the most recent years.

I know a number of young farmers who have taken over their farms from their fathers. We force them to become modern, to renovate their buildings. The result has been that they have thrown away the cans to meet the requirements—which is good; it is producing a better-quality product. But instead of $15,000 when they bought modern milking equipment and got the milk house built and they had a contractor come in to make an estimate on modernizing the barn, nine times out of ten he told them to forget about renovating the old buildings and to build a new barn.

They talked to their bankers and their bankers said, "Go and see the Farm Credit Corporation about this. You are milking 30 cows; they're the people to deal with." In good faith the Farm Credit Corporation agent came out and said, "If you want a viable operation you should try to increase your herd to 50 cows," which was sensible. But he has ended up with $70,000 to $75,000 of a mortgage yoked around his neck. His father was perhaps old-fashioned, careful, shrewd, did not want to go in debt, but told the boy, "If you want to take it over, take it over."

These people have got a quota of 200,000 pounds. Some of them have 225,000 pounds as their quota. They are begging to try to get more. They can produce more. They can grow all the feed they need in order to try to meet those obligations. We need the products right here in our home market, yet they're denied the opportunity to produce. We've gone down 24 per cent in total numbers in the last 16 years in milk producers. We're not producing the amount of milk we did then, but we didn't drop according to the numbers because, as the members know, there are better herds and there's better management.

Mr. Nixon: More water.

Mr. Villeneuve: There's more money coming in. Let's admit the truth. They're feeding better and getting more production. Nevertheless, they're the people for whom I feel sorry. The well-established farmer who's been going on for years never had it better. Let's admit the truth.

I talked to a beef cow man the other day—it wasn't a beef man—who sent a holstein cow to Montreal and came back with over $1,150. He didn't know what to do with the money. He didn't need it too badly. That's generally always the way.

Mr. Nixon: He could save it to pay taxes.

Mr. Villeneuve: He didn't need it too badly, not compared to some.

We all know, in fairness, those days are not going to last forever. The market is here now. These people have the opportunity, if given a reasonable increased amount of milk quota, which I believe in all justice and fairness they deserve because the product is sold here.

The situation is this: I spoke to an exporter two weeks ago and he told me if they had aged cheese, which they haven't got, they could sell 1,000,000 pounds to Britain. It's not to be had in Ontario. They were told in Ottawa to go to Quebec. They said, "We want Ontario cheese." Our name has been established there since before I was born for producing top-quality cheese, yet this is what's happening. That's sad enough, but I repeat, we have not got a system working that gives a man who's trying to meet his obligations and is willing to produce the milk a chance. The processors are crying for it, and hauling milk in that's costing them $3 more per 100 pounds by the time the transportation is paid than it would have cost them to buy it here from the milk marketing board. A revision has got to be made. I say the responsibility is with the Ontario Milk Marketing Board to represent the industrial end of the dairy industry as well as those who enjoy the fluid milk market.

On motion by Mr. Gaunt, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last Friday I undertook to advise the House of the design differences between the United States light-water reactor of the type used at the Three Mile Island, Pennsylvania, nuclear generating station and the Candu heavy water reactor used by Ontario Hydro at Pickering and Bruce.

At that time, I also undertook to report back to the House on various nuclear regulatory safety matters raised by some members.

Since then there have been suggestions that there is an immediate need for a review of nuclear reactor safety standards, and I would like to comment on these suggestions as well.

As honourable members know, there are a number of basic design differences between the Three Mile Island type of reactor and the Pickering and Bruce types of Candu reactor. I do not propose to deal with all these differences (although I am attaching schematic drawings which depict the two systems); rather, I propose to deal only with those differences that appear to be directly related to the difficulties being encountered at present.

It is important to keep in mind that at this point we do not know precisely what caused the accident. What we do know, however, are some of the consequences of that accident, and it is in that connection that we can compare the design features of the two reactors.

As honourable members are aware, there were early leakages of radioactive gases. One design feature of the Candu reactor which is fundamentally different from the Three Mile Island reactor is the vacuum containment system which exists at the Pickering and Bruce plants.

This vacuum containment system creates negative air pressure within the reactor building which causes the inside air pressure to fall below the outside air pressure. This means that, even if some radioactivity were released from the reactor, leakage would be inward. Radioactivity would thus be prevented from escaping to the outside environment.

A second problem that occurred with the Three Mile Island reactor was fuel damage and resultant overheating of the fuel rods. While fuel damage could also occur in the Candu reactor, there is another fundamental difference in the design of the two reactors which provides added protection to a Candu reactor. In the case of a Candu reactor, the reactor core would cool itself as long as there were water in the boilers; even if all the pumping systems failed, the water would circulate naturally.

In addition, the Candu reactor is not as likely to suffer severe fuel damage because the fuel, natural uranium, is dispersed in 380 pressure tubes in the Pickering reactors and 480 pressure tubes in the Bruce reactors; these tubes are surrounded by cool, low-pressure heavy water. The result is that the uranium bundles are not in close proximity to each other. On the other hand, the Three Mile Island reactor fuel of enriched, highly radioactive uranium rods is in a dense configuration within a single pressure vessel. It should also be noted that the pressure tubes of the Candu reactor are horizontal and that the heat transfer system is above the fuel core.

A further feature of the Candu reactor is that there is a large volume of moderator water in the calandria which provides additional protection in case there is a need to cool the fuel. Even if the normal coolant in the tubes is lost completely, the presence of the cool moderator makes a so-called meltdown of the core extremely unlikely.

A third problem which occurred at the Three Mile Island reactor was the accumulation of a hydrogen bubble at the top of the pressure vessel. The Candu reactor does not have this type of pressure vessel. In fact, if hydrogen or other gases were produced in a Candu reactor under similar circumstances, the gas would be dispersed in the water transport circuit and could easily be removed.

These, then, are the relative differences in the design features of the two reactors which are relevant to the major problems of which we now are aware. It would not be appropriate to speculate further until we have more information available to us. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have a scientific assessment team already in Pennsylvania and, as I will indicate later, we have been informed by the president of the Atomic Energy Control Board that his officials will participate in a full-scale review of the problems that occurred at the Three Mile Island reactor once conditions return to normal.

I would now like to turn to the questions which have been raised in the past few days concerning nuclear safety regulatory matters. These seem to fall into two broad areas: (1) the reliability of the emergency core cooling system and (2) the need for a review of nuclear reactor safety standards.

It has been alleged that certain internal working documents of the Atomic Energy Control Board (AECB) provide clear evidence that the emergency core-cooling system (ECCS) of Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating stations is not "satisfactorily reliable" and that the Inter-Organization Working Group (IOWG), of which Ontario Hydro is a member, is proposing to lower the safety standards for licensing of nuclear reactors.

Neither of these allegations is correct. In both cases the documents are being misinterpreted.

In the case of the ECCS, the issue being addressed in the documents is the ability to prevent fuel-sheath damage. Given present technology, Ontario Hydro and the nuclear industry cannot guarantee that such damage will not occur in every conceivable situation.

To protect the public in the event that a problem should occur, Ontario Hydro designs and builds into its nuclear plant a very effective containment system. AECB safety requirements are met by Ontario Hydro. What Ontario Hydro and the nuclear industry do is to build to the highest standards possible.

As for the lowering of safety standards, that allegation is simply not true. To clarify this matter, I am tabling today copies of two documents. The first is a paper prepared by the chairman of IOWG, explaining the basis for the proposed new standards. The second is a paper prepared by Ontario Hydro discussing the proposed new standards.

I might also draw to the attention of members that last November the AECB issued for public comment the entire report of the IOWG.

It has been suggested that the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs be specifically charged with the responsibility of investigating the matter of nuclear safety and be given permission to sit concurrently with the House so that it might begin work immediately.

First, let me make it clear that the government has no objection to the select committee investigating nuclear safety matters. However, the government sees no particular need to charge the select committee with this responsibility since, under its terms of reference, the select committee is already charged with the responsibility for examining Ontario's nuclear commitment, including:

- the performance and reliability of nuclear generating stations;

- the responsibility for, and the standards relative to, the safety of nuclear generating stations; and

- the environmental impact and health considerations related to nuclear power.

Quite clearly, if the select committee wishes to review nuclear safety matters, it may do so.

It has also been suggested that the select committee should begin sitting immediately. There is merit in this suggestion.

The timing of such a review in the context of what happened in Pennsylvania, however, is something which should be considered carefully.

I can advise the House that over the past few days we have been in touch with the president of AECB, requesting whether his board would be undertaking a review of Canada's nuclear safety standards in the light of the accident with the US reactor.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read into the record a letter of today's date from the AECB president on this matter. It is addressed to the deputy minister, and it says:

"In response to your inquiry yesterday and to our earlier discussions last weekend with respect to a review of Canadian nuclear safety standards in the light of the accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power (plant), I wish to confirm the actions which are currently under way and planned.

"Recognizing the emphasis that we place on the prevention of accidents, and the complementary efforts that have been made in establishing effective emergency plans, the actions that have already been initiated are considered to be an appropriate means of ensuring that the public interest is served. It is important that these efforts not be hampered by a hasty misdirection of resources, and I have cautioned against taking any steps which could be counterproductive.

"There is available in the public record a wealth of information on nuclear safety, arising in part from the Saskatchewan inquiry headed by Mr. Justice E. D. Bayda and the Ontario Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning, chaired by Dr. Arthur Porter. The voluminous submissions and transcripts of hearings, as well as reports issued by Messrs. Bayda and Porter, constitute an impressive account of the arguments posed by persons on both sides of the nuclear debate.

"What is essential at this time, recognizing the significant differences between the design of Canadian and United States nuclear power stations, is an in-depth review of the Three Mile Island accident once the facts are known. In this regard, we have been in daily contact with the US Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the board's staff as well as nuclear safety experts in Ontario.

"Hydro and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are constantly reviewing the information being provided. It is important to note, however, that the information provided to date by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission is very preliminary, and neither the commission nor the board is yet in a position to identify the lessons to be learned from the accident. Until such time as definitive information is available, a meaningful analysis of the accident is not feasible.

"From the outset of our consultations with the US Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the commission has responded very favourably to our request that an in-depth review of the Three Mile Island accident be conducted with a view to sharing our respective knowledge. This, of course, is in accordance with our long-standing arrangements with the US on a bilateral basis and on a multinational basis under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the nuclear energy agency of OECD. As you might well expect, US authorities are of the view that the Three Mile Island accident is of more relevance to other US nuclear power stations of the Three Mile Island design and to similar stations abroad because of the fundamental differences between that design and the design of Candu stations. I might also point out that nuclear safety experts in other countries have often commented upon what they consider to be the uniqueness and comprehensiveness of the Canadian approach to reactor safety.

"On a more immediate basis, a scrutiny of the very extensive analysis of postulated accidents described in the safety reports prepared by the board's licensees will reveal that extensive, defence in-depth measures have been taken to prevent the Three Mile Island type of accident and, thus, to ensure a high level of public safety. As you know, these safety reports are available for study by interested persons.

"In conclusion, and without prejudging whether or not a formal public review should be held once the facts of the Three Mile Island accident are known"—

Mr. Sargent: What a snow job this is.

Mr. Ashe: You don't know what he's saying anyway.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —"we are continuing to assess the information being relayed to us by the US Nuclear Regulatory Commission. As the investigation by the commission continues, we intend to ensure that all relevant factors are taken into account in our own assessment and to require Ontario Hydro and other licencees to examine the applicability of lessons learned thereby to Candu nuclear stations. I fully expect that US authorities will be equally interested in further examining the applicability of Canadian safety principles to the prevention of accidents such as that which occurred at the Three Mile Island nuclear power station."

Ms. Gigantes: Especially once we get into them.

Mr. Sargent: They were built by different firms. How could they?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That was signed by Mr. J. H. Jennekens, President, Atomic Energy Control Board.

The key issue is whether enough information is available at this time in order to have a meaningful review. We will be pressing AECB for that review to take place in a timely manner and have requested that our own experts be involved. We have been assured that they will be.

Once that report on the reasons for the Three Mile Island accident is available, it would seem appropriate for the select committee to assess its implications for Ontario. Until then, it would seem to be premature for the select committee to become involved in such an examination.

Honourable members are aware that we have a scientific assessment team in Pennsylvania. This team includes the co-ordinator, Dr. Arthur C. Johnson, who is executive co-ordinator, technology, of the Ministry of Energy, and a nuclear physicist. The members are: Dr. J. Harry Aitken, chief of the radiation protection service of the Ministry of Labour, who is a radiation physicist; Dr. K. Y. Wong, supervisor, central health physics services, Ontario Hydro, who is a chemist in radioactivity; and Mr. R. J. Kelly, who is the section head of the reactor safety group of Ontario Hydro and a reactor safety engineer.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: There is absolutely nothing out of order.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister want to tell us when they went down there; when his team went down there? When did they go down?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable minister may continue.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The press release would indicate that. It was released on Sunday. When that team returns within the next few days I would suggest that the select committee may wish to get a first-hand report from its representatives.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, may I assure you and, through you, all members of this House and the people of Ontario, of the safety of the Candu system.

LEGAL AID TARIFF

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am today announcing the government's decision to increase fees paid to lawyers for services under the Ontario Legal Aid Plan.

Mr. Martel: Four per cent.

Mr. Makarchuk: Now we'll never see Albert Roy. Albert Roy will be gone forever.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Where is Albert today?

Mr. Mackenzie: What's the limit? Four per cent? What's the increase? Four per cent?

Mr. Cassidy: What about hospital workers?

An hon. member: What about jurors? What about people serving on juries?

Mr. Martel: Is that four per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just ignore the interjections, unless they're declaring a conflict of interest.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laughren: Are they allowed to opt out of this plan?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: At the same time, I am announcing a number of administrative changes in the plan which are designed to ensure the most effective and efficient use of the public funds we allocate to this important program.

The new legal aid tariff represents the first increase since 1973, and in fact this long delay might suggest consideration of more regular reviews in the future. Calculated over the period since then, it represents an increase of approximately four per cent a year and an additional cost for the 1979-80 fiscal year of $2,000,000.

Mr. Van Horne: Just give us the total.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: During the same period of time, I should say, the federal contribution to this plan has also been increased significantly. The new tariff is effective as of April 1.

For the six years the tariff has been unchanged costs faced by lawyers, like the rest of us, have of course risen substantially—

Mr. Mackenzie: Where did you start from?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —in relation to the four per cent annualized increase the government and the Law Society of Upper Canada have approved.

Mr. Van Horne: You get enough now. How much more do you want?

An hon. member: You are bankrupt now. How much more are you giving away?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I know members of the Legislature and the public will make comparisons, and properly so. In this regard, it is worth noting in the six years legal aid lawyers went without an increase, the cost of living rose 55 per cent.

Mr. Nixon: That's quite a case you're pleading.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think by these yardsticks, the increase is modest indeed, and reflects the continuing dedication and public interest tradition of members of the legal profession who participate in the plan.

Mr. Swart: What is the total percentage?

Mr. Martel: I see all the lawyers are clapping anyway.

Mr. Nixon: All the lawyers are applauding.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am tabling the new tariff under which some case payments will increase while others will decrease.

Besides these changes, there are a number of essential features of the new tariff I want to bring to your attention.

An hon. member: Give us the total.

Mr. Nixon: Will the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) sit still for this?

Mr. McClellan: Are lawyers able to opt out of the plan?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The fee levels on the criminal side of the old tariff were based solely on the court level in which the case was tried. If a lawyer elected to have a theft case tried in county court, he or she would be paid more than if the case were tried in provincial court. The new tariff replaces this system by fee levels based on seriousness of offences. There are four categories, ranging from those punishable by life imprisonment to those punishable on summary convictions.

Although the old tariff incorporated some block fees, the new tariff extends the block fee principle to more high-volume offences, making the lawyer's fee the same no matter how long the case took in court. This is a particularly significant area of cost control.

The new tariff proposes three levels of fee payment for both civil and criminal cases based on the actual experience of the lawyer in trial work, as opposed to a system based solely on numbers of years at the bar. It is anticipated that this system, by recognizing the expertise and efficiency which more experienced lawyers bring to bear on a case, will encourage experienced counsel to continue to offer their services to legal aid clients.

The new tariff provides the machinery for a standard form of account information, which will greatly assist in the assessment and payment of accounts particularly in the area of preparation for trial. One of the most significant areas of control is the application of a formula for the number of hours of preparation time for which a lawyer will be paid. Firm guidelines for allowed time for preparation are imposed. While my prosecutorial responsibilities as Attorney General would have made me reluctant to propose such limits in criminal matters, I was pleased to respond to this most responsible initiative from the law society.

In civil matters, the new tariff adopts a uniform schedule of payment which is applicable to most matters, abandoning in most cases the different fees now paid based on the level of court in which the matter is tried. A second change involves the increased control which will be placed on open-ended certificates through time limitations which will apply to lawyers at each stage of the litigation process.

Additionally, in family law matters, the new tariff reflects the significant changes brought about by the Family Law Reform Act.

The law society, which administers the plan, came forward with a new tariff proposal about a year ago. I told the law society's annual meeting in October that the cabinet had agreed in principle to a tariff increase, pending the development of mechanisms to ensure the most effective use of the available funds.

Mr. Nixon: I'll bet that was a split decision.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As a result, a working group of officials of my ministry and the law society met weekly for several months to review various options.

I am pleased to report there has been agreement on four important improvements. The first involves the establishment of a research bank. Since the plan was established 11 years ago, individual lawyers have done an enormous amount of research in preparation of their cases. The research has been charged to the plan, yet, once completed, it usually remains in the lawyer's file.

It is clear, as the plan has handled approximately 350,000 cases since its inception, there has been obvious duplication of research. The law society is now establishing a research bank to tap this resource material, build the amount of it and provide it to lawyers on legal aid matters and, for payment of a fee, to lawyers on private practice cases.

Mr. Nixon: You won't have to search a title every time it changes. How will you make a living now?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As a result, we expect a substantial reduction in the cost to the client for research.

The second improvement involves the use of paraprofessionals in case preparation. The law society is now working on the details of a pilot project in Metropolitan Toronto, involving the use of investigators and social workers in the preparation of cases. It is clear that lawyers spend a great deal of time performing non-legal tasks which could be performed better, or at least as well and more economically, by specialized investigators and social workers. The pilot project, details of which will be announced in the coming months, will determine whether it is feasible and an efficient use of funds for the plan to pay investigators and social workers for some of these tasks now performed by lawyers.

The third important change involves the establishment of an objective point system for the creation of a two-level criminal legal aid panel. This is distinct from the payment-by-experience element of the new tariff and will be tried on an experimental basis in York county. The right of the accused to select his or her own counsel is a cornerstone of the plan. However, in some cases it has become increasingly illusory with passing time. For example, at present there are more than 1,400 lawyers on the criminal legal aid panel in the Metropolitan Toronto area alone.

To compel an accused charged with a serious offence, who has no familiarity with lawyers, to choose a name from that list without background information to guide that choice amounts to little more than freedom to make what could be a mistake. The consequences of such a mistake fall not only on the accused, but also on the taxpayers who bear the increased cost of inefficient representation. The two-level system will ensure a basic level of competence among all members of the legal aid panel, while at the same time identifying by objective criteria those criminal lawyers who are best equipped to handle serious cases.

Mr. Nixon: QCs and non QCs.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I mentioned earlier, the government and the law society have agreed to a system that would for the first time enable the plan to pay experienced lawyers at higher rates. The new tariff includes three scales of payment for most of the services which lawyers provide to legal aid clients.

Mr. Nixon: I want to be chairman of the appeal board.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Lawyers having the equivalent of four years, practice in criminal or civil litigation would qualify for the second highest scale and lawyers who qualify at the second level and, in addition, have a total of 10 years' litigation experience would qualify for the highest scale rate. For example, where the basic rate is $42, a lawyer at the second level would qualify for $48 and at the third level for $54.

Mr. Nixon: It is still a great sacrifice.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: But it should be remembered that all of these rates are reduced by 25 per cent when the plan pays the lawyer.

An hon. member: We surrender. Just send us a memo.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The fourth point is also designed to ensure efficient use of funds. The law society has agreed to monitor very closely the process under which tariff rates can be increased in the discretion of a taxing officer in cases of particular seriousness or difficulty.

It is important to remember when dealing with the tariff that lawyers involved in the plan do accept an automatic 25 per cent deduction from all rates. This is done as part of the legal profession's contribution to legal aid and it represents a dedicated public service worth millions of dollars on behalf of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: A great sacrifice.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I appreciate that the former leader of the Liberal Party does not share the total enthusiasm—

Mr. Nixon: Stick to your notes. Just read it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) does with respect to the importance of this plan.

I would just like to say that as in most other matters when there is a conflict between the former leader of the Liberal Party and the member for St. George, I have no difficulty in agreeing with the member for St. George.

Mr. J. Reed: Now what about the general practitioner?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: This is done as part of the legal profession's—

Mr. Ruston: Is that the best you've got to offer?

An hon. member: You are repeating yourself.

Mr. Speaker: You see what happens when you stray from the prepared text.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In conclusion, I should remind the members of the Legislature that it was Mr. Justice Martin who, as a member of the bar of this province, spoke of the legal aid plan during its infancy as "boldly and imaginatively conceived."

He said: "While modifications may from time to time take place, it may be confidently asserted that it is capable of making a great contribution to the administration of justice and it may well be a landmark in man's never-ending search for justice."

Mr. Van Horne: We want justice. We want you to sit down.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The new tariff modifications I have announced are part of the process of evolving the plan to better serve the public and is evidence of the government's continued commitment to providing our citizens with the finest legal aid system in the world.

Mr. Nixon: And to look after you.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I will turn away from my first thought of having a question about legal aid and why they don't pay the lawyers in QCs since they don't cost as much, and direct a question to the Minister of Energy based on his very important statement today.

Would he not agree with me that it would be irresponsible if we waited until the American review of this special accident were completed, or if we were to wait for certain misinterpretations the minister referred to in his statement to be cleared up, before we took the responsibility as members of this House to re-examine the safety of the reactors that we have built and that are operating, and that we are building and will be operating in the province of Ontario?

Might I ask him if he would suggest to his cabinet colleagues and to the Premier that the terms of reference of Dr. Porter, our royal commissioner in this matter, be amended so that he might work with and advise the select committee, which already has as its terms of reference the safety of these devices, so that we can without delay work in concert to make a recommendation to this House as to whether or not we agree with the minister's statement that these devices and these mechanisms are safe and that they should proceed to be operated and to be built in this province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said a moment ago, that I think it is within the competence and the jurisdiction as presently given by this House to the select committee to look into the safety aspect. From what I read I think the honourable member might agree with that. As for when the committee might meet, I was speaking to the co-ordinator, Dr. Johnson, an hour or so ago and our group will probably be returning towards the end of this week, because it would appear that there isn't anything further that can be learned there immediately, although we will continue to be in close touch, through AECB, with the regulatory agency, and Hydro may still be doing some sort of advising function to the utilities there because of some other electricity supply problems they have.

I would think that it might be worthwhile for the committee to hear from that group when it returns and decide the course later on. I think there is something to be said, though, for tying in a review of the safety procedure with whatever lessons may be learned from the incident at Three Mile Island.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: The minister would recall the apprehension that he must have felt, and certainly that we all felt and continued to feel over the past weekend. Would he not think that a special reference by the House to the committee and also putting us to work together with the royal commissioner in this special area—since it has been indicated that he does have a large store of information, and it has been further indicated that he does not have all of the information that he has asked for from Hydro, even on the safety measures as well as the power planning work—would he not think that we are lax in our responsibility if we as a House and the members opposite as a government do not make such a special reference?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the select committee indicated yesterday that the select committee has the report with Dr. Porter's—I guess they aren't recommendations; Dr. Porter called them something else—observations of the results of the hearings, some 300 or 350 hours of hearings that his royal commission had on this matter, and Dr. Porter might well be of assistance to the committee as a witness, or some of his staff might be, but it didn't seem necessary to have him seconded to that committee.

I would only comment that Dr. Porter's own royal commission that is currently holding hearings, some rather important ones, having to do with the need for additional transmission in southwestern Ontario. His target is to report in the fall—I believe about the beginning of October—and, speaking as Minister of Energy, I am rather anxious to see him complete his task, which now has been under way for almost four years, I guess.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order and a supplementary.

My point of order is for the information of the House. Since the committee has a responsibility to proceed with this, it is just a question of the timing of it as to whether we do it in the summer or whether we do it more immediately. As quickly as I can co-ordinate it with the staff of the committee, there will be a meeting of the steering committee of the select committee to take all these matters into consideration.

My supplementary question to the Minister of Energy: I would like some clarification, if I could get it, as to what extent, if any, the Ontario survey team is being restricted in getting firsthand information as to what happened in the Pennsylvania tragedy. Am I correctly informed that the Ontario team is excluded from firsthand observation, as is being provided to all the representatives of the American-style plants from around the world, and that all it has is access to the daily briefings of the news media? If that is the case, does it mean that we are not going to get direct information from our survey team but, rather, we will have to wait until we can get it from whatever the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in the United States provides to the Atomic Energy Control Board in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons I suggested that the committee might want to meet with the team was that I am not in a position to answer that question definitively. I know they have been giving us reports which appear to me to have a fair amount of information in them; but exactly who they have talked to, I am afraid I cannot give the honourable member that information.

Mr. MacDonald: Are they excluded from firsthand observation and taking secondhand accounts from whoever is briefing the press daily?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As far as firsthand observation in the plant itself is concerned, I am not sure whether they have been in the plant, but I do not think they are in the plant every day.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Why is the Minister of Energy avoiding the prospect of seconding Dr. Porter as a consultant to the select committee? Why would the minister downplay probably the one person in Ontario who, first of all, has a wealth of information in his possession; who, secondly, has gained a very strong element of trust among the general public; and who, thirdly, will not be subjected to the vagaries of political posturing and political stances—

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, for heaven's sake, where is your political courage?

Mr. J. Reed: —which is what happens very often, and even when we attempt to be constructive, on a select committee.

Ms. Gigantes: What were you elected for?

Mr. J. Reed: Just let me finish. My friend can have her day when we meet.

Ms. Gigantes: Shame on you.

Mr. J. Reed: Why would the minister avoid doing that, knowing that Dr. Porter is so important to the reassurance of the people of Ontario?

Ms. Gigantes: Because we asked for political responsibility. Leave it to Porter, he says!

Hon. Mr. Auld: Again, I indicated that, speaking as the Minister of Energy, I am anxious to see his royal commission complete the whole task that it was given. But if one is to listen to the chairman of the select committee, who is aware and who, with his staff, has seen the observations that Dr. Porter has made, it would seem that any specific information or advice that he might give might well be given as a witness, even if it was for a week or two, so that he can continue with the hearings he is currently holding.

There may be those who, in the light of his statement that I mentioned yesterday about Hydro having the best system in the world, would say that he was not completely unbiased.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: At 3 p.m. on Thursday the minister told the House that he had a team down in Harrisburg. I checked that at four o'clock, and I accused the minister of misleading the House. He apologized and said he had no team down there at that point.

Why does the minister tell us today that it took three days more, or almost a week after Harrisburg started, to get a team down from Ontario Hydro? Is this an example of how the minister is looking after our interests here?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I indicated on Thursday that I had unintentionally misled the honourable member because I was told that Hydro was monitoring it very carefully and I interpreted that as meaning they had somebody there.

We put together the team after some discussion with the other ministries. We had to make some arrangements so they would be able to meet the people whom they needed to meet to find out what was going on. I believe they left either Saturday night or early Sunday morning; I know they were there Sunday.

RYERSON FINANCING

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Premier, if I might have his attention for a moment, about the financing of the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, which is certainly an institution and facility very dear to his heart since many of his political and administrative cronies are on the board.

What response can he make to the president, who has laid before the public the grave concerns that he has as to the continuing efficacy and usefulness of the institute, since its budget has been cut back to the point that it must withdraw from many of its programs which have been proved to be useful and popular; and since the institute, rather than the universities, is gathering more students and requires additional support?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the acting leader of the Ontario Liberal Party is certainly right when he suggests I have a certain affection for that great institution, which is well served by distinguished members of the board—none of whose names come immediately to mind—and by a president who was an excellent critic on educational matters in this House and generally supportive of the government on most issues.

Mr. Martel: Hardly. Now that is insulting.

Mr. Cassidy: It is misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What does the member mean, it's misleading the House?

I would only say to the acting leader of the Ontario Liberals—listen, have you seen the signs in Scarborough West, how they have changed? They do not say "Canadian Liberal" or even "Ontario Liberal"; they say, "Stuart Smith Liberal."

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Tit for tat on the editorializing. Now back to the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In fact, how is he making out at Birchmount Collegiate at this hour?

Mr. Breithaupt: Very well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to tell the acting leader he got more applause than his leader will get at Birchmount.

Mr. Sweeney: The people at Ryerson will be very interested in this answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Ryerson will be very interested, because what perhaps—

Mr. Speaker: The question is, is there any money for Ryerson?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I do not think that is quite what the question was, Mr. Speaker.

I am informed—and I have to put it in that way—I am informed that Ryerson met the minister on March 13. The institution is coming back to see the minister fairly soon. I think perhaps what has emerged is that they are in the process of finalizing a submission to the minister. She told them prior to her departure for a few days that they would meet some time this month. So that is where it stands.

They are preparing a submission, which probably will have to involve the advisory committee on university affairs, or whatever the structure is, to see whether there should be some alteration in the weighting formula. But the institution itself is in the process of preparing an updated submission to the ministry.

Mr. Nixon: Would the Premier not agree that it is a tragic mistake in policy and administration, which he must share with his policy minister and the various Ministers of Colleges and Universities, that Ryerson would be treated as an institution just like the others, when obviously it stands alone in this province, not only in its mandate, but also in the role that it has played and will play in the education of the young people?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am delighted to hear the acting leader of the Liberal Party suggest that it is a unique institution. I can recall debates in this House, which he will recall even better than I do, when he was trying to relate Ryerson as being the same as most of the other community colleges. He will remember that discussion well, I think.

[2:45]

Mr. Nixon: Do you want that clarified, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no. We do not have time. There is also something to be said as one is developing a formula that there is a certain—

Mr. Nixon: As usual, you stood in the way.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, we were right about the colleges and you people were wrong. You wanted the transfer courses and you wanted BA courses. You were all wet, and history has proved us to be correct. You know it. Even Walter—

Mr. Nixon: You went to Florida to find out.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, no. I went to California. I never got to Hawaii, unfortunately.

Mr. Nixon: You are still wrong.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am no expert in these formulas, but I think that has to be taken into account as well as the maturity of Ryerson. In other words, they have been an established institution for a longer period of time with perhaps—and I emphasize perhaps—more alternatives in the terms of administrative procedures. I don't know.

All I can say to the honourable member is that the institution is coming to meet with the ministry. We do recognize—more than members opposite do—the unique characteristics, the great contribution, the calibre of its graduates and the role it plays in our educational system and in the economy and society of this province. Members opposite will never get me to say anything but kind words about Ryerson and its president.

Mr. Nixon: How much money do we pay for it?

Mr. M. Davidson: Kind words and no money.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Money is another problem.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: Since Ryerson has been making its case to this government for quite some time now and since this government is supposed to have a commitment to manpower training and to the educational system's training people for specific jobs, why can't the Premier give a commitment today to fund Ryerson adequately before it is too late? The student ratio to faculty has already increased dramatically over the last few years. Where is the government's commitment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The fact that Ryerson is still not only doing an excellent job, but has been for the past number of years indicates that our policy really hasn't been too far off the mark. I really think that's fair.

Mr. Cooke: In spite of your policies.

Mr. Warner: Why are you punishing them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the honourable member that we have had requests for money from institutions from other parts of the province, though not the same as Ryerson. The leader of the Liberal Party for today is suggesting it is unique. I agree with that, although I would make a pitch that Sheridan College, which happens to be physically located in the great city of Brampton, could also do with certain additional funding for capital projects, et cetera. They are all unique.

Mr. Foulds: What's wrong with the local member?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nothing is wrong. They have problems too. Everybody wants more money. Our task is to treat—

Mr. Laughren: Even the lawyers.

Mr. Van Horne: Why don't you give it to them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I hear rumours that members want more money on occasion, and I understand that. I would only say to the member in reply to his supplementary question, that my answer really is the same as I gave to the acting leader of the Ontario Liberal Party. The ministry will be meeting with Ryerson. We are quite committed to its continued existence. I can assure the honourable member it will continue to exist. Not only that, it will provide a quality educational program.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Is it possible for the Premier to draw into such a meeting with the ministry, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), in view of the fact that that minister is prepared to fund industry in this province to create employment, when the public may be very concerned to learn just how many trained personnel we are bringing into this country because we lack that kind of trained personnel here who could be trained at Ryerson?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Why couldn't the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk have asked that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am the last one to get into any debate as to just what the scope of Ryerson's responsibilities may be. But I would point out to the member for St. George that a good number of those classifications of personnel that we lack in this province at this moment in terms of skilled trades really would not emerge from the kind of courses that would be offered at Ryerson in any event. I am saying a goodly number.

If there is a shortage of machinists or tool and die makers, whom some industries are now seeking, I am sure the member for St.

George understands that Ryerson is not the kind of institution that provides that type of training. As to whether or not the minister—

Mr. Makarchuk: How come you closed the machinists' training school at Burtch then?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would only say to the honourable member that is a separate, distinct and totally different issue—a totally different issue.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: A totally different issue.

Mr. Renwick: New question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the member for St. George that I am sure the Minister of Industry and Tourism would be delighted to attend such a meeting, but I really think the issue is, as I sense it from the press report and my brief discussion, arriving at a weighting that takes into account the total course availability at Ryerson—whether it does have some distinguishing characteristics that are different from the other colleges of applied arts and technology, what its relationship is in terms of the level of funding with our universities. This is something the committee has always been grappling with; we haven't achieved perfection.

I have no objection to the minister attending. I say with great respect—he is still here—I am not sure whether he could help that particular situation, but certainly I will suggest to the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) that she invite him. She is a very obliging person, and I know he will be delighted to attend.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Energy arising out of his statement today and his statements in the House over the course of the last few days.

In view of the fact that the report of the Inter-Organization Working Group, which the minister referred to in his statement today, recommended among other things a fourfold increase in emergency limits of radiation exposure for members of the general public; a further tenfold increase in allowable radiation exposure if this new limit was uneconomic to meet; and recommended that regulatory limits on radiation exposure should be removed entirely, depending on the calculated probability of certain nuclear accidents, will the minister now direct Ontario Hydro to suspend its support for any such weakening of Canada's nuclear power plant standards until we know just what happened in Harrisburg last week?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, this is a little complicated but I hope that I can explain it by reading this statement by the chairman of that group. This has to do with the proposed change.

He said—and I will be as brief as I can: “However, for assessing the consequences of postulated accidents a more comprehensive and realistic approach has been proposed.” That is how the chairman describes it—“a more comprehensive and realistic approach.” “In particular, failures have been categorized in six classes instead of two, according to their potential consequences and for each category an upper limit of acceptable frequency of occurrences has been proposed.

“The proposed values are such that the estimated risk resulting from each category of accident is equal to or less than the risk associated with normal operation of a nuclear plant. For an individual living near the plant this risk is lower than one in a million to contract a fatal cancer, an imperceptible increase above normal incidence.

“The risk of an event is estimated by combining the probability of the event with its consequences.” In other words, stricter standards for the more probable incidence and less strict standards for the very improbable incidence, which meant an increase in the anticipated radiation of, I believe, a maximum of 25, which was sort of across the board, to a maximum of 100 for the least probable and something like five for the most probable.

There is a scale which shows this both ways, but it is a little hard for me to describe.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister not aware that the Rasmussen report in the United States, which was the bible of probabilities about nuclear accidents taking place, has had its support withdrawn by the leading American nuclear agencies and that the accident in Harrisburg was also the kind of accident whose probability was so slight that it should never have occurred? Will the minister therefore agree to tell Hydro not to go along with any change in nuclear power plant standards, any weakening of nuclear power plant standards, until we know what happened at Harrisburg and until we have had the opportunity to reassess all the calculations about probabilities, since the calculations of probabilities that were made last summer by that working group, the Atomic Energy Control Board, must now be considered as no longer realistic or workable?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Ontario Hydro has one member of that working group, which I believe consists of eight people. Four are from the Atomic Energy Control Board, one is from Hydro and I believe the other three are from other utilities which are involved.

I should also remind the leader of the third party that Hydro in many cases exceeds the Atomic Energy Control Board's standards. They meet every one of them and in some cases, they exceed them. I just finished reading at some length the standards that were applied by AECB and Ontario Hydro in their plants which would prevent the kind of apparent accident that took place in Pennsylvania.

Mr. J. Reed: When the minister is considering the request of the leader of the third party regarding standards, would he make sure the consideration of standards be made in connection with the Canadian technology, understanding the parallels the leader of the third party is attempting to draw between the two technologies do not really fit—

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, come on now.

Mr. J. Reed: —and if there are problems with the Candu system they'll be a different set of problems—

Ms. Gigantes: Do you know how they do their probability studies?

Mr. Swart: Radiation is the same.

Mr. J. Reed: —and they won't have very much relationship one to the other?

Mr. Laughren: Weakened standards.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That's a very easy question to answer. As we all know, there's a great difference between the two systems. Consequently, the probabilities we deal with—

Ms. Gigantes: Why don't you put him on the Hydro board?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —are no doubt not all the same as those in the US or other systems.

Mr. Cassidy: Whether Hydro has one member out of an eight-man working group, or seven members of an eight-man working group, surely the minister recognizes that Ontario Hydro has by far the bulk of the Canadian nuclear power program and, therefore, quite legitimately the bulk of the concern of the public in Canada over what may be happening with nuclear power stations is going to be concentrated here in this province.

Why will the minister not agree to tell Hydro it must not support any weakening of nuclear power plant safety standards until we know what happened in Harrisburg? Why is he stonewalling the Legislature and why can't we have that assurance from this House to the people of the province of Ontario who are very concerned about what may happen with the nuclear power plants in this province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I thought I had indicated the report of the chairman of that working group really indicates the standards are being increased rather than weakened.

Mr. Laughren: For your own credibility, you should say yes.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Minister of Health, in the absence of the Premier. In view of the repeated statements by the Minister of Health and also by the government of its commitment to retaining universal access to medicare, can the minister explain how that commitment will be implemented when in the community of Stoney Creek, 18 of the 24 family physicians have opted out of OHIP and three of the remaining six GPs are refusing to accept patients transferring from opted-out doctors?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, if the honourable member hasn't had a chance to read my statement of last Thursday, I would be glad to send him yet another copy. I think I made it clear that if there's any indication people are in fact not able to obtain the services, the Ontario Medical Association have agreed to assist in enforcing the principles outlined last Thursday, and to look at any particular case.

Ms. Gigantes: Only the OMA knows for sure.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can tell the member that to my knowledge I have not received any indication from any citizen in that community that they are finding a problem, but certainly, we'd be prepared to put to the medical association any particular problem, as per the agreement we announced last week.

[3:00]

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In the first place, can the minister table the information he promised two weeks ago about the degree of opting out by surgeons and other specialists in various hospitals and communities across the province?

In the second place, can the minister explain how the agreement announced last week, which dealt with access to insured service in hospitals, is going to benefit people in Stoney Creek whose primary care is provided by family physicians practising in the community? Is the minister saying that people are going to have to go to hospitals and be insistent in order to get medical care? If that's the case, how does that square with the cutbacks now taking place in hospitals which the minister is trying to encourage?

Mr. Warner: It's a mess.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member knows, the latter is certainly not the case. In point of fact, "cutbacks" is a most inappropriate word to use.

Mr. Mackenzie: There were 15 more pink slips yesterday at the General.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: A shifting of priorities is more to the point. This philosophy has been advanced by everybody in this chamber: that is, that the priorities need to shift to take account of the changing needs in health care.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In point of fact, in that community, as in other communities, people travel back and forth between Stoney Creek and Hamilton and other communities for medical services.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What I'm pointing out is that there has been no indication—

Mr. Warner: In other words, the government is not going to do anything, right?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —whatsoever that anyone is having any difficulty getting access to services.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is not going to do anything, eh?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I understand the motivation of the member in trying to create a problem where there isn't one.

Mr. Warner: They fall into quicksand and the minister gets them a bathing suit.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Did the minister have the opportunity to hear the president of the Ontario Medical Association speaking on a Sunday evening radio program broadcast in the city of Toronto? He indicated that he was not, on behalf of the association, going to stop counselling members of his association from opting out of the plan. Did he this morning hear that same person on a CBC radio broadcast? This time, he said he wasn't aware of any possible mechanisms by which the arrangement introduced into the House by the Minister of Health on Thursday, regarding supplying opted-in services within the hospital sector, could be arrived at. Has he a response to either one or both of those statements?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I didn't hear the broadcast this morning, Mr. Speaker. In that regard I can reiterate that what was agreed to last week was that the medical association and the hospital association would begin discussions immediately to arrive at an overall mechanism. I can tell the member that the hospital association has written to all of its members, through its chief executive officers—

Mr. Cassidy: Only for the hospitals.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —indicating to them very clearly what had been agreed to—by the hospital association, the OMA and the government—to reinforce and restate the basic principles of the plan.

As regards the Sunday evening program, I heard most of it at home. I can't recall verbatim that particular section but it seems to me the answer was more along the lines that they are not engaged in a program of encouraging opting out.

While I am on that point. Apparently in my absence yesterday, while I was in Sarnia, there was a question raised about the sending out—

Mr. Cassidy: Just sending out kits.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —of some particular kit. I did check on that this morning personally. I was told that the kit is only sent out on solicitation. It is not sent out on an unsolicited basis.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not true.

Mr. McClellan: They just happened to have it lying around.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I certainly take the word of the chairman involved—

Mr. McClellan: I guess it was put together by accident.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —but I can tell the members, that in answer to direct questions I've put that they are not involved in an active campaign of promoting opting out.

GLANBROOK LANDFILL SITE

Mr. Cunningham: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. In view of the request by citizens and council participating in the landfill hearings at Glanbrook to have those hearings held under the 1975 Environmental Assessment Act, will the Minister of the Environment be supporting their request to cabinet? Is he fully aware that these citizen groups have made this request in order that they can have an opportunity to review the mix of alternatives to landfills so often publicized in the press?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am aware of the request. I think the member knows the request was put to the advisory committee. Until we have some response from that committee—I believe by Thursday or Friday of this week

—I really wouldn't want to suggest that I have come to a firm conviction for or against the request. I will listen to the argument. I will try to have an understanding of what the advisory committee recommends, and then I will formulate an opinion. Until then, I think I will keep an open mind.

Mr. Cunningham: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask if the minister would not be compelled to see that this particular request might be a landmark decision in so far as the continued abuse of the Environmental Assessment Act is concerned. Is he aware that this proposed landfill site represents the largest site in the province, would be located on acres of valuable farm land and would be situated directly on the headwaters of the Welland River; and is he prepared to assist these citizens with their request before cabinet, or could we rename the Environmental Assessment Act the Environmental Exemption Act?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will respond to the last part. That is not a very valid question, because it is just not so.

I would think the member might also wish to have assessed the alternatives to landfilling. The member might also wish at some time to put forward the suggestion that I would support wholeheartedly, that we have one hearing on landfill sites. What we have gone through is a long Ontario Municipal Board process and now an environmental hearing. I am not very happy to see those two necessary hearings; I think they should be combined in one. I am sure the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) is aware of that and has sympathy for that point of view.

I think those are the immediate concerns. There is no doubt in my mind that the concerns of the citizens have been aired and will be aired again. The terms of reference that the Environmental Assessment Board considers in such a hearing vary very little, whether it's under the Environmental Protection Act or under the Environmental Assessment Act. I think they have been most generous in listening to the concerns of the citizens; I am sure they will continue to do so. If they were very significantly restricted by the present hearing, I think it would make a considerable difference. Surely the member would agree that the assessment board has been most generous in its interpretation of what could be heard under the Environmental Protection Act.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy. In his statement today, on page six, he notes that Ontario Hydro "builds into its nuclear plants a very effective containment system." Is the minister aware of the quarterly technical reports on the Pickering generation station which indicate that a leak in the wall of the reactor building went undetected for 18 months; and is he aware that, according to the same technical reports for the fourth quarter of 1973, "losses of containment occurred four times in the quarter as a result of air-lock and seal failures," and that, again according to the same technical reports, "air-lock failures at Pickering have been a continuing problem"?

If the minister is aware of all those, how can he say that the containment system which Hydro builds in is "very effective"?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I guess in all plants there have been the kinds of problems one expects in one-of-a-kind operations. There have been a number of times, as the honourable member is aware, when some of the reactors have been shut down because of things that occur and are monitored constantly and then are fixed. I simply repeat what I am informed by Hydro, and what Dr. Porter himself has said, that that system is a highly effective one.

In addition, of course, the other part of the system, the cooling part, is quite different from the US operation. It really has three cooling elements to it, and any one of them will keep the uranium from superheating.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Is the minister aware, given the rate of failures that have occurred in the containment structure at Pickering, that in order to achieve the rated level of safety the containment building would have to operate now for several hundred years with no failure?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I learned a long time ago not to try to answer technical questions to which I did not have the answers. I will certainly find out about the matters the honourable member raised and report back.

CHEST DISEASE CASES

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Last week the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) asked several questions regarding lung cancer among gold miners in northern Ontario and bronchitis among railway workers.

Mr. Conway: The independent member for Cochrane South.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I welcome that degree of independence from members on this side of the House. I suspect it will happen over on that side soon.

Mr. J. Reed: It will if we form the government.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I confine my hopes to that side.

Regarding miners, as I am sure the member knows my ministry is concerned there is a possibility that work in mines in northern Ontario may contribute to the development of lung cancer. Because of the possible relationship between the development of lung cancer and exposure to substances in the work place, my ministry, in conjunction with the Workmen's Compensation Board, is conducting a major study of miners.

Through examination of health records of some 16,000 uranium miners and some 30,000 non-uranium miners, we hope to be able to answer the question of whether the increased lung cancer rate evidenced in Timmins and Kirkland Lake is related to work in gold mines or to some other factor. I hope the study will be completed by late 1980.

The draft report entitled Cancer Mortality in Selected Northern Ontario Mining Communities, by Dr. Wigle, mentioned by the member in his question, will be used by our research staff during the course of this study.

Concerning Dr. Vingilis's statement to the member for Cochrane South, regrettably his comments were not qualified and thus were open to misinterpretation. Scientists have for some time been concerned about the effect on workers of substances found in hard rock gold mines. However, as I indicated, there is as yet no substantial body of research evidence that positively links lung cancer to work in gold mines.

In connection with the member's question about chronic bronchitis arising from diesel fumes inhaled by railway workers, I have been advised by the Workmen's Compensation Board that to date they have had only one claim regarding diesel fumes and bronchitis among railway workers. That claim and that issue are currently under review by the board.

A final matter regarding bronchitis and smelter workers raised by the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) is currently under consideration by the board as well and I will pass along information to it as soon as it is available.

Mr. Pope: I would ask two questions of the minister in response to his reply. The first is: in the meantime, while the study is being completed, will the Workmen's Compensation Board and the ministry review all existing and past claims of miners in northern Ontario involving silicosis and lung cancer with a view to maintaining these files on record, should their studies show a relationship? Secondly, while there may only be one claim currently on file with respect to diesel fumes and chronic bronchitis, will the minister review all previous claims that have been turned down by the Workmen's Compensation Board relating to chronic bronchitis, bronchial problems and asthmatic problems to see whether or not Ontario and the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board will not now follow the jurisprudence of the Quebec Workmen's Compensation Board and recognize these kinds of problems as being associated with diesel fuel?

Mr. Mackenzie: It is not just northern Ontario either.

Mr. Pope: I never said that.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Don't limit him that way. I am surprised the member would want it limited that way. He had a broader interpretation of it.

I will be glad to discuss both of those issues with the board and report to the members.

Mr. Peterson: Since the minister has had the decency to respond to the member for Cochrane South within a week, when is he going to answer a considerable number of other questions, one of which I put to him about a month ago and which he promised in his beneficent and usual charming way to take under advisement?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a supplementary.

Mr. Peterson: When is he going to respond to that particular question?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a supplementary.

Mr. Peterson: Of course it's a supplementary.

[3:15]

Mr. Wildman: Is the minister aware that on a number of occasions in the past miners in northern Ontario, after receiving their yearly chest X-rays, have been advised by Ministry of Health doctors that they should not return underground but have also been advised by the Workmen's Compensation Board that their lung condition is not yet at a stage which is compensable and therefore they do return underground?

Is the minister willing to look at this situation now to determine that if a miner is advised not to return underground because his health might get worse he might advise the Workmen's Compensation Board that it should be doing something about providing compensation to these people, so that when they work above ground they don't lose pay as a result of that advice from the Ministry of Health?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: If the member is advising me there's some discrepancy in the information being given by the board, I'll be glad to look into it. I wasn't aware of that before. Thank you.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Energy, also on the nuclear business, but on nuclear wastes. Is the minister satisfied that the program for disposing of nuclear waste by AECL, particularly in underground repositories, is a safe one? Can he indicate what input Ontario, through his ministry, has had in assuring the people in the area where these repositories may be, particularly places like Atikokan and Ignace where they might be drilling for such repositories, that this is safe and there is no danger to the inhabitants in the area? What input has he had in this program?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that the control board has a program of public information and consultation prior to selecting a site for an experimental facility, a chamber in a certain type of granite, far underground. I believe that it has adopted the present system as a result of the somewhat unfortunate approach that it had originally taken, I guess in the Bancroft area.

I can't say in detail what input our ministry has had in the establishment of the new process which they are undertaking. I think they have indicated to all the members whose ridings might be affected by some of the prospective sites how they propose to approach those communities, and I understand that all the members who have seen their proposal agree it is a good approach.

As far as the technical feasibility of what they are doing, I am not in a position to comment because we have not been directly involved. They have the expertise and the research, I gather, to do this. What they are proposing is an experimental operation in the first instance. Most people who are involved, I believe, agree that the information on which they are basing their experimental operation seems to be reliable, but again it will be a pilot project, as I understand it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister is right in that we have been approached by AECL. I wonder if the minister is prepared to go on record and to assure people that the information that is being presented by AECL is correct, that he as Minister of Energy representing the government of Ontario is satisfied that all necessary precautions are being taken and that this sort of approach to this problem is feasible? Can the minister table in the House what Ontario's responsibility is in the disposition of this nuclear waste, and whether his approval is necessary for the sites, or the transportation and that sort of thing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: First of all, the Atomic Energy Control Board is the national agency that has the responsibility of setting the standards. I can only say that to the limited knowledge we would have of the factors involved, the standards they have set are acceptable. We do not second-guess them because they have the responsibility.

As far as our involvement is concerned, I would say the only involvement the province has on a site would be one that would relate to zoning if it's in an organized municipality. I assume what they are doing is a type of mining. If they are doing it in crown land, obviously they will have to get authority from the province either to purchase that land or to lease it.

Mr. Foulds: Is the minister not aware that he is a partner in that endeavour according to the agreement his predecessor signed last year—I believe it was in June? Is the ministry not yet aware which sites they have decided on to drill, whether that is Hydro land or crown land in Ontario, as they have decided on four sites? Is the ministry not in a position to reveal what those four sites are?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It's quite correct that there is an agreement and they will seek our approval before they actually establish one. I cannot tell the honourable member because I don't believe they have decided which of their priority sites they propose to establish.

HEALTH QUESTIONNAIRE

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. I would like to ask the minister if he's now in agreement with the position put by the Boyden Medical Centre, and I take it also the Krever commission, that a questionnaire proposed to be used by his ministry was in effect a violation of the Ontario Human Rights Code and a violation also of the Health Disciplines Act? Why would the ministry be asking questions such as, "Does your doctor care whether he hurts you during an examination?" and "Is your doctor's main interest to make as much money as he can?"

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If I can remember correctly, Mr. Speaker, and I will check into this—by the way, I think the honourable member, in connection with a question he asked last week, was going to send me the name of a particular—

Mr. Breaugh: I have.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Sorry, I haven't seen it.

If my memory serves me correctly, and I will check, that part of that proposed questionnaire was one of sort of an attitudinal survey. It is some time since I looked at anything on this, but I believe that was discussed with the Boyden group as a possibility for a questionnaire. I don't believe it was supposed it would actually be used until there had been some consultation. I will check to be sure but I don't think there's any such distribution of questionnaires going on.

Certainly we would wait until we heard from Krever on that matter. We certainly don't intend to do anything at all to put ourselves in contravention of health disciplines or any other type of confidentiality sections. In fact, from time to time I get criticism from some of the members around here that I don't send them enough information when they make inquiries because of the confidentiality provisions imposed on us in answering inquiries even from MPPs.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary: Did the ministry in fact use that questionnaire at the York Community Centre Clinic?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will check that. I was not aware of that. I will check to see whether that is the case.

DAY-CARE POLICY

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Will the minister say when he will release a new policy consultation paper for day care, a policy paper he said last fall would be ready by January of this year?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, a group of people within the ministry have been working for several months now in the preparation of policy recommendations that would then be considered for incorporation as part of a government policy in the area of day care. The work has been progressing well but perhaps not as quickly as we might have anticipated last fall. I am hoping the background work will be completed and policy consideration given to the recommendations before this summer.

Mr. Blundy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it true the new policies will propose a loosening of the skill requirements for day-care supervisors so not even those who are in charge will require an early childhood education certificate?

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is impossible for me, Mr. Speaker, to respond to that and indicate what the recommendations are because much of the work being done at this point is at a staff level. I am certainly not aware of any specific recommendation to that effect.

I wonder whether the honourable member, and I realize I can't ask him a question, is expressing some concern relating to one of the recommendations that is part of the policy paper on standards currently under discussion. In that paper there is some suggestion, and it has given rise to some expression of concern on the part of some people, that we ought to be looking towards some criteria of competence as opposed to strictly certified qualification in certain areas of child care. That may be what gave rise to that concern, I can't be certain, but that is part of the paper that is publicly being discussed at the present time.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, may I have another comment on this matter?

Mr. Speaker: You may have a question, but not a comment.

Mr. Blundy: I have a question. Most of the community colleges in Ontario have many students in early childhood training courses or education courses. These people, in my opinion, are being trained for this type of work. What does the minister think this sort of person should have over and above, or instead of, early childhood training education?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be very presumptuous of me to purport to know precisely what experience a person ought to have, but I should think there are areas of experience and so on that might well be important supplementations to some formal training at the community college level. That would be a great asset to persons working with children, whether they be in an early childhood education setting or elsewhere.

Mrs. Campbell: Or whether it is a grandmother.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I know some grandmothers who are pretty competent in dealing with young children.

CABINET AUTHORITY

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. The question requires a simple yes or no answer.

Mr. Samis: You won't get it.

Mr. Conway: Chief Justice Warner.

Mr. Warner: I would like to know whether the Attorney General would sign this letter that is being sent to him and reads:

"To the Honourable Joseph Clark, MP, Leader of the Official Opposition, House of Commons:

"Dear Mr. Clark: I have been deeply disturbed by recent reports that you favour cabinet having the authority—"

Mr. Rotenberg: The answer is no before you go any further.

Mr. Warner: "—to break the law. I wish you to know that this government will not countenance placing any person above the law. We in Ontario are proud of our tradition of an English law system dating back to the Magna Charta where it was written, 'No free man shall be in any way molested and we will not set forth against him unless by the law of the land.'"

Will the Attorney General sign this letter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Well—

Mr. Conway: Yes or no.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —I don't know what Mr. Clark has said in this respect.

Mr. Foulds: Neither does he.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes or no.

Mr. Warner: You should resign as Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can assure the members of the House that no one in this government would countenance law-breaking by anyone, whether it is a member of the police force or any other member of the community—

Mr. Makarchuk: Including your leader, including Joe Clark?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —or, indeed, any member of the government.

Mr. Conway: He doesn't even know who Jean Pigott is. Don't expect him to know about law.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That is our position; it always has been our position.

Mr. Makarchuk: Will you convey those sentiments?

Mr. Cassidy: From the Ontario Conservative Party.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I haven't had a chance to discuss with Mr. Clark what he has said. I am sure the opportunity will arise but I certainly don't intend to correspond with him until I know what, in fact, he did say.

Mr. Conway: Claude, will you tell Joe who Jean Pigott is?

Mr. Speaker: A point of privilege; the member for Algoma.

Mr. Wildman: I just wanted to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General—

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of privilege and the honourable member knows it.

PETITIONS

MINISTRY OF HEALTH ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Lawlor: We will take another crack at it.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 33(b) of the Legislative Assembly, the undersigned members of the assembly hereby petition that the annual report of the Ministry of Health for 1977-78, tabled October 23, 1978, be referred to the standing committee on social development for such consideration and report as the committee may determine.

Let me tell the Minister of Health that, among other matters, Lakeshore might just come into focus.

MOTIONS

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the estimates of the Ministry of Correctional Services stand referred to the standing administration of justice committee for consideration not to exceed 10 hours.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

INSURANCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Nixon moved first reading of Bill 35, An Act to amend the Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I can understand why you had some difficulty in introducing the bill; it's not in its proper form.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this bill was prepared with the assistance of a group of students from Wilfred Laurier University, who also consulted with the House experts in drafting bills. Any imperfection in the actual form is entirely my responsibility, not theirs, but they were anxious to have it introduced. It deals with amendments to the Insurance Act which I know, sir, you will be glad to peruse as you read the bill.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS DECLARATORY ACT

Mr. Mackenzie moved first reading of Bill 36, An Act to declare the Application of Certain Parts of the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the application of parts IV, V, VI, VII and VIII of the Employment Standards Act, 1974, to domestic servants. These parts are concerned with employment standards relating to the hours of work, minimum wages, overtime, public holidays and vacation with pay. Section 3(f) of Ontario regulation 803 75 currently prevents these parts of the act from applying to domestic servants. The purpose is clearly to give coverage that doesn't now exist to domestic servants in the work force.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Stong moved first reading of Bill 37, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Amendment Act, 1979.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Stong: This bill recognizes the hospital pharmacists as a separate bargaining unit under the Labour Relations Act.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Gaunt: In response to my friend from Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), I will leave all of the esoteric matters to a later time; to a more appropriate time. I do, however, Mr. Speaker, want to pay tribute to you on this occasion for the excellent way in which you conduct the affairs of this House and protect the rights of all of us here. I want to say to you, sir, that it is not an easy job. I congratulate you for your evenhandedness in conducting and carrying out the affairs on behalf of all of us in the chamber.

I also want to pay tribute to the new members, the newly-elected members in the House—my colleague across the way from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Ramsay) and also my colleague from Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson). I certainly congratulate them on being elected, as I have already done privately. I can't say that I wish them a long tenure in this House. I must be fair. But their contribution to the affairs of the province will, I am sure, be noted and will indeed advance the cause of fairness and justice. I do welcome them and pay tribute to them for joining the "club of 125."

I was interested in the remarks of my friend from Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A.

Taylor) yesterday. It was a good speech. I was slightly disappointed. I was hoping my friend would give us some new insights into Hydro; about the mandarins in the Premier's office; about the tentacles extending from the Premier's office into the Minister of Energy's office and on through to Ontario Hydro. But I didn't get that. Perhaps at a later date we will be treated to that particular exposé.

Mr. Havrot: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Gaunt: I was hoping the member would recommend that the office of the Premier, which has on the door, "Office of the Premier," be changed to include "Office of the Premier and Chief Executive Officer of Hydro." I think, really, that's the way my friend feels and that's the way I feel. I think we have some evidence to support that.

In any event, I am supposed to be speaking on the throne speech. I am going to be rather parochial and deal with matters related to my own area, for the most part, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit that. Really, when I read the throne speech there wasn't much I could bite into in terms of what this government was going to do other than what we already knew. I think the throne speech itself could be described as an ode to an aging government. I think it's fair to say, at least from this side of the House, that the government's senility is only exceeded by its tenacity.

Mr. Conway: They're all asleep over there.

Mr. Gaunt: Having said that, perhaps I can dismiss the throne speech and its content and wait for the budget document which my friend from Muskoka is going to bring down on April 10.

Representing as I do an agricultural riding, perhaps I should just make a few brief comments about the farming situation as I see it currently. As always, farmers are certainly concerned about input costs, the costs they have to pay for the products they have to buy in order to run their business. It has been reported that twine this year, for instance, is going up another 25 per cent and this represents well over a three-digit increase over the last three years. That is certainly an item which farmers have to have and yet they are confronted with these ever-escalating costs.

Fertilizer is another important input cost. Fertilizer is a very important ingredient in terms of farmers and the crops they grow and their total operation. Indeed, it's part of the green revolution; it's really a cornerstone of the farm efficiency story.

Mr. Nixon: We've got nobody but Gene Whelan looking out for us.

Mr. Gaunt: Fertilizer continues to be one of the most effervescent farm items, both in relation to supply and price. In nitrogen products urea is in demand in the export market, but anhydrous ammonia prices are very much depressed. Hence urea will be in tight supply and we expect prices to be up about 15 per cent from last year, according to the UCO brief which was presented to our caucus yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: That was a good brief.

Mr. Gaunt: Anhydrous ammonia, I understand, will be about at last year's price or up slightly. Apparently ammonia and nitrate is expected to be up marginally, with manufacturers hoping it will be up enough to cover the increased cost of natural gas.

I think that overall the result is that more than 20 per cent of the North American ammonia producing plants are going to be shut down. With the situation in North America complicated as it is by the supplies of natural gas from Mexico and Russia and Saudi Arabia being made into ammonia and put on to the world market at prices that will not allow the North American manufacturers to cover their raw material costs, it certainly makes for a very interesting and perhaps difficult pricing period, not only for the manufacturers in this province and in this country but also for the farmers who are subjected to ever-fluctuating prices for that important commodity.

As my friend says, the fluctuations have, in recent years at any rate, always tended to be upward and this has created some real difficulties for farmers.

Farm machinery, of course, I needn't mention that. It's very easy to walk through a fall fair or exhibit these days and dream about what it would be like to farm with at least $200,000 of machinery sitting around within about 200 feet.

It is a problem about which we are concerned as farm people. It is a problem that is not going to be easily resolved. It is a problem that all of us are worried about. It is a problem about which we are all concerned and have to cope.

Let me turn now to the matter having to do with the Ministry of Natural Resources and, specifically, the district office in Wingham. I believe this is a very important district office. It is staffed by a very competent director and group of employees under his charge. But I believe it could and should become even more important if the boundaries of the district were changed both to the north and south, although more to the north would be the more appropriate. That is one office where the Premier does not have his tentacles and where the mandarins do not have any authority.

I propose to the ministry that the boundary be altered to the north to take in the townships of Greenock, Kincardine, Bruce and Saugeen to coincide with the electoral boundaries. The four townships would total 374 square miles.

The fact of the matter is that the Owen Sound district, to the north, is overworked; and the Chatham district, to the south, is overworked. It makes abundant good sense, to quote my former colleague from Downsview, to give up some territory in the Owen Sound district to the Wingham district and some responsibilities in the Chatham district to Wingham so that the workload is more equal, making for better performance and delivery of service to the public. In short, it would enrich the program delivery end of the organization. That is really what it is all about.

Further, in terms of geographic location: The Wingham office is located in the northern part of the district. The district currently goes to Stephen township in the south, and so it would make good sense that it should go 50 miles to the north, which would then give it a very central location smack-dab in the middle.

Earlier, I mentioned the workload; so let me cite some comparative figures for the five districts. Wingham has a budget for 1978-79 of $775,000 and operates one provincial park, with a full-time permanent staff of 21. Owen Sound, to the north, has a budget of $2,702,000 and operates five provincial parks, with a permanent staff complement of 69. Chatham, to the south, has a budget of $3,161,000 and operates eight provincial parks, with a full-time permanent staff of 72. Aylmer has a budget of $1,095,000, with a permanent staff of 32. Simcoe has a budget of $1,641,000, with a full-time permanent staff of 32.

Wingham has the lowest budget and the smallest permanent staff complement of any in the district. Yet the Wingham district has the greatest potential for growth in forest management of any district in southwestern Ontario, because it is only 25 miles from the Greenock Swamp, an area of 3,167 acres for forest management. This forest area has been designated by the Saugeen Valley Conservation Authority. Wingham has been more involved in the Greenock Swamp study than any other district. It is only natural that the Wingham office should be in charge of that area, particularly since the swamp is 60 miles from Owen Sound but only 25 miles from Wingham.

As a matter of fact, the Saugeen Valley Conservation Authority, at its annual meeting this year, passed a resolution suggesting that management of its Greenock Swamp forestry property should be switched from the Owen Sound office of the Ministry of Natural Resources to the Wingham office. The suggestion was that it was proving more costly for men and materials to be brought in from Owen Sound when Wingham was closer.

The Wingham district is already into Bruce county, and so my proposal would give Wingham roughly half of Bruce; the rest would be in Owen Sound. It would also mean that Wingham would have three provincial parks and Owen Sound would have three as well.

Mr. Conway: If Jimmy Auld doesn't shut them all down.

Mr. Gaunt: That's a much better distribution of the workload.

I am glad to see my friend, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), in his seat. I hope that these comments will be heeded. I ask the minister to look at this particular proposal closely. I am hopeful that the necessary boundary changes will be made. I'm quite prepared to pursue the matter further in estimates but I'd like to ease the work of the Chatham district. I suggest that the Wingham district could also handle the operation of the primary provincial park at Grand Bend. That's worth considering and I ask the minister to do so.

Mr. Conway: You mean the minister who closed all our parks down.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It seems to me that I have heard about this before.

Mr. Gaunt: Good. I am glad the minister is looking into it. Perhaps by estimate time you will have a report and we can discuss it further. Because I think there are some good points to be made in favour of altering those boundaries, as I've suggested.

Mr. Conway: Leave some of my parks open, Jimmy, please.

Mr. Gaunt: I want to turn now to the matter of the hospital bed cuts, particularly as they affect my own area—particularly Wingham.

At present it appears that the government doesn't seem to know what its aims are in terms of institutional care, only that there is an overall surplus of active treatment beds in the province and too many patients in active treatment beds. But to many people it looks as though we're seeing cutbacks in hospital bed allocations before any expansion of alternative facilities. Budget methodology does not, at present, recognize relative efficiency of hospitals.

In the Wingham and district hospital, the average length of stay is below the provincial average—8.7 days as opposed to 9.7 days for the other 31 hospitals in the same category, that is the 100 to 199-bed hospital size. Its occupancy rate is 78 per cent; that's the optimum for a 100-bed hospital, as per the government guidelines. The bed allocation formula pays no attention to the average per-patient cost of treatment a hospital provides.

The ministry's own hospital statistics for 1977-78 shows the standard ward rate for active beds at Wingham as $95.72. That is well below the rates of other, larger hospitals in the area. For instance, University Hospital, London, at $220.05; Kitchener-Waterloo General Hospital, $130.38; Victoria Hospital, London, $192.83; and McMaster Medical Centre, $341.66. It makes little sense to care for patients in the more expensive hospitals when Wingham is well equipped, as it stands now, to do so. And that's quite apart from the extra travelling costs involved—ambulance transportation and family visiting, and so on.

Wingham's gross operating costs per diem for 1977-78 were $117.89. This figure is below the average gross operating cost for all 10 groups of active treatment hospitals, regardless of size.

Wingham and district hospital has been saving the government money by consistently operating efficiently, within a given limited budget, in the period January 1, 1973, to March 31, 1978. The Ministry of Health liability over the period rose four per cent over the actual cost increase. A total sum of $228,921 was returned to the Ministry of Health. During the same period productivity rose each year.

While the ministry denies that efficient hospitals are being penalized, while those that are inefficient are being rewarded, the fact remains that the methodology which imposes a $12,000 per excess bed constraint does not address itself to cost efficiency and cost effectiveness of all Ontario hospitals.

The minister, in a letter dated March 16, in response to an earlier letter I wrote him on March 1, indicated, and I quote: "I cannot agree that the efficient hospitals are being penalized while those that are inefficient are being rewarded. The budget adjustments related to surplus active-treatment beds were applied on a province-wide basis, and each hospital centre was treated in exactly the same way. It is considered that this is the most equitable method of distributing the limited funds available."

There is no question that the formula was applied on a province-wide basis. My point is that this very fact brings inequities into the system; and the fact cannot be denied that the ministry has been penalizing the efficient hospitals in favour of the inefficient, insofar as the constraint of $12,000 per excess bed is concerned.

Wingham is considered to have a surplus of 14 beds and so would be penalized by $168,000; if it were not for the ministry's commitment that no budget would be cut below the 1978 level, this would have left the hospital more than $33,000 under the 1978 level.

It is hard to see how it can possibly be denied that the ministry's simplified methodology militates against the efficient hospital. It does, and it penalizes the efficient; no other conclusion is possible under the circumstances. Yet there are many other factors involved which bear witness to the total inadequacy of reducing health care to formulae on the number of beds per 1,000 people.

Some communities in this province, including my own, have ageing populations well over the provincial average: 12.9 per cent of the population in Huron—it is 13.3 per cent in Bruce—is aged 65 or over, compared with the provincial average of 8.6 per cent. It is obvious that we are facing an ever-growing utilization by those aged 65 and over. In 1968, Wingham and District Hospital statistics revealed that the 65-plus population represented 25 per cent of all active admissions. By comparison, in 1978, they were 32 per cent of active admissions and, furthermore, utilizing more than 50 per cent of all active days of care.

It is unlikely this trend will either level off or reverse itself and, therefore, because of the high incidence of active treatment of those aged 65 and over—not to mention the high incidence of extended-care and chronically ill patients in the community—bed closures will cause an imbalance in occupancy.

At present, there is a serious lack of designated chronic beds at Wingham. There is a total of 39 chronic patients in the hospital, 33 of whom are over the age of 65, but only 18 designated chronic beds.

Another consideration is that certain communities face large influxes of tourists during the summer months; as a result, hospital admissions swell in the summer. It is not at all clear how the ministry, in calculating its bed allocation for each hospital, takes into account admissions of persons from other parts of the province or other parts of Canada, or from the United States, in determining a hospital centre's referral population.

The active-treatment bed allocation method guidelines issued by the data development and evaluation branch of the Ministry of Health and dated November 1978, does not outline how the tourist complement is taken into account in calculating the referral population of a given hospital centre.

[4:00]

My legislative intern, Margaret Evans, whose work I must acknowledge publicly, has done a great deal of work and research in this particular matter and when she called the ministry to try to determine its method of calculating and allocating a waiting figure for a referral population with respect to those from other parts of Canada or the US, the information was very vague. I suspect that the ministry really doesn't have any firm way of determining what that figure should be. It's more of a by gosh and by gum calculation than any scientific or well-thought-out weighting formula.

The minister has indicated that the reclassification of surplus active beds to chronic care will be considered in those areas where there is a demonstrated need. However, in the meantime, apart from the 10-bed cushion for hospitals with fewer than 100 beds, there is no easement of the reduction on a prorated basis for hospitals which cannot reduce beds and/or staff to meet the dollar reduction imposed with effect from April 1.

I still don't know how the ministry is going to handle the matter having to do with the allocation where a hospital hasn't got an agreement from the ministry as of the April 1 deadline to switch some of the closed-out active-treatment beds to chronic care. And, where that $12,000 per bed penalty is being assessed now, I wonder how the ministry is going to revise that when each hospital board, as I think is going to be necessary, comes in to the ministry and sits before the ministry and the minister, trying to sort out what its new revised designations are going to be in terms of a switch from active to chronic beds.

Is the ministry going to levy the penalty and make the hospital pay the penalty from April 1 until the switch is made if indeed it is made, and then refund that money? Or how is that going to be handled? We don't know that. I think the minister should clarify that point.

Surely before beds are cut, the Ministry of Health has a responsibility to have in place alternative forms of service of equal benefit.

Yet alternatives that do exist, such as nursing home care, home-care programs and so on, are totally inadequate. At present, there are only seven pilot chronic home-care programs in the province and there are insufficient active home-care programs to meet the needs of many communities facing cutbacks in hospital bed allocations.

I mentioned last Tuesday in the emergency debate in the Legislature the situation facing Huronview, the county home for the aged in Huron county. At the moment, 292 beds are being occupied out of a total of 310, of which 148 are for patients who require extended bed care, that is to say, at least one and a half hours of nursing care per day; 78 are for those requiring some nursing care and only 66 for those capable of totally caring for themselves. In addition, there are 27 people on the waiting list, 14 of which require extended bed care. The point is that for all practical purposes the home for the aged is now being turned into a chronic hospital.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It's the same in Fort Frances.

Mr. Gaunt: If the county home is to be returned to its original purpose, more chronic hospital beds have to be designated in the county and more nursing home beds approved.

Mr. McKessock: Right on.

Mr. Gaunt: Given the ministry's attempt to close several hospitals a few years ago, it is not surprising that there is a basic mistrust of the ministry's motives. It is easy to see the current reductions as the first step in a chain of bed cuts that will eventually force small hospitals to close by making them too inefficient to operate.

People are asking themselves whether the ministry will stop at its current formula of 3.5 beds per 1,000 referral population after 1981. This fear and suspicion was expressed by one of my constituents in a letter addressed to the minister. He said: "Your bed cutting policy is a devious means to an end. The cost of operating a lab, physiotherapy department, kitchen or a whole hospital for a continually decreasing number of beds will become prohibitive. What will be your Health ministry's final decree? Closure."

Smaller hospitals lose their visibility as they become unable to support ancillary services such as surgeons and specialist consultants. Specialists only retain their high level of specialty skills through practice, which emphasizes the fact that hospitals such as Wingham must maintain their current bed levels to attract and allow specialists to practise their skills in the care of sick and injured.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It's the same at LaVerendrye in Fort Frances and in every small community in the province.

Mr. Gaunt: I am sure it is. The problem really is that this government doesn't understand small and rural communities across the province. The council members of the township of Ashfield, an area served by Wingham and District Hospital, have expressed their concern that if Wingham and District loses its viability, Ashfield will be unable to retain its "three dedicated doctors of the highest calibre" in their area. Incidentally, I should add that the doctors to whom reference is made there all reside in the town of Lucknow and practice there and those doctors service the township area of Ashfield.

This fear has been echoed by the township of Culross, which states in a letter to the minister that the Wingham hospital has always served it very satisfactorily and has helped keep a resident doctor in the immediate area. I feel that with the forecast cut-back in beds over the next three years, they stand a good chance of losing their present doctor to a larger centre, thereby creating travel problems and so on for patients.

The only way for hospitals facing a $12,000 reduction per surplus active bed from its base budget to avoid an operating budget deficit is to close down a number of beds and cut back on personnel, even if at present the occupancy rates of these beds is high. The shortfall between the provincial allocation of funds and the increased operating costs at Wingham is likely to be as high as $200,000. Avoiding a deficit for Wingham would mean a loss of between 10 to 15 full-time equivalent jobs, not a small matter in a small rural community.

The area served by Wingham hospital—north Huron, south Bruce—is subject to severe snow conditions each winter which make travel not only dangerous and difficult but at times impossible due to road closures. While severe weather conditions make it difficult to reach the Wingham hospital, travel to a more distant hospital—that is to say London, which is 120 kilometres away—is simply out of the question.

In addition, Wingham is located at a busy junction of highways 4 and 86 which connect the metropolitan areas to the south and east with the vacation and recreation areas that lie to the north and west of Wingham. Travellers from London, Sarnia and Windsor and American visitors who cross at Detroit and Port Huron utilize highway 4 summer and winter as they travel to the Bruce Peninsula, the Blue Mountain ski area and/or make connections for the ferry at Tobermory.

Travellers from the golden horseshoe area travel highway 86 to the resorts and cottages along Lake Huron's shore or turn north on highway 4 to enter the Georgian Bay tourist region. In the 1977-78 season there were 119 traffic injuries requiring hospitalization at the Wingham and District Hospital. This tourist traffic, coupled with the daily school bus traffic—3,163 pupils are bused to and from school daily—makes the possibility of traffic accidents a very real and grave concern. With large numbers of people moving through the area on weekends, traffic pressure becomes greater, resulting in the increased likelihood of multi-vehicle, multi-injury type accidents. With the depleted bed complement, it is not unrealistic to foresee loss of life as a result of limited facilities.

A great many of the hospitals serving smaller, rural communities were built through the efforts of local people. The pride and loyalty in these institutions is born out of community contribution to the original construction and, later, expansion and improvement.

Hospital care involves physical, spiritual and emotional aspects. Proper personalized care can be provided in a local hospital—and provided best in a local hospital.

The kind and personal attention the patient receives in a smaller hospital is rarely matched by the coldly efficient city hospitals. As put by the board of governors' brief to the minister: "May we remind you, Mr. Minister, with all the respect your office commands, that such ministerial edicts tend to destroy man's group relationships in which lies the greatest sense of personal and community responsibility. This is inherent in rural, community living."

Incidentally, that brief will be submitted to the minister this Friday. The Wingham and Coderich hospital boards are meeting with the minister this Friday, April 6, and hopefully some of these matters can be resolved at that time.

It is not that people are questioning the complexity of health care in this province or the need to curtail unnecessary spending. There is no doubt that a positive move toward preventive health care is essential. We should be looking at ambulatory care facilities, such as community health centres, as an alternative to costly, acute care hospitals. In fact, hospital officials at Wingham have, for some time now, been discussing with ministry officials the possibility of setting up a health centre in Wingham.

At present there are 29 health service organizations across the province in which traditional fee-for-service practices have been replaced by salary and capitation payment methods. Unfortunately, the future viability of these health service organizations is uncertain, because no long-term financial commitment has been made to them by the ministry.

There is a need to re-allocate resources away from acute care hospitals to alternatives that can operate at much lower cost. But only if alternatives are in place, such as home care, domiciliary care, nursing homes, extended care hospitals, rehabilitation hospitals, convalescent hospitals and self-care hospitals. We don't have enough of them now. In this way, Mr. Speaker, we would be replacing one with the other. So during the transition people would not be denied the service or their rights to adequate medical services.

For the reasons I cited, I cannot accept the Ministry of Health's program. I think it is short-sighted and inappropriately researched. It is causing untold anxiety for people throughout this province who are concerned about losing jobs, or who are concerned that if they get sick there won't be a bed available for them. Medical staffs throughout the province feel that their ability to treat patients and deliver a first-class health system is being threatened.

I urge the minister to reconsider.

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat saddened by having to participate in this debate this afternoon; in particular, over the kind of issue that is before this House—the issue that has been, I think, put forward by most members who have participated in this debate so far. I anticipate it will also be put by many other members before the debate is completed, because we have a major problem on our hands. It is the kind of problem that we would rather not have.

[4:15]

In many things that we discuss in this House, we are discussing something that perhaps inconveniences someone, or treats someone unfairly, or deals with income distribution, but in the matter of the health care policies of this government we are dealing with something far more serious. It does indeed deal with all of those things. It talks about someone facing an inconvenience, or facing a delay they would perhaps rather not face. It talks about economic whacks at people who are least able to afford that kind of a whack. Chronic care fees are an example.

No matter how politely we might want to deal with the matter, we can't get away from the basic notion that in the field of health care at some point in time, with some examples, people are going to die because services are not provided. I have heard on a number of occasions the Minister of Health slap the opposition members on their little hands for daring to suggest this is true. I suppose if we wanted to retain within the chambers of this House a degree of polite awareness with one another, we wouldn't talk about this because it is not just embarrassing to the government, it talks about things that no normal, civilized human being would want to talk about. That is people dying, or, if they don't die, then at least people being very sick and not getting the kind of care this society can provide those citizens. There isn't any nice way to put that. I know it probably causes the current Minister of Health to throw up each and every day before he comes into this chamber. That is too bad. All he has to do is change the policies of his ministry and of that government to solve his own personal health problems.

I want to deal with—not at any great length but to make the point—the matter of the hospital cuts. I listened again to the Minister of Health say, "Well, these are not really cuts. Everybody gets the same dollar amount as they did last year." Not true. People are trying to take the same hospital dollar allocations this year and provide the same level of services they did last year.

They can't do that unless there is at least an increase in there to show something to reflect what inflation is doing to everybody's pocket-book. It has just the same effect on a hospital budget as it does on the personal expenses of the members of this House or the general population at large. It is for real. It costs more money this year to buy the same goods or services purchased last year. If he says everybody got the same dollar amount this year, I don't care how he slices that, he is taking money away from programs that are very necessary.

The other thing that immensely disturbs me about the approach of this government is it is extremely simplistic. I grant a bed-ratio formula sounds impressive. It sounds as if some very smart person, skilfully trained in the art of medicine, has devised a simple formula which will work in all cases. It won't. It doesn't. It causes very severe problems.

It has been my pleasure in the last little while to spend some time visiting many of the hospitals that will be hit worst by this kind of a cutback program. Unfortunately, they are concentrated in the northern parts of this province and in the rural parts of this province. I readily accept that in many parts of Ontario—to be specific in the urban centres, in Metropolitan Toronto—it is possible for the ministry to close down some wards. It is possible for the ministry to close down some beds. It is possible for people to get on a TTC car—pay a little more—to get to medical services. It is possible for them to take half an hour and go in an ambulance to another hospital if one is full. All of that is happening.

We have had occasions in this House where we have explored the rather ridiculous situation of ambulances picking up patients, trying one hospital for space, not finding it, trying another one, and trying a third. That is happening in Toronto. I am sure, this afternoon, but it is possible for that to happen here. If one cannot get in this hospital, one can go across town and get in another one.

That is not possible in the northern part of this province and in many of our rural areas. That is why this dumb, simple, stupid and mean formula is wrong. It does not recognize there are many parts of this province that are not south of Bloor Street and do not have the kinds of options available for example, within 10 minutes walking of this House. It ain't there. You can't get there from here.

It also does not recognize that to change a place from a hotel into a hospital requires some equipment, requires some staff, requires some training and some financial obligations. Then you have made it into a hospital. It isn't just a place providing bed service; it is a hospital where you can get reasonably decent treatment. You need that core of financing to make it a hospital.

For example, when I walk down the halls of the Smooth Rock Falls Hospital, the minister can open or close all of the beds on that floor; it makes no difference. If they need them, if there is an accident in that community of 4,500 people, they will open them up. The minister can't close a ward in the Smooth Rock Falls Hospital, because there is only one ward. He can't cut the nursing staff in half, because there is only one nurse; and there are only two doctors. There are very serious ramifications all through the north.

I spent some time in Sensenbrenner Hospital in Kapuskasing. It's a fine little institution. If the ministry had been active in putting community programs in place, if the ministry was prepared to fund a chronic home care program in Kapuskasing, if they were even to go so far in their wonderful free enterprise spirit of getting things done as to see that there were chronic care beds in private nursing homes in Kapuskasing, the minister could understand how accommodations could be made. We are told that alternatives are possible. They are not possible in that hospital.

That is basic hospital care, with a lot of problems that are familiar to many of the hospitals in the north about training and keeping nursing staff, about attracting physicians to the area, of seeing that they get the use of specialists. But it also lives with the very real fact that is true across most of northern Ontario, which is, there isn't any chronic home-care program; there aren't many chronic care beds in that hospital. There isn't any alternative to the use of active treatment beds, which is very expensive—$130 a day to look after chronic care patients. There isn't any other place to go.

If this ministry wants to go up to Kapuskasing and decide that a number of very good and workable programs that have been tried out in many other parts of Ontario ought to be applied to Kapuskasing, then we can talk about making some cutbacks in the hospitals. But until it does, it is taking away the only source of care in that community. There is a serious problem there. And it runs through Kirkland Lake and Little Current, New Liskeard, Haileybury, Espanola, Chappleau, Hearst—you name it. And here are all the cutbacks that they are looking at. Cutbacks that can't be made. They can't be made this year, and they are looking at even worse situations over the next two or three years, except that the ministry hasn't had the courtesy to really tell them what is going to happen then.

We are embarked, for some reason—and it is beyond me as to why—on a program of cutting back on services that are needed most. We are embarked on a program of identifying communities that have minimal health care now, and hurting them more than any other. I don't understand it. I would like to find an eloquent word for it, but there isn't one. It is just plain dumb. These are highly-paid civil servants in the minister's office sitting around down here deciding what they can do to make the Treasurer of Ontario happy, and doing it, and damn the consequences.

I'll bet there isn't a member of this House who isn't in the process of arranging for his local hospital board to come down to Mecca and pay the little trip to the minister's office. Why the hell are we doing that? Why is it our responsibility to look after that? If the government wants me to be the Minister of Health, make me the Minister of Health and I will be happy to carry out those kinds of programs. Why are members parading in here? Why are all these people being dragged down from across the province of Ontario to plead at the minister's chair for some common sense? Why do they have to do that? I don't know.

I give this minister one small iota of credit. He is not as stupid as his predecessor who actually went to those communities and tried to convince them in their home bailiwick that this was a sane and rational idea—I think frankly it was more likely a lack of guts and brains. But at least this minister didn't do that. No. In this case, he brought them all down to the Sheraton Centre—at government expense, I take it—to let them hear the bad news in friendly circumstances. That was unfortunate, because that, I think, denied the reality of the situation. It is apparent to me, at least, that this Minister of Health is not prepared to look at that. He may well have seen the same hospital wards that I have seen, but he isn't prepared to react, in my view, in even a sensible and rational way.

The bed-ratio formula—Mr. Speaker, for once in my life I am at a loss. I don't have a loss of words; I do have a loss of words that I can use in this House. I am afraid that is about the point I am at with this minister. This program makes no sense. This bed-ratio formula clearly was picked out of the air by a civil servant and applied unilaterally across Ontario; it does not fit, and the minister knows it.

Frankly, I am pleased to see that, at least with a slight battering on the back of his small head, he is backing off. In Brantford he is backing off. In a number of other places I see he is saying, "Well, maybe I didn't really mean it in quite that way." But the announcements were quite specific—hospital by hospital, cut by cut, almost line by line.

The initial provision of health-care services in many parts of this province is at a level it has never been at in some years. In communities that were just beginning to have their little general hospitals, which they put together brick by brick, where many of their citizens went out and attracted physicians and nurses and raised money through the local organizations to buy equipment for those hospitals, citizens are seeing the hope that they would have decent medical care go down the drain because of the act of this minister. I think that is ruinous.

Mr. Speaker, it is hard to select material to use in this address today, particularly when I have said that I want to focus mainly on the Ministry of Health. I cannot tell you one single thing that the Minister of Health is doing these days in any field under his responsibility that makes much sense to anybody. I do not want to go into the details because I will do that at another point in time, and I know that individual members want to bring up the cases of their particular hospitals and what he is doing to them.

Let me switch, then, and talk about this other matter that has been raised about doctors opting in and doctors opting out, how much doctors are being paid and the latest front-page story on who filed what tax return last year. There are problems in all of this which I think we all recognize. I do not think there is a member in this House who can provide, publicly or privately, a simple motion that will make all the doctors happy in Ontario, that will see the patients get proper medical service and that will see that the $4,000,000,000 that we spent last year on health care was well spent. Nobody has a single, snappy little thing to do that will solve all these problems.

I think we are done a disservice by this minister, though, when he attempts to polarize the opposition in this House, to oversimplify and to deny that there is a serious problem. Last Tuesday, when I sat in this chair, the Minister of Health said: "There is no problem with doctors opting out. None." That was one of the few days when I have seen the Premier of this province watch one of his ministers hang listlessly on the vine and not run to his rescue with one of his great interjections. On that particular day the Minister of Health was up for the entire question period, blowing in the wind; and, for all of his staff, he had no answers to anybody. I sensed that at least on that occasion the Premier of Ontario was embarrassed by his boy wonder; he left him there.

On Wednesday, I understand, there is something called a cabinet meeting around here. Some place, in some magnificent offices adjacent to the Premier's office, the most important decision-makers in Ontario gather. Apparently last Wednesday somebody discovered that there was a problem with doctors opting out of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan and that the boy wonder had better do something about it or they were all going to be in a jackpot. Maybe Eddie Goodman was there; I do not know who these powerful people are.

At any rate, on Thursday I watched the same guy who told me on Tuesday that there is no problem—never mind Peterborough, with 68 per cent of them out; never mind Stoney Creek, Amherstburg or any of the other examples, there is not a problem. On Thursday, not only was there a problem but, of course, this kid also had the solution.

I would have thought the Minister of Health in this province was responsible for the provision of fair and equal access to the system. On Thursday, though, I found out that, while there was a problem, that really was not his ball of wax. In fact, the Ontario Medical Association was going to help him out, and it was going to be assisted in its task by the Ontario Hospital Association. Both are very distinguished groups, I must say; both, I am sure, are very concerned about health care in Ontario. But neither one of them was elected as Minister of Health in Ontario.

When we ask what the Minister of Health himself is doing about this, the answer is zero—not a thing. Others are doing that for him. Frankly, I do not know how they are doing that, and neither does he. I do not know the details of the provision of medical service under that new program, which was announced so grandly last week, and neither does he.

Mr. Wildman: Neither do the doctors.

Mr. Breaugh: Neither do the doctors. I suspect that what we have so far is the recognition that times are tough, things are bad and somebody better do something. It won't be the Minister of Health. It will turn out to be the OMA and the OHA and their problem. I see there are some unfortunate disputes entering into the picture already. The Ontario Hospital Association, I am told, says that doctors have to provide that service at the OHIP rates inside the hospital and outside the hospital. From statements I've read by the OMA, that isn't the way it read that agreement. There may be some complicating factors.

If one has a problem, there's now one Zenith telephone number one can call in Ontario. I sure wouldn't want to be manning that telephone because there's going to be a multitude of problems rolling into that one little red telephone.

I think there is a need for serious discussion now of alternatives to the fee for service basis. I spend a fair amount of time discussing the matter with doctors these days and I see their argument about filling out those little billing procedures, sending them down to the nearest OHIP office and waiting to see if anybody is going to process that claim this week and waiting six to eight weeks or four to five months to get payment for work they've done. I see arguments over what the bill should be. I see doctors showing cute little forms where there is a minor error on filling out the form, but the whole claim has been rejected in the process. The doctor has to have the accountant fill it out and send it back in again. I understand their frustration with that system.

I could not give to the public at large or even to my own little self a rationalization of the OHIP billing procedure. I understand the premise was cost control. But I don't see how one can control costs if one doesn't have the authority to pay or not to pay the bills that come in. They don't have that. I'm not sure that what we have in place really isn't anything but a massive paper-shuffling routine, somewhat akin to what they do at football games in the United States at half-time where they have card shows. I don't see anything of a productive, positive nature in that whole billing process. I support the doctors in their frustration with it and on the insensitivity with which doctors are dealt with by OHIP itself.

That's further complicated by the fact that this government has embarked once again on another one of its famous cutback programs, and part of the people cut back are the people processing those claims. It's taking longer and longer to get the same little billing process to work because there are fewer and fewer people working in the system. I understand their frustration.

Let me put this as delicately as I can. I have less concern about someone who's making $55,000 a year and trying to battle inflation than I have for my industrial workers averaging $13,500, thank you very much, and battling inflation. I'm not saying I'm not concerned; I'm saying that the degree is not quite there.

I sympathize with them in having to fill out all the income tax forms in order to claim their car as an expense and office overhead and all the staff and associated problems. Those are very complicated things that I don't have to worry about. I'm saying it's tough to recognize that the prime, the number one wage earner in the country is having difficulties with inflation. I understand that, but I put that on a scale with my unemployed, with my pensioners, with my students looking for a job, with my organized workers and with my unorganized workers in my own constituency, and I'm running a little short on sympathy there.

What I don't see is much of an active campaign on the part of the ministry to deal with those problems. I don't see any alternatives being put forward. We put out a little green paper last year where we discussed a number of alternatives we thought were workable and rational notions.

Having met with medical associations around Ontario, I understand there are a lot of doctors who insist, for some reason that escapes me, that the fee-for-service system is the only way to go. In fact, while they might have taken an oath at one time to provide medical care, there is creeping into all of that a belief that many doctors are medical businessmen, with overheads and all the things that any other business has, and that they are really attracted by the profit motive.

I also understand there are many physicians in the province who simply want to practise medicine and want to do all the things that everybody else wants to do. They want to feed their families properly and see that their kids have a good education and live in a decent house. Primarily, their concern is to practise medicine—to do the thing that took so long and, so many years in school to become qualified for. That's their basic concern. A secondary concern is their income.

There are others, I would agree, who may have different priorities. But most of the doctors I know—and I have to say this as I trust them with my life, so I am not afraid to trust them with my pocketbook from time to time—are medical practitioners first and wage earners second; it is of lesser consideration to them. I would go so far as to say those are the good doctors. I'm not sure there are any really bad doctors out there. I suspect that doctors are no better and no worse than plumbers, auto workers or anybody else. There has to be a percentage in there who aren't as noble as most of them would like them to be, but most of them are working long hours, trying to do a difficult job which is becoming more complicated and requires more and more skills as time goes on, and feeling incredibly frustrated, particularly by the dealings with this ministry.

That's a serious problem. I would like to see some alternatives put out. I don't think it's beyond the capability of the ministry's staff to offer an option which would allow doctors to receive a base salary for providing certain services under certain circumstances. The ministry could certainly talk about hours of work and the number of people doctors serve. It seems quite possible to me that the minister could negotiate a salary, for example, for the general practitioner in the province of Ontario which offers economic security to that person and which dispenses totally with the OHIP billing process and the fee-for-service arguments that enter into the picture.

Though there was supposedly an approved rate negotiated last December, I am aware that there are many doctors in this province who still don't know what that approved rate is. In fact, the OHIP office doesn't know it either. They simply tell the doctor to bill at the previous year's agreed-upon rate and somehow, somewhere, an adjustment will be made and he'll get his money. That's a ridiculous way for the ministry to go about its business.

Members will have to excuse my trade union bias in all of this but I'm not totally convinced how to go about negotiating an approved rate and, once the negotiation is set, settled, signed, sealed and delivered, then how one would figure out how much it is. If I ever negotiated a contract for a group of people and said, "Sign here first and accept the agreement now and later on we'll tell you how much you're getting," I think I would be ridden out of the room on a rail. But that's what happens between the ministry and the OMA. I'm not sure how one gets to the stage of having negotiations and arriving at an agreement and then people decide whether they're in or out of the agreement. I don't understand that. I don't understand how OHIP can change the rates after it has struck an agreed-upon rate. I don't understand how OHIP was given the latitude to make adjustments in that that are sometimes minor and sometimes major. That's well beyond my frame of reference when I talk about negotiating a settlement.

There are serious problems concerning doctors, whether they're in or out of the plan. We have still not resolved the difficulties in the northern part of this province and in many rural parts of southern Ontario of attracting and keeping doctors. I know, for example, we talked about putting in medical schools in the north at Laurentian and Lakehead Universities. We have never gone past that stage.

I have talked to doctors who work in the north and I find that many of those people have needs which they state in more important terms than how much money they make. They need to have connections with medical society, with people who are practising medicine around them. They need to rub shoulders with and go to conferences with and confer with specialists in particular fields and other people in the medical community. That's difficult to do in rural Ontario in the south and all across the north. Those problems are serious, and I don't see that the minister is doing very much even to recognize the problem, let alone finding any kind of an answer.

Those are a number of things. Let me close off my comments on the doctors and whether they're in or they're out. I start from the premise that doctors are part of this society in which we live. When society collectively decides it needs a socialized form of medicine in this province, then we should be prepared to pay for that. And we do pay for it. We pay through our income tax, through our premium system and now through extra service costs. There's the use of Chargex cards in doctors' offices, which runs to about 18 per cent in interest rates on fees for medical services these days. The public pays 90 different ways for good health care. Sometimes they get it and sometimes they don't. Sometimes they don't have access to the system.

My basic premise is that doctors belong to this society and should be included in the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. I am prepared to be eminently reasonable about all of this and say there may well be occasions when doctors, for whatever reasons—which I do not have a short list of now—should be allowed to opt out of the plan. Sure, why not be reasonable about it?

My concern is not whether we lock doctors into a system or whether we allow them to work in and out of the system at the same time or totally out of it. My concern is with the patients of Ontario and the taxpayers who pay for the system. I am not interested in infringing upon the rights of a doctor to practise medicine as he or she sees fit. I am only concerned with whether the people of this province get good medical care, period. I am not dogmatic about how that care is provided or how the doctors are paid.

In Saskatchewan, where we brought in socialized medicine many years ago, doctors still can bill inside the system or outside the system. In discussion with their health officials, they said: "This is not an academic, second-year university discussion. What we are concerned with is providing good medical care to the population of this province." That ought to be the end result of all of our deliberations about doctors.

I am stymied by the current minister's absence of ideas and even his shirking of responsibility in this regard. I do not know why he is doing that, except that on occasion he is shown to be a little jittery in answering questions in this House. I understand full well that, when he decides to do some things, he often tramps upon the establishment's toes, whether that is a recognized and worthwhile group of people like the Ontario Medical Association or the Ontario Hospital Association. I understand his temerity to take those people on, but surely his prime interest ought to be to see that the people of this province get a good return for their tax dollar and, more important, that the people who need health care get it. I do not see him reacting to that.

Let me deal with one other matter which is a little close to my heart; it is one which I raised in the course of the estimates just last fall and which we seem to have great difficulty coming to grips with in this province.

There is a thing called an HSO. In the usual way this government operates, we couldn't call it a community clinic, because that is what it is; we have to find another name for it. So they called it a health service organization. There are 29 of them around Ontario. They are surrounded by an aura of mystery. The description of them is one that I think every member of this House, even the current Minister of Health, supports: We have an integrated group of people providing social and medical services in a small clinical setting; it is not a big urban hospital but something that people can relate to. It serves a community that is identifiable and, where the needs of a community are different, it can provide different kinds of services. We are not hidebound by whether it is the Ministry of Community and Social Services or the Ministry of Health that is providing this service; we simply identify what is the need and provide it as best we can.

Oddly enough, in this model too, most of the doctors and professionals providing care are on salary, which is the cheapest form of medical care, from a doctor's point of view, that we know of. For less money they are providing, in my view and in the view of a great many people, as good or even better care than you can get by any other means of payment. I am beyond myself. Why would the minister pick on the cheapest and best form of physician providing care to a patient and freeze their salaries? He did not disagree with this in the course of the estimates. Why pick on them? It is clear that he has picked on them. In correspondence that we have raised during question period, and in matters we raised subsequent to that, it was pointed out that he has frozen their salaries—never mind the four per cent increase or six per cent increase, he has frozen them.

In previous years the general agreement has been that, if the OMA fee schedule for general practitioners goes up 6.71 per cent we will transfer that to those doctors who are on salary. It seems quite a reasonable thing to do. Now they are saying, "Unless you have a contract that forces the ministry to provide that kind of pass-through funding, you don't get it." That seems to me a strange attitude on the part of this ministry.

On the matter of freezing those salaries, I should note that the minister seems to be a little short of information. When I asked him the original question, he said it wasn't their policy. Yet, clearly we have a letter from the Boyden clinic where that has been the policy stated by an official of this ministry dealing with HSOs. We have this matter—and I raised it in the question period today—of surveys.

There are funny things going on. One would think if we had these HSOs in operation around Ontario we would naturally be interested in evaluating them; and of course we all are. The question is how do we evaluate them? The ministry has struck upon a unique little scheme. They send a couple of people down to these clinics and they sit there and then ask people as they come in to the clinic to get treatment to answer a questionnaire.

Why in the world would a Minister of Health, of all people, ask questions like, "Does your doctor care whether he hurts you during an examination?" That's like, "When did you stop beating your wife?" There isn't a good, sensible answer for that. The other question: "Is your doctor's main interest making money?" Who can answer that? I don't know.

I go to a very friendly doctor. He's an opted-in physician or he wouldn't be my doctor. I think his prime concern is providing good care to me and the members of my family. I'm aware that he likes a few niceties of life and that he'd like to be able to support his family rather well. But I certainly don't think he wants to hurt me when he examines me—or that his prime interest is making money. This one is fairly good at the stock market, I'm told. He probably makes more money off that than he does off the practice of medicine.

But those questions put in that form by our Ministry of Health are an insult to the medical profession. I'm never affronted by people who insult others. I get my share of insults, and if I can handle them others can. I certainly think the Ontario Medical Association and all of those doctors can certainly handle a little roughness around the edges. But I am concerned that there appears to be a concerted effort to hassle these community clinics. It's beyond me why.

The minister freezes the doctors' salaries, except when he's got a contractual obligation he can't get out of it. He puts this kind of questionnaire out to them, gives them a week's notice and says "We'll be in next week to put that questionnaire out to your people." This one, the Boyden clinic, got their lawyer onto it and went to the Krever commission. The lawyer and the Krever commission agreed that those questions were in violation of Ontario laws and couldn't be asked. So the minister backed off; but it had already run the questionnaire in two other community clinics in Toronto, agreeing they were in violation of the Human Rights Code, agreeing they were in violation of the Health Disciplines Act, but they'd already done it anyway. That seems to me to be a strange thing.

There appears to me to be almost a constant harassment of these HSOs. Even though the minister agrees it's a nice model and a good idea and it ought to work—and in fact it works very well—they still are harassing them.

Let me run through some of the problems we have uncovered in these HSOs. Basically you must understand, Mr. Speaker, the notion is that a group out there has to identify its community, decide what kinds of services it wants to provide, find a place, get the staff to provide the service. That seems to me to be a pretty tough job for any community group to do, but 29 of them have managed to do it. I would have thought quite frankly it was more properly the job of the Ministry of Health to do that kind of identification of need, and what the catchment area is and do the setup. In this province, apparently, it's not. I don't know why, but it's not.

In fact, in certain places like the St. Catharines clinic they got put out of business by this same ministry. Again, I don't really know why; I don't really understand that. I have read the evaluation surveys of that community clinic and understand them, but I certainly don't agree with their conclusion.

They have this serious problem of paying people. I recognize that maybe their problems are compounded when a doctor, whose sole purpose in life is to provide health care, is prepared to take a salary, and I suppose in that very real sense to risk the wrath of the medical profession. When he gets squeezed one more time, with absolutely no raise, he may be at that point where he decides to give up; I would hope not, but that's certainly the case.

The matter of how these budgets are struck is a perplexing one. I asked the minister during the course of the estimates to provide me with copies of their budget, samples of them. Let me see, in actual dollar-for-dollar comparisons, how various clinics are being run. He agreed quite openly and very easily, in the course of the estimates, to do that.

That, of course, was in November of last year. I haven't got them yet, but then the mails are slow.

I asked again in a written question. You may have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that I put a number of matters which were of concern to me on the order paper in the form of written questions. I put those on early in this session. For some strange reason—well not strange really, because I understand it—the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), in charge of children's mental health, pulled out from those lists of questions that I submitted the ones that were now his responsibility. He was able to answer all of my questions within the 14-day period. The Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) was not able to answer one, not one.

Mr. Wildman: How does that compare with a downward mobility in the front bench?

Mr. Breagh: The only thing I could do short of that is maybe ask him his name; but I am sure, in this case, if I had asked the Minister of Health his name in a written question on the order paper, he would have sent me back notice that he required more time to research it. Not an answer was there; and they were all questions that were asked during the estimates last year to which we got no answer; questions that we had asked by telephone, by mail. We have done everything but use the pony express to try to get information out of that ministry, and none of it works because he doesn't want to answer.

The same attitude surrounds the set-up and the financing of these HSOs. They have roughly three kinds of budgets. The one that most people think is a sensible way to do it is to provide a global budget for the operation—much the same as we do in hospitals or in schools, or for building roads or a number of other things—plus the salaries. That's one method that's in place. There's kind of an interim per capita technique that's used for physicians who already had a roster of patients. There's another one that's causing a lot of problems; it's called capitation negation. Bless us, we certainly come up with titles.

Mr. Wildman: What's that, capital punishment?

Mr. Breagh: It's close to that. This is apparently the one which the ministry wants to use, and apparently one of the reasons you can't get budgets is because they don't want outsiders sticking their nose in such things and comparing what's fair and what works. They do that on a monthly basis; so in terms of saying to an HSO, "Buy your supplies in bulk for a year," they can't do that because they are unsure of their finances. The amount of money they are paid changes depending on whether someone moves from an area and moves to an opted-out physician, or even to a physician outside their roster; so that there are complicating factors. It's hard to determine whether these things are legitimate or whether they work well, how they are financed and what's the best way of financing, because there is a noted absence of public information and because on the one hand the ministry has been steadfastly saying: "Okay, we will give it to you," but on the other hand never providing the information. It's kind of a live from month-to-month, from hand to mouth situation for most of those HSOs.

Try this on for size. There's one called Lawrence Heights. This is a community clinic providing medical care. It has had no budget increase since 1973. I can't name you a hot dog stand that's been able to stay in business since 1973 without some reflection of inflation, additional costs, expanding services. It's totally unrealistic. York Community Centre has had no budget increase since, 1975. Boyden Hill has had no budget increase since 1975. Regent's Park had its budgets cut in half in 1975.

If this is a good and workable model for the provision of health care, one that we would like to expand and provide across the north for example, where it would certainly be a workable notion, one that we could set in place in Peterborough now to solve the problem of whether people have access to a health-care system, you have to be prepared to pay for it. You certainly can't do it if you keep on cutting their budgets or holding them to a 1973 or 1975 budget amount. That's totally unrealistic.

There's no question there are cases at these HSOs, of staff people who have had to be dropped because they couldn't continue to carry them. There's no question there has to be kind of a practice developed of borrowing other services from around that community to see that the thing stays in existence. There's no question that you have to go to groups of people, like trade unions and community groups, and ask them to cough up money once again to provide health care. I wouldn't mind that if I wasn't paying income tax, federally and provincially, for health care; and if you didn't come back at me and say that you want a premium out of me; and if you didn't come back at me again when the doctor says he wants more money; and you come back at me again when somebody else wants more money. We pay for health care, a lot, so why are we now going back to community groups and saying let's run the local community clinic like we run the amateur softball team? I think there has to be a little difference in the priorities in the way that those things are dealt with.

Municipalities are funding health care too. HSOs are paying municipal taxes. There are just a multitude of systems in place; which strikes me, if I weren't the naive and not suspicious person that I am, that this ministry has got a campaign under way to harass this model of health service organizations out of business. I don't know why they would want to do that. I'm not suggesting it as a panacea, but in many respects we can provide a better level of health care, a more integrated form of service, at much less money, in an HSO than we can in any other way.

Let me quote just a small quote from the Hastings report, which is another one of those magnificent studies that have been done in this province and tabled in this House and put out to pasture somewhere and not much is happening from it: "Central to the concept of a community health centre is the provision of care through an integrated team of various types of professionals, technologists and other personnel."

We have to have that and we have to have the financial stability to be able to provide that kind of a service to a community, and that is what is endangered here. If we move to these kind of fancy budgeting procedures that are now being accepted we threaten the life blood of these systems; they don't know where they are going from month to month.

Once again we have come up with some kind of a magic formula and stuck an impressive name on it. I still can't figure out what the name is supposed to mean, and I defy any member to give me a quick and easy definition of "capitation negation." Anyway, it is there and the name is probably impressive and it sounds like it is legitimate; and the end result will be that health service organizations suffer and there is no sane way to explain that.

What seems quite logical is that we provide to these people what municipalities are asking for, what school boards want to do these days, what a number of agencies want: they want to give block funding, global funding. Let them then go to see if they can work on their administration costs, and in most of the HSOs that I am aware of the administration costs are pretty low because there aren't many people working in administration there.

We might well be able to get into viability in rural and northern areas because you are allowing for local difficulties. We would save money in bulk buying if we got a budget, for example, semi-annually instead of monthly. We would allow some people to be innovative in providing these services, which we almost work against in this province.

It basically comes down to insecurity. People working in these clinics want to provide a good service to a community, want to see that that service is provided at the least possible cost, and it strikes me that they are being harassed. It could be, and may well be, that they are, in fact, a threat to the medical establishment in Ontario.

I wouldn't like to think that the medical establishment is a threat to anybody. I would like to think that bodies like the OMA, or the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, or local medical groups, are concerned about patient care first and not concerned about professional jealousies over the provision of services to their community. Frankly, I think that is true. I am at a loss to explain why all of these things happen to the HSOs; why they have gone from 12 people down to two in the ministry—two and a half, excuse me.

I can never figure out how you can have half a person working, but apparently the ministry does. They have gone from 12 people monitoring, suggesting, looking after the HSOs, down to two and a half. Perhaps that is a clear indication of the priority of this program in the minister's eyes. I think that is sad, because I find in this one not a panacea but a partial solution to providing good medical care in rural Ontario, in northern Ontario, in Ontario where you have a lot of opted-out physicians and you need access to the system.

[5:00]

I think it is sad that we have come to this point—and I will be raising this matter again in subsequent question periods—that a model the minister himself says is a good one is being so poorly treated by his own ministry. In many areas where the hospital cuts are most dramatic, it would seem logical then, if the ministry has decided that this won't be a general hospital as one would have in downtown Toronto but will be a different kind of thing, that one of the ways to accomplish that might well be to move it into the HSO classification and provide that kind of a service.

I really do not have much faith that is going to happen, and many of us are saying much the same thing. We are saying this ministry should put in place community programs because there is a clear consensus evolving within the medical profession itself and among those people who are interested in all forms of health care, whether that is mental health or working with handicapped kids or working with people who have a particular interest, on the model to provide health care. It should be smaller and it should be more responsive. It should be designed specifically to meet the needs of a community, whether that is a geographic community or a community of interests.

That is a better way to provide service. The ministry agrees with that, but we do not see any of those programs in operation, except on a pilot program basis or on a sampling basis. I don't understand how the minister gets away with having a chronic home-care program in seven places in Ontario and not in the rest of Ontario. I don't understand, in legal terms, how he does that. I don't understand how he survives in political terms and has that, but he does.

The best I can get out of him is that if he ever gets any more money out of the trees he will expand that program around Ontario. To me, that is like saying that one can only have a heart attack in certain places in this province because those are the only places where we have cardiac units. It is dumb; it does not make any sense; there is no rationale behind it. There isn't even a feeble political apology that makes any sense that he can use; he just does it that way.

I am concerned that there are not any differences when it comes to paying the tax. I am not aware of any great program at work which says that if one lives in downtown Toronto he pays taxes to this level, municipal taxes to this level and a premium to this level because he has much more sophisticated services around him, but if one lives in Kapuskasing or Smooth Rock Falls or Cochrane he pays less money because he has fewer services. No matter where one lives in this province one pays the same tax rate, one pays the same premium rate, one probably pays pretty close to the same municipal tax rate that might get diverted into health care. One pays the same no matter where one is, yet the level of service is far different. We all clearly recognize that. There isn't much going on in that ministry to level that out and to make it more even.

In those places where we have found a model that works, as with health services organizations, we see those are the things that are subject to the most abuse. It is almost as if the current Minister of Health is taking the whole ministry to self-destruct, and at some point in time he will blow up; that nice little peach-fuzz face that we see sitting across from us will be no more and the entire ministry will disappear. That is tragic and certainly to the extreme. I admit I would pay $9.80 a day to watch that act, but it is far too drastic for me.

Talking about the chronic care deterrent fee: why would the minister pick on chronic-care patients? The minister knows that of all the programs in operation around Ontario the one that is in poorest shape everywhere is chronic care. We have chronic-care patients in active-treatment beds at $130 a day when we know that we could take them across the road to a clinic or a specialized community home, or even a different ward in that hospital, and reduce that cost substantially to downwards of $25 to $30 a day. Why pick on chronic-care patients? Did they decide to be chronic-care patients? No. If they had any place to go wouldn't they go there? Yes. Why nail them?

I recall that great and glorious day when he announced those two deterrent fee programs for psychiatric care and for chronic care. He did note that the one requiring psychiatric care co-payment would have to be legislated. I haven't seen that one yet. I imagine it may never come. I heard a couple of statements by his assistant saying, "That one isn't going to fly, so we are not going to do that one."

Certainly when he announced the chronic-care deterrent fee there weren't any guidelines attached to that. Things were pretty loose. It took a few days of media exposure to get him to change his mind on that and now there are a number of people exempted from those chronic-care deterrent fees. There are a number of unfairnesses in that. Who is going to sort out the unfairnesses? Not the minister; the local hospital administrator is going to get stuck with that job, thank you very much. Are they going to keep the money for doing the dirty work? No, that money goes to the ministry.

It seems that no matter where this Minister of Health turns he picks on the worst example that one could find to punish. I do not understand that. I do not understand why chronic-care patients, of all the people that he could pick, are the ones who are centred out for deterrent fees. It is most unfair and is not sensible. It is not even rational. That he picks on small northern hospitals and hospitals in rural Ontario to bear the brunt of his big fight on hospital cutbacks, again makes no sense. He picks on the lowest paid physicians and says: "We will freeze your salary and let others get an increase."

I am at a loss, clearly, to understand where this ministry is going, except to say that in my view it is going to hell on a bandwagon and the faster it gets there the better off we all will be.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate on the speech from the throne this afternoon. In so doing, I would first and foremost like to compliment you, sir, on the fine and even-handed way in which you are discharging your duties as the Speaker of the House. I think your patience and tolerance and understanding is well exemplified in the way you deal with all members of the House, even our rambunctious colleague and friend from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) on most occasions.

Mr. Nixon: More even-handed than the NDP.

Mr. Williams: Indeed, I would first and foremost compliment you on the way in which you are discharging those duties.

The most difficult consideration I have had in speaking to the speech from the throne was to single out one of so many topics that are raised in the very substantive speech from the throne, which is I guess the longest speech, and I would say of course the most substantive speech, ever presented to this Legislature. It has taken a great deal of time to select from the speech a number of topics which I feel I can, within the time permitted me, deal with in some depth. It was a difficult decision to try to select an area I felt I could concentrate on this afternoon. Hopefully, I will do some justice to the topic I think is of some major concern to the people living within the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Some aspects of the speech that caught my attention were ones that dealt essentially with environmental matters. The speech does touch on matters dealing with land and airborne contaminants that are tending to pollute our great lakes, and of course it made reference to the acidic precipitation phenomenon that has recently come to light and which has been discussed and debated at some length in this House. The speech, as well, touches on the whole well-publicized topic of the spills of toxic substances and how we should deal with them in a safe manner to prevent the adverse effects of such unfortunate incidents.

We had a great deal of debate in this House in recent months on the matter of liquid industrial waste and the problem of containment of PCBs. Most recently, of course, we have been involved in the debate on the great concern all of us have with regard to the safety factors that relate to the operation of any nuclear power program. This, of course, arose out of the tragic accident that has occurred in one of our neighbouring states to the south.

All of these certainly have received a great deal of attention. I might say they have all been very difficult problems, with no easy answers or solutions, notwithstanding the fact that members of the opposition would tend to imply to this government that they have the answers and they can be provided forthwith.

I must compliment the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), who has discharged his portfolio so well in dealing with all of these complex and difficult issues. I think he is dealing with them in a very forthright, honest and knowledgeable manner. The ministry obviously will continue to give leadership and direction in this very important field.

The one area within the field of environmental concerns that gives me great concern is one of a more parochial nature in that it pertains to the Metropolitan Toronto area. It is a type of situation that also has built into it a crisis. It is a more insidious type of situation that has gained little publicity in recent months, yet it has all the earmarks of the same type of environmental problems which have been under debate and which I have identified in my earlier comments.

This crisis I am alluding to is more conventional in nature and yet perhaps even more substantive, if not equally so, than all the others I have referred to. It is the solid waste disposal problem that confronts the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Metropolitan Toronto is indeed at a critical stage in endeavouring to deal with the problem. It is one that has been gaining a head of steam in recent years but has really not had the attention I feel it deserves, at least as far as publicizing the crisis is concerned. I do not believe the public at large within the Metropolitan Toronto area measure the garbage disposal problem in Metropolitan Toronto in the same light as they express concerns and fears with regard to these other types of environmental problems. Yet the solid waste disposal problem should be of equal concern to all the citizens of Metropolitan Toronto, because it is as imminent as these other problems and probably will have a more direct personal effect on the people of Metropolitan Toronto if the crisis is not dealt with within the immediate future.

To put in proper perspective the nature of the problem and to make you aware of exactly how the problem has arisen, Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch for a few moments on the historical evolution of the management, control and responsibility for solid waste disposal within the Metropolitan Toronto area.

In the earlier years it was a problem that had to be dealt with on an individualized basis by each of the municipalities, certainly before the creation of the Metropolitan Toronto corporation. The population of Metropolitan Toronto in those days was not nearly as great as it is today, with our 2,250,000 people.

As the need for a federated metropolitan system of government came to be perceived as being the necessary means of dealing with regional problems of local government in all areas, at that same time it was recognized that the handling of waste disposal within the metropolitan area had to be looked at on a regional basis.

Even though this was perceived early on, after the creation of Metropolitan Toronto the responsibility for waste disposal was still left with the individual constituent members of Metro. They endeavoured, within their limited financial and other capabilities, to deal with the problem reasonably well. But the sheer volume of solid waste was building up as the population grew and the ability of these municipalities to deal with the problem on an individual basis was quickly being lost. It was for that reason that, as early as 1956, not only after the creation of Metro, concerned officials and representatives of the local governments embarked upon rather in-depth studies and began to encourage the province to consider setting up regional responsibility with the Metropolitan Toronto government.

After a number of studies had been undertaken, representations and recommendations were made to the province. As a result of these the province did agree to give certain limited powers to Metropolitan Toronto to assist the municipalities in handling the garbage disposal problems within their respective boundaries.

But the province did not directly give full responsibility for the handling of garbage to Metropolitan Toronto. It occurred in two-stages. First in 1956, when the Metropolitan Toronto Act was amended and Metro was given the authority to assist area municipalities in the matter of refuse disposal. This proved to be not totally satisfactory. Consequently, after further encouragement from the local municipalities, the province reconsidered the matter. It was through this action, along with further submissions from the Metro governments individually, as well as from the royal commission that was set up in 1963 to study the Metropolitan Toronto concept under Carl Goldenberg, that the real problem came into clear focus. The individual municipal governments within Metro, as well as Mr. Goldenberg in his report, recommended to the province that the Metropolitan Toronto government, being responsible for regional needs, had to be given that authority to deal with garbage disposal.

So it came to pass that the necessary enabling legislation was enacted and given effect from January 1, 1967. On that date the Metropolitan Toronto government took full authority and control over that complex area.

One might ask what the capability of Metro was to deal with this problem on assuming these responsibilities, and what had been accomplished by the individual municipalities before the authority was passed over to the senior level of government.

It is interesting to note that at the time Metro did take over this responsibility, there were within Metro Toronto five incinerators, two landfill sites and five transfer stations which had been set up.

I might indicate that there really are only two basic ways and means of disposing of solid waste, burn it or bury it. A variation of the latter has evolved in recent times through sophisticated technology where, primarily through the initiative of this government and the Ministry of the Environment, we have developed ways and means of trying to some extent to deal with the problem by waste recovery techniques. This is a variation on which I would like to, and will, elaborate upon at some depth in a few moments. But, essentially and basically, there are only two means by which we can realistically and effectively deal with solid waste disposal: incineration and the burying of the waste in landfill sites.

In other jurisdictions the opportunity does exist to bury solid wastes in a fashion other than burying it in the ground that is to bury it at sea. This is one of the very significant ways in which the city of New York sees a way of dealing with the problem when hundreds of tons of solid waste, properly contained and sealed, are shipped out to sea every day of the week and dropped into the Atlantic Ocean in designated containment areas.

We don't have that opportunity to rely upon burying of waste at sea in this jurisdiction and I don't think it was ever considered, or should be, that the Great Lakes should be used for this purpose. We are restricted to the burying of garbage in landfill sites, that is, to use the crass term, in holes in the ground.

At the time that Metro came on to the scene on a full-scale basis, as I indicated a moment ago, there were five incinerators operating within Metropolitan Toronto; the Grand Street, Wellington Street and Commissioner Street incinerators, all of which were located in the city core area. The Grand Street incinerator actually was out in the Mimico Creek area.

Mr. Nixon: My God, this is uplifting.

Mr. Williams: That was somewhat west of the downtown area. In addition to that, there was the Ingram facility in North York, and more recently the Dufferin Street incinerator, which was also constructed in North York. I might point out that in those days each of the municipalities had to find the capital resources with which to build these facilities within its own community or municipality. In addition to the ones I have cited, there was the old Forest Hill incinerator the village of Forest Hill had and there was the Symes Road incinerator.

Today there are three incinerators in Metropolitan Toronto. There has been a marked decrease. Why, one might ask? Some of the incinerators I have named were totally inadequate for dealing with incineration today, based on the sheer volume of waste created every day in this metropolis.

Some of the facilities were totally inadequate, from a technical point of view, to meet the necessary environmental standards. Others were totally undersized and totally unequipped to deal with the problem we have today.

For this reason, it was necessary indeed, based on directions from this government, to close down some of those facilities. Decreasing the number of incinerators within Metropolitan Toronto meant that the growing volume of waste had to be transferred increasingly to the other option, that is the development and use of landfill sites.

In Metropolitan Toronto we are creating about 2,000,000 tons of solid waste annually.

If I may illustrate how much waste that means, you could put it in the exhibition ballpark, pile it higher than the CN tower, and still need room for garbage elsewhere. That's the magnitude of the problem, Mr. Speaker. It's a serious problem and one that has to be addressed here and now.

Within that period, as I have pointed out, reliance on incineration methods has decreased. Therefore, of necessity, reliance on landfill operations has had to increase.

In the early years there were a number of small sites operated within the Metropolitan Toronto area; sites operated for as short a term as six months and maybe as long as a year and a half to two years.

The only two major facilities developed and operated within the Metropolitan Toronto area—which in fact have kept Metro Toronto free of vast volumes of solid waste—are in the northwest, the Factory Road site, and, in the northeast the Beare Road site.

Now, as we all know, the Factory Road site is finished. It is no longer being operated. It was finished last year. The Beare Road site will reach its capacity within the next 12-month period.

Mr. J. Reed: Two more desert areas created.

Mr. Williams: The Beare Road site, of course, once it is finished will be converted into a recreational facility. It will accommodate a viable skiing operation, operated, I presume, on a municipal basis. It will accommodate the recreational needs of many people in the east end of this great metropolis. This only reflects the fact that once many landfill sites are completed they are converted to productive, usually recreational, use.

Mr. J. Reed: Have you heard about the gas problem?

Mr. Williams: Many landfill sites that were formerly holes in the ground, or abandoned quarries, have been converted through the landfill program into productive, useable land resources again.

Mr. J. Reed: Nonsense.

Mr. Williams: Many of these facilities have been converted, as I say, to recreational uses and the Beare Road site is a perfect example.

Mr. J. Reed: Ask about the trouble they are having.

Mr. Williams: But, Mr. Speaker, the real, major concern is the fact that by the end of this year there will be no more landfill sites within the 240 square miles of Metropolitan Toronto. Now the very fact that we are on borrowed time in this regard is self evident because through the initiative of the Metropolitan Toronto government, of course, steps have been taken to try to deal with this short-term crisis by working with this government to find other landfill facilities within reasonable proximity of Metropolitan Toronto.

[5:30]

Mr. J. Reed: It generates 50 megawatts of power.

Mr. Williams: Indeed, a number of what they call transfer stations have been developed in Metropolitan Toronto in order to provide the technology and means by which garbage could be taken from the local municipalities by the equipment that's operated by the different municipalities to the various transfer stations within their areas and taken by the larger Metropolitan Toronto vehicles out to the existing landfill sites at Beare Road and beyond. At this point of time, Mr. Speaker, there are seven transfer stations operating within Metropolitan Toronto. There are three of them which in fact are former incinerators which have been closed down for one or more of the various reasons I cited earlier.

There is the Grand Street facility which has been converted to a transfer station. There's the Symes Road facility and also the Wellington Street facility. These three, having been closed down a number of years ago, are now being used for this purpose; but because they were not designed specifically to be transfer stations but rather incinerators they do not really have the suitable facilities to handle solid waste in large volume. The only transfer stations that are really designed to cope with the volume problem are those that have been specifically built for that purpose. I refer specifically to the Bermondsey transfer station in the northeast corner of North York and to the new Victoria Park station that has also been constructed and gone into operation in the northeast sector of the city of North York.

In addition, the existing Ingram incinerator, which is still operating in North York, is serving in a dual capacity as a transfer station. The new Downsview resource recovery plant is also serving in this capacity.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that since 1967 not one incinerator has been built in Metropolitan Toronto; that's over a decade ago. In fact the last one to be built was while the local municipality still had responsibility to provide for solid waste disposal.

I had an opportunity to be a member of the then township of North York council which was wrestling with the problem at that time because it was a quickly growing municipality with a dramatically increasing population and resultant increasing volumes of solid waste. The only resources we had available to us within the township at that time was the heretofore referred to Ingram Avenue incinerator. That incinerator was located in the west end of North York and was not adequate to deal with the total problem within the township, so the municipality on its own initiative had to embark upon a stepped-up program of either landfill operation or to provide additional incinerator facilities.

Mr. Lawlor: Are you going to deal with the watts from waste program?

Mr. Williams: I certainly am; give me time.

Mr. Lawlor: I sit here with bated breath.

Mr. Williams: So you should, it is going to be a revelation.

The township at that time decided to embark upon the construction of what is now known as the Dufferin Street incinerator. It was the last significant and major incinerator to be built within this region in the past decade.

After Metro Toronto assumed the responsibility, it is not that they did not themselves consider embarking upon an expanded incinerator program in the way of providing the capital dollars and plant and facilities, in fact one of the major undertakings of the Metro Toronto government after it assumed that responsibility in 1967 was to consider the construction of a major facility in the southwest of Metro, in Etobicoke. At that time consideration was given to the construction of the Kipling-Horner Avenue incinerator which would have had the capacity to deal with 1,000 tons of garbage on a daily basis. That project did not get off the ground, although it had a great deal of potential. Not only would it have been the most modern and sophisticated facility in the Metro area, but it would have had complementary facilities that would have had reclamation components built into it.

Mr. Lawlor: Put it in your riding.

Mr. Williams: Of course that is the whole problem with the matter of waste disposal. "Put it in your area"; that is what you hear all the time. No one wants to deal with the problem. They think there is a magic answer to it, that it is going to go away.

Mr. Lawlor: I take it that you are welcoming the next one, are you?

Mr. Williams: These are the same people who in dealing with the energy problem will say—

Mr. Lawlor: I will tell Godfrey you want one.

Mr. Mackenzie: Get the industry engineers up there tomorrow.

Mr. Williams: —“Energy conservation will solve our problems; we don’t need new Hydro plants, whether they be conventional or nuclear. The problem is going to go away, just exercise greater conservation.”

Mr. Lawlor: Williams wants the garbage; Williams is offering—

Mr. Williams: This is the distorted perspective that I want to correct here today. I wouldn’t want the public perception to persist in that fashion, and I am amazed to hear it coming from an informed member—

Mr. Lawlor: Why don’t you lend yourself to the undistortion?

Mr. Williams: —of the Legislature who would be taking that type of attitude.

Mr. Mackenzie: Let’s show leadership, bring it to your riding.

Mr. Lawlor: Wait until it happens to you, Williams.

Mr. Williams: It is just incomprehensible that we would have these kinds of remarks coming from members of this Legislature. This is why I felt it so important for me, tonight—

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, that holier than thou.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Williams: —to bring the whole issue before this House and publicize the urgency of this problem of crisis proportions that is confronting Metropolitan Toronto.

The members of this House don’t seem to be paying attention to it and certainly are not talking about it; and they should be. They should be getting away from these distorted views of, “Don’t worry, the problem will go away; just put it in somebody else’s backyard.”

Mr. Lawlor: If your government would take the proper methods and use the Kingston experiment they might do something.

Mr. Williams: The off-the-cuff interjections by the members are really starting to highlight the nature of the problem; the distorted thinking and the illogical, irrational approach that is being taken to the problem.

Mr. Lawlor: It is beginning to get a bit dull around here.

Mr. Mackenzie: Highlighting the distortion across the chamber, like the distortion that is speaking.

Mr. Williams: We have heard debate in estimates in this House in the past from some members of this House suggesting that we don’t want more landfill, we don’t want incineration; they are all going to contaminate the atmosphere. But they don’t have the alternative answers. They think that wats from waste is going to be the panacea, the total solution to the problem. That is an Alice in Wonderland attitude, but we have to face realities. Most certainly through the initiative of this government and the Minister of the Environment great strides have been taken to introduce the new technology in the resource recovery field—

Mr. Mackenzie: Now we are hearing Alice in Wonderland, and he is Alice.

Mr. Williams: —and I will be dealing with this matter in some depth. But I want to make it abundantly clear that—

Mr. Lawlor: Williams just went through the looking glass.

Mr. Mackenzie: This is cruel and unusual punishment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Warner: Another filibuster.

Mr. Williams: —that capability alone is not going to solve the problem of waste disposal. The basic fact of the matter is that of the 2,000,000 tons of garbage generated in Metropolitan Toronto every year, approximately 70 per cent must continue to be handled by conventional means. That means either incineration or the operation of landfill sites.

Interjections.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, there is no alternative answer to that basic fact of life. We have to face up to that problem and we have to face up to that problem realistically.

This minister is making great strides in endeavouring to minimize and reduce the reliance on incineration and landfill operations through the resource recovery program. But it will not replace those two basic components in the waste disposal program of Metropolitan Toronto. No matter how many millions of dollars this government chooses to put into the resource recovery program, no matter how quickly those dollars are spent to build capital plant facilities, they could not, even if unlimited numbers of such facilities were to be built between now and the end of the century, be built in time to even begin to cope with the problem. For this reason alone we must continue to rely on the conventional facilities available to us, and make provision for additional such facilities as the need dictates. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the need is here now. It is an immediate and critical need.

Mr. Lawlor: Lord, man, it has been around for over 10 years and you have been reluctant to face it. What kind of a government—

Mr. Williams: If, in fact, the government had not, through the Minister of the Environment, approved the Pickering landfill facilities, the crisis today would be such that garbage would indeed be starting to pile up, as private compost heaps, on the lawns and in the backyards of the members from Metropolitan Toronto and the rest of the citizens of this fine metropolis. The member for Lakeshore would probably be one of the first to find the need to develop a compost heap in his backyard to deal with the vast quantities of garbage that I'm sure is generated from his home, as from every other home in Metropolitan Toronto. The crisis would have been beyond redemption if, in fact, the Pickering facility had not been opened.

The fact of the matter is that when the Beare Road site is completed this year the only operating facility with proximity to Metropolitan Toronto will be the Pickering landfill site.

Mr. Lawlor: You know the experimental project at Queen's University in Kingston which your government wiped out, they cut off all the funding.

Mr. Williams: At this point of time even the vast capacity of the Brock West facility, now expanded from approximately 7,000,000 to 8,500,000 million tons, even that facility will be completely filled with waste by 1983. Until new landfill locations can be located, engineered, developed and brought on stream, or new incinerators built, the only thing keeping us from the brink of disaster in this area is the fact that the Pickering, Brock West, Brock North and Brock South facilities can carry us through, but to no later than 1985.

[5:45]

We are indeed living in a world of make-believe if we persist in putting off this problem. It has to be dealt with immediately. This is not to say or imply that the Ministry of the Environment is not aware of this situation and is not doing something about it because indeed it is. I will be elaborating on this matter as to how our ministry is dealing with this problem.

Mr. Lawlor: He must be really aware, otherwise you wouldn't be speaking in such horrendous terms.

Mr. Williams: I want to point out at this time how the provincial government has come into an area that has been largely reserved up until recent times to the local municipalities, and most recently to Metropolitan Toronto. I must say that the problem is one that needs joint consultation, joint involvement, and a joint undertaking through the whole process by local governments and the provincial authorities.

This team effort has been evolving and developing at a considerable pace, and none too soon. The province has started to realize that since it came into the field in 1970, when legislation brought into existence—the waste management legislation which subsequently became the environmental protection legislation—from that time forward this government has taken an ambitious and aggressive stance in dealing with this problem, working in liaison with the Metropolitan Toronto authorities.

Mr. Mackenzie: Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. Williams: In dealing with this problem, one of the first steps the ministry took was to assist in expediting necessary environmental approvals for the Pickering facility. Were it not for that facility now being available to us the crisis would have hit much sooner and would have reached much greater proportions.

One of the first steps the ministry took after entering into this field was to commission a major study to be undertaken, which came to be known as the metropolitan area waste management study. This study was undertaken by two firms of consultants on a consortium basis. James F. MacLaren Limited and M. M. Dillon Limited collaborated on the undertaking of this major study, which was published in 1976 and which I believe brought the whole matter and concern for solid waste disposal within the Metropolitan Toronto area to a new plateau.

This study clearly identified the needs, the existing shortcomings and the directions in which this government, working in league with the Metropolitan Toronto government, had to move if we were to continue at least to keep pace with the growing volume of solid wastes and the need for disposal thereof. This study made a number of recommendations, some of which were directed to local government and others which placed responsibility on this government for finding solutions.

The report clearly pointed out that there had to be a greater consultative and co-operative effort among local governments. I would point out that this particular waste management study was developed not only to deal with the Metropolitan Toronto waste disposal problem, but as well with the problems of the adjoining regional municipalities of Peel, York and Durham. For that reason, it was called the metropolitan area waste management study, because a broader area geographically was taken into consideration in recognition of the fact that the whole problem of solid waste disposal could not be confined within the political boundaries of any one municipality or region. It was most appropriate that such a study was undertaken and given as broad a base as it was, because to have done otherwise would have meant a study that at least would have been unrealistic.

One of the major recommendations of the study was that the four regions involved in that study should prepare a detailed master plan for solid waste management to provide for integrated solid waste management systems.

The Ministry of the Environment responded to this situation by setting up its own committee, which has been identified as the Metropolitan Toronto and area waste management committee, and which is under the present chairmanship of Mr. Cockburn, who is the director, central region, of the ministry. This committee has the responsibility for endeavouring to co-ordinate the activities of the four regions that come under the umbrella of this particular study, and a great deal of progress has been made in attempting to have a better co-ordination of effort between these municipalities.

One of the problems that has existed in the past was that local governments tended to want to retain the responsibility for waste disposal until they found that the problem had become so big, and the cost associated with dealing with the problem so great, that they no longer had the financial capacity and other technical resources to deal with the problem.

For this reason the study recommended that the regional acts should be amended to give full authority to York, Durham and Peel to be able to deal with the problem on a regional basis, as Metropolitan Toronto currently has that authority.

One of the interesting anomalies that exist at the present time is that, while the regions of Durham and Peel have authority to deal effectively with the problem, the region of York has been denied this right, I guess just through circumstance when the legislation was being prepared. But, in any event, York region has been denied the responsibility and authority for dealing with solid waste within its jurisdiction.

This in itself has created some problems which have required the Metropolitan Toronto and area waste management committee to set up another resource committee to deal specifically with Metropolitan Toronto and York region to see if they together could not resolve this problem and deal on a joint basis with the problem of finding the necessary landfill sites or incinerator locations to accommodate the waste disposal that will be generated by those two regions over the next two decades.

At the present time the waste management committee that I have been referring to has determined in its ongoing studies that approximately 3,500,000 tons of solid waste will be generated within the region by 1985 and almost 4,500,000 tons by 1995. The projections indicate that by the turn of the century the four regional municipalities within the area study will be generating in excess of 5,000,000 tons of garbage per year. This is a massive problem that requires extensive capital investment, the development of massive capital resources to deal with it.

Mr. Lawlor: How can you speak for this length of time without once mentioning the word "recycling"?

Mr. Williams: After the dinner break, I will be dealing with the resource recovery programs that exist and are on stream within the Metropolitan Toronto area and that are being developed through the initiative of the Minister of the Environment.

I think the member for Lakeshore will have his illusions shattered when he learns how actively and aggressively the ministry is making headway in the whole matter of resource recovery.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm sure I'll be pulverized—into garbage.

Mr. Williams: I hope the member will be first in his seat after the dinner hour to hear words of wisdom and become informed and brought completely up to date on what is happening in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Mr. Lawlor: You wrap me up like a bale. I'll be shredded.

Mr. Williams: In the few minutes left to me before the dinner recess, I would like to dwell further on the magnitude of the problem that exists, as identified by the waste management study that was undertaken.

It is quite clear that the local municipalities, even at the regional level, cannot on their own initiative cope with the problem any longer. The Ministry of the Environment, through its initiative and in co-ordination with these municipalities, has to come to grips with this existing crisis. The only means by which they can do so is on an ongoing basis, whereby a great deal of capital dollars and technical input has to be brought forward and provided on an on-going basis.

After the dinner hour, I will elaborate on how the province specifically will be making its initiative and endeavouring to at least contain the crisis that currently exists. It is no more than a matter of containment. It is not a resolution of the problem unless we are prepared to recognize and, as a government, assist the regional municipalities in providing the necessary conventional waste disposal facilities which are lacking at this present time.

Mr. Acting Speaker: This might be a reasonable time to ask the honourable member to break his speech.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Resumption of the debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker: When we rose at 6 o'clock the member for Oriole was holding forth.

Mr. J. Reed: That's a fairly good description.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, just at the time of the dinner break I was commenting on the impact the metropolitan area waste management study, produced in 1976 for the Ontario Ministry of the Environment, was having. I had pointed out that that study had brought the whole problem of solid waste disposal to a new high level of interest and involvement at the provincial level. I pointed out that historically the responsibility for solid waste disposal, or garbage as it is commonly called, had been largely vested in and remained with the municipalities.

Mr. J. Reed: That's what it is.

Mr. Williams: We have moved from the day of the handling of this matter by the individual municipality, through the two-tier system of local government into the regional government area of operation and control. We have now reached the point where we have an active co-operative venture being undertaken with the provincial authorities through the Ministry of the Environment working with the local regional governments.

The metropolitan area waste management study has pointed the way. As a result of that study, one of its major recommendations was implemented when the Metropolitan Toronto and area waste management committee was established.

As I was saying in my closing remarks before dinner, that committee has been actively involved in co-ordinating the efforts between the four regional municipalities which are encompassed within that area study; the regions of Peel, York, Durham and of course Metropolitan Toronto. It is through the co-ordinating efforts of that committee that real progress is being made in joint undertakings and efforts by these regional governments to deal with the problem on a truly regionalized basis.

One of the other extremely important areas of involvement by the committee is that dealing with resource recovery. The Metro Toronto and area waste management committee undertook a study in 1978 which concluded that the municipalities within the study area should pursue very actively resource recovery methods as they are proven viable, with the purpose in mind to ultimately lessen the dependence on landfill.

I stress the point that the purpose is to lessen the dependence on landfill as a means of disposal. I made it quite clear earlier that the resource recovery methods and techniques as they're known to us today will never be able to fully replace the conventional methods of disposal of solid wastes by either incineration or the landfill process.

The objectives established by the committee have been to embark upon a program that would provide resource recovery facilities to reduce the dependence on landfill and incineration by approximately 26 per cent. That is the resource recovery program, when fully implemented as envisioned by the committee, would process about 26 per cent of the total annual waste generated within the study area by the year 1985. This objective would indeed help to contain the ever-growing problem of the increasing volumes of solid waste created by an ever-growing Metropolitan complex.

What I would like to do, particularly now that the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) has joined us, is to embark, for a few moments, upon an in-depth consideration of the resource recovery programs the ministry has in mind and what successes they have had.

Mr. J. Reed: That's exactly what it is.

Mr. Lawlor: You are rising to the bait.

Mr. J. Reed: It's had them in mind since 1973.

Mr. Williams: I think we can identify specifically this evening at least six resource recovery programs in which the ministry is actively involved. One of these is no longer on the drawing boards, it is a reality and is in place and operating. That particular undertaking, of course, is the Downsview resource recovery plant that was opened just about a year ago. I guess it was last August when the Premier (Mr. Davis) attended the official opening of the plant, which is considered by many to be the world's most advanced solid waste processing plant. The objective of that facility is to ultimately, when operating at full capacity, handle approximately 1,400 tons of garbage daily, acting as a transfer outlet within the transfer station program that we have within Metro, transferring 800 tons of that refuse to the existing landfill site out in Pickering, with the remaining 600 tons being subjected to resource recovery treatment. Essentially what happens in that situation is that when the glass and non-combustible materials are segregated from the paper and film, the combustible material can then be shredded, dried and processed, and the material treated in this fashion used in conjunction with the contract that's been entered into with Canada Cement Lafarge Limited, in Woodstock, Ontario, to assist them in fuelling their furnaces in that operation.

It is hoped that the use of the recycled fuel from the Downsview facility will ultimately contribute to approximately 50 per cent of the fuel consumed at the Woodstock undertaking.

If those expectations are met, it is anticipated that other cement manufacturing plants within Ontario will come on board and also participate in this project, which I think is a world leader.

The Downsview facility is at the startup point in its operation and is processing approximately a third of the anticipated daily 600 tons; in other words, it is now processing somewhat more than 200 tons. As of the coming week, the first transfers of processed garbage in the form of fuel—recycled fuel from the garbage, if you will—will be in transit to the Woodstock facility. Up until this point they have been burning it on stream, experimenting with the recycled material at the Dufferin incinerator close by and doing other experimental work with the recycled refuse.

Accordingly, we would hope that a year from now we will have our first significant report on the total success of that operation, utilizing the facilities of the cement company in Woodstock.

One of the other high-priority items currently under consideration is conversion of a part of the existing Commissioners Street incinerator, which is one of the three remaining operating incinerators within Metropolitan Toronto, so that it could provide steam from the processing of the garbage that is transferred to that facility. This would be for the purpose of providing energy in the form of steam to the Continental Can Company operation which adjoins the Commissioners Street incinerator facility.

This is an exciting proposal that still is in its planning stages. It requires the cooperative efforts of the ministry, Metro and, of course, the private industrial concern involved. It is anticipated, however, that the details of this particular project will be resolved in the near future and, therefore, that this program itself will also become a reality in the near future.

Dealing with the highly touted watts-from-waste program, an undertaking that has caught the particular attention of the member for Lakeshore, in which he places a great deal of faith, as we all do, that program is at the point where consideration of the establishment of a facility in Etobicoke is very much along in the planning process.

I am speaking of the Disco Road proposal, for development of a facility that would process about 800 tons of waste a day, with the residual 500 tons of recycled fuel being processed on a daily basis. That fuel would be used specifically to feed the Lakeview generating station at the lakeshore so that the Disco Road watts-from-waste program is tied in specifically with that particular electrical generation station of Ontario Hydro.

I must say, however, that there have been two setbacks in this particular program of some significance. It is with regret that I have to inform the House this evening, if it is not already generally known, of two difficulties that have arisen. First, the anticipated cost of the project of about $36,000,000, based on preliminary tenders that have been received, has now proved to be an underestimated cost in that the tenders reveal a more accurate projected cost of $46,000,000, up by $10,000,000.

I must point out that the total cost does involve the converting of one of the furnaces at the lakeshore facility at an estimated cost of $12,000,000. That is part of the built-in cost, but the total project has increased dramatically by $10,000,000.

While the province would absorb totally the cost of the furnace conversion at the Lakeview facility, estimated at $12,000,000, the province would be contributing only $3,000,000 more to the development and building of the actual Disco Road site. Consequently, the increased capital cost of that project, based on these preliminary tenders, has put the Metropolitan Toronto corporation in a rather difficult position, to the point where it appears the moneys that have been set out in the Metro Toronto capital budget for this year for this project have now been set aside. This indeed is a setback in the undertaking and development of that project.

I must point out, however, that it is not only the increased cost factor that is causing difficulties with the Metro partner in this undertaking but, in addition thereto, there are some mechanical problems that have come to light in recent weeks.

There are similar facilities being operated on an experimental basis too in our neighbouring states to the south. In three plants in particular, one in Iowa, another in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and a third in Chicago, Illinois, they have been experimenting with this watts-from-waste concept.

That has been reported to the ministry whose observers have determined that they have run into some difficulties in the use of that recycled fuel in the plants in those jurisdictions. This is giving great cause for concern because the recycled fuel is not burning cleanly and is causing difficulty in those facilities where they don't have the appropriate equipment to handle continuing residue falling out from that recycled fuel.

Those facilities heretofore have used coal totally as the source of fuel. It goes in in a powdered form and is completely consumed so that there are no grates or other equipment in the furnaces in those American experimental plants that are equipped to handle any residue or fallout such as they are experiencing from the recycled fuel with molten glass and other contaminants that are fouling up the grating system in those furnaces.

This then is the second setback that the watts-from-waste program has experienced. At this time it is difficult to say from a timing point of view how much further back this will set the program. My understanding, however, is that it is the full intention of the ministry, notwithstanding, in continuing to co-operate with Metropolitan Toronto, to persist and to see that program develop.

The fourth resource recovery program the ministry is pursuing actively in partnership with one of the regional municipalities is the Peel-Reed waste recovery plant that is proposed in the Peel region. The ministry is working actively with the Peel authorities to develop that program.

What is involved is the providing of waste material to act not only as fuel but also as material to go into the manufactured products of the Reed board plant in Peel. Reed has a property that is adjacent to the proposed site for the establishment of the separation plant that Peel and the ministry are proposing to build in that area.

I would point out that the Peel project would indeed be a unique undertaking as far as North America is concerned, in that they would be adapting a system new certainly to Ontario that has been developed in Italy. It is called the Sorrain-Cecchini separation process of waste material. This technique apparently has proved itself in Europe and is one that would be ideally suited to this particular undertaking.

In conjunction with the development of the separation plant using this technique it is also anticipated there would be incineration facilities developed on the site that would also assist in the waste disposal program in that region.

The fifth resource recovery project actively under consideration, which will have a profound impact if eventually brought on stream, as I anticipate it will be, is one that affects the inner core of the Metropolitan Toronto area. That, of course, is the development of the new Toronto district heat plant within the inner city that would replace the existing Toronto Hydro Pearl Street plant that contributes so substantially to the steam-heat program within the inner city.

At the present time, as you know, Mr. Speaker, we have operating within the inner city approximately five different systems providing steam heat to some of the institutions, such as the hospitals, government buildings and to some of the private corporations as well, I believe. It is anticipated that the new Toronto district heat facility would become the baseload carrier for the system within the city of Toronto, and as such would replace the present systems, making them simply the backup or secondary resource facilities in the event of a shutdown for whatever reason of this new, main facility.

That undertaking is one that would cost in the way of capital outlay approximately $84,000,000, so it is a very substantial project. But the steam-producing incinerator is one that is very much needed to assist in dealing with the solid waste volumes within the inner city, and at the same time assist in meeting the needs of the Toronto central heating system.

I think I have clearly shown that, indeed, there are some very specific resource recovery programs under way within Metropolitan Toronto. Just before leaving the one I mentioned last—the district heating plant for the inner city—I must point out it is still very much in the planning stage. It is such a big undertaking that, in fact, a rather substantial study has to precede the actual undertaking of the work. At this point in time, the city of Toronto has set aside $500,000 for a $2,000,000 study, with the province committing itself for $500,000 and the federal government $500,000.

At this time, the Metropolitan Toronto corporation is being asked also to contribute the same amount of money to provide the necessary funds to undertake this comprehensive study. But the initiative is coming from the city of Toronto, notwithstanding the fact it is a Metropolitan Toronto responsibility. There is certainly a great deal of co-operation going on right now, at the administrative level, between those two local government jurisdictions.

I think I have highlighted the resource recovery program and where we are with regard to it. The Ministry of the Environment, of course, is helping too in a very tangible way—in the form of dollars and resource people to give direction and assistance in the continuing development of this program.

Having touched on these specific types of resource recovery programs, I have to come back, however, to the main point I made earlier in the day. That is, we must not lose sight of the fact that if all these resource recovery projects come to full fruition and become totally operative, as envisaged by the ministry and the committee in charge of developing the programs, these projects, along with the existing three operating incinerators within Metropolitan Toronto, will handle only between 25 and 30 per cent of the solid waste disposal problem in Metropolitan Toronto; 30 per cent maximum is what the experts predict.

So I clearly come back to this point: Those people deceived into thinking this is the panacea, the answer to the solid waste disposal program, are just not considering this matter in the light of reality. Seventy per cent of the solid waste disposal program will need to be left to the conventional means of incineration or landfill. The best that the resource recovery program will do is to help contain the increased percentage by which incineration and landfill will have to cope with this problem.

I can't stress that point too strongly because it brings me back to one or two of my concluding comments.

[8:30]

Mr. Martel: Oh, don't quit now.

Mr. Williams: While we have the Pickering landfill facility operating as really the only major facility that will take us through the next five-year period, decisions have to be made now, not five years from now. Decisions have to be made within the next few months as to what new landfill sites will be available to the study region, that is, the four regions that are the subject matter of the study.

There is no existing facility, either north or west of the Metropolitan Toronto boundaries, that can accommodate the growing volume of waste. As I pointed out earlier, the existing landfill sites will be able to accommodate the volumes of waste only until 1985. We've got about a five-year period. That doesn't mean we don't have to do anything for another four or five years. The fact is we have to be making decisions now so that the necessary lead time is available to us to develop new landfill sites or expedite the development of the new incinerating facilities, such as the proposed district heating plant for the inner city of Toronto.

Whichever direction we move in, there are huge capital dollars that have to be committed. There are significant studies and plans that have to be developed over the next two or three years. Before those can even get under way, decisions have to be made that will give the green light to the agencies or governments involved to start this work. And it has to be done now.

A great deal of consideration and concern has been expressed about whether or not the provincial government should involve itself even more deeply in the field than it is at present by assuming directly the responsibility for the locating and developing of landfill sites within the region. Members will be aware of the fact that with regard to Metropolitan Toronto, John Robarts in his review of the Metropolitan Toronto government recommended specifically that the province assume this responsibility and that it be taken out of the hands of the metropolitan regional governments and given to the province. I think he felt in his study, in giving his reasons for this, that the province would not be acting in as parochial a way as perhaps some of the regional governments would be in applying the 19th century attitude expressed by the member for Lakeshore earlier today in saying that it's a great undertaking but "let's not have it in my backyard."

Mr. Lawlor: I've been leaving you alone. You had better watch yourself.

Mr. Williams: I think so long as that attitude persists and prevails—

Mr. Lawlor: I've been very patient with you up to now.

Mr. Williams: —we're just going to go nowhere with solving the huge problem that confronts Metro.

Mr. Lawlor: I thought you were winding down. I didn't want to get you going.

Mr. Williams: This indeed is a matter that is of great concern. I would say—and the minister has made it quite clear as recently as two or three weeks ago in addressing himself to this problem, based on representations and petitions submitted to him by the Whitchurch-Stouffville council—that the ministry is not about to take on that responsibility because it is felt that the regional governments have the full capacity and ability to deal with this regional problem.

The minister does not hesitate to make a place at the disposal of these regional governments through the committee and directly through the ministry. It's placed its resources at the command of these regional governments, but he does want the regional governments to remain primarily responsible for developing these sites to meet this regional problem.

The minister has committed himself and the ministry to allaying some of the concerns that have been expressed, if additional landfill sites are developed, about what safeguards or guarantees are going to be there, once these sites are completed and are converted to other functional uses. I think it has been made clear that the ministry is prepared to ensure that any of the public health and safety concerns are met.

One of the considerations of the ministry will be to ensure that perpetual care will be taken of existing—

Mr. J. Reed: You are going to need that. It will be just like a cemetery, won't it?

Mr. Williams: —and yet-to-be-developed landfill sites. If it did come to pass that any off-site contamination occurred after sites had been completed—which could happen, as we cannot guarantee that none of these things will happen; it's impossible to guarantee that nothing will happen since nothing is totally perfect, as we all realistically recognized—the ministry is prepared to commit itself to ensuring that perpetual care will be available there through the auspices of this government—

Mr. Haggerty: Like the Love Canal.

Mr. J. Reed: Is perpetual care your final solution?

Mr. Williams: —to provide these additional safeguards and to meet any unexpected contingencies that may arise. The financial resources and the resources of the ministry will be there to provide this protection. In addition to that, it is anticipated that a mechanism could be developed whereby a fund could be established to set up a contingency reserve to meet any of these possibilities.

In the event that the municipalities are not able to continue the initiative and co-operation they've shown—

Mr. Martel: There ought to be a law against this.

Mr. Haggerty: Put the city dump in your neighbour's backyard. That's what you're saying.

Mr. J. Reed: He doesn't want it in Oriole.

Mr. Williams: —in working with each other to develop the much-needed additional landfill site or incinerator and/or facilities within their regions—

Mr. Haggerty: Let the cities control their own.

Mr. Williams: —then the ministry will at that time have to decide whether it will have no other recourse but to assume that primary responsibility of locating, designating, developing and operating such sites. But, as the minister and the ministry have stated, they do not want to take that initiative away from the regional municipalities.

I know the Metro chairman of Metropolitan Toronto has suggested that, if necessary, if the continuing co-operation which is looking very positive at the moment didn't persist and continue, he would see the need for the provincial government perhaps to set up a separate crown agency that would have to assume this responsibility. It is hoped that the province will not have to assume the responsibility for securing sites for solid waste disposal and it would only be as a last resort that we would do so. I would hope that the suggestion by Metro Chairman Godfrey does not have to be pursued through default by the participating regional governments.

I hope in my brief comments this afternoon and this evening I have been able to bring a meaningful and true perspective to the magnitude and scope of the solid waste disposal crisis—

Mr. Kerrio: It's liquid waste, too.

Mr. Nixon: Are you still in the sewage?

Mr. Williams: —that confronts the people of Metropolitan Toronto and neighbouring regions. We must, on a co-operative basis, come to grips with this unpublicized crisis as a top-priority consideration and I would hope in the ensuing weeks and months ahead the members of the Legislature, working in co-operation with the ministry, will ensure the priority this problem deserves and will encourage the ministry to accelerate its undertakings to bring about a solution.

On behalf of the 2,500,000 people within Metropolitan Toronto and environs I would hope that this crisis, which has not received the recognition it deserves, will now be considered anew, and with renewed interest and involvement by the regional and provincial governments, to bring a solution to this problem.

Mr. J. Reed: I would like to say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that when I was beginning to put together some of the remarks I thought I would like to make tonight, I didn't have the benefit of stimulation from the member for Oriole. But now, especially during the last 43 minutes or so, in speaking of a subject that is rather close to my heart, he has succeeded in stimulating my adrenalin flow to the extent that I am now once again duly revived—

Mr. Grande: Stimulating your adrenalin flow!

Mr. Ruston: Ninety-five minutes.

Mr. J. Reed: —and I hope I will be able to make some contribution in this reply to Her Honour's speech.

Mr. Gregory: Don't take too long.

Mr. Ruston: I guess we will have to play the game too.

Mr. J. Reed: The great riding of Halton-Burlington is one of those ridings where population intensity has been increasing at a rate somewhat larger than in many other areas of the province.

Mr. Ruston: You have until 10:30.

Mr. J. Reed: As a result, the garbage crisis, to which my friend the member for Oriole referred, is a very real one. It has developed to the extent that the landfill sites—and what a misnomer that is; landfill, sanitary landfill site. There is nothing sanitary about a dump. We have to accept that fact right at the beginning—the dumps in Halton-Burlington are essentially full and, lo and behold, would you believe that now the region is selecting a new dump. It is to be located on 250 acres of prime agricultural land, some of the finest land, incidentally, in southern Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: Choice agricultural land.

Mr. Nixon: It always is.

Mr. J. Reed: This problem was one of the issues that led me into the political forum in the first place.

Mr. Haggerty: You are going to be there a long time.

Mr. Lawlor: It lead you up the garden path, did it?

Mr. J. Reed: I have spent a good part of my time trying to look at the alternatives to landfill sites, if I use the very polite term, and I might say that over the last three years I have made some interesting discoveries, as have the environment critics in the Liberal Party, which obviously have not filtered through to the government as yet.

The first observation I have to make is that Ontario is the last jurisdiction in the civilized world to get serious about resource recovery. I wonder whether the member for Oriole understands that in England resource recovery was common practice 40 years ago. I wonder whether he understands that in Montreal there is a company called Dominion Bridge, which exports its garbage disposal technology to all corners of Europe, and that the first installation was made a couple of years ago in the city of Montreal, which is producing 20 megawatts of electricity by burning garbage on a continuous basis.

I wonder whether the member for Oriole knows that. Does he realize that the technology exists in Canada, and yet the government of Ontario only now is discovering this wondrous thing called resource recovery. To accommodate this grand idea, they have spent $15,000,000 at Downsview for a separation-at-source or front-end system. It may be, as the member for Oriole says, the most advanced of its kind in the world. The only question is, of course, who wants it? Another question is, who needs it? The main question is, what percentage of the product going into the resource recovery system is coming out as usable product? I think it is around half—if that—that is coming out as some kind of usable product.

As a result of that, the member goes on to say that because of that advanced technology and what we have found, if I understood him correctly, we must have a continuing progression of garbage dumps across the province to take the necessary landfill.

Do the member and the government understand that with the correct kind of utilization of garbage the kind of end product is entirely different; that the kind of place it needs to go is entirely different? Does he realize there are processes where the end product is not only greatly reduced in size, but it is also relatively inert; that there is no problem with deterioration of the water table? There is no need to worry about it, because it simply is a relatively inert product.

I wonder whether the member even realizes there are two technologies that I know of in North America that now are on stream and produce two end products and just two end products—one a feedstock either to the petrochemical industry or for energy production, and the other a granular building product—and the systems require no landfill whatsoever.

The choice of technologies is broad—it was quite broad by 1975-77—and is increasing all the time. As a matter of fact, in 1977 the environment critic and I had the opportunity to go to Washington, District of Columbia, and attend a seminar on waste recovery. It was a seminar held 18 months after the federal government in the United States had declared garbage to be a national resource—not a problem, but a national resource.

The US government put up some seed money and challenged the municipalities and the states across the United States of America to put together various technological choices and various financial arrangements that would allow resource recovery to become a reality in the United States by 1980. In 18 months, I remind the member for Oriole, there were 68 different resource recovery systems in operation.

I always wonder with amazement why it is that in Ontario we are the last. We never seem to be in the forefront. I can tell the House right now that when we finally get on the ball—and it may not be until after another election, when the Liberals finally take over the government—we may once again, because of pressure of time, have to choose a technology created and manufactured outside this country. It disturbs me very much.

The government has made a big thing about resource recovery through the Environment ministry. There was a grand announcement, first of all, in 1973, that resource recovery would become a reality in Ontario. I think at the time the indication was that eight resource recovery plants would be created.

Mr. Haggerty: In the gravel pits around Woodstock?

Mr. J. Reed: There were to be eight, Mr. Speaker. I haven't seen one. There is one demonstration front-end plant at Downsview and that's all it is—a front-end plant; not one resource recovery unit in Ontario and it is now 1979.

The Ministry of the Environment also made a grand pronouncement last year that the government would underwrite 100 per cent of the cost of resource recovery for municipalities, with a 50 per cent payback. But when you read the fine print, what you find is that the technological framework makes acceptance of that kind of thing virtually impossible.

I have been pleading with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) ever since to broaden the base of that kind of financing to allow municipalities to choose the kind of resource recovery system most appropriate to their own population density, most appropriate to their own infrastructure and most appropriate to their financing capabilities. Yet the ministry reneges because it is always easier to make the grand pronouncement and then let everything slide.

Mr. Haggerty: It's cheaper to buy existing plants, isn't it, John?

Mr. J. Reed: My friend from Erie talks about the relative costs and so on. I have had this story presented to me so many times—landfill $5 a ton, resource recovery $8 a ton. But nowhere have I seen an award given to the value of the end products of resource recovery systems. The only official comments I have heard from the government about that very subject came from the former Minister of the Environment who said: "We just couldn't find markets for some of those products." That is the biggest piece of hogwash one could ever imagine. Garbage has to be looked at as a provincial resource; it must be dealt with as a provincial resource.

We heard everything in the last hour. I even heard—it is wonderful—the word "crisis" and with that I agree. Then I heard the expression "perpetual care." It is related somehow to other areas. The only expression we didn't hear in connection with this was "final solution."

The member, the new minister of garbage, has talked about the great uses to which these landfill sites can be put. The member for Oriole should inquire of organizations like Landscape Canada and so on, and just find out whether or not there are any problems with some of these landfill sites turned into recreation areas. To carry it a step further, some of them have even been turned into housing developments. Let him find out about the ones that have been vented in the Kit-chener area. Let him find out about the people who have been called back to ski hills built on garbage dumps because of the danger of methane explosion.

Mr. Grande: Finished?

Mr. J. Reed: I have just started.

All of the dreams and machinations of the government will not bring resource recovery to pass. And all of the protestations that landfill is a continuing necessity on the basis on which it had been engineered in the past is just plain nonsense. To suggest that one can constantly monitor a landfill site in perpetual care does not hold any water whatsoever.

I do not know of one leachate system, for instance, in the province of Ontario that works 100 per cent. I don't know of one that works 100 per cent, Mr. Speaker, but I can take you to lots that don't work well at all. Anyone who knows anything about landfill and garbage knows that the toxicity and the intensity of the runoff in the leachate builds for the first 10 years and then stays with us at a gradually diminishing level for the next 20 or 30 years. And that landfill site, if it is on prime agricultural land, will never again grow a crop that is suitable for human or animal feed.

The time has come for the government to do something constructive about garbage. The riding of Halton-Burlington has a very large population in the south end and a relatively small one in the north end, which has precipitated a problem since the inception of regional government. The problem is simply not only that the voting power is concentrated in the populated area, but also that the provincial government's calculations and provincial government spending in the area are directed to calculations based on the whole region.

Because of this anomaly the north end of the region of Halton is devoid of nursing home facilities. For the last two years I have tried to convince the ministry of the reality of the situation in Halton, and the fact that the figures the ministry uses to calculate the need for bed space is based on the whole region and does not address the obvious problem of what one does with a person in the north end of the riding who needs extended care. The situation at the present time is such that a person living in the great town of Georgetown or the great town of Acton must leave his community for the rest of his natural life in order to get the kind of medical care that he needs.

Mr. Nixon: Shame.

Mr. J. Reed: Yes, it is a shame, because there is no need for that kind of thing if the ministry were to just calculate the need on the basis of the physical areas, the community areas, rather than on the basis of the region. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the need for nursing home beds in the north end of Halton is one of the projects that I have pursued with intensity since my first election to this House, and I will continue to pursue it until we succeed.

Mr. Nixon: We will back you up when you are Minister of Energy, too. The week after next.

Mr. J. Reed: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has brought me nicely to my next subject because I would like to talk for a couple of minutes on that state within a state that we call Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Nixon: This will be good. He knows more about it than anybody.

Mr. J. Reed: You have to know something first of all about the history of how Hydro got that way, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't always that way. It was the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Mr. Makarchuk: It was only when they got the friends of Bill Davis on the board of directors. That is when it started.

[9:00]

Mr. J. Reed: Just be a little careful because your party voted in the Power Corporation Act.

I believe it was in 1973, if I understand my history properly, that the Power Corporation Act changed Ontario Hydro from being a commission to a power corporation.

Mr. Nixon: A black day for Ontario.

Mr. J. Reed: It was a black day for Ontario. Thank you. I get my best lines from my colleague. But first of all I have to say that, to the credit of the Liberal Party, under the great leadership of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, we were the only party that voted against that headlong rush into the Power Corporation Act.

What did it do? The Power Corporation Act, with all of its benefits on one hand, removed any ability of government to impose policy framework or active controls on the operation of Ontario Hydro. As a matter of fact, if we study the corporate makeup of Ontario Hydro as it exists now, we will find that it is logical for the directors of Ontario Hydro to consider that they, in trust, own Ontario Hydro. If we look at it further and try to get an opinion on where the responsibility is of those directors, that responsibility—and I have to give this name, because I just learned it two weeks ago—is called fiduciary responsibility. In a private corporation, that would be the responsibility of directors to their stockholders. If we look at how it is set up in Ontario Hydro, we find that the fiduciary responsibility is to the board of directors itself. It is a state within a state.

Probably for the first time, there has been a great deal of concern in the last few years about Ontario Hydro because of rising energy costs and with the change from hydraulic generation of electric power—which is the best, most reliable and cheapest in the world—to basically thermal generation, both nuclear and fossil fuel. There is a coming realization that the buck has got to stop somewhere in terms of responsibility. The people of Ontario expect—and believe, by and large, at the present time—that the buck stops with the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Nixon: That's a joke.

Mr. J. Reed: It is the biggest joke that has ever been perpetrated on the people. The buck does not stop with the Minister of Energy. The only ultimate control is in the hands of the Treasurer of Ontario and, in a reactive sense, with the Premier through the approval or non-approval of Lieutenant Governor's order in council. That is the only control. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, that is some control; it is the kind of control that could have been exercised over the last five or six years.

I would like to ask the Premier—and I think the opportunity will come this spring—how many orders in council the cabinet really turned down when Hydro went to them asking for approval. There was a great temptation to rubber-stamp absolutely everything that came before them: Hydro could do no wrong.

We hope to change that when we reintroduce our bill, called the Hydro Public Accountability Act, later this week. It will compel the Ministry of Energy to take government policy to Ontario Hydro, and it will amend the Power Corporation Act to compel Ontario Hydro to accept it.

If the members think this is something far-fetched that the government could not accept, I would just like to refer briefly to a press release dated February 14, 1974. In this press release the Premier (Mr. Davis) announced the appointment of the new board of directors of Ontario Hydro and I have to reveal something very interesting in his statement. He says that the focus of the board's efforts is to facilitate consistent policy direction in compliance with government policy. Can you believe it? I wonder where he's been all these years: "in compliance with government policy."

Even Task Force Hydro recommended that government policy should apply to Ontario Hydro and that has never ever been effected, and I believe it can only be effected through proper amendments to the Power Corporation Act and the Energy Act. Only then will the Minister of Energy become accountable to the people of Ontario for the actions of Ontario Hydro.

As a result of the lack of imposition of control on Hydro, control the government could have imposed through the refusal to simply rubber-stamp orders in council, there began a process of overbuilding which is incomparable in the history of this province. The capital overbuild, if one takes the whole investment of Ontario Hydro, is $2,000,000,000. If one considers the replacement, the current building cost of that capital, it is $4,000,000,000, which has to be the biggest blunder in the history of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: And there have been some big ones.

Mr. J. Reed: I think this one is bigger. The government has started to come to the rescue and they said it is better to have too much than too little.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), speaking to the Association of Major Power Consumers on March 29, talked about the surplus and to accept the surplus but accused the opposition of "talking of dealing with the surplus by stopping the world"—I am quoting from Mr. Grossman's speech—"by stopping the world." The minister said, "We at the Ministry of Industry and Tourism see this surplus as a key weapon in our competition for new industry."

If he only knew; if he only understood enough about the generation of electric power he would realize that that 4,000 megawatt surplus—the surplus which exists over and above reserve margins of all sorts, over and above all techniques of load management, over and above any thrust to gain in capacity through conservation, that surplus which is unused and unusable—simply adds to the cost of the electric power that is being consumed in the province of Ontario.

We talk about the problems with and the costs of medical care. I have often wondered about our employment, our medical care and our government thrusts in various directions in resource and recovery and so on, and what it would be like if we had redirected that $2,000,000,000 in other directions.

Mr. Nixon: The minister says it is good to be stupid, I guess.

Mr. J. Reed: It is better not to think if you want to become a minister of this government.

Mr. Gregory: You are perfectly qualified then, aren't you?

Mr. J. Reed: The so-called positive economic impact of the overbuild is of the shortest duration; maybe that's political, but if anybody would take the trouble to look at Hydro's forecast of the wholesale cost of producing power in 1984 or 1985, it's easy to see that the cost of power between now and then will once again more than double. Why? Because we've got a system that will go largely unused.

The Premier says this surplus is going to save us from the ayatollah. This is one of the great myths of our time. If one observes the growth of electric power consumption in the United States where there is really an energy crisis, where there is really an oil crisis, where it's all happening and where gasoline is being rationed this week in Florida, one finds that the growth of electric power is actually declining. The reason is simple enough. It is that one doesn't transfer technologies overnight from one to another.

I did a little thumbnail observation about what it would be like if tomorrow morning a million automobiles drove out of the garage energized by electricity and what impact that would make on the electric power system.

Mr. Gregory: There would be a hell of a traffic jam.

Mr. J. Reed: Anybody who does a little calculation on that is going to find that all that would succeed in doing is using up the hollows in the daily load curve. It wouldn't even move into our reserves, let alone into our surplus.

Mr. Nixon: Or half the amount we use at Christmas time.

Mr. J. Reed: I'm all in favour of a technology of motor power through electricity. It's a very high end use to make electricity turn wheels. But let's look at the reality of trying to transfer technologies from one to another. I would say to those who see electric power as a large-scale producer of low-grade heat in this province in the future that they should look at the competitive costs of the alternatives as the cost of electric power increases. If those who live in gold medallion homes at the present time think the cost of power has gone up now, they ain't seen nothing yet. It's only started.

The only hope we have to get us off the hook and to get these errors smoothed over is going to be to be able to export large amounts of interruptible power to the United States. Because of the unfortunate incidents of recent days and the closure of nuclear plants for safety reasons in the northeastern United States, we may yet have the opportunity to get ourselves off the financial hook. But that is no excuse for incredibly bad management. That is no excuse for a government to ignore the utility or to continue to ignore the utility. That is no excuse for the government to continue to fail to understand the energy situation in the province of Ontario.

I realize that it may be politically advantageous sometimes for the Premier to subscribe to the philosophy that where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise. But the chickens will come home to roost, sure as can be. We're headed in the direction of higher costs. The government can play politics with this surplus and can say how secure we suddenly are because we've got 4,000 megawatts of electricity. But when one comes to try to use it or to compare it with the alternatives that are available, even the alternatives that could be available if we put a little bit of research and development and a little bit of thrust to develop, one finds that electricity does not hold up very well in terms of cost to the consumer.

Cost brings me to one other area that has to be addressed in terms of Ontario Hydro; that is, the rate structure. My colleague the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) introduced a bill last year which would allow a small initial sale of electric power to every power consumer in Ontario, giving a price break to those people on fixed incomes, the elderly and people who are generally small users of electric power in the first place, but who at the present time are paying the highest rates and are at the highest end of the scale. Why? Because our rate structure is still geared to the hydraulic power system, where it was cheaper to buy more electric power because it was cheaper to produce and, otherwise, the water would be going over the spillway and not through the turbines.

That situation has changed dramatically in the last 10 or 15 years. In those days, in fact, we actually had what was called marginal cost pricing because the more you used, the cheaper it was, and the cheaper it was to produce. We're completely away from that at the present time. I would suggest two approaches for the government to consider.

One is that the domestic user of electric power be allowed to purchase his power possibly on a two-price system, on a base load and a peak load, in a manner similar to many commercial and industrial enterprises. That kind of system could provide the incentive to the consumer of fairly substantial quantities of electric power to buy quantities of base-load electric power. It has been estimated that a switch to baseload utilization of electric power could actually cut the cost by one third.

The other approach is for the government to immediately accept the lifeline approach to electric power sale. It will not affect the total cost of electric power. It won't raise anybody's total payment, if one looks at the reality of it, but what it will do is give a break to the people who need it the most. Surely, if electrical generation in Ontario is a public utility, it should be available to everybody.

I would like to spend a couple of minutes talking about one other area of energy that I believe is vital to the province, but is addressed in about the same manner as garbage utilization and resource recovery. That is, we do mounds of talking. We put up little dribs and drabs of high profile money here and there, but we don't take it on as a serious thrust. We don't really get serious.

If we look at the potential or at the inventory of energy in Ontario, we find we have some uranium, we find we have some hydraulic power, both where we can generate electricity, but we also find there are areas where we have potential we're not pursuing.

One is the area of conservation. I get a kick out of the government. When it suits them, they'll say: "Conservation really can't have the impact that you would like it to have, Julian. It's a nice idea, but it really can't work."

Just let me go on record, Mr. Speaker, as saying the evidence is in that Ontario could gain about 5,000 megawatts of generating capacity by simple energy conservation such as insulation and increasing the efficiency of energy utilization in homes. That is 5,000 megawatts. The cost of that gained generation capacity would be half of the cost of building nuclear reactors. That's a lot of energy that is currently being wasted. When you stop and think of the fact that in Ontario we're the highest consumers of energy per capita in the world, it seems to take on, hopefully, a little bit of significance.

The other area, of course, is the development of renewables and alternatives. The government has indeed, and to its credit, raised the expenditures in these areas over recent years, but what continues to plague us in Ontario is that it is not coupled with any alteration or any breakdown of the institutional barriers which prevent us from getting on with the job.

It is also continually frustrating that the government does not undertake what has to be undertaken at the present time: the establishment of demonstration projects in new technologies which will allow us once and for all to establish the financial validity of some of these alternatives that are available to us.

I have said often to the Canadian nuclear industry that one of the things they might do is promote the research and development in renewables, in alternative energies. If they are so convinced that nuclear power is the cheapest, the most viable, then that kind of demonstration would establish it, wouldn't it? It would establish it once and for all.

I have also, of course, said to the government many times that the further development of hydraulic power in the province of Ontario would provide the perfect complement to our nuclear system, understanding that nuclear power has a limitation in that it can only generate baseload electric power and can't go beyond that, but hydraulic power can provide a good part of the peak.

I wonder as well what the government of Ontario does regarding its relationship with the federal government. You know, Mr. Speaker, the feds came out with a statement that they were approving the export of 2,000,000,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas over the next 10 years.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Talk to Margaret.

Mr. J. Reed: In the light of the perceived need, that 2,000,000,000,000 cubic feet appears to be in surplus, but I don't think there is one member of this provincial government, neither the Premier or the Minister of Energy, who has gone to the federal government and said that 2,000,000,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas could provide the difference between Canada being a net importer and a net exporter of petroleum. No one has gone to the federal government and said we have to establish a system for the conversion of natural gas to liquid fuel in order to supplement our petroleum supply, but the potential is there.

Methanol is made in Ontario at the present time. The last wholesale price I got I think was 62 cents a gallon. The fact is the technology is there; the technology is simple, it is easy, it is before us. If we are concerned about oil insecurity and importation from the Middle East, then we should be concerned about those facilities we have inside our own country.

Ontario imports 80 per cent of the energy it uses. It seems logical that the Minister of Energy of Ontario should be talking like a Philadelphia lawyer to the Minister of Energy in Ottawa, persuading him that those 2,000,000,000,000 cubic feet could make liquid fuel for automobile transportation. I don't think there is anything radical about it; there is nothing that is not tried and true at the present time, but the potential is there. We have a long way to go.

I realize that it is a little risky to talk about new ideas to the government of the day. The first response of the government is always negative. We are always told that new ideas and new concepts will not work, and so on. It has been an observation of mine that about two years later those ideas end up as Tory policy, usually in a much watered down form. That is a technique I think used to try to placate the opposition on one hand, and also utilize some of the originality which this government is totally devoid of at this present time.

Mr. Nixon: Right.

Mr. J. Reed: The Ministry of Energy, of all ministries, needs imagination and needs creativity. There is no status quo in energy any more in the world. We are in a constant state of change and those sources we have relied on and which we thought were tried and true 20 or 30 years ago are no longer in the same category, sometimes because of cost and sometimes because of uncertainty of supply.

The world is changing, and energy will be the most important issue to face this province between now and the end of this century. We are already a decade behind in our grasp of what is actually going on. We are a decade behind in our grasp of what the potential is in the future. I am not the least bit discouraged about the potential of energy in Ontario. With the proper application and the proper development, we could even strive for self-sufficiency, given the time, given the inclination and the determination, but we are not getting anywhere. We are spinning our wheels at the present time. We are spinning our wheels simply because a government which has been in power for 36 years has run out of ideas. It's got no place to go except, I understand, it picks through Hansard on a daily basis to suck the ideas presented by the opposition. That's not the kind of government I want.

Mr. Nixon: Time for a change.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think an enema will do.

Mr. J. Reed: That is the signal that a change is due and that a change is impending.

Mr. Nixon: Starting Thursday.

Mr. J. Reed: As I close, I would just like to make a statement to this House about the nuclear incident that has precipitated such concern among the people of Ontario in recent days. Our leader has called for an immediate reconvening of the select committee in order to look at all the safety aspects of the Canadian nuclear technology. This is something which was addressed to the select committee to be done later on this year in the summer; but we have urged the government to allow the select committee to sit concurrently with the House so as to examine this system in detail.

The people of Ontario deserve no less. We have also asked that the chairman of the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning be seconded in order to provide an impartial, learned consultant on this matter.

Ms. Gigantes: That's letting the politicians off the hook.

Mr. J. Reed: The member for Carleton East will get her chance. If she'll just keep it together, she'll get her chance.

One of the main reasons we want the chairman of the royal commission to be with us is that certain testimony has to be in camera. We know that. We know for instance that Dr. Gordon Edwards,—

Ms. Gigantes: What in camera? What are you talking about, in camera?

Mr. J. Reed:—her friend, has requested certain information about the nuclear systems that has not been given to him because it's been considered classified information.

Ms. Gigantes: Do you accept that non-sense?

Mr. J. Reed: No.

Ms. Gigantes: Do you accept that non-sense?

Mr. J. Reed: I accept that they have said it's classified and I have said that they accept that it can't be revealed.

Ms. Gigantes: Shame on you.

[9:30]

Mr. J. Reed: I would suggest the people of Ontario have trust in Dr. Porter, more trust than they have in the select committee, because historically with select committees in this province the minute something is done in camera or done confidentially it somehow is leaked by some party to the press.

Ms. Gigantes: What are you talking about, in camera?

Mr. J. Reed: Remember the history of those things?

Mr. M. Davidson: You guys are pretty good at that.

Mr. J. Reed: I don't think we have borne the responsibility for that.

Ms. Gigantes: You sound like the federal Liberals.

Mr. J. Reed: I would, therefore, suggest that the people of Ontario deserve no less than full disclosure of all the facts pertaining to the nuclear system; understanding that the parallels between—

Ms. Gigantes: In-camera hearings. Good Lord!

Mr. J. Reed: —the American system where the most recent problem occurred and the Canadian system are very hard to draw. They are not similar. They are not similar technologies. I am not going to go through the differences here. But I do believe, when the truth is revealed about the two technologies, that the Candu system, while it may very well have problems, will not reveal the same problems or similar problems to those that occurred in Harrisburg.

Ms. Gigantes: Nonsense.

Mr. J. Reed: The Candu system has proven its reliability to this extent. Indeed, the Liberal Party has accepted the validity of those engines. Our concerns about nuclear power have been connected with storage of wastes and ejection of massive quantities of warm water into the environment. Those areas are where the Liberal concerns still lie, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Gigantes: You sound like Clark dealing with the oil companies.

Mr. J. Reed: Well, the member for Carleton East would close down the energy system in Ontario tomorrow morning, I know she would.

Ms. Gigantes: Is that right? Just wait for it.

Mr. J. Reed: I know she would like to do that.

Ms. Gigantes: Wait for it. Just wait for it, Julian.

Mr. J. Reed: I know she would like to be in a position to make some draconian imposition on all the people; to bring about her great socialist plan for Ontario. But, believe me, what we are going to do with the select committee—

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't be provocative now.

Mr. J. Reed: —is get at the truth. We are going to get at the truth of the technology. We are going to establish the facts so the people of Ontario can then judge where they want their energy future, in terms of electric power production, to lie.

Ms. Gigantes: Who elected Arthur Porter? Did you elect him? You are a gutless wonder.

Mr. Ruston: Evelyn, what did you say?

Mr. J. Reed: I would point out to the honourable member that I—

Mr. Nixon: Beauty is in the eye of the beholder.

Mr. J. Reed: —I don't share her view of my physique and—

Mr. Samis: Where is the evidence?

Mr. J. Reed: —I wonder if she might change that phrase somehow.

Ms. Gigantes: Hot air.

Mr. J. Reed: You may call me gutless, but I can never accept that accusation.

But I do believe the time has come for a full revelation of the facts. We, the people of Ontario, are not ready to accept the notion that Big Brother is good for us and that Big Brother will tell us what is right. That is what has been happening up to this point.

Ms. Gigantes: Arthur Porter will tell us; that's what you say. Little Brother will tell us.

Mr. J. Reed: The big brothers, the technocrats of the nuclear industry, have said, "Everything is fine; you don't have to worry about anything; we have no problem."

It may turn out that we don't have significant problems. But we do know there is no technology on the face of the earth that can be made 100 per cent safe. So, therefore, the facts will have to be weighed in the balance and those decisions made and I would—

Ms. Gigantes: That was a meaningful statement.

Mr. J. Reed: Well, all right. Yes, I think it is a meaningful statement. When you consider that there are now 5,000 megawatts of nuclear power being generated in Ontario, that has to be a meaningful statement. I would ask the member just to think of the alternatives when she shuts those reactors down. Pray God it never happens, if a socialist government was ever to take over in Ontario. I also wonder what the unions would think of her too.

Interjections.

Mr. J. Reed: But that is a story for another day.

I would like to thank the members of the House for putting up with this rambling escapade tonight. I do believe there has been a little bit of ground covered. Some of it has been in very important areas that pertain to my own riding, and some in areas I am deeply concerned with, in the energy portfolio that I am honoured to hold as critic for the Liberal Party.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I am not in the best of voice. I hope my honourable colleagues will bear with me.

Mr. Conway: We hope you are in the best of moods.

Ms. Gigantes: I am in a very good mood, however.

We have put forward a no-confidence motion in response to the speech from the throne. In part, that no-confidence motion reads: "That we have no confidence in this government for its failure to put into place a balanced energy strategy reflecting Ontario's need for conservation and energy sources additional to electricity and imported fuel."

That section of our no-confidence motion relates to a particular section of the throne speech. In the throne speech we have the promise that the Ministry of Energy "will continue efforts to ensure that the option for Ontario's future supplies are as flexible as possible." One has to ask at this stage, what efforts?

The speech alludes vaguely to the aim of concluding the $58,000,000 agreement with the feds to demonstrate new conservation and renewable energy technology. It is the same old game we see played so often in this Legislature of saying to the federal government, "After you, Alphonse. We will do something, but you do it first. Let's have your money; let's have you make the first move, then we will do something." This government turns to the people of Ontario and says, "We are waiting for the feds." All this from the government which tells us we cannot afford a provincial home insulation program. Some flexibility; some options.

The speech from the throne also alludes to the Ontario Energy Corporation's support for what it calls "energy-related business development of byproduct power and energy from waste." That is quite a mouthful. One has to wonder, is this what is known usually as industrial co-generation? What kind of program is the government proposing with that kind of mouthful? Is there any promise of money? Is there any promise of reorganization, really to undertake the kinds of programs that are involved if we are going to move to industrial co-generation?

Again, the speech from the throne says the government wishes to "enable the Ontario Energy Corporation to take a more active role in the achievement of energy and economic policy objectives in Ontario." There is nowhere to go but up when they talk about a more active role. Any action at all would be more action as far as the Ontario Energy Corporation is concerned. The only significant undertaking by that corporation in four years of existence has been to buy $100,000,000 of Syncrude shares in 1975 and sell them at a profit of $60,000,000 in 1978. As soon as the government realized it was making a profit for the public of Ontario by taking an equity position in this undertaking it quickly ran to the market and sold off its shares. That is all the Ontario Energy Corporation has really undertaken in four years of action. Everything we do and everything we see from that corporation now has got to be more action.

Given that this government has not brought forward any respectable policy objectives for this province's energy and economic future, it is more than a little difficult to be impressed by the promise that the Ontario Energy Corporation will be developed as a tool for achieving policy objectives in either the economic or the energy field.

The throne speech speaks of only one policy commitment of any significance in the energy field. That is a commitment to "safeguard and enhance Ontario Hydro's production facilities as a future guarantee of electricity." It goes on to say: "It would be highly irresponsible to weaken the province's commitment to the generation of electricity from nuclear power." The speech refers to Ontario's nuclear power program as a "safe, secure and efficient means of protecting present and future generations of Ontarians."

I would like to spend the next several minutes explaining why I feel, as energy critic for the NDP caucus in this Legislature, that it would be highly irresponsible for members of this Legislature to approve a throne speech which contains such a miserable excuse for an energy policy. This government has never had an energy policy worthy of the name, and it is not proposing to have one in this throne speech. In the past, it has had instead a series of disjointed responses that have been developed on a totally ad hoc basis.

Some of those responses have involved major commitments to energy supply programs, commitments such as the multimillion-dollar temporary commitment to the development of tar sands oil and the multibillion-dollar commitment to expanding nuclear power. Enormous as these substantial undertakings have been, they are, nevertheless, ad hoc responses to particular pressures in the energy field.

Though this throne speech suggests expanding Ontario Hydro's generation facilities and, therefore, its transmission system and though the speech suggests vaguely that nuclear power can protect us from the international oil "meanies," it nowhere announces a government policy objective of having electricity substituted for oil in Ontario. The vague platitudes and mushy thought contained in the energy announcements of this throne speech do not add up to even that much of a policy.

With all the energy hocus-pocus that it has given us, the federal government has at least had the gumption to state that its clear goal is to see Ontario substitute nuclear-produced electricity for oil. It may be a stupid and perverse policy, an inefficient and insupportable goal but at least the federal government has had the courage to come right out and say it is its goal. Would that this government would at least show similar courage. If it did, if this aged Conservative government were willing to display the intestinal fortitude which the Premier (Mr. Davis) always cites when it comes to such things as cutting back hospital beds and starving services to people, then at least we could challenge the government to explain why it has adopted the goal of substituting nuclear power for oil.

As it is, with no clear statement of government policy we are forced to talk into a policy vacuum and to try to encourage the analysis of a policy goal which has not even been publicly identified. Suppose we try to speak to the nonexistent policy goal. In Ontario, in the main, we use oil to achieve two desirable ends. One is to warm our buildings and the other is to transport goods and people. If we did not need to transport goods and people and if we did not need to warm our buildings, we could eliminate the use of oil in Ontario without much disruption.

So the real question has to be: Is it reasonable to aim for the use of nuclear power—electricity produced by nuclear power—as a substitute for oil and oil derivatives in transportation or in space heating in this province?

Let us look at transportation first. The sad fact is that even the most enthusiastic nuclear promoters are unwilling to propose a substitution of electricity for oil in the transport sector. The full electrification of interurban rail and the full electrification of urban public transit systems, neither of which will or could be cheap or easy to accomplish, would contribute relatively little in oil savings. It would not be unfair to say that the electrification of Ontario's transportation system, as far as it can contribute to oil savings, would be but a drop in the barrel and that the nuclear addicts are willing to concede that this conclusion is a fact.

So then we turn to space heating to search for the presumed benefits of substituting nuclear-produced electrical power for oil in Ontario. The question is raised—and we see it raised often, and it's put simply: why doesn't Ontario plug in to keep warm, especially as we have excess capacity on line in the electrical system?

The answer is as simple as the question. And the answer is cost. Nuclear power is too expensive to provide warmth for Ontario consumers. It's too expensive now—witness the dropping Hydro forecast—and it's likely to become even more expensive in real terms in the future. It's precisely because nuclear power is too expensive for heating that we have witnessed the dramatic dropoff in the growth of electrical use in this province.

Everyone, including Hydro, the Ministry of Energy and all the technical experts who have testified before the select committee on Hydro, everyone now admits that Hydro's forecasts were exorbitant—not only because Hydro assumed a healthier economy than we have, but also because Hydro assumed the rate increases of the last three years would not have a significant effect on how much electricity Ontario consumers would buy when the price per kilowatt shot up.

Ontario consumers have proved ready, willing and able to use less electricity as the electricity has increased in real terms. They have successfully used less electricity, even though there has been no substantial government program to help them use less. There has been a Hydro ad campaign which told residential consumers they were slobs if they wasted energy, but there has been no home insulation program to help make energy savings, and there has been an understaffed, underfunded advisory campaign to encourage industrial consumers not to waste energy, but there has been no co-generation program to help industry make energy savings.

In spite of the insubstantial support of this government we have seen Ontario consumers trim their use of electricity in substantial ways. In fact, the reaction of Ontario consumers to real increases in the cost of a kilowatt has been so immediate and so impressive that it has already created the vicious cycle where Hydro's revenues from its existing electrical system are not adequate to cover the costs of that system on a year-to-year basis.

The cycle goes as follows: Hydro adds a higher rate increase with the goal of covering current costs, only to discover that extra rate increases create even lower levels of consumer purchases of electricity. This pattern of rate increases, lower purchases, revenue shortages; rate increases and further lowering of purchases, is a real and present threat to Hydro's financial capability. It's a pattern which will become even more dangerous as Ontario consumers become aware of the private benefits of insulation and investment in alternate methods of energy supply.

Though this government has refused to acknowledge the fact, Ontario Hydro is in real and present danger of financial catastrophe because of consumer reaction to rate increases. People in this province are not willing to pay the price for increased electrical heating, and this government will either have to face that fact or try and force Ontarians to do what they will not willingly do. I doubt that even this government would dare such perversity.

As we know all too well, the current Conservative government stance as the legislative apologists for Ontario Hydro mistakes has already cost Ontario taxpayers billions of dollars. Every day of delay in the decision to stop construction of excess heavy water capacity at Bruce heavy water plant D costs Ontario $330,000. The 74 days that elapsed between the time the select committee recommended construction be stopped at the plant on October 26, 1978 and the time that Hydro, not the Minister of Energy, announced the halt in construction, created a cost, that Ontario consumers should not have had to pay, of $24,420,000.

From the time the Premier (Mr. Davis) insisted on signing contracts for an oversupply of uranium from Rio Algom and Denison, Mr. Stephen Roman has picked up a personal profit on his shares of Denison which I calculate at well over $50,000,000.

Mr. Nixon: Is that with the drop yesterday taken into consideration?

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, I think you could add that in.

Mr. Nixon: You subtract that.

Ms. Gigantes: I'd fold it in. The majority of the Hydro select committee recommended that the Premier not approve the contracts, but the Premier laughed at the majority because it was not of one mind about the alternatives. He gleefully signed those awful contracts, on which we are obliged to put a $300,000,000 down payment and pay $5 per ton more than the cost of production, whatever those costs may be according to Rio Algom and Denison Corporation.

It's hard to put an estimate on the unwarranted cost the Premier loaded on us with that one. The extra costs range from $50,000,000 straight up to a potential of $2,000,000,000. Unless we can somehow modify them, these uranium contracts will be providing us with excess fuel until the year 2020, and all of it at an outrageous cost.

More than these little specific slips, each of which we will be forced to subsidize as consumers of Ontario Hydro, the unforgivable sin of this government is that it has not only permitted Ontario Hydro to continue a program of overbuilding nuclear power stations; it has encouraged, and continues to encourage, that program.

While the government downplays the scale of existing overbuilding, it manipulates the figures and stretches credulity to the point where it claims the overbuilding is only "17 per cent." Seventeen per cent as an estimate of the overbuilding in the current Ontario Hydro system is a laughable estimate.

The facts are as follows: Hydro now has enough stations in operation to produce 23,000 megawatts of electricity. Last year and the year before, Ontarians purchased 16,000 megawatts on the coldest days of each year. The excess of capacity on the Hydro system is therefore 7,000 megawatts gross. Hydro claims it needs a reserve margin of 25 per cent for those times when stations are undergoing planned repairs and for times when stations are, for one unexpected reason or another, out of commission.

What Hydro never says is that the part of our system capacity which depends on water power as opposed to the burning of various fuels, in other words the real hydro system, produces 6,000 megawatts of extremely cheap, extremely reliable electric power. Even the drought of 1977 cut only about 1,200 megawatts off that 6,000 megawatt energy goldmine. It's therefore ridiculous to believe that our 6,000 megawatts of water power requires a reserve margin of 25 per cent.

If we were to assign a reserve margin of 1,000 megawatts to that 6,000 megawatts of hydraulic electric capacity, that would be, averaging over the years, a very generous margin of reserve.

If we then turn to the fuel-burning thermal generators which Hydro has built, we know that only 10,000 megawatts of the already constructed 17,000 megawatt capacity was being used on the coldest days of the last two years. Let's imagine, then, that 1,000 of the extra 7,000 megawatts is required to provide a reserve for the hydro part of the system. We're left with an extra 6,000 megawatts. If we accept Hydro's estimate that the 10,000 fuel-produced megawatts on the system will require a 25 per cent reserve margin—which in itself is a questionable assumption, but let's give it to them—then we will merely subtract another 2,500 megawatts from the extra capacity.

So from the original 7,000 extra megawatts, we first subtract 1,000 megawatts to ensure reliability or backup of the hydraulic power and then we have 6,000 megawatts extra. From the 6,000 we subtract another 2,500 megawatts to provide a 25 per cent margin on the fuel-fired electrical system and we're still left with 3,500 megawatts we don't need, even though we've had to pay, and must continue to pay, for the cost of constructing the plants.

Those 3,500 megawatts are excess fuel-fired capacity. They are thermal plants which are excess to the thermal part of the electrical system. They are 35 per cent in excess of the thermal system which we require, even if one accepts Hydro's contention that a 25 per cent reserve margin is vital to reliability, which the select committee questioned in 1976.

If we proceed to build Darlington, and Darlington is constructed for operation in 1986 or 1989, it will cost us roughly $5,000,000,000 and it will be capable of producing 3,500 megawatts. If we proceed to build Darlington for operation in 1986 or 1989, we will be spending $5,000,000,000 to construct another 3,500 megawatts which we will not need in 1986 or 1989.

The 3,500 megawatt excess capacity which we have in 1979 did not cost us $5,000,000,000 to produce. It probably cost us closer to $1,500,000,000. But that $1,500,000,000 investment will earn Ontario Hydro no revenue in 1979, in 1980, 1981, and for God knows how long after that.

That excess 3,500 megawatts will earn no revenue, but it's costing us plenty, nevertheless, because Hydro rates will be reflecting the construction and interest costs of that excess 3,500 megawatts for years to come. That's the biggest sin of this government. It has encouraged that overconstruction and it continues to encourage overconstruction. One has to ask why? Instead of rational answers, we're given mind-mush.

The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) delivered an important speech on March 5 and said he does not understand what is happening, which is true, and that we could be selling our excess power to another jurisdiction for profit, which is not true. There is absolutely no evidence that other jurisdictions want to enter long-term contracts for the purchase of Ontario power. Apparently other utilities are also into excess capacity situations.

The Treasurer and the Minister of Energy claim that no reasonable person could have foreseen that Hydro's expansion plans were over-ambitious; which is not true, the select committee issued warnings in June 1976. The Treasurer and the Minister of Energy claim that the cost to consumers has not been excessive, which as I have already indicated is not true.

They claim that Hydro expansion is a good investment as a public works job-creation program; which is not true, because the creation of new energy supplies in insulation programs and renewable energy programs is a much better employment creator. They conclude by suggesting that anyone who dares to question their analysis is undermining employment, the economy and atomic tomatoes. All this is falderal, to put it mildly, and it won't sell in Ontario.

For these reasons alone, though there are others, the speech from the throne is totally inadequate and it will not receive my support. When the speech from the throne was delivered, just about a month ago, the comments I have just made would have been the only remarks I would have bothered to try to make. A month ago I felt the general public in Ontario was alive to the issue of this government's failure to curb Hydro expansionism, and that the general public in Ontario was alive to the alarming price we are paying for the government's irresponsibility as far as the energy future of this province is concerned.

A month ago I would have done my best to give legislative expression to that financial dismay and anger. I would have voiced that public frustration with a government that has no vision of how we will provide for this province's energy future, and I would have felt that I had done my best to represent the largest part of the concern ordinary people in this province feel on the subject of energy.

But it is not possible to feel satisfied with that kind of effort today, because today there is a new reality in public concern about the energy future in Ontario. I think it is the duty of elected representatives to give expression to that new public anxiety.

We live now in the pretty firm hope that from this day forward the people who live in the area surrounding the site of the Three Mile Island nuclear reactor will be able to live their lives quietly and without threat. The anguish they have gone through and the dignified way in which they have borne that anguish has been an ordeal which all of us have felt.

The people of middle America have been tested and they have been found strong and responsible. In a sense they are models to the rest of us and I think we can feel proud that the human animal can pass such a trial with such decency. The anguish they have endured has marked our minds permanently, from the turmoil of the braggarts to the fear of the first who took flight. We can empathize with it all. We can understand every bit of the reaction.

In its tortured way I think it has actually added to our understanding of ourselves as human beings. It has been a major event in human history and it will now enter into song and poetry and myth as something that shapes the way we view ourselves and the world we live in.

As with any event that has such power, it has direct and urgent political implications. It has caused millions of people who were not familiar with the ferocious potential danger of peaceful nuclear power to become familiar with the risks of peaceful nuclear power and the exact manner in which those risks can become immediate catastrophe.

The accident at Three Mile Island, and perhaps it would be better to describe it as a series of cumulative failures at Three Mile Island, probably tells us more about how mistakes get made than it does about nuclear power. But even if that is how we should best assess the event, it tells us, as clear as a bell, that we should pay much more attention to the possibility of overlapping mistakes than we do to the assurances that each and every individual failure has been scientifically and administratively overcome.

I guess the thing that most upset me over the last week has been to see and hear the official line in Ontario: "It couldn't happen here." That official line is coming out of the mouths of people who know better; who know that it could happen here.

Because what are we talking about after all? It's a relatively simple accident. In the jargon of the trade, it's known as a loss-of-coolant accident that leads to fuel failure. They refer to these incidents in the trade by the letters LOCA, loss-of-coolant accident; and they aim for NSFF, no significant fuel failure.

What it means, and it's very simple, is that the cooling liquid which controls the temperature of the reactor core is not reaching the reactor core in adequate volumes. When the cooling liquid is not present in adequate amounts the core of the reactor will overheat, the cladding on the fuel may rupture and the fuel itself may melt. This process is called fuel failure, and if a large portion of the fuel within the reactor fails the reactor core may melt, with all the drastic consequences that follow.

When a reactor experiences a loss of coolant, for whatever reason, there's an emergency cooling system which is designed to pump emergency coolant into the core in a high pressure jet of liquid. The emergency cooling system is the final backup for an initial loss of coolant. It's a vital system. It must be perfectly designed; perfectly constructed; it must operate perfectly in mechanical terms; and it must not be turned off by the technical staff when the reactor is in a state of loss of coolant.

At the Three Mile Island reactor there was a loss of coolant and the events that followed produced a near catastrophe. But we're told it couldn't happen here. Why? Because we have a vacuum building attached to Candu reactors and all the radioactive steam and gas from a loss-of-coolant accident would be sucked out by the vacuum building. But what if the vacuum building has a door open or a leak which nobody has noticed? Both these events have occurred at the Pickering reactor. What if the emergency core cooling system does not operate in the way that the designers believed it would?

Let me read two short excerpts from leaked documents that have been tabled with both the Porter commission and the select committee on Ontario Hydro. The particular document from which I will read is minutes of a meeting of the reactor safety advisory committee. This advisory committee is made up of representatives of Ontario Hydro, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Atomic Energy Control Board, the federal regulatory agency. The minutes of the reactor safety advisory committee which I will read from are from a meeting covering August 10 and 11, 1976. The item under discussion is called: "No Significant Fuel Failure, NSFF." It involves the discussion of the licensing standards which had been the basis for the licensing of Bruce A by the Atomic Energy Control Board. I will identify the participants as they join the discussion.

"Mr. G. L. Brooks—" of AECL—"reminded members that the designers had acknowledged that the no significant fuel failure criterion would not be met by the Bruce design. He felt that this criterion could not be achieved by modifications to the present design. He conceded that it would seem intuitively that increasing the driving pressure on the emergency core cooling system should improve the situation. He explained, however, that the leakage from a figure-of-eight loop does not prevent circulation within the loop until the leak rate is such that stagnation occurs; beyond this rate flow reversal occurs in some part of the loop and once-through flow then prevails. Thus he argued that there is some stagnation point even within high pressure coolant injection. Only the size and possibly the location of the critical break would change. Designers were concerned as well about the potential damage arising from the greater thermal and hydraulic shock which would be associated with the introduction of coolant at high pressure. Although they are studying ways of designing a high pressure system they were not convinced that an improvement in overall system security would be achieved.

"Mr. W. G. Morison—" Ontario Hydro "—declared that it was not practical to design the fuel and heat transport system of a power reactor so that it can meet the objectives of viable economic operation and at the same time be capable of withstanding the effects of the rather violent failures which must be assumed. He did not feel it was reasonable to place the entire dependence on keeping the fuel sheath intact. To him it seemed more appropriate to try and ensure the oxide fuel matrix retains its fission products and that the effectiveness of containment is maintained at all times. Committee members pointed out that maintenance of the sheath is very important to certain safety arguments made in public. Mr. L. Pease—" of AECL "—protested that AECL had never claimed that sheaths would be kept intact as a defence for the public against any conceivable system failure.

"Mr. Brooks acknowledged that it was certainly the intent of designers that no significant fuel failure would be an important criterion and they certainly did not compromise on design of the containment or emergency core cooling system because of this assumption. However, new information on system performance and the characteristics of the fuel made them realize the target had not been achieved in the Bruce A design and they now appreciate it is not simply achievable, if at all. Discussion of the definition of significance revealed a spectrum of opinion among committee members and designers. The chairman—" Mr. Morison "—felt that the significance of the number of fuel failures should be judged without reference to the magnitude of release from containment. This suggestion did not receive unanimous support. Staff of the Atomic Energy Control Board recalled that approval of the construction licence for the station had been based in part on AECL document BRS 71/2. In this document no significant fuel failure was identified as a design requirement. The document did not specify that no fuel should ever fail, but stated that it should not fail as a result of the inadequate cooling accompanying a loss-of-coolant accident.

"After some further discussion the chairman—" Mr. Morison "—concluded that designers were claiming only a small portion of the accident spectrum could lead to significant fuel failures, requiring reliance to be placed on containment as the final line of defence. Reactor and accelerator licensing division staff asserted that the portion—" I should point out this licensing division is associated with the Atomic Energy Control Board "—of the accident spectrum leading to large releases into containment is larger than might be inferred from designers' statements. Mr. Pease expressed the view the board's stated requirements for containment system effectiveness have not been consistent since the siting guide was presented in 1965.

"Referring again to the question of emergency core cooling system effectiveness a member pointed out that a high pressure system would have the benefit of distributing flow more equally among the fuel channels. Mr. Brooks did not feel that improving flow distribution would greatly reduce the potential for fuel failures.

"Another member asked what the experience had been with maintenance of containment system integrity. Mr. K. E. Elston—" of Ontario Hydro "—felt that experience had been very favourable. Two minor breaches of containment have occurred, but these were detected very quickly. Repeat tests have shown the leakage rate to be about 0.25 per cent per hour, much better than the acceptable specification."

I turn over a few pages and through an overnight recess in this meeting to the day of August 11, 1976, where we find this committee once again in discussion of the no significant fuel failure criterion.

"The chairman asked designers to discuss further their reasons for believing that no significant fuel failure is not readily achievable in the Bruce design. For the purposes of this discussion he defined no significant fuel failure as failure of more than a dozen or so fuel bundles."

I should point out that the chairman I have just referred to is Mr. Morison from Ontario Hydro.

"Mr. Brooks reported that designers have begun to analyse the sensitivity of the fuel-failure mechanism in the loss-of-coolant cases, in order to determine an operating power level at which the no significant fuel failure criterion could be achieved with the present emergency core cooling system design. It appears that this power level will be at about 65 per cent of fuel reactor power."

Mr. Speaker, I have to call your attention to the fact that the plant we are discussing here is the Bruce plant.

"Mr. Pease, added that a serious problem in assessing the extent of fuel damage and hence the magnitude of a release is determining the fraction of fission products held in the fuel matrix; this fraction depends strongly on the temperature history of the fuel bundles. Following some further discussion Mr. Brooks stated that the greatest concern of designers is the extent of fuel failures during the emergency cooling phase of the accident, rather than during the blow-down phase.

"In reply to a question, Mr. Morison stated that the concern of designers in trying to meet no significant fuel failure is that a relatively small amount of sheath damage can result in release of all the free iodine in the damaged element. The free iodine available for release is about 2,500 curies per bundle. Replying to a further question, Mr. Elston stated that the limit on iodine allowed in heat transport system coolant would be less than 2,500 curies in normal operation. Of course, single-element defects in a few bundles must be expected at any given time. Following some further discussion on the possible course of loss-of-coolant accidents Mr. Morison stated designers' belief that it is impractical to design to the tight limits implied by the no significant fuel failure criterion."

We then move directly to the closing remarks in the minutes of the meeting:

"Mr. Morison thanked members for their attention, declaring that Ontario Hydro recognizes their responsibility for exercising judgments on behalf of the public. He stated that Ontario Hydro wished to operate the station at up to full electrical power output as soon as permission is received. He believed that operation in such a manner would supply valuable data to help enhance the confidence of operators, designers, board staff and the committee in the Bruce station design. Although he acknowledged that the committee's prime concern was safety and not economics he reminded them of the cost to Ontario of the unavailability of Bruce generating station. This had been reckoned at about $250,000 per day per unit. Furthermore, a reduction in the rating at Bruce costs some $10,000,000 for a one per cent derating per unit."

And so closed the meeting of the reactor safety advisory committee, August 11, 1976.

Mr. Nixon: Is that exhibit 81?

Ms. Gigantes: This is exhibit D-12A of the Hydro select committee.

Does this kind of discussion bother you, Mr. Speaker? It bothers me.

The last documented evidence we have from August 1976 indicates the Bruce plant should be operating, for safety's sake, at 65 per cent of full power. We know it is operating at close to 100 per cent of its designed power. Why is that happening? What has changed so that it is now safe when it operates at over 65 per cent power? We don't know because the utilities and the federal agencies involved won't tell us.

As a matter of fact, we wouldn't even know these serious questions had been raised if the documents of the 1976 meeting had not been leaked to the Canadian Coalition on Nuclear Responsibility. And we are supposed to take it on faith that Ontario Hydro so loves us all that it will deny financial advantage to its own corporate body for the sake of our safety? We are supposed to take it on faith that the federal monitoring agency, the Atomic Energy Control Board, will delicense the Candu reactor if it is found to be failing in safety design? It is stretching faith a little far, methinks. I, for one, would like to have some straight answers to straight questions; some straight answers and the release of documents which have been unavailable for the study of serious critics.

This throne speech rhapsodizes about nuclear power as "a safe, secure and efficient means of protecting present and future generations of Ontarians." But is this an energy policy, or is it more likely a desperate flim-flam by a decrepit government, which is no longer progressive, no longer conservative, and no longer deserves the confidence of the people of Ontario?

On motion by Mr. Belanger, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Mr. Gregory, the House adjourned at 10:22 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: Pauline M. McGibbon, the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1980, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, April 5, 1979.

CHARGES AGAINST LLBO EMPLOYEES

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: It has come to my attention that the Ontario Provincial Police news bureau has had on its desk for some considerable time now a list of persons charged, persons in the employ of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario. They have told the news media that they cannot give out those names, even though the charges have already occurred, until the minister has made a statement in the House at 2 p.m. today.

Since it would appear to me that this takes the form of news management, it seems to me there is incumbent upon either the minister who gave those orders or the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry) or whoever it is in the OPP who believes they are acting under such orders, to make clear to the public of Ontario, and to the members here, that the mere fact that we meet at 2 p.m. is no reason for any form of news stage-managing to go on, and that it is a misuse of the fact that we meet here at 2 p.m.

The public surely has a right to know who is being charged in these instances and should not have to wait for the right psychological moment as determined by any minister of the crown.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, before I read the statement in reply to that, the Leader of the Opposition is cockeyed. I gave no such instructions to the OPP; I gave none.

Furthermore, the Leader of the Opposition as usual is manifestly misinformed.

I was apprised of sworn informations that were taken, apparently yesterday, by various crown attorneys across this province. The informations were sworn and warrants were issued, apparently sometime last night. I was apprised of those documents in my office at approximately 9:30 this morning by the Deputy Solicitor General. At that point, I said since they were provincial employees I would be issuing a statement in the Legislature at 2 p.m. That is all I said.

For the sake of the record—and once again the Leader of the Opposition is manifestly misinformed—four of the accused, it is my understanding, appeared in Ottawa court this morning for arraignment. That information is obviously public. The only request that was made to me by the provincial police was that in view of the fact that at that time, early this morning, two of the accused had not been taken into custody, they did not wish me to say anything prior to 2 o'clock so that the accused could be taken into custody, prior to any formal announcement being made in the Legislature. I hope that sets the record straight.

Mr. S. Smith: On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister undertake to inform himself that the Ontario Provincial Police news bureau at Downsview had on its desk all the names, had these names requested of them by the press and were told that they could not release them until a minister, namely the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, had made a statement at 2 p.m.? That may not have been the instructions of the minister—

Mr. Hennessy: Apologize.

Mr. S. Smith: Go back and check, and the member will find out I said, "Did he make the—"

Hon. Mr. Drea: Then apologize to me for your earlier remarks.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Apologize.

Mr. S. Smith: I didn't say that. The minister wasn't listening. Why doesn't he read what I said? I said: "Did the minister or did the Solicitor General—"

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition made what he thought was a legitimate point of privilege.

Mr. Riddell: Why doesn't the minister grow up? It gets a little sickening.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has given his word as to the series of events as he knows them. I think that the Leader of the Opposition should accept his word.

Mr. Wildman: Let the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk take over.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CHARGES AGAINST LLBO EMPLOYEES

Hon. Mr. Drea: In January 1978 the chairman of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario requested the Ontario Provincial Police to launch an investigation into allegations of irregularities involving liquor licence board personnel.

As a result of that investigation, the following people have been charged: Robert George Lamb of Toronto, director of the inspections branch, has been charged with three counts of breach of trust under section 111 of the Criminal Code of Canada. John Edward Lawrence of Toronto, manager of regional inspectors, has been charged jointly with Mr. Lamb with one count of breach of trust under the Criminal Code.

Thomas Roy Dempsey of Ottawa, district liquor licence inspector, has been charged with 51 counts of uttering a forged document, 16 counts of accepting benefits and one count of breach of trust under the code. Harvey Blake Slade of Ottawa, district liquor licence inspector, has been charged with six counts of uttering a forged document under section 326 of the Criminal Code and 32 counts of accepting benefits. Ronald David Knudson of Ottawa, district liquor licence inspector, has been charged with 23 counts of uttering a forged document under section 326 of the Criminal Code and with four counts of accepting benefits under section 110 of the code.

Robert Edward Zimmerman of Ottawa, district liquor licence inspector, has been charged with eight counts of uttering a forged document and with 16 counts of accepting benefits under the Criminal Code.

As a result of these charges, the employees will be suspended without pay pending disposition by the court.

Mr. Sargent: All outstanding Tories.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Board policy is that even the slightest hint of impropriety or innuendo of wrong-doing be investigated.

Mr. Sargent: All Conservatives.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Since the matter is before the courts, there will be no further comment by the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario or by the ministry.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry. The Treasurer.

Mr. S. Smith: Why couldn't they give out that news?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have no idea. Why doesn't the Leader of the Opposition talk to them?

Mr. Nixon: Somebody told them not to.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Treasurer has the floor.

Hon. Mr. McCague: The Leader of the Opposition should check his facts.

Mr. S. Smith: They were dead on.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Treasurer have a statement or doesn't he?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was commiserating with the Leader of the Opposition.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce today the renewal of the Ontario Youth Employment Program for 1979. This program, aimed at encouraging Ontario businesses and farms to provide summer job opportunities for young people from 15 to 24 years of age, has operated successfully now for two seasons. In 1979, OYEP will run from April 30 to October 21, and the amount of the grant is again to be $1.25 per hour.

The Ontario Youth Employment Program is designed to benefit both employers and the province's youth by providing youth with valuable work experience, skills, contacts and references which will better equip them for full-time participation in the labour force; by encouraging additional productive activity by reducing the cost of summer labour to Ontario's farm and business enterprises; and by assisting the farm and business sectors in recruiting youth for future employment.

In 1979, employers may apply for a grant for up to 150 weeks of employment at each business location, regardless of the number of positions created. This will provide greater flexibility for the employer and allow him to maximize the benefits of the program, since in previous years he has been restricted to six positions at each business location, even if the positions lasted only six or seven weeks.

For example, the practical effect of the new rule is that if employers can create new work for as little as six weeks, which is the minimum, they may apply for up to 25 employees for this period.

In 1979, I expect OYEP to provide about 40,000 jobs at a cost of $26 million. This compares with 34,000 jobs in 1978 at a cost of $20,000,000.

Mr. Eakins: Oh, yes?

Hon. F. S. Miller: "Oh, yep" is what my friend will be saying Tuesday night.

Mr. Eakins: I said, "Oh, yes?"

Hon. F. S. Miller: My colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) will administer OYEP again in 1979.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have questions for the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman). Is he going to be back? Does the Premier know?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think so. I just left him at a luncheon.

Mr. S. Smith: If it is agreeable to the third party, I can withhold my questions until he comes back. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes.

Mr. S. Smith: I will wait, Mr. Speaker.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development in the continuing absence in China of the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson).

Can the provincial secretary confirm statements by Ministry of Education officials that Ontario intends to provide an additional $40,000,000 to school boards to meet its new commitment to special education for all children who need it over the next three years? Can she explain how the government could have arrived at such a small amount when there are an estimated 30,000 children on waiting lists for special education in the province and many more whose needs have never yet been identified; and will she assure the House that none of the proposed $40,000,000 for special-education funding will be found by cutbacks in other Ontario grants to school boards?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the honourable member that this government is committed to meeting the educational needs of those children with special learning difficulties. We have made a commitment, and the amount that has been established is, in effect, the amount of money that could be put into that program immediately. We do not have the teachers who are trained; we do not have all the facilities that are required.

[2:15]

Mrs. Campbell: Why don't you import them?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: As quickly as they can be brought into place, the problems will be addressed and children requiring that kind of special education will be looked after.

Mr. Cassidy: You have been asleep at the switch.

Mr. Warner: Hollow words.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister say whether the amount of $40,000,000 is all the province is providing? Will the minister assure the House there will be no other cutbacks in other education grants to municipalities? Can the minister explain how the needs for special education which still exist in the province will be met, when this proposed grant is going to total $443 per year for each child on the waiting list, while the city of Toronto estimates it costs $4,824 for special education for each child?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: The honourable member knows I don't have all those figures at my fingertips. I have indicated to him that the government has made a commitment that every child in this province who needs special education will indeed receive it.

We have two new schools which will be opening up to provide such special education for these children. We have made money available to all boards of education for special education programs. That is the commitment the government has made.

Mr. Martel: Eighteen students.

Ms. Gigantes: Subtracting it from other grants.

Mr. Martel: That's no commitment at all.

Mr. Sweeney: Is the minister prepared to make a commitment in principle that for the newly mandated special education requirement a board will be able to get from the government the additional costs resulting or flowing from the new legislation mandate?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I am not prepared to make the commitment. The Minister of Education will be back in the House within a week and that question can be put to her at that time.

Mr. Cassidy: I thought you were the Provincial Secretary for Social Development.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: As I have indicated, the government has made a commitment. It is government policy that education for children with special needs will be provided by boards of education as quickly as it can be put into place.

Mr. Martel: What year? What millenium are you talking about? How many years down the road?

Mr. Grande: Since the minister mentioned one of the two schools that were to be started, I suppose the minister is referring to Trillium in Milton? Regarding this school, can the minister tell us what criteria are used to determine which children qualify, because no psychologist I know of is aware exactly how to refer children to that school yet?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: A special board will determine the eligibility of children to be admitted to that school.

Mr. Warner: Those were supposed to be ready for January.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Premier arising out of the moving, or the transfer, of 32 psycho-geriatric patients from Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital to the Queen Street mental institution yesterday.

Here is the Minister of Health; I will ask the Minister of Health.

Mr. Warner: Saved again.

Mr. Cassidy: My question arises from the decision to transfer 32 psycho-geriatric patients from Lakeshore to Queen Street yesterday. In view of the enormous anxiety that move caused among patients and staff, and the mounting concern expressed by the neighbouring community, by health-care workers and by all the people who are patients or potential users of the Lakeshore facility—and in view of the fact that the whole rationale for closing Lakeshore will be examined fully by the standing committee on social development over the course of the next few weeks—will the minister stop trying to make the closure of Lakeshore a fait accompli before the review by the standing committee has been concluded? Will he assure the House that there will be no further transfers of patients to other institutions from Lakeshore until that committee has reported?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I may say I think it was 29 patients and not 30. The patients were moved yesterday in what turned out to be an orderly fashion, in spite of the circumstances that were created at the Lakeshore hospital.

Mr. Warner: It's nice to have orderly destruction.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm advised there was a get-together last night in their new facilities—

Mr. Warner: You should have been in charge of the Titanic.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —in the 1956 building on Queen Street and this morning the patients are all well in spite of the additional pressures created around their move.

The honourable member will recall that when I made the announcement in January about the decision to close the Lakeshore hospital, I indicated the patients would be moved in groups, a few at a time, so that it would be an orderly move and would not be disruptive to the patients. It is our intention to carry on in that regard.

I welcome the opportunity, whenever the standing committee gets to the matter, and I don't know when that's going to be, to set the record straight. I have a few other initiatives under way to set the record straight. There's a great deal of misinformation abroad about the numbers and various other things. I intend to set that record straight and to continue with the orderly movement of the patients.

In the final analysis, sir, my recommendation to the cabinet was based on, and will continue to be based on, the interests of the patients in that particular facility and the alternatives available for their care.

Mr. Warner: Even though the Premier's meeting? He's challenging it.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain what kind of planning is going on for these transfers, when the patients who were transferred from Lakeshore were not put into the same ward at the Queen Street mental institution and when they will no longer be looked after by the same staff who were looking after them at Lakeshore? They now have different staff in certain cases. Can the minister say what the effect is going to be on the health of the patients at the Lakeshore hospital if they are going to be arbitrarily transferred at short notice to different hospitals so the minister can empty Lakeshore before the people who've been questioning his decision have had their chance to put their views and their problems before the committee of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I suggest some of the activities the member is describing are, in fact, more disruptive to the patients than the actual move.

I am told they are, in fact, in the same ward; I think it's in the 1956 building. In most cases we are transferring staff with the various units. I will check to see if there are any variations in that, for whatever reason. Some staff, who had been with that unit at Lakeshore may very well have accepted positions elsewhere in the psychiatric hospital system. Some have already done that. They may also have accepted positions in other areas of the provincial government, or with the public hospitals or elsewhere. There are a number of people who have already taken positions elsewhere, but I'll check on that particular thing. I am advised, though, that they are in fact in the same ward.

Mr. Lawlor: It must be awfully close.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary to the minister's answer: In view of the fact that one of the reasons given for this closing was the concern about a patient who had burned to death and the so-called fire hazards of Lakeshore, would the minister table in this House the report of the fire marshal and of the fire department with reference to Lakeshore so we may have that material before us?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, that question is already on the Order Paper and was among the very large number tabled at the beginning of the session, answers to which are being prepared right now. As you will understand, Mr. Speaker, that is taking a—

Mrs. Campbell: We'd like to have them before everybody is out of Lakeshore.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—great deal of time and costing a great deal of money, but answers will be given.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Lawlor: I would like to ask where is the Minister of Health's famous consultation and supply of information? Might we expect some information with respect to his next nefarious move? When is he going to reply to questions asked in this House on previous occasions with respect to the special observation unit he didn't know very much about on that occasion; or with respect to the alcoholic services and his disposition thereof; and with respect to the dialysis disposition that seems to be as vacuous as the policy?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I thought we had answered all outstanding questions on that.

Mr. Lawlor: No.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If not I'll check the record. As you know, there is and has been since the announcement, a committee established to effect an orderly transition, an orderly move of the patients and staff.

Mr. Grande: But no answers.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That group is made up of staff of Lakeshore and Queen Street, who by the way had done the assessments of the patients, I am told, before they were moved. This is contrary to another bit of misinformation that was bandied about. They will continue their work until the moves are all made.

CONVENTION FACILITIES

Mr. S. Smith: I think the Minister of Industry and Tourism is here. I will start my question while he is taking his seat, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain why it is that in the presence of the Metro chairman—

Mr. Warner: And his buddy.

Mr. S. Smith:—he told the federal Minister of National Defence that he would have no intention of proceeding with the matter of the convention centre for Metropolitan Toronto because he did not wish to give the federal government the benefit of this election plum at this time? Does the minister not recognize that his duty is to allow the people to decide for themselves what are election plums or goodies and his job is to, first of all get the centre and get the promise, and then to make darn sure the promise is carried out? Why did he decide to play politics instead?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I presume the Leader of the Opposition has spoken with Mr. Danson, who has confirmed the allegations he has repeated just now. I will give the member my clear recollection of the circumstances.

First, so far as the Metro chairman's recollection of the conversations is concerned, what he hasn't made clear is the fact that he was present for only one of the two conversations I had with Mr. Danson over a two-day period.

Mr. S. Smith: He almost fell off his seat.

Mr. Nixon: Joe Clark doesn't need Bill Davis anyway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Second, I originally placed the call to Mr. Danson to canvass—

Mr. Van Horne: He said, "Who needs him?"

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—the question with him in an attempt to keep this very major and important project from becoming a political issue.

Mr. Mackenzie: Self righteous.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you becoming Canadian Liberals all of a sudden?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I invited Mr. Danson—
Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would I want to politicize him? I in fact made one mistake, and that is I said to Barney—I said to Mr. Danson—

Mr. Peterson: Barnyard to you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Probably to you too, David.

I said to Mr. Danson: "If you wish to proceed with this now I want to tell you how we feel about it. I am going to make that quite clear." I said: "Mr. Danson, we feel that land is not a sufficient contribution to the citizens of Metropolitan Toronto. The federal government, if it is finally becoming serious about doing something for the people of Metropolitan Toronto, has to do more than put in land. In addition to land it ought to make a financial contribution so the land component plus the financial contribution equals the amount of money Metro and the taxpayers of Ontario put in." I said Barney—sorry, Mr. Danson, it shows members how well we get along ordinarily.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What did he call you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said: "Mr. Danson, quite honestly, the land isn't going to be good enough by itself." I said: "Now, if you want to give the land—

Mr. S. Smith: No reference to the campaign?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell the member what the reference to the campaign was, I am going to tell him exactly what the reference to the campaign was.

An hon. member: Give him Toronto Island, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He said you guys goofed on Harbourfront, why would you want to do it again?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell the member exactly what the reference to the campaign was, it was this: I said to him quite clearly: "If you give us only the land then our response will be that the land isn't good enough." That is the old federal Liberal game of saying: "We will give you one dollar, now you guys go spend five."

I said: "Therefore, if you want to give us the land now without the money, then you have to make that decision in the context of your campaign. However, in order to keep this from being involved in the campaign, if you want to withhold any further discussion until after the election, I am happy to do that."

[2:30]

That was what he called back the next day and said to me. He said, "I have spoken to my colleagues"—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They don't want to hear the answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Danson said he had spoken to his colleagues and could not even get them to go along with the land at that time; so it would have to wait until after the election. And, considering how the election is going, I am confident it will work out a lot better then.

Mr. S. Smith: What a pity, Mr. Speaker, that there was a witness. What a pity.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: One would assume that the members on one side of the House don't want to hear the question and those on the other side don't want to hear the answer.

Mr. S. Smith: You are right on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to hear both.

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. What a pity there was a witness.

By way of supplementary: Would the minister not accept that it is not his job to keep the issue out of the federal campaign? The people can judge the worth or lack of worth of federal election promises. The minister's job is to get the federal government commitment and then to hold them to it. In that regard, will the minister tell us why he is withholding for his own personal study the report of Gladstone Consultants in Washington; and why is he refusing to share that report with the other levels of government at this time? Granted, he may wish to study it, but what is the reason that the other levels with whom he is supposed to co-operate are not being permitted to see that report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, may I say in response to the first part of the question—why do we not get the federal commitment and work from there?—the answer is, that is precisely what I asked Mr. Danson for; and I asked him again today. If they are sincere in their desire, let them just call up and say the land is available. That is the one thing that Mr. Danson has not done, to say, "Yes, the land is available." I trust the Leader of the Opposition will get on the phone over the weekend and arrange for that to occur on Monday.

The answer to the second part of the question is quite simply that we have got the study and, quite honestly, rather than have a study distributed and start public jockeying for position, as has now developed because of Mr. Danson's intervention—

Mr. Peterson: This is ridiculous, just ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just wait a minute—

Mr. Nixon: The CBC has got it, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Rather than have one level say in public, "We are going to throw in so much; now go and squeeze the other side," I thought the best way to do it would be to meet quietly and talk with the other two levels of government.

Mr. Danson asked that that conversation be suspended until after the election. In response to his request that we not pursue the discussion until a later time. I agreed at his request to take more time to look at it from our standpoint. In response to that, I have not had an opportunity to complete our analysis of it and to take it to my colleagues to see what extent we are going to be able to contribute. We are long on record as being in favour of trying to find a way to build a convention centre for this city.

Mr. Peterson: It is despicable, the way you have handled it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Barney's way was terrific.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: While the Minister of Industry and Tourism is talking to the federal government and, despite what he said to him and what he was told, since 60 per cent of the workers in the construction industry in Toronto are unemployed and Toronto had to refuse 90 conventions which would have brought $100,000,000 worth of business to the city of Toronto, can the minister tell us what is his commitment towards building the convention centre and what is the time table, since it looks as if he had been ready to go ahead since February if the federal election had not been called?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, may I say it is refreshing to hear the member support the use of government funds to attract new jobs here and to create some investment. I am sure his colleagues who are aldermen in the south end of my riding will fully support this project when it is brought up.

May I say that one of the reasons we have been studying the report is to determine the extent to which the taxpayers of Ontario should participate in that centre. I am a little more careful with the allocation of those funds. I have colleagues who have requested the Treasurer for funds and so on. We are trying to resolve our capability to fund that centre.

That is why I would have hoped the three levels of government could have met quietly and determined the extent to which we are all able to contribute. I can assure the member that this government, having paid entirely for that study, having long been on record as supporting convention centres in several municipalities—not NHL rinks for Hamilton—is very committed to that type of project. Members will see our contribution very shortly.

Mr. Wildman: Maybe you can get Ford to do it.

Mr. S. Smith: What is wrong with Hamilton being in the NHL?

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Since we have a tourism deficit of $660,000,000 in Ontario, and since tourism is receiving a very low profile and not the priority it deserves, does the minister not see it as his responsibility to bring together the various bodies to discuss this centre? Also, is it not true that the people in the industry have themselves offered to make a substantial contribution to this centre?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have spent a great deal of time with the Metro convention people. I have spent a great deal of time with Paul Godfrey, who happened to be in my office when a certain call came in.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Did he get a copy of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A transcript of the call or the study?

I must repeat this: Mr. Danson says he is not sure who placed the original call; I am sure, I called him. It was the day before the federal Liberal cabinet came to Toronto to have its meeting. I must repeat: we paid for the study and co-ordinated the whole endeavour. But for Mr. Danson's request to stand this thing down until after the election, then it would have been going forward.

Mr. S. Smith: The people paid for it, my friend. You didn't pay for it, the people paid for it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I cannot co-ordinate it when a major player in the game has said he doesn't want to talk until the election is over. I repeat my offer: We are happy to contribute and happy to co-ordinate if Mr. Danson will contribute the land as a minimum and some money on top of it. We are ready to talk tomorrow. If the member can get him off the campaign trail we will talk to him tomorrow.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. S. Smith: A second question to the same minister on a different topic: Given his throne speech commitment to help small business, can he tell us whether he intends to speak to his colleagues in cabinet to try to prevent some of the small businesses of Ontario from property tax increases which are threatening to bankrupt them? In particular, does he not agree that he has a duty to urge upon his cabinet colleagues some further consideration to mitigate the impact of property tax reassessment as it affects small businesses? Shouldn't there be a mitigating factor taking into account the size of the business?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I recall looking at some of the earlier studies. One of the concerns that was expressed the last time this issue got a lot of profile in this assembly and other places was the fact that there were many small businesses, particularly in the tourist areas, which would be dramatically and adversely affected by that reassessment. It was, in part, a very real concern with regard to the fact that many tourist operations and others would be put right out of business by some aspects of reassessment that has caused us all to have another look at the question.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is the minister not aware that because his government has encouraged certain cities to go ahead on their own and introduce the new evaluations, that small businesses are being hurt? Is he aware, for instance, that in Hamilton there are businesses now facing increases ranging to 500 per cent and that a number of them will be facing bankruptcy? In particular, does he know that Centennial Volkswagen—one particular dealership in Hamilton—is facing an 89 per cent increase, which will make its taxes $10,000 a year higher than the largest Volkswagen dealer in Canada, located in the Don Mills area in Toronto? Does he not see it is his duty to step in and prevent this kind of terrible hardship on the small business people in those places where new evaluation is being brought in on a local basis?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course we are terribly concerned about it. That's why we are all having a look at those problems and inequities. The fact is that at the same time I am expressing concern over those types of situations, and I am, we have other situations where the net result of that same reassessment package is that some small home owner who has had a home for very many years and who has been underassessed—

Mr. S. Smith: This is commercial.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One can't separate the commercial from the residential; it is all part of the tax base of the same area. At the same time the municipality would lose some assessment from the situation indicated by the member—

Mr. Nixon: Taxes are $180 a car.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —the burden is, in many cases, being shifted to some small residential owner. It is because of the very great burden that we may be shifting from one individual to another individual, even if they are in different sectors, that we have this tremendous problem.

Of course, if one had it all to do over again and could start it all over again, it would be dramatically different. But now we have built-in inequities and equities in the system, and when one tries to sort them out people are going to get hurt on both sides. We have tremendous awareness of that. Indeed, I can tell the member of a lot of people in my own riding who, as residential owners, would go up 100 per cent in assessment. I can show him small businesses that are being dramatically hurt in my riding at the same time by their current assessment rate. It is because we are struggling with this that the debate has continued for quite some time.

Mr. Laughren: A supplementary question to the minister for global product mandating: Would he, when he is responding to the problems faced by the small business community dealing with property tax, also look into the problems expressed by the Federation of Independent Businessmen about the effect that these corporate takeovers and mergers are having on competition in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not sure that was a supplementary question—

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, it was.

Mr. Warner: It's relevant and important.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and I am not sure I believe that member was carrying John Bulloch's briefcase today. In any case, I will be happy to look into all those concerns at the same time. I will report in a more reasoned way than Warren Allmand, however, I should caution the House.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you in favour of competition or against it?

Mr. S. Smith: A final supplementary: Does the minister not understand that it is possible to bring in a new market-value assessment category by category, that it isn't necessarily required that the commercial be reassessed as is the residential? The commercial could be left alone for a while. Could he intervene with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) and bring to his attention increases such as 500 per cent in a company, Bindery Services, 490 per cent in Colortron, 314 per cent in DeWildt Fiat, 92 per cent in a company called Hacienda, and so on? Does he not recognize a responsibility to protect the small businesses from this kind of huge property-tax increase? Will he intervene with the Minister of Revenue?

Mr. Peterson: Just as with licence plates, you can do it differently.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. I hope as I continue to discuss this matter, as I have been doing, with all of my colleagues who are concerned with it, that the member will also reflect on whether Hamilton city council, who also asked for the very reassessment he is complaining about, might join me. I know the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham)—I know where he is today—was one of those front and centre supporting the push to have the very reassessment this member is now expressing concern about.

Mr. S. Smith: There is a mitigating factor. You know that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Perhaps Hamilton, the member for Wentworth North, and this member will join me in worrying about the effects of the reassessment they asked for. We are talking about this on a regular basis. And Gordon Dean will help us after tonight.

Mr. Martel: He is going to become your executive assistant.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Sargent: I have a question to the Premier. Is the Premier aware of secret reports within Ontario Hydro under the title of Internal Significant Event Reports dealing with malfunctions and accidents at Hydro's nuclear stations? If so, does he know whether the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) sees these reports? If he does see these reports, would the Premier not agree that they offer little support for Hydro and government assurances that all is well with respect to safety in nuclear plants? If the Premier does not see these reports, or the minister does not see these reports, does he not agree it is high time that he did?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't speak for the Minister of Energy, but I think the honourable member will find, in the very lengthy discussions before Dr. Porter's commission—I can't say whether this particular thing was referred to—a great deal of time, I guess there was close to 400 hours of discussion and presentations, related to the whole question of the safety of the Candu system. I think I'm right in this too, that the members of the select committee met with Ontario Hydro in terms of an explanation of the system that has been developed in this country.

I think, as the minister pointed out, that there are always some problems, no one is minimizing that, but in terms of safety the Candu system is regarded as being safe. I noticed a story in the paper this morning, I think it was in the Globe and Mail, with respect to Pickering. I think the question really had been asked here before. My guess is that was also discussed before Dr. Porter's commission, perhaps even before the select committee.

I would say to the honourable member we are as interested and concerned, we are most desirous of having safety as complete as possible. I think if one looks at the record of our system—and I emphasize our system, I am not knowledgeable to speak about the situation near Harrisburg; but with respect to our own, it is regarded by most people who are knowledgeable in the business as being a safe system for the development of nuclear electricity.

I guess I could say I could ask Hydro, when these incidents occur from time to time, that they might send the minister and me a report. I must confess that if they sent me a technical report of that nature, I think the honourable member would be the first to say, "Then what are you going to do, Mr. Premier? You don't understand it anyway?" His colleague is nodding his head up and down. However, I can assure the honourable member that the Atomic Energy Control Board and the people at Ontario Hydro, from my assessment at least—not in technical terms because I can't express it in technical terms, but in terms of concern for and consciousness of the need for safety—have exceeded the requirements, in many situations, as laid down by AECB.

If the honourable member wishes to pursue a particular situation, I know that the chairman of the select committee mentioned, I believe on Tuesday, that this was an area that the committee would be getting into, at the same time not duplicating the studies and the hearings that Dr. Porter has already undertaken.

I would point out to the honourable member that I think when the select committee organizes the approach to this, when there is some opportunity to meet with those people who were there to see some aspects of what went on near Harrisburg, this whole question could be properly pursued. I am as anxious as anyone else to make sure that the people understand that this system is safe.

I can't quote them because I wasn't there, but I understand after discussions with and presentations by Ontario Hydro, one or two members of the committee who sit on the other side of the House gave the impression, and I say it was only an impression, as to their assessment, and that was that it was a safe system. That is by hearsay only but I think probably it reflects part of the conversation that took place.

Mr. Sargent: I thank the Premier, but that's not good enough, sir.

In the meantime would the Premier advise the House whether he thinks a series of near misses, serious human error, equipment failure, and other potential horror stories in the past year, should be covered up? Would he not agree it is of paramount importance that total freedom of information on internal nuclear reports should be available to the government and opposition members, both federal and provincial?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't doubt the honourable member's genuine interest in the subject, I am not being facetious about that, but I think it's also important to point out that perhaps some of the language that is being used is excessive on his part. I don't know of any secret reports about horror stories, I've not seen any of this. I do know there have been reports on the day-to-day operation of Pickering and Bruce, you name it—

Mr. Sargent: I said "potential horror stories."

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know, but the member is a very flamboyant, colourful, effervescent individual. I think in this situation one should—

Mr. Sweeney: It was a serious question.

Mr. Sargent: You can't laugh this one off.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All right. If the honourable member is saying that he knows of potential horror problems at one of our plants I think he should tell us about them.

Mr. S. Smith: Be fair. He talked about a specific report.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think he should be using the language "a potential horror story." I think it's wrong in this situation, I really do. I'm not here to play politics on this issue. It's serious. We should be concerned about it. In terms of the information Hydro or AECB may have, my assumption is—and I wasn't at any of the hearings—that a lot of this was discussed before Dr. Arthur Porter's commission. Has the honourable member read those aspects of that report? Maybe it would, shall we say, help him in his assessment and in his understanding of the system.

Mr. Sargent: Don't talk down to me. Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not talking down to the member. I'm suggesting that perhaps he might read those reports and make some judgements after that.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Would the Premier be prepared to give an undertaking to this House that he would look at documents tabled with the Porter commission and with the select committee on Ontario Hydro that include minutes from a meeting of the reactor safety advisory committee, August 10 and 11, 1976, in which Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—Mr. Brooks specifically—says Bruce generating station A, in order to meet the requirements it was licensed under, should be operating at 65 per cent of power for safety's sake? Will he give an undertaking that he will read those minutes?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to read almost anything. I can't undertake that I could read the complete minutes and that would in turn solve the honourable member's problems. I assume the select committee has been dealing with this and will be dealing with it. I'll take a look at those minutes. I'm not sure what it's going to establish.

WESTINGHOUSE CANADA

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Premier, arising out of his meeting on Tuesday with the workers from the Westinghouse plant's switch gear division in Hamilton: In view of the company's threat to 700 jobs—a very real threat in that plant—what guarantees is the government prepared to provide to ensure these workers are not out of a job, and what steps will the government commit itself to in order to deal with the layoffs that are threatened?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'll try to recall as much of the conversation as I can.

Mr. Peterson: Just summarize it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am going to summarize it. It was a lengthy presentation. It took an hour, so I think an adequate summary would be what?

Mr. S. Smith: Forty minutes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: About 40 minutes?

Mr. Peterson: Just two sentences.

Mr. Laughren: Quit stalling. Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for London Centre wants something clear and concise. I'll endeavour to do that.

Mr. Laughren: Is that in order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Sweeney: We'll settle for concise.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why? They made a presentation, a very understandable presentation, because they were concerned about the 700 jobs. I made it quite clear to them that I would be meeting with management of Westinghouse Canada—I think the date has been set, as a matter of fact. The ministry was monitoring the situation and had a particular study related to the electronics industry under way, and also the company's study, which may or may not lead to certain changes, apparently is scheduled for completion around October.

I said to the representatives of the union who were there that I would be meeting with the company. We would keep them informed. I made this clear as well to Mr. Pilkey, the head of the Ontario Federation of Labour, who was with them.

It is also fair to state that as part of their presentation they indicated the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party would agree to legislation to deal with multinationals—why just multinationals in terms of economic problems, I'm not sure. I said I knew the New Democratic Party was prepared to legislate about anything, but I really didn't think the Liberal Party of Ontario had gone that far.

Mr. Mackenzie: A supplementary: Can the Premier tell me then what good is his intent to meet with the company some time in the next two weeks, and what good is the company's argument that they're going to conduct studies, when over the last week they have been systematically, throughout the plant, telling the switch-gear employees at what date their employment will terminate? In addition to that, what about the personnel management and site selection plans of the company, which obviously are intended to locate another plant away from any union involvement, if at all possible?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not familiar with the statement, other than some documentation that suggests there is some consideration of potential sites. I have not discussed this with the management of the company but I shall be doing so, that's why we're having a meeting. We will discuss that along with three or four other things we wish to raise with them.

I assured the ladies and gentlemen who were in to see me that we were interested in the viability of Westinghouse Canada. I assured them we were interested in it remaining within the city of Hamilton and that we would be, from our standpoint, making every effort to assist. They asked for a guarantee but I couldn't give it to them and I can't give it to the honourable member.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the member for Hamilton West.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, will the Premier make it clear to Westinghouse, since their so-called decentralization scheme has very clearly as its main purpose the escape from unionism, that in the province of Ontario in 1979 we just don't accept that one sacrifices 700 jobs in a community because a company doesn't like dealing with a labour union? Will he make it clear to the company that that day is over, unionism happens to be part of life and they'll have to learn to live with it?

Mr. Breagh: Does the Leader of the Opposition know what he just said?

Mr. Martel: I can't get over that.

An hon. member: It's by-election day.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was waiting for the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) to applaud that observation.

Mr. Martel: So were we.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is he speaking for the member on this issue?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, abso-positively—there are a number of things we will make clear when the company comes to visit us.

Mr. S. Smith: What was the government's position on the Fleck strike? Was the Premier against them on the Fleck strike?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let me tell the member this. As much as we like Prescott we're not going to suggest to them either they should all move out to Prescott et cetera. We're not going to suggest they move out of the golden horseshoe to go down there to locate.

DREE PROGRAM

Mr. Rollins: I have a question of the honourable Treasurer concerning an article that appeared in the Bancroft Times this week with reference to Hastings county being part of the new program now being negotiated between the province and the federal government in DREE. I would like assurance from the minister that Hastings county has been taken in consideration for favourable consideration as it has been, in the past, as part of the westerly boundary of the eastern Ontario agreements between the two levels of governments, whether it be DREE, ARDA, or other items?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The DREE agreement for eastern Ontario has been under negotiation for some time. I assume from the article the honourable member sent me that the candidate for the Liberal Party down there has not really talked to his colleagues in Ottawa—

Mr. Nixon: Hastings? He is going to win.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —because he said that Hastings isn't included. Our information at this point is that Hastings is included, as it should be.

I might also add that we thought we had Peterborough in it. We thought we had Victoria in it. We had Haliburton in and we had Muskoka in, and those were unilaterally withdrawn.

[3:00]

Mr. Rollins: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as I do represent a portion of Peterborough county, along with Hastings county, I regret that the federal government has not seen fit to co-operate with this minister—

Mr. Grande: Are you making a speech?

Mr. Rollins: —and include Peterborough county as part of this agreement.

Mr. Bradley: What a waste of the question period.

Mr. Martel: That's a great question.

Mr. Speaker: That really wasn't a question.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it not true that Haliburton is still under negotiation, and has not been completely eliminated? It's my understanding it is still under consideration.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Until May 22, maybe?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The pipelines to Ottawa are open these days.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope the member is right.

Mr. Kerrio: He usually is.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It was in; it wasn't even under negotiation. I, for one, believe that with the handicap the electors already have in their member, they at least deserve to be included in the DREE agreement.

Mr. Conway: Wait until Bill Scott hears that.

Mr. Eakins: Our Liberal member won't like that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He's not a member. He's only a candidate.

Mr. Kerrio: We can't let the Premier in.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact remains, my riding was in too.

Mr. S. Smith: Speaking of handicapped ridings.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I want to say that the member's riding and my riding were included at the federal government's suggestion. To my shock, a week ago, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion informed me that because he could not include Peterborough, and because he could not include Victoria, he couldn't include Haliburton and Muskoka.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They don't think they can win those seats; that's why.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: He didn't mind including Montreal and Quebec.

EMPLOYEES' HEALTH AND SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) recently inquired about the degree to which workers and their unions had an opportunity to comment on the preparation of the regulations for promulgation under the Occupational Health and Safety Act. Both workers and unions have been afforded an opportunity to provide comments on the regulations being proposed. To outline the extent to which input has been encouraged and indeed invited, I would like to comment specifically on each of the regulations in preparation.

First, let me deal with the regulations proposed for the industrial sector, which are essentially similar to those currently under the Industrial Safety Act. Some revisions have been proposed to correct deficiencies in the old regulations that have been identified over the past several years. A copy of the proposed draft was made available to a limited number of organizations for comment on February 12 of this year. Included among these groups was the Ontario Federation of Labour.

Second, in the case of the regulations proposed for the construction sector, an initial draft proposal was made available to the Construction Safety Association of Ontario early in January, and that association undertook to circulate the draft to a number of affected groups. A revised draft was later prepared and made available on March 6, again to a number of organizations. The Provincial Labour-Management Safety Committee was on that list and represented on that committee are the bricklayers and masons, the operating engineers, the carpenters, the labourers and the Provincial Building and Construction Trades Council of Ontario.

Third, the regulations for the mining sector have been under review by the Barrett committee for the past three years. Eight members of the committee represent the United Steelworkers of America.

Finally, concerning the regulations for the control of exposure to occupational health hazards, comment on the proposed draft regulations covering six chemical substances and noise was invited by notices in the Ontario Gazette in July and August of last year. In addition, copies of the proposed regulations were mailed to a number of organizations likely to be affected, including 45 union and worker associations. In the case of some of these regulations, we have specifically invited comment from representatives of the Ontario Federation of Labour and the United Steelworkers of America.

[Later (3:06):]

Mr. Cassidy: The question of the member for Hamilton East was not only about consultation about the regulations under Bill 70, but also about when we could expect the bill to be proclaimed.

Since it has now been 15 weeks since that bill was adopted by this Legislature, can the minister say when the workers of Ontario will get the protection of Bill 70 by having the bill proclaimed?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I did answer that question of the member, but let the member and I be very clear. There is no delay, no interest in procrastinating, only a sincere interest in getting that bill promulgated as soon as it can be done. Let us not play that game.

[Reverting (3:04):]

FAMILY BENEFITS

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, in answer to a second question, on Tuesday the member for London Centre—who is wearing a lovely tie today, by the way; that's a terrific tie—

Mr. Peterson: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Your wife didn't pick it though, did she?

Mr. Speaker: Time's a-wasting.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The member brought to my attention the fact I had not answered a question he posed several weeks ago regarding family benefits and the Ontario Human Rights Code. I regret this omission, but was under the impression he had obtained the answer he wished from the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) in a subsequent question.

Although it could be said the current policy regarding family benefits appears to suggest discrimination on the basis of sex, the commission has indicated its view is the point in question does not fall within the provisions of the code. When the matter was brought to the attention of the commission, it replied it cannot take such cases, largely because there is considerable doubt about the enforcement of the code as it applies at present to agencies of the crown, as a legal action would entail the crown acting against the crown.

Thus, I can only repeat my original statement to the member that this particular situation does not at present fall within the scope of the human rights code.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister, in his capacity as minister responsible for the Ontario Human Rights Code, prepared to investigate this entire situation to bring the various agencies of the crown underneath that human rights code? Is he prepared to deal with that issue and is he prepared to give them instructions to come up with draft legislation in that particular area?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: There are two issues, one is personal. The member asked me whether I feel there is discrimination. I do, as does the Minister of Community and Social Services, as he said.

Mr. Peterson: You are not prepared to do anything about it. We want to give you a chance.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Second, the matter I have referred to is clearly one of those under consideration in our review of the Ontario Human Rights Code that is under way. As I mentioned before in the House at the time of his question, that act and proposed amendments will be discussed in the ordinary legislative way.

Mr. S. Smith: When?

AMBULANCE SERVICES

Mr. Van Horne: I have a question to the Minister of Health. I suppose I could very well have asked this of the Treasurer, in the light of his opening statement today.

Is the minister prepared to deny the allegations of the London ambulance attendants' association that many ambulances in Ontario are staffed in the summertime by students who have minimum medical, nursing or health training and who, therefore, could place the life of the injured or sick person using the service in extreme jeopardy?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member has a sixth sense.

Mr. Conway: The question is, do you have five?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am just reading, at this very moment, some information on that prepared by my staff.

Mr. Laughren: Set up. Set up.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, we would not do that.

The students are required to hold a valid standard first-aid certificate issued by the Red Cross or the St. John Ambulance Association, plus a valid class F driver's licence which enables them to drive the ambulances. These qualifications, I am told in the information I have before me, are similar to the current legislative requirements for part-time and volunteer ambulance officers. The students who will be employed in the summer of 1979 will also be certified by the Canadian Heart Foundation in cardio-pulmonary resuscitation at the basic rescuer level.

Does the honourable member require any additional information? The information before me is extremely lengthy, and I haven't had a chance to go through it, so perhaps I could take whatever supplementary question he has as notice and I will get the full information back to him.

Mr. Van Horne: By way of supplementary: No doubt the minister has information in front of him because we have been chasing this particular item for a couple of days. I would say, by way of background, that the situation has been presented to the ministry for the last couple of years and, specifically, the allegations I have received lead me to ask this question.

In the regulations, section 14 suggests that in addition to nursing training et cetera, a person with a health discipline approved by the ministry might be qualified. We have instances of geography and psychology students acting as summertime ambulance attendants.

Does the minister consider those equivalent qualifications—geology, geography or psychology?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have already indicated the qualifications they must all have, regardless of the discipline in which they are training.

Mr. Van Horne: But that hasn't happened.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will be glad to respond to every single point addressed to the ministry in the most recent inquiry of which I have been made familiar. I have not been made aware of any earlier inquiry.

Mr. Conway: We have a used-car salesman as Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will be glad to share with the member information on all aspects of it, I hope to reassure him the standards are in fact quite appropriate for the summer students who are employed to assist as staff holidays rotate through the summer months.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health who last week made an announcement in this House that was purportedly to solve the problem of opted-out physicians. To avoid accusations of hyperbole I'd like to quote just one line from his initial statement: "that this announcement is based on a partnership between health care professionals, the medical community, the public and the government." He also said that "this partnership, despite some difficulties, has worked well in Ontario." Could I ask the minister how he rationalizes, or dared to make, that statement in light of this quote from the general secretary of the Ontario Medical Association to the AMA convention in the United States? The quote is: "Partnership with government does not exist."

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would remind the honourable member—perhaps he couldn't see from where he sits in the chamber—at the time I made that statement last week the gentleman to whom he refers was sitting in the gallery. He was there with the president of the medical association and most of the executive of the medical association—

Mr. McClellan: Sitting there laughing at you.

Mr. Warner: You could hear the chuckles from here.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —as well as the president and executive director of the hospital association. I'm not familiar with that particular quote, but I suggest that the deeds—

Mr. Warner: You should be.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and their very presence here to back up that statement confirm the partnership to which I made reference.

Mr. Martel: Blame the opposition; we initiated the legislation.

Mr. Warner: You failed miserably.

Mr. McClellan: Why shouldn't he be here? He knows a sucker when he sees one.

Mr. Cooke: It is nonsense.

Mr. Warner: Don't talk on medicare.

Mr. Breaugh: I would take the man at his word, as that is exactly what he means. Would the minister then care to comment on Dr. Moran's description of the way the government arrives at physicians' fees? Again I will quote: "They are a sham, a charade; we are in a no-win situation."

Mr. Martel: He didn't say that, did he?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If I remember correctly, the appearance at the AMA—and I haven't seen that particular report—was many months ago. In fact the opinion was expressed on several occasions by representatives of the medical association—

Mr. Warner: No, no, wrong again. Try something else.

Ms. Gigantes: He's been saying it for months.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —that while we were under the anti-inflation board controls as laid down by the federal government, the negotiations were hamstrung by the ceiling imposed.

Mr. S. Smith: Were you against it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We all knew going into negotiations in that three-year period what the upper limit was of the average income increase for a physician; what there was left to negotiate was the distribution. With respect, any time that statement has been made in my presence—and it has been made—it has been with reference to that restriction that was placed on negotiations for over three years.

Mr. Warner: Wrong; wrong again.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Kennedy moved first reading of Bill 38, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, this is a re-introduction of a similar bill that was on the Order Paper and died last session. The purpose is to extend the eligibility for compensation under the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971, to any person who has been convicted of an offence and sentenced to a term of imprisonment and whose conviction is subsequently quashed. I might add there is a significant amendment to it in that with this change it would provide for cases such as the Peter Treu case which could now receive consideration.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Haggerty moved first reading of Bill 39, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to.

[3:15]

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, the introduction of the bill has been the result of an academic research project sponsored by students of Wilfrid Laurier University—Cheryl Oleniuk, Lori Rheume and Tom Robson. The purpose of the bill is to require the Workmen's Compensation Board to establish at least one sheltered workshop for handicapped persons in Ontario. The board is also authorized to provide assistance to persons or associations who wish to establish sheltered workshops. The amendment is designed to place jobless injured workers in full-time employment.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, pursuant to standing order 13 I wish to indicate to the House the business for tonight, tomorrow and next week. This afternoon and evening, we will continue with the debate on the speech from the throne, and similarly tomorrow morning, Friday. On Monday, April 9, we will have the windup of the reply to the speech from the throne with a vote planned for about 5:45.

Tuesday afternoon, April 10, we will do legislation and take into consideration Bills 13, 14, 15, 16 and 18 and in the evening we hear from the Treasurer. On Wednesday, April 11, the resources development, administration of justice and general government committees may meet in the morning. On Thursday, April 12, we take up private members' public business, being ballot items three and four with adjournment planned on Thursday, April 12, at 6 p.m. for us to reconvene at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, April 17.

While I am on my feet, I wonder if we might have the unanimous consent of the House for the Treasurer to present the necessary supply bill to pick up the supplementary estimates that the committee of supply dealt with on Thursday evening and Friday morning of last week?

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent for such action?

Agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

SUPPLY ACT

The following bill was given first, second and third readings on motion by Hon. F. S. Miller:

Bill 40, An Act granting to Her Majesty certain additional sums of money for the Public Service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, before I get into the debate, I would like to express my appreciation for the excellent manner in which you conduct the business of this House. You have been fair in all your decisions and I am sure this has been appreciated by all three parties.

Mr. Speaker, I will be using up a considerable amount of time this afternoon. As a matter of fact, I will be using up some of the time I haven't used during this past year.

Mr. Martel: It is going to be a filibuster.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, I am not a member who likes to get up and boast about what this government has done.

Mr. Nixon: It is going to be a short speech.

Mr. Belanger: I am not a member who will speak up in the House for the sake of publicity.

Mr. Lawlor: You are on the wrong side of the fence.

Mr. Belanger: And I am not a member who speaks in this House—or who shouts from my seat—about what this government should be doing, or what I want for my counties of Prescott and Russell.

Mr. Nixon: Why are you here?

Mr. Stong: You must be going to retire.

Mr. Belanger: When I have a request in my riding I go directly to the source: the minister, or even the Premier (Mr. Davis), if need be.

An hon. member: Or the Premier's advisers. That is where the power is.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, that is the way I operate.

Mr. Nixon: You don't know Lorne Henderson, do you?

Mr. Riddell: Is this your swan song, Albert?

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me today to have the opportunity of participating in the debate on the speech from the throne.

Monsieur l'Orateur: C'est un plaisir pour moi aujourd'hui de participer aux débats sur le discours du trône.

Je regrette cependant que le Chef de l'Opposition officielle ne soit pas ici pour entendre mes commentaires puisqu'il a manifesté un si vif intérêt dans l'est de l'Ontario et de mon comté. En août dernier, par exemple, selon le journal de Prescott, il aurait dit qu'il encouragerait l'industrie à quitter le centre prospère de la province pour aller s'établir dans l'est de l'Ontario. Je crains que le leader de l'opposition ne soit jamais dans une position pour avoir cette influence.

Mr. Martel: Oh, no, the north, Albert.

Mr. Belanger: Malheureusement, il semble qu'il dise la même chose aux gens des autres régions de la province et j'ai nettement l'impression qu'il n'a pas encore informé les gens de la région de Hamilton, de Burlington et de Toronto qu'il songe à déménager l'industrie de ces localités vers d'autres régions de la province. Evidemment, si c'est vraiment son intention, ce dont je doute sincèrement, il est fort probable qu'il adressait sa déclara-tion pour plaire à la population locale comme c'est le cas dans un grand nombre de ses déclarations.

Je regrette aussi que le député de Nippissing, Monsieur Bolan, soit absent. Lui aussi s'est rendu dans les beaux comtés de Prescott et de Russell en disant lors d'une réunion libérale et je cite: "Nous avons un problème dans Prescott et Russell; c'est Albert Bélanger."

Mr. Martel: That's nasty, Albert.

Mr. Belanger: En réalisant qu'il s'adressait à ses amis libéraux, je suppose qu'il voulait dire que les Libéraux ont un problème avec Albert Bélanger parce qu'il fait du si bon travail pour ses électeurs que les Libéraux n'éliront jamais un député dans Prescott et Russell.

Toutefois, je ne suis pas ici aujourd'hui pour m'attaquer aux déclarations que les Libéraux ont faites dans diverses régions de l'Ontario—

Mr. Martel: Now you are boasting.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: No, in French it is not boasting.

Mr. Belanger: —surtout parce qu'ils chantent des refrains si différents dans chaque région de la province, qu'il est presque impossible de déterminer leur politique sur une question ou l'autre. En plus, je crois que les gens de l'Ontario commencent à réaliser que le Parti Libéral est contradictoire, opportuniste et pragmatique dans son évaluation des problèmes véritables des gens de cette province.

C'est pourquoi je suis heureux d'appuyer le discours du trône. Les préceptes qui en découlent reflètent la prévoyance, le souci et la compréhension dont ce gouvernement a toujours fait preuve pour relever les défis qui existent en Ontario. Bien que le discours du trône traite de nouveaux domaines et de principes généraux—

Mr. McKessock: Do you believe that, Jack?

Mr. Belanger: —il prouve que ce gouvernement sait reconnaître les défis qui nous sont imposés dans les sphères économiques et sociales, et qu'il est prêt à les relever.

Je suis particulièrement heureux de voir, par exemple, que l'on se propose d'établir un fonds d'encouragement à l'emploi, qui va servir de base à une collaboration entre le gouvernement et le secteur des affaires afin d'assurer que l'Ontario continue de répondre à la demande croissante d'emplois.

Bien que 140,000 nouveaux emplois aient été créés en Ontario l'an dernier, tous les membres de cette Chambre reconnaissent le besoin d'initiatives audacieuses de la part du gouvernement pour s'assurer que notre économie demeure concurrentielle, en d'autres mots, s'assurer d'attirer de nouvelles industries et leur permettre de maintenir un niveau de développement qui puisse garder le pas avec le nombre grandissant de travailleurs que arrivent sur le marché du travail.

Pour ma part, je crois qu'à long terme, le fonds d'encouragement à l'emploi sera avantageux pour la province. D'une part, il va nous permettre d'encourager la croissance industrielle dans les secteurs de l'économie où il existe un potentiel de développement d'emplois. D'autre part, il va permettre d'attirer de nouvelles industries et de développer des produits qui ouvriront de nouveaux marchés et maintiendront notre position concurrentielle au sein des marchés traditionnels au Canada et à l'étranger.

D'aucuns prétendent que cette initiative représente une faveur de la part du gouvernement à la grosse entreprise. Nos amis libéraux évidemment appuient l'idée de fournir des encouragements à Ford une journée, puis changent d'idée et prétendent plus tard le contraire.

Mr. Wildman: Giveaway.

Mr. Martel: That's having it both ways.

Mr. Belanger: Je crois qu'il incombe au gouvernement d'encourager le progrès et d'aider à rendre l'industrie et le commerce viables. Je crois également que nous devons envisager objectivement la réalité de l'industrie et du commerce sur le plan international. Nous devons réaliser que nous vivons dans un monde dominé par des sociétés internationales. Evidemment nous pourrions faire des illusions et ignorer ce fait. Nous pourrions dire que dorénavant nous n'encouragerons pas les industries internationales à s'établir en Ontario. Nous pourrions dire que nous n'offrirons pas d'encouragement aux sociétés internationales étrangères.

Mais il semble que si nous ignorons cette réalité, les victimes seraient surtout les travailleurs de cette province. A mon avis, une approche rationnelle serait d'établir un équilibre entre l'encouragement aux industries domestiques tout en reconnaissant en même temps objectivement que nous devons attirer notre part équitable de capitaux d'investissements des grandes corporations internationales.

A titre de député d'un comté qui possède un grand potentiel de croissance industrielle, mes électeurs et moi serons heureux d'accueillir de nouvelles industries, de nouvelles usines et les nouveaux emplois qui seront créés par suite de cette initiative, surtout parce que cette politique signifie un emploi et un investissement à long terme dans cette province.

Ce dernier point a été l'un des critères soulignés par le Ministère de l'Industrie et du Tourisme dans un récent discours adressé au Board of Trade de Toronto. Dans cette allocution le Ministre a énoncé clairement les défis qu'affronte la province en terme de développements économiques. Les idées et les mesures proposées par le Ministre et subséquemment reprises dans le discours du trône constituent une attitude responsable envers un problème très difficile qui constitue un véritable défi. Le fonds d'encouragement à l'emploi va aider l'Ontario à maintenir sa position forte dans un monde où la concurrence est de plus en plus complexe et brutale sur le plan commercial international.

[3:30]

Bien que le fonds d'encouragement à l'emploi représente une initiative importante du gouvernement pour assurer la croissance économique continué et la création de nouveaux emplois dans cette province, le discours du trône souligne également son engagement constant pour contrôler l'augmentation des dépenses gouvernementales et le processus de réglementation, deux points qui contribuent à la création d'un climat économique positif qui encourage l'investissement et le progrès dans cette province.

A ce sujet, j'ai été heureux de noter que le gouvernement va continuer de modifier et d'améliorer le système de réglementation concernant les petites entreprises. Les mesures visant à donner des responsabilités et une plus grande autonomie où c'est approprié, aux industries, associations et municipalités, vont aider à diminuer la participation du gouvernement dans nos affaires quotidiennes.

Toutefois, monsieur l'Orateur, la section du discours du trône qui aura peut-être le plus grand intérêt pour les gens de Prescott et Russell se rapporte aux initiatives à continuer, à étendre ou à apporter dans le domaine de l'agriculture.

En qualité de membre de ce gouvernement, je suis fier de notre collaboration avec nos communautés agricoles. Je souligne le mot collaboration car il caractérise exactement l'attitude de notre gouvernement au cours des trois dernières décennies.

Nous reconnaissons que l'agriculteur est un homme d'affaires indépendant. Nous comprenons également les difficultés et les problèmes de nos agriculteurs quand il s'agit de maintenir des opérations agricoles rentables. Ayant vécu toute ma vie dans une petite localité agricole, monsieur l'Orateur, je peux parler en toute connaissance de cause de l'importante contribution qu'apportent les agriculteurs à notre société.

Leur contribution s'étend au-delà du rôle très important qu'ils jouent au sein de l'économie provinciale, le rôle assurant que l'Ontario possède des réserves suffisantes de centaines de produits agricoles. Leur contribution en est également une de valeur et de bon sens qu'ils apportent dans notre vie. Au fur et à mesure que notre société devient plus complexe, il est bon de retourner dans une localité où les gens n'ont pas encore perdu leur perspective de la vie, où le combat le plus fondamental de l'homme, son combat avec la nature, continue d'être le point de mire de notre activité quotidienne.

N'allez toutefois pas en conclure ou en déduire que la communauté agricole n'a pas à affronter les mêmes problèmes que nous. L'agriculteur, comme nous tous, est la victime de l'inflation et fait face aux mêmes besoins que ses amis des centres urbains. Comme tout autre homme d'affaire, il doit faire face aux défis constants d'équilibrer ses comptes, d'offrir un niveau de vie satisfaisant à sa famille et de construire une communauté qui réponde vraiment à ses besoins et à ceux de son prochain. C'est en reconnaissant cette réalité, que le discours du trône a renouvelé l'engagement de ce gouvernement de continuer à travailler avec notre communauté agricole pour assurer que l'agriculture demeurera un élément important dans la vie de cette province.

Il est certain que l'agriculture prédomine dans les comtés unis de Prescott et Russell où plus de 260,000 acres sont consacrés à des fins agricoles. On compte en plus 60,000 acres de terre non mis en valeur au sein des régions agricoles. Quelque 7,500 personnes vivent sur des fermes avec des ventes agricoles de $50 ou plus tandis que 20,000 autres vivent dans des localités rurales.

Prescott et Russell comportent un bon équilibre de petites, moyennes et grandes opérations agricoles. Nous produisons une gamme étendue de récoltes bien que l'industrie laitière joue le rôle le plus significatif dans l'activité agricole des comtés unis.

Monsieur l'Orateur, le gouvernement de l'Ontario a mis en oeuvre de nombreux programmes pour aider les agriculteurs à maintenir des opérations agricoles rentables. L'assurance des récoltes, les programmes de stabilisation de revenue agricole et de revenue de l'élevage du bétail sont de bons exemples de programmes ayant pour but de permettre aux agriculteurs de continuer à maintenir des opérations rentables sur un marché souvent imprévisible et soumis à des facteurs climatiques qui peuvent affecter le niveau agricole d'une année à l'autre.

Dans les domaines où la province a travaillé directement en collaboration avec nos agriculteurs, nous avons connu un nombre remarquable de succès. Le meilleur exemple est peut-être le domaine du drainage qui, au cours des dernières années a pris beaucoup d'importance dans l'est de l'Ontario. Dans les domaines où la province a participé à des programmes de partage des dépenses avec le gouvernement fédéral, il y a certainement des améliorations possibles, surtout en ce qui concerne la récente décision du gouvernement fédéral de se retirer de plusieurs accords de partage de dépenses. Un domaine où ceci a créé beaucoup d'incertitude concerne les débouchés de drainage municipaux qui, conformément à l'accord relatif à l'aménagement rural et au développement agricole ont été partagés à parts égales aux niveaux fédéral, provincial et municipal.

Il vaut peut-être la peine, monsieur l'Orateur, de prendre quelques minutes pour énoncer le problème auquel nous ferons face dans l'est de l'Ontario si le programme de drainage municipal est éliminé par le gouvernement fédéral et c'est pourquoi j'ai été particulièrement heureux que le discours du trône contienne un engagement de la part du gouvernement de travailler en vue de la continuation du programme ARDA ou d'un programme de même calibre.

Je n'ai guère à expliquer aux députés des régions rurales l'importance d'un bon système de drainage pour étendre et améliorer les récoltes et les acres en production.

Mr. McKessock: Rene, you're the only one who can heckle him.

Mr. Belanger: A la suite du programme de drainage dans cette province, près de 1,200,000 d'acres disposent maintenant d'un drainage intensif. Pour ceux d'entre vous qui ne sont au courant du programme, un agriculteur peut obtenir un prêt de sa municipalité pour couvrir le coût à concurrence de 75 per cent de l'installation d'un système de drainage. L'agriculteur paie un taux d'intérêt de six pour cent et le prêt peut être remboursé sur une période de dix ans. La province absorbe la différence entre l'intérêt payé par les agriculteurs et le taux d'intérêt courant. Dans l'exercice financier 1977-78, par exemple, des prêts de plus de $18,000,000 ont été accordés à quelque 2,600 projets de drainage. Cette année, $3,800,000 auront été versés pour couvrir l'intérêt dont la province a assumé la responsabilité.

En plus des prêts, la province accorde des subventions aux agriculteurs pour les aider à installer des débouchés de drainage adéquats en fonction du système de drainage sur leur propriété. Ces subventions sont versées aux agriculteurs par les municipalités en fonction du montant des coûts de drainage évalués selon les terres servant à des fins agricoles. Cette année, $4,500,000 ont été mis de côté pour ce programme.

Bref, le Gouvernement provincial encourage activement les agriculteurs à installer des systèmes de drainage efficaces sur leur ferme pour accroître la production et le nombre d'acres utilisés pour la culture. Nous pouvons voir le résultat de ce programme dans le passage de la production de foin, d'avoine et de graines mixtes au maïs. Les terres consacrées au maïs dans l'est de l'Ontario se sont multipliées par 10 entre 1966 et 1976 et ce changement prend de plus en plus d'envergure. L'une des principales raisons de ce changement a été l'installation d'un bon système de drainage.

Toutefois, le programme de la province ne peut être vraiment efficace que si des débouchés de drainage adéquats sont installés par les municipalités pour que l'eau soit évacuée des fermes plus rapidement.

Afin d'aider les municipalités à développer des canaux de drainage adéquats, la province et le Gouvernement fédéral ont convenu en vertu du programme ARDA de fournir les deux tiers du coût de l'installation des canaux de drainage municipaux. La municipalité aurait à payer le dernier tiers du coût d'installation. Ces dernières années, ce programme a été très avantageux pour l'agriculture, l'agriculteur et la communauté.

Toutefois, le 5 décembre 1978, le Gouvernement fédéral annonçait son intention de cesser d'appuyer financièrement le programme ARDA et rétroactivement au 8 septembre. En réalité, cela signifiait que tout projet de drainage qui n'était pas déjà en construction à cette date ne serait pas admissible pour l'aide financière fédérale d'un tiers.

Entre le 8 septembre et le 5 décembre, des travaux de drainage au coût de $1,700,000 avaient été entrepris. Il y avait dans le voisinage de $5,200,000 de rapports d'ingénierie complétés et sur le point d'aller en appel d'offre. En plus, il y avait quelque 69 drains, ayant coûté au cours de l'année dernière entre $40,000 et $50,000 chacun qui totaliseront un autre montant de $3,000,000 portant ainsi le montant total de travail sur les canaux de drainage municipaux à environ $10,000,000 pour l'est de l'Ontario. Ces projets avaient été entrepris par les municipalités impliquées dans ce programme avec l'assurance qu'un tiers serait payé par le Gouvernement Fédéral en vertu du programme ARDA.

Malheureusement, par suite de la décision du Gouvernement Fédéral, un bon nombre de ces projets ont été interrompus et les municipalités qui se sont engagées dans des programmes coûteux de drainage pourront être obligées de payer les deux tiers du coût. Le Gouvernement provincial s'est engagé à fournir un tiers du coût. Mais à mon avis, le Gouvernement Fédéral a traité cette situation d'une façon déplorable et a manifesté une indifférence totale à l'égard des municipalités et des agriculteurs concernés.

Mr. Wildman: Did you Liberals hear that?

Mr. Belanger: Mais il existe encore un autre aspect malheureux à cette situation. Bien que la province encourage les agriculteurs à mettre en valeur des systèmes adéquats de drainage pour leur ferme, dans la plupart des cas, ces efforts seront tout à fait inutiles à moins que les canaux municipaux soient disponibles pour l'écoulement des eaux provenant des systèmes de drainage sur les fermes.

Dans mon propre comté de Prescott-Russell, nous avons eu beaucoup de succès en versant $2,200,000 pour les canaux de drainage municipaux en vertu de l'accord ARDA. Dans mon comté comme dans la plupart des comtés de l'est de l'Ontario, il reste toutefois un besoin d'accomplir encore beaucoup plus dans ce domaine. Mais à moins que les municipalités ne reçoivent une aide financière par l'entremise d'un programme d'assistance partagée, le programme de drainage des fermes et celui des municipalités pourrait être sérieusement affecté.

A mon avis, il est essentiel que l'assistance pour les canaux de drainage soit offerte pour aider les municipalités. Que la source des fonds demeure avec l'ARDA, ou qu'une autre entente soit établie, le coût ne devrait pas et ne peut pas être laissé à la province et aux municipalités seulement. Il faut que ce programme continue d'être un effort conjoint aux trois niveaux.

Je dois avouer, monsieur l'Orateur, que je ne comprends pas les motifs du Gouvernement Fédéral de se retirer de ce programme qui a fourni une assistance formidable dans les communautés rurales de l'est de l'Ontario. En plus du programme de drainage, cet accord pour aider les agriculteurs a joué un rôle important en aidant les agriculteurs à améliorer leur terre de culture. Depuis 1962, par exemple, environ $4,000,000 ont été dépensés pour aider à l'agrandissement de 355 fermes dans la région de Prescott et Russell. J'ajouterais également que l'ARDA a aidé à financer le Parc Provincial Carillon et a fourni des fonds pour la recherche et les études de praticabilité pour le projet de la rivière South Nation.

Ce dernier projet, monsieur l'Orateur, est d'une importance considérable pour les agriculteurs dans ma région. Comme vous le savez peut-être, avec toutes les améliorations qui ont résulté de l'installation d'un système adéquat de drainage, la rapidité avec laquelle la quantité d'eau coulant dans la rivière South Nation s'est accrue. Bien que les inondations printanières et les inondations subites en été peuvent causer des dommages considérables aux récoltes, ce problème peut être contrôlé par des écluses à Plantagenet et une étude à ce sujet est en voie d'être entreprise pour examiner la possibilité de creuser le lit rocheux à Plantagenet. Une fois achevé, ce projet devrait aider à réduire le danger d'inondation pour les agriculteurs dans mon comté, et maintenir un niveau d'eau stable durant les sécheresses de l'été.

Monsieur l'Orateur, je suis également heureux que le discours du trône propose l'établissement d'un programme d'aide modifiée pour nos agriculteurs. Ce programme que je crois comprendre, sera appelé "Ontario Farm Productivity Incentive Program" et remplacera le programme de subventions qui a été établi en 1967. Au cours des douze dernières années, ce programme a permis aux agriculteurs de moderniser et d'agrandir leurs opérations. J'apprends que quelques $165,000,000 ont été versés à environ 90,000 agriculteurs dans le cadre de ce programme, et que des demandes d'aide ont été acceptées jusqu'à la fin de mars de cette année.

Le nouveau programme d'encouragement sera établi pour cinq ans et son budget sera fixé sur une base annuelle. Il aura pour but d'aider les agriculteurs dans des projets d'aménagement du sol et du contrôle de l'érosion y compris l'entreposage du fumier et l'aménagement d'eau pour le bétail. Il servira également à la construction d'aménagements de production spécifiques pour les agriculteurs qui n'ont jamais participé au programme de subventions. Il y aura des projets comme les granges pour le bétail, des laiteries, des silos, des serres et même des projets pour le sirop d'érable.

Un autre développement proposé dans le discours du trône concerne la machinerie agricole.

Mr. Wildman: You can never get parts.

Mr. Belanger: Par suite d'un effort de co-opération entre les fabricants, les distributeurs, et les concessionnaires qui ont rencontré les responsables du gouvernement, on travaillera à l'élaboration d'un code d'éthique qui assurera aux agriculteurs des contrats d'achat standard des garanties minimum et un service adéquat de réparation et de pièces de rechange.

Mr. Wildman: Are they going to bring in legislation?

Mr. Belanger: A mon avis, il était grand temps que l'on y voit. Il n'y a rien de plus frustrant pour un agriculteur que d'avoir de la machinerie en panne en pleine saison de semence ou de moisson parce qu'il n'est pas en mesure d'obtenir une pièce de rechange.

Mr. Wildman: It had better be in legislation.

Mr. Belanger: J'ai été également heureux de voir que l'on continuera le programme Agricrew. L'an dernier, ce programme qui emploie des étudiants pour travailler dans les fermes en équipe de cinq pour des périodes d'une semaine, a été entrepris à titre expérimental dans la région de Cornwall pendant 4 semaines. La majorité des participants ont de 16 à 18 ans et la plupart, avaient une certaine expérience agricole.

A la suite du succès de l'été dernier, quatre équipes seront basées à Plantagenet et serviront les comtés de Prescott, Russell, Glengarry et Stormont.

De mon point de vue, ce programme pourrait être bénéfique, à la fois aux étudiants qui y participent et aux agriculteurs. Chaque équipe travaille cinq jours et l'agriculteur n'a droit qu'à une seule équipe par été. Il en coûte à l'agriculteur $90 par jour sur lesquels il reçoit un remboursement de $15 de la part du gouvernement. Le programme permet à l'étudiant d'obtenir une excellente expérience en même temps qu'un revenu modeste et ce programme peut être d'une grande utilité pour l'agriculteur qui a un projet spécial à entreprendre. Le but cependant n'est pas d'interférer avec les occasions d'emploi pour la main-d'oeuvre saisonnière au cours des périodes de moisson. J'espère que les agriculteurs, dans ma région, profiteront de ce programme et que l'on utilisera des étudiants locaux.

While these programs are encouraging, there is one important issue that is causing some concern to dairy farmers in Prescott and Russell. I am, of course, referring to the problem of industrial milk quotas. This issue, however, attains added significance because it bears directly on Ontario's position as a cheddar cheese and specialty cheese producer.

As most members know, the cheddar cheese industry in eastern Ontario has gone through a period of transformation during the past decade. In particular, many of the smaller cheese factories have been amalgamated into larger operations. Despite this, however, our cheddar cheese industry has not kept pace with the increased demand for cheddar cheese in recent years, particularly in foreign markets. In fact, we are producing about the same volume of cheddar cheese as we did five years ago. Last month Grant Smith, vice-president of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, told a group in my riding that Canadian producers only met half their quota to the United States market last year. At the same time, there is a growing demand for Ontario cheddar cheese in Britain and there is no doubt that we could increase our sales in that market. There is also some concern that we will be unable to meet future demands for aged cheddar cheese, despite the assurances of Eugene Whelan that there is no shortage of cheddar cheese.

Mr. Riddell: A good minister.

Mr. Belanger: Yet, despite this rising demand for Ontario cheddar cheese, many factories are operating at a 50 per cent capacity.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Where was your minister when they were giving quotas to Quebec?

Mr. Belanger: According to cheese producers and dairy farmers I have talked to, the problem stems from the fact that industrial milk quotas for Ontario have not kept pace with the increased demand for cheddar cheese. I am told that a number of cheese manufacturers have imported surplus industrial milk from Quebec to produce Ontario cheddar cheese.

Mr. McKessock: Did we take Quebec's quotas?

Mr. Belanger: If this is the case, our dairy farmers who depend on industrial milk sales are getting the short end of the stick.

Mr. McKessock: What should we do?

Mr. Belanger: The controversy over industrial milk quotas is not new. Ontario's Minister of Agriculture and Food has brought this matter to the attention of the federal minister and has asked that the industrial milk quota be increased.

Mr. Wildman: Why bother? You already said he was indifferent.

Mr. Belanger: Though the price for industrial milk has been increased, the request for an increased quota for Ontario appears to have fallen on deaf ears, so far as the federal government is concerned.

I believe that a national milk supply management program is in the best interest of the dairy industry in Canada. At the same time, however, it seems to me that the system has become too rigid. It has failed to adapt to changing circumstances within the dairy industry. The current problem just doesn't make sense. We have the production capability and we have the demand for Ontario cheddar cheese. There is also a growing market for many specialty cheeses produced here in Ontario. Part of the solution, of course, is to place a higher import limit on foreign cheese brought into Canada. The limit currently stands at 45,000,000 pounds per year.

It also seems to me that we must take a serious look at the quota system, as it applies currently to Ontario. I understand that the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food recently has made some significant changes in relation to its role with the dairy industry. I also understand that the Ontario Milk Marketing Board and the Ontario Dairy Council have established a committee to review methods of allocating supplies of industrial milk. These are steps in the right direction.

Mr. Riddell: That report is completed, Albert.

Mr. Belanger: Good.

Mr. McKessock: Will Quebec give us some of its quota?

Mr. Belanger: You will have to ask Eugene Whelan.

There is an urgent need to reconcile the current market sharing quotas, which are based strictly on production, with the changing marketing criteria in Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: Considering what Trudeau said about Quebec farmers, he will probably give us some.

Mr. Belanger: In the past, the Canadian Dairy Commission has proven reluctant to bring about the necessary changes, though a subcommittee of the Canadian Milk Supply Management Committee is reviewing the national program.

It is interesting to note that in an article in Le Droit last Wednesday, several Ontario members were criticized because we asked for increased Ontario milk quotas. According to the article, which appears to have relied heavily on Mr. Whelan's interpretation of the problem facing the dairy and the cheddar industries, these members have misrepresented the situation.

Mr. Laughren: Shame.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Whelan can say what he wants, but the Canadian Dairy Commission is ultimately responsible for allocating the milk quotas on a national basis.

Mr. McKessock: And historically too. Right.

Mr. Belanger: Each province must work within the limits it establishes. The milk supply management committee—which is chaired by the chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission, and which is composed of representatives from each province within the national plan—can make recommendations to the Canadian Dairy Commission with respect to the quota system. But it is still the ultimate responsibility of the Canadian Dairy Commission to issue these quotas.

[4:00]

It is not a simple matter of asking for more quota, nor does the final decision rest with the supply management committee. Moreover, to suggest that Ontario's Minister of Agriculture and Food is wrong in asking Mr. Whelan to assist us in increasing Ontario's quota is to say that Mr. Whelan has nothing to do with the Canadian Dairy Commission, which is hardly the case.

We all recognize that the national milk plan was designed to meet the problems that existed a decade ago. But times have changed. People's tastes have changed. We have had a consolidation in the processing and producing sectors. Population patterns have changed. New markets have been opened up. It's time that the national plan adjusted to all these changes.

If this problem is not resolved, I can foresee continued problems. If producers cannot get more quota to produce more cheese to meet the demand of a growing international market, these markets may very well be lost to other suppliers. Many factories are now operating on a marginal capacity. We have been encouraging them to expand their over-the-counter sales, which are affected by the quota system. We have been urging Ottawa to place lower limits on the amount of imported cheese. Many farmers are changing over to beef operations and, frankly, I can't blame them.

In the long term, however, we must improve the national milk plan and make it responsive to this province's needs. Some may say that I am being selfish.

Mr. Laughren: No, not selfish.

Mr. Belanger: The fact of the matter is that I am. The dairy industry is important to my riding in eastern Ontario. Heaven knows that our farmers are among the best producers in the world and they deserve our support, as does our Canadian cheese industry. It's very insulting when you read an article as appeared in the Star, April 4, where Mr. Trudeau says that farmers are professional complainers.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Right, they're voters.

Mr. Laughren: Do you agree with that, Leo?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He'll regret the day he said that.

Mr. Belanger: I resent that kind of remark, even if it does come from the Prime Minister of Canada. I have lived and worked with farmers all of my life and when they complain about something it's a legitimate complaint.

In that respect, I believe that the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food is meeting its mandate. In recent years, the ministry has co-operated with marketing boards and producers to promote Ontario farm products at home and abroad. I hardly need to remind the members here of the success of the Foodland Ontario program which, through its promotional and marketing campaigns—

Mr. Laughren: It's like your buy Canadian campaign.

Mr. Belanger: —has assisted in raising consumer consciousness of the products produced here in Ontario. The speech from the throne promised a further commitment in this program, both within the ministry and from the industry. We have seen increases in sales of such products as turkeys, grapes, salad vegetables, soya beans and everything.

In the international market, the ministry has played a key role in increasing our sales abroad. The trade missions carried out by the ministry—

Mr. Laughren: Oh, you haven't done much to save your cheese factories, Albert.

Mr. Belanger: —have resulted in increased sales to Britain, Europe, Asia, and the United States, and I believe that this Minister of Agriculture and Food deserves a great deal of credit in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Right on, good suggestion.

Mr. Belanger: I could run through the list of places where he or his officials have been and the millions of dollars in sales that have resulted from their efforts, but I won't. Suffice it to say that our farmers are the beneficiaries of their efforts.

I might also say that the ministry is working with our farmers in two other important areas; that is, in the area of research in agriculture and the education of a new generation of farmers and agribusiness people.

In regard to the latter point, it is my sincere hope that in the near future the ministry will establish an agricultural college for francophone farmers. In the past, Ontario has had an agreement with Quebec in which we accepted their English students and where they accepted our French students. While this arrangement sounds feasible, I have been told this is not working out at all well. I would hope the ministry would give serious consideration to establishing an agricultural college for francophone students. I think it would be ideal if a satisfactory site can be found. It can be found, and we have the building to locate this college, in the Prescott and Russell area, which has one of the largest francophone populations of Ontario.

In my view, such a program would meet a very real need for those of francophone background wishing to pursue a career in agriculture. The initiatives outlined in the speech from the throne reflect the concern and commitment that we of this government have to the farmers of Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: Now you have gone too far.

Mr. Belanger: It is a commitment that is based upon a partnership and upon a philosophical belief that government must work with the agricultural community to ensure that farming continues to provide a viable income—

Mr. Cassidy: Isn't your motto who governs least, governs best?

Mr. Belanger: —for farmers and that agriculture remains an important sector in the provincial economy. Moreover it is a partnership that will ensure that the people of Ontario will continue to have access to an abundant supply of farm products at reasonable prices.

Mr. Cassidy: Could you specify the farm products?

Mr. Belanger: At the same time, it is important that urban consumers recognize that the farmer is entitled to a fair return on his investment and that his costs, like everyone else's, are constantly rising.

Despite recent rises in the price of beef, which has been the source of considerable complaint on the part of consumers, the beef industry is only now recovering from a poor market of previous years. In my riding, for instance, many farmers are using their recent returns to pay off debts which mounted during the period when beef prices were really low.

J'étais heureux aussi de constater que le discours du trône propose de continuer le progrès fait par le gouvernement de l'Ontario dans le domaine des services français pour les francophones de la province. Comme vous devez le savoir, le comté de Prescott et Russell compte une population d'environ 82 per cent francophones. C'est donc dire que tout ce qui concerne l'amélioration des services français est d'une importance fondamentale aux gens que j'ai l'honneur de représenter ici à cette assemblée.

Au cours des dernières années, la question d'augmenter les services français a causé beaucoup de débats en Ontario.

D'un côté, il y a des gens qui exigent que le français soit établi comme langue officielle en Ontario. D'autre part, il y en a d'autres qui s'opposent à augmenter les services français. Dans le milieu de ces deux groupes, il existe une grande majorité de gens raisonnables qui désirent une solution juste et équitable à l'égard de cette question.

Comme représentant d'un comté à 82 pour cent francophone, et en tant que Canadien d'origine française moi-même je peux comprendre et réaliser l'inquiétude et la frustration que plusieurs francophones ont éprouvées au cours des récentes années. Je donne raison aussi à ceux qui prétendent qu'au cours de notre histoire comme province, la communauté francophone a été traitée injustement. Cette situation est un fait dans l'histoire de cette province.

Mr. Cassidy: Oui, et ça dure toujours.

Mr. Belanger: Mais en même temps je dois dire, que la situation est changée.

Au cours des dix dernières années, un progrès considérable a été fait pour établir un cadre solide qui permettrait aux francophones d'avoir accès aux services du gouvernement, dans le domaine de l'éducation, des soins de santé et des services sociaux dans leur propre langue.

Mr. Wildman: That is not true in the north.

Mr. Belanger: Pendant les dernières années, le gouvernement de l'Ontario a travaillé étroitement avec le conseil consultatif sur les services en français pour déterminer les priorités afin d'augmenter ces services. En fait de politique, le gouvernement de l'Ontario étend ses services en français dans les régions de la province où existe une population francophone assez considérable pour justifier l'établissement de ces services.

Dans le domaine de l'éducation, un progrès considérable a été réalisé et 72,000 élèves ont accès à l'enseignement en français. Le Ministre de l'Éducation a constamment augmenté le nombre de livres scolaires, d'aides d'enseignement et de textes en français pour nos écoles françaises.

Mr. Cassidy: You know, this was written by the same fellow who wrote his stuff in English.

Mr. Belanger: Dans le domaine de la justice, plus de services légaux et de tribunaux sont fournis en français. Le discours de trône a aussi promis une législation qui pourrait en vertu de la loi des preuves donner un statut approprié aux statuts de l'Ontario en français.

Le gouvernement a voulu ainsi améliorer le niveau des services dans les principaux ministères afin de mieux répondre aux besoins de la communauté francophone.

Mr. Cassidy: Pourquoi il a refusé les demandes pour un français scolaire homogène à Ottawa?

Mr. Belanger: Plusieurs ministères, y compris ceux de l'éducation, de la santé et des services sociaux ont nommé des co-ordonnateurs pour les services français. Au sein du Ministère de l'Éducation, cette personne a le statut de sous-ministre.

Des mesures ont été prises pour s'assurer que les renseignements du gouvernement soient disponibles en français comme en anglais, et qu'un personnel bilingue soit disponible dans les ministères qui ont un contact direct avec le public, pour permettre aux francophones de s'adresser dans leur propre langue au gouvernement de l'Ontario. Le gouvernement provincial a aussi fourni de l'aide aux municipalités pour augmenter leurs services français.

Je pourrais continuer cette liste d'initiatives appréciables entreprises par le gouvernement Davis depuis 1971, mais n'attirerai plutôt l'attention des membres sur quelques réussites qui ont été réalisées dans les comtés de Prescott et Russell. Premièrement, permettez-moi de dire, monsieur l'Orateur, que depuis mon élection à l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario, en 1967, j'ai la responsabilité en tant que député de cette Assemblée, de m'assurer que tous mes électeurs ont accès aux services fournis par ce gouvernement dans le comté unis de Prescott et Russell, et dans leur propre langue en français ou en anglais.

Cette attitude a toujours été ma façon d'agir envers le problème des services français dans mon comté. Si la population est française, ce n'est que logique que les représentants du gouvernement qui traitent avec cette localité soient bilingues. En même temps cependant, je ne peux voir aucun avantage à fournir des services en français pour le simple fait de fournir un service en français. La première considération doit être la qualité du service afin de s'assurer qu'elle répond efficacement aux besoins des gens qui reçoivent ce service. Evidemment, le personnel expert parfois n'est pas toujours disponible dans certains domaines spécialisés, pour offrir le service dans les deux langues. Mais je crois fermement que si des personnes bilingues sont requises, les efforts devraient être faits pour donner un personnel bilingue afin de répondre aux besoins de la population francophone.

[4:15]

Dans mon comté presque tous les gens sinon tous ceux qui sont en contact direct avec le public sont bilingues. Ce groupe comprend des représentants auprès des agriculteurs et les employés du Ministère des Services Sociaux. Ce dernier ministère maintient quatre bureaux locaux à Hawkesbury, Casselman, Alexandria et Rockland. Ces services fournissent aux citoyens de ces régions l'accès bilingue aux programmes du ministère, comportant des services de garderies d'enfants, des services sociaux de la province, la réadaptation professionnelle, des programmes pour les citoyens âgés et des programmes pour les arriérés mentaux.

En plus des programmes déjà établis, le Ministère des Services Sociaux annonçait l'an dernier qu'il fournira environ $272,000 pour les services de la santé mentale en français dans les Comtés de Prescott et Russell, y compris la nomination d'un orthophoniste pour aider ceux qui ont du mal ou la difficulté à parler.

La semaine dernière, j'ai eu le plaisir de voyager avec le Ministre des Services Sociaux (M. Norton), qui est venue à Ottawa. Il annonçait alors que $450,000 seraient fournis à dix agences offrant des services sociaux en français. Cette subvention puis-je ajouter, était en plus du montant de $500,000, qu'il avait annoncé précédemment pour appuyer les nouvelles initiatives pour augmenter les services sociaux en français dans tout l'Ontario. J'étais heureux de constater parmi plusieurs projets méritoires qui reçoivent des fonds, que la Société d'Aide à l'Enfance de Prescott-Russell comptait parmi les récipiendaires, et mettra en oeuvre un programme de prévention locale par l'entremise des centres communautaires pour adolescents et leurs familles dans cette région. Je peux ajouter que ces fonds sont destinés à améliorer la qualité des services disponibles aux francophones chez eux.

Je n'ai pas cependant l'illusion que tout est parfait en rapport aux services français. Bien que beaucoup de progrès ait été fait dans les services de la santé, j'ai écrit au Ministre de la Santé pour exprimer mon inquiétude sur le fait que l'Unité Sanitaire de l'Est de l'Ontario, qui comprend aussi Prescott-Russell, ne fournit pas un service entièrement bilingue. Une partie du problème à mon point de vue, est le fait que le service de cette unité sert une grande partie de Cornwall. Dans ma lettre, j'ai indiqué qu'il serait plus pratique d'établir une unité sanitaire à Prescott pour servir les francophones dans les comtés unis, de même que dans les comtés de Stormont et Glengarry. Il me semble qu'il n'est pas très logique d'avoir une infirmière d'Unité Sanitaire qui parle peu ou pas du tout le français et qui visite les écoles locales où les élèves sont surtout francophones.

Dans le domaine de l'éducation, il existe quelque 28 écoles françaises qui fournissent un enseignement français à 6,923 élèves au niveau élémentaire. Il existe aussi 3 écoles secondaires françaises au service de 1,924 élèves et 3 écoles mixtes enseignant 2,400 élèves. En plus d'avoir accès à une éducation spéciale en française, les élèves auront aussi besoin de programmes d'éducation spéciale en français. La province a fourni environ $900,000 pour aider 153 élèves au niveau élémentaire et 258 élèves au niveau secondaire qui ont besoin de programmes d'instruction.

Ces programmes sont de bons exemples du genre d'initiatives entreprises par le gouvernement de l'Ontario pour aider les francophones dans leur milieu. Une importance a été accordée dans les domaines où les gens viennent en contact directement avec les agences du gouvernement. En plus de fournir des services en français, le gouvernement de l'Ontario s'est engagé à assurer aux francophones l'accès au plus haut calibre de l'éducation dans leur propre langue.

Pour répondre au mandat du gouvernement envers les francophones, des efforts considérables ont été faits depuis 1971. Cependant, je ne prétends pas que tout est parfait parce que ce n'est pas le cas. Je ne crois pas que comme gouvernement, nous pouvons nous permettre de nous asseoir sur nos lauriers, et demeurer satisfaits de ce que nous avons accompli au cours des récentes années. Nous devons continuer nos efforts pour nous assurer que les services sont augmentés dans les régions où existe une population francophone importante, et où un vrai besoin existe.

La population Canadienne Française a fait une contribution très importante à l'histoire et au développement de l'Ontario. Elle continuera à le faire et nous, comme gouvernement, pouvons encourager sa contribution en nous assurant que ce groupe a accès aux services dont il a besoin, et qu'il a les moyens pour bien instruire ses enfants. Nous avons fait un grand pas dans ce domaine et je sais que nous demeurons engagés à continuer d'agir ainsi, par l'entremise de politiques et de programmes qui subviendront aux besoins fondamentaux des francophones dans tout l'Ontario.

I believe that the speech from the throne represents a continuation of the responsible approach taken to provide the people of Ontario with good, effective government. I would also point out to the members of the Liberal Party that the next time they visit my riding, I will gladly take them around and show them some of the accomplishments that have evolved since I was first elected to the Legislature.

Since I first arrived here in 1967, I have always regarded my responsibility to my constituents as my foremost concern. As members of this House, we all share a common commitment to improving the quality of life and the wellbeing of our constituents. We all share, for instance, a common concern for the elderly within our communities. In Prescott and Russell, we have approximately 6,500 senior citizens. Since my first election to this House, I have endeavoured to improve the level of service available to them and, with the support of my colleagues in cabinet, I believe that we have improved the level of service within the united counties of Prescott and Russell very much.

Last year, we opened a new facility for the elderly in Hawkesbury, and this government provided more than $2,000,000 towards the construction costs. We have also assisted in establishing the Centre d'Accueil Roger Seguin in Clarence Creek, which provides some 110 beds for the elderly.

I would also point out that Prescott and Russell enjoys a bed rate per 1,000 senior citizens that is 13.3 per cent higher than the provincial average for nursing home beds. This is not a bad record for a nice little guy—which is the manner in which I was referred to by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) when he was in my riding. This is not a bad record for a nice little guy who is supposed to be a problem.

Since 1967, a consistent effort has been made to assist small municipalities to improve their water and sewage systems. I could point to many examples of this throughout my riding. Casselman and St. Isidore de Prescott are only a few of the municipalities being assisted by this government to improve the quality of their water and sewage treatment facilities. For instance, there is a $7,000,000 sewage and water treatment project under construction in Rockland.

As another example, I had the pleasure of participating in the opening of the Casselman water treatment and distribution system last summer. This project consists of a 350,000-gallon elevated water storage tank and approximately 22,700 feet of water main. A grant was provided by the Ontario government to assist in the construction costs. This grant was in excess of $1,600,000. This government also provided 75 per cent, or $1,700,000, to assist the village of Casselman with its water pollution control facilities.

I could go on and mention many other projects. Most of the small communities in my riding now have water projects and sewage projects under construction or being looked at. In doing so, we are effectively meeting the needs of the people of Ontario.

Another program that has greatly assisted the residents of eastern Ontario, as well as most other parts of the province, has been the Ontario Home Renewal Program. Since 1974, more than 20,000 residents have been assisted by this program. In my own riding, many people have been able to improve their homes, upgrade their heating, insulation and plumbing. Last year, well over $250,000 was provided to municipalities in Prescott and Russell to be allocated to those who qualified under this program.

Since 1967, since I was elected to this House, we have made considerable progress in improving our roads throughout the united counties of Prescott and Russell. In the united counties, for instance, 83.3 per cent of our county roads have been paved or resurfaced since 1969. Only 52 miles of road remain as gravel roads.

Mr. Wildman: We've got highways in my riding like that.

Mr. Belanger: This is only one example of the improvements that have been made to the transportation system throughout the united counties.

The proposed extension of the Queensway east to Orleans will greatly assist the flow of traffic through this area for all those commuting in from Cumberland, from Rockland, from Plantagenet or Alfred.

Mr. Wildman: What about bridges?

Mr. Belanger: This year, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications will provide municipalities in my riding with $6,100,000 in grants to assist in the funding of both capital construction and repair work on those roads which fall under municipal rather than county jurisdiction.

Since I was first elected, some 20 new industries have recognized the great potential that exists in Prescott and Russell and have established in communities throughout the riding. Several of these were assisted by the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation which, in the past year and a half, has provided about $1,300,000 in loans. I had the pleasure of supporting these applications for assistance and their success will mean many new jobs in our area.

I mention these points not because I am interested in praise or because I want the credit for having accomplished these things.

Mr. Wildman: Don't worry, we like you.

Mr. Belanger: I believe that these things come about as a result of the process of good government and effective representation. This is the reason I am standing here in support today of the speech from the throne.

I recognize that there are many challenges facing the people of Ontario and I don't underestimate the magnitude of these challenges. I do believe the speech from the throne does provide us with a realistic and workable approach to the many challenges that lie before us in the economic and social spheres.

I look forward to seeing these transformed into policies and programs that are truly reflective of the needs of the people of Ontario. In doing so, we will continue to provide the people of Ontario with the type of good, responsive government that this government has always provided.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to have participated in the debate on the speech from the throne.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Viva Belanger.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I too welcome the opportunity to participate in the throne speech debate, but before launching my brief remarks I would like to pay tribute to the Speaker for his continuing effort to conduct the business of this House in a very fair but most firm manner. I hope, sir, that you will convey my thoughts to the Speaker.

I would like to commend the former speaker, the member for Prescott and Russell, for the speech he made. I haven't had much occasion to hear him in this Legislature, not that he hasn't spoken before on many matters, but it may have been the case that I just wasn't present to hear him. He did have some very thought-provoking remarks.

I only wish I had the time—and I don't because my whip is cracking down on us saying that we have to end our remarks in a period of about 20 minutes so the rest of the speakers can contribute to the debate—to comment on the milk industry in Ontario.

Mr. Worton: I will make an exception. Take another five minutes.

Mr. Riddell: Suffice it to say at this time that the Tory government has been in power for something like 35 years and surely the Tory government has had some role to play in the establishment of the marketing boards, including the milk marketing board. Certainly, the Milk Act was enacted by this government so if anyone is to blame for some of the inadequacies in the milk marketing system in Ontario, I would think the present government has to share some of the blame.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's right. You're right. Ottawa.

Mr. Riddell: After listening to the member for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry and also the member for Prescott and Russell, I am somewhat alarmed that they are placing much of the blame for the closing down of cheese factories and some other inadequacies in the milk marketing system on the marketing board.

[4:30]

I would like to spend an hour to talk about marketing boards and the tremendous impact they have had on the agricultural industry, the beneficial effects they've had and the benefits the farmers have derived from these marketing boards. I'm getting a little sick of listening to people condemning marketing boards for high food prices. I trust that indirectly this is maybe what the member for Prescott and Russell was getting at.

Mr. Gaunt: This government is always looking for excuses; always looking for a scapegoat.

Mr. Riddell: I'll have more to say about marketing boards when I get into the Agriculture estimates. For the time being I want to comment briefly on the foreign ownership of land in Ontario, farm machinery legislation, mention a little bit about farm incomes and input prices, then I am going to end up with a very great concern that exists in my riding at the present time, and that's the present proposal of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) to reduce hospital beds across Ontario.

Getting to my first topic, foreign ownership of land, I, like the former speaker, do not get up in question period for no other purpose than to get public exposure. I feed very little material back home, but when I have something to say in this Legislature I say it with all the sincerity that I can put into any questions or any comments that I make.

Back last session I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I asked him if he was aware of the great concern that has been expressed over recent purchases of blocks of agricultural land throughout Ontario, and more particularly in such counties as Bruce, Huron, Kent and Lambton, by foreign interests. I asked the minister if he could tell us how widespread this practice was.

He gets up and he talks about how many of these people are now farming the land and how it's been good for our own farmers because this land now is available to the young people to be able to rent and this way they can get started farming. That's all right if these foreigners are coming over and competing with our farmers by buying and actually farming the land. But that is not what is happening. What appears to be a new flurry of Ontario land purchases by non-Canadians has sparked intense concern among some farmers and certainly county federations of agriculture.

This time the purchases seem to be concentrated, as I've already indicated, in southwestern Ontario. However, this has been a continuous concern for at least five years, with periods of more intense buying activity from time to time.

Few farmers feel comfortable in arguing that non-nationals should be prohibited absolutely from owning Canadian real estate or farm land. What causes worry is that large amounts of foreign investments, frequently concentrated in sizeable blocks of holdings, raise questions about future control of Canadian resources and communities.

I happened to be travelling with a colleague of mine this morning, coming up from a meeting we attended last night, and he tells me that he heard rumours to the effect that German money was coming into his part of the riding to purchase blocks of land consisting of 1,000 acres. There were two main sources of German money that were trying to procure this land.

This isn't a case of where the German people are coming over here to farm the land, to compete with our own farmers; it's a case of their money coming over. It's understandable why it's coming over; they feel that Canada is a safe place in which to invest. When I hear those anti-Trudeau, anti-federal Liberal people get up and spell doom and gloom for this country I have to wonder what they're talking about, when we see Japanese money, German money, Belgian money and Italian money all coming over. Where? No place but in Canada. Why? Because they feel Canada is a safe place in which to invest. Where is all the doom and gloom? I hope this message gets out to the people prior to the election coming up on May 22, because I have to ask the question, "What country, my friend, would you sooner live in at the present time?"

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The buck is cheap, that's why it comes. Our buck is so low. It's because our dollar is so low, you know that Jack. They wouldn't come here if our buck was 100 cents to the dollar.

Mr. Gaunt: Joe Clark the doomsayer.

Mr. McKessock: Switch to French now, Jack.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: A Canadian Liberal or an Ontario Liberal.

Mr. Gaunt: By the time the next election comes along it will be banned here.

Mr. Riddell: I mentioned this purchasing of sizeable blocks of land raises questions about future control of Canadian resources and communities. Let me tell you that if Rene Levesque's direction for Quebec is a threat to national unity, I would say the second greatest threat is—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Trudeau.

Mr. Riddell: —the foreign investment into our resources and into our industries and into our businesses. I think we've got to, somehow, bring a stop to some of this. It's not only affecting our resources, the control of our resources—

Ms. Gigantes: What do you suggest?

Mr. Riddell: —but is also having an effect, and will continue to have an effect, on our communities.

Mr. Ruston: Joe doesn't like Bill.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Joe is looking for him right now.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Huron-Middlesex has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: I do not follow you. A few minutes ago you were welcoming all these Japanese and German moneys. Now you're saying you don't.

Mr. Riddell: No, I don't think I ever said we welcomed it. I indicated these people feel there is a future in Canada—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You've got different speechwriters there, Jack. Get your speechwriters together.

Mr. Riddell: —that's why they're investing their money, but I think we have to be very careful allowing this to continue because we're going to lose our resources. There is no longer going to be Canadian resources.

Mr. Wildman: What you want to prove is there's no future in Canada.

Mr. Riddell: We're certainly going to be losing our communities. Enough nonresident foreign ownership in any one area can affect the whole social structure of a community. In other words, I can see the farm houses and the farm buildings just being left to deteriorate. I can see a decreased population for usage of schools and hospitals.

Mr. Watson: That might solve our problem.

Mr. Riddell: There will no longer be the buying support for the local businesses and there certainly will be a lack of support for a project such as some of these new community arenas that have been established ever since the Wintario grants came into being.

Mr. Haggerty: Or Minaki Lodge, for example; you could buy that.

Mr. Riddell: Naturally, such purchases by outsiders push up land prices for local farmers wishing to buy. Local residents simply cannot compete with foreign capital under the present economic circumstances. The devalued dollar and lowered interest rates offered in other countries put Ontario buyers at a distinct disadvantage. Foreign interests can make money on their investment now, but should this situation escalate, our agricultural industry could become foreign-controlled. We could end up by growing crops totally unsuited to our domestic needs but entirely suitable to foreign interests for their own export purposes, a well known problem which has existed and aggravated conditions in third world countries.

Mr. Watson: Oh, Jack, come on.

Mr. Riddell: In other words, Mr. Speaker, if our lands fall into the ownership of foreign investment, then there is nothing saying that they won't, for export purposes, for purposes of making the most income, turn some of our land into, say growing coffee rather than corn.

Mr. Wildman: Coffee?

Mr. Riddell: Where is that going to meet the domestic need for a stable diet?

Mr. Watson: Jack, you can't grow coffee where there's frost.

Mr. Wildman: Do you feel the same way about mining, Jack?

Mr. Riddell: Also, much of the concern stems from the lack of knowledge about the extent of foreign ownership in an area, the source and nature of such large amounts of ready cash, the long-term intent of foreign purchasers regarding the use of the land and the lack of any effective control over such purchases. The Ontario government seems to have little exact knowledge about this phenomena as of the last five years. Its latest systematic survey of the problem was in 1973 by the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism.

It is interesting that the present Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) happened to be one of the members on that committee. I am going to read a portion of the report that was handed down by that committee.

"The committee has reached a similar determination in respect of private ownership of agricultural lands. Foreign ownership of land under agricultural use is dealt with more fully in the chapter on commercial and corporate real estate ownership. The committee notes again the very great difficulty of distinguishing between property which may be under recreational as distinct from agricultural use, particularly in view of the current practice of converting agricultural land to recreational uses.

"The committee accordingly favours the extension of its previous recommendations to include agricultural land. In any case, the committee has concluded that apart from these difficulties, future acquisitions of land by individuals, including agricultural land, and the opportunity to farm in Ontario should be restricted to Canadian citizens and landed immigrants resident in Canada."

There is a little star after that and, when I look down at the bottom of the page, I see that it states: "Mr. Newman dissents from these recommendations."

I am beginning to think I am talking in a wilderness when I ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food if he will not endeavour to find out how extensive the foreign investment in our land is. I understand that he is not entirely interested. He thinks the more foreign money that comes in, the better. Maybe we would be better dealing with another minister rather than with the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

As it then appeared that only about one per cent of Ontario real estate was owned by non-nationals, the government did not see fit to monitor the trend. However, because of general knowledge about purchasing of Ontario real estate, including farms, in 1974 the government did amend the Land Transfer Tax Act to increase the tax on purchases of land by nonresidents of Canada to 20 per cent of the purchase price. In fact, this tax is easily dodged, as a local agent for the purchaser can register as an Ontario company. Registration can be accomplished without listing foreign-based principals, and the purchase is registered as to a domestic company.

I would just like to say that some of the ministers of agriculture in other provinces have taken more interest in this matter than has our Minister of Agriculture and Food. Prince Edward Island and the three Prairie provinces have each taken legislative measures to restrict ownership of farm land by non-Canadian residents. I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and tell you what Prince Edward Island has done, what Manitoba has done, what Alberta has done and what Saskatchewan has done but, in the interests of time, I will not delve into that. However, I will probably bring it up when we debate the estimates of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

I want to read a resolution that was passed at the last annual convention of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the organization that represents a great number of farmers in Ontario as well as a number of boards and other organizations.

"Whereas other provinces have found it necessary to regulate ownership of farm land by non-nationals, therefore be it resolved that the Ontario Federation of Agriculture requests the provincial government to immediately undertake a survey of current foreign ownership of rural lands in Ontario and monitor all new land transfers to private or corporate foreign ownership, and that this study be classed as public information; and, further, be it resolved that this study include an inventory of all farm land holdings of non-farm Canadian corporations; and, further, be it resolved that, if necessary, it regulate ownership by non-farm Canadian corporations and non-nationals."

They have presented briefs to the Minister of Agriculture and Food, but they seem to draw the same blanks I do when asking if the minister will not look into it and see how much of this foreign investment has gone on and is going on at present.

[4:45]

As I understand it, the federation is starting to conduct its own study. I do not think that should be necessary. With all the help the Minister of Agriculture and Food has to do this kind of work, he sent me a letter back, after I wrote him and asked, "Would you give me a printout on Kent and Huron counties?"

Mr. Gaunt: A lot of this is going on in Kent.

Mr. Watson: Oh, yeah, a little bit.

Mr. Riddell: He said, "In 1976 my ministry looked into allegations of foreign ownership in Kent county. It turned out that 6,000 acres, or 10 per cent of the land, were owned by people living outside Canada. Some of these were, no doubt, Canadians living abroad. At the moment, in answer to renewed interest in this matter, we are updating these figures for Kent county and compiling data for Huron county as well." Big deal!

Hon. Mr. Welch: How many acres, Jack?

Mr. Riddell: Two counties in Ontario and he is going to undertake a study to see how much foreign investment there is. I think my friend opposite will find that much more than 6,000 acres have fallen under foreign ownership.

Mr. Watson: I'll bet it's not near that.

Mr. Riddell: I had better leave that subject, although we could carry on.

Mr. Laughren: Talk about cheese factories.

Mr. Watson: There are 6,000 acres in Kent county.

Mr. Riddell: The member for Prescott and Russell alluded to the great things mentioned in the throne speech pertaining to the agricultural industry. Well, he must have received a different throne speech than I did because there are exactly two paragraphs here. One deals with the foodland guidelines policy of the ministry. The other is a little paragraph which says special attention will be given to the need to ensure that farmers are protected by minimum farm machinery warranties and contract standards.

I was hoping the minister would, some time after the throne speech, come into the House and indicate what he had in mind as far as farm machinery warranties and contract standards were concerned.

Mr. Wildman: He needs to bring in legislation.

Mr. Riddell: We didn't hear anything. So I had to pick up a speech he made to some organization out in the country—I think it had to do with farm safety. So, in reading the speech, I find the Ministry of Agriculture and Food has decided to give manufacturers the opportunity to introduce a voluntary program of standard purchase contracts, minimum warranties and parts service.

"The Ontario Farm Machinery Board will be reconstituted to provide broader representation for both farmers and industry. I shall be initiating discussions with the industry in the near future, with a view to ensuring industry's participation in this program in order to protect the interests of all concerned."

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, Ontario farmers have reservations about the government's recently announced program to help farmers with farm machinery problems. I am encouraged that the government has finally recognized that the problem exists, but the suggested program falls short of legislation provided farmers in other provinces.

As a first step, the government is proposing a restructuring of the Ontario Farm Machinery Board. This move is welcomed and it is hoped that it will improve the effectiveness of the board's activities. Without legislated powers, however, the board will be like a toothless tiger in trying to get satisfactory service for farmers.

I am more cynical about the government's proposal that manufacturers, distributors and dealers develop a voluntary code of practice. Farmers have little faith that a voluntary code would make the industry provide the parts, service and warranties every consumer should have the right to expect.

Business today isn't done by word of mouth or on faith that some other institution will do the job. So how can farmers expect manufacturers to live up to any code of practice?

One of my colleagues got a call from a dealer not too long ago who said: "If you people are going to push for this farm machinery warranty and contract standards, or even farm machinery legislation, it means farm machinery is going to go way up in price."

To my way of thinking that's an admission that the manufacturer is not turning out a superior product. If he is going to have to live up to some kind of farm equipment warranty, all of a sudden he'll begin to think maybe he should make a tractor or a combine capable of withstanding all the rigorous functions it must perform.

Mr. Watson: What is the difference in the tractors here and in the other provinces? They are the same tractors you were just blowing up a few minutes ago.

Mr. Riddell: You know, it's rather ironic—

Mr. Laughren: It certainly is.

Mr. Riddell: —that farmers have more protection when they buy a $400 refrigerator than when they buy a $40,000 tractor or a $60,000 combine.

Mr. Worton: How does that grab you?

Mr. Riddell: Yet the machinery is their livelihood. If it wasn't for the machinery the farmer wouldn't get his crops planted, he wouldn't get his crops harvested, he wouldn't make an income and he would end up going bankrupt.

Mr. Watson: And you and I wouldn't have jobs.

Mr. Riddell: Yet he can't get his government to realize that maybe it was time that we introduced some farm machinery legislation. Machinery problems are a major concern for Ontario farmers. A breakdown through faulty repairs or a lack of parts means disaster for an individual if these happen at a critical time.

The problem is primarily with the manufacturers and distributors, not the dealers. I really feel that the dealers are endeavouring to do a job, but I think the dealers probably have as much problems with the manufacturers and the distributors as do the farmers. If we do introduce farm machinery legislation it won't be so much to get at the dealer as it will to make the manufacturer and the distributor of the equipment more responsible.

I cannot and I do not accept the announcement by the Minister of Agriculture and Food as a meaningful answer to the machinery problems of farmers. Surely the minister will follow the example of his counterparts in other provinces and bring in legislation so at least the farmer knows that he has some kind of protection, knows that if his machinery breaks down the company is going to have to stand behind it, knows that if he breaks down on a Saturday he's going to be able to go in and get his part, rather than shut down for the entire weekend only to have it rain or something else happen and the crop lie in the field beyond the point where it's even worth harvesting. I think that we've got to take a look at this farm machinery legislation a little more closely.

I want to touch briefly on farm incomes and input prices. As at the end of 1977, farm incomes in Ontario had declined for two years in a row. The 1978 net farm incomes were predicted to decline even further, but this did not happen. Instead, farm incomes improved somewhat. Given an 18 per cent increase in farm cash receipts and an 11.4 per cent increase in farm operating and depreciation and expenses, it is reasonable to expect an increase of realized farm net incomes in 1978 slightly under 30 per cent as compared with 1977. This sounds very good, but I think it important that we put the farm income picture in its proper perspective. I would have liked to have spent considerable time talking about the input costs that the farmers are going to be faced with, dealing with it item by item, but I won't do it.

Mr. Watson: Who wanted it?

Mr. Riddell: I'll try to condense my remarks in connection with the input costs. I do want to say that recent statistics have indicated that farmers may expect to pay 10 to 35 per cent more for fertilizer, seed, machinery and farm labour. There might also be a shortage in many products. All of this could quickly erode any advantages made in agriculture in recent years with our better production technique and higher output. The big problem could be in petroleum products. Price increases in diesel and gas are expected and there could be serious shortages. Allocation has already been declared in some areas of the United States.

Estimates indicate increases in fertilizer costs could range from 15 to 20 per cent. In fact, increases of 30 per cent over last year could be anticipated for potash because of the low supply and the transportation problems.

Mr. Watson: I thought the NDP had all kinds of potash.

Mr. Riddell: Small seeds such as alfalfa, clover and timothy are going to be expensive and in short supply because of the low yields of last year and because European dealers have bought up much of the supply. Chemical costs are expected to increase by 15 to 20 per cent. Coarse grain, such as oats and barley, are the only products where the price might drop slightly. General farm supplies will increase by 10 to 35 per cent, depending on whether they are from Canada, the United States, Europe or Asia. The main reason for the rise is the devalued Canadian dollar.

The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) in Ontario, and Ontario farmers, must be very conscious that we are in the spotlight as consumers grope for someone to blame for the so-called high food prices. We must give them a true picture of our problem. At the same time, farmers must be careful not to rest on their laurels as honest, hard-working, highly productive producers. They must strive for even greater output, expanded markets, increased and improved research and new managerial techniques. With this approach, farmers should be able to gain the support of consumers in their attempt to obtain the proper legislation to enable farmers to produce more efficiently and economically.

Farmers must look for initiative and resourcefulness from their own people, but they should also expect more initiative and commitment from the provincial Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Watson: You were doing too good until you came to that point.

Mr. Riddell: It is unbelievable that only one and one half per cent of the total provincial budget is devoted to the agricultural industry, Ontario's largest primary industry, which makes a major contribution to job creation and has a significant multiplier effect throughout the economy. We call that a commitment from the Minister of Agriculture and Food; one and a half per cent of the total provincial budget?

Hon. Mr. McCague: What do you want?

Mr. Riddell: Drop in on the estimates and we will tell the minister what we want.

Hon. Mr. McCague: You were quoting the minister there at the early part, weren't you?

Mr. Gaunt: Five per cent will be fine. Farmers represent five per cent of the population and should have five per cent of the provincial budget.

Mr. Riddell: Let me go on with my remarks by continuing where I left off during the emergency debate which was called by the leader of the third party on the Minister of Health's (Mr. Timbrell) hospital bed reduction program and some of his other proposals.

I indicated when I spoke in the emergency debate that the hospital bed reductions were a very real concern to the people in the riding which I represent. Coupled with the determination of the Ministry of Health to impose uniform restrictions across the province and to make no exceptions, these are acute concerns, acute needs, to which the people of Huron are reacting in a normal and predictable way.

I indicated when I spoke on Monday that I was deluged with letters from the people in my riding, many of which were coming from senior citizens who were terrified of becoming sick and immobile, with no place to go and no one to take care of them. Some of these senior citizens suggested in their letters it appeared to them that society, due to the action of this government, was moving closer and closer to legislation that would permit euthanasia. Men and women growing old in Huron county after a life of struggle and care are actually living in fear that they will be reduced to a little more than bothersome burdens without dignity or respect.

These are pretty harsh words and I know this government has no intention of moving in that direction; but when you read that type of thing in numerous letters that are coming into my office, you can understand the fear that these senior citizens have. They can't for the life of them understand why it is after all these years of making a contribution in building up these hospitals they find as they go to enjoy their retiring years, they are at the stage where they are going to encounter more ill health, and that being the case they won't have a hospital bed to move into. I detect all kinds of sincerity in the letters they are writing and I really think it is a sad commentary, indeed, that we have to look for ways of cutting the provincial budget by actually cutting into the excellent health care program our people have come to enjoy over the years.

[5:00]

When I was making my comments I talked about the fact that you cannot formulate health care, Mr. Speaker; you can't build a health-care system on a formula and expect to apply that formula on a uniform basis across the whole province. My colleague from Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) has indicated why that can't be done. We have distances, we have inclement weather, we have many things to contend with out in the rural parts of Ontario that they don't have in the urban areas. Why in the world should rural Ontario have to pay for the mistakes that were made by this government in earlier years, in the golden 1960s, when there was all kinds of money?

When we have that kind of an economy it is not hard for a government to spend money, and that is exactly what they did. They put up hospitals across the province that are now white elephants—and I could name some of these hospitals in the large urban centres—but who paid for them? Those people out in the rural areas who have built up the small hospitals, and have come to rely on these hospitals.

Now we have to accept the bed reduction on the same basis as they do in the urban centres and some of these urban centres are smiling because they are overbedded, but we, in Huron county, cut the fat to the bone. Why? Because the former Minister of Health marched into the county and closed down the most modern psychiatric hospital that existed in Ontario, or in Canada, for that matter. He closed it down and he attempted to close down the Clinton Hospital. He struck fear into the people of Huron county—the hospital boards, the concerned citizens—so they all cut the fat right to the bone, operating just as efficiently as they can possibly operate.

Now what are they told? The Alexandra Marine and General Hospital has been told that it has to cut its active treatment beds from 78 down to 37. That is over a 50 per cent cut.

If one of our senior citizens becomes sick, the ambulance takes him into the Alexandra Marine and General Hospital only to be told, "No beds." That patient is taken on to Clinton; same story, no beds. On to Seaforth, down to Exeter; same story, no beds. So they take him into London only to find that London has something like 476 active treatment beds that it is going to be losing. They take him into London and it's the same story, "I am sorry, no bed for you." The sick patient is in the ambulance. What do you do, Mr. Speaker? Do you call the priest to come and administer last rites, and tell the patient, "Well, that's the best we can do. No bed for you"? Maybe it sounds like an exaggeration, but I tell you these people in rural Ontario are mighty concerned about what is happening.

The minister talks about applying his formula on a referral population basis. In Huron county it is our contention that he is not using the proper figures for his referral population, because we have a great influx of tourists in the summertime, and I hope to elaborate on that a little later.

In a question which I posed in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, I expressed the concern that the ministry has not taken into account the fact that Goderich is a tourist town and, as such, has an increased population in summer months. I have seen figures which would substantiate a claim that the summer population in the area swells by 9,311 persons, including Goderich and surrounding townships and villages. Based on three persons per visiting car, 38,929 persons had called in to the Goderich tourist booth last summer. While we know that all these people do not require hospital care, the fact remains that the patient load at Alexandra Marine and General Hospital does increase during the summer months and some active treatment hospital beds are required.

In responding to my question, the minister indicated that Goderich's tourist population was taken into consideration and facts are facts, says the minister. Goderich does not qualify for one extra active treatment bed because of the increased number of people in the area. That's it. Just as plain as that. You don't qualify for any more active treatment beds, despite the fact that you do have these tourists coming into the area.

There is a formula to determine how many hospital beds are required for tourist populations. It is quite simple, really. In 1977, a hospital must have had one out-of-the-area patient each day for 365 days to qualify for one additional bed. Goderich does not meet that criterion and thus, no additional bed.

Let me be quick to point out that there is a big difference between rural hospitals and urban hospitals. We have distances to contend with. We have inclement weather to contend with. We have referrals from a much broader base than do urban hospitals.

And we do have mines in the rural areas; I am talking about the salt mines in Goderich. There was a bit of a disaster there not too long ago. It was fortunate that more people were not hurt. But what happens if there is a mine disaster? What are they going to do with those people? There are no beds in the hospital for them.

The minister did not take this into consideration when he came up with this beautiful formula: 3.5 beds per thousand referral population. He did not go out into these areas and see that we do have some mines where there could well be a mine disaster.

Mr. Lawlor: Timbrell is going to bring the government down all by himself.

Mr. Riddell: Did the ministry take that into consideration? I cannot stress enough that you can't formulate health care, particularly in a rural setting. The formula is rigid and no rigid formula can work province-wide when you are dealing with such a personal thing as health services, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laughren: They are in trouble on this one.

Mr. Riddell: It seems to me that, when the government introduced universal health care it made a commitment to the people; that the people had a right to expect quality care.

Interjections.

Mr. Riddell: It would appear to me that that commitment has gone the way of a number of other government commitments. The one which comes to my mind is the Edmonton commitment, but that is another matter. We won't get into that. But this government is great for making commitments and then backing away from them. If somebody can tell me why they have been able to stay in power as long as they have, I would certainly like an explanation.

Mr. Laughren: They buy it.

Mr. Watson: Good government, Jack.

Mr. Riddell: I tell you, your days are numbered.

Mr. Villeneuve: I heard that 20 years ago.

Mr. Riddell: It is very difficult for me to understand, in the light of the fact that Ontario is the province with the second lowest number of acute care beds in Canada and a rich province as well, why we must go to the bottom of the list for health care. I cannot understand it; the people of Ontario cannot understand it.

Mr. Laughren: Right on.

Mr. Lane: They understand it very well.

Mr. Riddell: They are going to be expressing their opinions to those people opposite whenever their boss decides to pull the plug.

Mr. Laughren: No. Whenever the Liberals support a no-confidence motion.

Mr. Riddell: The people in Goderich and surrounding areas are concerned enough about the plight of their hospital that they have committed financial support to keep the hospital beds open. However, in response to another question which I posed in the Legislature, the minister indicated he would not commit community hospitals to use alternative methods of financing for operating expenses.

In responding to my question, the minister indicated he was bent on providing uniform health care across the province. He felt wealthy areas would unfairly be able to offer a better standard of health care than less affluent areas. What is more, he indicated that he doubted if communities could continue to raise funds, year after year, to operate their hospitals.

Well, if we go back in history, that is how these hospitals were built. Many of the senior citizens who are presently living in fear of there not being hospital beds available when they require them were the very ones who built the hospitals in the first place. When they start to destroy local initiative, it is going to cost the government a heck of a lot more money, and that is for certain.

Mr. Laughren: It costs the people money, too.

Mr. Riddell: The senior citizens' worry is not the only one. A big concern is for long-term patients. Some are elderly men and women for whom a nursing home is the best answer. Some are younger people with permanent disabilities. Some are sick people with illnesses that will keep them confined for months on end. These are the patients that occupy the thoughts of many doctors and hospital board members.

Where will those people go? There are no hospital beds. For those who can be transferred to nursing homes, there is simply no place available in Goderich at the present time. One of the doctors said he recently put one patient on a waiting list that had 65 names on it; so his patient happens to be the 66th waiting for a nursing home bed. Obviously the hospital would have to care for these people—maybe in active treatment beds—until the time comes that they can be moved to another health-care facility. Some might qualify for home care for chronic patients, but this service is not in place in Huron county either. The avenue provides no solution then for Alexandra Marine and General Hospital.

Another concern that is just as worrisome are the men and women in nursing homes in psychiatric wards who might have to be transferred to hospitals for active care. Where does the hospital put them? Since the closing of the Goderich Psychiatric Hospital and a residual psychiatric unit of 20 beds left in its place—this unit currently is located at the Bluewater Centre for the Developmentally Handicapped—this is a special situation. Patients from all over Huron county are referred there; if they need active hospital treatment, they are moved to Alexandra Marine and General Hospital. It is estimated that one or two beds at Alexandra Marine and General are often in use for just such patients.

This is something the Minister of Health did not take into consideration either; the fact that we have a little residual unit at the former Goderich Psychiatric Hospital and people are coming in from all over Huron and surrounding areas to that little residual unit. If they happen to take sick and require active treatment beds, where do they go?

Let me just remind you, Mr. Speaker, that 38 psychogeriatric beds were closed when the Goderich Psychiatric Hospital was closed two years ago. Certainly this has to affect the situation I have just alluded to. There seems to be little doubt that 15 chronic beds just are not enough for the Alexandra Marine and General Hospital. A more realistic number would be 25, and the board is working extremely hard to document the need for these beds in this area.

As a matter of fact, we have a very excellent delegation coming in from Goderich to meet with the Minister of Health tomorrow afternoon. The spokesman for that delegation will be none other than a renowned lawyer by the name of Jim Donnelly, whom I brought with me when the former Minister of Health tried to close down the Clinton Hospital. He was the spokesman. By the time he was done, the then minister had slumped down in his seat and had turned the colour of chalk. I know for a fact that, after we walked out of his office, he turned to his deputy minister, who I think was Backley at that time—a guy who came out from England; and I have always maintained—

Hon. Mr. McCague: Is there anything the matter with that?

Mr. Riddell: No. Other than the fact that some of these guys ruined the system in England, and then they come over here and endeavour to do the same darned thing.

I do know that, after we left his office, the minister turned to his deputy and said, "Are you sure we're doing the right thing?" In other words, after Donnelly was finished, the Minister of Health began to have some doubts.

Statistics show that Huron county has an unusually high percentage of elderly citizens—13 per cent—compared with the provincial average of 8.6 per cent. In fact, the ministry does recognize the fact and has built a weighting factor into the formula to adjust Huron's chronic beds to suit the needs. But there are just not enough nursing home beds in the area, and the government really is not compensating the community in that sense.

It is rather ironical that a recent application for more nursing home beds in Goderich was turned down by the ministry people in Toronto. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker? They applied for more nursing home beds; they were turned down and told, "We're going to reduce your active treatment beds in the hospital regardless of the fact that you don't have nursing home beds or chronic-care beds or anything else."

I just cannot understand the conscience of the Minister of Health.

[5:15]

Mr. Haggerty: We're number one, eh Andy?

Mr. Riddell: There are other things that are concerning doctors and hospital board members about the 3.5 beds per thousand referral population: Things like the knowledge that 450 beds have been cut in London Hospital and will undoubtedly result in long waits for Huron county people who are applying for admittance in the city.

Things like having to make interim provision at Alexandra Marine and General Hospital for certain patients waiting to be admitted to other referral centres.

Things like having to turn down referrals back from those centres of patients who want to recuperate at home, closer to their families, but for whom there are no empty beds.

Things like realizing if the local hospital can't accept those referrals it is only creating more of a backlog in the city hospital and longer waiting lists for Huron county patients.

Things like knowing patients are paying insurance premiums for semi-private accommodation in hospital and that there will be no such luxury at Alexandra Marine and General Hospital as a choice of bed and room.

Things like having to turn people away or putting them in holding areas or in the hallways or in improper, inappropriate mixing situations that run the risk of new dangers of infection for patients. Upsetting things, degrading things, frightening things.

In Goderich the doctors, the hospital board members, the citizenry have been very vocal about their fears and their frustrations. They have been working hard and furiously to get the answers they need to keep the Alexandra Marine and General Hospital functioning safely and adequately.

They have called on the people of the community to think about the situation and to make their feelings known to government officials and their local members. And that is the reason why I have received, as has the Premier, and as has the Minister of Health, many heart-rending letters.

It isn't difficult to understand that senior citizens will be the most anxious about the implications of the ministry's actions. Senior citizens are naturally fearful about illness and old age; they too often go hand-in-hand. And where will they go? Who will take care of them?

I'm alarmed that the people throughout the rest of the province have been surprisingly mute about the bed cutbacks, which we all know had very little to do with health care and a great deal to do with budget problems. It is a sad commentary on the state of Ontario finances.

Maybe some of the senior citizens who have been writing to the Premier and to the minister and to me are more perceptive than this province would like to think. Maybe, just maybe, euthanasia would ease the financial crisis for the Ministry of Health.

Mr. Watson: I'm surprised at you saying something like that.

Mr. Riddell: Who knows? Who knows when that very suggestion would be made by someone?

I'm going to quit now, but I could go on all afternoon about this health care situation and the ridiculous policies that have been brought forth by the Minister of Health. I only hope that he gives a fair hearing to both the Wingham people and the Goderich people tomorrow afternoon in his office. And I hope there can be a solution found to the very real problem which these people are facing and will face if the minister doesn't change his attitude.

Mr. Watson: He gives you 20 minutes, so the member for Nickel Belt has lots of time.

Mr. Laughren: I shall make a very serious attempt to complete before the supper hour.

The throne speech we heard a short time ago was a disappointing one for many of us. I know opposition members are seldom excited and supportive of a throne speech or the policies therein. But I thought this one was a chance for the government to indicate some new directions they were going to take and put a few specifics into the speech—which, of course, they failed to do. They did nothing really except to offer a few reassurances.

For example, at a time when we've got real problems with our medicare system it would have been nice to have seen the Minister of Health insert in the speech from the throne a very serious commitment to maintaining our health care system. There was no such serious commitment in the throne speech.

The government is floundering, and it's responding in a very ad hoc manner, and in such a way that it doesn't seem to have any direction at all. It's responding to problems as they arise—whether it's medicare, whether it's unemployment or whether it's compensation—without providing any new direction, either social or economic. That's a sad comment; perhaps a natural one for a government that's been in power so long.

I'd like to make a few comments on what we anticipate in this party in the budget which is going to come down next Tuesday night, April 10. We cannot expect the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) to provide us with any details at this point, but I do think he should know what things we shall be looking for in that budget.

Mr. Haggerty: It should be more positive, that's for sure.

Mr. Laughren: I won't go into great detail either, but it is appropriate, I think, to serve notice to what we're looking for.

We're going to be looking very carefully at the job-creation proposals that will be contained in his budget document.

Very often there is a tendency to put the problems of unemployment at the federal level, but the federal government has not resolved the unemployment problem so there's a very real obligation on the part of this government to get seriously into the whole matter of the creation of jobs. There's lots that can be done in Ontario, and to have almost 300,000 people unemployed is unacceptable. It's unacceptable from an economic view and from a social view as well. That's something the government has not done a very good job on.

As a matter of fact, the Treasurer stood up today in the House and announced there was going to be some youth employment programs for the summer that will create employment for 40,000 youths. That's fine, but the 300,000 that we're talking about are not youths. They're not even in those statistics. We're talking about serious proposals for full-time employment.

The employment trends in this province are ominous. When you look at the employment trends by sector of the economy, if you look at the unemployment trends by regions in the province, you can see why the Treasurer should be very concerned.

In this country, we have the highest unemployment rate of any industrialized country. I know that the Treasurer wouldn't want me to make a statement like that without giving some of the details.

Canada has an unemployment rate of 8.3 per cent. Sweden has 2.1 per cent; Japan, 2.2; West Germany, 3.6; France, 5.1; US, 6.1; UK, 6.6; Italy, 7.5; and I reiterate Canada has 8.3 per cent. It's not getting better. In Canada, in 1975, it was 6.9 per cent. In 1976, it was 7.1; in 1977, 8.1; in 1978, 8.4; and the latest that we had this year was 7.9, but that's expected to rise as well.

From an Ontario viewpoint, it's very serious. The Treasurer, I hope, will take a look at the unemployment figures by the different regions of the province.

In selected cities—this is for February, 1979, the latest figures I could get—Windsor had a 10.2 unemployment rate; St. Catharines had 14.5 per cent unemployment; Toronto had 5.7; Hamilton had 7.9; London had 6.9; Kitchener had 6.6; and Ottawa had 9.2 per cent. Those are unacceptable unemployment levels for the most industrialized province in this country; and indeed many of those cities are in the industrialized parts of this province. So that's a serious trend that's happening with the—

Mr. Lawlor: For one of the wealthiest countries in the world, it's unbelievable.

Mr. Laughren: As my colleague from Lakeshore said, one of the wealthiest countries in the world. Probably this jurisdiction is the wealthiest jurisdiction there is, and to have those kind of unemployment rates; and all the social and economic costs that are entailed by those, that go along with unemployment, that really is unacceptable.

Mr. Lawlor: It's atrociously bad government.

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer has not responded to those problems.

We're worried about what's happening in the manufacturing sector of the economy. We know that in 1978 there was a spurt in manufacturing, but we also know that spurt has not made up for the tremendous decline that occurred in the last 10 years prior to 1978. We know part of the 1978 spurt was caused by the devalued dollar rather than to any kind of action on the part of the Treasurer. The Treasurer, if he's thinking of the devalued dollar as a solution to our manufacturing problems, had better think again. Such a high proportion of our parts are imported to go into the manufactured product that we have a very severe problem there with inflation, and of course, with the whole balance of payments.

The other area we're concerned about is the industrial incentives program that the Treasurer and his colleague, the minister for global product mandating, have been talking about. They keep talking about providing incentives to the private sector in order to rebuild the Ontario economy. The government is just staggering around in responding to requests that come in. There is no direction in that incentives program. In the budget, we will be looking for some specific directions and some criteria and guidelines.

We do not accept industrial incentives that do not have contained in them guarantees for regional development, for jobs, for stimulation of particular sectors rather than spreading it over the whole economy, for environmental protection and, last but not least, the whole component of Canadian ownership. The problems of lack of Canadian ownership are substantial and are causing many of our problems.

Mr. Lawlor: You don't expect him to address himself to any of those problems, do you?

Mr. Laughren: I expect he will or he will not have our support when it comes to vote for the budget next December.

Mr. Lawlor: I have no hope, I have no faith and I have very little charity.

Mr. Laughren: Let him tremble in his boots at the thought of that. It will be very difficult for the Liberal Party in this province to support a budget that doesn't resolve some of those problems and some others I haven't even mentioned.

The third matter I wanted to talk about was the whole question of our OHIP system, our system of medicare in the province. We have the highest premiums in the country and, even at that, doctors are opting out of the program and charging consumers more.

So consumers are paying twice. They are paying through very high premiums and then they are paying extra to doctors who opt out of the system. That's unacceptable to us. I believe there are only three provinces in all of Canada that even have medicare premiums. It's not necessary. We want a reduction in the level of OHIP premiums. We want a shift to the more progressive taxes, such as corporate income taxes and personal income taxes.

Even the committee that looked into the problems of OHIP last year recommended that there be a tax credit for those people who should be receiving premium assistance but who are not. We know there is an enormous gap there of people who are eligible for premium assistance but are simply not getting it. The committee recommended that there be a form of tax credit to pick up those people. The government hasn't done that and here it is letting doctors out. We will be pursuing that.

We're worried about the whole regressive nature of the tax system in Ontario. I've heard members opposite say, "Other provinces are no better. Look at the province where your party is the government." I have done some looking at that and I have a comparison of personal taxes and charges between Saskatchewan and Ontario. I'd like to let you have them, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure you'd be interested. This includes provincial income tax, tax credits and rebates, health premiums, retail sales tax, gasoline tax, car insurance, telephone costs, home heating and electricity. This is for a taxpayer with $15,000 in total income with a spouse and two children. We have taken a fairly typical example.

In Saskatchewan, that family would pay $577 in provincial income tax and $599 in Ontario. Tax credits and rebates would be $418 in Saskatchewan and $115 in Ontario. There are no health premiums in Saskatchewan; the figure is $456 in Ontario. Retail sales tax comes to $197 in Saskatchewan and $240 in Ontario. Gasoline tax is $114 in Saskatchewan and $114 in Ontario. The sub-total of those items, over which the government has complete control, is $470 for Saskatchewan and $1,252 for Ontario.

These are the figures for other elements over which the government has some control. Car insurance in Saskatchewan comes to $224 and $441 in Ontario. By the way, that is driving a similar car with the same kind of liability coverage and so on. Telephone charges are $70 in Saskatchewan and $103 in Ontario. Home heating amounts to $318 in Saskatchewan and $584 in Ontario. Electricity is $180 in Saskatchewan and $202 in Ontario. That makes a subtotal of $792 in Saskatchewan and $1,330 in Ontario. [5:30]

When you add up those two categories you get $1,262 in Saskatchewan, and $2,582 in Ontario. There is a better way to impose taxes on citizens in a provincial jurisdiction. Saskatchewan has found a better way; Ontario has not.

I was looking at some of the problems of housing, for example, and this ties in with what this government is doing. In Toronto, if we look at housing prices, the average house in Toronto is selling for $67,333 with a 10 per cent downpayment and the current 11.75 per cent mortgage rate. This means a carrying cost of $611.45 a month over a 30-year mortgage. Translated into hourly costs, a worker would be paying $3.53 an hour of his wage for his mortgage; it doesn't include property tax. That is more than half the wage of an average worker. Interest is $2.56 of that $3.53, so the lifetime cost of that house which has a selling price of $67,333 becomes over the 30-year period of the mortgage, $226,843. That is a handsome sum for a $67,000 house.

Between 1972 and 1978, the average income of a manufacturing worker almost doubled. It sounds good, but if one allows for taxes, inflation and carrying costs which young workers have to face with their families, the worker can, in fact, not buy any more with the money he has left over. There are some statistics I would like to give you, Mr. Speaker.

Annual average gross income in 1962 was $7,363; and in 1978, $14,560. That is a 98 per cent increase in average gross income. Income tax—this is a married person with two young children—in 1972 was $1,014 and in 1978 $2,180, for a change of 137 per cent. Net income was $6,445 in 1972 and $12,380 in 1978, or a 92 per cent increase. The carrying cost of that 30-year mortgage was $3,128 in 1972 and $7,061 in 1978 for a 135 per cent increase.

The amount left over for other expenditures after those have been paid are $3,317 in 1972 and $5,319 in 1978, a 60 per cent increase or change in what is left over to buy other goods, except that the purchasing power of that amount in 1972 dollars, which was the base year, is $3,317 in 1972 and $3,160 in 1978, a five per cent decrease. Thus we have a case where workers earning substantially more gross income are in fact worse off than they were back in 1972.

I mentioned the problem of regressive taxation and one of the regressive taxes is property taxes. I dug up some figures on education costs paid for by the province versus the property taxpayer.

In 1975—this is the all-province average—the provincial government paid 61.4 per cent and the property taxpayer paid 38.6.

In 1979, instead of paying 61.4 per cent the province is paying only 51.5 per cent, which is the preliminary figure. It is almost 10 per cent less of the total education bill than they were paying in 1975—10 per cent less in only five years.

That is not acceptable to us. That is a regressive form of taxation. Surely, the province should be moving in the opposite direction so education costs are reduced as a component of property taxes. That is the direction in which we should be moving and those are the kinds of policy changes we will be looking for on Tuesday night.

In Metropolitan Toronto the figures are even more dramatic. In 1975 the provincial share of education was 35.1 per cent. By 1979 we estimate it will be 20 per cent. It has gone from 35 per cent down to 20 per cent in that five-year period, another way of shifting taxes onto a more regressive system. That is exactly what this government has done, and we find that unacceptable.

The other thing is, I suggested to the minister of global product mandating today that he might want to think about the whole problem of one company gobbling up another company; the squabble over Hudson's Bay Company between Weston's and the Thomson family comes to mind, of course. What I would suggest the Treasurer look at is a system whereby there is a tax on that. We could call it a takeover tax, if we like.

There are two reasons why I suggest such a tax. One, of course, is to get revenues for the province. We socialists are always worried about revenues and very cautious in our expenditures; so I want to stress the point that we are worried about increasing our revenues with such a tax.

The other and perhaps even more important reason is that there are enormous pools of money going to purchase the assets of another company; somebody is going to have to show me how that creates jobs or new wealth in this jurisdiction, or how that creates income for the people of Ontario so we can have social services that we require. That is not the way you build an economy, or rebuild a sagging one.

If that money is there as a pool of cash—and in these they are talking about cash deals—if that kind of money is available, it should be going to rebuild the manufacturing sector of our economy. That is what has to be done. Here, we have these large corporate entities, in some cases, catering to the egos of the people who run them as much as to the accountants who advise them to take over other large companies. It is an asset grab which we think does not contribute anything to Ontario. That has to be looked at; it simply does not make any economic sense at all.

Speaking of takeovers, mergers and so forth, it would be appropriate if the Treasurer and his colleague the minister for global product mandating were to take a look at the whole question of takeovers by foreign interests in Ontario. We have in this country something called the Foreign Investment Review Agency, a federal agency. That agency peruses all takeover bids and all new enterprises started up in Canada by foreign interests.

Mr. Wildman: And okays most of them.

Mr. Laughren: They do okay most of them. This government has a say in every one of those applications in Ontario, and the review agency tells us that in 95 per cent of the cases the province agrees with FIRA.

I asked the Minister of Industry and Tourism—sorry; global product mandating—if he would table the guidelines under which he made his decisions. The minister tells the review agency what the province's views are on any proposed takeover. Yet he will not table in this Legislature the criteria or the guidelines on which he bases his decision. I do not think that is asking too much. But the minister simply has refused to answer the question.

I think it is time that you, Mr. Speaker, took the minister to task; he is there to answer questions like this. I think he would be particularly sensitive if a Speaker who had been a former Solicitor General were to make the point to him. I think that would encourage you to do that.

We think the minister should understand that we are no longer talking of small figures when we talk about takeovers. We are talking about some very large numbers.

When a company from outside the province takes over a company within the province, we know that one of the problems in the long run is that there will be interest and dividend payments flowing out of this country. That is something that is causing a problem with our balance of payments. We know that in 1978—and these figures come from the review agency—out of 310 foreign takeovers applied for, 282 of them were approved; that is 91 per cent. Many of those were in the manufacturing sector, and many of them were in Ontario. For new businesses established in this country, out of 294 applied for, 92.8 per cent were approved. What we are saying to the minister, and requesting that he do, is respond to us. Tell us how it is he makes the decision to approve those takeovers. On what basis does he decide that a takeover is in the best interests of Ontario?

One other area that we need to take a look at is the whole question of a capital gains tax. At the present time, it is my understanding that the federal government taxes 50 per cent of all capital gains, and that leaves 50 per cent that could be picked up by the province. What we are saying, plainly and simply, is go right back to the Carter commission; that is income and should be taxed as income—not half of it. People in this country and in this province do not have half their income taxed. Most people have all their income taxed, except those people who achieve capital gains, and they only have 50 per cent of that taxed. We are saying there is room for the province to move and take up that other 50 per cent so that we have a more equitable tax system.

Mr. Lawlor: Clark wants to cut it even further.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, that's right.

Mr. Villeneuve: If you want to give jobs, that's the only way you can do it.

Mr. Laughren: It is strange that one of the Conservative members says that is the way we keep jobs. They have been doing it for years, and the jobs have been disappearing. Perhaps they need a different policy.

Those are some of the problems on which we will be looking for answers from the Treasury on Tuesday night. But I am not optimistic. There are problems over there that go partly beyond just different policies. There is a struggle going on over on that side. I have analysed it very carefully, and I even did some eavesdropping the other day.

Everybody knows the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) is attempting to muscle in on the traditional jurisdiction of the Treasurer. We know this; we can see it in the policies.

I was doing some light reading the other day, and it came to mind that what I was reading was the same conversation I had overheard while walking out of the chamber. Walking out of the chamber was the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) and the Treasurer. I will put their names in as I read it.

The Treasurer said to his friend the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs: "Let me have men about me that are fat-sleek-headed men and such as sleep o' nights. Yon Grossman has a lean and hungry look. He thinks too much. Such men are dangerous."

The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs answered: "Fear him not, Frank. He's not dangerous. He's a noble Tory and well given."

The Treasurer said: "Would he were fatter, but I fear him not. If my name were liable to fear I do not know the man I should avoid so soon as that spare Grossman. He reads much. He is a great observer and he looks quite through the deeds of men. He loves no plays and thou dost, Tom. He hears no music. Seldom he smiles and smiles in such a sort as if he mocked himself and scorned his spirit that could be moved to smile at anything. Such men as he be never at heart's ease whilst they behold a greater than themselves and, therefore, are they dangerous. I rather tell thee what is to be feared than what I fear, for always I am Treasurer."

That is part of the problem with what is happening on the front bench over there, and that is one of the reasons we have a mish-mash of economic problems over there.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I thought the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) was the poet.

Mr. Laughren: He is; he's my inspiration. I would have never quoted from Julius if my friend had not moved down here beside me.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Don't replace him. He has been doing a good job. Don't displace him as your poet laureate.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The member for Lakeshore is an inspiration to all of us.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, he is.

Mr. Lawlor: I have never heard a more apt quotation.

Mr. Wildman: That has obviously inspired the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and the Treasurer; they're very poetic.

Mr. Laughren: So much for the general economic policy. I am serious when I say that the problems between the Treasurer and the Minister for Global Product Mandating are causing fuzziness in the general direction that this government's economic policy is supposed to be taking us. It is not clear, and I suspect that is one of the reasons; so it will be very interesting to see what happens during the budget address on Tuesday night.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is not that it is not clear; it's just that it's not clearly where you would lead us.

[5:45]

Mr. Laughren: It's not clear.

I would like to speak for a couple of moments on a problem that is bothering a lot of us, and that is the question of how we got ourselves in a situation that is so unhappy for so many people in Ontario now, namely injured workers. It is a problem that, unless someone is injured they tend not even to know about it at all. But let a person get injured and there is a significant chance of them having problems in obtaining just compensation, speedily and humanely rendered.

It is a very serious problem in that sense, and it does not just exist in the Sudbury area. I recognize that I represent an industrial area with a lot of mines and a lot of accidents, but it is elsewhere too. Whether you have a back problem in Sudbury or in Cornwall, it is a serious problem. The Workmen's Compensation Board simply does not know how to deal with it. There are administrative delays; there are decisions that are unfair to the workers; it is an adversary system; it simply is not working in the province.

Let me give one example—and, so help me, there are dozens and dozens—

Mr. Watson: Claim number?

Mr. Laughren: No, I am not going to give an individual case—just one example of how the board invariably comes down against the worker and wonders then why the worker regards it as an adversarial system.

In Sudbury now we have a major industrial strike, the Inco strikes. Workers who are injured and would normally receive what is called 50 per cent benefits would be eligible for a rehabilitation allowance until their condition was improved to the 100 per cent level. If the injured worker's condition improves to the point where he can go back to work and do light duties, and if he goes to the board, the board says: "We are cutting you off to 50 per cent, and you are going to stay at 50 per cent. You are on strike and, therefore, you are not eligible for light duties. If there were no strike, you would be back at work performing light duties."

The worker says: "Well now, just a minute. If I were healthy, I could get a job, perhaps up in Timmins, or perhaps I could get a job in Elliot Lake, or at Lake Agnew Mines, or some other place in this country." He could try, as an experienced miner, to get a job someplace else but, because of his partial disability, he cannot get a job someplace else.

The compensation board says: "It's your fault and the union's fault that you are on strike. Don't blame the compensation board for your problem." But the compensation board misses the problem and it misses the point entirely: If the worker were not injured at all, if there were no disability, he could be out there getting a job someplace. The board says: "Well, we'll tell you what we'll do. We'll put you on a rehabilitation program. But, of course, you have to quit your company and your job to come under the rehabilitation program."

Is that not a fine, humane policy for the compensation board in Ontario? A worker with 10, 20 or 30 years' experience is told, "If you want to be qualified for our rehabilitation program to get your benefits up to 100 per cent, then you are going to have to quit your company." That is some kind of policy.

The Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie) has told us that is not the policy of the board. The Minister of Labour and Manpower is wrong; that is the policy of the board, and we have many examples of it in the Sudbury area. That is the kind of system we have. We have fought for years with the board and with the Minister of Labour, and nothing changes.

I was in Saskatchewan, and I said to the Minister of Labour: "We have real problems with compensation in Ontario. How are things here?" He said: "When we formed the government, we appointed a new board and changed some attitudes. We said that the attitude had to change at the board. Mind you, we haven't solved all our problems; I am working on one right now." One! He was working on one! We have hundreds. Our constituency offices work almost full time on compensation problems.

I would say that not only is the board badly administered, and not only are the attitudes wrong, but also the entire system is wrong and needs to be replaced. In other words, plainly and simply, the Workmen's Compensation Board, as we know it in Ontario, must be abolished and replaced with a social insurance system. That is what must happen.

There is a tremendous gap in the provision of income to people who get hurt in Ontario. Someone out there is going to have to explain to me why it matters where someone gets hurt—on the job, in the automobile or in the home. Why does it matter? Surely what matters is accident prevention, income maintenance, and rehabilitation. That is what counts, and we have a system that does not do that. Quite frankly, I do not think you will ever have a system that does it until you have three components of insurance: (1) Auto insurance; (2) workers' compensation; (3) sickness and accident—so that you cover people regardless of where they are injured and irrespective of fault. There is such a system in New Zealand. A commission in Saskatchewan has recommended they do it. The same was recommended in Manitoba when there was an NDP government there. In Saskatchewan they are now costing the whole proposal to see how feasible it is, what the costs would be and so forth. I certainly hope that they move in that direction, because we need a social insurance system in the province of Ontario.

I want to tell you that we have great difficulty coping with this compensation board, Mr. Speaker. You can replace the chairman, which the government is going to do. We saw that before when Hon. Mr. Starr replaced Mr. Legge. Nothing changed for two reasons: One, the attitude of the board did not change; two, the system did not change. A change of attitude in the senior people at the board would help, but in the long run the abolishment of the board and the establishment of a comprehensive system is the only way to resolve the problems in that area.

I mentioned earlier the Inco strike. It has been almost seven months since that strike began back on September 15, 1978. They have been seven long months, I want to tell you. Seven long months not just for the striking workers and their families but for the community as a whole. When you have 11,000 people off for that period of time in a community the size of Sudbury you really feel it. It is affecting the community in a very major way.

The union has looked after the membership extremely well. There are committees set up so that if people get into trouble they work through a committee at the union hall. They have done a magnificent job in administering the strike, there is no question about that at all.

The basic premise from which I begin, though, is that Inco has not made a decent offer to the workers in Sudbury. That is where it all breaks down. They had not even responded this week to the last demand of the union, nor have they given any consideration to the impact they are having on the community. They have not worried about the community which gave them all they have.

What has this government done? Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you something:

This government has done some things in the past; they have done them for Inco. I will give you some examples. I am glad the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) is here; he was part of the system of being very kind to Inco. One, they have given Inco a processing allowance to allow them, contrary to Section 113 of the Mining Act, to process their ores offshore. Then two, as though to add insult to injury, they are allowing them to write off those offshore processing costs against their Ontario profits. That is adding insult to injury, and it is exporting jobs. Three, the government gave them last year 60,000 acres north of Sudbury on which they would have exclusive exploration and development rights, just like that. Four, they reduced the control order which was imposed upon Inco directing them to get their pollution emissions, their SO₂ emissions, down from about 3,500 tons a day to 750 tons a day by the end of 1978. They virtually cancelled the control order in that the limit is not changed. They have not said, "You will progressively get down to that date." They didn't give the extension with specific tons per day, they virtually, to all intents and purposes, cancelled the control order.

Those are things that this government has done for the company. What we say is that it is time the government moved in and said to that company: "You are not going to continue to abuse the workers and the community in which you operate any longer."

This is what the government should do; it should use the leverage it has, because of those favours bestowed on Inco, to tell the company to make a decent offer so the people can get back to work in Sudbury. But if the government thinks the workers are going to go back without a decent offer, it is sadly mistaken. The workers have suffered too much now to go back for nothing.

Then we have Inco's behaviour. I was reading Business Week, as New Democrats so often do. I read in the section on Corporate Strategies some comments on the president of Ray-O-Vac, which is part of ESB in the United States, a subsidiary of Inco which Inco purchased for about $250,000,000 a few years ago.

Referring to Dawson, who came from Inco to take over the presidency of Ray-O-Vac Corporation, the writer said "Now it is clear that, under Dawson, ESB will rely in a major way on Inco's enormous financial resources for the first time to help solve its problems. Aided by $50,000,000 annually from Inco, ESB will now double its capital spending to an estimated $40,000,000, with most of the money going to modernize run-down plants and to build a few new facilities as part of an effort to reduce the company's above-average production costs."

At the end of the article, he wrote: "Dawson is confident that the corporate parent's commitment of roughly $50,000,000 a year is assured. 'It's large for us,' he says, 'but it's small for Inco.'"

Isn't that lovely? Inco is going to give $50,000,000 a year to Ray-O-Vac Corporation in the United States to prop up its plants down there, while in this country it makes a different offer to the workers in Port Colborne and a different offer to the workers in Thompson than to the workers in Sudbury. They gave a different pension offer to the workers in Port Colborne last year when the layoffs occurred than to the workers in Sudbury. And here they are taking $50,000,000 a year earned in Sudbury, sending it to the Ray-O-Vac Corporation in the United States and giving the back of the hand to the workers in Sudbury again—not just to the workers either but the entire Sudbury community.

That is pushing their rights too far. I don't know how this government can sit back and look at that and not do anything. The case is clear; the evidence is overwhelming. I've never advocated the nationalization of the public ownership of a resource corporation for punitive reasons. I think that a government should bring the resources in this province into the public sector for social and economic reasons, not punitive reasons. But I am reaching the point of adding punitive to my list of social and economic reasons in the case of Inco for the way they have treated the Sudbury community. If ever there was an example of bankrupt policies, it's this government's policies on resources. They have none.

Mr. Lane: You've been saying that for eight years.

Mr. Laughren: That's right. And I'm going to keep on saying it until the government learns that it is totally wrong on its policy on resources.

Mr. Lane: You'll be a lot older than you are now.

Mr. Laughren: Let me tell the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, that the value of mineral production in Ontario in 1975 was $2,300,000,000 and the revenue to the province from that was $91,000,000, representing 3.9 per cent of production. In 1976, the value of mineral production, was $2,500,000,000 and the revenue was $66,000,000

As a percentage of production, that represented 2.6 per cent in revenue to the province. In 1977, the value of mineral production was $2,700,000,000 and revenue from the mining sector was $39,000,000, representing 1.4 per cent of the value of production. We have production between 1975 and 1977 going from $2,300,000,000 to $2,700,000,000 while revenue goes from $91,000,000 to $39,000,000, and as a percentage of production, from 3.9 per cent to 1.4 per cent.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Would this be a suitable time for the member for Nickel Belt to break his speech?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, it would.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE (continued)

Resumption of the debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Laughren: It is with an unusual amount of pleasure that I rise to open the debate this evening. I know the polls are not complete—and I'm never one to count my chickens before they're hatched—but I do think members of the chamber, who aren't aware, should know the latest counts available, at least to me, in Scarborough West and in Wentworth.

Mr. Sargent: Is it necessary?

Mr. Laughren: In Scarborough West, the polls show the NDP candidate, Mr. Johnston, with 6,981 votes; the Conservative candidate, 5,165 votes, and the Liberal candidate, 4,361 votes.

In Wentworth, the polls show Mr. Isaacs has 5,137 votes; the Progressive Conservative candidate—I cannot recall his name at the moment—has 4,218 votes, and the Liberal candidate, 3,331 votes.

It is gratifying indeed to see that the people in those two ridings have spoken again and reaffirmed the wisdom of their earlier decisions in years gone by. I would just make a small comment. In the last four by-elections we've had in recent months, the government has won two and the New Democrats—the real opposition in this Legislature—have won the other two. We believe, as well, that there's a reason the people in those ridings have spoken the way they have.

We believe they believe as we do: that this government lacks imagination; it is immobilized; and it's time to give it a rest. We believe the people know the government is tired. The people themselves are tired of a government that persists in its regressive taxation policies; persists in a shoddy resource policy; persists in anti-labour legislation and policies; persists in neglect of regional development, particularly in the northern Ontario, southwestern Ontario, and Peterborough areas.

As well, the people in those two ridings understand that industrial giveaways, with no guarantees, are not acceptable in this province. They understand, as well, that the neglect of children with learning disabilities cannot be allowed to continue. They understand that the incredible mistreatment of injured workers has gone on far too long, and that the government continues to do nothing.

They understand, as well, that this government is not moving the way it should to protect our medicare system. They know, too, that the failure to rebuild our economy, particularly in the manufacturing sector, will lead to more problems in the future, but the government has continued to do nothing.

The people are angry and upset about the government's casual indifference to the almost 300,000 unemployed people in the province at this time; as well as the failure of this government to make any move whatsoever to repatriate our economy so that we can put those people back to work. Also, the government is failing to protect consumers from rising prices, particularly in the supermarkets.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that in recent months there has been some comment about how difficult it's been for this party to move from a leader with the stature of Stephen Lewis to a new leader. We would be foolish indeed not to recognize that to move from a leader of Stephen's stature to any new leader would cause tremors in any political party.

The picture is clear that this party, under Michael Cassidy, has addressed itself to the major problems of Ontario. Our leader himself has talked about the issues of the day, whether they are food prices, unemployment, our medicare system, labour issues, the environment, public transit or social services. He is carrying on the tradition of great leadership in this party, Mr. Speaker, and I would say to you that we are a healthy, aggressive and clear alternative to this government and its alter ego, the Ontario Liberals.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch briefly on some portions of the speech from the throne.

In total, I thought the throne speech was a good one, and certainly very positive as far as national unity is concerned.

I will quote just one paragraph from the throne speech, where the Honourable Pauline McGibbon, Lieutenant Governor for the province of Ontario, points out:

"Some may wish to argue as to whether the primary emphasis of this session should be directed to improving the economic climate of Ontario or to improving the social services available to our people. In truth, extensive attention must be given to both, for it is clear that only if the economic circumstances in our province remain strong will we be able to maintain and develop the programs that contribute to a fair and balanced society."

I think that quotation makes it very clear that our economic climate and our social service programs go hand in hand. There is no use in telling about plans to improve our social programs until we can show how we can improve the economic climate in Ontario. We must do that in order to provide the social benefits that obviously are needed.

Other important matters dealt with in the throne speech are as follows: (1) an immediate province-wide campaign urging consumers to buy Ontario-grown fruits and vegetables to help curb rising food costs; (2) beefed-up assistance to the Ontario tourist industry, including a scheme to train 25,000 hospitality workers; (3) the extension of special transit accommodation and self-help programs for the physically handicapped; (4) continued free drugs for senior citizens; (5) extended home care for the chronically ill; (6) a renewed commitment to the Children's Law Reform Act, to move to consolidate provincial children's aid services and to recognize the best interests of the child in custody in access cases; (7) intensive programs promoting immunization of children; (8) extension of poison control services at children's hospitals and increased funding for programs to control child abuse; (9) extended television services to northern communities to help overcome the sense of isolation that some people feel there.

I would like to make some comments about the health-care plan of this province.

The throne speech made it abundantly clear that there would be no cut in quantity or quality of health-care services. It has also been abundantly clear for a number of years that the NDP would have the doctors working on a salary or fixed income.

Mr. Young: Who said so?

Mr. Lane: You said so, many times.

Mr. Wildman: When?

Mr. Young: Give us proof.

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) tried that yesterday at the Ontario Medical Association, and they booed him.

Mr. Lane: I listened to the NDP critic yesterday speak for an hour about what terrible people the doctors are.

Mr. Wildman: He never said anything about salaries.

Mr. Lane: The NDP are spending much time these days speaking in this House and in the federal election campaign about the downgrading of the health-care system. It is my conviction that putting doctors on a salary or a fixed income would be just exactly what we need to downgrade the health-care system in this province.

I personally feel that if a doctor chooses to opt out of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan, that should be his privilege. Forcing him to remain in the scheme would again, I feel, downgrade the quality of health care we now enjoy.

However, I think it is only fair, if a doctor does opt out, that he is required to advise his patients and would-be patients that he is no longer in the plan and to advise them what additional costs they could be expected to pay for which they would not be reimbursed.

While I agree that we need a new formula in northern Ontario, and some more doctors, one gets a little tired of hearing members from the third party continually condemn our doctors for the lack of interest in their patients and try to portray them as a group of money grabbers.

Mr. Wildman: Do you support the cuts in beds in the north?

Mr. Lane: This is very unfair. For the most part, the doctors in this province are a very dedicated group of people. I also think most doctors feel the OHIP program is an excellent one. While some doctors are opting out, I have yet to find one doctor in the position of not having himself and his family covered under the program.

Mr. Wildman: That's a double standard.

Mr. Martel: That's definitely a double standard; cover yourself, boys.

Mr. Lane: I would think that this indicates Ontario's health-care scheme is one of the best in the world and is so recognized by our doctors.

Mr. Martel: Cover yourself, but not the peasants.

Mr. Lane: Going back nearly eight years ago when I was involved in my first provincial election campaign, my number one plank was to try to do something about the transportation services in the north, and in my riding particularly. Much has happened since then. There has been a great improvement in transportation, not only in my riding, Mr. Speaker, but also in yours and in all other northern ridings.

Mr. Wildman: A lot of the hospitals didn't get enough money.

Mr. Lane: I had the unique experience on Monday morning of this week of holding a press conference in Sudbury on behalf of the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) to talk about the budget he is prepared to put into transportation in the north this year. It amounts to approximately $52,000,000. I won't go into details of the expenditures.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister of Northern Affairs couldn't make it.

Mr. Martel: Watch that he doesn't talk you out of that airport because that is what he wanted to do at one time, I recall. He wanted to sell norOntario; do you recall that?

Mr. Lane: I don't recall it.

Mr. Martel: Yes, he did.

Mr. Lane: I recall very well when I first came into this House all members opposite saying what a white elephant we had in norOntair.

Mr. Martel: You wanted to give it away to the private sector.

Mr. Lane: No.

Mr. Martel: Yes.

Mr. Lane: The member is getting more mixed up all the time.

Mr. Martel: You had better look back on the speeches of your colleague.

Mr. Lane: I won't go into detail about the expenditures, any more than to say many of the transportation problems I had seen back in 1971 have been looked after in the past eight years by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. Martel: They were going to sink the island with pavement.

Mr. Lane: I would just like to take this opportunity to say how much I enjoyed working with the minister for nearly two years as his parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Wildman: You should have been the minister.

Mr. Lane: Now that I am parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Northern Affairs, I find it very commendable that we are now spending $52,000,000 this year to try to continue to improve the transportation system in the north.

Mr. Martel: We stopped you from selling it.

Mr. Lane: One of the things I am trying to convince my minister to do, which I think would be of tremendous advantage to the senior citizens of northern Ontario, is to co-ordinate the efforts of the Ministry of Housing, the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Community and Social Services in the sparsely populated areas in northern Ontario where it would be impossible to support either nursing homes or rest homes for the elderly on an individual basis. By grouping the rent-geared-to-income units from Housing with the rest homes from Community and Social Services, together with nursing home beds from the Ministry of Health, we could have this type of umbrella complex in many areas throughout the north in which it would otherwise be impossible to keep our elderly people in the area where they have made their life contribution and in many cases where their families now reside.

I think it tragic that many times people who are no longer able to take care of themselves are forced into homes for the elderly or nursing homes many miles away from their family and friends. In many cases the lives of these great people to whom we owe so much is shortened by the fact they must be parted from their families and friends at a time when they need them most. If our ministry could co-ordinate the services of the three above-mentioned ministries without additional cost to the taxpayers of this province, we could bring great peace of mind to thousands of people who are now very concerned about where they will be when the time comes when they can no longer take care of themselves.

We sometimes take for granted that Ontario just by accident is a great place to live. We have to look a little deeper and realize that without the people who are now in their sunset years, having made the great contribution they have to this province, we would probably not be enjoying the many things we now take for granted. As the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, I want to say I want to do my part to make sure no stone is left unturned in providing the best possible facilities for these people in their sunset years.

I won't take any more time of the House. I am sure a lot of members want to speak.

[8:15]

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, along about now, the member speaking usually has a few kind words to say about the Speaker.

Mr. Lane: Terribly difficult, Ed.

Mr. Sargent: I can say it's a tough job, and I'll leave it at that. But I guess you'll have to acknowledge, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Worton: You both speak well of one another and that's why—

Mr. Sargent: —and I guess we have to give you some credit, that you're quite a showman.

The daily Speaker's parade is something else. When the officer at the top of the stairs barks and bellows: "Make way for the Speaker," you have to believe in the awesome power of the Speaker's chair.

Mr. Hennessy: Oh yeah? He'd need an umpire to throw you out.

Mr. Sargent: But that shaggy group preceding the Speaker, following the man in the three-cornered hat—

Mr. Hennessy: Napoleon, Napoleon.

Mr. Sargent: —it reminds me of kids playing in the backyard.

Mr. Hennessy: He reminds you of Napoleon.

Mr. Sargent: It should really be a film for the Gong Show. You could arrange to have a couple of bunnies going ahead strewing flowers over your path, and give it some class. But the participants don't look too enthused. I suggest maybe you might get a sergeant-major in and give them some drill in marching.

Mr. Hennessy: That's right, keep it up. You're on your way, Eddie.

Mr. Sargent: But anyway, speaking of sergeant-majors, a few weeks back I was at a warden's banquet and we were going to be piped in to the head table by the pipe major. One of the ladies in the head table party said to the pipe major, resplendent in his tartans and his kilt: "Pipe major, is there anything worn under the kilts?" He said: "No ma'am, everything's in fine working order."

I think after 16 years in this hallowed place that things are not in very good working order, according to my way of looking at it. You get to be pretty objective after 16 years here and you think of the concerns—

Ms. Gigantes: You mean objectionable.

Mr. Sargent: —I have for my area. We have no rail service, we have no air service, we have—

Mr. Hennessy: No member.

Mr. Sargent: —a 48-mile-an-hour traffic rule. The fact is today I have lost my licence to drive—15 points are gone. My chauffeur

Bob McKessock has 11 points gone. I say how in the hell—

Ms. Gigantes: Better to stay home.

Mr. Sargent: —do you make time driving 120 miles an hour—I mean 120 miles?

An hon. member: No wonder you lost your points quickly, Eddie.

Ms. Gigantes: Take it easy, Eddie.

Mr. Sargent: I've got 128 miles to go and I have to go at 48 miles an hour. It's a long trip.

An hon. member: Bad road too.

Mr. Sargent: So we have our problems living in the north. Especially after—what is it, 35 years, Bob?

Mr. Nixon: Thirty-six years.

Mr. Sargent: Thirty-six years of oppressive, corrupt rule.

Mr. Speaker: I think really the member should not use language like that.

Mr. Sargent: But I have facts to back it up, Mr. Speaker, if you want to—

Mr. Speaker: I think the honourable member should choose his words a little bit more—

Mr. Sargent: Well, I may use it many times tonight, I'm sorry, but I really feel it.

Mr. Hodgson: Settle down or else you will get thrown out again.

Mr. Sargent: The trouble with a free-wheeling speech like this is when we criticize the government they accuse us of being paranoid and untruthful. I can never understand why we should tell lies about them when the truth is bad enough. The members have to admit that we don't have the best of all governments in the world.

Mr. Hennessy: The occasional member.

Mr. Sargent: This province is the richest and has the greatest resources in North America. In every respect we are the best, but we are in the most serious financial position since Confederation. At this point in time with our technology we can almost do anything—put a man on the moon—but tonight, on the news, we heard that every hospital in Toronto has 16 to 20 patients lying on cots in the emergency sections.

We can commit ourselves to $30,000,000,000 in nuclear power, shooting craps with destiny, yet be so negligent of the needs of our people. I am talking about cutbacks and hospital closings. We collect the charges for hospital care from our people but we don't deliver the service.

Mr. Hennessy: You don't believe that.

Mr. Sargent: The government tries to take our hospitals away from us in the north, playing politics with people's lives.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: You really don't believe that.

Mr. Sargent: After 32 years in control here, the government has plundered the treasury to the extent that now it is $14,000,000,000 in debt. I guess by this time next week it will be $15,000,000,000 in debt, by next Tuesday.

Mr. Haggerty: That is a good estimate.

Mr. Sargent: According to accounting principles—it is treading so dangerously close to a default position—

Mr. Hodgson: One more drink, Ed, one more drink.

Mr. Hennessy: One more for the road.

Mr. Sargent: It is so bad that it has raided every pension plan scheme—the teachers, the civil service, the Canadian Pension—to the extent of $7,000,000,000 and not five cents is left in these plans.

A lot has happened since we had the last budget debate. Mr. McKeough took us from a $36,000,000 credit position, a surplus, to a $2,000,000,000 deficit. In three years he had three successive budgets of $1,000,000,000 or more a year, but he kept telling the people of Ontario that he would balance the budget by 1980. He said it repeatedly, and every time he would say this the trained seals over there would thump their desks as though they really believed it.

Mr. Haggerty: It is a good speech, Eddie.

Mr. Nixon: Here is the minister, he has been out to lunch.

Mr. Sargent: I think it must be embarrassing to know what they have done to this province. Mr. McKeough was part of the architecture; he and John White and the Premier (Mr. Davis) brought us to this position. However, he saw disaster on the horizon and resigned to save face. But he said he was going to keep his views on politics before the people. He might start today to tell the people of Ontario how he arranged to cancel a $600,000 debt owed by the estate of the president of Chrysler in the Ronto deal because he had promised it to this lady at a party.

Last week we had three episodes on television of the organization and corruptness in the rackets. Let me tell the House that the past 10 or 15 years around this place would make a great TV documentary. It would make Watergate seem like peanuts. Let me set the scenario in this.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You will be right on the front bench.

Mr. Sargent: If the minister had any brains he would be embarrassed with this.

Do you recall the Fidinam affair; when I got bounced out of the House because I produced a $50,000 cancelled cheque payable to Mr. Kelly from the president of Fidinam, a payoff to get a $20,000,000 contract for the building of the Workmen's Compensation Board project? And that from a company that could not even pay a $1,500 bill? They got the no-bid contract.

Do you recall the Moog and Davis affair across the road? It was a $41,000,000 project, a no-bid contract to a friend of the Premier. A year before they got the $25,000,000 OISE contract. It was a no-bid contract, a friend of the Premier's got that. We could go on and on in documenting, with ministers resigning like flies. The minister opposite is one guy who survived, because of inside deals in real estate.

This is part of the scenario of the Davis government, with Eddy Goodman, a director of Cadillac and also the bagman for this party. Cadillac Fairview was just an ordinary company then. They were building housing for OHC, but Eddie Goodman had arrangements to get funds for them quickly. Today Cadillac Fairview is one of the largest corporations in North America, across the border. They got their start here in Queen's Park. That is a great setting for a movie or for a television series.

The members know all about the Saltfleet scandals and land deals in Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Saltfleet?

Mr. Sargent: Land was appraised at $3,000,000 and was selling for $6,000,000—a $3,000,000 payoff. The director of housing resigned because he would not stand for that kind of hanky-panky. He is now a director of Central Mortgage and Housing in Ottawa and will back this up. The reason he resigned was he could not stand the corruption here.

Mr. Nixon: Tell us about Bronte Park.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No corruption there, Eddie.

Mr. Hennessy: No prompting, please.

Mr. Sargent: Many of the cabinet ministers involved in land deals have resigned. We do not have in this province, in this area of Toronto, an investigative press that will go out and do a Watergate like the Washington Post did in Washington. We have lots of material here. After 15 or 16 years in this business I wonder what is wrong with our people, because an informed public is a strong public. We are not informed about the inside deals going on. If a man gets up to bring a good question to this House he has to get the terminology right. He gets kicked out of the House if the phrasing is not proper.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You are not telling the truth, Eddie.

Mr. Sargent: Then we come to the deal, a $30,000,000,000 nuclear project, making millionaires of friends of the government. That is the basis of The China Syndrome, greed, in this nuclear power program. We made a lot of millionaires in this deal and they are all friends of the government. Look around on the opening day of the House. It is the people who are doing business with the government paying tribute to the establishment. That is what fills up the front part of the deal here.

Mr. Nixon: There they go now.

Mr. Sargent: Now we go down the line and—

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Eddie, you will have to go to confession.

Mr. Hennessy: You will have to write a book.

Mr. Peterson: Too bad you cannot read, Mickey.

Mr. Sargent: —we have the payoff again. We have a $7,000,000,000 contract,—

Mr. Peterson: How much is Mickey taking? That is what I want to know.

Mr. Sargent: —to go to the year 2010, with Denison Mines, which will give Mr. Roman and his friends a $2,000,000,000 guaranteed profit before they even start. They do not put any money into the deal. The government will loan them $339,000,000 as front-end financing to get the project on stream. They have no risk whatsoever, and they get a $2,000,000,000 profit on the sale of uranium at $40 to $60 a pound. The Wall Street Journal says that material is worth one dollar at the minehead. These are facts.

Hon. Mr. Snow: And you believe them.

Mr. Sargent: The minister asks if I believe it. Well, I will tell him something in Latin. If he went to school, he will know what this means. I got to fifth form Latin. Populusiam-dudum defutatus est. It means, in translation, the consumer has been screwed long enough.

Mr. Nixon: Must have been quite a teacher you had.

Mr. Van Horne: Relatively plain and simple.

Mr. Mancini: I think Mickey understands that.

[8:30]

Mr. Sargent: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, this Ontario government contract—it is not a Hydro contract; it is an Ontario government contract with Denison Mines and Preston Mines—is a disgraceful government contract. I call on the Premier to show cause why this should not be cancelled in view of recent developments. We are locked into this deal for 30 years, to pay between $40 and $60 a pound for uranium, when massive recent discoveries in Saskatchewan, Australia and Africa reveal that, according to the Wall Street Journal, it can be produced for $1 a pound. That is quite a spread.

The contract calls for delivery within about 10 months, by early 1980. Mr. Roman and his friends got a $339,000,000 advance, but they have only drawn down $75,000,000 of that money; so they have nine months to get in action to start deliveries.

As the Toronto Star says in its editorial, any other company with a government contract for $7,000,000,000 would have gone to the banks and got its own financing. But what does the Premier do? He hurries this deal through the committee, gives them a deadline date to have the deal finalized and sold, and gives them $339,000,000 up front. That $339,000,000, according to the Toronto Star, is going to cost the taxpayers of Ontario $1,000,000,000 in interest for the loan alone, on top of the $7,000,000,000—committing our kids to the year 2010—with a built-in, guaranteed profit of $2,000,000,000 at absolutely no risk.

The Hydro committee was advised by Burns, Fry Limited, a Toronto firm, that by 1980—in eight months—uranium production could exceed demand by 82 per cent. The committee knew about this, the Premier knew about this; but he hurried it along. I am calling on the Premier to renegotiate this contract because of the misleading advice that was given to the committee that the world scarcity of uranium would justify these scandalous prices.

There is nothing new about calling for a rollback. Westinghouse in the United States were involved in the same type of deal; they went back and renegotiated the contracts. It is time we got some action in this regard in Ontario.

Not a single insurance company in the world will guarantee anyone in the world—in Ontario or elsewhere—one cent against nuclear power radiation with all its defects. But, here we are, going down the line with a $30,000,000,000 program. In Douglas Point, we have swimming pools full of spent uranium rods—thousands of them, deadly dangerous. They are stored in swimming pools, temporarily, until they can find a burial ground. These rods have to last 2,000 years, but we are storing them in swimming pools until we can find somebody who will let us bury them some place. That is what is going on in our riding.

The Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) assured the House there is no problem with our nuclear program. A release I got on my desk today from Mr. Taylor says: "If a similar series of malfunctions did occur at a Hydro nuclear station, the public would be protected by our 'defence in-depth' safeguard." Mr. Taylor says there is absolutely no cause for concern about the safe operation of Ontario nuclear plants. Well today I asked the Premier, as all members heard, about his concern over secret documents telling AECL about a series of malfunctions at Douglas Point and Bruce 1 and 2. I had no response from him that we could measure. Secret Hydro documents, known to many top Hydro officials, reveal that a series of potentially-catastrophic disasters could have occurred at the Douglas and Bruce plants, but they have been kept under cover as classified secrets.

Following are the highlights of some of the shocking revelations of human error and excessive mechanical failure: the containment structure at Douglas Point nuclear station could not withstand the pressures encountered at Harrisburg at Three Mile Island. The Three Mile Island plant was built to withstand 80 pounds of pressure; the Douglas Point plant is not built to withstand the same pressure as Three Mile Island. Douglas Point has been restricted to 70 per cent power, mainly because of inadequacies.

The important part is this. The Babcock and Wilcox boilers used in the Three Mile Island plant, and which are being investigated in plants across America as being possibly faulty, are used all across Ontario in Hydro plants.

The following is a series of happenings at the Bruce NGS. If they had all happened at once, it would have been catastrophic. It goes on to list many points here, three pages of happenings, which I will be developing at a later time. Because of these secret documents, called Internal Significant Event Reports and dealing with malfunctions and accidents at Hydro's nuclear stations, I think it's high time we did a total house-keeping job. Reports of all these secret documents should be coming to the leaders of the opposition parties and to all government agencies in Ontario and Canada.

Today, we had the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) talking about the small entrepreneur. In Canada 63 per cent of all taxation revenues come from the small entrepreneur, the small businessman. We have here pictures of Ontario's men abroad. The Ministry of Industry and Tourism has offices in Frankfurt, in Brussels, in Vienna, Los Angeles, Sao Paulo, Mexico City, London, Tokyo, New York, Stockholm, wherever around the world.

Mr. Peterson: What about Marvin Shore?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, Marvin Shore and the group in London. The ministry spends millions of dollars on this type of operation. But in my city, when a small businessman goes to a ministry office for a loan, the answer is: "We don't have any money for you. We can't loan you any money; but we can give you advice."

Here are a bunch of guys all across this province in these small offices; guys who couldn't make a go of it in business. They're broke themselves, but they get jobs with the ministry advising other men how to run their businesses. But they have no money for them. This is the ridiculous part; the stupidity of the whole arrangement. The ministry has men all around the world. It's spending millions but it can't lend a small entrepreneur in Owen Sound, Burlington or the Sault—any place—any money because it hasn't any money for them. But it can give them advice. That's like the blind leading the blind.

Mr. Van Horne: Send an expert in bankruptcy to Istanbul.

Mr. Sargent: Right.

Mr. Mancini: That's true and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wiseman) knows it.

Mr. Sargent: We don't have all the answers. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, if we had the answers—

Interjections.

Mr. Sargent: We don't have the connections the government has with the establishment, that's it. We don't have that.

Mr. Peterson: Now Mickey Hennessy is establishment in my opinion; that shows how low I've sunk.

Mr. Sargent: Three years down the line since the establishment of the Niagara Escarpment Commission the president of our local Niagara Escarpment ratepayers association wrote to the Premier on March 3 or 4 and asked him about the new boundaries regarding the escarpment commission.

On March 6 he got a letter back from Premier Davis saying: "Dear Mr. Davenport: I am not aware of any official announcement being made recently regarding this boundary, other than the statement made on May 9, 1978, by the Honourable Rene Brunelle."

This comes after the greatest announcement in history, that they've made an 80 per cent cutback in Niagara Escarpment boundaries. But that shows how much the Premier knows about the Niagara Escarpment.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Are you for it or against it, Eddie?

Mr. Sargent: The minister is sitting there being so smart. Let him tell me what he would do in this case. Doesn't he believe that a farmer should own his own development rights, that he should not be denied the right to split his property if he has a chance to sell it or develop it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Right.

Mr. Sargent: Those fellows down here, the minister and his friends, are making millions by redevelopment in southern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We are?

Mr. Sargent: He and his fellow ministers. One of the ministers made $1,000,000 on a land deal out here. The week before the escarpment boundaries became law they held the date back until he sold his property. He got his money and they dated the transcript after he sold his property—Mr. Yaremko. Doesn't the minister know about that one?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No.

Mr. Sargent: Well he should know about it. He does know about it.

An hon. member: It was in his backyard.

Mr. Van Horne: Another log on the fire.

Hon. Mr. Snow: How much do you have, Eddie? How many millions did you make, Eddie? You don't want to tell about those.

Mr. Sargent: It isn't a case of how much I made, it's how much I owe. That's what I'm worried about.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This isn't question period.

Mr. Sargent: A basic tenet of democracy is that the title of one's land is sacred, and no one should tell you what you can do with it.

If you and your family have been paying taxes for generations on a piece of land, what right has some egghead friend of the Minister of Transportation and Communications or some political hack from Queen's Park to tell you what you can do with it?

Mr. Cooke: I thought you guys wanted to save land.

Mr. Sargent: I say to the minister representing the Treasury, as he does with all his great whack, if his government wants to control land development in my area, or whatever—

Hon. Mr. Snow: Tell me more.

Mr. Sargent: —let them put their money where their mouth is, and don't forget that; that's our position.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You own Brant, Norfolk, Oxford and Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: The fact is that thousands of our farmers have had their land frozen and can't get severances. Yet they have to keep on paying taxes.

Mr. Peterson: It's theft.

Mr. Sargent: Business in Bruce is in limbo because of the Niagara Escarpment Commission. I say title to one's land in Grey-Bruce doesn't mean a damned thing. You're even told what colour you can paint your outhouse, if they'll let you.

An hon. member: Paint her blue.

Mr. Hennessy: Blue and yellow.

Mr. Sargent: Land use power under the provincial escarpment act overriding local zoning authority with some sort of wider ranging master planning has everyone scared. The outcome will be disaster, disrupting the local tax base.

Zoning has always been a local responsibility—what is good for the local economy. Now the province is taking over control; it is taking over local planning functions. I can warn the government that we are going to block this. If I had my way and the member for Grey (Mr. McKessock) had his way we would abolish the Niagara Escarpment Commission. We would abolish the whole thing. With the restraint program the government has on now it's simply ridiculous to take our land rights away from us and spend $1,000,000 or so in salaries for a bunch of political hacks.

We have, in the Grey-Bruce area, what everybody wants. We have our own acres of diamonds. We should be capitalizing on our assets. We would have a big boom if you would leave us alone and let us operate our programs for resorts and boat areas. You're going to be hearing a lot more from us about the Niagara Escarpment.

In closing—I've got the wheels down a bit now, coming in here.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Flaps down.

Mr. Sargent: You're the one who is doing the flapping.

The intrusive power of government in our lives doesn't give us much hope. I think we're giving government more power than is absolutely necessary. I think freedom is something which we have to guard against the intrusive power of government.

I'll give you a brief example of how big government works; government power coming into our lives.

You recall, a few years ago, a drug raid in Fort Erie? There were 150 people in a night club. The Mounties got word there we're going to be drugs there. So, arrogant with the dragnet search power they had, they stripped naked all the 150 men and women. They did vaginal and rectal searches for drugs. It was a shocking, abusive use of power. It happened in our province. One hundred and fifty people were taken in, stripped naked and subjected to vaginal and rectal searches. The Mounties used more power than was needed. Can you imagine the parallel, if the Mounties got a tip that there would be drugs at an Argo game and they used the same procedures, the same powers there. You would have the biggest half-time show in history.

Mr. Peterson: All Tories.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It would be quite a game.

Mr. Worton: It would look like a Tory annual conference, wouldn't it, Jim?

Hon. Mr. Snow: It would be just like the Bruce County Liberal Association.

Mr. Sargent: The Mounted Police in this province have broken every rule in the book, committed every crime.

Hon. Mr. Snow: All under the Liberals.

Mr. Sargent: There is arson, break and entry, opening of mail—but not a single charge has been laid.

Hon. Mr. Snow: With the approval of the Liberals.

Mr. Sargent: I'm conscious of that.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Are you on their side or on my side?

Mr. Sargent: Where were you before tonight, Jim? Did you come straight from home? Where did you come from? Have a bit more water; you need it.

We have great concerns in the area of the tax base in this province. We have our budget coming up next week and I feel you're going to see about a billion and a half dollar budget.

It's time that the people of Ontario had some decent government in this province.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be very brief this evening because I want to get out to Scarborough West to celebrate with our colleagues and the press.

I'm glad to see the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) is here tonight. He holds the seat right near Scarborough West and I understand that he worked very hard with Richard Johnston and brought that riding in on his coat-tails.

Mr. Wildman: He is soon going to have a couple of people sitting beside him.

Mr. Cooke: I think the two by-elections the New Democratic Party won this evening are especially significant because, since the beginning of this session, the New Democratic Party has stressed the issue of health in this province. I have a feeling that the issue of universal medicare and adequate services in hospitals had a very significant impact in the two by-elections. I think that's one of the reasons we did so very well this evening. In the New Democratic Party we believe the health system in this province is threatened by the federal Liberal government and by the provincial Tory government. The New Democratic Party fought for universal medicare and it is the New Democratic Party that will fight to maintain universal medicare in this province and in this country.

I want to spend some time talking about some of the health-care problems in the city of Windsor because they adequately demonstrate the problems all across Ontario. When the minister took part in the emergency debate in the Legislature regarding the deterioration of our health care system, he spoke very proudly of the Windsor agreement which took place very recently among four hospitals in the city of Windsor and Essex county. He said that was a very significant agreement and that health care in Windsor and Essex county was now planned adequately and that the overlap of services and some of the problems that have existed in Windsor for a number of years would be solved.

I should point out one of the major hospitals in the city of Windsor—Metropolitan—did not take part and did not sign that agreement. That is a very significant thing. Also, the basic decisions of that agreement, namely, the number of active-treatment beds of four per 1,000 as of April 1 of this year and 3.5 as of April 1, 1979, were not made by local people and were not made by the local district health council. That decision was made by the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell).

It is the same old story. Decisions are made in Queen's Park, while the local people have the local information and know the local needs are not a part of that decision-making process. That is why the overall implementation of this four per 1,000 and 3.5 per 1,000 is going to be a failure. The people who know the needs of local communities are the local people.

If the Minister of Health really wanted to implement a plan that would work in Windsor, he would have said to the Windsor and Essex District Health Council: "Talk to the people of Windsor and Essex and find out what the needs are of those people. We are not going to tell you that it should be four per 1,000 or 3.5 per 1,000 active-treatment beds. We are going to let you make that decision and let you make that recommendation because you know your community best."

But, no, that is not what has happened. Some bureaucrat here in Toronto has said four this year and 3.5 in 1981 is what Windsor will have and for all the cities and municipalities in southern Ontario and in northern Ontario it will eventually be four per 1,000. That is not the way decisions should be made regarding the priorities of health to the people of Ontario.

Last Sunday 109 beds were to be closed in the city of Windsor to meet the four per 1,000. We closed those beds and we don't have the alternatives in Windsor. Where are the people to go who are at present in active-treatment beds? With respect to nursing homes in Windsor, we have a one-year waiting list to get a nursing-home bed. When they do get into a nursing home, we have a Nursing Homes Act and nursing-home inspections which are deficient in many areas.

I introduced a private member's bill in May 1977 that indicated the feeling in the New Democratic Party was that nursing homes should be non-profit, charitable corporations. I took a survey in my riding that indicated the vast majority of the people of Windsor agreed with that. I am sure there will be a time in the future when we will again introduce that. When the time comes that we don't just have an election involving two by-elections but a provincial election, one of these days the New Democratic Party will form a government and will set up a nursing-home system in this province where the first priority will be service, not profit.

Mr. Warner: The people will be heard.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You will be an old age pensioner. You will be in one of those homes.

Mr. Cooke: Rest homes are the other alternative in the city of Windsor for people at present in hospitals. Take a look at the rest homes in the city of Windsor and rest homes in this entire province. They are unregulated. The bylaws have to be passed by the local municipalities. There is no requirement for local municipalities to pass bylaws. They do it if they want to do it and then the inspections that take place are deficient in many areas.

I visited the rest homes in the city of Windsor on many occasions. Some of them are excellent. Some of them are very nice. If one looks at the per diem, the cost per day for the residents, they are very nice also.

The people who have to go in rest homes, and who have to rely on the welfare department or the social service department to pay for their per diem, they go in the second-rate rest homes. Those people who have large savings and can afford the per diem of $50, sometimes more, per day, can go in the very expensive and extravagant rest homes and their needs are well taken care of; but the ordinary people who have their old age pension and their Gains cannot afford to go into the good rest homes in the city of Windsor or any other place across this province.

Chronic home care is another area that was very much lacking in the Minister of Health's agreement among the hospitals in Windsor. Chronic home care will not be implemented in the city of Windsor until this fall, and it will not be implemented unless savings have been realized by the agreement that was made among the hospitals.

So what have we done? We've eliminated 109 active-treatment beds; we're going to convert some into chronic-care beds, but we would like some people who could benefit from chronic home care and could make it on their own, to move out of the hospitals and we do not have chronic home care in the city of Windsor, we do not have adequate good rest-home beds and we do not have enough nursing-home beds.

So in my opinion, and in the opinion of the people of Windsor, what has happened is that the Minister of Health has put the cart before the horse. What he should have done is put the alternatives in place and then decided to close some active-treatment beds and transfer people into the appropriate settings. But no, the Minister of Health has instead decided to close the active-treatment beds without the appropriate alternatives being in place.

Recently in the city of Windsor the district health council decided to make a study of who was in each bed on a particular day—in all rest homes, nursing homes and hospital beds—to find out whether or not people were placed in these beds inappropriately. The results of that survey are not in, and yet again the Minister of Health has implemented very significant changes in the health-care system in the city of Windsor without really understanding and really knowing what those changes are going to be.

We don't know whether or not there are people inappropriately placed in nursing-home beds in the city of Windsor; we don't know that, because the results of the study are not yet in. We don't know whether there are people inappropriately placed in active-treatment beds in the city of Windsor, because the survey results are not in yet. We don't know whether there are people who are in chronic-care beds who need chronic-care beds, again because the survey results are just being fed into the computer and even the members of the Windsor and District Health Council do not know what that particular study will show.

I don't think the Minister of Health should have implemented the changes he has implemented without fully understanding and fully realizing what the present situation is in the city of Windsor and Essex county.

You can't close active-treatment beds, Mr. Speaker, unless you have the alternatives, as I have said; and you can't close active-treatment beds unless you know whether or not those 109 active-treatment beds that are at present being closed are needed in Windsor.

Recently I raised a problem within the Legislature about people who were being placed in emergency rooms and in hallways because there were not enough active-treatment beds, and that was before April 1 when 109 beds were to be closed. I had my legislative assistant call around to the various hospitals yesterday to find out what the effect has been since the beds have been closed. Members must realize that the beds were just closed on April 1, on Sunday.

At Hotel Dieu they tell me they haven't closed their beds yet, they're going to have to accept the financial penalty because they just don't think they can impose the closure of 35 beds that were supposed to be closed on the people of Windsor. They are going to attempt to cut back in other places to try to make up the savings, because as you know, Mr. Speaker, the ministry has deecided to impose I believe a $12,000 or $15,000 per year penalty on beds over the four per 1,000 ratio that the bureaucrats in the Ministry of Health have set.

So Hotel Dieu has found it impossible to implement this move, because they were one of the hospitals that on an average of three nights per week before the bed closures were having to use the emergency rooms and the hallways for people who normally would have been admitted but couldn't be because of the lack of beds.

Grace Hospital has closed its beds, but again they're having to use their emergency room, because of lack of beds, to admit people.

[9:00]

At Western they have had to cut back on all elective surgery. The waiting period for elective surgery is now extremely long in the city of Windsor. I can't impress enough on the members of the Legislature the stress that puts on an individual. They get ready to go into the hospital, the surgery is needed and they don't know when they can be admitted. They get themselves psyched up, they realize the surgery is necessary, but they can't have it done until a bed becomes available. At times their date is scheduled to be admitted, they get all ready to go in and then they find out that there is no bed available because of an emergency the night before and their surgery is cancelled.

At Metropolitan, I gather from the people I have talked to, the situation is most crucial. That is where the case that I raised in the Legislature took place, where a 78-year-old man, a Mr. Turski, went into emergency suffering from headache, shortness of breath, dizziness. They did an examination of him and the admitting doctor at emergency said that under normal circumstances he would have admitted Mr. Turski, but there were no beds available. The alternative then became whether to admit him into an emergency bed and keep him in emergency overnight or send him home and hope things were all right. He sent Mr. Turski home and four hours later that individual was dead.

There is a coroner's inquest that has been ordered into the case. Dr. Broadwell, the coroner who presided over this case, has quite clearly indicated in an article that appeared in the Windsor Star that he feels one of the contributing factors in the death of Mr. Turski was the fact there were no active-treatment beds available for this individual to be admitted for observation. Let me quote from the Windsor Star so the members of the government who are here tonight will not think this is just a figment of the imagination of an opposition member:

"Coroner Dr. Douglas Broadwell has called an inquest for April 27 into the death of 78-year-old Anthony Turski of 1806 Alexis Road in Windsor because he believes overcrowding at Metropolitan Hospital was a factor in the death. Dr. Broadwell said overcrowding at the hospital was the reason for calling an inquest in response to concerns expressed by Mr. Turski's family. He said he personally feels the fact there were no beds available was a factor in the death."

That is pretty clear. But when I raised that point in the Legislature, the Premier (Mr. Davis) said I should be embarrassed to make such an accusation. I had talked to the coroner and I had talked to the emergency doctor and I knew what I was talking about.

The Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) said it was an irresponsible statement. I suggest—and I think the members of the opposition parties agree—the policies of this government that contributed to the death of Mr. Turski were irresponsible and should be changed.

The doctors in the city of Windsor have said in an article that appeared very recently in the Windsor Star that risks are being taken in the hospitals of Windsor—and I would assume in the hospitals of Ontario—that normally would not have been taken. Let me quote from an article that appeared in the Windsor Star on March 8 of this year. It says:

"Doctors say the Ontario-government cut-back in active-treatment hospital beds in Windsor is hurting the community and forcing doctors to make choices they should not have to make. But stacking them in emergency rooms is becoming more common and with 259 active beds scheduled for closure by 1981, one in every five in the city, the bed shortage can only get worse.

What it means to the community is a definite deterioration in health care, according to doctors interviewed by the Star. Dr. John Greenaway, president of the Essex County Medical Society, said he and other physicians are slowly being limited in seeking out the best possible care for each of our patients. 'It is possible the whole system could be jammed with patients requiring early admission.'"

The article goes on to say that doctors are taking legal and medical risks in the city of Windsor they never would have taken in the past. But because of the lack of active-treatment beds and the backup in emergency rooms they are having to take these risks—risks that involve people's lives. As I said before, people are being forced to stay in hallways and emergency rooms when normally they would have been admitted.

Let me quote part of a letter I received from a constituent who had to bring his grandfather to a hospital to emergency. I think it gets the point across very well. It is addressed to the Minister of Health.

"On March 5, 1979, Dr. Yee from Windsor, Ontario, after examining my grandfather, Mr. Alfred Bellehumeur, decided to have him admitted to Hotel Dieu Hospital. My grandfather, accompanied by my father and myself, went to the emergency ward at approximately 5 p.m. on the above date. Please bear in heart and in mind while reading this letter that Mr. Bellehumeur, a lifetime resident of Ontario, is currently 88 years old and had never been admitted to a hospital. The experience of an emergency room can be uncomfortable, and not the most relaxed. Therefore, I am certain that you can empathize with the trauma this man, 88 years, underwent.

"The emergency ward was at the time filled beyond capacity and I was informed by the nursing supervisor that the medical staff was at a minimum. My grandfather was placed in a small room where he was examined by Dr. Gopinathan. At this time the physician confirmed a diagnosis of internal bleeding and that he should be admitted. An intravenous of plasma was then started.

"Approximately one half-hour later my grandfather had to be moved from his present room to another area as the examining area was needed for an overdose admission. Mr. Bellehumeur was then wheeled into a much larger room where his stretcher was parked beside six others, barely leaving enough room to walk alongside of any other bed.

"Dr. Gopinathan explained to me that there were not enough available beds in the entire hospital, and that my elderly grandfather would have to be placed in an out-patient room overnight."

The letter goes on to say what a stress this was on this 88-year-old individual, and how difficult it was that he had to stay in emergency in the out-patient room all night. He was moved the next day to a semi-private room, and then had to be moved again to a ward room.

I think we have to keep in mind, as the letter says, this 88-year-old individual had never been admitted to hospital in his life, and the first time that he had to be admitted, for a fairly serious problem that eventually was diagnosed as a bleeding ulcer, he had to stay in an emergency room overnight and go through several transfers. That kind of pressure on the individual obviously could have a very serious effect on whether or not the person could come out of it without suffering maybe death, or at least making the problem much more complicated than it would be otherwise.

I would like to read briefly one other letter that I have received. I must say that over the course of the last number of weeks I have been flooded with a number of phone calls and letters that I have received on this particular problem in the city of Windsor. This letter is also addressed to the minister.

"I am writing to protest about the alarming deterioration in the health services in this province, brought about either by decisions made by your government or by its failure to take action. I refer of course to the continuing cutbacks in hospital services, to the $9.80 per diem surcharge for hospital care after 60 days, and to the opting out of doctors from OHIP.

"Firstly, hospital cutbacks: In September I was taken to Grace Hospital in Windsor by ambulance because of an acute attack of back pain which immobilized me for five weeks. I was unable to stand for more than five minutes without pain, let alone walk or climb stairs. I was told very apologetically by the emergency-room doctor that I would probably need a series of tests in order to diagnose the problem and that these could probably be done in a day by the hospital, but they would have to arrange through my family doctor because, unfortunately, there were no beds available.

"Indeed, they were short of emergency-room facilities because they were occupied by patients who were awaiting admission. Certainly, my life was not endangered by failure to be admitted, but it required five days of trips to my doctor's office and to go to the downtown radiologist and to the orthopaedist's office. Each trip was followed by several hours of extreme pain from the aggravation of so much movement. During all of this, the treatment prescribed was complete bed rest. I have since discovered that my situation was by no means unusual in Windsor. So much for the alleged surplus of hospital beds."

The letter goes on to talk about the $9.80 charge to chronic-care patients, as well as the doctors opting out. This is just another example of an individual who had to go through not just inconvenience but pain as a result of this government's lack of funding and lack of planning on hospitals in the city of Windsor. I think there are examples that apply to the rest of Ontario.

Let's also examine what the effects of these cutbacks have been on the workers in the hospitals of this province. A couple of weeks back, my leader came to Windsor and we met with a number of the unions and workers involved in the hospitals, along with my colleague the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall). The workers told us very clearly that what is happening in the hospitals is that the workmen's compensation cases have been increasing because the workers don't have two people to help move somebody from one bed to another. One worker has to do that, therefore there are more back injuries and other injuries in the workplace.

The emotional stress is incredible on the workers. The sick days that are being used by the people who work in our hospitals have also increased dramatically. I think the best description that any of the workers gave to my leader and to my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich was, "Hospitals used to be happy places to work; but now I get up in the morning and I have to go to my hospital to work and I don't want to, because it is no longer a happy place to work."

When a worker is not happy doing his job, then we all know what happens to the quality of the service; it obviously decreases.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Does that mean you're not happy in your job?

Mr. Cooke: I'm very happy in my job. I would be much happier if I were in the minister's position though, and we will be one of these days.

Mr. Rotenberg: Don't hold your breath. You won't be over here for half a century.

Mr. Grande: It won't take that long.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cooke: The way the members opposite are handling the problems in this province and the problems of health care, let me tell the House, they won't be there too long.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cooke: I do want to speak very briefly also about the problem of doctors opting out, because it is one and the same problem. I must start off by saying I think the doctors who are involved in the health insurance plan in this province do have some very legitimate complaints. The number of weeks they have to wait to be paid for their claims is incredible. They shouldn't have to wait that long. There must be a way of simplifying the bureaucracy and the number of forms they have to fill out. Other provinces have done so.

My leader in his response to the throne speech pointed out that in Saskatchewan only two per cent of the doctors have opted out. The doctors in that province don't seem to be dissatisfied, as they are here in Ontario. The fact is that Ontario, of all the provinces in this country, obviously has the most serious problem with doctors opting out. That is why, in the federal campaign, Ontario is the focus of the attack of our party for the erosion of universal access.

I would like to ask the Minister of Health, if he were here this evening, how the people of Amherstburg, for example, are going to benefit from the announcement he made last week. He said a Zenith number would be available and people from all over the province could phone and find out where a doctor who is opted in to the system is located so that they could then use the system.

The people of Amherstburg have six doctors; all of them have opted out. How will a direct line to Toronto to talk to the OMA benefit the people of Amherstburg? Quite clearly it won't benefit them at all. In fact an article appeared in the Windsor Star last week, after the Minister of Health made his statement. The headline read, "Timbrell says Ride to City for Doctors." I'll read part of the article:

"Amherstburg residents who want to go to a doctor still in OHIP will have to continue to drive to Windsor or somewhere else where one is available. The provincial government changes to the health-care procedures announced Thursday do not help the people living in communities like Amherstburg, where all doctors have left the health-care scheme."

[9:15]

The article goes on and it quotes the Minister of Health. It also quotes Dr. Vail, who is the president of the OMA. Both seem to indicate that driving 17 miles to Windsor shouldn't be all that difficult.

It may not be difficult for Dr. Vail, because I am sure he has one or more cars. It wouldn't be difficult for the Minister of Health, and it wouldn't even be difficult for me because I have a car. But how about a single-parent mother, for example, on mother's allowance through no fault of her own, who doesn't have and can't afford a car? How is that individual to travel from Amherstburg to Windsor? The public transportation between the two communities is very poor.

How is the senior citizen, who may not be able to drive because of poor eyesight or doesn't like to drive during winter months because of the snow—something I think we can all understand—going to travel from Amherstburg to Windsor to find a doctor who's opted out?

Clearly, the announcement made by the Minister of Health last week will not solve the problem for the people of Amherstburg. It won't solve the problem for the people of Peterborough, where 70 per cent of doctors have opted out. It won't solve the problem for the people of Orillia where, I believe, 50 per cent have opted out. The Minister of Health is, obviously, from articles which appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail, having extreme difficulty in convincing doctors that this is a problem.

I think we also have to look at the number of specialists opting out. In Windsor, as of April 1, our only neurosurgeon, Dr. Kleider, opted out of OHIP. Where does that leave the people of Windsor when they need a neurosurgeon? They could maybe travel to London, which is 120 miles away. They could travel to Detroit but the cost there would be extremely high.

Let me give the House an example of what is going to happen to the people of Windsor—to individuals. There's an individual, Mr. Sayegh, in my riding who I assisted in getting a disability pension through the Ministry of Community and Social Services. He got his disability pension. I believe he and his wife and, I think, two children receive something in the neighbourhood of $425 a month. That's what they have to live on. He can't work. He's totally disabled because of a back problem.

He had surgery performed on him by Dr. Kleider a number of months back. The surgery was not totally successful and further surgery is required. He had an appointment to go to see Dr. Kleider in March of this year. Dr. Kleider's office called and rescheduled the appointment for April. I'm not saying that necessarily had anything to do with the fact that Dr. Kleider was opting out on April 1. It was probably just a coincidence. But, nevertheless, when Dr. Kleider's office called, they indicated to Mr. Sayegh that it would be advisable for him to bring $75 to pay for the office appointment. This individual has to put up $75 from his own pocket to see Dr. Kleider, the only neurosurgeon in the city of Windsor.

There's no alternative. And all he gets is $425 a month from the Minister of Community and Social Services on a disability pension. That is completely unacceptable to the people of Windsor. I should think it would even be unacceptable to the government; I hope that it would be unacceptable to the government. There are going to be other cases similar to that. I hope to have the opportunity to raise them with the Minister of Health, either by letter or during the question period.

It is a real problem—doctors opting out. It is a real problem of doctors in certain specialties opting out. The statement by the Minister of Health last week that all services would be offered at the OHIP rate in hospitals doesn't comfort me at all because I don't know how it's going to be accomplished; the minister doesn't know how it's going to be accomplished; the OMA doesn't know how it's going to be accomplished; and the OHA doesn't know how it's going to be accomplished. I am really concerned for the people of Windsor and for the other people across this province who are experiencing similar situations.

If, in fact, the minister does get some kind of agreement with the OMA and the OHA and we have all services offered in hospital at the OHIP rate, I would suggest that what is going to happen is this. If the only way some people get medical care is by going to a hospital for that medical care, then they will use the hospital. I don't blame them. But the implications for the Ministry of Health budget are very significant.

What will happen is that they will be using the hospitals for their care; they will be using the hospitals and the emergency rooms. That is the most expensive way to get a checkup or to see someone about an earache or a throat infection. Services in hospitals should not be used for that purpose. We should be using family practitioners or clinics, because those are much more appropriate and much less expensive for the taxpayers of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I think I've indicated to you and to the members of the Legislature some of the problems we're experiencing in Windsor with our health-care system. I do want to spend just a very few minutes on the area for which I'm critic for the New Democratic Party, the area of colleges and universities. I'm not going to go into it in any great length because it won't be too long before we'll be debating a bill to amalgamate the ministries of Colleges and Universities and Education, and I think we can get into that in great depth at that particular time.

I do want to point out that the level of funding to colleges and universities is also extremely inadequate at this time.

Mr. Grande: Is the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) ever coming back to the House?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Oh, yes. She is out of the country on government business.

Mr. Cooke: Let me point out to you, Mr. Speaker—I'm sure you'll appreciate this—that some of the universities, in particular the small universities, are suffering very severely from the cutbacks by the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and by this government.

For example, Brock University in St. Catharines, a university that should be close to the heart of the Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch), got an increase of only 4.9 per cent in its operating grant for 1978-79—that despite the fact that inflation is running around nine per cent, close to 10 per cent. Really, inflation for colleges and universities is running well over 10 per cent, because energy costs have increased well over 10 per cent and the cost of paper and other supplies has increased well over 10 per cent. Therefore the inflation rate for colleges and universities is really much higher than the nine-point-something per cent that is reflected by the CPI.

Carleton got only a 3.6 per cent increase in their operating grants for 1978-79; Guelph got only 4.5 per cent; Lakehead, 4.6 per cent. I note that the Minister of Northern Affairs is here this evening. Lakehead, a university in northwestern Ontario, got only—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's a great institution.

Mr. Cooke: It is a great institution. I had the pleasure of visiting it last fall.

Mr. Grande: You are starving them to death.

Mr. Cooke: But those people over there are starving it—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Enrolment is up; everybody is happy.

Mr. Cooke:—and if they stay in power for many more years they'll see the doors of that university close because of your inadequate funding.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No way; dedicated, loyal people.

Mr. Cooke: Laurentian University, another northern university, got a 4.6 per cent increase. So much for the commitment to northern Ontario by the Minister of Northern Affairs.

McMaster University got a 3.7 per cent increase in their operating grants. Maybe that's one of the reasons the people of Wentworth from the Hamilton area tonight decided to elect a New Democratic Party member instead of a government member.

Trent University, a university that's represented in this House now by a Tory member, got only a 2.3 per cent increase in its operating grants. Not only have 70 per cent of the area's doctors opted out of OHIP and not only is the government trying to destroy their universal access to the medical care system, but the government's also trying to destroy their universal access—a right that should exist in this province—to post-secondary education.

Mr. Grande: The member is not doing his work.

Mr. Cooke: The University of Western Ontario got only 4.9 per cent. The University of Windsor, a university that has special significance to me. Mr. Speaker, got a 3.5 per cent increase in its operating grants—that in the light of well over a 10 per cent increase in the cost of living for universities. Finally, York University got only 4.1 per cent. Those are the universities that got under five per cent increases in their operating grants for 1978-79.

What's happening is that universities like Trent and Brock—well, I would think that this government will never close a university outright. The former Minister of Colleges and Universities who was here a few minutes ago made the commitment last year in estimates that they will not close any universities. But I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, they'll do the same thing to the small universities that they're doing to the small hospitals of this province. They won't close them; they'll starve them. And the local boards of governors will have to make those decisions themselves.

When you continually have to stop offering courses and close down programs because of a lack of money to finance those programmes and courses, the only alternative is to close the institution. There does come a point where a university is no longer a university because of the lack of variety of courses that's offered.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that universities like Trent and Brock, Laurentian and Lakehead are going to be in that position very shortly, if they're not in it already. I visited all those institutions, all four of them, and I know their situation. I know the plight they're in. They're not any longer cutting fat, they're now cutting muscle. They're now cutting programs, and they're now into a cycle that's going to be difficult to stop. When you cut a course, that makes the institution not quite as attractive as it was before and then enrolments decline. And when enrolments decline because of the formula funding we have for universities in this province, you're cut back further from less funding. So it's a never-ending cycle.

Mr. Grande: No wonder the students refuse to go to universities. We are losing them.

Mr. Cooke: I think what we have to do is to look very seriously at the method of funding for universities in this province. We have to go into something different from the formula funding, which not only penalizes small universities by declining enrolment, but also creates competition between universities. We see now advertisements by the University of Toronto, by York University, by Windsor University—all the universities—attempts to compete with each other. You can't blame them, because the formula funding encourages that, but the fact is they are competing with taxpayers' money.

I've said it before and I'll say it again: I don't mind Ford competing with Chrysler and GM, with their money, but I don't like the idea of taxpayers' money being spent to compete among public institutions. I think that's a misuse of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Grande: As long as they compete with one another they won't put pressure on the government.

Mr. Cooke: The other sad thing about the present situation is that the universities, when they are competing with each other for bodies, are competing for the same 62 per cent of grade 13 graduates who have always attended university. The participation rate among working-class students has not increased over the last number of years. We have the same types of students attending university today as we had 10 years ago. We have more of them, but the same types.

I would really like to see an effort on the part of this government, by funding. There can be financial incentives for universities to get into special programs to encourage students from working-class families to enter the post-secondary system. But we can get into that in great depth during the debate on the bill to amalgamate the two ministries and the estimates debate that will be coming up shortly.

I want to spend a little bit of time on one institution in particular that has received considerable press but has offered something—

Mr. Grande: I hope the minister will be here for that.

Mr. Gregory: What happened to restraint?

Mr. Cooke: Restraint for what?

Mr. Gregory: What you said in your speech.

Mr. Cooke: I'm sorry, but when one looks at the problems in this province it's difficult for an opposition member to talk for only a short period of time because there are so many of them.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What are the alternatives? There is no alternative but doom and gloom; no ideas, no imagination, no creative ability.

Mr. Gregory: And you have nothing to say anyway.

Mr. Cooke: Ryerson, an institution in this province that has contributed far and beyond what many institutions have contributed, is being starved by provincial funding. Ryerson got only a 5.4 per cent increase in operating grants last year and as a result is suffering and suffering significantly. There was an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail yesterday outlining some of the problems.

Let me read from the throne speech just one short paragraph and then go on to talk about Ryerson just for a few minutes. This is from the throne speech: "The present education structure does not meet fully today's needs for highly skilled persons in the manufacturing and service industries. In answer to this need, my government will implement a comprehensive business and industrial training program involving our secondary schools, colleges, organized labour and the business community."

I would agree with that goal, but I would suggest Ryerson is one institution in this province that produces graduates that are needed in our economy. The programs offered at Ryerson are directly related to the needs in our province and in the economy, and it's quite clear the types of graduates that come from Ryerson are needed in the economy because they're placed in jobs. Their job placement record is second to none in this province. The applications for that institution for first year are something like 12,000 when they can accept just over 3,000.

What is this government doing? In the throne speech it says it's committed to producing students and graduates who are needed in the economy and who come out with practical skills, yet it is starving Ryerson. It is starving them to the point where the president of that institution has indicated that 70 to 100 part-time faculty members are going to have to be laid off this fall unless something changes.

Last year there was quite a fuss made about the metallurgy program that might be cut out of that institution. Thank goodness some interim funding was made available by the institution itself; they went to private industry and got some funding. That is not going to be ongoing funding. That institution is in trouble.

They get funding on the basic income unit which is comparable for Ryerson to an arts and science student. The fact of the matter is, the cost to put a student through Ryerson is much higher than it is for an arts and science student. It is much more expensive because of the equipment needed and because of the low faculty-student ratio which is so very important to an institution like Ryerson.

While the low faculty-student ratio is very important, the fact of the matter is that ratio has increased dramatically over the last number of years. I am trying to locate how much of an increase we have experienced at Ryerson. In 1971-72 the ratio was 14.5 to one at Ryerson. Because of the inadequate funding at that institution, the ratio has now increased to 16.1 to one.

In Britain, where they have quite a number of polytechnics, the ratio is eight to one. I would suggest to you that if a polytechnic is going to turn out quality graduates, we have to have a small faculty-student ratio in order to make sure what they learn can be very intense and a number of hours of individual attention that an instructor can give to the student is available.

In ending, I would like to say over the next number of weeks the Ryerson issue will be raised time and time again. I am looking forward to the day the Minister of Education returns to the House so we can question her on this. I look forward to the debate which will be taking place when the legislation to amalgamate Colleges and Universities and Education comes before this House.

I can indicate to you now, Mr. Speaker, one of the things this party will be attempting to do is to refer the bill to amalgamate the two ministries to the social development committee, so trustees of local boards of education, as well as boards of governors members, presidents of universities and colleges and Ryerson, as well as students, can all come before the social development committee, and talk about the amalgamation and the inadequate funding taking place in our education system in this province.

Education is critical to an industrial strategy. Ryerson is critical to an industrial strategy in this province and in this country and I certainly hope the meeting which will be taking place between Ryerson officials and the Minister of Education in the next few weeks will bear fruit. I hope the government recognizes Ryerson is a unique institution which requires unique attention and unique funding.

I have been very pleased to participate in this throne speech debate and, as I say, I look forward to discussing these issues during question period and debates on particular pieces of legislation.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Kenora.

Mr. Gaunt: Bringing in the heavies again.

Mr. Havrot: Physically or mentally?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It has been some time since I entered a throne debate in this legislature. I checked my records and I believe it is the first time since the Speaker of this House was elevated to his post that I have had the opportunity to speak in a throne debate.

Mr. Gaunt: That's the reason for the bou-tonnière.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I want to take the opportunity to congratulate you, sir, on your selection for that very important post and of course to commend you on the excellent manner in which you have conducted the affairs of this House for the past several months. Sometimes we all share with you the onerous responsibilities you have. We realize your task is not an easy one; it's most difficult on many occasions. I'm sure the compliments you receive from both sides of the House are warranted and certainly justified. I think, Mr. Speaker, your control of the Legislature has been one of justice and fairness. I think as northerners we are doubly proud of your selection. In fact some of us in northern Ontario like to think it's your moose-calling voice that comes to keep law and order in this Legislature—

Mr. Wildman: It's his conductor's voice.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —when those on the other side of the House are so unruly and so noisy.

For that very unique quality you've not only brought pride to your specific area, but I say to you in all sincerity—

Mr. Peterson: How do you feel about John MacBeth?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —you've brought a great deal of pride to all of us who live in northern Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: I will tell you his is the smartest and most successful one. I will tell you that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: On a very serious note: Last fall we in this Legislature lost a very close friend, a colleague, a dedicated public figure. To all of us he was just a great guy. I'm sure you realize I'm referring to the late John Rhodes, the former member for Sault Ste. Marie.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, he was a very close friend of mine. He was my seatmate in this Legislature. He was my parliamentary assistant for a number of years and one on whom I depended for a great deal of support, consultation and advice on many northern issues.

I want the record to show that it has been several months since he passed away. I also want the record to show very clearly that those of us in this Legislature have not forgotten him. We have not forgotten his wit, we have not forgotten his humour, his sincerity, his love for his community and for his province. I can assure his wife and family that he will be ever remembered by those of us in this Legislature.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The late John Rhodes has been replaced in this Legislature by a very able individual by the sound-thinking people of Sault Ste. Marie. He is a northerner who has excelled not only in his own community, but right across northern Ontario and indeed the entire province.

I want to extend to him my very personal compliments on his victory in that very important by-election. I also wish to compliment him on his maiden speech in this Legislature, when he seconded the speech from the throne. Following that speech, I had the pleasure of mingling with my colleagues and some of the members of the opposition. I want to put on the record today a comment I heard after the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Ramsay) made his maiden speech. The comment was, "another northern star has been born." I'm sure you'll agree with me when I say there is a long and productive career ahead for the new member for Sault Ste. Marie in this Legislature.

I also want to take this opportunity to commend the efforts of our other new member, the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson). His excellent presentation during his motion for accepting the speech from the throne was certainly indicative of the type of remarks and presentations we in this Legislature have been used to accepting from the riding of Chatham-Kent—truly in Chatham-Kent style. I predict too, that he will have a long, fruitful and productive life here in the Legislature, as did his predecessor, Darcy McKeough.

Earlier tonight, I believe one of the former speakers mentioned that the by-election was one in which he could take pride, one in which his party had elected two members.

Mr. Wildman: Elie is going to take a little more than that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I just want to put on the record some facts and figures that clearly display that the Progressive Conservative Party of this province is on the upswing again.

Mr. Martel: You ran on Ian Deans' shirt-tail and name.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We fought the Chatham-Kent by-election with success.

Mr. Wildman: You even used our colours.

Mr. Martel: Since when did you use yellow and brown?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We fought the Sault Ste. Marie by-election with success and I can say that we fought the Wentworth by-election with, indeed, a great deal of success—

Mr. Martel: That is why our guys are here and yours are sitting at home.

Mr. Hennessy: No violence, Elie, no violence.

Mr. Martel: That is the kind of success I like.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —because in 1975 the New Democratic Party member was elected by some 9,000 plurality.

Mr. Wildman: How much did Darcy win by compared to Watson?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In 1977 the New Democratic Party representative was elected by a 10,000 plurality and in 1979, in this by-election, he was elected by about a 400 plurality.

Mr. Martel: Will you give us the same figures for Chatham-Kent?

Mr. Wildman: Will you give us the same figures for Chatham-Kent?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The trend is truly there; the swing is to the Tory party of Ontario in the last three by-elections.

I am most pleased that we on this side of the House—

Mr. Cooke: Tell us about Chatham-Kent.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —can take a great deal of pride in the quality of the candidates that we had and the success that they have shown at the polls today—

Mr. Martel: Our guys will be sitting here and yours will be at home.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —and I know the members behind me want to extend to both of those candidates our sincerest congratulations and, of course, compliments on their efforts.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We'll win them next time.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We certainly will. The trend is there and I would predict that following the results of Chatham-Kent and Sault Ste. Marie and, indeed, of Wentworth—

Mr. Wildman: You had two before and we had two before. Now you have still got two and we have got two.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —that we will not see from the other side of the House any thrust for a provincial election until, as my leader said, 1981.

Mr. Havrot: We will have another rump there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They will be scared to go to the polls because the trend is there, the feeling out there is for those of us on this side of the Legislature.

Mr. Martel: Come out now and vote on Monday.

Mr. Worton: How far out?

Mr. Martel: Come and vote on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Two-two; four-zero.

Mr. Martel: I like that.

Mr. Wildman: You had two before and we had two. We have still got two.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I am most pleased to take part in this debate on the speech from the throne, a speech which in my view was one of the most thoughtful expressions of concern for the future of Ontario we have heard in this House for some time.

Her Honour has presented us with a number of challenges which all of us in this House, I am sure, wish to consider carefully as we approach the current session of this Legislature.

Mr. Wildman: The Year of the Child.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The first of these is a concern for the continued economic viability of Ontario as a leader among provinces in pointing directions which other jurisdictions may wish to pursue. She has stressed to us the need to re-assess our goals, our priorities and our ways of looking at our economy, our social concerns and our place within Confederation, and she has challenged us to be both realistic and responsive to the changes which have taken place all around us.

These changes are reflected in increasingly difficult world markets upon which we have normally relied, particularly in the United States, and which are changing in response to new pressures placed upon the United States and are reflected in inflation, energy shortages and loss of its competitive position in key industries.

All members of this House share a number of concerns, regardless of our political affiliation. We all wish to see greater strides to ensure social and economic justice for all our citizens of this province. We all wish to see a greater utilization of the wealth to guarantee to those less able to provide for themselves a fair share of our provincial wealth.

Mr. Martel: But?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We wish to see a greater equalization of services to all regions of this province; the north, the eastern and western regions, so that our programs are equally available to all our citizens. Where we differ we do so because of the different priorities which we place on those to be achieved and the means that are best suited to achieve them.

As a northerner, I am particularly concerned about the needs of my constituents and all those who live in small communities, some of them isolated communities, such as Sachigo—well known to you, Mr. Speaker—Ogoki, Deer Lake, Big Trout Lake, Armstrong, Nakina, Minaki, my own home town of Hudson, which do not as yet have a municipal organization able to represent their citizens in day-to-day dealings with the provincial government. I am concerned also with the larger northern communities, such as Atikokan, Manitouwadge, Marathon, Dryden and Kenora, all of which depend on a single-resource for a major part of their employment opportunities and their economic viability.

Hudson is perhaps an excellent example of a community which has known prosperity and adversity from the time it was founded to serve as a transportation base for supplies being shipped to the Red Lake gold camp, a role which has long since vanished. For a number of years Hudson existed as a dormitory community to Sioux Lookout until a viable forest product company began operations. Since then it has known every fluctuation in the woods industry—at times prosperous, at times holding and hoping that an upturn in the market would occur before the inevitable shutdown.

Like other small communities, Hudson's single forestry industry has known a number of owners, some better than others in their understanding of how to operate in the north. But through all these experiences the community and its people developed a degree of resourcefulness, independence of spirit, and determination to survive.

Mr. Martel: In desperation.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Sometimes. Growing up in a community such as Hudson has brought home to me the fundamentally important role government plays in the day-to-day lives of people. Governments that are remote from the north cannot possibly understand the concerns of its people or respond to the changing forces of the economy. Changes of only a few cents in the value of minerals, timber products, fur prices, fish prices, higher gasoline and heating oil costs, hydro costs and taxation policies can mean the difference between employment and unemployment, a sound community industry or no industry at all.

If northerners place a higher priority on jobs in primary-resource industries than other citizens of this province, it is because we have lived through literally dozens of fluctuations in our economy. We know all too well the consequences of changes in world prices for minerals. Northerners also feel a strong loyalty to the land, its resources and the part these resources play in the economy of Canada as a whole. We also feel a strong sense of community identity and, more often than not, we tend to return to our home community to live and raise our families.

It is because of this pride in being northerners that we at times look impatiently upon our critics in other parts of this province who seem to feel that we exist for their pleasure—a fishing resource to be kept for them, a wilderness to be screened from development for their interests and for their needs, not our own. Because of the vast distances which separate northern communities from each other and from our provincial capital, we have traditionally felt neglected, isolated and apart from the decision-making process of the government.

When I was first elected to this House in 1966, I travelled back and forth to my constituency by train. Because of the travel time—about 30 hours—I was only able to go home a few times each year. Today I can travel to Kenora, Dryden, Sioux Lookout or Hudson each week. All of these communities are as far from Toronto as Halifax, Nova Scotia, or Memphis, Tennessee, or Tampa, Florida. That this is possible reflects a significant change which has taken place within Ontario and here at Queen's Park in basic attitudes towards the north.

Over the past number of years this government has listened to the needs of northerners more carefully than any previous administration in history. The Premier of this province, during the years that he served as Minister of Education, was a frequent visitor to the north. He showed his interest and his concern through support he gave us in providing funding for educational institutions which are now equal to any in Ontario; by holding cabinet meetings in the north; policy field meetings in the north; meetings with the chambers of commerce; with unions in the north; and with municipal associations. In many other ways, this government has shown its concern and its interest in the north, an interest which has been reflected in new highways, new airstrips, new hospitals, new telecommunications installations, and sewer and water projects in many small communities. Perhaps most important, this government has affirmed the right of northerners to participate directly in the decision-making process.

I also feel northern members of this House have worked well together in putting forward the needs of the north; members like yourself, Mr. Speaker, the member for Rainy River, and the members for Sudbury and Algoma-Manitoulin. Indeed, all the members on this side of the House have put forward policy suggestions which have been reflected in the decisions this House has taken to benefit northerners.

As I mentioned earlier we have differences about our priorities. I feel the emphasis Her Honour has placed on the need to promote the economic wellbeing of the province as a whole by strengthening the private sector, deregulating government programs and encouraging plant modernization in the pulp and paper industry, is of fundamental importance.

Right now, in my own riding, the Reed mill at Dryden is a source of great concern, not only to this government and to the members of this House, but to all the residents of Dryden and northern Ontario. The Reed mill is the main employer of that community, and the wealth which it creates is the base economy for that entire community. This mill, like a great many others in this province, is an old mill which needs to be modernized and made more efficient, not only to protect the environment of the north but to be competitive in today's market.

I must confess to a certain impatience, which I share with the residents of Dryden, when I have to listen to the critics of Reed because of the narrowness of a vision they have of the needs of this community. Indeed, at times there is a callous disregard of these needs. There are some here in the south who would like to see this mill closed because they do not like the Reed company; or because of a narrow political point of view that Reed, because it's a foreign-based multinational company, should be kicked out of Canada and the mill taken over by Ontario.

I am far less interested in the base operation of Reed or the location of its boardroom than I am in making sure this company behaves as a responsible corporate citizen, obeys the laws of this country and the laws of this province; and provides social and economic security for the many thousands of people who are its employees and who serve them.

Right now the company, like other pulp and paper companies, is enjoying a mild period of prosperity; not because it has been able to modernize its plants and lower its costs, but because of the weakening Canadian dollar. This is small comfort for a government or a Reed employee. If our paper industry cannot get its house in order right now, there is very little likelihood that it will survive the inevitable downturn that will come when the dollar strengthens and we again have to compete against mills in the United States which are newer and have considerably lower wood costs than our mills can achieve.

To be realistic, the time has come for government to take a longer view of the needs, not of this industry, but of the men and women who make up its work force—people who live in the north and are determined to continue living in the north. If the government listens to some critics of this industry who would hobble it, nationalize it or destroy it in some other way for the sake of environmental purity, this would have catastrophic consequences on literally dozens of small communities such as Dryden. Nor do I believe it is the proper role of government to take over major resource industries and invest hundreds of millions of public dollars, obtained through taxation, to do what the private sector can do best, if given leadership by government.

Mr. Wildman: And yet you are giving them grants.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The time has come for government to take advantage of the profitability this industry is now experiencing to require that some of these profits now be reinvested to help guarantee that Dryden, Kenora, the mill at Sault Ste. Marie and many other communities, will continue to have a pulp and paper industry for many years from now on.

Mr. Wildman: What about the sawmills?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, the sawmills too.

The formula which the government has developed — a formula of assistance on the ratio of $1 for every $3 invested by the company—is I feel a responsible position to take, providing that the government remains in control of the direction of these investment funds to ensure that the public's long-term interest in these mills is protected.

A few weeks ago members of the resources development committee heard Mayor Tommy Jones of Dryden put the case for his community in his very eloquent terms. I felt that the committee listened carefully to him and I congratulate both the chairman of that committee and its members for the concern they showed for the needs of the town of Dryden.

At that time Mayor Jones suggested that members of the committee visit Dryden and see the town for themselves, visit the Reed mill and meet local residents to clarify in their own minds the needs of this community. I support Mayor Jones in this suggestion. I would invite any interested members of this Legislature to visit Dryden and to spend enough time in the area to visit other communities as well, communities such as Minaki—we all know what's going on in Minaki.

Mr. Martel: Yes, nothing.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There will be, just give us a few weeks.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You will be sorry you said that, Elie.

Mr. Martel: Will I? I hope so. Did you get a buyer?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is another community solely dependent upon a single resource industry, the tourist industry. And Atikokan in the riding of my friend from Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) a community experiencing the consequences of depletion of mining resources. We can take a Nordair 737 and fly first to the riding of the new member for Sault Ste. Marie—

Mr. Lawlor: Surely a minister of the crown doesn't read his speeches?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Oh, this one is so important I had to get it on the record. I didn't want to get interjections from the opposition, so I thought I would put my remarks down and make sure that they were properly recorded.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you just hand them to her and she will record them and have them printed in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And then to the riding of the new member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy) and then land at the Dryden municipal airport in my own riding. However, we will have to book well in advance, because Nordair is now generating 20 per cent more traffic on this run than Transair did a year ago—

Mr. Wildman: Because it's owned by the government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—and despite the fact that they are using larger aircraft it is not always easy to get a seat.

Mr. Martel: Good government project, eh?

Mr. Wildman: Joe Clark wants to sell Nordair.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would hope the members of the House would come to Dryden before any hard decisions are taken which could affect the well-being of that community.

I would hope the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) would come with us; he has said he would. It would add to his knowledge and his understanding of the north and perhaps it would help him to develop a more sympathetic and more flexible attitude to the basic needs of northerners.

Mr. Peterson: He knows more about the north than you will ever know. He can understand more in five minutes than you will ever learn in a year.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The Leader of the Opposition, I believe, made a trip to Sault Ste. Marie and said he hoped he would never have to return.

An hon. member: That was Transair!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: With all his weaknesses and all his faults, I still extend my invitation to him to visit northeastern Ontario and northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: What about Minaki Lodge?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Minaki Lodge? I said earlier today, sir, that the member for Erie would be first on my list of those to be invited, because it's going to be a gala opening in the not too distant future.

In her speech Her Honour also recognized the strategic importance of tourism to the Ontario economy. She noted that last year this industry experienced a 16 per cent growth in revenue. The government has committed itself to an expanded promotional program instituted by my former colleague and that great northerner, the late John Rhodes. The "We treat you royally" program has been accepted by this industry as one of the most effective promotional programs this province has ever known.

This past weekend I had the opportunity of visiting the Minneapolis sports show to meet all the tourist operators from northern Ontario who are participating in this year's show. If the enthusiasm that they reflected from the response they are receiving in Minneapolis and a few weeks ago at Milwaukee translates into border crossings and bookings at our camps, the northwest tourism operators, in 1979, will have one of the best years they have known.

[10:00]

Many of the operators were displaying "We treat you royally" badges and other badges distributed by my ministry—"Travel north", "Fish north" and many others.

Tourism in the north is everyone's business. The retail merchants, the restaurant owners, the automobile service attendants; all profit from tourism. What has been lacking has been a training program for employees in this industry and this year the government intends to offer training programs for 25,000 of these people.

After leaving Minneapolis I went to Thunder Bay to announce there the capital highway construction program for this year, which was also announced in Sault Ste. Marie by my colleague and parliamentary assistant, the member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane).

Mr. Peterson: Another great Canadian, John Lane.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In this House you will recall that my colleague the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) made a similar announcement.

Mr. Haggerty: Tell us about your new office in—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This year's highway construction projects total $52,000,000—a significant increase over last year, about $1,500,000. The total value of projects, including those initiated last year, comes to approximately $90,000,000.

I might say that in addition to the $52,000,000 which was in the regular highway capital construction program, we in the Ministry of Northern Affairs—for your information, Mr. Speaker, since I'm sure those of us who live in northern Ontario would be interested to know this—my ministry will add from the regional priority budget another $11,000,000. So we can see about $63,000,000 of new construction begun in the north in this fiscal year.

The lack of an adequate transportation policy for the north restrained our development for decades, as we all know. Not too long ago travel between communities was severely and seriously restricted, just because it took so long to travel the dusty, gravel roads which separated us.

In the far north, residents of our isolated communities did not have a year-round source of supply because they were dependent on float-equipped or ski-equipped aircraft. This year three more of these communities will have their first air strip—Deer Lake, Sachigo and Ogoki.

You would be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, because I believe Ogoki is in your own riding, that we will be parachuting bulldozers into Ogoki, through an arrangement with the federal government. It is the only means of getting equipment into that community. Also in your riding, we will be extending the length of the air strip at Pickle Lake.

Mr. Haggerty: Any new fire trucks?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. We will also pave the highway shoulders from Keewatin to the Manitoba border. We will widen more miles of the Red Lake road; we will build 16 new passing lanes throughout the north and we will improve air strip facilities at Geraldton—all important parts of a dramatically improved transportation network for the north.

Just as northerners in this province have needs which are unique to them, so too have the residents of southern Ontario who account for by far the majority of the citizens of this province. Very similar conditions exist in our sister provinces.

In recognition of our common concerns, ministers responsible for northern affairs met for the first time last fall in Fort McMurray, Alberta. The conference resulted from a number of visits I had made to ministers in several provinces of Canada shortly after the Ministry of Northern Affairs was established. I'm particularly pleased to announce that Ontario will host a similar conference at Thunder Bay from September 5 to September 7 of this year, again focusing attention on northern Ontario. These conferences are designed to be relatively informal to permit ministers to share with each other both the problems they encounter and the steps each is taking to deal with them. Last fall was our first meeting.

A great deal of discussion centred on identifying our major concerns. Some approaches taken in other jurisdictions differ from those taken in this province in the degree to which responsibility is assumed by the province for the administration of unorganized communities. Some provinces emphasize a co-ordinating role; others, direct administration; and some provinces designate regional development priorities as a major focus of attention. Our approach in the Ministry of Northern Affairs was to attempt to achieve a balance between direct financial responsibility for projects we identified as being of importance to northern communities, such as our regional priorities program, our highway capital program, the access roads program, and encouraging development of local service boards made up of local residents.

Mr. Haggerty: What about that nickel policy for—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It will come.

Mr. Grande: Is that a rose in your lapel there?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's a beautiful carnation to celebrate our success in Wentworth tonight.

We will have an opportunity to discuss each of these approaches in greater detail at another time, but I think it is important, in the context of this debate, to point out the approach that we have taken in this House. The establishment of the Ministry of Northern Affairs has given us perhaps the most comprehensive and effective means of dealing with the unique needs of the north to be found anywhere in Canada.

This ministry, which I am pleased to head, is only two years old and has a long way to go before we'll be able to fully assess the wisdom of the course we have taken. However, it is also the first time any government in this country has attempted to respond so directly to the individual needs of a region.

Mr. Haggerty: What have you done?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Our staff is small in numbers and I hope it will always remain small, because we are not, and should not be, attempting to duplicate the responsibility of other ministries.

Mr. Haggerty: Time.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Time? Where was I?

Mr. Cureatz: Your staff; you hope it stays small.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We certainly don't want to duplicate the responsibilities of other ministries of government which appear to be taking any responsibility away from municipal governments and boards. We see ourselves as a catalyst for northern communities, providing the necessary financial resources to make things happen that otherwise would not be funded at all, such as participation in the Hornepayne Mall; the development of municipal medical clinics; a bursary program for medical and dental students—programs which cut across each of the policy fields and other ministries and which are designed by northerners to benefit northerners. Undoubtedly, we will make mistakes. We are far from perfect, as I am reminded from time to time by members of this House. But we are trying, to the best of our ability, to work with each community, whether it has an organized structure or not.

We have worked closely with the federal government's DREE program. Last year I was pleased to sign, on behalf of the province, DREE subsidiary agreements totalling more than $90,000,000 for essential services in the north. These Ontario DREE projects are currently important for the north and they provide both governments with a greater degree of flexibility in meeting local needs than has ever been the case in the past.

We can, on the one hand, share the cost of the upgrading of the airport at Kenora, owned and operated by the federal government; on the other hand, we can invest millions of dollars in sewer and water services. I do not feel we in Ontario have benefited as generously as we should in the DREE program. I have made this point on a number of occasions with officials from the federal government, and I intend to pursue this matter further after May 22.

Speaking about the May 22 event, I just want to make a brief comment concerning my period as a backbencher and as a member of the select committee on election laws. I have to admit I was a little taken aback when I read the Prime Minister's announcement that there would be a federal election on May 22. When I read further that this was a 59-day election campaign and it would cost this country in excess of $50,000,000, and when I recalled the 37 days the statutes allow for the calling of a provincial election in this province, it struck me very very forcibly that the time period is far too long.

As all members realize, since those statutes went into place and those laws went into the record books we have television coverage of both legislatures; the House of Commons has the daily debates televised right across Canada. I think it is fair to say the members of the House of Commons, and indeed the members of this Legislature, are receiving far more resources today than they did five or 10 years ago to assist them in communicating with their constituents on a regular basis.

As members are well aware, the transportation system of this province and this country has improved tremendously. It is no longer difficult to get from Ottawa to Vancouver or from Toronto to Kenora. We can do that in a minimum amount of time. We can move very effectively around this country and this province.

Mr. Haggerty: That's not by air from Niagara. It takes three hours to get to Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Our airstrip development program in the remote areas of northern Ontario makes it much easier for all candidates of all parties to move around. I am convinced that 59 days for an election campaign at the federal scene and 37 days at the provincial scene are far in excess of what is needed. Something like 30 days for a federal election campaign would be more realistic.

Mr. Haggerty: Nineteen days.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It struck me more forcibly than ever because I had to say to myself, what else can they possibly say? We have been on the verge of a federal election now for 18 months? The leaders have said it all; what else can they say? They'll first repeat what they said in the last 18 months.

I am in a similar position to those across this Legislature and across this province.

Mr. Gaunt: How are you going to vote?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: My mind is made up.

Mr. Wildman: What are you going to do for Ralph Stewart?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They don't need 59 days to tell me how to vote. We as legislators should recognize the intelligence of the public out there. They don't need 59 days to be convinced how to vote.

Mr. Peterson: It's not the intelligence of the electorate of Ontario you should be worried about.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, we are not.

Mr. Wildman: It is going to take the Tories 59 days to make Ralph Stewart the candidate in Cochrane.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are doing an injustice to the public out there. They are more intelligent than that.

Mr. Peterson: There is no question about that. They are much smarter than you are.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We as legislators should start recognizing that and shorten up that period. Other jurisdictions have two-week and three-week elections, and we should have that too. That is my feeling.

Mr. Grande: Is that the essence of your speech?

Mr. Peterson: What are you going to do about Ralph Stewart? That is what I really want to know from you. Will you trade him for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. (Mr. Grossman)?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No way. Never, never.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Thanks.

Mr. Wildman: What about Jack Horner?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The late Jack Horner?

Mr. Wildman: The question is, will Clark appoint Ralph Stewart to the Vatican?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, when I say we have a great deal of catching up to do all over northern Ontario. I hear suggestions in this House that more attention should be paid to the need for secondary industry in northern Ontario. It is true, but unless essential services such as sewer and water, highways, airports, schools and hospitals are in place—not just planned but in place—it is impossible to have a viable secondary industry locate in northern Ontario.

In North Bay and in Sault Ste. Marie we are funding industrial parks, and also in Parry Sound, as members are very much aware. We are improving the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. We have expanded new ferry service from Tobermory to Manitoulin Island. I could go on at length as it relates to those particular items.

We have a long way to go before we can be satisfied that the needs of northern Ontario are completely met. As I have said, I would like to see a much greater interest in the needs of northern Ontario on the part of the federal government. I will say on that point, Mr. Speaker, as you are from northwestern Ontario, we have consistently returned federal Liberals to the House of Commons. Believe me, you know what we get from the federal government. They close up a post office here and there and they give us a wharf. They give us a little dock once in a while. That is about all we get in northern Ontario.

I would predict to the men in the opposition across the way that there will be a change in northern Ontario this year, there will be a change. We have had it right up to here.

Mr. Haggerty: Now you sound like Rene Levesque.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, not a new province, but a new way of thinking when it comes to selecting our representatives.

[10:15]

As I said, I would like to see a much greater interest in the needs of northern Ontario on the part of the federal government. I would like this interest reflected in development dollars which we are prepared to match on an equal basis, on a 50-50 basis.

We need improved telecommunications throughout the north. Far too many communities are locked into one television channel. That is not good enough in the year 1979.

We need to pay more attention to the needs of the agricultural industry in northern Ontario. We can develop outstanding beef herds but we need more research to develop seed strain that can thrive in a northern climate. We need to develop cereals, such as wild rice, to benefit the entire north.

Until northerners enjoy the same level of public services as are taken for granted in the south, until more of our isolated and unorganized communities feel their interests are being taken into account in the decisions of this House, we cannot relax our efforts one bit.

Mr. Haggerty: It's your government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The major interests of northerners are the same today as they have been for many years.

Mr. Haggerty: They were promised jobs by the government for seven years.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They are job security, community stability and an improved quality of life to attract and keep a well-trained, efficient, workforce.

I feel we must do a great deal more to attract northerners who have left to seek post-secondary education elsewhere back to northern Ontario. There are new opportunities for professional people in the north. Through my ministry's bursary program for doctors and dentists, I hope to show young people that they can have the same economic opportunities in these areas as others living closer to our professional training facilities.

I am pleased that Her Honour's speech highlighted the need to improve training programs for skilled workers. Never before has there been a greater demand for skilled, highly-trained workers in the various trades in the mining and the pulp and paper industries than there is today.

We have excellent training facilities at Confederation College, Lakehead University, Algoma College in Sault Ste. Marie, at Laurentian University at Sudbury and many other schools and facilities in northern Ontario. We must find new ways to train more and more young people, born and raised in the north, who will now have the opportunity to benefit from these educational institutions so that they can take advantage of existing employment opportunities there.

It is also a major responsibility of the government to do its part to guarantee that the communities in which these young people will live are modern, attractive and well planned communities in which they can live with satisfaction. To do this, we must be able to respond to the needs as they arise, to build access roads, arenas, industrial parks, medical and dental clinics, and fund our regional priorities budget so that we can make it happen.

In 1971, this government accepted the recommendations of Design for Development, phase II—a program blueprint for development of northwestern Ontario for two decades. The report called for the creation of 18,000 new jobs over a 20-year period, a target which some felt was too high and unrealistic. Yet within the first five years more than 10,000 new jobs were created in northern Ontario.

Since 1971, major mining companies have invested more than $220,000,000 and created 1,100 new jobs. Very recently, Mr. Speaker, as you may be very much aware, the Campbell Red Lake gold mine announced a $10,000,000 expansion for its mine at Red Lake and the creation of another 50 jobs.

Since 1971, 11 new sawmills and particle board plants have been built in northwestern Ontario. Two pulp mills have undertaken major expansion programs and one new pulp and paper plant has been built. Together, these projects alone have accounted for the creation of 3,000 new jobs in this region of Ontario.

Clearly, the private sector has an important role to play in the north. It can provide new jobs and create new wealth for Ontario and for Canada. Our responsibility, as legislators, is to assist the private sector to do the job that it can do best and provide the climate of stability and confidence which attracts new capital investment.

We must also continue to provide the essential services to the small communities necessary to attract and keep a well trained labour force on projects; such as those which have been undertaken to provide major services to communities such as Thunder Bay, Dryden, Kenora, Ear Falls, Red Lake, Ignace, Pickle Lake, Nakina and Geraldton funded from our regional priorities budget. These have already gone a long way towards the goal of revitalizing northern towns and communities.

We have also taken important steps since 1971 to strengthen the financial base of northern Ontario municipalities through the provision of support grants equal to 18 per cent of the municipal tax base over and above the normal funding provided to all municipalities.

Among other grant and support programs initiated by this government are full provincial coverage of the cost of various forms of social assistance for those living in unorganized areas, special grants to community hospitals, a special grant formula applied to Ontario-funded programs to libraries and community recreational centres to compensate for higher costs in northern Ontario.

Nine years ago the government established the Northern Ontario Development Corporation to assist tourist operators and manufacturing companies. The corporation has lent more than $35,000,000 to industries and has transformed the quality of many small businesses throughout the north. The corporation is a lender of last resort, assisting businesses that banks cannot help; yet our success ratio is so high that we have been able to maintain an interest rate considerably below market rates or those offered by the Federal Business Development Bank.

The needs of our native people have always been a high priority of this government's northern policy. Since 1971 this government has provided telecommunications services to many remote areas of northern Ontario, including the isolated communities north of the 50th parallel. Today, if you wish to visit Big Trout Lake, Sandy Lake or almost any other remote community, you can telephone throughout Canada via satellite and you will see colour television sets. Neither of these existed before this government's northern policy came into effect. I invite the members opposite to come up there this summer with me to see it for themselves.

Mr. Peterson: We would all very much enjoy visiting you.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Would you, seriously?

Mr. Peterson: We would; we are very fond of you.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well come on, gentlemen. Each member has financial resources to go anywhere in the province, to take four trips a year, which will allow you to go into northern Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: What is your address, because I am going to come to your house for dinner. I want to come to your place.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If the members are sincere and want to do something for that great resource base part of this province, then I will see them up there this summer. I will look forward to it.

Mr. Peterson: We want to come to your house in person. What is your address?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Just go to northern Ontario. They will tell the member where I am. They know me up there.

Mr. Peterson: They will say you are down south.

Mr. Gaunt: Northwestern or northeastern?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Anywhere. Native people are employed to maintain and operate remote community airstrips, built and paid for by the Ontario government. We have provided funds through the municipal assistance program to maintain and improve roads within native communities. Through the northern assistance program and the rural and native housing program, we have attempted to meet the housing needs of our native people. We have instituted programs to train native teachers and classroom assistants and to provide other assistance to those students who attend secondary schools away from their home community.

Despite the fact that the needs of our native people are supposed to be met by the federal government, we have not taken a narrow, legalistic approach to the problems which they confront in their own communities or when they leave to live and work in other communities. We have been prepared to provide assistance to municipalities to aid them in responding to the needs of native people. We are making a sincere effort to try to find ways and means—

Mr. Martel: Is this a filibuster?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —of extending all provincial government services to native communities.

Mr. Martel: I am waiting for my money.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have worked closely and well with both Treaty 3 and Treaty 9 councils to help them achieve their goals on behalf of the communities they represent.

One of our most successful programs across the north has been establishment of 29 Northern Affairs offices. Each is equipped with well-trained Telex operators who are in regular contact each day with all departments of the provincial government, and with the federal government as well. This program was intended to deal directly with personal needs of northerners, particularly those living in the smaller centres. Lack of an adequate communications link with the provincial government has always been a major factor, at times very critical for those of us who live north of Parry Sound.

Through our Northern Affairs offices and the many satellite offices that have been located in small communities, almost everyone in the north now has immediate contact with Queen's Park. Answers to questions can normally be obtained within 24 hours at no cost to the individual. While we do not receive any reimbursement from the federal government, we will assist persons applying for federal assistance such as unemployment insurance benefits, Canada Pension Plan benefits, passport applications—indeed, any matter at all that it is within our capacity to handle.

Northern Affairs officers have been encouraged to work closely with volunteer organizations wherever they are located. I am sure that all northern members of this House know who their local officer is and respect him highly for the effort he is making on behalf of his or her constituents.

Since 1971 the government has moved in a number of major ways to overcome long-standing grievances of northerners. We have made major strides in transportation, communication, housing, community planning, economic planning, industrial development, greater equality of opportunity for young people in education, trade training and accessibility of post-secondary institutions.

We still have a long way to go. My own ministry exists for the sole purpose of working daily with every community in the north, regardless of its size, to try to respond as quickly as possible to the needs as they arise, to correct mistakes and to recommend ways in which provincial programs can be made more relevant to the needs of northerners.

There is more we would like to do and could do, of course, if funds were available. But a start has been made. As Her Honour's speech points out, a strong economy is the base on which social programs can grow. I would like to feel that when this session of the Ontario Legislature ends we will have taken the necessary steps to guarantee the future of communities such as Dryden and Atikokan, the quality of life for unorganized communities such as Hudson and Armstrong, and provide better communications for the whole of the north and attract more professionals—more doctors and more dentists, more nurse practitioners, just to name three groups who would be encouraged to live and of course work in northern Ontario.

Finally, on a somewhat lighter note, I would like to remind the members of this House as we approach the final games of the National Hockey League, the Kenora Thistles, believe it or not, won a Stanley Cup back in 1907. Who knows, with continued prosperity and with the help of Wintario funds and a little luck, Kenora might come back into the league some day and bring the Stanley Cup back home to northern Ontario.

On motion by Mr. Blundy, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, honourable members will know that the report of the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability has made 165 recommendations designed to address the problems it has discovered in the management of the federal government. I am delighted by the thrust of the recommendations and have asked my staff for an extensive review of the report in the hope that some of the recommendations can be used to strengthen our own management system.

As members will recall, this commission was established by the federal government about two years ago in response to warnings by the auditor general that the federal government had lost, or was close to losing, control of the public purse. Although the Lambert commission, as it is called, pertains primarily to the scene in Ottawa, there are several aspects of definite interest in Ontario.

Among the reforms put forward by the Lambert commission is a management control organization patterned on the system that was put in place here in Ontario, following the report on the Committee on Government Productivity in 1972. Using the basic framework of Management Board and cabinet committees, we are continually refining the management process to ensure we have control and that accountability is properly placed. The speech from the throne notes that effective management must be the hallmark of all areas of government operation. Recent organizational changes indicate this government's commitment to better management and fiscal control.

I am not suggesting that all our management problems have been solved at Queen's Park. However, we have learned enough during the past four years of spending restraints to know that if Ottawa is indeed serious about curbing its spending, it must be prepared to adopt some of the control procedures recommended in the report.

Bringing government spending under control is a difficult and painful adjustment that is now being made by governments across the continent. As a note of caution, I would point out that attempting to solve deficit problems on an ad hoc basis without a management control system in place will result in haphazard and abrupt adjustments that could be very damaging to staff morale and program delivery.

The Lambert report has an important message for all levels of the public sector in Canada. I would strongly urge the federal government to act on these recommendations without delay.

NATIONAL STEEL CORPORATION

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as members will recall, National Steel Corporation of Canada Limited announced on January 15 last that it intended to close its Moose Mountain iron-ore operation at Capreol, Ontario, effective April 1, 1979. The decision announced in January was based on an oversupply of iron-ore pellets on the market.

The announcement gave rise to understandable concerns in the town of Capreol where the 250 employees of National Steel constitute a significant portion of the population. In an attempt to avert the April 1 shutdown, the government immediately initiated discussions with National Steel and with the major potential customers in the Ontario market. The Premier (Mr. Davis), the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Crossman) and I intervened personally and were able to arrange a series of meetings to explore marketing possibilities for National Steel.

I am pleased to announce today that the final obstacles to a transaction that will prolong the life of the Moose Mountain operation now have been removed and that an immediate shutdown has been averted. As a result of our discussions, Dominion Foundries and Steel Limited has agreed to purchase a quantity of iron-ore concentrate from the Moose Mountain mine on an experimental basis. If the Moose Mountain concentrate is technically compatible for additional feed to the Sherman mine, Dofasco is prepared to consider placing further orders.

At the same time, National Steel has arranged to ship concentrate to a customer in Detroit, Michigan, again on the same experimental basis and relationship. The combined effect of these two commitments for concentrate will enable the Moose Mountain operation to remain open for a period of time.

The continuation of operations that I have described would not have been possible without the co-operation of National Steel, Dofasco, Canadian National Railways and the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, all of whom have worked together with the Premier's office, my ministry, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and the Ministry of Northern Affairs to ensure that the test product can be shipped on an economic basis. Reasonable concessions were made on all sides and the government, through the Ministry of Northern Affairs, has contributed approximately $25,000 to enable the experimental transactions to go forward.

While I can give no assurances as to what may occur following the testing phase, it is my sincere hope that the parties will be able to come to satisfactory arrangements to permit National Steel to maintain its Capreol operation over the long term. In this regard the government will continue to work with both companies and, in particular, will continue in its endeavours to assist in the location of customers for the iron-ore pellets.

I hope the effort expended in this matter by all concerned not only will preserve employment for Ontarians but also will be seen as evidence of our capacity to work constructively and co-operatively to minimize the economic hardship caused by what I hope are only temporary problems in iron ore market conditions. I want to express my appreciation in particular to the officials of both companies, the railways, the town of Capreol, the local member—

Mr. Foulds: Name him. Elie Martel.

Hon. Mr. Elgie:—interested citizens and the United Steelworkers union, all of whom have played important roles in achieving this result. I look forward to working with all of them in an effort to achieve a permanent solution.

NEW MEMBERS

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, by way of a statement or a matter of personal privilege: I would like to take this occasion to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition—the leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Swart: A Freudian slip. The real opposition.

Mr. Eaton: Pretty close.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am congratulating the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) too.

Mr. Foulds: They were third yesterday, and they're going to be third for a long time to come.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It cost him $1 to the Canadian Cancer Society. There will be no tax receipt, I think.

I also want to express a sincere welcome to the two new members of the Legislature, who I assume are in the gallery this morning. If they are not here—yes, I think they are here. I would like most sincerely to welcome them to the House and congratulate them on their victory.

Before the leader of the New Democratic Party assumes that this means for him a sweep of the province, I would remind him that the majorities were down, in Scarborough West by 60 per cent and in Wentworth by 90 per cent. As they say in Britain, if that trend continues we'll have a majority government. But, most sincerely, I welcome the new members.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I saw a button yesterday in Scarborough West that said, "Make April 5 a PC day." I want to tell you April 5 was NDP day, and it is with great pleasure I introduce two men who are in the gallery today but who will shortly be making their mark as MPPs in this House: Colin Isaacs for Wentworth and Richard Johnston for Scarborough West, the new MPPs for the New Democratic Party.

I want to assure the Premier that his Freudian slip didn't go far enough, because I have aspirations not just to that particular position but to the Premier's job itself. I look forward to the day when I can bequeath this particular chair to the Premier. We are working at it.

I would remind the House that the share of the votes we had in the ridings of Scarborough West and Wentworth was identical to the share of the vote that has the Conservatives in government right now. What we intend to do is simply emulate that across Ontario and we will shortly be on that side of the House.

Mr. S. Smith: Being Friday morning, it seems I ought to say something as well. I want to congratulate the two gentlemen in the gallery for having waged strong campaigns in each riding. They were very clean campaigns and I certainly want to congratulate them on their victory.

I might just say, with regard to the aspirations of the leader of the third party, as he is considering these aspirations he might consider that one out of every three voters who voted New Democrat in those two ridings in 1977 voted for one of the other two parties this time, and our vote increased by a factor of 50 to 60 per cent in each riding.

Mr. McClellan: You have lost four straight by-elections.

Mr. Wildman: Zero for four.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Will the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) be here, Mr. Premier?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The minister is, unfortunately—I was going to say under the weather; if you had come from Brampton this morning you would understand that. No, he is not well this morning.

Mr. S. Smith: Sick?

Mr. Cassidy: We are sick of him as well.

Mr. Wildman: His doctor opted out.

Mr. Peterson: Is he at home or in the hospital?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Ambulatory care, is that how you describe it? Ambulatory care, or whatever.

Mr. McClellan: Chronic care would be more appropriate.

Mr. S. Smith: I hope he is getting some kind of care that isn't ambulatory or any other kind of tory.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: In the absence of the Minister of Energy yesterday, the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) put a question to the Premier. I think it is important that the question be reput, because I don't believe the essence of the question was responded to yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What do you mean? How can you make that accusation?

Mr. S. Smith: Could I ask the minister if he is aware of reports within Ontario Hydro that are called Internal Significant Event Reports and which deal with problems that arise from time to time with regard to the nuclear stations?

Is he aware of these reports and does the minister in fact see these reports? Do they come to his attention on a regular basis? If he does, can he comment on them in the House and tell us what assurance he takes from them? If he doesn't, does he not agree it is something he should be seeing on a regular basis?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am aware of the reports but I don't see them on a regular basis. They are mainly of a technical nature. They are given to the Atomic Energy Control Board,

I believe, on roughly a daily basis and then they are filed in the public reference library so that any member wishing to see them can go down to the Hydro library and see them.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister tell us what assurances he may have taken from these reports and, more specifically, can the minister make a statement with regard to the boiler at Pickering and the nature of the problem there that has led to a delay? Was this an anticipated delay or was this something that has been rethought in view of recent events?
[10:15]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will have more information, some of it of a technical nature, on the boilers at the Pickering second-unit construction site on Tuesday. I can tell the honourable member that in routine testing of the boilers late last fall there was some concern because the boilers for the new unit there are of a slightly changed design and a different metal, I believe, to those for the first part of Pickering and the first part of Bruce. As a result of the testing, the manufacturers were notified to stop construction about mid-December until there was a little further look at them.

There has been further inspection and testing by Hydro. I would assume the Atomic Energy Control Board is aware of this too because I believe the same style of boiler was to be used in La Prade, in the new plant in Quebec and in the new one in the Maritimes. I'm not in a position at the moment to say exactly what the solution is or what further action will be taken, but I can assure the House that this has no connection with the event in the US. It came to notice, as I say, in mid-December last year.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: I had difficulty hearing what the minister was saying. Was he talking about the boilers?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Correct.

Mr. Sargent: The Babcock boilers? I have knowledge that there is a series of happenings with dates on them that is of great concern to me as a citizen. If he has seen these reports, would the minister be so good as to supply the Leader of the Opposition and both parties with copies of these reports as they come out. I know they're classified as secret, but what is more important at this point than that the members of the Legislature know what's going on in this very serious field?

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are down in the Hydro library. Read them on the weekend.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I said, all the member has to do is walk down the street and they are in Hydro's reference library. They are not secret reports.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Take them home.

Hon. W. Newman: Why don't you do some reading for a change?

Mr. Sargent: That's a deal.

[Later (10:59):]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make it very clear, because I didn't—

Mrs. Campbell: You never do.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What's new about that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —and repeat what I said the other day in the statement. The boilers the Leader of the Opposition was asking me about are, of course, of quite a different design from the boilers I believe the same firm designed and manufactured for the plant it built in Pennsylvania.

[Reverting (10:17):]

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. S. Smith: In the absence of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and given that the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) is probably unaware of these matters, I'll ask the Premier—

Mr. McClellan: You can be sure she's unaware of them. She is unaware of everything.

Mr. S. Smith: —whether he is being forced to rethink the way in which his minister is applying holus-bolus across Ontario certain so-called bed ratios. Given, for instance, the problem reported at the Queensway Hospital, where an administrator within the Ministry of Health says no complaint was ever made, though we were told, and so was the newspaper told, that the complaint was made last July that people are being treated in the emergency room instead of in hospital beds, can the Premier give us some assurance that he will look again at the matter of chronic care specifically, recognizing there are scores of patients in acute hospital beds who should be in chronic beds and that that's causing a backup and a misutilization of facilities all the way down the line.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the minister has said repeatedly that where the need for additional chronic beds can be identified the ministry would move in to assist. This is the situation at Queensway.

Mr. McClellan: He says it but he doesn't do it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am informed that some ministry staff will be at Queensway today—

Mr. Wildman: Only five or six months late.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —discussing with the administration the proper placement of chronic-care patients.

Mr. Foulds: It's a problem at Thunder Bay too.

Mr. McClellan: Why weren't they sent out in July?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I also understand the West Park Chronic Hospital will be opening in July this year. It is in the same general area.

Mr. Foulds: Why don't you wait until it opens before you cut back on active-treatment beds?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It will have about 154 chronic beds.

I'm not sure of the exact geographic location, but it's quite clear that the minister has said in those areas where needs are identified, to the extent it is humanly possible, we will be moving in the direction of providing chronic-bed facilities. As I say, the staff of the ministry will be out at Queensway today discussing with the administration ways and means by which they can help to resolve the situation.

Mr. S. Smith: I recognize that the Premier obviously can't possibly know what every civil servant in every ministry is doing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Only 90 per cent.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right. His mandarins keep him informed as to the marionettes in the other ministries. Could the Premier ask the Minister of Health to explain to us how it could be that Mr. Keillor within the ministry would say the Queensway never complained about this and never brought this matter to the ministry's attention, when Mr. Box, the administrator there, has confirmed yet again this morning that the matter was dealt with in a letter to the minister in July and was responded to by a sort of noncommittal letter from the minister in July? Would the minister, therefore, tell the House how it could happen that a member of his ministry would say that no complaint had ever been received?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sure the minister would be delighted to deal with that on Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. McClellan: You are going to leave him hanging by himself.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition is quite right. I only know what goes on with about 90 per cent of the public servants. I am well informed by my office staff. I would just say that the marionettes or martinets are over there, not in the Premier's office.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that people in Thunder Bay have brought this question of backups in emergency wards to the attention of the government in the last couple of months; that the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) has brought the matter to the attention of the government in relation to backups in emergency wards at the Scarborough General Hospital; that the same thing is happening at St. Joseph's Hospital in Peterborough; that the people in Hôtel Dieu Hospital in Windsor brought the matter to my attention when I was in Windsor two weeks ago; that these backups in emergency wards are now occurring in hospitals all across Ontario, and in view of the fact that the government is intending to cut a further 1,272 hospital beds just in Metropolitan Toronto alone and more than 4,000 hospital beds across Ontario—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the honourable member come to the question?

Mr. Cassidy: —can the Premier explain whether it is the government's intention that emergency-ward backups are going to become a chronic condition in every hospital of the province and, if not, how does the government intend to cut all these beds and not have these kinds of situations occurring in every hospital to the grave detriment of the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not the intention of the government to have this situation develop.

Mr. Warner: It is just happening by accident. Do something about it.

Mr. Cassidy: If the Premier says that is not the intention of the government, will he acknowledge that is a result of the government's policy, and will he explain why it is that in Etobicoke, where the specific situation at Queensway Hospital is taking place, there is not now in a borough of more than 300,000 people one single chronic-care bed? Why is the government making people back up for emergency beds in the hospitals in Etobicoke, when there is no provision at all in that community for chronic-care patients?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not our intention to have chronic-care people in the emergency part of any hospital.

Mr. McClellan: Why is it happening?

Mr. Mackenzie: You haven't got an answer.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: I have another question about health for the Premier.

Mr. Gregory: I hope it is better than the first one.

Mr. Swart: I hope the answer is.

Mr. Cassidy: We are looking for some answers in health and we are not getting them from the government these days. In view of the fact that the Ministry of Health has been monitoring the opting out by physicians and by specialists in different communities across the province for a year now, since the great opting-out binge began, can the Premier explain why it is that the government has not yet responded to questions in this House by tabling information which we have been assured we would have so that the Legislature and the public can have accurate information about how high a degree of opting out by specialists and GPs is taking place in every community of the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the Minister of Health has already dealt with that question.

Mr. McClellan: He hasn't, not to anyone's satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You asked him the identical question.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister of Health has not dealt with it. Having promised the information, he has refused to bring it up. I am asking the Premier, will he not ensure that the information is made available.

As a supplementary, I would ask the Premier, in view of the fact general practitioners are now saying to me and members of my party they cannot reliably refer patients to specialists without knowing which specialists are in OHIP and which are not, and in view of the fact that doctors have been complaining publicly, at medical forums and places like that, that they are having this difficulty because they don't know which specialists are in the plan and which are without and to which, therefore, they can afford to send their patients, will the government exercise its powers and use the information available to OHIP in order to publish lists of doctors who are opted into medicare across the province so that the people of Ontario, as well as physicians of Ontario, can know where to find care at the insured rates?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Once again, I believe the Minister of Health dealt with this almost identical question—

Mr. Warner: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —some few days ago and indicated his conversations with the OMA and ways and means to make it possible for patients and certainly other members of the profession to find which of their colleagues were in or out of OHIP.

I am not as familiar with Metropolitan Toronto, but in the great city of Brampton the members of the medical profession do know which of their colleagues are in and out without any question.

Mr. Warner: Yes, it is just the people.

Mr. Grande: You are not familiar with the people of Ontario.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the Premier indicate whether or not he personally has met in the recent past with the senior officials of the Ontario Medical Association and whether or not during such encounters he has given that group any personal assurances? If that is the case, could he share those personal assurances with this House this morning?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it all depends on how recently the honourable member wishes me to go back in my memory and what he means by "personal assurances." If he can further define that for me I will try to recall just what was said and when.

Mr. Peterson: Fortunately nobody takes them at face value anyway.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How recent is recent?

Mr. Swart: May I ask the Premier whether he personally agrees or disagrees with a reply sent by Mr. C. J. Friday, the claims manager, Hamilton district office, to Mr. Gerry Michaud, the insurance representative of local 199 UAW in St. Catharines, when he was sent a list of physicians for the city of Welland by Mr. Michaud and asked if he would tick off those who have opted out and return the list at his earliest convenience?

Mr. Friday replied: "We are only allowed to furnish information in regard to the person who provided the service or to the person who received the service. I am, therefore, returning your list of doctors and respectfully suggest that they be contacted individually or through their local medical academy."

Does the Premier not agree personally that the people of St. Catharines and the people of Welland should have the right to know through OHIP whether their doctors are in or out of OHIP?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The honourable member has asked me whether I personally agree with a letter that was sent by a member of the ministry to the—

Mr. Swart: No, the reply.

Mr. Warner: The reply.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said a letter that was sent from a member of the ministry. A letter is a reply; a reply is a letter. Are we talking about the same thing?

Mr. T. P. Reid: A letter from you is not a reply.

Hon. Mr. Davis: A reply from me is a reply. It may not be the kind of reply the member always wants, but it is a reply.

I would say, not being totally familiar with it, that I assume the ministry official is acting within the general framework or policy of the ministry, so I would agree with him operating within that framework. As to the policy itself, I would have to think this thing out to see whether or not it is an appropriate policy and—

Mr. Swart: Do you agree with that framework?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I am sure the minister would be delighted to deal with it. But certainly I agree with an official of the ministry dealing within the existing policy of the ministry.

Mr. Swart: Do you agree with the policy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would also point out to the honourable member if he, as I know he does so actively, works on behalf of his constituents, there are probably X number of doctors on that list. It would be the simplest thing in the world for him to accommodate his constituents, make half a dozen phone calls and get them the answer.

Mr. Swart: But they won't answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure, they will. Call the doctors; they will tell you.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the basic approach of medicare when it was introduced in Ontario was that every Ontario resident should have medical services without having to pay extra over the insured rates, can the Premier say whether he now agrees with that principle which underlies medicare? If so, what steps will the Premier take to ensure medicare is provided to every citizen in the province without his being forced to pay extra?

[10:30]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the basic principles with respect to medicare have changed from the day the program was introduced until today.

Mr. Swart: You believe in the people having to pay.

Mr. Wildman: You haven't believed in it all along.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The government is in the process of dealing with the profession to resolve those problems.

Mr. Warner: Nonsense.

HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Energy. Since Ontario Hydro has now deferred its decisions on system expansion for another couple of weeks, and since those decisions may also be influenced by the consequences of the accident in the United States, and since its expansion is going to be financed by borrowing on the credit of the province of Ontario to the tune of close to $2,000,000,000 a year, has the minister informed himself of the benefits in terms of conservation and saving of energy of a major program of home insulation in Ontario? Is he aware that such a program could reinsulate every home in Ontario in 10 years and create 8,000 jobs in the process? What action will the government take to bring in that kind of conservation program in order that we can start energy saving in a world increasingly short of it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I believe Hydro indicated about a month ago they would be reviewing their expansion program or their construction program, and as expected would be making some decisions and announcing them at the next meeting, which I believe is next Monday or Tuesday.

As far as a home insulation program is concerned, the honourable member is aware of the Canadian Home Insulation Program that the government of Canada initiated some time ago and which has had a slow start, as I understand it, but is proceeding.

As far as a major program of insulation by the province is concerned, we have looked at this. My predecessor has made statements about it in the past. I should remind the honourable members this province, I think, was the first to remove the provincial sales tax from insulating materials, which has encouraged sales. I have to say I have benefited from that myself and I am still in the process of doing a little further insulation in my own house. I can tell the honourable members the greatest incentive I have found is a month ago I got a notice from the gas company saying my 12-month billing was being reduced by $22 a month because our consumption had dropped considerably. That is the greatest incentive I have had so far and I commend this to the honourable members.

We are in the process, and the process has speeded up—the federal election may only be a coincidence—of negotiating with the government of Canada on a program. It will be worth about $58,000,000, a very broad, jointly shared program in terms of conservation, energy from waste, and a variety of programs. I think we are on a good route.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain why this government made a solemn promise in the 1977 election campaign that there would be a $100,000,000 program of low-interest loans for insulation for home owners and residents of Ontario and backed down on that election promise at a time of increasing energy shortages in Ontario and in the world? Isn't it time for the government now to reconsider that abandonment and to bring back such a program so we do, in fact, start to save energy by insulation and conservation in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, my recollection on that is that the government was looking at a program—

Mr. Cassidy: It was a promise.

Hon. Mr. Auld:—and the federal government went ahead with one so we felt it was not necessary for us to do so.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: The minister will recall, of course, this issue was discussed at great length in the last campaign and his response was the government had no place in the attics of our nation. A very catchy piece of rhetoric.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I said that.

Mr. Peterson: I want to ask the minister this question because it is serious.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Please do.

Mr. Peterson: Would you consider entering into discussions with the energy distributors—principally the oil distributors and the gas distributors in this province, but there are more, obviously—to develop a program whereby they can assist in the upfront capitalization payment for insulation, then pay it back over a period of time along with the monthly energy bill? Would the minister discuss that kind of program with the distributors, so that there is not necessarily a large front-end financial burden for people who want to insulate but who can't afford the upfront cost? Would he consider that kind of imaginative program and discuss it, then come back to this House with some kind of proposal along these lines?

Mr. MacDonald: That is a steal from the NDP program.

Mr. S. Smith: That was our platform in 1977. Why don't you go back and look at it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, consideration has been given to that kind of scheme in the past. It may well be one of the things that will be discussed again with the feds.

The real question, of course, is who is going to subsidize the interest rate? And if, in fact, we are going to subsidize insulation, what is the best method of subsidizing the people who need it most?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the federal CHIP, on which the minister is resting his case, involves only older housing and provides loans for only part of the cost and not the whole cost, would the minister explain now how the government can argue that Ontario can't afford to get into an insulation program, when such an insulation program would create large numbers of jobs and cost far less than the $1,800,000,000 a year Hydro is now spending on new investments in generating stations?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I don't know that I can put it any more clearly than I did to the member for London Centre. I have just been given a reminder, which I can mention at this time, that we understand Consumers' Gas has entered into such a program in Toronto. I can't give the details of the interest rate et cetera, but I think something in the order of 50,000 people have taken advantage of it.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a switch from oil.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I want to say it is my privilege to receive a certain amount of equalization from the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) in return for the results of last night's campaign, and my colleague from Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) expects to receive likewise from the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. New question.

HUMAN RIGHTS CASES

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. Does the minister condone the procedures of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, whereby a complainant is forced to take an instant, on-the-spot decision to proceed with or to drop a complaint? The minister is frowning; should I repeat the question?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Yes, would you mind? There is some noise.

Mr. Peterson: Oh, just take it under advisement.

Mr. McGuigan: The problem is when a complainant is asked by caseworkers whether or not he should accept an offer from a respondent without the complainant having the opportunity to look at the files to see whether the file items are correct, misleading or circumstantial in nature. The complainant has to make an instant decision, and it is rather unfair to put people in that position. The adviser has the experience of his position and all the information available to him, while the complainant does not.

Does the minister feel this is fair, especially in the field of human rights, where the very act is meant to counteract such situations?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, I would like to comment on the fairness of the activities of the human rights commission. I think no one should suggest, and I don't think you are suggesting, that they don't endeavour to be fair. I have never met a group of people who are more dedicated and who try to be fair to the utmost of their ability.

But that doesn't mean one should always be concerned about the fairness of the process. It was for that reason that the chairman and I did have a meeting about a month and a half ago. She is conducting a review of the process within the commission, with the very point that my friend has brought up in mind. I cannot tell the member the results of that review at the moment, but I want him to know I share his concern. However, I emphasize I am very proud of the fairness the employees of the commission demonstrate and have demonstrated.

Mr. McGuigan: I wish to assure the minister we are not concerned about the fairness of his employees but about the procedure.

Could the minister speed up this decision so that any changes could be made very quickly and so we do not have to wait until the complete revision of the code is brought in?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It was for that very reason that I did meet with the chairman one and a half or two months ago.

GO TRANSIT SERVICE CONTRACT

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Could the minister inform the House as to results of meetings he has held concerning the Canadian National employees who are members of local 76 of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers and whose jobs may be lost as a result of GO Transit inviting bids to supply the services that these employees have been providing for many years?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour and I did meet with representatives of the Ontario Federation of Labour and the CN employees' union about a week ago, I guess, it was, and I expect to be meeting with them again, perhaps next week.

Mr. Mackenzie: Can the minister assure the House that these 80-odd employees, who have been performing these jobs for many years, are not going to find themselves deprived of their jobs as a result of these bids?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I cannot assure the honourable member that there will be no changes in the procedure of operating the ticket offices for GO Transit. The new contract that was signed last year between Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority and Canadian National provided for the phasing out or the changing of the lakeshore line from CN employees to TATOA employees or others.

The way the TATOA organization is set up, with it growing and with the new line that will be coming on stream in about two years, I think it is necessary for TATOA to make some changes in its operation.

What I did say to the representatives of the union was that we would give consideration to a different system, some method of phasing this out over a period of time, so that these employees could be phased back into the CN organization. They are CN employees and, of course, they have their union security with the CN union. The number is about 80, of whom I believe about 25 are almost at retirement age. I think we can work out something that will be satisfactory to the union and to TATOA.

Mr. Mackenzie: Does the minister not recognize the very point he makes about the seniority of some of these members and that, where the livelihoods of 80 people with some time on the job are at stake, part of the condition of any such arrangement should be that it is not the workers involved who are going to suffer as the result of whatever rationalization is being done in the operation?

Hon. Mr. Snow: The Minister of Labour and I are certainly taking this whole matter very seriously as far as the workers are concerned. I am sure, as I said, we will come up with a solution that will not be a hardship on the workers.

[10:45]

PENSION FUNDS

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations; he is reflecting on liquor prices, I guess, but I want to ask him a very serious question. In view of the difficulties experienced by the workers at the Prestolite plant in Sarnia, with which he is familiar, I'm sure, and given that this points out some of the fundamental inadequacies in the pension legislation in this province, which I will go into if he would ask me—

Mr. Mackenzie: What about portable public pensions? Do you support that? That would resolve it.

Mr. Peterson:—given the fact we have had two or three or four ministers dallying in this subject—

Mr. McClellan: What about portable pensions, David?

Mr. Peterson:—the former Minister of Industry and Tourism, the Minister of Labour and so on—none of whom has revealed any comprehension or concern for the subject—I want to ask the minister very seriously how he views the situation. Is he prepared to bring in legislation to change some of the inadequacies in the legislation or the regulations affecting private pension plans in this province?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, Mr. Speaker, like the honourable member, I view the matter very seriously. I don't think it's a question of inadequacy—

Mr. McClellan: Sure it is. We don't have totally portable pensions.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't think it's a question of inadequacy.

Mr. McClellan: You're wrong.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There have been a great number of changes in the industrial sector that simply weren't there a number of years ago, not the least of which has been the very heavy burden of inflation, particularly when it is a management-funded program.

Mr. Peterson: You've been aware of that for quite a while.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, I have been aware of it. The member wanted to know how I felt about it and I'm trying to answer him. Then we'll come into what he wants—

Mr. Sargent: How do you feel about it?

Hon. Mr. Drea:—and at the end of it he is going to get exactly what he wants.

Hon. W. Newman: Right between the eyes.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, no. He is quite right. It is a very serious matter. It does give me very deep concern, particularly with the rationalization of industry, the fact that more and more mergers are coming.

Mr. Mackenzie: Rationalization—that means scuttle the workers.

Mr. McClellan: The two of you should keep it to yourselves.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Sometimes the mergers are effected in other jurisdictions. There is quite a rapid rationalization here. Also, in terms of the private pension industry this has been held out to the average Canadian as a way he can hedge against inflation, whether it is management-funded or whether he makes his own contributions.

I have no doubt that within the next 12 months there will be significant legislation that will bring the private pension industry—its regulations, the administration and so forth—into the general industrial sphere at this time.

As members know, for some time there has been a royal commission into pensions. That commission has been compiling a great deal of data.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It is almost pensionable now.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It has been taking a very serious look, particularly in terms of inflation accounting, inflation contribution.

Mr. McClellan: We hope it's an improvement.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am looking forward to that report. I think on the basis of that report it is reasonable to assume that very shortly thereafter there will be very significant legislation regarding private pension funding in Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: I welcome the minister's assurances. I can assure him it's the most positive thing I have heard from the ministries.

Mr. McClellan: You don't know what he is going to propose.

Mr. Swart: He backs off.

Mr. Foulds: It's good enough for a Liberal.

Mr. Peterson: But apart from the problem of these massive unfunded liabilities, one of the central problems, as I see it, is that the general level of knowledge is so dismally low in this complicated area. Would he not feel, even before the legislation comes down—

Mr. Foulds: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't worry about that.

Mr. Peterson: Shut up—part of his responsibility would be to bring some kind of public education in this matter? For example, I am referring to forcing disclosure, involving beneficiaries on pension fund management, to allow a much higher degree of knowledge and awareness of some of these fundamental issues. When it comes right down to it, as I'm sure he would agree, many of the choices today are society's choices.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Mr. McClellan: He should write a book on the subject.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In reply to the honourable member, first of all, I don't think there is much more need for education in a large sector of private industry—

Mr. McClellan: What we need is decent pensions.

Hon. Mr. Drea:—where the pension program is part of the collective agreement or an appendix to it. Regardless of how the plan is funded, the person, through his labour organization does have professional access and explanation.

One of the difficulties is that some of the pension agreements, even where there is a labour organization, were entered into at a time when there was resistance to the labour organization having participation in, or at least an overview of, the plan. It's in those areas that there is some difficulty.

Secondly, a large body of private industrial pension funding is in industry or commerce where there is no formal collective agreement. It is a matter of some concern to me. I have asked, and I will ask again, in terms of the work of the royal commission if it might not on an interim basis provide suggestions as to what might be proper guidelines or proper disclosure.

What concerns me, and I'm sure the honourable member shares the concern with me, is that one can disclose quite accurately the terms, contents, conditions and so forth of a pension plan. Yet to the ordinary person who is going to be the beneficiary, what may look good may not be good and what doesn't look good is good.

Mr. Conway: Run that one through again.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would like to try to come up with something that is understandable and that people can base their future upon because that is the real reason they're involved in these things. I will ask the pension commission, perhaps prior to its report, to do some work on this. I would be glad to share that with the members because this is one area that I think is everybody's concern in this House. The only time a person finds out whether there are any deficiencies in the plan is when there is a plant closing or a forced early retirement. By that time it's too late for the individual to plan how to adjust.

Mr. Peterson: But the minister can do something about it.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: For all of the reasons he's raised, would the minister also take a look at the issue of portability in all private pension plans in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The question of portability is one of the terms of reference, if I understand it correctly, of the royal commission into pensions. I think there has been considerable work done in that area in the past few months because the commission has been ongoing for some time.

BELL CANADA RATES

Mr. Swart: My question is of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In view of Bell Canada's net profits increasing by 37 per cent last year over the previous year, from $288,000,000 to $395,000,000 and in view of yesterday's report of the consultative committee on the implications of telecommunications for Canadian sovereignty, saying that long-distance rates are too high, will he make application to CRTC to reduce Bell Canada's rates in this province, particularly the long-distance rates?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I have no plans to make such an application to the CRTC. About each year for the last number of years, Bell Canada has been making applications to the CRTC for rate adjustments. When this takes place, we are represented at those hearings. Ontario does intervene to make sure to what degree we can that rates are not approved that are higher than necessary for the financing, expansion and level of service that the people of Ontario require from Bell Canada. I haven't seen the report the member refers to, but I have no plans to make such an intervention at this time.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that Bell Canada received far more revenue last year than it estimated it would on the increase it received in rates? Is he not aware that CRTC itself does not do any investigation. Application has to be made by some other source if rates are going to be reduced.

Is he also not aware that in Florida an order was issued to return $41,000,000 to the consumers by Bell Telephone because it had made excess profits, when our rates in this province are 50 to 100 per cent higher than they are in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta where the provinces operate the telephone system? Doesn't he think he should use the clout of his ministry to make some effort to reduce rates here and keep down Bell Canada's profit in line with the increase in wages and salaries?

Mr. Warner: Let's have a good answer.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker. I guess that's the only answer I can give him.

Mr. Mackenzie: The profiteering is allowed. Controlled wages, but profiteering is okay.

Mr. Swart: The great protector of the consumers.

ATIKOKAN HYDRO PLANT

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy and Natural Resources, or Natural Resources and Energy, relating to the Ontario Hydro plant at Atikokan. Since Hydro is going to be making its decision on Monday as to whether to proceed with that plant, can the minister inform the House what procedures will follow its decision? Will that decision then go to the minister and the cabinet for either final approval or change? If the decision of Hydro is not to go ahead with that plant, will the minister and the cabinet have a meeting with the people of Atikokan to discuss the final decision?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In answer to the first part of the honourable member's question, depending on what the board decides there might be no further approval required from the government. If it had to do with additional transmission lines and some of the things which were in the seven alternatives which I believe they showed the select committee, a variety of things would have to happen. There would be environmental assessments and hearings and then final approval by the government.

If they simply proceed with the things which have already received the necessary approval—and all the projects in their program have to one extent or another—then there would be no further action needed from the government. In the event that they decide not to go ahead with Atikokan, certainly the government would be involved again with the community in looking for other things to happen there, but I think statements by some ministers of the government have indicated that the government would be happy to see Hydro go ahead with Atikokan. I'm sure they must have read those statements themselves.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: The minister mentioned the transmission line. Is he aware that at a recent meeting, in Sault Ste. Marie I believe, an advisory committee came to the conclusion that if Hydro went ahead with the transmission line between the east and west systems the planning itself, and the environmental assessment and so on, would take until about 1987, and construction another three or four or perhaps even five years? Is the minister aware, therefore, that we're already underpowered, if I may use that term, in northwestern Ontario and that the alternative of a transmission line between the east and west systems cannot be built in a time frame to assure northwestern Ontario of uninterrupted power?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have indicated to Hydro, and our staff has indicated to Hydro's staff, that processes for new transmission lines could be quite lengthy. I'm sure they are aware of that themselves from their experience to date. Nobody should be banking on the assumption that a new line would be built in any particular time frame.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: Is it not accurate that the cabinet has already considered Hydro's proposals for cancellation and/or stretching out of the construction program of other plants, and if so, has the minister made recommendations to Hydro as to what the cabinet's views are, since they have not only a power generating objective but also, in some areas, a regional development objective?

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I mentioned, statements by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) indicated not only to Hydro but to everybody what the government's preferences would be.

Mr. Sargent: I have a supplementary about additional plants. Mr. Mueller, a senior adviser to the Ontario government on energy matters said this morning that Hydro does plan more nuclear plants. Will the minister confirm that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There are two additions. In the program discussed by the Hydro board at its last meeting on which I assume a decision will be made at the meeting next week, there was one new plant, Darlington, additions to two existing plants, and a new lignite plant in Atikokan.

Mr. Sargent: Are these nuclear plants?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes. Darlington is a nuclear plant. That is the only totally new plant they are planning of which I am aware.

Last summer they were looking at sites in various places; eastern Ontario, sort of mid-Ontario, was one; and Georgian Bay near Sault Ste. Marie was another general area. They were looking at sites which might be expanded from one to several plants over a period of years. In the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning interim report Dr. Porter recommended, based on his information, Hydro should only be looking at three more nuclear plants between now and the year 2000.

As far as I am aware, Hydro has not made any announcements of any plans for those three plants, if in fact, those three plants are needed.

Mr. Wildman: Is it not correct that Hydro is going ahead with site acquisition along the North Channel site at Burton Island and if that is the case, what does this mean? Is this purely landbanking, or are they going ahead with their plans for the new plant?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think the honourable member knows as much about it as I do.

Mr. Foulds: Probably more.

Hon. Mr. Auld: They have indicated they are still looking at landbanking, because of the long time frame involved in acquiring a site and the transmission corridor that will connect that site with the existing network. The size of the site is the question at the moment.

I am not aware when that site will be acquired, or whether it will be optioned, or what will happen, because Hydro, as I am sure all honourable members are aware, have been reviewing their future program.

The same thing applies in eastern Ontario not too far from my own riding. There is a great concern on the part of people there to know what is going to happen in the future. Hydro has indicated they hope to have some definitive answer on those two matters this summer.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. Foulds: I have a question of urgent public importance. I regret that it must be directed to the Minister of Energy, but here goes.

Does the minister recall the statement his predecessor made on June 5, 1978, when he announced the Canada-Ontario radioactive waste management program? One of the points made in that statement, and I quote from it, was: "The government of Ontario has insisted that it be consulted at each step and that its prior approval be obtained for all activities leading to a site in Ontario."

In view of that statement, is the minister aware of, and has the government of Ontario given approval for, the statement made yesterday by Egon Frech, the public relations director of AECL's Whiteshell program that the Canada-Ontario nuclear fuel waste management co-ordinating committee would be approving a test drilling site in or near Atikokan next week? Can he confirm or deny that and is the minister now ready to level with this Legislature and tell the public which two to four sites have been decided on for drilling for a possible nuclear waste disposal site in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I hope the honourable member is not implying that I don't level with this House because I do and I am accused of doing it at some length on occasion. I read that announcement and I believe I discussed this question in answer to another question earlier this week about what was happening. I think it was from the member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's right.

Mr. Foulds: But you didn't answer.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really can't add anything to that. We have approved and all the honourable members who might be affected have been interviewed by the team from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited as to their public participation procedures.

Mr. MacDonald: But has a decision been made?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I believe there have been discussions in Atikokan and as soon as I am personally aware of the approval of the community and if there is to be a test drilling site project there, I imagine that I would approve it because it is a test drilling project, not a test burying of nuclear waste project. I, also, believe that there will be several other sites where they hope to do the same thing providing that they get the approval of the community to do that kind of test drilling.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister tell us whether or not he knows at this moment which sites have been decided on? Can he reveal those sites to this House? If he cannot, can he explain what lack of communication and breakdown of Ontario's authority has taken place in view of the former Minister of Energy's statement last June and Mr. Frech's statement that they are planning to approve a site in the Atikokan area next week?

Mr. T. P. Reid: I asked that question the other day.

Mr. Foulds: You didn't get an answer on Tuesday either.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The information about the other sites they are looking at I don't have with me but I believe we have it. I will certainly dig it out and report to the House, perhaps on Tuesday.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Would the minister consider, when he's getting that information, if he would table in the House the procedures that pertain between AECL, the Ministry of Energy and the government as to what Ontario's responsibility is in these matters so that we can be informed of the input of the provincial government?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will do that, Mr. Speaker. I believe that my predecessor had indicated that at the time the agreement was made with the federal agency but I'll get it updated.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you know now?

Mr. Foulds: Does the minister not find it disturbing that a public relations spokesman for AECL should make such a definitive statement that indicates clearly a site has been selected for drilling when the minister does not know and is not in a position to inform this House or the public definitively?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am assuming that the community has agreed because I know there have been discussions going on with the community there. I just don't happen to know what the latest status is as far as pieces of paper are concerned in Energy, but I will find out.

Mr. Foulds: But the committee of which you're a member is supposed to approve it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: But let us again remember that we are talking about test drilling, we are not talking about test storage.

Mr. Foulds: I understand that.

Mr. Cassidy: It's more than pieces of paper.

EMPLOYMENT OF HANDICAPPED

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Minister of Labour and Manpower. Will the minister, at this time or in the near future introduce amendments to the Human Rights Code or accept my bill, Bill 21, an act to amend it, to eliminate discrimination in employment on the basis of a physical handicap where the handicap doesn't preclude the reasonable performance of that particular employment?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, the member knows very well this government's commitment to that very issue he's raised and, as I said in the House last week, it remains my intention to introduce certain amendments to that legislation after they have gone through the regular legislative consideration and the process that always occurs.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: As we are approaching the warm weather months and job opportunities improve, is the minister aware that the big three automotive manufacturers are very reluctant to employ the handicapped, even though the handicapped may be able to perform the jobs to a reasonable degree of satisfaction?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Yes, I was aware of that.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us what we are to say to people with certain forms of epilepsy, for instance, whose doctors say that they are not disabled in the sense that they can perform jobs but who continue to be discriminated against in the work place because we don't have that Ontario Human Rights Code amendment? And will the minister undertake to bring forward an amendment to the Human Rights Code, to bring forward a revised code, whatever he likes, but something to get that in there in this session, before we rise for the summer? I know there are touchy issues involved, but let him have the courage to bring it forward.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I try to tell people such as the member has described the very same thing he does—that is, that they should not be discriminated against—and the commitment that I have given the member is the one that I have just given to his colleague and that I have repeated before. That is, it remains my intention, and it has always been the government's intention with regard to the class of disability we have spoken about, to deal with it.

Mrs. Campbell: After 37 years?

MINISTRY OFFICE MOVE

Hon. W. Newman: On a point of order: In the interest of all members of the Legislature, I would just like to point out that starting as of Monday, the Minister of Agriculture and Food's office will be located at 801 Bay Street.

Mr. S. Smith: That is not a point of order. It is a point of disorder.

Mr. Gaunt: We have already been down there, Bill.

Mr. Peterson: Can you imagine Bill Newman on Bay Street?

REPORT

GOLD FUTURES CONTRACTS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with section 20 of the Securities Act, I am tabling today an order issued by the Ontario Securities Commission authorizing the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange to trade prospectus-free its proposed call options on gold futures contracts. The commission's reason in the matter is set out fully in the order.

If I might just elaborate on that, the commission's order, which is dated January 15 but was released in early March, permits prospectus-free trading of exchange-traded call options on the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange's gold futures contract by securities and commodity brokers who are registered under the Securities Act. The forms of prospectus provided for in the regulations to the act do not lend themselves to these instruments.

Instead, more meaningful disclosure will be provided the investor by the summary disclosures statement that the order requires be provided him, conditions three and four on page two of the order. The order also imposes on brokers conditions as to proficiency standards—conditions two, 5(1), pages two and three—and supervisory procedures, condition five, page three.

The Winnipeg Commodity Futures Exchange expects to commence trading of these options in late April. Before trading is permitted in Ontario, the conditions of the order will have to be satisfied. This may not prove possible until into May.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MINISTRY OF INDUSTRY AND TOURISM AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 41, An Act to amend the Ministry of Industry and Tourism Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, this is a short housekeeping bill which in essence will allow the ministry to employ residents outside Canada or Ontario to work on behalf of the crown. The second section sets out the authority of the minister to enter contracts and agreements as well as authorizing the minister to delegate this authority to his deputy or other designated officers of the ministry.

SHERIDAN PARK CORPORATION REPEAL ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 42, An Act to repeal the Sheridan Park Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This short bill, which the NDP seems to have some major policy objection to, is a housekeeping measure which—

Mr. Foulds: Abolishes the corporation.

Mr. Warner: Your housekeeping is demolition.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —abolishes the corporation as part of our drive to deregulate and get off the books those items and pieces of legislation which are no longer required.

I would point out to this House that this will dissolve the corporation which has been inactive since March 31, 1971, when all the unsold land at the Sheridan Park Research Centre was acquired by the Ontario Development Corporation. Since that time the Sheridan Park Corporation has not maintained accounts or processed financial transactions. The corporation has no assets or liabilities.

Mr. Foulds: You are not abolishing the research centre?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I might take this opportunity to table the answer to question 91 and the interim answers to questions 97 and 98 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix B, page 828)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be able to take part in the debate on the reply to the speech from the throne. This is my second opportunity to do so. In looking over the speech from the throne which Her Honour delivered, I find it very difficult to reply to such a vague speech.

In this speech the government has very little in the way of programs that are going to answer some of the things and some of the problems that are the most difficult for the people of Ontario to accept at this time. I guess it is the old saying that if the government doesn't have plans and programs to spend massive amounts of money, the throne speech is naturally very dull. It is that; there is no question about it.

But there is one paragraph of the speech which I would like to read in order to begin my comments on it. It is the first paragraph on page three. It reads: "Some may wish to argue as to whether the primary emphasis of this session should be directed to improving the economic climate of Ontario or to improving the social services available to our people. In truth, extensive attention must be given to both."

I say the attention that is required to both of these topics mentioned in that paragraph has not been addressed in the speech from the throne. There is no imaginative program for improving the economic climate in Ontario, the one point that is made in this paragraph. And, instead of improving the social services available to our people, they are being eroded under our very eyes.

I don't know how the government can expect to enjoy, or indeed should have, the attention and the support of the people of Ontario in that kind of vague statement that is not founded in fact. I guess they are trying to fool the people that all is well, but I do not believe they are fooling some of the people. I would suggest the senior citizens of Ontario are not being fooled by that vague statement. The chronically ill in Ontario certainly must be wondering about that, as must be the handicapped people of Ontario. Families with children with various disabilities, particularly children with mental health problems, must also be wondering about those statements.

Let us back up and look at some of the problems I have just mentioned. In our society today we have an increasing percentage each year of people in the over-65 group, and we are surely expected to have programs that are going to be of benefit to these people in order to help them live out their remaining years, one would hope in the community and at least in decent circumstances.

The Ministry of Health has said it is not cutting back or reducing costs in the health service; it is emphasizing different priorities. I wonder what we would hear from those people who are lying in hospital beds that are for people who come in for emergency treatment; those people are lying there, occupying these beds, and not getting the treatment or the atmosphere they should have in an active-treatment bed. I wonder what those people think of the priorities that are being talked about by the Ministry of Health.

St. Joseph's Hospital in Sarnia has recently renovated its fourth floor, south, as a very proper area for the treatment of chronically ill patients; it is known as the chronically ill ward, and I believe it contains 40 beds. The construction, furnishing and equipping of that ward was completed three or four months ago. But as yesterday it had not been opened, because there are not sufficient funds to provide the staffing of the unit.

The fact that these beds are not available is putting great strain on the availability of active-treatment beds, as many people have mentioned in this House, both today and on other days. As a result, the people are having to be cared for in the emergency section of hospitals, awaiting a bed.

The Ministry of Health is not permitting—in most cases, anyway; certainly not in my riding—the issuing of any further permits for nursing home beds. Here we have another problem. The government has said it is looking at new ways of doing this, new priorities and so forth; but, before putting in the alternatives to the existing system, it has started cutting off the advantages of the existing system.

There are people in Ontario who would begin tomorrow to build more nursing home beds. From a conversation I had with a group of people from Bestview Lodges of Ontario I can say that they have been trying to build more nursing home beds but they have been refused, certainly in our area and in most areas of Ontario. They have shipped off about $4,000,000 to Texas where they are able to enter the field without government interference.

On the other hand, the Ministry of Community and Social Services has refused permission to have any additional homes for the aged beds built in our community. So, it seems to me that in this revision of priorities the elderly people are being shuffled out of the deck.

The minister has said there is going to be much more in the way of day care, more in the way of home care, more in the way of outreach programs. That is a splendid idea which I endorse 100 per cent. This is right; we should be able to try to keep elderly people in their homes as long as possible in the community. This is a good program that is being talked about.

But the problem, of course, is that the funding that has been provided thus far for these programs has been completely inadequate to accomplish anything to a marked degree—not enough to accomplish something that is going to offset the disadvantaged position that I have spoken about in the way of chronic care beds, nursing home beds and homes for the aged beds, which of course, are very expensive initially in terms of capital and in continuing cost also.

However, the day care, home care, and outreach programs could be the answer, but thus far have not produced any very great assistance to these people.

The $9.80 co-payment for chronically ill people in hospitals I can see is fair in one respect, since it has been paid by the chronically ill in other institutions such as nursing homes for some time. But when you take that in round figures, say, $300 a month, out of the income of an elderly couple it almost makes it impossible for the spouse of that chronically ill person to continue to maintain his or her home in the community.

This is really flying in the face of what the government has said: They want to establish day care, home care and so forth to keep the elderly in their homes in the community. I suggest to you that the way this $9.80 co-payment is being carried out is defeating the purpose of keeping the elderly in their homes. If that much more money has to be allocated on a daily basis for the care of the one spouse, the other spouse is naturally going to have that much less to pay his or her taxes, energy bills, et cetera. This, as I was saying, needs a great deal of thought, and I would ask that this be looked at very carefully.

Then, in reference to that paragraph I read from the speech from the throne, I come down to children's services, where we are experiencing here again the product of what is known as the restraint program. Here in the International Year of the Child, of which everybody seems so proud, we have a letter from the Deputy Minister of Community and Social Services to the chairman of the board of children's mental health centres. If I may, for a moment, just read a line or two from that letter:

"A number of children's mental health centres, along with other parts of the ministry, will be asked to reduce certain services in order to make funds available for the designated priorities of the ministry." This is really an unusual way to celebrate the International Year of the Child.

This is just one area in the case of the children's mental health centres. It has got people in this service throughout Ontario most anxious and concerned about continuing care for these people. This is what is happening in various other services within the Ministry of Community and Social Services, where one after the other there is talk of cutbacks at a time when we need the services even more than we ever needed them before.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that many of the services provided by the Ministry of Community and Social Services for children, particularly the younger children, are services that would be expected to, and I believe do, head off down the line much greater problems among those children with much greater cost to the people providing the service. I think it is a bit shortsighted to say that certain of these services should be cut.

I think there should be a great deal more emphasis on the prevention of problems among children and early teens. That is only a proper thing to do. But to cut the funding for children's services—In his letter the deputy minister mentions prevention, advocacy, child abuse, foster care, francophone services—the ministry is developing priorities in this area. So members know what that means and I'm afraid the people of Ontario know what that means.

It seems to me this government, which has been in power for so many years in Ontario, has lost its grip on the situations as they affect the people. Back in the late 1950s, the 1960s—the postwar period, generally speaking—and really up until the early 1970s, in this province all systems were go. We had a continually increasing birthrate, we had a continuing amount of immigration into our province, we had increases in the industrial might of the province, and so forth. It seems to me almost anybody could have governed the province and done it well in those days when things were going our way and were building the people and industry and business of this province.

Now, of course, things are different. The birth rate has fallen off markedly; immigration to the province has been reduced considerably. As a matter of fact we are finding an outflow from Ontario to the western provinces, particularly Alberta. There have not been great increases in industry. So all those things that were going for us in the postwar period and right up to the 1970s are not now there. Therefore it takes a lot more to plan wisely and govern wisely for this province.

This government, which has been in power throughout all those years, has lost its grip on the problems that are facing the province. It is not now able to cope with the new problems we find because of the new sets of circumstances in our economy and in our society.

I would also like to speak on the matter of day care. About 50 per cent of women in this province are now working. Many of these women have children. Naturally, in addition to their work—even above their work—they are interested in their children. How can a woman work with a free conscience if she does not know she is able to get adequate and properly supervised day care?

I believe in 1977 there were just under 50,000 licensed child care places in Ontario. It's obvious there are not going to be enough licensed child care places to meet the requirements of the number of mothers who are now working.

The second thing is that it costs a great deal for a woman to provide adequate day care for her children while she is working. This is compounded because the average income for a working woman is in the $8,000 to $8,500 bracket. How can she afford to pay the present prices for day care, a day-care system that does not fully supply the needs of the people anyway? This is one area I believe must be looked at this year, since more and more mothers are returning to the work force, in addition to the 50 per cent of women in Ontario who are already working.

I would like to mention one or two matters that pertain more directly to my own constituency. I hope many of these things will be taken seriously by the government.

In Sarnia, as everyone knows, we have a concentration of petrochemical industries. This is now a healthy, vibrant industry. It embraces the whole gamut of all the major companies in these fields: Imperial Oil Limited, Shell Oil, Sun Oil, Dupont, Dow, Union Carbide, Polysar and Petrosar. They are all operating in Sarnia, in an industry that historically has been volatile and one in which there are many hazards.

We speak today of the hazards in the existing and the coming nuclear field. The petrochemical industry has gone through those hazards in their industry, and now is practically accident-free. They have a competent staff, and are mostly manned by members of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers' International Union, who are dedicated to their job, who are educated for their job and who are performing in complete safety. Seldom is there an accident in this massive industry in Ontario.

The major pipelines from western Canada all come into Sarnia. This industry is growing well, but I want to point out we have a great challenge to the continuing petrochemical industry in Ontario from the province of Alberta, which of course is a natural situation. I would expect any government of Alberta to continue to try to achieve greater eminence in this field.

I would like to point out the government of Ontario must do its part in watching and guarding the needs, the legislative needs of this great industry in Ontario to ensure it has a healthy, competitive situation and that it will be able to continue to prosper for the people of Ontario generally.

The next matter I would like to touch on is the difficulty that the people of Point Edward and Sarnia have encountered with the closing of the Prestolite plant. Prestolite, a company owned by Eltra Corporation of the United States, had been reducing its staff for some time because of a reduction in business but closed the plant at the end of November, 1978; this threw out of work many people whose sole employment record over the years had been with that company. The problem they now are facing, of course, is finding alternative jobs. I really think this matter is one in which the Ministry of Labour and Manpower should take some part in helping these people find alternative jobs.

One problem that is being faced by those people who have retired, or who have had to retire because of the closing of the plant, is the dreadful pension situation. I do not know how any company could get away with having a pension like the one Prestolite had for its employees.

To give you just one example, Mr. Speaker, I will cite the instance of a couple, a man and wife, both of whom were employees of Prestolite. When they retired at the age of 61 and 62 years, they were in receipt of pensions that, added together, came to about $790 or $800 a month. When the plant was closed by Eltra Corporation, and the company fled back to the United States, this couple's combined pension was reduced to $403. One would not think that such a thing could happen in our society today.

I noted that there were questions today by my colleague from London Centre (Mr. Peterson) of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) regarding pensions. The minister did say that many of the things we were talking about—the portability of pensions and so forth—were being discussed by the royal commission in Ottawa. The minister also said there would be some legislation brought in, perhaps within a year.

I hope the minister will hear what I have said about the poor Prestolite pensioners. This one couple I mentioned—it's an absolute fact; I can give him the details of it—were getting about $800 and now are getting $403 together. This is a very important thing for this government to look at, and I hope that, in bringing in the new legislation that the minister mentioned, the government will take recognition of this fact.

No throne speech debate participation by a member from Sarnia riding would be complete unless I talked about the lack of a controlled-access highway from Sarnia to Highway 401. I will very briefly make some comment on that.

I found an old newspaper dated October 1938, 41 years ago, when the Bluewater Bridge between Sarnia and Port Huron was opened. Governor Murphy of Michigan and Premier Hepburn of Ontario met in the middle of the bridge and shook hands. In the events that went on afterwards, the governor and the Premier at that time said that the bridge was one of the major steps to build a controlled-access highway from Chicago to Montreal. That was 41 years ago. That was a very foresighted position to be taken by these two people, the governor of Michigan and the Premier of Ontario. But that was 41 years ago. Even though 41 years have passed, we do not have anything that was spoken about and envisaged by those two people then.

[11:45]

Mr. Ruston: The Tories came in and messed it up.

Mr. Blundy: Yes, that's exactly what I was going to say. The member must have read my notes.

Mr. Ruston: Great minds think alike.

Mr. Blundy: That was back in 1941 and 1938. During the few years remaining in the Hepburn term of office, there were seven miles of dual controlled-access highway completed from the bridge through Sarnia and Sarnia township. That was within five years of the opening of the bridge, when Hepburn's government was in power.

Mr. Hodgson: Who was that? Who was that Hepburn guy you are talking about?

Mr. Ruston: Remember him? That shows your age.

Mr. Blundy: If you look back, you might see many interesting things about that time.

Mr. Ruston: You have to be over 50 to remember him.

Mr. G. I. Miller: We haven't had a change since then?

Mr. Blundy: In the ensuing 36 years since this government has been in power, we haven't really—well, we have the controlled-access highway now to the middle of Warwick township in the county of Lambton, and there it stops. There is work progressing on it, thank God, and I am told by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) that by 1981 we will be able to drive in relative safety to Highway 401.

I mentioned that this road is completed now to the middle of Warwick township, and I would like to interject a very sad note. Only two weeks ago the reeve of Warwick township, John Pedden, and his wife Marie were killed when they got off that road onto Highway 7. They were both instantly killed in a head-on collision after they had gone east of the area served by the highway.

When I look back over the years, there have been scores killed on that two-lane road which carries tremendous traffic, particularly truck traffic coming to the petrochemical industry. There have been scores killed, scores maimed. It was a very sad note that John, the reeve of Warwick for a number of years, and his wife, should have been killed only two weeks ago on that highway.

I have covered a number of my concerns, particularly in the Community and Social Services field, and one or two items that are really important to the people of my riding. I have enjoyed participating in this debate very much, and I hope some of the things said will not fall completely on deaf ears. With that remark, I will close my comments on the throne speech debate.

Mr. Ziemba: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan cost the taxpayers $108,000,000 last year. About half of this money went directly into the pockets of the pharmacists. I suppose the Tory members across the way would see nothing wrong with this because they see it as free enterprise.

The Ontario government manages the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan in such a way that pharmacists get three fees instead of one. The government will pay for a six months' supply of free drugs, but most druggists refuse to fill prescriptions for longer than 30 days. They do this in order to collect as many dispensing fees as they can. Much of the $50,000,000 they pocket in dispensing fees from the plan could be eliminated if druggists would give up their insistence on only giving out prescriptions one month at a time, or if the government ordered them to do so.

Recently, the Premier (Mr. Davis) warned that the province may have to tighten up the plan that provides people over 65 with free prescription drugs because costs are running too high. The Premier said part of the blame lies with doctors who prescribe too much medicine for the elderly. He indicated this results in non-prescription drugs costing much more than if they were simply bought off the pharmacy shelves. However, the abuse is by pharmacists who collect dispensing fees every month by refusing to fill long-term prescriptions.

Many people are on long-term maintenance drugs but still they have to go back to the pharmacy and get their prescriptions renewed every 30 days.

Here is the story of a Toronto woman with a thyroid condition. She takes a drug called eltroxin, two milligrams. The pills cost 1.8 cents each. She used to buy a three-month supply for about $4. Now that she gets free drugs under the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan, she can get only one month's supply at a time. The result: the druggist gets three dispensing fees instead of one. The government picks up the tab for $9.42—more than double what the drug cost when she could get a three-month supply.

The 30-day limit on medication was introduced when the plan covered only welfare recipients. In fact this was the Ontario Pharmacists' Association price for opting into the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan. The government did not want to supply drugs for more than 30 days because they felt the recipient might go back to work and pay for his own drugs at that point.

Since January 1, 1976 the plan has been extended to cover 785,000 senior citizens. The Ministry of Health will pay for a six-month supply for seniors at a slightly higher dispensing fee, but druggists prefer the 30-day limit so that they can charge the extra dispensing fee.

The average prescription last year cost $6.12. Of that amount $3.30, or about half, was for the drug. The other half, $2.82, represented the dispensing fee charged by the druggist. Billings have soared from $69,800,000 in 1976 to $86,600,000 in 1977, and then to $108,000,000 in 1978. As I said earlier, nearly half of this money went directly to the pockets of the pharmacists.

Here is a case of an Etobicoke woman who takes a blood pressure medication called hydrochlorothiazide. She takes only two tablets a week so a bottle of 100 lasts her a full year. Before the woman turned 65 she could buy 100 tablets of hydrochlorothiazide for $3.50, but when she was covered by the plan she could only get one month's supply, nine pills at a time. The cost to the government was $2.35 a month or $28.20 a year. As a cash customer she pays $3.50; under the plan it costs taxpayers $28.20.

My assistant contacted 19 pharmacies located in Toronto, Burlington, Barrie, Windsor and Thunder Bay and asked for a three-month supply of these hydrochlorothiazide tablets. Only one pharmacy agreed to fill the prescription for three months. Two others said the government would only pay for a one-month supply at a time and the other 16 flatly refused to dispense for more than 30 days stating that this was government regulation.

Originally pharmacists got a straight fee of $2.25 for every drug benefit prescription. Last year they could receive $2.82 dispensing fee per prescription as long as the fee they charged the government was no more than what they were charging the public.

This marketplace system is not working because it seems to have given many pharmacists the green light to charge the public more so that they could get more money out of the government. Everyone pays more because of the marketplace concept of the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan.

Here is a letter from a Toronto man. I will just quote his opening statement: "Several times on a regular repeat prescription where the doctor ordered 60 units, I have been sent 30 units. I went back and made them give me the other 30." Most people aren't that insistent.

I have another letter here from an Arnprior man: "The report of your concern with the abuse of the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan certainly was welcome. I have been fighting this unsavory practice on a personal basis for some time and so far I've succeeded only in having my doctor prescribe for 100 tablets to be taken as directed, whereas prior to the inception of the plan I was able to get Prednisone tablets by the 1,000 from the Vanguard Prescription Drug Service Limited in Toronto. The last order returned was marked, we cannot send prescription drugs through the mail. Even this I don't believe.

"I'm obliged to take three separate drugs daily for the rest of my life and this refusal by the druggists to dispense more than a month's supply could leave me with an obligatory visit to the drug store monthly for 20 years.

"Letters have been sent by me to the Honourable William Davis, Honourable Frank Drea, Honourable D. Timbrell, Paul Yakabuski and Mike Cassidy, asking all of them to please put a stop to this costly, wasteful and inconvenient practice, which seems to make it as difficult for those over age 65 as possible.

"Thank you for your efforts, keep up the good work. Who knows, we may be successful."

Here's a letter from Pembroke, Ontario:

"Re Ontario Drug Benefit Plan for our senior citizens and druggists who refuse to fill more than one month's supply.

"This is exactly what goes on in Pembroke. I would suggest that all doctors in Ontario be asked to prescribe more than one month where advisable and druggists demanded to fill the requirements as given.

"We appreciate the assistance of the taxpayers for our help, but deplore the get rich quick methods of a Pembroke outfit exploiting the good intentions of the government through the taxpayers."

Here's a letter I received from a Weston, Ontario, man:

"Perhaps you will be interested to know that I wrote to Mr. E. N. Thompson of the drugs and therapeutic pricing department early this week, pointing out the various increases in the price of the drug I have been taking for the last five years.

"I cannot go back to the entire period, but in May of 1977, I paid $7.11 for 300 tablets of novophenytoin; in October 1977, the price for a mixture of dilatin and novophenytoin tablets—there was not enough of the one at the time to fill the order—was $10.18.

"I questioned the 43 per cent increase in the price, and took the case to the Ontario pharmacy college, which, after investigation, ordered a refund of $3.

"In July 1978, I came under the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan and as you've said was limited to 68 tablets per prescription. The excuse given was that the druggist was not allowed to dispense more at a time—probably by rules and regulations set up by themselves.

"The first 68 tablets given under the plan was in November of last year. The cost to the government, and therefore to the taxpayers, was $4. In January of this year, it was $4.13. On a basis of 300 tablets this would amount to a cool $18.22, an increase of some 260 per cent over the price of $7.11 paid in May 1977." This was when he was a cash customer.

A ministry official assured me that since January 1, 1976, they look at one month's supply as the minimum quantity, but many pharmacists look at it as the maximum quantity. He says: "Pharmacists have it ingrained in their mind," and these are his exact words, "that they can only dispense one month's supply."

Now I'm going to quote from the Windsor Star, February 10, 1979. "Essex County Pharmacists' Association president . . . says the monthly fees are not a ripoff. They cut down on drug abuse and allow doctors to re-evaluate the results of medication." These are her exact words: "It's actually a very wise way to do things and has been followed with all other drug plans." Why isn't it "wise" for cash-paying customers?

Here's how another pharmacist put it:

"Dear sir: As a third-generation pharmacist, I resent very much your accusation that the pharmacists are ripping off the drug benefit plan. (Toronto Star, February 1.) The government of Ontario agreed to the 34-day supply at the time Parcost was introduced and seems to prefer that the pharmacists submit their accounts once a month." Now listen to this: "The up-to-date thinking re health care for the elderly is that loneliness is the biggest problem. Therefore, if they visit the pharmacy once a month they have at least one social contact.

"For example, long before the drug benefit plan was thought of, I had a customer who telephoned me twice a month for half of her prescription. The reason was that I would visit her after hours, twice a month, instead of once a month." I wonder if he collected his dispensing fee for those half prescriptions as well.

Here's how the pharmacists feel about it. On February 15, they wrote into the Toronto Sun: "The abuse of health-care professionals has been rampant in the media of late. February 1, a report of the remarks made by Ed Ziemba, MPP, on pharmacists and prescriptions appeared. Mr. Ziemba is either unaware of the facts or distorts them to gain cheap publicity.

"If he is so anxious to release statistics, perhaps he should state those factors which influence the data. For example, he states that billings to the plan have increased, but neglects to say that the number of people eligible for coverage may have increased." They are wrong. They haven't increased. Good try.

"Mr. Ziemba charges pharmacists with refusing to issue more than a 30-day supply of drugs under the drug benefit plan as a practice instituted by them to gain the dispensing fee. In fact, this is one of the fundamental rules of the program imposed by the government, and any diversion from this path is subject to approval by the Ministry of Health. We would hope that Mr. Ziemba's remarks were misinterpreted and that he will be anxious to clearly articulate his view. Signed, R. Halliday, BSc, Phm, and 10 others."

The Sun, in its usual fashion, has a little snarky postscript: "We suspect that his mind is made up."

Mr. Conway: Now, now, Ed, take it easy on the press, particularly the Newcastle Trombone.

Mr. Cureatz: It's the Newcastle Reporter.

Mr. Ziemba: A ministry official was quoted in the Ottawa Citizen: "Earl Coulson, director of the drug benefit plan, denied that it is government policy to allow only a month's supply to be dispensed at one time." Here are his words as quoted from the Ottawa Citizen on February 1: "There is no way that it is, and they are misrepresenting the contents of our drug benefit plan." Coulson said the terms of the government's agreement with the Ontario Pharmaceutical Association allows druggists to dispense anywhere from one to six months' supply of a prescribed drug. Druggists who insist on dispensing only a month's supply of drugs do so because they stand to gain financially, Coulson admitted."

Here again, Mr. Coulson was quoted in the Windsor Star: "Earl Coulson, co-ordinator of pharmacy services for the Ministry of Health, said in an interview that subject to some qualifications, Ziemba is right. Coulson said the drug plan allows for drugs to be prescribed for a maximum of six months and a minimum of one month. He agreed that many pharmacists insist on only giving enough medicine for one month but said any druggist is incorrect who says the one-month period is required by government regulation.

"Despite the abuse in dispensing fees by some pharmacists, he said, there are some arguments in favour of maintaining the status quo. He said he knows from experience that it is 'probably right' that most druggists insist on 30-day limits. But Coulson said there are some arguments in favour of not forcing druggists to issue long-term prescriptions. He said the plan was negotiated with the Ontario Pharmaceutical Association and if any changes were made to the agreement it could end up costing the government more." What are they going to do, blackmail him?

I tried to contact Mr. Coulson the very next day after he made that statement, but he had been transferred to another department, Mr. Speaker.

I am sure that physicians do not appreciate having pharmacists alter their prescription quantity, especially on long-term maintenance drugs. I don't see why the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan prescriptions have to be treated any differently from any other prescriptions, prescriptions that people walk in and purchase, cash and carry. The Ontario Drug Benefit Plan is being mismanaged by this government. The time has come to get tough with druggists who are milking the plan; the ministry should send out a directive tomorrow stating that the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan prescription quantity is not to be altered by the pharmacist.

The Ontario Pharmacists' Association, which represents 1,600 pharmacies, insisted on this 30-day dispensing fee as their price for co-operating with the drug benefit plan and they shouldn't have been allowed to get away with it. We would not have to be cutting back on hospital beds and punishing the weak and the powerless in our communities if the government would manage plans like the Ontario Drug Benefit Plan properly.

Mr. Cureatz: It is my pleasure to rise to debate the motion before the House, Mr. Speaker.

In my remarks this afternoon I would like to reiterate one or two of the points touched on in the throne speech. Because of the intensity of the debates nowadays surrounding the control of government spending, and because I think this is a period of readjustment for all governments at all levels in Canada, I would like to discuss what I feel is a growing paradox in politics, the so-called constraints that we are facing today.

The conflicting demands of present government policy are obvious, I think, to all of us. On the one hand, there is a growing mood among both the public and the business sector to have the government reduce its role as a regulatory agency, to control its spending in order to keep taxes down and to provide capital for the private sector. On the other hand, in our present economic climate there is added pressure being placed on governments to assume increased responsibility for the well-being of the people of this province. There is, of course, no simple solution to balancing the fine line between government meeting its responsibility to those in need and maintaining fiscal responsibility.

Mr. Conway: Sure there is; read the charter.

Mr. McClellan: You are not supposed to read your speech.

Mr. Cureatz: In part the problem stems from the expectations that society has imposed on government; namely, access to high standards in education, health and social services.

Mr. Samis: From the heart.

Mr. Turner: But he is doing it well.

Mr. Cureatz: With each new generation this expectation has grown stronger. In 1945, the Ontario budget was $183,000,000, with some $20,000,000 or 9.8 per cent being spent on health care.

Mr. Conway: I remember it well.

Mr. Cureatz: Today, the Ministry of Health alone has a budget of $3,900,000,000, accounting for 20 per cent of the province's budget.

Since 1946 we have witnessed the emergence of what I think is one of the best systems of social care in the world. The growth of the system went hand in hand with the building of a burgeoning economy.

In 1946, Ontarians, tired of depression and war, turned their attention to building a strong growth-orientated and prosperous society. Prosperity brought with it a willingness to invest in social services and improve the quality of life in Ontario.

Mr. Conway: From the cradle to the grave.

Mr. Cureatz: In a sense, public concern in Ontario merged with the willingness and empathy on the part of the government to form a common bond of expanded and improved services in the education, health and welfare fields. Few people would argue that we are not a better society for it.

In recent years, however, we have come to realize that social services can be costly, and if economic growth and revenues do not keep pace, government can be placed in a precarious position.

The experience in California with the passage of Proposition 13 is of great significance, because it is a clear indication that taxpayers are fed up. Not only are taxpayers in North America feeling the sting which accompanies the large bite that governments take from taxable incomes, but they are also beginning to rebel against levies on their capital acquisitions through property taxes. The people of California obviously reacted to a distrust of government; and, while their actions may ultimately lead to unforeseen and perhaps even dire consequences, I think all governments which increased spending through massive social planning in the 1960s must read the California message.

Even Michael Pitfield, the most powerful of federal civil servants, has asked the fundamental question: "How long can the public sector take on functions and manpower from the private sector before the latter loses its vitality and not only our system of government but the whole structure of society is irrevocably changed?"

The question is answered simply, for as long as governments lack conviction and courage we will not have restraint. But spending must be stopped unless deficits increase enormously or the taxpayer is prepared to cough up a whole lot more than he is already doing. The challenge of government today is to serve the public more effectively while at the same time adhering to principles of restraint.

Mr. Lawlor: You don't believe that malarkey, do you?

Mr. Cureatz: Often the only way to reduce the burden of taxation is a painful one which will involve cutbacks.

Mr. Lawlor: All your planning is lining the pockets of the rich.

Mr. Cureatz: I am buying the member's book, and he is complaining. I don't think I will be buying his book now.

Unfortunately, if government is serious in its efforts to control spending, it must take a long, hard look at three areas in particular; these are, because of their costs, the areas of education, health and welfare. The area of education provides a good deal of insight into the new equilibrium between service and cost that this government is attempting to achieve. It also provides insight into the criticism that the opposition parties are currently engaging in.

Mr. Conway: Very valid criticism.

Mr. Cureatz: Here we go. This is the meat of this speech.

Let me turn briefly to the question of education. I think it is time that we and the opposition both recognize what effects demographic changes are going to have in our educational institutions. A most obvious instance is the university situation, which is currently having to prepare for declining enrolment. How can the members opposite criticize funding for universities when they know that increases really amount to spending larger sums of money on programs serving fewer members of our population?

I think it is high time that the members on the opposite side of the House came to the realization that universality, that magical word born of a feeling that government can be all things to all people, is more and more open to question as we preach restraint. Universal programs, rather than meeting the needs of a special group in society for which they are intended, often produce large bureaucracies which are insensitive to individuals. Often the so-called universal application of one particular program costs enormous amounts of money.

For example, just because all children are subject to a particular learning program in the school system does not mean that we have accomplished the means by which we can effectively recognize remedial or compensatory needs in a few children who truly need individual help. If government is going to be as generous as people continue to want it to be, this means we are going to have to maximize the use of existing resources by carefully assessing needs in the light of the individual who cannot care for himself. We are going to have to question the concept of universality.

Just as one has to question universality in education, I think one has to question institutionalization in our health and care programs. The shift away from strong, central control over health services towards local community organizations is simply an outgrowth of our awareness that community-based preventive services are both more desirable and cost-effective.

It is essential that the reorganization in the delivery of health services be viewed as a system, and, as such, isolating single aspects of the changes is misleading. For example, it is misleading to discuss a 4.5 per cent increase in 1979 funding for active beds and ignore a 5.3 per cent increase to chronic-care and rehabilitation units within active-treatment hospitals.

The point I am making is that human nature is often reluctant to accept change. I suppose many would prefer to maintain the status quo. However, once again, demographic shifts will in a few years alter greatly the demands on the health-care system. An ageing population will require a mix of health services different from our current ones.

Therefore, unless we want a largely institutionalized elderly population, which we cannot afford, we must ensure we have a healthy population and alternative services which provide care, yet allow people a large measure of independence and flexibility.

I mentioned welfare when I began to speak, but perhaps I can best sum up my thoughts by saying that I sense, as most of us do, a growth in our awareness of the relationship between welfare programming, or any of the social services for that matter, and the revenue resources that fund these services. I think we all realize we cannot afford to divorce social planning and economic goals from each other. We recognize the strong balance in what we do economically and what we can do in the social services.

Mr. Conway: What are you going to do about too many lawyers?

Mr. Cureatz: In order to maintain a healthy balance, we in Ontario have committed ourselves to encouraging industrial strength as best we can. We are focusing more and more attention on those industries and resources that have long-term potential.

This will require a greater emphasis on research and development. In some instances it has meant providing incentives that will assist these industries to provide long-term employment and to improve our competitive position locally and internationally.

Mr. Lawlor: You are doing no such thing. You are blundering around in utter darkness. What industries are you putting so much money into apart from automobiles?

Mr. Cureatz: By way of example, the down-sizing of automobiles for energy efficiency has opened up a whole new avenue of investment potential in the last few years. It is important that we attract some of those investment dollars for Ontario. The automobile assembly and automobile parts manufacturing industries are the largest dollar-producing sectors in the Ontario economy. Only through the tapping of this investment market, created by the production of smaller cars, can we retain economic health in our automobile industry.

That is why our government is proud of the fact that our $26,000,000 incentive to Ford brought a $500,000,000 V-6 engine plant and over 7,000 jobs to the Windsor area. It is worth mentioning, also, that Ford has further decided to locate a $150,000,000 aluminum casting plant there as well at no cost to the government of Ontario. This achievement is a direct result of an aggressive attitude on the part of the government to make Ontario as attractive as possible for new investment.

The results of these are obvious, especially to the people of Windsor.

Mr. Lawlor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: How is it possible to heckle a member properly if he reads his speech? If he is speaking off the cuff, then you can get yourself in. But if they go on a blue streak, having it all set out in front of them, they obviously have an advantage. This is being utilized by this government too extensively. I wish you would bring an end to it.

Mr. Turner: You might consult the member for High Park-Swansea.

Mr. Eaton: The last speaker read all his speech. He even read a letter.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Lakeshore will have to use his own authority.

Mr. Cureatz: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the points I am trying to get across to the House are so important I want to make sure they are concise and that the record is able to establish the exact train of thought.

Mr. Conway: Would you mind repeating that?

Mr. McClellan: You have some hack writing your speech for you because you are incapable of thought.

Mr. Cureatz: Pulp and paper manufacturing is another example of an industry which has in the past and continues at present to make strong contributions to the Ontario economy. The government has offered the industry about $100,000,000 in incentives to upgrade environmental protection equipment and to effect process modernization which will result in increased productivity and a cleaner environment.

Mr. Samis: Look at their profits last year.

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you just table the speech? File the speech with the clerk.

Mr. Cureatz: It is through the provision of these incentives at a time in the pulp and paper cycle—

Mr. Lawlor: Now we have to pay them to make money. It is a disgrace.

Mr. Cureatz: —when the companies are realizing profits that we can ensure this industry does not lose its competitive edge in the world market.

Mr. Lawlor: It is a complete betrayal of the free enterprise theory.

Mr. McClellan: This man is a regular reading machine.

Mr. Cureatz: In Ontario, we are prepared to address changing realities. The aggressive attitude taken by this government to attract new investment and its program to assist those sectors of our economy which demonstrate an ability to compete in the new world market are two of the large number of major initiatives which we are undertaking to ensure that Ontario's economy remains competitive.

Mr. Lawlor: It's a complete reversal of anything Herbert Hoover could put up with.

Mr. McClellan: Go back to the sacred text of Herbert Hoover.

Mr. Cureatz: If we are to be successful in attracting new industries to Ontario or in encouraging those already in Ontario to expand, we must be able to assure them that they can expect a reasonable return for taking risks and innovative measures. We must also be in a position from which we can ensure an adequate supply of energy, which is both secure and competitively priced. Ontario's Hydro nuclear program, viewed within the reality of OPEC policy and an uncertain Iranian situation, places us in an enviable position. I think we can easily deal with our surplus energy—and no one denies that we have one—by selling it to industry.

The Darlington nuclear generating plant becomes a very reasonable proposition, when we look at it as part of the government's "go east" strategy and as a cornerstone of an overall plan to stimulate the economic growth towards the other side of the Metropolitan Toronto area. Darlington 2 will be a key element in our growing nuclear energy industry.

From the local perspective, the station with its 3,000-megawatt capacity will employ 600 people at present and approximately 3,700 people during its peak construction period. From a global perspective I think it is becoming clear that Candu nuclear technology is superior to much of the technology being developed elsewhere and this success is important to maintain as we look to exporting the products of this technology abroad.

If we are going to give business a successful boost I think one of the most important things we can recognize is that healthy economic growth cannot take place when governments are overly interfering and blindly going ahead creating red tape. The government of Ontario is fully committed to the principle of regulatory reform in the broadest sense in order to reduce, as far as possible, the complexity of statutes, regulations, directives and administrative practices.

Particular attention is being given to those areas where simplification of government requirements can assist in reducing the cost of compliance both in financial and human terms, although I must confess to the member for Lakeshore I often wonder who created all the red tape in the first place. Deregulation is a further insurance that we will remain competitive in the world marketplace.

Mr. Lawlor: Why don't you want to subsidize the red-tape industry?

Mr. Cureatz: We are committed to creating an environment that will be attractive to investors and will demonstrate we have a system of government regulation both stable and fair. The element of fairness, of course, must apply equally to the investor and consumer of his product. That is why we are examining all the past legislation and programs to discover whether there are areas of overlap, overregulation or unnecessary regulation.

Furthermore, any new legislation being considered should be examined to ensure it is efficient in terms of its administrative cost and time to government as well as to the group affected.

Another area in which the government recently has been moving to establish greater equality and fairness is that of tax assessment. Just prior to last Christmas, the Municipal Assessment Amendment Act was introduced. The bill is aimed at allowing municipalities to realize the full potential of their existing tax base under the present property tax-assessment system. Municipalities may request implementation of section 86 of the Assessment Act to calculate the new equalization factors for their municipality. This will remove the freeze on mill rates that has been in place since 1970 and will be the new basis for the distribution of government grants to municipalities and school boards in Ontario. This program is attempting to eliminate serious discrepancies in the current allocation of municipal grants for 1979.

The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) is attempting to correct serious assessment inequalities with the implementation of section 86. When a resolution is filed by a municipal council, it will allow assessors to amend assessments in order to equalize assessment values and similar real property in the vicinity. There will be no property tax shifts from one class of property to another—for example, from industrial to residential.

The revised mill rates will become the basis for the 1980 education resources equalization grants to municipalities based on the 1978 market value. No municipality or school board will receive less grants in 1980 due to the introduction of new factors. To date, 13 municipalities have applied for the implementation of section 86 in 1979, and more than 50 municipalities have applied for assessment equalization in 1980.

The two-year time factor involved before implementation of the new mill rates will allow municipal and school representatives to review the factors and, if necessary, appeal the change. Provisions will also be made to allow for phasing in of drastic changes in mill rates.

In my riding of Durham East, the town of Newcastle, which encompasses the old township of Clarke, the township of Darlington, the village of Newcastle and the town of Bowmanville, is undergoing this initiative for change. Any initiative for change is usually accompanied by some confusion and uncertainty. The town of Newcastle is no exception. However, I think council made the right decision in requisitioning such action.

While section 86 should bring fairness among properties within a given class—residential, commercial or industrial—it also protects against tax shifts from one property class on to another, such as from commercial on to residential. In other words, each property class will bear the same proportion of the total municipal tax burden following the section 86 assessment as it did before. The objective is solely to achieve equality within each property class.

Certain property owners within a class that has been paying more than its fair tax share will have both their assessment and their property taxes reduced. I think this confusion comes in where others who have been underassessed will face tax increases. For those people, however, who may think their assessment is incorrect, the regional assessment office may be contacted. Of course, there may be the occasion where a person is still dissatisfied with a decision. In this case, he or she has the resources of the right to appeal to the assessment review court. It is also my understanding that under the Municipal Act, sections 505 or 636 might be used by residents to approach their local council to seek some relief where there has been a very sharp rise in taxes. The local councillors for the individual wards should be approached in this regard.

Another matter that very much affects my own riding and relates indirectly to the topic of deregulation is that of decentralization of government services. A great deal of progress, for example, has been made in the past year in the Ministry of Revenue's preparations for the relocation of its head office to Oshawa. A site was purchased on the southeast corner of King and Centre streets in downtown Oshawa, and the building's preliminary design stage is nearing completion. Construction is scheduled to begin in May 1980 and continue for two years.

Mr. Haggerty: That's a depressed area.

Mr. Cureatz: By May 1982 the ministry expects to begin transferring employees to the new facility, which should be fully staffed with 1,300 employees and in operation by October of the same year. Although Revenue officials expect many of the present employees to remain in their jobs, a significant proportion of the positions will, over time, become available to local people.

As well as the economic benefits from the original construction employment factors, the area's economy will further benefit from the spending and housing requirements of the new families moving into the area and also from the supply and service demands of the ministry itself.

These are a few of the initiatives the government has taken recently to make both Ontario and the Durham region a more attractive investment location. When discussing the broad topic of restraint in social services spending, however, it is not enough to talk about deregulation or decentralization by themselves; nor is it enough to mention our commitment to free enterprise as a means to ensure a stable revenue source to support services. We in Ontario must continue to recognize the human aspect of free enterprise, or of freedom and enterprise, if you will. We must continue to realize that in today's context we still have a social responsibility, a responsibility to those disadvantaged by change, not choice.

Perhaps, given the current emphasis that is being placed on restraining the growth of government spending and the pressure that is being placed upon us to review each new initiative carefully, we should be returning, as the government House leader said in a speech he delivered not long ago, to the spirit of volunteerism that once permeated our society.

In recent years, with government assuming an ever-larger role in the delivery of social services, this principle has been somewhat eroded. Government should, of course, continue to meet its responsibility in the social field. What I am saying, however, is that this role must go hand in hand with individual involvement and community initiative. A government can only do so much alone. We need the family institution. We need a social commitment to one another, and I think we are entering a time when decentralization of our social services is the only sane, rational policy to follow.

Finally, we need a commitment to improving these social services but giving at the same time the highest priority to our economic circumstances, for it is only in a vibrant and growing economy that we can provide for individual needs.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a privilege to rise this morning and make a few points on the speech from the throne of last March 6. But first of all I would like to recognize the new members who have been elected to the House and haven't had the opportunity to participate in the debate from the floor.

I'd like to recognize the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson), the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Ramsay), and the two new members, Colin Isaacs, Hamilton-Wentworth, and Richard Johnston, Scarborough West, and welcome them to the Legislature of Ontario so that they can participate in making this province work more efficiently.

I would also like to point out that I've had the opportunity in the last few weeks to participate in the campaign in Hamilton-Wentworth and had the opportunity of working with some good young people, such as young Peter Tice, the Liberal candidate, and of course, we've known Gordon Dean, the Conservative candidate, for many years. They've all contributed to our democratic system.

I was very interested in the results because I think the people spoke; they perhaps do not want an election at this time. They have also indicated a real concern for the waste disposal site planned to be located in Glanbrook township. It was obvious by their votes that they do not want it there; they are concerned for their environment, and it should be a real concern to this Legislature.

I welcome the opportunity to respond to some of the points raised in the speech from the throne on March 6, and to share with you some personal concerns I have on a number of issues in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk. When I speak on behalf of those, I think I am perhaps speaking also on behalf of Ontario.

I have become particularly annoyed and frustrated over the past 18 months when I see more and more elderly people wanting to move into senior citizens' apartments but discovering they cannot do so as they do not fit into the point system formulated by the Ministry of Housing. This has been another concern.

We had two projects, one in Cayuga and one in Port Rowan. They were researched five years ago, indicating there was a need there. But the point system that has been established has ruled out many from taking advantage of the need. The reason given by the ministry is that we have to provide housing for low-income families. The ministry does not take into consideration whether you have any money; but if you own a home, even though you are not in a position to look after that home, it does not qualify you to utilize the apartment, because when you sell your home you would have too much funding.

That may well be so in larger urban centres such as Toronto, where there is plenty of apartment accommodation, but in our rural municipalities it does not work that way. There is not a demand for apartments, but there certainly is a need for senior citizens' accommodation. I know many old people who would take advantage of it, and perhaps would pay more than the required funding now, if they had the opportunity of utilizing senior citizens' accommodation.

For example, two senior citizens' projects in Haldimand-Norfolk have been rejected; they have been denied government assistance on the grounds of insufficient need. According to the ministry, there are not enough seniors in this particular community who would move into the units on the present point system. I know there are many old people living in isolated areas who would love to move into such homes if they could. They currently live in ostensibly poor-quality homes requiring a great deal of upkeep and, in winter particularly, they are cut off from the main towns, as the only mode of transportation is the automobile. They are unable to do the day-to-day chores that they could do a few years back.

I would also like to mention the fact that on Monday of last week we had the pleasure of the government House leader's coming down to open 43 new units in Dunnville, making a total of 84. Dunnville is a community that has plenty of accommodation at the present time; but Cayuga, which is 20 miles away, does not. It is our responsibility to keep our people in the communities where they have grown up and lived their lives.

Because these seniors do not fall into the point system set up by the Ministry of Housing, owing to the fact that they have a so-called roof over their heads and live on a scanty pension, they are denied adequate housing. These are old people who find life very hard and, for one reason or another, I believe they deserve better treatment for the hard years of work they have contributed to the province.

What I would like to see is greater flexibility in the point system. Naturally, individuals in dire need must be given first priority. However, if a unit becomes vacant, I would like to see the opportunity being given to those seniors who wish to move, and who can afford a modest rent, to accept it. I feel they deserve the right to spend their last years in decent, well-heated homes, without maintenance headaches forever hanging over their heads.

In 1977, the government requested children's aid societies to cut back as much as possible. This is in the area of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. This has been done to such an extent that the fat has been trimmed right to the bone—so much so that these agencies are now operating a second-rate service.

The Family and Children's Services of Haldimand county is a case in point. Inadequate funding and staffing are resulting in an inferior level of service at a time when the caseload is increasing dramatically. Haldimand-Norfolk is now drawing a more urban type of newcomer who is bringing his urban problems with him. Child abuse has increased substantially, marriages are more unstable and the extra burden placed on the caseworkers makes it almost impossible to meet these challenges. Inadequate funding is preventing adequate family counselling and the society can only respond with Band-Aid plans.

I draw this to your attention because I find it rather ironic that the children's services bureau of the Ministry of Community and Social Services was set up in June 1977 to look into the future needs of our children. More money is being spent on research, more civil servants are being paid hefty salaries to look into the needs of our kids over the next 10 years, while in the Year of the Child, 1979, many children are being denied adequate help because government funding has been slashed in their communities.

I would just like to read to you, and put on record, the report of the president of the Family and Children's Services of Haldimand. This was presented at their annual meeting, March 15, 1979. I'll just quote a portion of it to make the point and express their views to the Legislature and to the minister.

"Since the advent of regionalization and the beginning of industrialization, the composition of this county has been changing. We are losing our rural nature and becoming more urban. There has been an influx of new families, many of them from other urban centres. We are losing our close-knit, family ties that existed for generations. Family disruptions are increasing. Child abuse, or at least the identification of child abuse, is increasing. The number of families needing counselling to prevent breakdowns is on the rise. Consequently the needs of the children are changing. Cases are becoming increasingly complex and the demand on the time of our limited social-work staff is steadily increasing. Legal complexities involved in providing for children at risk are becoming increasingly complicated and time-consuming.

"As you can see, these changes are placing great demands on your society. We have been given a mandate under the Child Welfare Act, but we have not been given the necessities to carry it out. This board, acting on your behalf, has budgeted, we feel, realistically and conscientiously to provide for the needs of the community. We had, somewhat naively in retrospect, supposed that this concern and conscious planning that we felt was necessary to carry out our obligatory mandate would be respected by the Ministry of Community and Social Services. However, we are plagued with inadequate financing, social work and support staff cutbacks. The ministry makes decisions based on provincial averages—theoretically, caseloads and supposed needs—all of which are far removed from the reality of our situation.

"As I have said, we have been given a mandate in law but we are finding it increasingly difficult to carry it out. The demands on our social-work staff are becoming unbearable. These dedicated people put in many hours of uncompensated overtime per week and, if it were not for their dedication, this society would collapse tomorrow. We are in a crisis situation. We are fast reaching a point where we will be unable to carry out our responsibilities and, because of this, there will be some tragic consequences.

"Ladies and gentlemen, unless matters change, I feel we will have to choose one of two options: First, continue as is and provide, at best, a second-rate service, an option I find really distasteful. I feel our community deserves better than second-rate. As a second option, recognizing the futility of continuing under these impossible circumstances, we can close our doors."

This was signed by Dr. Tony A. A. Lyon, MD, who happens to be the chairman of the board of the Family and Children's Services of Haldimand county.

These people are responsible and are giving their time freely to provide a service, yet they are not being provided the funding by this government to do an adequate job. That is the point I would like to make on behalf of not only that society, but many societies in Ontario.

As a farmer myself, of course, my primary concern for the future of farming is in my riding and in Ontario. I have great hopes that agriculture will remain an important and integral part of the future of Haldimand-Norfolk and also of Ontario.

As we look over statistics for Canada, 40 per cent of our labour force is utilized in agriculture or agriculture related work. Again speaking of my own riding, I like to see the landscapes broken by barns and silos, rather than industrial stacks. I would like to point out that no doubt we are going to have to work together. I think that is possible because industry is in need of agriculture and an active farm uses many of the steel products that will be made at the industrial park in Nanticoke by Stelco. I hate to see our corn and grain fields turned entirely to asphalt and highrises.

It is interesting to note that according to Minister of Agriculture Eugene Whelan, during the period 1966-71 some 71,503 acres of high-capacity agricultural land in Ontario was converted to urban uses. Land is lost through other reasons as well, including neglect and mismanagement. Again, I think the policies brought forth by the Minister of Agriculture have to encourage our young people to get back to the land.

I had the opportunity to have dinner with a group of junior farmers in Ancaster the other evening. We used to have 30 per cent of young people returning after taking college and university degrees and I think the percentage has now increased to 60 per cent. There is a desire on behalf of young people to return to the farm, to take over where the elders have left off. I think this should be encouraged. Farming must be made economically interesting to encourage our young people to stay on the land to produce the food necessary for the nation.

I can't blame anyone for hesitating to get involved in the commitment a farm requires in this day and age when returns are so doubtful. On the other hand, do we use the best methods at our disposal to ensure the best returns? Maybe a fresh approach has to be taken in some areas of marketing and production.

Going back to December 5, I suggested to the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) that the DREE program be expanded to take in not only areas where I admit it is needed, in eastern and northern Ontario, but also special areas where this funding could be used to improve other depreciated areas or areas where the drainage needs improving. I think a good example of that, again, is in my county of Haldimand and in the areas of the Niagara Peninsula. They could be much more productive if proper drainage were provided and the incentive could well be from the DREE program.

Another area where there is a need for job and financial assistance is that of small processors. We had a good example of that in Norfolk county last year where, because of imports coming onstream at the same time as our fresh products, there was no place to market or process the strawberry crop. Funding in this area and for tomatoes and peaches would be of great assistance in providing job opportunities that are so drastically needed now for our young people.

Whether or not the urban community is aware, it is very dependent on the farmer. In Canada the average farmer produces enough food from the farm to feed 55 people. By the year 2000 that figure is expected to rise to between 200 and 250. This is in comparison with some under-privileged countries and Third World countries that produce enough food to feed one person off the farm where in a country like France the figure is 12.

Canada's agricultural production is important, and for this reason I feel there is real hope for the Canadian farmer. If we have agricultural produce we are in a position to barter, considering the energy shortage appearing on the horizon, and with the countries around the Mediterranean in a position where they can't produce. They have the oil, they have the money and I think if we have the food we can barter. I also think the future of agriculture and the using of our agricultural products as a bartering point can only be to the advantage of us all.

While there is considerable hope there are also some needs right here at home. One of the ones I see is the need for processors. These are limited in number and control so much of our production at the present time that growers find it difficult to market their crops.

Imports too at certain times of the year create marketing problems. An example of this is Norfolk strawberry producers, as I indicated a few minutes ago, who lost thousands of plots of berries because the supermarkets came in with imports. We stand to lose our Norfolk production without markets and these are controlled by the large chain stores who contract for imported berries to secure winter produce, a form of blackmail that is hurting the Ontario market.

I am pleased to see in the throne speech the province-wide campaign to assist consumers on ways to reduce their food costs by using Ontario-grown produce. It can only be hoped that eventually the consumer will take to heart the slogan "Buy Canadian" where possible and force the distributors to deal at home. I think it is to the advantage of the supermarkets that we buy Canadian- and Ontario-grown produce. It keeps the money here and it stimulates the economy, so it has to be to the advantage of supermarkets, consumers and producers.

Wages are another factor in high production costs as farmers find it difficult to hire responsible workers at the wages they can afford to pay in comparison with the increasing wages of industry. Again, the farmer has to have a fair return so that he can compete. There's no reason someone who works on the farm shouldn't have the right to have the same living standard as anyone else in the work force.

If one were to make a snap judgement, it might be thought that in order to make farming a viable industry, large co-operative farms are the answer. In the long run, however, I believe the best stewards of our land are the family farm units. They produce not for the profit of the moment, but with a view to keeping that land productive for generations to come. They ask only for a fair return on their investment and I believe it is their right to expect to receive it. Certainly, there have been good years when corn and grain brought top dollars for the bushel, but there have been other years when the story was not so great and the temptation to look for another field of endeavour faced us all.

I like to think that we in opposition have, since 1975, made some contribution to the legislation which has been helpful in improving returns to the agricultural industry. At the present time we have many options: the St. Lawrence Grain Company established a new elevator in southwestern Ontario in the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk; the federal government was putting up for sale to private enterprise the facilities at Port Colborne, and hopefully they can be maintained by Ontario or Canadian haulers to provide a service to the producers here.

As an example, last year they shipped out a boatload of corn to Cuba. The boat came into Port Colborne, and it would have made 10 cents a bushel difference in price, but they were able to load only 400,000 bushels. They had to put the remainder on the St. Lawrence. Consequently, I think this facility should be improved. It provides a service for the agricultural industry in southern Ontario and it should be kept in Ontario or Canadian hands to best serve the interests of all producers.

Ontario has begun to recognize the need to take measures to preserve farm land in the province. The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) introduced in 1977 and 1978, food land guidelines as a planning policy for agricultural land use. However, this is not official legislation and there is no assurance that it will be followed. Even in the face of the guidelines, the government continues to allow withdrawal of farm land through annexation, such as has happened recently in Hanover and Barrie. I would indicate too that we are hopeful that the regional planning department will implement these agricultural guidelines. I hope they are used to the best advantage of the agricultural industry, because with only four per cent of our population in the agricultural production field they have to have strong support, not only from the rural element, but from the urban and especially from the Legislature at Queen's Park.

Mr. Riddell: It will be interesting to see what the cabinet does on the agrominium development in West Gwillimbury township.

Mr. Ashe: That's just a peanut gallery after your conference.

Mr. Riddell: We'll see if they are going to overrule the decision of the OMB.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Haldimand-Norfolk has the floor.

Mr. G. I. Miller: When guidelines and controls on land use are put into effect through planning, it is generally good for the preservation of the land. However, in individual cases it can also create problems, such as that of the family farm where the parents remain in the home farmhouse and perhaps two married sons want to continue the operation and require homes of their own, thus creating a zoning bylaw and planning department nightmare. Again, this is a real concern and has to be dealt with at the local level.

In my particular case, I had an opportunity to speak to a group from Master Feeds and the Royal Bank of Canada at a symposium in Jarvis yesterday, pointing out the future of agriculture in our area. An instance came up where our area is accepting these homes, on behalf of the farming community, where they are needed and necessary, and they are being dealt with more readily. These are just a few of my concerns about farming in this province, and I won't speak any longer on this subject.

The Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) has announced plans for the first stage of development in the province's new community of Townsend in my region of Haldimand-Norfolk. I would like to point out at this time that I do not disagree with the concept of Townsend. However, as far as I am concerned, the timing of the project is most important to my area and individual municipalities. They are wrestling with that problem at the present time. My concern is that the existing municipalities should be given the opportunity to come up with the potential growth.

If Townsend is allowed to grow, it should be integrated with the town of Jarvis or the other municipalities, because to make a strong community I think we have to blend the new people coming in with the old so that they can all contribute to the welfare, rather than isolating them and having a separate identity.

I believe there is nothing to substantiate the need for this site at the present time. If Stelco meets its agreement to hire 800 of its 1,200 workers from the region, this leaves theoretically 400 families to be secured from outside. Some of these families will be transferred from the Stelco plant at Hamilton and it is conceivable that a large portion will remain in the city and commute as is presently done, since Hamilton is less than an hour's drive from the site.

Regional assessment population figures indicate a slight decrease in numbers in the past year. The forecast, going back to 1973 when regional government was established, was that there would be tremendous growth. This hasn't come about, and as is indicated with the finalizing of construction at Texaco, which is on stream now, and the Hydro plant is nearing completion, they only have their work force; the construction force has deteriorated and consequently our population went down by 174 from 1977 to 1978.

A recent survey by the regional planning department shows that in 11 urban centres in the riding there are 1,190 existing vacant lots. The town of Simcoe, the largest centre in the region, has a maximum growth potential of 22,000 and a present population of just over 14,000. There are 260 vacant lots at present available, with proposals for 1,411 units.

Port Dover and Waterford and the city of Nanticoke have new areas under development with economical housing. Other centres with growth potential include Jarvis, Cayuga, Caledonia and Dunnville. I can see a need for the Townsend site, where it could be utilized to the best interest of the province, and I am one who wants to assure our young people of the housing opportunities they deserve.

It clearly indicates that the land that is owned at the present time should be put on the market at competitive prices; otherwise, the Townsend site may be needed to make the competition effective.

Again, as we had the opportunity of doing a little bit of campaigning on behalf of Peter Tice in the riding of Wentworth, we felt that the town of Saltfleet was still not being utilized. There are bridges there at the present time—including a four-lane bridge that has been there for several years—not being utilized. The lots are selling for around $23,900. There is no indication that they are going to be more economical. If the areas are sold to subdividers I think they are going to come up with a price similar to the existing prices of subdivisions which are being put on the market now. For example, in Port Dover a house can be bought for $43,000 and I don't think there is anywhere that you can get them any cheaper, even if you provide the land. My concern is that the existing areas get the potential they deserve, because there are plenty of vacant lots.

The Norfolk Board of Education has closed, or is in the process of closing, some five or six elementary schools and a number of classrooms in the area high schools. The separate school board is also noting a decline in enrolment. Newspaper reports of the first phase for Townsend indicate the building of two public elementary and one separate school in the plan. The children presently living on the Townsend site are primarily students of existing Townsend area schools.

One of these schools, Townsend Central Senior, is being closed through lack of enrolment. This is a relatively new school, only 14 years old approximately, and it is located adjacent to the Townsend site and Waterford. It is equipped with gymnasium, auditorium, library, home economics and shop facilities. Waterford High School, which presently serves the students living on the site, has a number of empty classrooms and I am wondering if these factors were involved in the planning of educational needs of the site.

It is the general consensus that at the present time there are many more pressing needs in Haldimand-Norfolk. These include more adequate transportation facilities, better transportation corridors into the industrial sites from centres such as Hamilton and Port Colborne, and better water facilities for Jarvis, Hagersville and Cayuga. Possibly the most important is that sufficient time be given for all existing municipalities to adjust and reach their growth potential, or almost so, before Townsend becomes a reality.

The land on the site is excellent agricultural land, and once again I would urge the government that it be kept in production until such time as an absolute need can be shown for the development of the Townsend town site.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to have taken part in the debate. I was maybe rushed a little bit at times. I wanted to put these facts on record. I am concerned for the future of not only my riding, but for Ontario, and concerned for the future of our young people, that they have job opportunities and a home of their own, and I think that is perhaps the main concern for this particular Legislature, that we make plans for that very purpose.

Thank you for the opportunity of taking part in the debate.

On motion by Mr. Renwick, the debate was adjourned. ~

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

UTDC TENDERS

91. Mr. Philip: Will the ministry provide details of all tenders for which UTDC has successfully bid. Will the ministry also provide details of all tenders for which UTDC has unsuccessfully bid. In all cases, will the ministry provide the total value of the contract and details of what was or is to be developed or built as a result of the contract. In cases where UTDC was unsuccessful, will the ministry provide all details of the successful tender. [Tabled March 13, 1979. Interim answer March 27, 1979. Approximate date information available April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Snow: The response to the member's question is as follows: Part A, tenders for which UTDC has successfully bid, and proposals still outstanding; Part B, tenders for which UTDC has unsuccessfully bid.

A. Delivery and sales contracts in operation (showing contract subject and base contract price): Canadian light rail vehicle, $72,793,000; intermediate capacity, Phase I and II, $6,100,000; Phase III, $55,500,000; flywheel energy storage system $86,000; diesel flywheel hybrid bus system $1,110,000; composite flywheel program $36,000; articulated light rail vehicle prototype $3,700,000; Trans European Express train (TEE) $5,000,000; TEE train spare parts $389,000; Sao Paulo, Brazil, Phase I, $50,000; Phase II, $56,000; San Francisco Municipal Railway $300,000; Brazil "Four Cities" program, Phase I, $237,000; Glenayre signal system $50,141; AC propulsion evaluation $35,000; small bus program $1,750,000; seat design licence $80,000; rotary-powered steerable truck program $250,000; CLRV spare parts contract $2,161,587; miscellaneous planning studies $110,000; total $149,783,728.

Proposals currently outstanding (all prices confidential until after program has been awarded): Korean subway program; USA Department of Transportation truck program; Guadalajara Transit planning program; Washington "Metro" truck program; rotary-powered steerable truck, Phase III.

B. Tender submitted in which UTDC was not awarded the contract: (a) Philadelphia, streetcar procurement; (b) Cleveland, streetcar procurement.

Tender results are as follows:

CHILDREN'S SERVICES REPORTS

97. Mr. Blundy: Would the Ministry of Community and Social Services produce a listing by title and author of all reports, studies, consultation papers, evaluations, assessments, inventories, policy papers and other such studies prepared for the children's services division of the ministry for the years 1977 and 1978. Would the ministry further list those reports that were prepared by contract or non-permanent ministry employees and by paid consultants. What is the cost of each of the above reports produced by non-ministry staff. [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

CHILDREN'S SERVICES STUDIES

98. Mr. Blundy: Would the Ministry of Community and Social Services enumerate all the task forces, study groups, interministerial committees, demonstration projects, pilot programs, et cetera, that were in existence in 1977 or were struck subsequently in the year 1978 and 1979 under the auspices of the children's services division of the ministry. [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: In order to provide a complete answer to the two questions presented, a period of one month will be required. An answer will be forthcoming on or about April 30, 1979.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 9, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

UNITED WAY CAMPAIGN

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the results of the 1978 United Way campaign organized by the public servants of this province. The final tabulation shows that the Ontario public service raised $405,000 in Metropolitan Toronto and $274,000 in 30 other communities in Ontario, for a total of $679,000. This is a 6.6 per cent increase over the 1977 campaign.

This success is a credit to the generosity of the employees and the effectiveness of the fund-raising structure that has been set up. Our organization is unique in charitable fund-raising in Ontario.

As members know, we are in the middle of a cancer and heart fund campaign now, hoping to raise $105,000 before the closing date, this Thursday, April 12. I am confident that we will meet this objective.

It should also be mentioned that the Red Cross blood donor clinics received 3,083 donations of blood from government employees in Metropolitan Toronto during 1978.

I hope the members will join with me in expressing our thanks to the staff who have made this worthy project so successful.

COMFORT ALLOWANCES

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to be able to announce an increase in the comfort allowance for 45,000 residents of our long-term care institutions.

As the honourable members know, co-payment levels in the major long-term care programs are designed to ensure that residents maintain discretionary income to meet their personal needs.

In homes for the aged, the first $45 of monthly income is currently exempt from charges for maintenance. In nursing homes and chronic-care facilities, the co-payment is set so that an aged person at the guaranteed income level is left with $45 in discretionary income. Non-aged residents of such facilities are often eligible for family benefits allowance, which includes the same comfort allowance.

The basic needs of food, shelter and personal care are met by the facility, and the comfort allowance is to provide for such items as tobacco, refreshments, telephone, clothing, dry cleaning, toiletries, personal travel and confectionary.

In recognition of the increase in the cost of many of these items since the last adjustment in May 1977, the government has decided to increase the comfort allowance to $51, effective May 1.

Consequently, the co-payment level administered by my colleague the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) will remain at its current level of $9.80 per day for the 22,500 residents in nursing homes and the 13,000 residents on extended care in homes for the aged.

The charging policies of the homes for the aged, administered by my colleague the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), will be adjusted to ensure that the other 7,800 residents in these homes who are entitled will receive the same $51 in discretionary income.

The same increase in comfort allowances will apply to the 2,000 adult residents in facilities under the Homes for Retarded Persons Act.

This adjustment amounts to a 13.3 per cent increase and maintains Ontario's position of having one of the highest comfort allowances in Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: It's 2.5 per cent a year.

Mr. McClellan: Who plays Bob Cratchit to your Scrooge?

ORAL QUESTIONS

TRANSPORTATION SERVICES FOR HANDICAPPED; COMFORT ALLOWANCES

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. How can she come before us with a generous, in quotation marks, $6 per month increase for these people, when people in wheelchairs alone—certainly in the city of Hamilton—can't even go downtown, in most circumstances, for less than $50?

How can people, confined to wheelchairs yet still able to be reasonably active in society, possibly live on your generous $51 per month income when it will cost them almost all that amount just to get around? Remember, they must have more than one ticket if they want to go and see a movie or something like that and then need someone to help them.

Surely she can show a little more humanity than this?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I don't know where the Leader of the Opposition has been for the last couple of years. We introduced a program of transportation for the disabled. The onus is on the communities to provide that, but it is subsidized very heavily by the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. Laughren: You don't think it is a restraint package?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: The fare for such services is 50 cents per trip. I don't see any relationship between what I am announcing today and the transportation available to handicapped people across this province if the communities in which they live will become involved and set up the services.

The ministry is providing the subsidy and Hamilton is already involved in it, so I don't know where the Leader of the Opposition was when all this was going on.

Mr. S. Smith: A supplementary: Perhaps the minister would like to join me at Chedoke Hospital and talk to the people confined to wheelchairs there. Under the new co-payment arrangement her colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) takes away what meagre allowance they may have had from alimony or from pensions or insurance. It leaves them each with a grand total of $45, now $51. With that each is supposed to buy clothing, pay for entertainment and have somebody handle his or her wheelchair from time to time.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Eighty-one dollars a month.

Mr. S. Smith: Let me invite the minister to visit the people at Chedoke Hospital and tell them about the generous increase from $45 to $51.

Hon. Mr. Norton: There you go, off half-cocked again.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: The honourable Leader of the Opposition forgets that those same people are entitled to tax credits, which makes the total income—

Mr. S. Smith: Tax credits?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Tax credits, yes.

Mr. S. Smith: They are low income.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I don't know where the Leader of the Opposition has been for several years, but he doesn't understand. They get a tax credit which brings their monthly allowance to about $81.

Mr. S. Smith: That is unbelievable.

Mr. McClellan: Leaving aside the incredible cheapness of this announcement, may I ask the minister, since she referred to tax credits, whatever happened to the promise in last year's budget to enrich the tax credit for senior citizens, or is that as phoney as this increase in front of us today?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: This is almost beyond explanation.

Mr. Wildman: You are.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Three million dollars are being contributed to make this possible for those people, who through no fault of their own are in institutions across this province. Their basic necessities are provided for, they are provided with tax credits, and in addition they are each provided with a disposable income, now at $51 a month, to help with those basic requirements.

Mr. Warner: You probably send them a $6 bill. Mail them out two $3 bills.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I really feel, regardless of what the opposition members are saying, that for those people who will be the recipients of what may seem like a small amount to members opposite, this money will be very helpful and will be very well received across this province.

Mr. McClellan: Answer the question; what about the promise of enriched tax credits?

Mrs. Campbell: I wonder if the minister would care to elaborate? Does this disposable income formula apply in those cases where people are in their own homes, and hopefully in receipt of some home-help service; or are they still precluded because all the funding has been cut off by OHC and they cannot afford to pay for home-help service themselves out of $45?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I don't think that question relates to the announcement I made today, which was about an increase in the comfort allowance to those people who are in institutions.

Mrs. Campbell: And nobody else?

Mr. McClellan: What about your promises on the tax credit?

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister would table in this House the average amount paid out in tax credits to people in those institutions for the last four years. In view of the fact that the tax credit formula has not been increased and that they are getting less because of the slight increases in remuneration, would she not think that they're worse off in the tax credit than they were four years ago?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That information is all public knowledge; I'm sure if the honourable member is interested in receiving it he can find it quite easily.

Mr. Warner: Yes, send a letter to Darcy McKeough.

TORONTO CONSTRUCTION PROJECT

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Government Services. Since the city of Toronto has been prepared for the last three and a half years to develop the southern two thirds of the east of Bay site, the housing portion alone of which would produce about 700 jobs for one and a half years, which is 1,000 man-years of work, why is the government continuing to drag its heels on this project? Why is it not going ahead and doing something there after three and a half years of waiting.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition, the government has not dragged its heels.

Mrs. Campbell: You have so.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The government has looked at several projects for this site. The site is being used at the moment. As the member knows, the Toronto Humane Society is there. There are several other people there. The province owns the site, but it has not decided yet as to whether it will be used by the province or the city of Toronto. At this time I have informed the mayor of Toronto that we are still looking at the site and we will get back to him.

Mrs. Campbell: How many years have you been dragging your feet?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We haven't been dragging our feet one year.

Mr. Nixon: What's dragging then?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We have responded fully to the city at all times.

Mr. S. Smith: There's something dragging; I don't know if it's their feet.

By way of supplementary, will the minister make it clear who speaks for the government on this issue? Is it the minister himself? When he answers that, would the minister also explain why it has taken three and a half years for the province itself to decide what it wants to have as its portion of the development on that site and why it won't let Toronto get ahead with the planning for at least the southern two thirds of the site? Since that could create much needed jobs, 1,000 man-years of construction work, why doesn't he at least let the city get on with it while he's sitting around making up his mind?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Nobody's sitting around making up his mind. The province of Ontario owns this property, not the mayor of the city of Toronto.

Mr. Cassidy: Well give it to him.

Mrs. Campbell: That's right. Give it to him.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The mayor of the city of Toronto has put forth a proposal—

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are millions of dollars' worth of real estate there and members opposite say give it away.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —that is not acceptable at this moment to the province. The province is studying the proposal, and I have so informed the city.

An hon. member: Sell Minaki.

Mr. S. Smith: What about Minaki?

Hon. Mr. Davis: To the city of Toronto?

Mr. S. Smith: Sure, why not?

SUBURBAN SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, arising out of the findings in the report of the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto on Metro suburbs, which was published today and which confirmed what we have known for a very long time, that is that social services in Metropolitan Toronto suburbs are simply not adequate to meet the needs of disadvantaged groups, like the elderly, single-parent families, immigrants and working women with families—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: —who now make up a social majority in the suburbs. My question is that since we have known for a long time that planning in the suburbs of Toronto and other major cities has catered to physical but not to social needs, and since the social planning council's report confirms the desperate state of those in need of social services—

Mr. Speaker: Get to the point of the question.

Mr. Cassidy: —does the government have any plans to meet the social needs of these suburban residents; and what are those plans?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, since I haven't had the benefit of looking at that report I'm very loath to make any comments. But coming from one of those suburbs which the member suggests does not have those social services, I take exception. I have a riding office and I am available, and very rarely do I ever have any complaints about the lack of social services to senior citizens, to new immigrants or to anyone else. I would like to have the opportunity to look at that report myself.

[2:15]

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the Provincial Secretary for Social Development is saying in the first place that in her tenure in the ministry she has never been aware of the problems of people living in these suburban areas; since she has only just discovered them now that the social planning council has brought them to her attention; and since four years of operating her riding office have not brought her into contact with the problems of groups such as women in the labour force, pre-school children whose mothers are in the labour force or who need group care—

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a supplementary question?

Mr. Cassidy: —immigrants and other people like that, can the minister explain how the government intends to provide the needed social services in the suburbs which are not now in place, in view of the cutbacks which this government is imposing on social services across Ontario?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the honourable member is referring to Scarborough in particular. That is of course the one suburb with which I am very familiar. But I am assured that social services, as provided through Metropolitan Toronto, look after the needs of the suburbs very well, and I am not aware of any gap in the services.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that, with the new immigration law, immigrants in this country are not assisted by the federal government after three years and, therefore, many of the immigrant aid societies are closing down services for immigrants; and is she aware that the Ministry of Community and Social Services does not have enough staff to assist people, especially in the west end of Toronto, which is the part of the city I represent? What is the minister planning to do if she is aware of these problems; and if she is not aware of them, where has she been in the last three years?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I will have a look at the report when it comes across my desk; obviously the Leader of the Opposition received it far in advance of the rest of us. But I am sure that the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) is very well aware of the programs under his jurisdiction; and, as far as I am concerned, a great deal of money flows into those particular immigrant services through many of the ethnic services that are available within this city.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, has the Provincial Secretary for Social Development ever taken the time to go to the Jane-Finch area, for example, to see the way in which the nonprofit housing, having all been crushed into one area and having been sort of ghettoized in that way, has led to enormous problems for the people there? Has she gone into suburban areas to see the way in which various kinds of facilities have been resisted in suburban areas, or put into a corner somewhere, and to see for herself the problems that are created that way?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, unlike the Leader of the Opposition, yes, I have taken time to do many of those things; and I am very much aware of many of the things of which he obviously has not been aware, such as transportation for the disabled and tax credits amongst other things. Yes, there are problems in those particular areas; and yes, there is money being funnelled into those services that provide additional help to those Ontario Housing units where they do have problems. We are well aware of that. Programs are available.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Even though the minister is not particularly concerned about the report, and even though she does not realize the reality of social problems in Scarborough, probably because most of those problems from her area end up in my office—

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a question?

Mr. Warner: I would like to know a precise date when the minister intends to respond in detail to this serious report, which was made known today.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my honourable colleague from Scarborough that I was involved in social planning long before he ever thought of being concerned about social problems. Serving as I did for 10 years on the social planning councils of Scarborough and Metropolitan Toronto, yes, I think I know some of the problems.

Mr. Warner: So the minister does not intend to respond to the report.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I did not say that.

Mr. Warner: That was the question.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not aware that in suburbs like Etobicoke valuable services such as the new Welfare Action Centre are closing their doors on this very day because of lack of government funding; and would the minister, when she brings in her comments, also look at the statement made in the report, that not only are there current problems, but current population statistics suggest the suburbs will increasingly become the homes of increasing numbers of aged and disadvantaged; would she advise the House what her government intends to do, not only to meet the present inadequacies but also to meet the future projected inadequacies of the system?

Mr. Warner: She won't even respond to the report.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to look at the report.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health arising out of a case which came to the attention of my riding office this week. I would like to bring to the minister's attention the case of Mrs. May Brown, pensioner, aged 83, with an income of $350 a month, who was transferred to a chronic-care bed in the Pembroke General Hospital last month.

Mrs. Brown has received a bill for $298 for the month of April, payable in advance, as a result of the minister's new co-payment charge for chronic-care beds.

Mr. Speaker: Are you asking the minister if he is aware of this case?

Mr. Cassidy: I'm going further than that, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister condone this practice of billing a chronic-care patient in advance and does this particular case mean the ministry has eliminated this 60-day grace period he announced would be an integral part of the program?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That, I think, is a critical point. If, in fact, Mrs. or Miss Brown was just admitted last month, it doesn't sound to me as though she should be even considered at this point, and I would have thought the member's riding office might have drawn it to the attention of the administration or the sisters at the hospital, depending which hospital she is in. I will make sure that is drawn to their attention and her situation is checked into.

Mr. Martel: What is the government's response in all this?

Mr. Cassidy: I thank the minister for suggesting people in my riding office should do his government's work in terms of ensuring people aren't victimized by this co-payment charge.

Mr. Havrot: What have you got a riding office for?

Mr. Cassidy: Will the minister act in order to ensure chronic-care patients are not billed in advance for this co-payment charge? Can the minister assure the House that if a patient is transferred to a chronic-care bed from a nursing home there will also be a 60-day grace period in the future?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I think any reasonable person would expect with the implementation of this program, as recommended by the three parties in this House among other sources, there are bound to be some start-up problems. That sounds like a start-up problem; I will make sure it is clarified for the benefit of the administration of that particular hospital—

Mr. Swart: Especially when you say go get him.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and that as far as the advance collection is concerned that is straightened out. That is not what is anticipated or expected in the administration of this program.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Can the minister explain why a married couple earning less than $15,000 a year is exempt from the co-payment plan, but if they are married and pensioners over 65, receiving old-age pensions they are not exempt? Isn't that a bit of discrimination?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, Mr. Speaker. I think I have pointed out to the honourable member once before that having received all the recommendations to institute the co-payment, we looked at how it is administered in other provinces. There are three other provinces which have the system, if I remember correctly. In Quebec, they start to charge it from the day the person is diagnosed as being a chronic care patient, no matter where they are in the system. My recollection is that in all three cases the charge applies to everyone, regardless of means, from day one, and if you are without the means, you end up going on welfare.

That kind of system is unacceptable to me—

Mr. McClellan: You are all heart.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and so in devising the scheme, we set it up in such a way as to be uniform with the nursing home system. However, there are cases where the breadwinner in a family situation, with young dependents, is confined for reasons of strokes, or various debilitating diseases and it was felt those exemptions had to be built in, unlike in the other provinces.

I think on examination the member will see it does meet the two criteria. First of all, it is uniform with the nursing home system, inasmuch as in the nursing home system we are dealing basically with the extremely long-term stay patient. The average length of stay in a nursing home is measured in years.

It meets the other concern identified by various bodies such as the Senior Citizens' Advisory Council that moneys provided for the maintenance of an individual by way of an individual pension are being used, in fact, for their support, albeit in the institution in which they have become resident, rather than in the community where they were resident.

An hon. member: How do they keep their homes?

Mr. Cassidy: A final supplementary: In view of the discrimination between pensioners and people aged under 65; in view of the very real anguish this co-payment charge is creating for such people as the multiple sclerosis patients of the Chedoke Hospital in Hamilton, whom I visited three weeks ago; in view of the limited revenues now coming in for this co-payment charge because of the exemptions built into it; and in view of the difficulties this co-payment charge is creating because hospitals must apply a means test, will the minister and the government not simply eliminate all those problems by eliminating this unreasonable charge completely?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will first of all reply, and I hope not in a pejorative way, that it really amazes me how little backbone exists in that party. Having signed a recommendation about six months ago, they scurry for cover all the time—

Mr. Warner: Not for this kind of punishment. No one signed for this nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —when somebody picks up on a recommendation they supported.

Mr. Cassidy: You get the facilities available in the community. You give people a choice.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think, with respect, we have gone to great lengths to ensure that the co-payment plan is brought about in the fairest possible way.

Mr. Cassidy: It is institutionalized misery.

Mr. Havrot: You thrive on that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We are monitoring it very closely because we know there will be various problems to do with the administration of the co-payment plan, and various problems to do with the way the forms have been designed. We will do everything possible to ensure it is brought about smoothly.

There is one point in particular I do want to refute: The member said a means test is being applied. In point of fact, there is a statutory declaration of income and income only.

An hon. member: How do they keep their homes?

Mr. Cassidy: It sounds like a means test to me.

Mr. Warner: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Health claims I signed a report authorizing the course of action which the government has taken. In no way did I sign for the kind of distortion which we are now getting in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Squirm a little more. Where is your integrity?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You are in trouble, David.

Mr. Nixon: Let him make a speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no point of privilege, so there is no need to respond to it. There is a legitimate difference of opinion between two members in the House. Let's leave it at that.

TOURISM

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Tourism: In 1977-78, the Ontario Development Corporation approved a total of 398 loans; of these, only 52 were tourism oriented. Will the minister introduce a more effective program to encourage the people in the tourism industry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say our support to tourism has, by the member's own figures, been rather substantial. I think our support through the Ontario Development Corporation to the tourism industry has outstripped our support to any other single industry. That is particularly the case in eastern Ontario and northern Ontario where we have specific preferential rates available to the tourist industry.

We are at the present time considering the ways in which the tourism industry may be even more substantially assisted through the new employment development fund. As the member will be aware, I have already indicated the tourism industry will be one of those industries particularly favoured by the new employment development fund and one of our priority sectors.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Only 52 loans out of 398 certainly does not reflect that the minister is giving very great priority to the tourism industry. Will he introduce a program which will help the people in the tourism industry upgrade their facilities in order to make them four-season oriented? Fifty-two out of 398 is not a very high score.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must repeat for the honourable member, I don't have the analysis with me but I suspect he would not be surprised to learn that tourism still is the industry which has received more loans than any other single industry out of the Ontario Development Corporation.

Mr. Eakins: Fifty-two out of 398?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It far exceeds the support we are giving any other single industry through the development corporation. I have already indicated we are looking for new programs through the employment development fund to give further help to the tourist industry.

I must say to my friend, before sitting down, that I was interested to note a document unveiled by his leader this morning which talks about seven priority areas for Liberal Party industrial strategy. Although I have already indicated that one of our priorities for industrial strategy is the tourism industry, there wasn't a single word in terms of the priorities of the Ontario Liberal Party in industrial strategy referring to tourism. It wasn't there.

[2:30]

Mr. Van Horne: Here we go again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How did you let that happen, John? How did you let that happen? Such a high priority and you left it out.

Mr. S. Smith: Why don't you read it? You might learn something.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You've been reading my speeches; that's where you wrote it from. You read well, though.

Mr. Van Horne: How's your expert in bankruptcy doing over in Istanbul?

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister think what he is doing to boost the tourist industry in Canada is totally contradictory, when last January he withdrew the presence of this province with the other Canadian provinces from the tourist world fair in Berlin, which will provide 30,000,000 Deutschmarks out of which $150,000,000 was coming to Canada? Is he aware that most of the Canadian operators were forced to use private travel agency booths, as well as American booths, to promote tourism in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I regret that because of the reaction to some previous statements I missed most of the initial part of that question. Perhaps the member might either repeat it or drop me a note on it, and I can get that for him.

Mr. di Santo: I would rather repeat the question. Doesn't the minister think it is contradictory to try to help the industry in Canada while we missed perhaps the most important occasion this province had by not participating in the world fair in West Berlin last January, forcing our operators to use private travel agents' booths as well as American booths, because the Canadian government didn't participate in the fair, thus losing most of the 30,000,000 Deutschmarks that are going out for tourism, $150,000,000 of it coming to Canada?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I regret that the Canadian government chose not to participate in that fashion. We have already had communications with them, urging them to reconsider for the next time that fair is held. From what I hear, it is quite likely that they will once again participate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to advise all honourable members of the House and all our guests in the galleries to vacate the chamber in a very orderly fashion and to go down to the main lobby of the building. We will recess for 15 or 20 minutes for that purpose.

Would you do that now, please?

The House recessed at 2:33 p.m. and resumed at 3:15 p.m.

On resumption:

Mr. Speaker: I thank all honourable members and our guests for their co-operation. Because a message I received gave me concern for the safety of those in the House, the security service searched the House and its precincts. I am satisfied that we can now proceed with the question period for which we have 32 minutes left.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, having discussed this matter with representatives of the security force, the Ontario Provincial Police and the Metropolitan Toronto police department—who all had a hand in the search—it is fair to say we are satisfied that the call received by the central switchboard can be characterized as a crank call. But it was the recommendation of the Ontario Provincial Police that in the circumstances the utmost precautions be taken.

As you have already mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we are satisfied that our security precautions, which have been in place for some time, are quite adequate. However, I might respectfully suggest to the members and, particularly, to our friends in the press gallery, that a high degree of discretion be utilized in talking about or reporting this interruption in our proceedings, inasmuch as we don't want to encourage other individuals to disrupt the proceedings of the House in the same manner.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, because of the interruption and the amount of time involved, and knowing what we had planned for today, I didn't know whether or not the House might want to make some adjustment with respect to the time allocation in order that we could get to the windup of item one. It is really a matter for the unanimous consent of the House. There are still 32 minutes left for the question period before we get into other matters of routine proceedings and orders of the day. I would like to raise that now before we get started, because I do know certain preparations have been made for the windup today. This will eat into that time.

We could either deem the question period to be completed and carry on, or we could have some adjustment of time. I have no fixed approach, except to say that this is the time to discuss it.

Mr. Martel: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we are prepared to do that. I think most of my colleagues would prefer that we go beyond six o'clock to make up the time we lost. That would take us to about 6:30 or 6:45.

Mr. Peterson: What about your lunch? You usually get quite upset when you miss dinner?

Mr. Martel: I only do it on special occasions.

Mr. Nixon: If I might suggest, Mr. Speaker, it has been indicated that about 30 minutes remain in question period. How about having a good compromise—continue the question period to 3:30 and then carry on with the business otherwise unchanged?

Mr. Peterson: The Liberal Party always has the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous agreement for that proposition?

Mr. Martel: Which one are you talking about?

Mr. Speaker: It has been suggested that the question period terminate at 3:30.

Mr. Martel: I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that you won't get unanimous consent. I would ask the House to consider going until 6:30 p.m.

It is only half an hour more and we could carry on until then, with unanimous consent. Or the minister could move a motion to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: The proposition was that the question period be deemed to have ended at 3:30. We do not have unanimous consent for that. I have no alternative but to abide by the rules of the House that provide for one hour for question period.

I want also to remind honourable members that standing orders indicate that a vote will be taken if there is an amendment to the motion for acceptance of the speech from the throne; and that that vote will be taken at 5:45 the night before the budget is brought down. That's tonight. I just want all honourable members to understand that the debate on the throne speech will terminate at 5:45 p.m.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, we have done it in the past. Just in the last session, to finalize the estimates of the Treasurer, we sat on the Monday evening until seven to accommodate the House, so those estimates could be finished and so we could get on to Bill 70. I would ask the House leader to put a motion forward so that the House goes to 6:30 this evening, to accommodate the orderly completion of this debate.

Mr. Speaker: We will proceed with the question period.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Mr. Laughren: My question is to the Treasurer. In view of the fact that for the year 1978 straight figures show that foreign ownership continues to be an enormous drain on our economy and that our deficit on interest and dividends alone is $5,400,000,000, up in the fourth quarter 72 per cent over the third quarter and more than 50 per cent over the fourth quarter a year earlier, will the Treasurer assure us, and I understand that he cannot provide us with precise details at this time, that his budget statement tomorrow night will address itself to that particular problem?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The last time I was caught in a position of attack such as I am now, I was saying to the honourable member in between, a fire intervened to save me. This time I have to say it was perhaps a little more frightening.

Mr. Nixon: Disaster accompanies you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, you were with me that night, you may recall, at St. Lawrence Centre.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The third one will be tomorrow night.

Mr. Nixon: That was one of your better evenings.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's right, it was certainly a hot show.

Much as I would like to indulge in speculation about what is in the budget, unfortunately I know that I obviously can't answer the member's question today.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that in 1978, as in other years, his government gave approval to approximately 95 per cent of all takeover applications that went to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and that in 1978, out of 310 foreign takeovers, 91 per cent were approved, and that for new businesses established in this province, 96 per cent were approved? Will the minister table the criteria by which he and his close personal friend, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), approve takeovers in their submission when FIRA asks them for their opinion on takeover applications for Canadian industry?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Foreign Investment Review Agency certainly does perform a useful role, although in many countries it is seen as a definite deterrent to investment in Canada.

Mr. Laughren: I am asking for your criteria.

Mr. Wildman: They approved 95 per cent.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can only say to the member that while we want very much to encourage Canadian investment in Canada, an exclusively Canadian investment posture would obviously do away with many opportunities for employment for Canadian people, because by their very nature many industries have become multinational. There is absolutely no use trying to pretend that we have a Canadian automobile manufacturing industry per se. Our job, of course, is to maximize the Canadian content of the production in this country. I have to agree with the honourable member that if we could have Canadian ownership I would be delighted, and I want to encourage Canadian ownership either through the purchase of shares or the creation of companies that become big.

Mr. T. P. Reid: As the minister is so concerned about encouraging people to participate share-wise, will he also encourage these companies perhaps by way of legislation that requires them to dedicate part of their dividends or profits—and I leave the percentage to the minister, but I would say 50 per cent minimum at least—to research and development and reinvestment in Ontario or Canada?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am sure the honourable member has heard the Minister of Industry and Tourism, the Premier (Mr. Davis), me and others talk about our stated objective to improve the percentage of R and D done in Canada. It is something we take every opportunity to encourage. The last federal government's budget, we were glad to see, had certain measures in it to encourage that. In the past, Ontario's has too, and we intend to keep on trying to get more R and D in Canada.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that despite what the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Minister of Industry and Tourism and this minister have been saying, not one iota has changed, and last year we had a trade deficit of $317,000,000 in the auto pact, most of it in the area of research and development, because it costs Canada $230,000,000 a year, what is the Treasurer going to do specifically and what has happened to his ministerial fair-share document released last year?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Research and development I think has to be encouraged rather than legislated. The member may feel it can be legislated; I don't think it can.

Mr. di Santo: I didn't say you have to legislate.

Mr. Cassidy: You will never stand up to the multinationals.

Mr. Warner: You didn't answer the question.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In my absence on Friday the Premier was asked a question concerning Queensway General Hospital.

The ministry received a letter from Queensway in July 1977 requesting an 80-bed chronic-care unit to be built adjacent to the hospital. That request was forwarded to the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and to the Peel District Health Council for consideration as part of the broad process of setting priorities.

The hospital subsequently withdrew its request for chronic-care facilities and substituted expansion of its radiology department as a first priority. This was agreed to by HCMT and approved by the ministry.

The next correspondence was a year later, in July 1978, saying the beds were needed for 16 patients who were occupying temporary accommodation in the emergency department. Since, at that time, we were already making definitive plans to expand chronic care accommodation in Metro, the Queensway situation was included in consideration of the overall plan.

Last Friday, ministry personnel visited Queensway to learn that the hospital doesn't want more money. It doesn't want more chronic-care beds. It wants to be relieved of the chronic-care patients it has.

Our Metro-wide plans for chronic-care facilities are already bearing evidence. Last September the new Queen Elizabeth Hospital branch opened on University Avenue.

Mrs. Campbell: Bearing evidence of what?

Mr. S. Smith: The minister's lack of policy.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think you were there. Maybe you don't remember.

To repeat, last September the new Queen Elizabeth Hospital branch opened on University Avenue, providing 300 new chronic-care beds. The conversion of Salvation Army Grace Hospital in Toronto will provide 116 more chronic-care beds, of which 61 are already in use.

Next month about 300 chronic-care patients at the old Queen Elizabeth Hospital on Dunn Avenue will be transferred to the new building, and by August an additional 154 chronic-care beds will be available when construction is finished at the West Park chronic-care hospital.

Prior to the opening of West Park, about 40 of the West Park beds will be opened in the early part of May, using the old surgical building at West Park, as a means of phasing in their expanded program, and in this way, will relieve pressure on chronic-care facilities in the west end.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain how these plans are going to solve the problems, when more than 1,200 beds are to be cut in active-treatment hospitals in Metropolitan Toronto over the course of the next two and a half years, but only 509 chronic-care beds are mentioned as being provided under the plans announced here today?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, in addition to what I've already identified, we have asked for, and are funding, a study, under the auspices of the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto, to identify the need in Metropolitan Toronto for both chronic-care beds over and above what I've already indicated—

Mrs. Campbell: Why don't you do that before you cut beds?

Mr. Grande: Five years from now.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and extended-care beds over and above what I've already indicated.

Mr. Warner: Great system.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As in all parts of the province, we are trying to make sure that as we, in the spirit of the philosophy of health care that has abounded in this country in the five or six years—

Mr. S. Smith: First you cut it and then you study it.

Mr. McClellan: Why didn't you do the study before you cut the beds?

Mr. Warner: You begin the destruction and then you study it. Great system.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As we are de-emphasizing acute institutional care, in the process we are identifying the needs for chronic and extended care and meeting those needs.

Mr. S. Smith: Is that the only way of identifying it—when patients are in the emergency room?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No. We've been working on it. That's the point I was making.

Mr. Foulds: Talk about hyperbole.

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Minister of Health, concerning Metropolitan General Hospital. As Metropolitan General Hospital in Windsor provides two area services, that is, cancer treatment and burn care, which require a large number of active-treatment beds, thus leaving fewer beds for obstetrics, paediatrics, medical and surgical services, is the minister not concerned that the lack of active-treatment beds there means there will be inadequate health-care services provided by Metropolitan General Hospital?
[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With the establishment at Grace Hospital of a centre of excellence in obstetrics and with the establishment at Hotel Dieu of St. Joseph Hospital of a centre of excellence in paediatrics, it seems to me that the obstetrical and paediatric needs, in addition to those of the much smaller units that remain at the Metropolitan General Hospital in Windsor, will be extremely well met.

In the statement I made in February regarding hospital services in the Windsor area, part of it concerned approval of the expansion of the cancer clinic at Metropolitan General Hospital, as recommended by the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation. Given the overall picture in Windsor, the services will continue to be very well met.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Is the minister not concerned that Metropolitan

General Hospital has already stated that after April 1 it will not be able to assure the public it serves of backup beds required by the emergency department or admission to a hospital when necessary for active treatment?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am aware that in all the planning in Windsor there has been an odd man out every time.

Mr. Wildman: You.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It's always been the same odd man.

Mr. Wildman: You.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am confident, given the support of all but one of the hospitals in Essex county to make sure the rationalization works and the level of service is maintained, that any problems will be kept to a minimum.

As I said, with the establishment of centres of excellence in obstetrics and paediatrics, as well as neurosurgery, inasmuch as a CAT scanner will be going to the Hotel Dieu hospital as well, and with the expansion of chronic-care units in various of the hospitals, I am confident, based on the advice of the local health council but also involving the hospitals who are signatories to that rationalization agreement, that the level of service will not only be maintained but improved, particularly through these centres of excellence that are being introduced into that community.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have raised this issue in the Legislature on several occasions over the last few weeks. I would like to ask the Minister of Health whether he has bothered to check out the fact that since January of this year, on an average night at three hospitals in Windsor—Grace, Met and Hotel Dieu—people are stacked up in emergency rooms and hallways because of a lack of active-treatment beds? Did he bother to check that out when he was in Essex county last week?

Mr. Mackenzie: He hasn't got around to it yet.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have discussed it with staff on various occasions. I am satisfied it would appear this is again a situation where, with the expansion of chronic-care services and even with a reduction in active treatment, this will assist a great deal in relieving these kinds of pressures.

Mr. Foulds: Well, expand them. Expand them ahead of time.

Mr. Swart: Before, you said it wasn't true. Remember? It's a different story today.

Mr. Cassidy: Where is your plan for chronic care across the province?

Mr. Mackenzie: He is too arrogant to have a plan.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ashe: A bunch of rowdies over there.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I know it upsets people in that party—

Mr. Mackenzie: It's upsetting people; that's what it's doing.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —that for one of the first times anywhere in the province the local health council, with the active involvement and support of the hospitals in the community, came up with a plan not only to rationalize existing services but to provide very valuable new services to that community.

Mr. Cooke: You told them what to do.

Mr. M. Davidson: You didn't give them any alternative.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I know it bothers them that local people can plan—

Mr. Cooke: You made the decisions.

Mr. Mackenzie: They can't make the decisions. You are pulling the strings.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I know it bothers them that we aren't accepting their policy. I know it bothers them that we aren't wiping out all the hospital boards as per their green paper and centralizing all the bureaucracy.

Mr. Warner: It bothers us that you allow the health-care system to be destroyed.

Mr. Mackenzie: Come off your arrogant horse and start dealing with people.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I know that bothers them, but local planning can work and is working in Essex county.

Mr. Mackenzie: How long are you going to fool around with people's lives? Arrogant.

ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Can I have his attention? In view of the fact that last Thursday the editorial in the Toronto Sun, and the adjacent cartoon, reinforced the stereotype that organized crime is the exclusive product of the Italian community, and in the aftermath of the CBC program Connections, doesn't the minister think it is time for an inquiry so that it can be made clear what is the extent of the operation of organized crime, and what control over the situation the government has so that the public will have a clear perception of the phenomenon, since this is the way to contribute to clearing the atmosphere of the suspicion and misunderstanding surrounding the entire Italian community?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have said on a number of occasions in recent years that any conception in the minds of any of our citizens to the effect that the Italian community is any less law-abiding than any other community in this province would be entirely mistaken. The fact of the matter is the Italian community, which, as we know, has made an immense contribution to the development of this province, is as law-abiding as any other community in Ontario. I repeat that once again.

In so far as a public inquiry into the problems related to organized crime is concerned, I am still not persuaded that this would be in the public interest. I say that, having met on a regular basis with senior officers of the major police departments in Ontario, who are all of the view that the fight against organized crime can more effectively be carried on by traditional police methods, namely, the gathering of evidence that is admissible in court, upon which to secure convictions.

I rather regret that those responsible for the production of Connections II did not make note of the fact that several individuals who were featured in that series had been successfully prosecuted. Notwithstanding that, I think I should also state that in the past year and a half, according to figures available to me, some 250 individuals who are believed to have some connection with organized crime have been arrested in this province and have either been tried or are at present awaiting trial.

The advice I have received from senior police officials is that a public inquiry would probably interfere significantly with ongoing investigations and, furthermore, would interfere significantly with the cases before the court. For that reason, at this time I am of the view that it would not be in the public interest to have such an inquiry.

Mr. Warner: If they wore hockey skates, you'd get them. You wouldn't hesitate.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: Since I don't doubt for a moment that law-enforcement officers have control of the situation, short of an inquiry, could the minister at least undertake to make a public statement delineating the limit and extent of organized crime operations so that the public has a clear perception of what is going on? I don't think it is good enough for him to issue a disclaimer, as the editorial in the Sun demonstrated on Friday. Can he make a public statement at least?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will take under advisement whether or not the honourable member's suggestion might be carried forward into a public statement. I will certainly consider that and advise the honourable member as to my decision in that respect.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: In view of the minister's response in regard to the number of charges laid and the number of convictions, and in view of the fact that organized crime does seem to be on the increase in Ontario, is the minister still of the opinion the police forces in the province and the RCMP have all the tools they require to deal with this growing problem?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, Mr. Speaker, we do not have evidence to suggest that organized crime is on the increase. It is a significant problem, it has been for some period of time and I am afraid it probably will be for the foreseeable future. But I am of the view that, while police forces would always like additional resources, they currently do have the tools with which to carry on very effectively their law enforcement activities in this area.

Mr. Lupusella: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In spite of the minister's opinion that a public inquiry would not serve the public interest; and in spite of the recommendation that was made by my colleague the member for Downsview that public statements should be made by the Solicitor General in the Legislature in relation to organized crime to sensitize the public—an idea that was suggested several years ago—can the minister explain the statement made by Commissioner Harold Graham of the Ontario Provincial Police, who told the annual Ontario police chiefs' conference on June 28 that there is no Mafia in Ontario, they are just organized criminals, and that, in his opinion, he thinks of the phenomenon as no more of a problem than burglary? Can he explain that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think I heard the honourable member's statement, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the term "Mafia" is not a very helpful term. It is rather a meaningless term in the ranks of law-enforcement officers. It is a term that is not used by experienced police officers who are involved in the fight against organized crime; it just is not a very useful noun and it is just not a very useful term. I do not know how one adequately defines what is meant when one uses the term "Mafia."

Mr. Lawlor: You're the first Attorney General to admit that organized crime exists in this province.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I did not hear the commissioner make his remarks to the annual conference to which the honourable member referred. Without having the benefit of the text of his remarks, I do not think I can add anything further that is useful at this time.

HEALTH QUESTIONNAIRE

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, April 3, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) asked me about a questionnaire of the ministry and its use by certain health-service organizations, and I replied that I would respond more fully at a later date.

Today, I am tabling my response to the member rather than taking the time of the House to read the answer in full; it is fairly lengthy and detailed.

In essence, my reply indicates that a questionnaire was used by the ministry as part of a pre-test in four HSOs. Legal counsel has indicated that neither the survey nor its application, which was on a purely voluntary basis, was in violation of the Ontario Human Rights Code or the Health Disciplines Act. The questionnaire and its results will be discussed by ministry officials and the HSOs concerned, at a meeting on April 16.

I should also like to say that I know the honourable member will agree with every effort made by the ministry to ensure that consumers are provided with satisfaction where it involves the expenditure of tax dollars.

AMBULANCE SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have a further answer. On Thursday last, the member for London North asked me some questions about students employed as ambulance attendants during the summer months. I am tabling today a letter that explains the matter fully to the member. Again, it is a very lengthy answer, too long to go over here.

In brief, I am satisfied that the requirements for summer part-time employment in ambulance services across the province are such that excellence of care is protected. Summer students are always required to work in company with senior ambulance officers anywhere in the province.

[3:45]

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The allegations that were made in my opinion were serious, and in spite of the assurance the minister has given I would like to know that students as poorly trained as this would not be employed in any way, shape or form either this year or in years to come.

Has the minister spoken directly with the executive of the London Ambulance Association and has he looked into the specific instances wherein they claim that students who were not qualified did work in London and Windsor in the summers of 1977 and 1978?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have not spoken with them. I believe staff of the ambulance services branch, either at district office or in Toronto, have. I am advised by a member of the media in that community that at a press conference last Friday the representatives of the association were asked to give specific instances and for some reason were reticent about it.

I would hope that if they have any specific incidents about which they have concern they would report them either to the district office in London or to the head of the ambulance services branch, directly or through solicitors, however they want. I can show them they should have no concern about any legal problems for themselves. If there are specific incidents they are aware of, we want to know about them. The member will see in the letter I have tabled, the original of which will come to him, that our policies are very clear in that regard.

FAMILY BENEFITS

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Is he prepared to table in the House the study that four senior civil servants in his ministry reportedly embarked on into the issue of removing unfair sexual biases in the welfare legislation and the family benefits act?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to withhold the information as obviously it is available merely by looking at the legislation. There is nothing secretive about identifying those areas within the legislation where there are apparently biases based upon gender. All the report consists of is identifying those areas within the legislation. It's not an original comprehensive report of information that's not already available. I will see whether we can make it available to him. That's no problem.

Mr. Peterson: Given that the minister has made this piercing insight into the self-evident and the obvious, is he now prepared—because he now admits it and everyone else who looks at this admits it—to work with the other members of the House to change these sexual biases in the legislation? Or is his only answer against it the one he gave in an interview in the Globe and Mail—I believe about November 1977—when he said it would cost $26,- 000,000? Is that the only reason he has for changing this? My supplementary to my supplementary is: On what basis does he say $27,000,000 will be the cost to change this unfair legislation?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The basis upon which I used that figure was the work done by the analysts within the ministry as to the total cost implications. I would say that is not the only reason but I would say it is a significant reason. If the member can identify where we can come up with $27,000,00 in this fiscal year—

Mrs. Campbell: That's the only reason you gave.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —to eliminate those biases, then it seems to me you have accomplished something I haven't been able to in the time I have been in the ministry. I would also point out that another and very significant reason is that in view of the fact—I recognize it and so do my colleagues—there are traditional biases within existing legislation and we would like to eliminate them—

Mr. McClellan: How about an income security review?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —I would like to see that done in the context of a major reorganization of our approach to income maintenance, for example. I had, in view of the desire to do that, made very specific proposals to the other provinces back in September and got the support of the other provinces. In November I made the request—

Mr. Warner: Blame it on someone else.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —to the Honourable Monique Bégin at the federal-provincial conference for co-operation on the part of the federal government to make the necessary changes to the regulations under the Canada Assistance Plan. At that time it was indicated to me, along with the other provincial ministers, that they would sit down and seriously discuss changes under the Canada Assistance Plan. I must say that I am terribly disappointed to tell the House that I have now in my possession—

Mr. S. Smith: How about the pensions?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —it has now been received by our ministry, a letter, to which I intend to be responding to the Honourable Monique Bégin very shortly, indicating that no, the federal government is not prepared, after all the effort that has gone into it and support from the other provinces, to sit down and seriously make changes in the regulations that would allow us the necessary flexibility.

In the face of that, I obviously will have to discuss with my colleagues whether Ontario is in a position once again, as we have been repeatedly in the past, to go ahead independent of the federal government to make changes that we feel are necessary, with no cost sharing at all.

PETITION

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from over 200 parents in one school area petitioning the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) regarding the reduction of funding for the heritage language program. The petition reads:

"We were shocked and dismayed by your recent proposals to reduce funding for the heritage language program. This program was instituted after long years of struggle on the part of several community groups and has become a valid and important part of our children's education. Therefore, we most vigorously protest the proposed budget cuts for this program and strongly urge you to consider and rescind them."

This petition is the first in a long list of petitions from people who are extremely upset about the retrograde decision to destroy the heritage language program.

MOTIONS

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that when the House adjourns on Thursday, April 12, it stand adjourned until 2 o'clock, Tuesday, April 17.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing administration of justice committee be authorized to travel to Milton and Guelph to visit the Maplehurst complex and the Guelph Correctional Centre on Wednesday, April 11, 1979, and that two and a half hours be credited against the time allotted for the estimates of the Ministry of Correctional Services, and that the provisions of section 66 of the Legislative Assembly Act be not applicable.

Motion agreed to.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution 2.

Reading dispensed with. (See Votes and Proceedings.)

Resolution concurred in.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the interim answers to questions 100, 101, 102 and 103 standing on the Order Paper. (See appendix, page 874)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(concluded)

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset I am tremendously disappointed at the government House leader in not moving that we sit until 6:30, because we on this side of the House on more than one occasion have seen fit to do so to accommodate the order of business which had been planned. I draw your attention to the Monday when the House adjourned for the Christmas break and we sat until 7 to get the Treasurer's estimates finished so that we could do Bill 70 on Thursday and Friday, and I feel that the minister—

An hon. member: Stop crying and get on with it.

Mr. Hodgson: You weren't interested in reducing the question period by half an hour.

Mr. Martel: When the order of business is established and something interferes with that order, there is nothing to say that we cannot change the rules, by motion, to accommodate the orderly carrying out of the business planned for that day.

Mr. Foulds: We certainly did not plan for the adjournment of half an hour.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in reading the throne speech it contained, I think, something for everyone—mind you in small doses. It reminded me of the Brylcreem ad, "A little dab'll do ya." That is what everyone is getting, a little dab. It amounts to very little.

In fact, the throne speech contained a lot of reruns that the government has tried to pass off as things that are going to be done. Let's look at a few of them.

How long have we been talking about apprenticeships; how long? Forever, it seems; and we really haven't reached first base. The committee to promote employment opportunities for women; we established such a committee in the civil service a number of years ago and it has not accomplished a great deal.

Mr. Laughren: Bob Welch, remember that.

Mr. Martel: The fight against inflation; members will recall that this government—

Mr. Hodgson: Get on with your speech, Elie.

Mr. Martel: —supported the federal Liberals on that fight against inflation on the backs of the workers of Ontario, as well as on the backs of the Canadian people. There is a little blurb in there that says we are going to look at profits this time, but for the last three and a half years the workers have paid the price of fighting inflation.

Risk capital; those of us who served on a select committee from 1971 to 1974 advocated action, there is a whole report on risk capital. We have been talking about helping small business for years and not much has materialized.

They also ran this one by us, senior citizen drug plan retained. That's nothing new; it just goes to show how they just threw a little bit in here, a little bit there to make a throne speech which appeared to be doing something and which virtually was not going to change a heck of a lot in this province.

Family planning; we have been talking about that for years. I was surprised to learn, a couple of years ago, that we had a clinic in Sudbury which was open every Wednesday afternoon. The only problem was that the people of Sudbury did not know it was there. I did not know it was there.

An advisory council on multiculturalism; we had one, our friend from Sudbury was on the multicultural committee but it was allowed to die. I think my colleague from Brantford put his finger right on the pulse when he said, "This government has as much commitment to multiculturalism as an alley cat has to morality."

My colleague today brought in a petition from people who are trying to establish a heritage program. It indicated their dismay at government withdrawal from that whole sphere, withdrawing the funds necessary to proceed. Now we are going to establish another committee. I ask the government: what in God's name is it doing?

I have cited just seven items. All of them have been repeated over and over in this House, but we really have not advanced very far with them. A couple were good. I appreciate the fact that we are going to do something for people who are handicapped, at long last. This is something I started advocating as the critic for this party in 1971; that we do what Saskatchewan was doing then and put 50 per cent permanent funding in place for those municipalities which in fact were providing transit systems for the handicapped. We are going to do it in 1979.

The other one, interestingly enough, was a motion I moved in this House, and which the government and the Liberals voted against, when we created the Ministry of Northern Affairs. I advocated a community council. The government is not going to call it that; it is going to call it a local services board; but in fact it is going to do exactly what I suggested, which was to get people voted onto a committee through which in fact necessary funding would be obtained. This was impossible in the unorganized communities.

The throne speech really did not have much new. It is not going to do much to overcome the problems facing Ontario. It deals, I think, primarily with the economy. I want to look at the economy as it affects my area, and then broaden it out to the province. In my own area, I want to examine this throne speech against the background of a document, prepared for the region a couple of years ago and called A Profile in Failure. So members won't think it's just those people in the New Democratic Party, listen to what the chamber of commerce said in respect to the planning of the northeastern Ontario regional strategy, called NORS:

[4:00]

"The NORS is devoid of any strategy of development physical, economic or social. It represents the pinnacle of intellectual bankruptcy of the southern establishment in even analysing the problems of the north, let alone dealing with them effectively.

"The only way to deal with NORS is to let it terminate as an expensive receptacle of dust, until it glides, gracefully or otherwise, into oblivion."

Mr. Laughren: Who said this?

Mr. Martel: The chamber of commerce. "The fundamental problem with NORS can be summed up as the troika of noes: no strategy, no analysis and no programs; therefore, no use."

That's the business community in Sudbury indicating what they see as the problems in the Sudbury area. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, if we've got problems, the beginning of the problems in the Sudbury basin started with this government: I well recall in 1974, the day the House adjourned, as I motored home I listened to the announcement by the government that they were shutting down Burwash. They eliminated 250 jobs with the stroke of a pen.

Interestingly enough, they opened up a new institution in Milton.

Mr. Laughren: The Davis years have been bad for the Sudbury basin.

Mr. Martel: That was part of the decline of the economic base in the Sudbury basin. They wiped out, with the stroke of a pen, the fourth largest employer, after having spent in the previous two years anywhere from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000. They put in a new gym, new quarters for single custodial officers, remodelled all of the homes, and then they wiped it all out overnight.

We argued to try to get the government to change its mind. We argued on the economic basis that they were wiping out economic diversification and leaving us simply to the resource-based industries. It didn't matter.

We argued that they would have to then take the prisoners from the Sudbury basin and put them somewhere else where their loved ones couldn't see them. That was the excuse for closing Burwash: there were too many visitors from the south who had difficulty getting to the Sudbury basin and, therefore, they would have to alter it. Do you know where the prisoners go now from Sudbury? They go to Monteith, about 250 miles away, and they go to the institution in Thunder Bay, about 450 to 500 miles away. It didn't matter about people from the Sudbury basin.

I remind members that Burwash is less than 200 miles from Toronto. It was good, and they wiped it out. I remember raising it in the House. Know what Dr. Potter said to us? He said: "I am running a correctional services institution, not an employment agency." They wiped out some diversification, and they haven't put it back. It was mothballed.

The Minister of Government Services, then the Honourable Margaret Scrivener, followed and she was going to sell it. She, in fact, got one offer of $1,000,000. The chamber of commerce, the labour council and the local members met with the Premier and prevailed upon him not to sell it and, in fact, to establish a committee that would look into the multiple-use concept for Burwash. We suggested, first, that there should be jobs involved in this multiple-use idea and that it should offer services which were not available in the north.

A year and a half later, that committee reported. Listen to what that committee said: "This proposed use is as follows: It provides for an integrated use of the entire site. It will effectively utilize the arable land and institutional facilities, including Camp Bison, which the federal government previously purchased for $1,800,000. It will provide jobs for local residents."

Unfortunately, by the time the report was tabled, the federal government had withdrawn its offer.

Mr. Nixon: That's not like them.

Mr. Martel: It was no longer going to build a federal institution in Sudbury, utilizing the facility that was already there. So there went the jobs. I wrote to the Premier and I said to him: "The Dillon report could have been prepared by a six-year old after a cursory walk around the property."

Mr. Nixon: Is that the Mr. Dillon you are talking about?

Mr. Martel: I'm talking about Mr. Dillon.

Mr. Nixon: Is that the guy who used to be chairman of the John Robarts election committee?

Mr. Martel: I believe he is the same one.

Mr. Nixon: That is the fellow who is on the board of Hydro.

Mr. Martel: I wrote: "The multiple-use concept made more sense than the proposal by Dillon, particularly when one realizes that Camp Bison, which the federal authorities purchased, has not received ministerial approval to proceed with the necessary renovations. I can almost envision the expression of the federal minister, the Honourable Jean-Jacques Blais, when he learns there is another authority telling the federal ministry what it should be doing with the property."

I went on further and indicated it makes more sense to provide a number of services under the provincial jurisdiction which are not now available in the Sudbury area, such as a rehabilitation centre for injured workers, promised by the Premier the Tuesday night before the 1975 election in Sudbury.

Mr. Nixon: That's going to Hamilton.

Mr. Martel: Well, that's gone. The use of some of the homes in the village as group homes for the retarded was recommended by the Ministry of Community and Social Services. That's gone.

The Ministry of Natural Resources wanted in, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food wanted in, Laurentian University wanted part of the facility, Cambrian College wanted part of the facility, and so did the labour council. We get a report after all of that which says, "We'll make it into a federal institution."

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, for gall this government demonstrates it all.

Interestingly enough, the chamber of commerce responded very recently to the Premier.

The chamber of commerce says in their letter to the Premier.

"To the Honourable William Davis.

"Dear Sir:

"We are sorry to have to pursue further the matter of Burwash land use study which upon serious examination we find to be a disservice to yourself, your government and the people of Ontario. This is a sad conclusion regretfully arrived at and which we suspect that you may already share, having regard to what we understood to have been a very substantial cost to the taxpayers of the province, to produce a document of 223 pages which is permeated with bias, contradictions and imbalance of emphasis both in the selection of study areas, conformity to the accepted terms of reference and failure of terms of reference to reflect both in spirit and action the commitment which we felt to be morally binding between us.

"The steering committee formed by your authority was to address itself to the concerns originally identified by the Sudbury Burwash committee, formed around local citizens and groups which met on a chamber of commerce premise to effectively document their collective concern and which we felt would ensure us of effective ongoing direct input and liaison with the steering committee. In reality we were exorcised from further involvement by the procedure of holding meetings alternatively in Sudbury and in Toronto which effectively ensured the non-participation of the chamber volunteers and others, both through cost and subsequent failure to invite meaningful participation.

"This point was brought more precisely into focus by independent and voluntary appearance of the chamber of commerce members at public information gatherings and meetings held by M. M. Dillon Limited, during which no specific recognition was accorded to the visitors, no special courtesies extended, no notes were made or tapes recorded, so that it is bemusing in the ultimate to encounter the outright gall evidenced within the chamber report when it stated that interviews were held in Sudbury with the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce on page 93. This statement was so lacking in substance as to bring into question the quality of the other purported contacts and which leads to the following observation."

I am not going to go into those observations, but what in effect we have happening at Burwash and in the M. M. Dillon report is really a continuation of the status quo.

Mr. Foulds: Was that the chamber of commerce again?

Mr. Martel: Yes, that was the chamber of commerce again. We believe the government advised M. M. Dillon not to come up with a multi-use concept which would provide the services and the jobs which are so badly needed. Instead of spending $10,000,000 on Minaki Lodge, they could spend a heck of a lot less and in fact, provide some alternative employment in the Sudbury basin.

The only recommendations which are meaningful in the backup to what we asked for were the adoption of those services or those things already on the Burwash property. For example, they went along and said, "What we need or should go along with is the camp that is already there for kids." Well, that was built by the Ukrainian community, I believe. That's already there.

They suggested we go along and have a part of the facility for training dogs.

They went along and said they would put a weigh scale on the Burwash property.

It went on and on in this vein, not creating one new thing. Not one cent of commitment came forth from the government to establish a multi-use concept, although they had spent $4,500,000 to $5,000,000 when they shut it down and they're spending roughly $500,000 a year now to keep it in mothballs. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that's commitment.

I want to leave Burwash to move to another part of my riding, and it deals with a multinational. You haven't come to grips with the multinational situation in this province yet either.

We have a mine in my community, which is located about 14 miles away. There are 250 jobs at the mine—by the way, they only made $6,000,000 profit last year. It's called National Steel.

I want to thank the Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie) and the Premier for trying to keep that facility open. But it comes to the nub of the problem when dealing with multinationals that we in Ontario are held to ransom by those corporations.

Let me document it briefly, and I make the following observation before I start. Multinationals, not only in this country, but in other countries, have no concern for the host country. Recently I listened to an economist indicate that southern Ontario looks to northern Ontario as a supplier of raw materials—and I remind you of the Thoman report. Do you, Mr. Speaker, remember that famous report which said that northern Ontario would continue to be the source of raw materials for the megalopolis from Chicago, to Toronto, to New York? That was the Tory government's response to our problem, called the Toronto-centred region plan. The multinationals look on all of Ontario and all of Canada in the same vein; as merely a place from which you draw natural resources.

This company, lo and behold, has an excess of pellets. Iron ore pellets. They've got an excess in the United States. Shades of excess of nickel. Here we go again.

National Steel, which is managed by Hanna Mining, was going to close a mine called Pilot Knob in Missouri, which produced approximately the same amount as is produced in Capreol, my hometown, about 500 tons or 600 tons a year.

Pilot Knob is a losing proposition. It's underground mining for iron ore, and that's usually a losing proposition. They have a three-year life expectancy. The American government decided: "We shouldn't close this operation. We want you to mine it out. We'll pay the shot. You mine it out, and we'll pay you $28,000,000 a year to mine it out so that we can store oil."

National Steel and Hanna Mining decided they could close the mine in Capreol, throw 250 people out of work, despite the fact that the company made $6,000,000 in Capreol last year.

One wonders why they can't gear down somewhere else. Hanna Mining, which manages this operation, produces about 18,000,000 tons a year in Canada. They produced about 20,000,000 tons in Brazil, and they produced about 15,000,000 tons in the United States. It's a drop in the bucket to produce 500 tons in Sudbury. They could gear down one notch somewhere and not destroy that community.

Let me tell you what will happen. Two hundred and fifty men will be out of a job as of May 15, unless we can get something to change that. They're going to close for two or three years, and then they're going to come back when the pellet glut is over. But, where do workers from the Sudbury area go, with Inco having laid off 2,000, losing another 2,000 which they would have had to lay off had there not been a strike; Falconbridge laying off about 750? Where do the 250 men and their families go from Capreol?

But, this company is going to come back. Two or three years from now it will say to the town council, "We need another subdivision. We want you to put that in and we want you to put sewers and water in, and we want you to put in an addition to the high school because we're coming back." Hopefully in two or three years those homes which will have been put up for sale will have been sold, and other people will have come in.

What does it do to that community? What does it do to those workers? What about the tax loss to a small municipality, with about 4,100 people? Right now there are 84 homes for sale in that community. [4:15]

If Hanna Mining is grinding out 35,000,000 tons a year, and it's just the operator for National Steel, and if from Labrador alone National Steel itself is extracting about 10,000,000 tons, I can't understand how we allow a small community to be hammered in that fashion. This leads me to ask a question of the government.

When we had the Inco layoffs, the Premier established a cabinet committee under the jurisdiction of the then Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) which was going to do a cabinet study and come up with a policy pertaining to resource communities. I suspect that committee hasn't even met because if it has, I'm still waiting for the report on what policies it is going to adopt to prevent multinationals, or even nationals, from acting in such a high-handed fashion that they would destroy a community and see workers lose their homes.

After 35 years, this government has not come in with a policy with respect to the resource sector. Its track record leaves a good deal to be desired. That leads me to want to deal with the whole mining industry. I'm glad the minister responsible for the resource sector is here because I want to indicate to him what bothers me about that sector.

Aside from a legacy of abandoned communities, I'm not sure what we have in northern Ontario in terms of secondary industry. I might indicate that if we wait for secondary industry, as espoused by the former Treasurer when he said there would be no secondary industry in northeastern Ontario for 20 more years, if that's the position of the government of Ontario, northeastern Ontario is in trouble.

The mining industry produces fewer than 50,000 jobs a year, and yet the boast of this government is that the resource sector is the basis of our economy and that it is very proud of that. What does it do with the 50,000 jobs, if you include pits, quarries, mining or you name it? If one looks at employment in metal mining and the amount that is produced, one will notice that in 1966 with 27,147 people involved in metallic mining the industry managed to churn out 43,000,000 tons. In 1976 notice the great difference. With 27,380 workers, about 230 more workers, they managed to grind out 60,000,000 tons. In other words, they increased their production by 39 per cent with 230 more workers.

That doesn't bode well for us in the north. It doesn't bode well for Ontario in terms of jobs for young people. If one looks at where our unemployment is, the heaviest area is among young people. Look at revenue. The government talks about this being the cornerstone of our economy. In 1968-69, we got $19,000,000 in revenue in Ontario. Isn't that a magnificent sum?

Mr. Foulds: What are those figures again?

Mr. Nixon: For the whole mining industry?

Mr. Martel: For the whole mining industry, we got $19,616,000. Up until 1972, it had got all the way to $16,344,000. If we include it with income tax, starting with 1973-74 as a base year, we got $59,000,000. Then we had a boom year. We got $191,000,000 in 1974, if we include mining tax and corporate income tax.

Mr. Nixon: That's when John White adjusted it.

Mr. Martel: That's right. Then the slide started.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Reform.

Mr. Martel: In 1975-76, we got $82,000,000. In 1976-77, we got $59,000,000. In 1977-78, we got $31,000,000.

Mr. Nixon: Gee, that John White was a great Treasurer.

Mr. Foulds: Scandalous.

Mr. Martel: The total in federal income tax and in mining tax was $31,500,000.

Mr. Nixon: They have been trying to clean up their act after John White ever since.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if you want to look at it in another way, based on production, let me tell you the value of production in 1977. The value of mineral production in 1977 in Ontario was $2,699,400,000. Our total take was $39,000,000 or about 1.4 per cent of production.

Mr. Foulds: Awful, just awful!

Mr. Martel: Tell me how we will build an economy in Ontario with that kind of return. Let me tell you, if you try taxing them, Mr. Speaker, they will just high grade, so you can't win the game on taxation.

Let me tell you what the Saskatchewan government did in 1978. Let me read their return.

Mr. Nixon: It sounds like a political pamphlet you are reading.

Mr. Martel: In 1978 they got $349,000,000 from gas and oil. In natural gas they got $500,000. In potash they got $108,000,000; in uranium, $2,356,000; and there are a couple of other smaller ones for a total revenue from the resource sector of $461,923,000. Compare that to Ontario where from a value of mineral production of almost $3,000,000,000, we got $39,000,000.

Mr. Laughren: What a disgrace.

Mr. Nixon: Inco says they pay it all to workers.

Mr. Martel: Oh, I can give you Inco's figures too. I have broken them down. Inco's total profits in 1976 were $197,000,000; their total tax—federal, provincial and provincial mining—was $79,000,000.

Mr. Nixon: That is corporation tax—everything?

Mr. Martel: The whole business, the whole business. It is not only bad enough that we don't have jobs and we don't have tax revenue, but we got into the game of exemptions. We have about 30 exemptions which allow them to take our resources from here and refine them somewhere else.

Inco alone delivered 111,000,000 pounds of nickel—contained in nickel oxide sinter—to Wales in 1971. It was 109,000,000 pounds in 1972; 75,000,000 pounds in 1973 and in 1974; 100,000,000 pounds in 1975; and 82,000,000 pounds in 1976. That comes to a total of about 20 per cent of their total production.

If one looks at the refining capacity in Port Colborne, they refine about 90,000,000 pounds a year and this accounts for about 1,411 jobs. When one realizes that Inco sends that much out annually to Wales, we see we lose those 1,411 jobs. If you extrapolate and consider the effect in terms of other jobs in Ontario, it is about double.

It isn't bad enough that we give the exemptions and allow them to send it out of the country, we even allow them to take their money out and explore somewhere else, and we even allow them to write off their taxes against profits earned in Ontario. We are generous. We are generous to the extreme. In fact, they don't even reinvest in Canada any more.

Mr. Foulds: We are giving them away.

Mr. Martel: Let's just look at Inco for a moment. They reinvested about $250,000,000 abroad in ESB Incorporated. They invested $235,000,000 in Exmibal in South America. They invested $30,000,000 in Inco United States Incorporated, International Metals Reclamation Company Incorporated in Ellwood City, Pennsylvania—I didn't even know that existed. They invested $850,000,000 in PT International Nickel, Indonesia. All of that money was earned in the Sudbury basin and they haven't invested a cent for secondary industry in Ontario—none. They have a plant which may start up eventually. They have taken that kind of money and invested it somewhere else.

Before someone says, "Ah, but what about their investment?" As of November 16, 1977, Inco's profits for the previous 10 years amounted to $1,700,000,000, or a 14 per cent return on investment. That is not bad, when you take all that investment, you plough it in somewhere else, and you do not create a job in Ontario. In fact, the only place Inco has invested in Ontario is in the extractive end so that it can get it out of the ground faster.

Inco ploughs it in somewhere else, and we get nothing. We get nothing in tax; we get nothing in research and development; we get nothing in jobs for our young people. I want to say that goes right across our resource sector. If one looks at Falconbridge, Falconbridge is the same; Falconbridge invests in Norway.

Let me tell you just how bad it is, Mr. Speaker. Inco is taking some $50,000,000 of its earnings this year and putting it into ESB-Ray-O-Vac to upgrade those plants in the United States. But they cannot even put an offer on the table to the workers in the Sudbury basin who have created all the wealth for them. All the Tories do is give them more privileges and more benefits, and after seven months they still have not put a decent offer on the table.

I want to tell the government that its track record in the resource sector leaves a good deal to be desired and, when government party members say it is the cornerstone of our economy, I think they are all nuts. There is nothing left to be the cornerstone.

If one takes it one step further, to where the exploration is going on, even the mining companies to whom we have been so generous do not reinvest that money here. In Ontario in 1977, $28,000,000 was spent in looking for new metals. In 1972, the amount spent in looking for new metals was $14,000,000; then it got to $16,000,000, and in 1977 it was $13,000,000.

Do you know what they are spending in Saskatchewan this year? Eighty million dollars. And that province is one seventh the size of this jurisdiction in terms of population. Thirty-five million dollars is coming from the Saskatchewan mining development corporation, but $45,000,000 is coming from the private sector. This government can say socialism scares off the private sector, but we are not getting $45,000,000 looking for new wealth. In fact, the last new mine discovered in Ontario was Land Lake Mine in 1971, and the last new mine to come into production was Sturgeon Lake in 1975.

Where is this government's policy? Where is its policy that will ensure that we have more jobs, more tax, and a greater percentage of reinvestment of earnings held here in Ontario? Where is its policy to guarantee that a certain amount of that resource will be put into the manufacturing sector? Why are we allowing them to invest abroad and then to write that off against the profits earned in this jurisdiction? It's nuts. Surely, even for a Tory government, it is time to put it all together and take a look at it. It's a disgrace.

If one looks at forestry, the government's track record is a little bit better. I guess it was Frost who said, way back, "You have to produce more in this country."

I am trying to go as quickly as I can, but there are some things that cannot be overlooked.

First of all, we are turning back to the private sector the reforestation of this province. We took it away from them in 1963 because they did a lousy job. Now, in the speech from the throne, we are putting it back in their hands. What has convinced this government that they are going to do any better now than they did prior to 1963?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Because the government did a lousy job itself.

Mr. Martel: I was just going to say that. Armson in his report indicated the government did a lousy job. Here's this industry in Ontario which in the first nine months of 1978 made $540,000,000 in profits, and we're going to give them $100,000,000. The federal government is going to give them $230,000,000—not all in this province. This is happening at a time when we have Domtar in 1978 acquiring a gypsum business in California for $34,500,000, and when we have Abitibi Paper going to invest some $22,000,000 in an expansion at Roaring River, North Carolina. Why do we have to provide $100,000,000, without equity and without a return? Does the government even look where those companies are reinvesting the money we are giving them? It might not be the dollars we are giving them, but they are taking other dollars and investing in North Carolina and in South Carolina. They are investing abroad, yet out of the public treasury we are going to give them $100,000,000 this year and we don't have an equity. Government members are lousy businessmen. I don't know any other country that is so generous.

[4:30]

It was interesting when the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism visited England, the vice-president of ICI, which is the parent of CIL, said to the select committee, and there are seven members sitting over there: "The second you start giving money away you are in trouble. The companies that locate in Canada or in any jurisdiction go because the infrastructure is there and the government is fairly stable; but if a government starts playing giveaway, we want our share too, even if we don't need it."

Mr. Laughren: It's unstable government.

Mr. Martel: The government wants to play Las Vegas with these corporations. I want to know if the government has any policy, outside of giveaway, to enhance the economy of this province; I think not.

Yet there are areas where this can occur. I was able to serve on the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism for about four years. In that four years we tabled, I think, 21 reports dealing with the mining industry and with a whole variety of things. One of the conclusions we came to was that somewhere along the line we are going to have to grapple with multinationals. Seven government members signed those reports, by the way; most of them are in the cabinet today too.

Mr. Wildman: And now they don't even know who is responsible for replying to questions on the subject.

Mr. Martel: One looks at what multinationals do. There are not only multinationals like National Steel putting it to us in the Capreol area, but if one looks at Hamilton, one sees that Westinghouse wants to close and move somewhere else. One looks at Columbus McKinnon in St. Catharines; they closed and moved to Buffalo, after 102 years, I guess, in Ontario. One looks at Budd Automotive who are at the trough looking for a handout. One looks at the Hoover Company. One looks at Kennametal who have moved to Toronto. Remington Rand have closed; Wagstaffe bought out Delmonte and closed the operation down.

The government just can't go on with handouts in this area. The select committee, we thought, was established by the Premier to look into that problem, yet most of the recommendations have been ignored.

On the one report dealing with natural resources it says, "The policy shift should involve not a discouragement of resource development but an encouragement of manufacturing and processing in Canada." The second recommendation was, "One important goal of both provincial and federal resource policies should be the achievement of a strong and visible Canadian-controlled presence in the non-renewable resource sector." We haven't done that.

I won't even read it, but the government member of the committee suggested in that report, and signed it, as did the two Liberal members, that we should take up to 50 per cent ownership in the resource sector.

Mr. Nixon: Donald Deacon was a Liberal member.

Mr. Martel: Donald Deacon, and my good friend the late Dick Smith wanted that. And the government members over there signed that document.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Donald Deacon signed it?

Mr. Nixon: Donald Deacon signed that.

Mr. Martel: That's right. But the government hasn't moved. They paddle around this province saying, "Oh, it is only the socialists who want that." The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) signed it. The member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) signed it; and the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker); as well as the former Speaker (Mr. Rowe). It really is amazing.

But that select committee also said something else. It said we should look to areas where there are weaknesses and then move in. When one sees what our trade deficit is it indicates to me there are certain weaknesses. The trade deficit in Ottawa, $1,100,000,000; auto pact machinery, $3,100,000,000; electronics, $1,000,000,000; textiles, $1,900,000,000.

That select committee had recommendations on mining equipment. I want to speak about manufacturing. Members would be interested to know that at the present time there is a smaller percentage of our population in the work force engaged in manufacturing than in all other western countries except Ireland, Turkey and Greece.

Mr. Laughren: You guys should be ashamed of yourselves.

Mr. Martel: Can you imagine that; Ireland, Turkey and Greece? There are fewer Canadians and Ontarians involved in manufacturing than in all those countries. Isn't that something? The emphasis on give-aways—

Mr. Foulds: What are those countries again?

Mr. Martel: Ireland, Turkey and Greece.

The select committee said one of the places we should be moving into was our mining equipment sector. I just want to put a few facts on the record.

Canada is the third largest mining country in the world; Canada is also the second largest consumer of mining machinery. Canada has the dubious honour of being the largest importer of mining machinery in the world. For mining machinery, narrowly defined, our imports amounted to $376,000,000 in 1978, up 340 per cent from 1968. The trade deficit in mining machinery was $255,000,000 in 1978, up 140 per cent from five years earlier.

The percentage of market captured by imports is truly astounding and getting worse. For mining machinery, the figure was 91 per cent in 1978, up from 73 per cent in 1975 and up from 59 per cent in 1965. Mining machinery has about the worst trade performance of any of the machinery sub-sectors.

In terms of jobs lost, the imports represent a conservative estimate of 6,000 jobs, based on the formula relating value of shipment to number of employees in the overall machinery business. Other formulas suggest that the spin-off would amount to double that. In other words, mining machinery imports represent a total of about 18,000 potential jobs, if we got serious about it.

The argument is always advanced that Canadian industry can't get established because of a small domestic market. Well, in this field, that's crazy. In the mining field this argument just doesn't hold water. The Canadian market for mining machinery—and this does not include oil and gas or extractive machinery—was $416,000,000 in 1978, double that of five years earlier.

According to Stats-Can, the capital expenditure on new machinery or equipment for all Canada amounted to about $1,163,000,000, or $649,000,000 excluding oil and gas. If equipment for smelting and refining is included the total expenditure rises to $1,692,000,000. Capital expenditure on machinery and equipment for iron ore alone was $233,000,000.

It is an interesting fact that Canada produces a value of metals almost equal to that of the United States, yet the United States maintains a trade surplus and we continue to be the largest importer of mining equipment. Canada also produces more minerals than England, Sweden, Germany and Finland, yet all these countries have established a strong domestic base.

Just one interesting fact: you cannot, for instance, buy a Canadian-made diesel engine in Canada of any size, of any size.

Mr. Foulds: Scandalous.

Mr. Martel: Isn't it interesting to note that the select committee, in 1974, made the following recommendations: "There is a scope for the development of a significant Canadian control presence in the mining machinery and equipment industry. The committee recommends that the government actively encourage the development of Canadian-controlled firms in the mining machinery and equipment industry through the provisions of loans and research assistance and through purchase policies. The committee recommends that policies be developed to include the performance of mining machinery and equipment firms in terms of export, research and development and increasing Canadian value added.

"The committee is of the view," I go on further, "that if the private sector does not respond to policies designed to encourage the development of the mining machinery and equipment industry, it may be appropriate for the government to become involved in the area directly."

That was signed by at least four cabinet ministers.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, but do you believe that any Minister of Industry and Tourism or any Premier ever read that or ever paid the slightest attention to it?

Mr. Martel: Well maybe they didn't, but maybe they should have.

Mr. Nixon: You, me and your mother are the only ones who read it.

Mr. Martel: My understanding is that the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) was put in charge of going through those reports and indicating to the government what policies might, in fact, be enacted. Interestingly enough, it was not just that select committee, it was the select committee that looked into Inco last year. They too, made a recommendation. Let me read that recommendation. Finally, the final report of the select committee of the Ontario Legislature on Inco and Falconbridge layoffs made a recommendation:

"That all levels of government investigate and develop a program of industrial diversification in the Sudbury area." Two of the specific areas to be examined and encouraged were an expanded mining research and development program at Laurentian University and a mining equipment manufacturing industry in the Sudbury area.

"While acknowledging that the Sudbury area is primarily involved in the production of nickel and copper, the committee notes that most of the heavy equipment used in the mining industry throughout Ontario is manufactured outside of Canada. Within a relatively few miles of the Sudbury area, uranium, gold, silver and other precious metals are mined throughout the year."

It was interesting that the people who opposed the establishment of that sort of development were the mining companies. Edwin Carter said at those hearings: "That is a cyclical industry and therefore we should not get involved in it." It is interesting that the one large producer of underground mining equipment in North Bay—

Mr. Nixon: Canadian Tire?

Mr. Martel:—hardly—Jarvis Clark, recommended that we move to that field. He is the only successful producer of equipment. Mr. Clark said he would leave the market system intact but has specific proposals for government effort to foster its development. One of his favourite themes is that Ontario should form an Ontario mining group modelled on the Swedish and Finnish group. Its members would be the manufacturers, government agencies, mining companies, contractors and consultants. The Ontario mining group would have a commercial role, informing its members of all the international commercial opportunities, arranging joint ventures as well as participating in trade missions.

That was just one of the recommendations from the select committee. Significantly, though, they indicated in the report probably seven or eight other areas of real weaknesses, and the select committee recommended that Ontario should look to those weaknesses and then get involved.

Mining equipment is a natural. Because we are the third largest producers in mineral wealth, we should in fact move to the field of production of mining equipment. We have not done so and it is a disgrace, because not only could we capture the internal market, we could give tax preferences and so on, tax credits, we could also get involved in research and development and we could also start to export.

The market is there. If the private sector does not want to do it, rather than give away to Ford $68,000,000, rather than give away to other industries large sums of money, maybe we should be ploughing our money into something that is going to give us jobs, that is going to give us research and development, that is going to give us offshoots, and that is going to allow us to get into the export market.

That is just one-area. Those reports indicate a variety of areas.

I am trying to go as quickly as I can. I am just going to deal briefly with the health issue. I wanted to talk about children, but I won't.

Hon. Mr. Welch: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Before the honourable member goes on to the final issue, I think the record should show that there was a general understanding by which the House is not bound, and I appreciate that, that the time allotted for this debate prior to 5:45 would be divided equally among the three parties. Notwithstanding a matter that I am going to talk about in a minute for just a minute, that would have been 35 minutes per speaker. The honourable member started at five minutes to four so he had an extra five minutes on that, which no one is going to question, which meant he would have 40 and the other two parties would have 35. Before even the disruption of this afternoon he assured us he had a 45-minute speech; he has now gone 50. All the time he takes now is taking away from the other two, which is not in the spirit of the understanding.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly, I started after four o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You started at five minutes to four.

Mr. Martel: That is quite impossible. I would ask the Speaker if he would check that figure out.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You started at five minutes to four.

Mr. Martel: You might say that. I do not agree. My timetable does not indicate that. The other thing is, before you get too hooty with me, we offered a solution—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Why don't you go to six o'clock then?

Mr. Martel: —and in your usual lovely fashion you ignored it. We have sat on this side of the House on a number of occasions to accommodate the government House leader beyond six o'clock. I asked the minister why he couldn't move to go an extra 30 or 35 minutes.

[4:45]

Hon. Mr. Welch: You never agreed to anything that wasn't convenient to yourself.

Mr. Martel: If it isn't convenient to the House leader it doesn't hold water either, does it?

Mr. Cassidy: You sat there, inert.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the honourable member continue?

Hon. Mr. Welch: You've proved your point. You just take it away from the other side.

Mr. Martel: We're prepared to sit until 6:30 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You've proved your point.

Mr. Martel: You did that on the emergency debate. You proved your point. And you proved your point last Tuesday night when we went into bills that weren't scheduled. So, don't come around here telling me about proving points.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now, wait a minute. We had an understanding.

Mr. Martel: We had it out, yes. My office checked with your office on that occasion, my friend.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it has already been raised. I can't wait to hear what the honourable member has to say about medicare, and I hope we all understand that whatever happens now, the light will have to go on after this marvellous debate concludes. So, let's get on with it.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I only want to spend about five minutes on this.

Mr. Laughren: I'll testify to that.

Mr. Martel: I am interested, from this point of view, at the accusations being made.

Mr. Nixon: Come on, come on.

Mr. Martel: It is interesting to note that 18 per cent of the doctors have opted out, that we are down to a formula of four beds in the north and 3.5 in the south. It is interesting to hear the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) try to blame the opposition parties for the dilemma we are in. He didn't get such a hot reception at Wellesley Hospital last week, according to the reports in the paper. As for the member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane), who totally blamed the NDP the other night for the attack on doctors, I'm amazed; I really am amazed.

Mr. Laughren: He had to apologize to his constituents.

Mr. Martel: Before we are all said and done, if he has not already done so, I suspect the member for Algoma-Manitoulin has already gone to the Minister of Health to talk about the cut in the Little Current hospital, which is going to see itself with about a one per cent increase this year and a bed cut. I suspect if he hasn't already visited with the minister, he will be doing so in the very near future.

Mr. Foulds: If he hasn't gone, he should.

Mr. Martel: The other problem with medicare, of course, is that this government has never been committed to it. I recall when it came in—I happened to be here—John Robarts called it a machiavellian scheme. I remember it well, the great reluctance with which they went into OHIP. I recall that debate well.

Interjection.

Mr. Martel: The minister wasn't here, so she needn't tell me about it.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I do read.

Mr. Martel: She should read the record some day.

The government didn't want to go into it. If the government were sincere about trying to iron out some of the problems—but it is not usually; this government has a great capacity for putting a middleman between the government and the electorate. It does that with school boards and municipal councils, and now it is doing it with doctors. It makes them the goat in the piece.

If the government wanted to resolve it, it would have appointed a mediator, as Saskatchewan has just done, to try to iron it out—someone with the eminence of Chief Justice Hall, then it would get a mediator in there to try to resolve the solution. It might look at a couple of other things in discussions with doctors. There is no other profession I know where one starts at the full buck, where one starts from square one. If one is a teacher, he has to work his way up the totem pole. If one is a lawyer, he works his way up the totem pole. Not doctors; they start at the top. No other profession does that. Maybe the government should start to look at that.

They might also look at the maldistribution of income within certain groups. They will find there are certain specialists in certain sectors at the top—a very small group—who cream off the milk. This is what the specialists tell me. Maybe the government could look at it.

The other thing it might look at is the mess within OHIP. In the Saskatchewan system, 82 per cent of the claims are paid within 30 days. I know a doctor in Sudbury who is still waiting for his $3,000 cheque for January. Does the government wonder why they are upset? It is convenient to have the minister try to blame the opposition parties.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you support Saskatchewan's balanced billing?

Mr. Martel: There is less than three per cent in there. They are so far ahead of us it is not even funny, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you support their system?

Mr. Warner: You will never catch up.

Mr. Martel: I was amazed to read in the last couple of weeks a letter from Dr. Vail. I thought he was just blaming the NDP. I thought, "Here's a Tory," but I learned lo and behold, the other night that Dr. Vail is a Liberal. I couldn't understand why he was just kicking the hell out of us. I thought he was a Tory and, like most doctors, kicked the hell out of us, but I found out he was a Liberal.

I want to ask if any one in this House recalls this statement being made: "If the marketplace, to which the Premier refers, is insufficient to overcome this 30 per cent differential in the two fee schedules, and it seems as though that will be approximately what the difference is, would the minister consider making the marketplace truly effective by either eliminating the opting-out provision or more importantly, by including the non-reimbursement by OHIP of those patients who chose to go to opted-out physicians?" Do members know who asked that question?

Mr. Laughren: Who said that?

Mr. Martel: That was in the House.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us who said it.

Mr. Martel: It was the Leader of the Opposition. It is in Hansard, April 14, 1978.

Mr. Cassidy: What a flip-flop.

Mr. Martel: We have Dr. Vail sending letters to everyone in the province saying: "Look at the NDP; they're after you," while there's the Leader of the Opposition saying, "You can't opt out or, if you do opt out you'll have to collect all your money yourself."

Mr. Laughren: He is still saying that.

Mr. Martel: Isn't that an interesting question? Maybe somebody would send a copy of that to Dr. Vail and to all the doctors in the province.

Mr. Laughren: Is he still saying that?

Mr. Martel: No, of course not. The other thing I wanted to mention is the $50,000,000 budget cut that was recommended from that side last year.

Mr. Laughren: The Liberal side, that is.

Mr. Martel: The Liberal side. Last year they were going to save the province $50,000,000 in the health budget. Nobody ever asked them where they were going to cut. If they were going to cut $50,000,000 last year, that wouldn't be in this year's budget and, with a four or five per cent increase where would we be this year, if that party had got its way?

When all of these people go around wagging their finger and saying it's the NDP, I want to tell them we're trying to save the universality of this plan.

Mr. Nixon: Goodbye socialism.

Mr. Martel: That's what you said before Thursday's by-election.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Right, and you dropped 20 per cent.

Mr. Martel: Those two seats will be filled by New Democrats.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about Chatham? There was a landslide there.

Mr. Martel: What happened in Chatham? Where was the landslide there? You slid all right, you slid in the mud.

I want to tell the honourable members that for sheer hypocrisy that group has got it all. They wanted a $50,000,000 cut in the budget, though they didn't say where. That would have given a further shortfall this year, if we had gone that route. They wanted the opting-out clause totally removed or not to allow doctors to bill OHIP. That's just unacceptable. I wish somebody would send a copy, as I said earlier, to Dr. Vail to let him know the Liberal position.

Mr. Nixon: Why don't you send it? You're always sending out letters.

Mr. Martel: I don't send anything out. If the member wants to give me Dr. Vail's address, I'll send him the letter and Hansard.

I've heard many speakers in the last week on this side of the House say that they're tired of this government. If they want an opportunity to get rid of it, I urge them to join us in the vote today.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think we can probably divide the time remaining. I will be cutting short some of my comments as did the member for Sudbury East, and perhaps the Premier will be able to cut his short as well. I notice he hasn't been in since the bomb scare. No doubt he and his platoon of writers are feverishly trying to work out some defence of the indefensible, which he will bring in hot off the mimeograph machine when he has it completed.

I am of the opinion that the irrelevancy of this debate is pretty much apparent to everyone anyway, and I say that with a very heavy feeling in my heart and mind. As a matter of fact, for most of the hour that the member for Sudbury East was speaking we did not have a quorum. Keeping careful count, there were at one stage only four NDP members present and only about three in the government benches, without a cabinet minister except our good friend formerly from Cochrane, who in that respect doesn't really count—except as a gentleman, when he will always count.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: And two Liberals.

Mr. Foulds: And two Liberals.

Mr. Nixon: So the idea that what is presented in this debate if of some momentous importance really is something that disappeared, if not this year, maybe several years ago.

Mr. Foulds: Probably because the Premier never attends.

Mr. Nixon: I think it should be a tremendous responsibility on all of us, including the House leaders—I say to the member for Sudbury East, and the House leader for the government (Mr. Welch), who has now departed—that we can surely organize ourselves so that this debate returns to being one of the more important ones the legislative session would have.

I would suggest as follows: On the completion of Her Honour's speech, we set aside the first day immediately for the leaders of the three parties, including the leader of the government. There's no reason why we couldn't do this. It's not necessary for an elaborate presentation, since the leaders have the responsibility to put forward in broad terms the alternatives they and their parties are offering to the electorate and the taxpayers.

We could devise a time and maybe could have an agreement sealed in blood so that no one is going to take advantage of the other. The honourable members could be sure we would see there would be no committee meetings, and heaven help the private member who would not be interested enough to attend and listen. We would hope some of the press people would be hanging on the gallery—let's say hanging on the railings of the galleries; we will hang them another way some other time. It can be made an event.

I would further suggest we could limit the speeches of private members, such as myself and the honourable member who has just completed, perhaps to 20 minutes. Once again, we could arrange the work in the Legislature so there is no reason for the members not to be in attendance.

If we have to rely on our whips to see the men and women who are elected are here to listen to the views expressed by the honourable members in a limited debate, we can certainly do so. This ought to be an occasion where, in general terms, we not only put the party alternatives but listen to the problems that have been brought forward and will be brought forward by private members.

There are not many members of this House who know anything, or give a damn, about the mining tax. Whatever members think about the speech from the member for Sudbury East—

Mr. Foulds: A fine speech.

Mr. Nixon: —he did give us a good deal of information in that connection. When one looks at all those blue seats opposite, and the member for Sudbury East wonders why they don't take any action, the answer is clear: They don't know anything about it and they don't care anything about it.

When the honourable member bleeds a little bit that Conservatives and Liberals and NDPs signed some report of some select committee, really he is being a little naive. I hope I'm not being unduly cynical when I would suggest that although a good deal of work goes into those reports, the ministers concerned simply hand the report to some person employed and say, "What do you think of that?" Probably the person employed, if he/she does get around to reading it, will say, "Actually we're on top of this and our policies cover it."

A lot of the select committee work is practically meaningless.

Mr. Foulds: No. Let the record show that some honourable member said "no."

Mr. Nixon: I regret that very much. It's an opportunity when the House is in a minority situation when we can really impose the responsibility on the government to react to these matters.

The honourable member even referred to the famous select committee dealing with the Sudbury situation. In many respects I would say to him that was largely window dressing. Frankly, it was window dressing for more parties than the government party.

Mr. Foulds: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Nixon: I would include the NDP in that regard. There seemed to be nothing that could be done. The damage having to do with government policy was already a fait accompli and unfortunately it continues in the benighted policies that are doing little or nothing for the development of Sudbury.

But the thing that bothers me is when the honourable member, in the dying moments of his address—somebody wrote me a note and said there was a bomb in here after all, but that's another matter—couldn't understand why we Liberals were not going to support their no-confidence motion. It occurred to me that when we had the NDP no-confidence motion last week—goodness knows what we're going to have next week, more of the same, no doubt—but last week, when it was the greatest thing in the world that we had to have an election, we had to vote no confidence because of a five cent increase in the subway fare in Toronto.

[5.00]

I wonder what the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) is telling his people back home.

Mr. Martel: Sudbury East.

Mr. Nixon: The other Sudbury member isn't even here. Is that a big issue in Sudbury? Should we, as the Liberals, have turned to the NDP and supported it on this fatuous, no-confidence motion?

Mr. Warner: You supported the government; a coalition government.

Mr. Nixon: Really, they seem to have lost any understanding of what can be done effectively in this Legislature in a minority situation.

Mr. Foulds: When are you going to sign the form for coalition? When are you going to sign the coalition agreement?

Mr. Nixon: I would ask them to simply look to see what my colleague, the leader of the Liberal Party, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith), has been able to accomplish in here in this minority situation.

Mr. Foulds: I'll tell you what the initials are: SWF.

Mr. Nixon: It was his leadership that reversed the 38 per cent increase in OHIP premiums. It was his leadership that got the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) to back down from his Olympian position and cancel that great big, huge, elite hotel that was going to be built on the Niagara Escarpment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So much for tourism.

Mr. Nixon: It was his leadership that got the royal commission on food appointed.

Mr. Foulds: Talk about hyperbole.

Mr. Nixon: Whatever you think about its work, this is the way knowledgeable and sensitive leadership, supported by a cohesive and hardworking party, can, in fact, improve the work of this Legislature.

Mr. Foulds: How can a son of Harry Nixon be saying these things?

Mr. Nixon: I know the Premier (Mr. Davis) will be anxious to have his share of time. Dr. what's-his-name, his chief—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Smith.

Mr. Nixon: No, no; not his chief psychiatrist.

They are just dashing off a few pearls they are going to cast before the members of the Legislature. I regret that. It's a shame we cannot have the kind of debate in this House where the Premier and at least some of the more effectual cabinet ministers were present—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Thanks a lot.

Mr. Foulds: Go ahead and leave, Larry.

Mr. Nixon: —in order to hear not only what the opposition officially thinks about them but what individual members want to bring before this House.

We forget the tremendous power that resides in this chamber, or in the membership of this chamber through its vote. There are many reasons for us to believe we are rather powerless, simply because no one seems to respond to what happens here and the vote is everything; you know, Mr. Speaker, that in a minority House the vote can in fact dismiss the government.

Mr. Foulds: Except when, under the great leadership of Stuart Smith, we telegraph the punches.

Mr. Nixon: I'm getting so convinced by my own oratory I'm going to be led, perhaps, to recommend to my colleagues it is time for such a dismissal, but not on the basis of the ineffectual and crying no-confidence motion that is before us, that's certain.

Mr. Warner: No; coalition is better, coalition government is better.

Mr. Turner: Thank God for that.

Mr. Warner: No, you support the destruction of the health-care system.

Mr. Foulds: Nothing wrong with the hospital system, eh?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I was giving you my recipe for an improvement in the quality of the debate, and one of the things was to truncate some of the longer speeches. My own is approaching that time limit I don't want to go over—

Mr. Turner: Yes, it is.

Mr. Foulds: Go on.

Mr. Nixon: —but there are many areas for the development of an effective parliament that we must bring ourselves to consider. We have to do something so the debates here are effective, so that they influence government policy and we, as elected members from our own communities, feel we have some effective and useful role to play in these deliberations.

I want to speak about two or three specific things very briefly. The first has to do with the deliberations of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs. The matter in Harrisburg, the atomic accident just finished a week ago, in my view makes it imperative that that select committee, standing in for private citizens across this province, review the safety features in our own atomic reactors and make a recommendation to the House and to the government in that connection.

One of the things that concerned me during the height of the incident, or accident, was attempts by some of the media, —and I think particularly of the CBC—to bring together qualified scientists to more or less discuss it. If one scientist was from the anti-nuclear camp, and another for example was from Ontario Hydro, it was appallingly apparent that there was no meeting of minds whatsoever. The one group from Hydro was prepared to say it's safe and it must go forward, and the other was prepared to say it's the end of mankind and civilization as we know it.

Any reasonable person listening to this would have that chill feeling in his heart that perhaps some review of this was not only timely but seriously overdue.

It is true the select committee is going to undertake that this summer, but the proposal put forward by my leader, which would have involved Dr. Porter in the deliberations of the select committee, was an excellent one. I hope it is not going to continue to be dismissed. Any time it is raised the honourable member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) says, "You haven't the guts to make the decision yourself." That has to be so fatuous, it just has to be unbelievably inappropriate under these circumstances. If anybody thinks there is any politics in this, then really it is pretty scary.

This is an instance where the select committee under the chairmanship of the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)—and I believe there is universal confidence in his chairmanship—would have a chance to hear the people from Hydro and the people from the anti-nuclear lobby who are extremely well versed and highly academically trained. So we should have somebody there in whom we have confidence, who can listen to these arguments and more or less weigh them, one against the other.

What is going to happen is that public consciousness of the situation in Harrisburg is going to fade. In fact, it is already fading very quickly. We are going to be back to business as usual believing it can't happen here and that it was probably something designed to increase the sales of tickets to some movie. People are already more or less forgetting about it. Yet it was perhaps a chance in a lifetime for us to focus on the situation involving the safety of the atomic alternative, which is so important to this province.

There is no doubt in my mind if that alternative is rejected, or significantly rejected, it is going to mean a tremendous change in the quality of life in this province for the foreseeable future. If we are not going to have access to atomic energy, then the decision must be taken very deliberately indeed, and after only the most careful review, which I believe should have already been entered into.

Secondly, I want to deal with another matter which came out of the review of the Hydro committee when we were dealing with the atrocious bad judgement of the government in allowing the expansion of Hydro to go forward at its rate over the past decade. I will be referring to that again, hopefully when the Premier is here because I want to refer to it in his presence.

One of the things I found very interesting, when we were talking about the population which must be provided for in the future, up to the year 2000 and beyond, is that the distribution of that population is going to dictate quite dramatic changes in the policy of the government, now and in the future. It is common knowledge that with the number of citizens, probably including most of ourselves, who will be retired in the late 1990s and by the year 2000, that is going to mean that the proportion of the population will be disproportionately aged and there is going to be quite a commitment in order to pay the pensions and provide the services needed.

At the other end of the scale, however, we must recall, with the birthrate being down and immigration also being down, the number of young people under the age of 15 to be provided for in schools and other facilities will also be down quite dramatically.

The interesting fact which came forward in the Hydro affairs committee is that the number of people productively employed in order to pay the cost of the dependents, that is those under 15 and those over 65, will be higher in a few years than it is even now. That's actually good news. It means that our tax-producing capability in relation to those we must provide for, those under 15 and over 65, is going to improve and will continue to improve slightly. But we can only use that improvement if government policy is going to direct these tax dollars for the provision of services, financial and otherwise, to those at the upper end of the age scale, those over 65, and therefore reduce them for those in the school age.

This seems terribly difficult to do. The teachers have put forward good reasons why this is the time when we can improve the quality of education by reducing the number of students and hiring more teachers. But certainly we in this House must realize that long-range policy must be towards directing those scarce tax dollars—which must be used for the provision of services to dependants—in an orderly way to those in the age groups above 65.

I also want to say something about the problems involving the provision of medical services. The member from Sudbury said he was down here in the gallery, or as a member, when John Robarts was talking about medicare being a machiavellian scheme. I remember that as well. I also remember that, a few weeks later, he attended a federal-provincial conference and reversed his position by saying that it would provide the best medical care that would be possible. I certainly believe that his second perception was correct.

I see the honourable gentlemen shaking their heads, indicating that it is inconceivable to them that John Robarts might have changed his mind in any of these views; yet I know, when they rush out and peruse the record following my remarks, that they will find I am right; as usual.

We in the Liberal Party have a commitment to the concept of universal medicare that perhaps the other parties do not have. The New Democratic Party is talking about the experience in the west, but it was Pearson and the Liberal government of Canada that took the steps which resulted in what we now have as, in my view, the best medical insurance program in the world.

We are very deeply concerned about the opting-out problems.

I would like to talk about two matters in principle. I cannot sit as a member on the Legislature and permit the services in our publicly-financed hospitals to be such that those doctors representing various specialties will not accept Ontario Health Insurance Plan fees for their full payment. It must be of great concern to the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and to the Premier that we are providing these many millions of dollars, now directly under the day-to-day and dollar-by-dollar control of the ministry here in Toronto, and still permit those specialists who are necessary for the health and welfare of our people to demand payments above and beyond the OHIP requirements.

I have no objection to the government negotiating with the doctors, but I feel very strongly that in the long run, in public hospitals particularly, we cannot accommodate opted-out doctors in any number. This is something that I put to the government opposite.

There is one other matter that concerns me. I was interested to read that the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), who has been absent for some time travelling in China, stated without equivocation that she, as a professional, had never belonged to OHIP and never would, and that it was always her philosophy that the doctors should charge the patient on the basis of the doctor's perception of the patient's ability to pay.

I would hope that the members of the government, and particularly the Minister of Health, have rejected that completely. They may have to do it with some care, knowing the abilities of the Minister of Education as a member of the cabinet to impose her views on some of her more flexible colleagues. But as a matter of principle, for a doctor to decide what the patient should pay, when we have a system such as ours, is unacceptable; and I would hope that all members of the House would agree that it is unacceptable. It should be a philosophical basis of our program that we are prepared to provide, through our insurance program, adequate payment; beyond that, the doctors should not decide what the patient should have to pay for his services.

I want also to mention something about liquor legislation. I am very glad that the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) is in the House, because I was very impressed on March 30, 1978, when in response to a debate initiated by the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini), the honourable minister, then the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and responsible for liquor and liquor policy, got up and said that they were going to raise the drinking age, which has been accomplished. But he went on with a package of policies which were going to reduce the pressure on young people to follow the examples of their peers and learn bad beer-drinking habits. I do not have the quotation here, but Toronto Life had an interesting article about it by our good friend Colin Vaughan.

[5:15]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Inaccurate but interesting.

Mr. Nixon: Inaccurate? I don't believe so, because I am very interested in this. I happen to know that the Premier, as a former superintendent of the United Church Sunday school, is also interested in this. There was a commitment by the minister that by regulation we were going to require that lifestyle beer and liquor advertising be removed from television.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No; not so.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, you can recall very well the elaborate statement made by the now Minister of Industry and Tourism, in which, in detail, he indicated the regulations and controls that were going to be necessary. Being the fair-minded person that he is, he said, he wasn't going to impose this immediately, he was going to let the beer ads run out to the end of the year so that they would not have to waste all that money. We are now into another year, and if anything the beer ads are more compelling and more effective. I would say they are the best ads on television. In some respects, they are better than the programs they sponsor. I can't take time to describe them, but members know them. They sit around those tables and knock back all that foaming beer.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'm getting thirsty.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Never watch them.

Mr. Nixon: I don't know whether it's because the ministry now has new leadership or not, but the government has gone completely back on that commitment. If the minister thinks otherwise, certainly he should make a statement in this connection, because if anything the beer ads are more compelling. We are putting, particularly on young people, more unnatural pressures which they are going to find irresistible. The argument that the people who are selling beer are simply vying for a share of the market simply will not wash. The pressure certainly has increased the consumption of beer and liquor, and I think it is of grave concern to all of us here.

I know the Premier is anxious to make his contribution to this debate. I want to talk, at least briefly, about the matter that probably concerns me more than anything else. It has to do with the state of the finances of the province. The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) is going to treat us tomorrow night to his budget. I have a feeling that he will, as is the custom of the Treasurer since 1971, announce a large deficit. There is no way of knowing what this will be. I would also predict that by the time the deficit is actually counted up, after the money is spent, it will be larger even than he predicts.

It appears to me that, after these 36 long years, this province has a stable of sacred cows which are the pets of the Tories, often implemented at the behest of this Premier or his predecessors, which even his cabinet ministers can't touch. The cows can't even be milked, let alone slaughtered. They are lined up there eating at the public trough, using up in every way the dollars that we, through the authority of this Legislature, tax out of our citizens.

Mr. Peterson: What about the waste products?

Mr. Nixon: I am very concerned that from one end to the other we have established an infrastructure—that phrase is often used by the Premier who likes those confusing phrases—an infrastructure that itself is almost beyond the control of this government. I just want to list a few of them.

One of the old chestnuts, one of the first ones—actually the father of this was John Robarts who made the announcement when the Minister of Education was travelling somewhere—is the county school board. We have the most expensive system of education in the world. There's no doubt about it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No.

Mr. Nixon: If you are talking about sending your kid to private school, that's different; but we have the most expensive public system in the world, and I am not at all convinced of its efficacy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was your idea. Do you remember that pamphlet from the election on county school boards? Elect a Liberal government.

Mr. Nixon: We have a system which has so many administrators that the top-heavy aspects are really a terrible and continuing draw on the taxpayers. I think of so many of the county school boards where one can't even list the officials before one gets to somebody in the school. Most of those officials, who were good teachers at one time, were wise enough and able enough to move into administration so that they can retire when they are 55 years old. With their service, if they were 20 when they started teaching—and many started to teach younger than that—it means that they can retire when they are 55, while we have the pleasure of sending them a cheque every month from the time they are 55 until they shuffle off this mortal coil. It is just great for those people, but the costs are incredible; it is the most expensive system in the world, and I feel that we have to come to grips with that.

As a matter of fact—I mentioned this the other day—as the enrolment declines, we must reduce the cost of education. I remember the Premier responding to a question, in the absence of the then minister, having to do with cutting back on the administration. He agreed with me that administrative costs should be reduced. It was not until the then minister returned and said, "Oh, we can't do that," that all the people in administration across the province heaved a sigh of relief and went on building their empires of directors, assistant directors, area co-ordinators, subject co-ordinators, assistant subject co-ordinators—all in the $35,000-$50,000 range.

When we talk about the top-heavy administration, even the hospitals, which now are run almost on a day-to-day basis by the Ministry of Health, are troubled by the same disease. The penchant for bureaucracy to grow larger and larger is costing us more and more day by day, and reducing the numbers of dollars available for the actual hospital services that are so important.

In our own instance we have a new health council. They did not want to use facilities that were vacant and had been vacant because of previous cutbacks in the hospitals. They rented rooms and facilities for the new health council elsewhere. They hired a PhD as the director of operations for the health council. Once again the whole thing starts: He has got to have a secretary; he will soon have an assistant; the members of the health council will start paying themselves per diems. The whole thing builds and builds from one end of the province to the other.

Let me turn to the program of land assessment—one of the New Democratic Party members is a professional assessor, but I do not see him in the House. In 1971, one of the first acts of the Premier, at the behest of the then Treasurer, was to say, "You people in municipalities can't handle assessments." He took it over, and it has been a fiasco ever since. They have not been able to do anything with assessment. The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) is turning gray trying to deal with it now; we can see how worried he looks.

A comparison of the cost is simply astounding. Even in Brantford we have a regional headquarters and a district headquarters, and still the assessment is out of whack. Then they end up, in Hamilton, imposing 500 per cent tax increases on the businesses in the east end of the city.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was the Volkswagen one.

Mr. Nixon: I know these people came in to see the Premier. They felt they had every right to, since they supported him with their vote and with their money for so long. Now they feel they have simply been done in.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, they didn't; I went to see them.

Mr. Nixon: I will be just another couple of minutes.

We are listing the sacred cows. Surely one of the fattest and sleekest is the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, which is the special pet of the Premier. They are paying millions of dollars in rent in that famous building. I hesitate to even mention that again, but it is true. We are still paying rent for that palace up on Bloor Street, even though the former Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) had recommended that OISE simply be dismantled and the furniture sold. I think he said that we should rent that property to somebody else to get a few bucks back out of it, and that the research in education be carried on by the universities. That doesn't sound irresponsible to me, but it is in the same stall as educational television. That is another one of the Premier's pets.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you opposed to it? I'll take some responsibility.

Mr. Nixon: I do not want to get into all those arguments, but I am opposed to ETV in its present form. I agree with Darcy McKeough: Educational television to provide something in the schools is fine; but if I want to watch Judy LaMarsh interview somebody, why can she not do it on the CBC? I am already paying—

Hon. Mr. Davis: She is not hired.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, she has been fired, has she?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No. I said she had not been hired by the CBC.

Mr. Nixon: I never know whether the Premier is on good terms with Judy or not; sometimes she is working for him and sometimes she is not.

Just as I approach my deadline, in this stable is regional government—I do not want to say too much about that, except that regional governments now are buying land and looking at the various plans to build their new headquarters; and they are elaborate, beautiful ones. They provide skateboards for the councillors to get from their offices to the cafeteria. The one that is going up in Haldimand-Norfolk—it is going to be in the new city proposed by John White—is certainly going to be something that the Premier will be proud of. It is his policy, it is his baby, but it is our money.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was your policy.

Mr. Nixon: There are all sorts of good municipal facilities that could be used. I find that regional government is high taxes, unaccepted by the public. The Treasurer's recommendation that it was too costly to continue with is an excellent one.

Conservation authorities I have already talked about. The duplication, huge staffs, the inertia that goes with big bureaucracy—they cannot decide whether to open the dam or to close the dam. The chairman, who is a government appointee in our own area, says to Nixon, in response to my comments, that it is strange I did not know, for example, that the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) is responsible for dynamiting ice dams. I phoned my good friend, Roy, and he said, "That is news to me."

All of these conservation authorities are rapidly losing their credibility. They are building the same big headquarters, they are paying the per diem, they are having the big dinner meetings and all the rest of it. They are putting in all of the facilities to find whether the water is going up or whether it is going down, and they cannot decide how to control the floods. The only thing the conservation authority in our area does is run marvellous parks, but we have a municipal parks board, a provincial parks board, a federal parks board. I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have to look at this situation if we are going to truly cut these costs.

Hydro: wow! You know, I have a new office here, room 210. You are all invited to come in because from the window—and there has got to be some justice in this—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is it as big as Margaret's?

Mr. Nixon: —I have the best view in the House of the Hydro building.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He almost called it the Moog mansion.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Can you see the guns trained on you?

Mr. Nixon: It is shades of 1974, but there it is and it is an engineering miracle, except that it came from medieval times in democracy—

Hon. Mr. Davis: You know how it worked in 1974.

Mr. Nixon: —because we simply could not find a way to build it with public tenders. Remember the arguments about that? The people have even spoken on that, but still it is a fact; we could not even do it by public tender.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It works very well.

Mr. Nixon: Yet, the decisions to do with Hydro are still made by this government; they are made by the Premier. He takes the credit when they are good and he tries to justify it when they are bad, that we are overbuilt to the extent of two-and-a-half Niagaras—something like that. But, you know, the Premier says it is nothing, it is only three cents per day per consumer. Do a little easy arithmetic and that is $100,000,000 a year we are paying—

Mr. S. Smith: More than that.

Mr. Nixon: —for these fabulous atomic mausoleums that are sitting there and we do not even need them. We will need them some time, but meanwhile the consumers are paying the interest.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: He thinks the solution is to appoint his former campaign manager to clean up Hydro, and at least government will have a role there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's cut Atikokan.

Mr. Nixon: I cannot rest until I have given perhaps an impartial, maybe an insider's view of what is going on over there. I quote—and I must do this—from the member for Prince Edward-Lennox, James Taylor, QC, MPP, at a meeting in Newmarket on March 28.

Hon. Mr. Davis: LLB.

Mr. Nixon: It is a short quote. "Ministries are manipulated by deputies in clever marionette-like manoeuvres, who, in turn are managed by the Premier's mandarins, with only the semblance of power at the elected level. The charade becomes more sophisticated as government becomes more involved in the day-to-day lives of the people. I say this as a concerned citizen, committed to the democratic process, who has walked the so-called corridors of power, only to be mugged in the back alleys of bureaucracy."

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: If the honourable member had been writing his own speeches when he was in the ministry, he would still be there and he would be running for the premiership, instead of accepting that other advice.

[5:30]

In closing, I just want to say that the government with its policies and programs, is responsible for the problems the Treasurer is facing. I feel appalled to think of what he will be announcing tomorrow, that he has rejected the concept from McKeough that a balanced budget is possible and it is not possible, after these many years, for this government to do anything with the programs that have been in place and grown without control as far as administration is concerned, for 36 years, since 1943. I do not believe this government, with their supporters, has the confidence and I don't believe they have the freedom of action to do what must be done to cut the costs of the administration we control in this House from one end of the province to the other.

There is only one alternative and that is to turf them out and replace this government with one headed by my colleague from Hamilton, a man who has shown—and I have indicated this to those who were here at the beginning of my speech—through his leadership in this House that we can control the costs of OHIP, that we are not prepared to allow the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) to go ahead and ride roughshod over local interests in the Niagara Escarpment, and that we are concerned about the costs of food. He has indicated clearly through our policies that we have an alternative position in education, in local government, in control of the environment, and in the development of our economy. I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, this is the answer the people of Ontario are seeking.

The NDP, who are paying close attention to my remarks, have brought forward the old standby, the old chestnut, of a no-confidence motion. I have already indicated it surely is an embarrassment to those NDP members from Sudbury and so on that they bring forward these no-confidence motions regularly, having to do with the TTC, and so on, instead of dealing with the problems we all must face in this House.

We are not supporting the no-confidence motion but we are prepared to continue to work effectively in this Legislature for the good of the province. When an election comes, and I for one will welcome it, we are prepared to work hard for the confidence of the people. We have an alternative program the people of this province need. We have a leader in whom we have great pride and we are prepared to work and we are prepared to win the election and govern.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At 5:34, the member for Brampton.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do we finish at 5:45, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. S. Smith: That's correct.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will do my best. The honourable member who has just finished divided the remaining time in 50-50 fashion which is really quite comparable to so many of the Liberal policies. As they sort it out, I wasn't surprised nor was I disappointed. In fact, I rather enjoyed it. I am not going into some of the observations he made because I know his memory is short and convenient on some issues and longer on others. I won't remind him on this occasion of the Liberal Party, when it was truly a Liberal Party, commitment to county school boards.

I remember bringing a pamphlet into the House: "Elect me, Bob Nixon. We will have county school boards. We will have regional government." Do you remember those great days when the Liberal Party—

Mr. Nixon: You don't have any pamphlet like that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We pick up all your good ideas. I have kept the pamphlet. It's going to be in my memoirs.

Mr. S. Smith: Fortunately, no one is going to read them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I've kept that pamphlet, I think it's one of the most significant ever used, and the very distinguished member remembers it so well.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Singer might have said that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He said regional government, but you said county school boards. That's where Jack McCarthy got the idea to give to Mr. Robarts who communicated it to me some 3,000 miles away. I heard about it in London, England, and I was delighted to get the information. Then I got the message, "Come back and put it together," which we did.

At the outset, it is traditional to express the government's appreciation to you and through you to the other Speaker—if that's the best way to phrase it—for the way in which the affairs of this House are conducted. Certainly, on this side of the House, we have total confidence in the Speaker's ability to run it in an orderly fashion—Oh, here he comes, I'll be more eloquent now.

I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, in your absence, what a great fellow you are and what great dignity you add to the House.

There are very few who can deal as effectively with the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) as you can. Certainly, the Leader of the Opposition can't deal with him, I'm sure; he has difficulty himself. I want to congratulate you, sir, on the way you do it.

Mr. S. Smith: We have great confidence in the member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition has great confidence in his colleague? So do we, but in what particular areas, I would not want to mention.

But I say most sincerely, sir, that while we do cause you problems on occasion—myself less than anyone else in the House—in terms of succinct and proper answers and always sticking to the point, we do congratulate you on the very excellent way you handle the affairs in what is on occasion not too easy an assembly.

I want to touch briefly on minority government. I was interested in listening to the observations of the member for Brantford-Oxford-Norfolk when he referred to his party's commitment to making minority government work. I guess I am no less than human, and some days I have less than total enthusiasm for minority government. I would be very surprised if the two leaders of the opposition parties would not like to see a majority government but of a different nature. That I understand.

While not getting into the by-election results in any specific way, I do not think there appeared to be anything in those that would indicate the people of this province were really that enthusiastic about the official opposition. I did not sense that. Mr. Broadbent, the leader of the New Democratic Party, said the by-election wins were great victories; they were marching towards victory federally because of that. But when one looks at the results from Wentworth, that is like Napoleon saying, as he left Moscow, "We won."

Mr. Warner: Now tell us about the win in Chatham.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In spite of what my friend's colleague said, that my speech writers were hard at work during the interim, there is my speech. The honourable member will be delighted to know it is so brief. The problem is, this could get into being an hour rather than 10 minutes.

Mr. S. Smith: At least when it's written out for you, we know when it's going to end.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I acknowledge his great talents; but today the members are having to put up with my own. I apologize to the member—

Mr. T. P. Reid: We can tell the difference.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sure my friend can tell the difference.

Mr. Conway: Has Gordon Dean found the winning side yet?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, but I tell the member this: If Gordon Dean runs again, we will have a Tory member from that great riding; no question about it.

I do not get that involved in by-elections, but I watched Hamilton-Wentworth very closely, because we had the perception on this side of the House—and I don't think it was erroneous—that it was not the Leader of the Opposition, but a fellow by the name of Stuart Smith who was the candidate for the Liberal Party in Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. S. Smith: At least they didn't have to hide their leader, the way Gordon Dean did.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All the material said, "Elect Stuart Smith"; then there was the name of the Liberal candidate buried somewhere in the material. And, of course, there was the campaign strategist, who is sitting right behind, and one seat over, from the Leader of the Opposition. He was the campaign manager; he was the strategist. He was the one who went into the riding and put his foot in his mouth seven days a week. I want to thank him on behalf of our party for his participation in that campaign, because without question it helped Gordon Dean acquire the number of votes he did. We want to thank him for his help. We want to express our appreciation.

Mr. S. Smith: His smartest tactic was avoiding your name.

Hon. Mr. Davis: My wife does that too on occasion. I understand that. But, talking about avoiding names, when I went into Scarborough West, very briefly, heaven's above, I had to not only seek out a Liberal sign saying "Liberal"; there was a little bit pasted over a big billboard saying, "A Stuart Smith Liberal." It was sort of an addendum from party headquarters.

An hon. member: It said, "Ontario Liberal."

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, but it was a second thought.

Mr. S. Smith: We didn't see "Bill Davis" on John Larke's signs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: John Larke ran as our candidate. Our candidates do not need me to prop them up. Obviously the candidate in Scarborough West did not want his leader to prop him up.

However, that's getting partisan, and I really wanted to say most sincerely that it is still the intent, quite seriously, on this side of the House, to make minority government work. Being relatively objective, I think we have had some measure of success. I hate to give credit—well, I do not hate to give credit; I must say to the members opposite that by and large they have been constructive on a lot of issues—not all of them; they have been misguided on some. But I think we have demonstrated that with some give and take—because I think this was the wish of the people; I may not agree with what they determined in 1977, but we have accepted it—we are making a genuine effort to see that it happens.

I want to touch briefly on two or three principal issues. The first is medicare. I will maybe correct the opposition spokesman of this afternoon for the Liberal Party. Actually it was in Ottawa at the federal-provincial conference, at about 10:30 in the morning. I was with Mr. Robarts very early that morning, and it was after that early morning or late evening that he used the word "machievellian." It was right at the conference. It was not here; it was there. He said it right in front of Mr. Pearson. I was very young and naive.

Mr. S. Smith: Now you are no longer young.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am no longer young; I am still naive, and I hope I always will remain a little naive. That is something the Leader of the Opposition might learn, a little humility—not too much, but a little humility is not a bad thing.

I will not correct it any further, but I think I am probably right that that is where he said it, and there is no question that at that time he meant it. My guess is that if he were asked for a comment today he might say the same thing.

I want this point made clear: I am not being critical, although I did hear the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk via the electronic devices available to us, and I heard some excerpts from the member for Sudbury East—for about two minutes, but I am not going to stand here and listen day after day to people on the other side of the House, particularly in the New Democratic Party, expressing any greater commitment to the health services for the people of this province than has been demonstrated conclusively over the years by this government.

We have developed in this province one of the finest systems of health delivery anywhere in North America. I challenge them to find a better system anywhere, a better quality of service or better qualifications in terms of the professionals who administer it. I am not saying for a moment there are not problems.

Mr. Warner: It's falling apart.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let us not kid one another, it is not falling apart. There are some problems, but, really, I have to say to the Minister of Health that what he has been able to accomplish in the last two or three weeks—actually it has been an ongoing discussion with the Ontario Medical Association—I think has been a tremendous accomplishment.

I guess this is the basic difference: The people on the other side of the House would have them all as salaried employees of the crown. They can kid themselves, but that is what they want; of course it is what they want. They want a confrontation. Those people always believe in the politics of confrontation, because that is the way they think they achieve success.

I have news for them. The people of this province do not like the politics of confrontation. They do not want to see government confronting the medical profession. They do not want to see that sort of situation if we can resolve it as reasonable people.

Our approach is very simple. We sit down with the OMA. We work out some of the problems. I do not say they are all solved, I do not know that they ever will be all solved; but we are going to continue to work in a co-operative fashion, representing the public interest but taking into account that the medical profession as a group and as individuals have certain rights and certain responsibilities that go with those rights. We understand that. I think the Minister of Health has done an excellent job in terms of resolving many of these issues.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to go on until about seven o'clock. I am enjoying myself here today. This is what you get for not having a prepared speech.

Mr. T. P. Reid: One out of 125 isn't bad.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I really will not go on until seven o'clock.

I want to deal with oil very briefly. I will not tease the official opposition in this province with respect to its commitment to world price and all the rest of it. I will save that for another occasion. I want to say this—and I hope the members opposite will not take offence: I am concerned with some aspects that the present federal campaign is taking on. I am a politician, I am prepared to suffer criticism. We do it; we enjoy it, I guess. I understand it. But I have differences with the Premier of Alberta. I have differences with the Premier of Saskatchewan. I will debate with them what should happen in terms of what any renewed constitution should contain.

Mr. S. Smith: What are those differences? You haven't mentioned them.

[5:45]

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I tell members this: I take exception to the Leader of the Opposition saying that Peter Lougheed is un-Canadian. I take exception to the Prime Minister of Canada going to certain parts of this country saying, for example, in Ontario: "Those people out west are greedy; they are not Canadians and they have no national interest." That sort of campaigning, that sort of approach, in my view is divisive, it is wrong. It does not provide the framework for the reconciliation of these differences.

I think political leaders should challenge one another's competence, that I understand; but I really am concerned, and I may speak out about it again. It is not a question about any policy; it is a question—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no; it is not a question of a policy, it is a question of a political leader trying to set one part of the country against the other, that is what I am concerned about.

Mr. S. Smith: That is exactly what Mr. Lougheed did.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to tell members this. This also applies in terms of the great province of Saskatchewan. We took the position at the federal-provincial conference that we would support a constitutional amendment—and I forget the exact phraseology—regarding a compelling national interest. No Prime Minister of this country is going to go around lumping everything together, saying that only he can save Canada, only he believes in a strong central government.

Mr. S. Smith: What did Joe Clark say?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This province has committed itself to a strong central government, a government with the economic resources to deal with national issues. That has always been our policy; it will continue to be so and the Prime Minister does us no favour in what he says.

Mr. S. Smith: What does Joe say about Petrocan?

Hon. Mr. Davis: If I were the Leader of the Opposition, I'll tell him what he should do. He should call his very close friend, the leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, and tell him he should alter some of the approaches he is taking.

Mr. S. Smith: You ask Joe Clark what his position is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I ask him to do it. It would be a great thing. Don't become apologists for them, don't become apologists for them.

Mr. Breithaupt: Are you an apologist for Joe Clark?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are not talking policy, we are talking style and the way these things are being done.

Mr. S. Smith: What about Petrocan?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do members know what else he did? Here in Toronto, he was attempting to create the impression with the ethnic communities that only he, and he didn't phrase it exactly this way but this was the impression—

Mr. Mancini: Careful what you say now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that only he was in favour of the entrenchment of the Canadian Bill of Rights in any amended constitution.

I sat there at the same conference, and with the exception of the Premier of Manitoba everybody else agreed.

Mr. Philip: At least he didn't visit the Pope before the election; talk about playing politics.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That, to me, is not the route this campaign should take. As I say, I have always supported our federal leader, because we are one in this great party. We are really one; unlike yourselves, we are one.

At the same time, while I have always supported our federal colleagues, and I have tried to do it on a positive basis, for the first time this week I did make some observations that were critical of the Prime Minister. I don't normally do this. It offends me, it upsets me; because I think it is wrong and I make no bones about it.

I may say some of the same things in Calgary, of all places, on Wednesday night.

Mr. Conway: When did Margaret Scrivener stop making speeches?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member want to come out? He would learn something about energy.

I want to touch on the economy very briefly. I listened to those people opposite—both parties, but that one in particular, which just does not have any understanding of economic issues.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh yes we do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No they don't; well that member might.

Mr. Warner: You pillage this province, you pillage it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Since I first entered this House, the honourable member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has come so far that by the time he retires, my guess is that he will have seen the light and become a Tory. I still have that hope, I still have confidence that it may happen.

Mr. MacDonald: I have too much self-respect.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The NDP would regulate everybody. It would nationalize everybody; it would take the incentive out of everything, it would leave individuals with no ambition, no desire to accomplish a thing. They don't understand what motivates people.

Interjections.

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense.

Mr. Mackenzie: Your speech is deteriorating.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They have no understanding of human nature. They do not know what makes the economy work. I just wish they had some greater awareness. Do they know what their slogan should be? It should be Mackenzie King's: Jobs if necessary but not necessarily jobs.

They attack the multinationals.

Mr. Cunningham: Two chickens in every pot and a Tory on every board.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They waffled around with respect to the grant to Ford. I don't know that Hansard ever recorded it, but I sat here and my recollection is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) whispered across so that I could hear it: "Give them 100 per cent. Don't lose them." But when he found out that maybe we were coming closer to a deal, then it was 50 per cent we should give them.

Mr. S. Smith: I believed John Rhodes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to tell him that because we were responsible we got something that was equitable. We got something that means 7,500 jobs, which will give a great shot in the arm to the economy.

Mr. S. Smith: I assumed he told the truth.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'll tell him something else. There is not a member of his caucus—

An hon. member: It's too bad the whole province isn't here to listen to this batch of bullroar.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —talking to his friends in Essex or Windsor that hasn't been quietly, if not publicly, in support of what we did for Ford of Canada. I challenge any of them to stand up in the House and say something else. And so have people from the other opposition party.

An hon. member: No way.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition may feel that it is politically attractive to criticize or make life difficult for the multinationals. I'm not here to defend the multinationals.

Mr. Breaugh: You not only defend them, but you finance them now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We were in Detroit with some of the senior people from the auto parts industry. We're concerned about R and D, but if one starts legislating that in order to have expansion a multinational has to have R and D, that's closing the doors to thousands of job opportunities because of the structure in this province.

Mr. S. Smith: You are going down the road that has taken us to our present dilemma. You are going down a road that has taken us to where we are today.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You're limiting yourselves. You have no understanding of the real world.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Things are so bad that we have one of the highest standards of living anywhere in the world. We have a quality of life that is the envy of most other jurisdictions. We're going downhill so rapidly that, without any doubt, the Leader of the Opposition in his negative way—

Mr. S. Smith: We're being deindustrialized.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on! We've had a greater growth in the manufacturing sector in the last year than in the past five. We've created a 133,000 new jobs. I know that offends him. It is getting close to time, but I've got several other points I want to make here.

An hon. member: You haven't made any yet.

Mr. Breaugh: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What do you mean by dispense?

Mr. Van Horne: We have had enough.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will continue to deal briefly with industrial incentives. Three weeks ago today I spent a little time in Washington. I didn't go for the purposes that I am now going to describe, but I went there. I had some discussions and I just thought I'd inform the members of the House about them.

An hon. member: It was some place that Marvin Shore lined up for you, no doubt.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I went there to make a speech.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It looks like you found your way to the cow patch.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Until the last two or three months I know why you would go to Washington, but that is all over now, I hope.

Mr. Kerrio: Tell us what you said in your speech.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I went to make a speech. I had some very helpful discussions with senior treasury people there and we discussed this issue of incentives. I made it very clear to them that if they could get agreements from the governors of the northern states with whom they'd already had discussions, I would join with them in any public declaration that we as a province would not stay in this business of giving grants in competition with the northern states. Then I added a caveat. I said: "When you get the northern governors to agree to that, you've got to bring the southern governors along as well because that's where a lot of the action is going."

They're not so sure they can do that. But I made it very clear that Ontario would participate with them and try to bring to an end the kind of bidding war or whatever terminology one might wish to use. They also made it quite clear to me that they were upset.

Mr. Wildman: You encouraged it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. You people urge this when it suits you. Come to my riding, talk to the members of the UAW and ask them whether they agree with the grant to Ford.

Mr. Breaugh: All right, when?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to say that 75 per cent of them did. Do members know something else they have learned in the leadership of the UAW? They came into my office; they came into the cabinet room; they said, "Mr. Premier, intervene with American Motors. We can't have the passenger car assembly moving to the United States—"

An hon. member: Donald Duck.

Hon. Mr. Davis: "—we don't want the Jeep." They raised a real fuss. I told them then and I can repeat it now: that has been the most significant move American Motors has made. We are employing people in Brampton. They are having trouble with the other aspects of the industry and so I can go to the fellows on the line where I know quite a few and they are relatively content with a decision made by a multinational which opposition members were in the process of opposing. We have jobs in Brampton. We wouldn't have them otherwise, maybe.

An hon. member: Do you want a dump?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, we have our own landfill problems.

An hon. member: Biting the hand that feeds you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say something that would be considered provocative.

I also pointed out to the government of the United States that it's fine to complain about us and say their hands are clean, but the fact of the matter is the government of the United States also involves itself because of their subsidy programs to the states. If one wants a highway extension, an interstate, to serve a new plant, one gets a good part of the funds from the federal government.

An hon. member: Are you apologizing for the budget?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I am not apologizing for the budget. I don't want to steal the thunder from the Treasurer so I won't say what I was going to.

But the economy of this province is growing; it is healthy. The opposition doesn't like it; they don't like to see jobs being created; they don't like to see our standard of living improving, because it doesn't serve their political purpose.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Tomorrow night's budget is going to disappoint them. There are so many more things I would love to say—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but I have taken now about the same length of time as the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk. I know that for good reasons the official opposition is totally in support of the throne speech. I know, with the dogmatic, stubborn, unenlightened attitude of the members of the New Democratic Party, that in spite of my eloquence, in spite of my logic, they cannot be prevailed upon to see the light and join with the official opposition. So much is their loss, their lack of understanding. But perhaps the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) might on this one occasion separate himself from his party, vote with the official opposition in one of the very significant throne speeches that has been produced in this House.

The House divided on the amendment by Mr. Cassidy which was negated on the following vote:

ANSWER TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

POPULATION-PHYSICIAN RATIOS

100. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health inform the House of the current ratio of population to specialist physicians in: (1) southern Ontario; (2) northern Ontario; and (3) Toronto. [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

FEMALE MEDICAL STUDENTS

101. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health advise the House how many women have been admitted to Ontario's medical schools each year for the last five years. [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

NON-INSURED HEALTH CHARGES

102. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health advise the House what is the total amount of money over the insured rate charged to Ontario residents by: (1) family physicians and (2) specialists who have opted out of OHIP, for each of the following years—1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977 and 1978. [Tabled March 27, 1978.]

PETERBOROUGH HSO STUDY

103. Mr. Breagh: Would the Minister of Health table any studies that have been done on the feasibility of setting up a health service organization in the city of Peterborough. [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Due to the large volume of recent Order Paper questions and their technical nature, I cannot provide an answer today. I expect to have all answers ready by April 30. Answers will be tabled as they become available, up to that date.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last week the members for Rainy River (T. P. Reid) and Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) asked questions concerning nuclear fuel waste management. At that time I undertook to describe the present status of the program and Ontario's involvement in it.

As honourable members will recall, the Canada/Ontario Nuclear Fuel Waste Management Program was announced on June 5, 1978. Under that program the federal government, through Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, has undertaken to develop and demonstrate a safe and suitable method of disposal of nuclear fuel waste. Ontario Hydro is responsible for studies on interim storage and transportation of irradiated fuel. The primary responsibility for developing and demonstrating a safe and suitable method of disposal of nuclear fuel waste rests with the federal government and AECL.

AECL's objective in its current research program is to measure the properties of various rock types in order to assess the feasibility of disposing of nuclear fuel waste in a deep underground mine.

To ensure continuous close co-operation and consultation between the two governments and their agencies, a Canada/Ontario nuclear fuel waste management co-ordinating committee has been established with a chairman from AECL and representatives from Ontario Hydro, the Ontario Ministry of Energy and the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

As my predecessor stated, Ontario approval of initiatives taken under this program is required. To effect this, a step-by-step approval process has been established. Attached to this statement is a series of charts that set out the various steps in the approval process.

As honourable members will note, the concept-verification phase which AECL now is in involves a review of the 1,500 or so rock structures—or plutons, as they are called. From among these 1,500 rock structures in 13 regions of the province, eight to 10 research areas are to be drilled to identify the most "suitable types" of rock.

Once these suitable rock types have been identified, AECL will then identify up to 100 plutons with comparable rock characteristics.

At this stage—the site selection phase—AECL will then invite the local communities located near the 100 plutons to express whether they are interested in AECL demonstrating nuclear waste storage in their area. This will be done to select a single demonstration site. This phase is at least three to four years away.

In brief, the first approval step in the concept-verification stage is for a public information program to be initiated in a region. Second, approval is required for a community relations program in a proposed research area. Third, approval is required for field research at specific locations in a research area.

Typical field research activities by AECL will involve collecting surface samples, examining surface features and drilling to obtain information on properties of rocks at various depths. Drilling should not be taken as an indication that the research area will necessarily be considered as an eventual waste repository.

I understand a number of honourable members have already been briefed by AECL including the members for Rainy River, Kenora (Mr. Bernier), Renfrew North (Mr. Conway), Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski), Lanark (Mr. Wiseman), Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling), Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes) and Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle).

Similar briefings have taken place with some members of Parliament and with municipal councils. For any member who has not been briefed and who would wish to be, I would be most happy to arrange for AECL to give a special briefing.

Ms. Gigantes: Aren't there any plutons in Leeds?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In keeping with the approval process, AECL has presented, and Ontario has approved, proposals for public information programs in the Rainy River region, Kenora region and Leeds-Grenville-Lanark-Renfrew region, and proposals to conduct community relations programs in the Atikokan and White Lake areas. We have not as yet received any proposals from AECL to carry out test drilling or other field research activities in any area.

A press report last week stated AECL had proposed that it conduct field research including test drilling in the Atikokan area, that it expected approval of this proposal from Ontario within the next week and that drilling would begin within two weeks. This news report was not accurate and has subsequently been corrected. Ontario has not yet approved research drilling near Atikokan, although I understand the Atikokan municipal council supports such drilling, as does the member for Rainy River.

Before Ontario's approval is given, the Ministry of Energy will obtain and assess the views of the other ministries involved.

Apart from the Atikokan area, AECL has not yet identified any other research area in which it would like to do research drilling.

Ms. Gigantes: You've already been drilling.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO LOAD FORECASTS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy related to the announcement by Ontario Hydro of its stretchout of its generating program to 1990. Has the minister looked at this announcement by Hydro? Is the minister and his government prepared to accept Hydro's statement, since it does in fact bring the system into rough balance by 1990 if Hydro's 4.7 per cent forecast is accepted? If the Ministry of Energy's forecast of 3.7 to 1985 and 2.2 thereafter is accepted, we will still be left with an excess of close to 3,000 megawatts by 1990 and that will of course represent a tremendous expense. Is the minister going to accept Hydro's view, or is he going to accept the view that came from within his own ministry?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I explained at some length the difference between the Ministry of Energy's energy model and the Hydro forecast. In fact, as the honourable member has pointed out, in electricity they are virtually the same until 1985, when our forecast drops in terms of electricity. However, I pointed out we were looking at all forms of energy and there were a number of variables.

Mr. S. Smith: Why can't you include those variables?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Neither our model nor the Hydro forecast used the same parameters, and consequently they aren't really comparable. That's perhaps the long way of saying I think the government is prepared to accept what I have read in the press release and which I understand is to complete Atikokan in a longer time frame and to do the same in Darlington and Bruce.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, since the minister appears ready to accept Hydro's 4.7 per cent load growth forecast even in view of lower forecasts both within his own ministry and in other neighbouring jurisdictions, can the minister tell us what provision there might be should it become clear as years go by that Hydro is excessively optimistic? What provisions might there be for further stretch-out so the balance will occur even later? Can he tell us the penalty costs incurred as a consequence of accepting Hydro's present plan and present forecast and then discovering three years hence, for instance, that it was too optimistic?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The answer to that would be it would depend how far it was out as to what penalties there might be. I understand from Hydro that in most but not all of the program there is a degree of flexibility built in which could be even more flexible or could be speeded up if the forecasts are too low.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary Mr. Speaker: Can the minister say whether the Ministry of Energy gave any formal or informal instructions to Ontario Hydro with regard to the deferral of its construction program or was this a matter that was left completely up to Ontario Hydro with no input or no sense of overall policy injected by the Ontario government?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I mentioned there were meetings between Energy staff and Hydro management personnel. I had discussions with the chairman and wrote him a letter, of which I have a copy here. Without reading the whole letter, though I would be delighted to send a copy of it to the member if he doesn't already have one, I said on April 4 to the chairman:

"You have told me that the Hydro board at its meeting on April 9 will be reviewing proposed adjustments to a generation program in order to assure itself that it is the best possible and to meet its predictions as to future electricity demands in the province, and that its generation plans and its transmission plans are integrated as well as possible with particular regard to the timing of coming into service of both stations on line. The board will, I know, want to give most careful consideration to the risk that would be involved in any decision that was predicated on too short a timetable for the public participation hearing and governmental approval processes."

I then mentioned the situation regarding the routing of a second plant out of Bruce and of a high voltage east-west tie line in the north. I said: "Obviously, it would be inappropriate for me to make any assumption as to when such processes could be completed or as to whether government approval would be granted. I had been informed of the discussion on this question that has taken place between the staffs of Ontario Hydro and my ministry and I must say that, in my opinion, it would be safer to err on the side of the processes taking a longer time than appears to have been anticipated by Ontario Hydro's staff."

"In conclusion, I regret that I am unable to give the Hydro board any assurance that the public participation and hearing processes, as well as government consideration of any requests to build either of these transmission lines, could be carried through and completed in time to permit Ontario Hydro to meet the proposed in-service dates of 1986 and 1987 for these lines."

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that Hydro's new econometric model, which is supposed to be the most sophisticated method of energy forecasting, showed a growth rate actually of 2.6 per cent and that it was a judgemental decision on the part of the forecaster which ended up at 4.7. Is he aware that the 2.6 per cent is very much in line with the forecast in all of our neighbouring utilities, such as Detroit Edison and Power Authority of the State of New York? As a result of that kind of consideration, would he now not agree that the time has come for the government to be in a position to impose a policy framework on the operation of Ontario Hydro in order to consider such contingencies as those we are faced with at the present time, such as the flexibility of contracts and this anomaly over the growth rate?

[2:15]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I would answer by saying that in the remarks of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) a couple of weeks ago, when he was talking about Hydro's program, he said it would be better to err on the surplus side than have a shortage. In my own view, and in the view of Hydro's forecasters as I recall it being reported in the press, it is difficult to predict. He said you could have the most sophisticated system in the world, but it was a very dicey process trying to forecast 12 and 15 and 20 years ahead.

It would seem to me Hydro's present position, as indicated in the chairman's statement in their press release, was set out on the second page where he says: "The board's decision to extend construction schedules for three committed plants means that in-service dates will be rescheduled to gradually bring capacity into phase with projected electricity demands. It will provide an orderly transition to meet lowered expectations in electricity demands while attempting to minimize economic impacts on industry and employment."

And further: "The board's decision today will result in reduced generating capacity by the mid-1980s, as well as reduced capital requirement." That is not to be interpreted to mean reduced from the present level, but reduced from the projected level.

Mr. J. Reed: What if they are wrong again?

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are never wrong.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether he can provide this Legislature with the penalty costs for the cancellation of Darlington now, as compared with the penalty costs we will be into if he and Hydro decide it should be cancelled next year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can't answer that question because I can't predict what may happen.

TRANSPORTATION SERVICES FOR HANDICAPPED; COMFORT ALLOWANCES

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday the minister stated, and it is in Hansard here, that the fare for such services—we were referring to transportation services for the handicapped in Hamilton—is 50 cents per trip. Can the minister explain how it is she is so misinformed on a fundamental matter of this kind? Is she not aware it costs $4.50 for a disabled person to travel from Chedoke Hospital to Bold Street in downtown Hamilton and back, and for the same trip in the evening the cost is $21 per hour or $42 per two-hour trip? Given that information, can she explain how she could have been so misinformed on this matter?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition implies that I am misinformed, I think he was certainly misinformed yesterday when he put the total cost of the comfort allowance at the transportation cost for the disabled.

There is a program that has been implemented after the five pilot projects across the province were very carefully evaluated; Hamilton has applied to be a part of that program. The rules set down by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications leave the rules to be applied as they regard the fares to the local municipality. The suggestion has been made that the fares be in line with the fares charged to those using the ordinary transportation services. Those same rules will apply to Hamilton when they put in force the new program of transportation for the disabled.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, with all the tax credits and so on, is the minister not aware that from a person who at present is confined to a wheelchair and receiving, for instance, $150 a month alimony, her friend the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) is now going to take away $99 of that and, via tax credit at the end of the year, give back the princely sum of $19?

As I have told the minister, under municipal regulation and local regulation by the DARTS people it costs $42 just to go downtown in the evening and back. Does she not recognize the need for a special provision in her comfort allowance for people who are confined to wheelchairs, but who are sufficiently mentally alert they ought to be able to maintain some contact with the community and with ordinary life, as opposed to those who are not in a position to do so?

Does the minister not see a distinction that needs to be drawn there to help these particular people who are now being punished by the chronic-care co-payment fee, a fee that in other circumstances might be considered reasonable?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: There are special programs to provide for the special needs of those people who are found to be in circumstances where it is difficult for them to arrange for their own transportation. I would also like to remind the honourable member that these patients are not without family, they are not without friends and they are not without voluntary organizations—

Mr. Cassidy: Always?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: —that are very involved in helping to support and provide some of these services.

Mr. Warner: You are always so satisfied to hand out crumbs.

Ms. Gigantes: Lady Bounty.

Mr. Samis: The government is giving away $100,000,000 to the pulp and paper companies.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I think it is totally unfortunate that the honourable member focuses on a few of the people who have these particular problems that we try to meet through very special kinds of programs of help.

Mr. Warner: The whole loaf to the corporations and crumbs to the citizens.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: What we are doing is providing the $6 increase to those people who receive all of their basic needs. These are all looked after, including free drugs. They are also the beneficiaries of many of the voluntary programs that go on within those institutions.

Ms. Gigantes: Living off the fat of the land, aren't they?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: The discretionary part of their income—and they are not all able to use that money—is to maintain their self-respect by being able to buy their papers and meet other personal needs. As far as we are concerned, with the tax credit, this enables them to do just that.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Since the comfort allowance, which is all that is left to senior citizens in homes for the aged of their pension income, which is theirs by right, is expected to cover all of their personal, social and recreational needs, their clothing and their sundries, would the minister like to tell us and maybe the senior citizens of Ontario what commodities they will be able to buy with the government's increase of a nickel a day?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: As usual, the honourable member exaggerates to the point of pure nonsense. That's strictly nonsense, just absolute nonsense.

Mr. Wildman: How much is it per day?

Mr. McClellan: Five cents a day.

Mr. Breithaupt: Twenty cents a day.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If he says five cents and it is 20, how far out are you? Do your mathematics.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: It seems to me that many members have been recipients of a petition from people in some of the homes of aged from across this province asking for a $5 increase in their comfort allowance. The recipients themselves, the ones members opposite are so quick to announce need so much more, have said, "$5 is very reasonable and all we expect."

Mr. Foulds: They said that was a minimum.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: No, they did not.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, they did.

Mr. S. Smith: A final supplementary, if I might, Mr. Speaker: Now that the minister is corrected in her notion that it costs only 50 cents to make these trips and understands the cost to be $42 in an evening, may I ask the minister if she will agree to come with me to meet the wheelchair patients at the Chedoke chronic hospital to explain to them why she has to take away their alimony and the meagre pension they may have, the insurance that they use at present to go downtown? Would she come with me to explain it and would she explain it only to the 50 per cent of them who have no family remaining interested in them, as she seems to think people have?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I will be delighted to accept the honourable member's invitation, if at the same time he agrees to attend with me many of the senior citizens' institutions that I visit so that he can see how many of the people in them are very happy with the circumstances they find themselves in.

Mr. S. Smith: That is a deal.

Mr. Warner: She would steal Tiny Tim's crutch.

DARLINGTON NUCLEAR PLANT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment, arising out of the announcement today by Ontario Hydro of the deferral of its plans for the generating station at Darlington. Now that Hydro has admitted there is no immediate and pressing need for the nuclear power plant at Darlington and has deferred the plant by 18 months, will the minister order the Darlington power station to be reviewed under the Environmental Assessment Act from which it was exempted a couple of years ago, and will he ensure that the review extends to the need for the project and to alternatives for the project, as mandated under the Environmental Assessment Act?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain his refusal to order that, in view of the fact that in the first place he is the minister responsible for ensuring that the Environmental Assessment Act is a reality in the province and not just a paper sham; in the second place that the plant is being postponed by 18 months because Ontario Hydro has accepted that there is no need for it at the originally offered time, and that the reason for the exemption was that the plant had to be put into place so quickly that there was not time for an environmental assessment? Now that the time exists to have an environmental assessment under the act, can the minister explain why he is refusing to order such an evaluation?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I think this matter has been given a great deal of consideration over the years. As the leader said, it was considered at that time. Granted, the time element has been extended, but I think the terms of reference still hold, and should.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I find the minister's answer a bit difficult to understand. As Minister of the Environment, is he not aware that in its system expansion plan review last year Hydro specifically stated that a major consideration in its decision at that time not to defer Darlington was its fear that the plant would come under the Environmental Assessment Act?

Can the minister not take action as the Minister of the Environment to find out why Hydro was trying to avoid this first evaluation of a power station under the act, and why will he not act to ensure that it does have that evaluation, now that the time is available?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Those exemptions, Mr. Speaker, I think were established in the original concept. I am sure as we go into the future that many of the projects Hydro will do will be under the act. There is no doubt in my mind that that is true; as the minister, I would certainly take the strident position that they should be. But in this instance I believe the decision has been duly considered and we should stay with that decision.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Premier. Is the Premier aware that the only two neurosurgeons in Windsor have opted out of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan; that one of them, Dr. Victor Kleider, now is charging $75 for a first consultation, a fee that is 85 per cent more than the amount paid under OHIP, and that this doctor's office now is asking patients on a fixed income to come to their appointments with their $75 cash in hand?

What steps is the government prepared to take to ensure that, in the case of neurosurgeons, universal accessibility is restored to people who need health care in Windsor, and that it is restored at OHIP rates without it being necessary to pay a surcharge?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of many things in Windsor, but I am not aware of that particular situation. I am sure the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), as he has in so many matters, will endeavour to find a solution to the problem.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since it is a matter of government policy that OHIP now be undermined, and since the Premier is responsible for the government, is the Premier not aware that not only have these two neurosurgeons opted out of OHIP, but they have also written to general practitioners in Windsor asking them to inform them if a patient cannot afford their fee schedule? Does this not reintroduce the concept of the doctors deciding whether or not the patient can pay? Will the Premier himself, on behalf of the government of Ontario, act to eliminate this kind of charity medicine in the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have complete confidence in the ability of the minister to resolve—

Mr. Breaugh: You're the only one who does.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I tell my friend, I have a lot more confidence in my colleague than I would ever have in the honourable member as a Minister of Health. The member for Oshawa can do a lot of things in his own mind; but if he were to run a Ministry of Health, it would be a disaster for the province. We are not undermining medicare; the members of the New Democratic Party, if they ever had the responsibility, would be a total disaster.

Mr. Breaugh: I thank you for the compliment.

[2:30]

Mr. Cassidy: Answer the question, answer the question.

Mr. Breaugh: He would still be a step ahead of you. Why don't you come to Oshawa?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member would still be a total disaster. He is a disaster coming in here to the House—well, not every day.

As a matter of fact, we're not undermining medicare. It is the finest system, as I objectively said yesterday, available in North America for the citizens of this province. The minister, I am sure, will make every effort to deal with that particular problem in Windsor.

PROVINCIAL PARKS

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources.

Could the minister review briefly in this House the reason or reasons for the late opening of eight provincial parks, three of which are located in the Refrew county area? At that time, could the minister also indicate whether or not he is aware of the deleterious impact these late openings will have upon both the demand for early opening by travelling Ontarians and out-of-province guests, as well as, and equally seriously, the negative impact it will have upon local employment patterns?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the list in front of me but a number of our parks will not be opening as early this year because of past experience in use and the constraints of our own budget. It is as simple as that. We are attempting to open early the parks that past experience indicates are used early and delaying opening of those where there is very little use until later.

Mr. Conway: A supplementary: The three parks, Bonnechere, Carson Lake and Driftwood, were designated as perimeter parks for the Algonquin Park master plan, parks that were to take some of the burden and growing pressure off Algonquin Provincial Park. Would the minister not agree that by the late openings he is in this way working against the policy stated by this government through the Algonquin Park master plan?

Hon. Mr. Auld: If experience indicates that is the case, then I will certainly review it for next year.

Mr. Wildman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Wouldn't the minister agree that combined with the increase in park fees last year and this year's shorter season, he's not really living up to his responsibility for providing easy access to the provincial parks in the wilderness of this province for the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think within the framework of our budget we are doing the best job we can do. I will be able to tell the honourable members better next year the results of this year's experiment, but based on previous experience we don't think we are going to inconvenience many people.

Mr. Cassidy: It all ends with the dollar sign.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. Foulds: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy regarding the statement he made this afternoon on nuclear waste disposal. The minister says in his statement that "we," presumably the Ontario government, "have not as yet approved any proposals for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to carry out test drilling." Can he tell the House if he has received any proposals to carry out test drilling, and can he tell this House whether or not he has any information at all that AECL plans to do some drilling within this coming summer season?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as of this morning I don't believe we had received anything and until we receive something I really won't be able to answer the second part of the question.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister inform the House when he does receive any proposals and, secondly, could he tell us at what stage the third step of the community relations in a research area, that is the public meeting co-sponsored by AECL and the town council to answer public questions, will take place in the Atikokan area as the first two steps have already taken place?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will inform the honourable member.

DISCRIMINATION IN HIRING

Mr. Eaton: A question for the Minister of Labour: Would the Minister of Labour look into the discrimination in hiring practices being carried on by the recreation committee of the Public Utilities Commission in the city of London? I quote from a letter to a student, "I must inform you that a policy has been established by the commission that citizens of London must be given preference."

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the only legislation that would cover a situation like that would be the Ontario Human Rights Code, where it refers particularly to discrimination on the basis of place of origin. I know there have been some difficulties with regard to the exact interpretation of that section. I'll be glad to look into it and speak to the member about it.

Mr. Eaton: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister also discuss with the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) the fact that grants are given by that ministry to the recreation program? Perhaps they should be withheld because the whole province is donating to it and the citizens of the rest of the province are being discriminated against by London.

Mr. Van Horne: That's a crock, and you know it.

Mr. Eaton: Did you help make that policy when you were there?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say that the member is sitting very close to the Minister of Culture and Recreation; perhaps he could lean over.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: On Friday last, the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question about boilers. I gave him some information at the time and told him I would give him a full answer when I got further information from Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And it's full.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This has to do with damaged nuclear boilers at Pickering generating station B. Following a program of investigation of the boilers at Pickering generating station B, now under construction, it has been decided to remove all boilers installed or delivered to the project—a total of 32—and ship them back to the manufacturer for rebuilding.

This program of investigation and testing was begun late last year when partial blocking of some tubes was discovered during an inspection of boilers installed in unit 5 at the station project.

Subsequently, manufacturing of all nuclear boilers was stopped, pending investigation of this problem. The manufacturer of these boilers is Babcock and Wilcox of Cambridge, Ontario. The company also has orders to supply steam generators for the following nuclear stations under construction in Ontario: Bruce generating station B, 32 boilers on which fabrication has started but they are not yet assembled; and Darlington, 16 boilers on which fabrication has not started.

In February, a more thorough examination was conducted at the manufacturer's works on boiler 33, which had been heat treated, and on boiler 34, which had not. This testing confirmed that the damage had occurred during the heat treatment process and that it was probably repeated in all 32 remaining boilers delivered or installed at Pickering B. The heat treatment process, and some design details for Pickering B, had been modified by Babcock and Wilcox as part of the continuing effort to achieve overall manufacturing improvement.

Cost of the replacement and the effect on construction schedules are now the subject of discussion between Ontario Hydro and Babcock and Wilcox. The damage consists of denting and marking of several outer rows of tubes, bowing of tubes in the outer layers and distortion of some of the baffle blades.

It should be noted that the problems do not affect any of Ontario Hydro's operating nuclear stations. In the eight years of operation of Pickering A, only one small leak in a single tube has occurred in the boilers, which were also supplied by Babcock and Wilcox. This was quickly located on the tube plugs using a standard technique for eliminating tube defects.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's a problem with the tubes, that's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This is an excellent performance record compared to any reactor in the world.

It should be stressed that, in the current atmosphere following the incident at Three Mile Island, this matter of steam generators at Pickering B is a particularly good example of a quality control system that works well.

The continual checking and rechecking to meet the high standards of nuclear quality control ensures that we have the best possible material, fabricated and installed to the highest possible standards, to give us the remarkable performance we have seen in the last eight years at Pickering A.

Mr. Foulds: George Orwell called that "newspeak."

Mr. S. Smith: Given that the minister seems reasonably clear in his own mind that the problem had to do with a certain process—a certain heat process at Babcock and Wilcox—why should the matter of who pays for taking out the boilers, repairing them and putting them back in again, be a matter for discussion? Why is it not perfectly obvious that the manufacturer is obligated to provide material to the highest specifications? Why is it not perfectly obvious that the manufacturer is to pay for this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I don't have details of the discussions that are going on, but I would assume there is no question about the refabrication. There may be some question about additional costs incurred by Hydro.

TEACHER-BOARD DISPUTE

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question that should be directed to the Minister of Education and the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) but, in view of the fact she is not present, I would like to direct it to the Premier.

Mr. Breaugh: Where is she? Where is the iron maiden?

Mr. McClellan: I hope she's still in China.

Mr. G. I. Miller: The question concerns the secondary school teachers of the Haldimand Board of Education and the dispute between them and the board of education. I wonder if the Premier would use his good offices to try to bring the teachers and the board together, in view of the fact that there seems to be only a small difference between the two sides. The parents have been trying to keep the classrooms open, but the welfare of the students is at stake. I wonder if the Premier would use his good offices to bring the sides together in order to get the teachers back into the classrooms?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that a member of the opposition would think I had such capacity or talent to resolve these issues. I listen to some of his colleagues some days and I really wonder whether they would express this same measure of confidence.

I understand the Education Relations Commission has been involved in this. I think there are meetings going on today as a matter of fact. Certainly, we're keeping an eye on it. We would like to see it resolved as much as the member would, but as has been illustrated and demonstrated on a number of occasions, if it can be resolved through the commission without the direct intervention of the minister or the Premier it probably is a better route to go. I think most members would accept that.

Let's see what happens at the discussions today. If they don't come to some sort of conclusion, certainly the ministry will endeavour to help, but I would like to see it resolved through the Education Relations Commission. That is their responsibility, and on balance throughout the province they have done relatively well over the past two or three years.

CONTINUOUS COLOUR COAT LIMITED

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment concerning emissions of pollutants from Continuous Colour Coat Limited in Rexdale. Can the minister inform the House why his officials waited until this time to invite residents in the area to a meeting on April 17 to discuss whether or not they agree that the ministry should extend the deadline to clean up operations, a deadline of March 31 which has already passed and a deadline which was agreed to some three years ago?

Can the minister explain the apparent discrepancy between the new deadline proposed by his ministry, namely September 30, and that circulated to the residents by the company, which was that it would be completed by the end of the year? I'm wondering if the minister would give us a final deadline now and tell us what his ministry and the Ministry of Labour and Manpower are going to do to make this company meet that new deadline which obviously will have to be set?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, we covered rather extensively the point of extending deadlines in committee. I welcome the opportunity to make the point here. The extension of the deadline that the company requests, in my opinion, should be after it has put its case to the public. It's their deadline, and it's their responsibility to tell the public why they cannot meet it rather than the onus being on the ministry. I think the member would agree with that concept.

The amount of time to meet the conditions that have been set will be part of the submission by the company as to why it needs either six or nine months. I understand that company is quite prepared to put a lot of money into a different process. I hope the hearings will very clearly set forward for the member and constituents of that area why the company needs that time. The onus now is clearly on the company to make the case.

Mr. Philip: By way of supplementary, is the minister saying that after three years his ministry only knew recently that the deadline of March 31 would not be met? I wonder if the minister, in answering that, is also aware of the comments made in a letter of February 8 by Dr. Fitch of the occupational health and safety division of the Ministry of Labour and Manpower, a letter which I supplied to the minister yesterday in case he hadn't received a copy before then.

In this letter Dr. Fitch suggested that the Ministry of the Environment had not yet supplied precise contents or the composition of 11 different solvents and 15 coatings used at the plant, and that on reviewing the toxicity information on the products which could be identified, most are listed as moderately toxic, that is three on a scale of one to six. Can the minister tell us when we will have specific details from his ministry about what is being emitted from that plant and about any potential hazard to the residents in the area?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I think the ministry does know the contents of the 26 elements used in the plant itself. What we don't know, and what I guess is next to impossible to determine, due to the various combinations and permutations of 26 different products as they combine, is what they might emit in the way of stack emissions; that is very difficult to ascertain.

The same Dr. Fitch has suggested to us—and I would hope, to the residents—that in his professional opinion he did not see a health hazard to the local people.

Mr. McClellan: Ignorance is no hazard, is that the principle? Ignorance is no hazard.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it should be put on the record that the same person who is asking us for information, given his best knowledge doesn't feel there is a hazard to the people there.

We did know that the company wanted an extension, but until that date arrived, we weren't able to extend it, obviously. Secondly, it was only very recently, with this change in policy, that it became the responsibility of the company to make the case rather than the ministry. I think that is a very sensible change in policy and it has happened in only the last three or four weeks, six at the outside. There has been quite a change in policy about extension of deadlines.

BRADLEY-GEORGETOWN HYDRO CORRIDOR

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Will the minister please justify the recent cabinet decision on the Bradley-Georgetown hydro corridor, under which the government is now trying to force this into existence through order in council; realizing the stretchouts announced today and approved yesterday, realizing there is no bottling of power taking place at Bruce at the present time, realizing that existing 230 kv lines can be further upgraded if necessary, realizing that Bruce B will not come on line until 1983 and realizing that there is still time for the independent study requested for the last six years by the Interested Citizens Group in that area?

Mr. Hennessy: You don't want anybody to work.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, in the news release which I made on this matter this morning, there are—

Mr. Warner: Don't read it all, please don't read it.

Mr. Wildman: You should have read it this morning.

Mr. McClellan: Who writes this?

Mr. Wildman: It goes from left to right.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —15 pages of the history, the hearings and the various events that have taken place.

Mr. Martel: If you stood on your head it would be easier.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'm sure the honourable member realizes—we have discussed this on a number of occasions—that the reasons haven't changed since perhaps a year or so ago when they were put together.

Mr. Worton: I never realized that.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can tell him that Hydro's report, as of this morning, of the latest cost of the lack of that 10 miles, in terms of generating losses, is about $17,000,000; and they calculate it's going to continue at the rate of about $1,200,000 or $1,300,000 per month for the rest of this year.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us how many hours he spends in the office of the Ministry of Energy apprising himself of the real facts surrounding this case and getting a first-hand view, rather than leaving it entirely to his deputy minister to continue to feed him with the kind of twisted sets of so-called facts—

Mr. S. Smith: Precisely.

Mr. J. Reed: —that have been proved in court, that have been proved in public hearings—

Mr. Warner: Ask the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor), he knows.

Mr. J. Reed: —to have been false premises upon which government decisions have been made?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I spend a great deal of time on energy matters—some in the Energy ministry, some in the Natural Resources ministry office, and some at home.

ENVIRONMENTAL EMERGENCIES

Ms. Bryden: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment.

Recent events both here and in the United States involving oil tanker breakups, propane-gas-car derailments and even a nuclear plant accident, have highlighted the need for adequate contingency plans covering environmental emergencies in order to protect the public from dangerous air and water contamination. While I know there is a provincial contingency plan in Ontario, I would like to ask the minister about its implementation. Last November his ministry issued a booklet.

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Ms. Bryden: It is about this booklet. Last November this ministry issued a booklet—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member has had enough experience to know how to put a question properly. Please do so.

Ms. Bryden: I would like to ask the minister if he could tell me why, when I addressed a refresher course for community health workers in March and referred to this booklet, called Response to Environmental and Environmental Health Emergencies, many of them had not even seen this booklet. They had not seen the Ontario contingency plan, either.

I would like to ask the minister how can he expect these community health workers, medical officers of health and so on, to carry out their role in dealing with environmental emergencies if they haven't even received his guidelines?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Back in the days when I was Minister of Colleges and Universities I would certainly have understood that question much better. I would have said immediately that I would see the colleges—I think the member suggested she was presenting a lecture at a community college, to a group of students?

Mr. Wildman: It was the medical officer of health.

Mr. Conway: That's her husband.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That's what I thought I heard her say, that she was addressing these students at a college. In that event I would have been able to say I would certainly see that distribution of this booklet among the colleges is greatly improved. Perhaps I had better have a word with the Minister of Education now. We will try to disseminate that information.

We do our very best to see that people have this information. If they choose not to read it, it may be because they are attending too many lectures, I am not sure.

Ms. Bryden: It was not community college students, it was a refresher course for people who are in the field right now—medical officers of health and community health workers. These are the people who would be in the front line if there were an environmental emergency.

I would like to ask, by way of supplementary, if the minister can comment on page 10 of this report, where it states that in determining the rate of emission and concentration of contaminants in the immediate vicinity of the emergency, there is only limited capability at the present time, for the air resources branch or the laboratory services branch to provide emergency analytical service. In fact, there is little or no capability to provide instant analysis of air or water contaminants likely to be involved in environmental—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question? Order, another question over here.

ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Roy: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications; it deals with his 1979-80 construction program.

Could the minister advise why it is there are no projected programs for resurfacing highway 417, the Ottawa Queensway, when in fact a report from his ministry, dated January 1979, states what everybody in Ottawa knows; that is that the Queensway is congested, has poor skid resistance and the pavement is deteriorating, so that it is therefore necessary to do some remedial work in the short-run. The report goes on to state that the skid resistance in many areas is very low, with the skid resistance numbers on wet pavement approaching those expected on an ice surface.

What kind of priorities does the minister have in his ministry which would tolerate a situation like this on the Ottawa Queensway?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen that particular report the honourable member is holding up. If he would like to send me a copy of it, I'd be very glad to look into this matter.

Mr. J. Reed: Pretty slippery answer.

Mr. Cassidy: You're skating on thin asphalt.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We have had discussions for many months with the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton with regard to proposed reconstruction work and improvements on the Ottawa Queensway. I think just recently we have come about with some conclusion to those discussions.

Another thing I'd like to say is that on the projects that go into that particular book, which was published two or three weeks ago, the decisions basically as to the establishment of that program were made last October.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the minister's construction program states that "each project has been selected within the context of need, priority and budget constraint to provide for the essential," and in view of the fact that this report from the ministry, dated January 22, 1979, states that the skid resistance on the wet Queensway is 20 to 33 and on an ice surface is about 19, and the report states that the absolute minimum is 27, in view of the fact that this is not something that happens overnight, could the minister advise if he is in touch, when establishing these priorities, with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications office in Kingston, and is he not aware that in Ottawa we have a canal to skate on, we don't need a Queensway?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I know the honourable member has had considerable time recently to research this project. I have told him that I will ask for a copy of the report. I believe my ministry estimates start tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. I don't believe the honourable member came last year. I invite him to come this year and we'll have a good discussion about this matter.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Premier. In view of the fact that the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) is in China and therefore not available to consider what the ethnic communities feel about the destructive cutbacks in the heritage language program and in view of the fact that boards of education are examining their budgets and the heritage language program may be cut off, will the Premier respond to the concerns and anger in the ethnic communities in the province and see to it that the 50 per cent cutbacks will be scrapped and inform the boards of education and communities of that commitment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to make it very clear, because I've had some discussions on this matter, that the heritage language program will without any question be maintained. There is some complexity in the grant regulation as it relates to certain municipalities, but the ministry is working on it to see that it has an equitable formula for distribution.

I assure the honourable member that before he raised it here I had raised it with the minister and the ministry officials. I spoke to the separate school principals' association some four weeks ago, at which time I assured them that the heritage language program, which I think has been extremely helpful and beneficial in terms of the educational system in this province, would in fact be maintained.

I do point out to the honourable member that to try to draft regulations that distribute the moneys equitably where there is need et cetera, is not quite as simple as he might suggest. I'm not asking him to understand that, and I'm not being critical; I can just assure him, as I have assured several other people who have raised this matter with me in the past two to three weeks, that the heritage language program without question will be maintained.

Mr. Grande: At half funding.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You knew that, Tony. Why did you ask?

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the Premier is suggesting that the heritage language program will be maintained at half funding, will—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I don't mind a little give and take in here, but I don't recall my saying that it would be maintained at half funding. I don't recall using that phrase.

Ms. Gigantes: Then what are you saying?

Mr. Cassidy: How will it be maintained?

[3:00]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Premier's suggestion at his last speaking engagement, or whatever, to the principals of the separate school board here in Metropolitan Toronto, is the minister aware that the cutbacks came the day after the Premier spoke at that particular conference; and can the Premier make a commitment—since, as I said, he has taken a personal interest in this matter since May 1977—that (1) no child who is currently in a class will be cut off, because the 50 per cent funding is going to reduce by 25,000 the number of children in that program, and (2) no family in this province will have to pay a $25 deterrent fee to enrol children in that program?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the honourable member—I will phrase it as generally as I can and, at the same time, as specifically as I can—that the quality of the heritage language program will be maintained. I cannot tell him exactly what the regulations may say with respect to weighted enrolments, class size, et cetera, because the complexity in this is to distribute those funds. I am not talking about half funding, nor am I talking about cutbacks; I am talking about a fund of money that is distributed equitably amongst those boards which have introduced this program. I can assure the honourable member that the quality and the scope of the program will be maintained.

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Mancini: I have a question for the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is aware that last Thursday the township of Mersea, which is in the riding of Essex South, was struck by a hurricane, causing well over $300,000 damage. I wonder whether the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is aware that many of the greenhouse crops were totally destroyed and many families suffered much personal damage.

I wonder whether he could have his ministry staff apprise themselves of the problem and if he is going to set up the same type of relief emergency fund that he had set up for the township of Dover when they had an emergency situation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, the proper procedure for my friend to follow is, if he would like to get an official letter from that municipality, he can give it to me, as his colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) did. We will be happy to have someone investigate it and process it. The disaster relief fund is there and, upon application from a municipality, we will be happy to review it and then I will get back to him.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister would give some consideration to recommending a new approach to disaster relief to his colleagues. This dollar-for-dollar situation often leads to surrounding municipalities making commitments from their own treasuries simply to assist their neighbour in getting some decent funding from provincial Treasury sources.

Would the minister not accept the recommendation from the city of Nanticoke which calls for the establishment of a program funded by the province to assist those areas and individuals which suffer damage from acts of God of this type?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I am always happy to look at any new arrangements that might make anything better, but I draw to my friend's attention that the plan we have now is not a bad one. It involves responsibility at the local level; if they raise half the money, we will match it dollar for dollar. That is a pretty good program.

ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General: Why has the Attorney General not initiated prosecutions in cases of violation of the Election Finances Reform Act which have been documented for the minister in letters by Mr. Arthur Wishart, chairman of the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses, in August 1978?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, as I made it quite clear to the chairman of the commission, in my view it is very clear from the statute that the responsibility for initiating prosecutions lies with the commission. I would think the honourable member has been a member of the Legislature long enough to realize the Attorney General does not initiate prosecutions. Prosecutions are generally initiated by police law enforcement officers. I have made it very clear in these circumstances that I think it is the responsibility of the election expenses commission to initiate prosecutions relating to breaches of the legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: The commission's obligation under the statute is to report cases of violation to the Attorney General. Although this admittedly is something of a loophole, it implies he is the person who should initiate the prosecutions. If he is not willing to accept that obligation, and therefore makes a mockery of the implementation of the act, why doesn't he respond to the commission's request for amendments, among those amendments to give them specifically the power to initiate prosecutions?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would recommend that the member for York South read the legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: I have.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think if he has read it, it should be abundantly clear to him that it is within the prerogative of the commission under the present legislation to initiate such prosecutions.

Mr. MacDonald: The chairman doesn't agree with you.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am telling the member this is my view. The matter has been reviewed by senior officers of the crown and they are in agreement with the view as expressed. I think it is the proper one.

Mr. McClellan: The chairman was the former Attorney General, too.

Mr. Swart: Can you resolve the difference?

Mr. Cassidy: This is a conspiracy not to act.

Mr. MacDonald: You are making a mockery of the act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't think the member understands the act. That is his problem and not mine.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

Mr. Speaker: As is customary when we have a group of pages leaving who have been with us for the last four or five weeks, this will be the last opportunity I will have to say how much we appreciate their assistance and their co-operation. I am going to take advantage of this opportunity to read their names into the record:

Reid Chesney of Brant-Oxford-Norfolk; Steven Clark of Grey-Bruce; Maria Costa of Dovercourt; Leslie Cyfko of Mississauga East; Rayanne Dupuis of Cochrane North; Lori Entwistle of Cornwall; Amelia Golden of Armourdale; James Gordon of Riverdale; Melanie Harrison of Northumberland; Andre Loiselle of Cornwall; James MacLellan of Wellington-Dufferin-Peel; Julia Marchesan of Hamilton East; Peter Noble of Don Mills; Lisa Osbourne of Essex South; Michael Power of High Park; Edward Remillard of Sault Ste. Marie; Anthony Siblall of Cochrane South; Francine St-Denis of Cochrane South; Gregory Thomas of Sarnia; Nicola Thom-Neilsen of Kingston and the Islands; Rita Vasilopoulos of York East; and Allison Webb of York Centre.

I am sure all members would like to thank them for their services to this House.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

FIRES EXTINGUISHMENT REPEAL ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 43, An Act to repeal the Fires Extinguishment Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This is the first of three acts I am introducing to repeal acts which are no longer necessary in this province. This act was enacted in 1890, and it provided for a means of extinguishing forest fires. It enabled county councils to authorize certain people appointed by township councils to order male residents of the township to help fight a forest fire. This can now be handled under other acts and is not necessary.

VACANT LAND CULTIVATION REPEAL ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 44, An Act to repeal the Vacant Land Cultivation Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This act was enacted in 1918. It authorizes councils of local municipalities to grant permits to any person to enter upon, hold and use any vacant land in the municipality for cultivating it and raising crops. In today's world it would be seen, I think, as perhaps an infringement on individual property rights, and therefore we are repealing the act.

FIRE GUARDIANS REPEAL ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 45, An Act to repeal the Fire Guardians Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: He is extinguishing a lot of acts.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This act was enacted in 1889. It enables township councils to appoint fire guardians whose responsibility is to regulate the setting of open-air fires in the townships between April 1 and October 31. It is obviously an obsolete and unnecessary piece of legislation now and there are other more modern acts to take care of the things that this act was meant to take care of.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 46, An Act to amend the Local Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This amendment to the Local Improvement Act will give municipalities the option of issuing debentures to finance local improvements before the work is completed. This will eliminate the necessity for temporary borrowing which currently results in increased interest expense to some municipalities. This change is in keeping with other recent amendments aimed at streamlining municipalities' financial operations.

In addition, the bill contains amendments to forms two, three and four to change the wording from per foot footage to per metre footage. Another amendment seeks to enable municipalities which have begun proceedings for a local improvement under the imperial system to continue in the imperial system until the project is completed.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answers to questions 95, 96 and 99 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 910.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

MINISTRY OF TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 13, An Act to amend the Ministry of Transportation and Communications Act.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain if I should be anticipating any comments by the minister on this legislation. I would just say that in keeping with the spirit of making minority government work, and work expeditiously and clearly, we will be very brief on these four bills.

This particular piece of legislation is somewhat self-explanatory, and I think is in keeping with the concept of eliminating red tape, especially as it relates to the minister's own personal activities.

I should profess at this time a slight conflict of interest, insofar as if in the near future we are over there and they are over here, my signature is not all that legible. Were I in the fortunate position to enjoy the responsibilities the current minister has, it would eliminate for me the embarrassment I have every time I sign my name.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I have no such conflict of interest; people will be able to understand my signature. I see nothing wrong with the bill, so let's get on with it.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

STATUTE LABOUR AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 14, An Act to amend the Statute Labour Act.

Mr. Cunningham: Again, this particular piece of legislation will be supported by the Liberal Party. As I see it it is a sweetening of the pot, I guess, to add some incentive to have an individual serve as secretary-treasurer of the roads commissions. Recognizing the amount of work that is involved, it seems to be a realistic move by the government.

I would hope that sometime the minister might convince the authorities within the cabinet to sweeten the pot for people who are required to serve on jury duty as well.

Mr. Philip: We are in support of the bill. I would be interested in having it go to committee of the whole House, and perhaps have the minister simply give us some of the background of this amendment and perhaps a concrete example of how and when there would be an instance where it would apply or is being applied. That is my only question on that.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am not against the bill going to committee, but maybe I can just explain here and save that problem.

This is really a housekeeping bill that simply removes the $50 maximum limitation presently in the legislation on the annual salary which may be paid to the secretary-treasurer out of the funds for Statute Labour Act road support. There are only 23 of these boards left in existence in Ontario, and I presume when this act was passed, $50 was an appropriate fee. I understand many of the boards are paying their secretary-treasurer more than the $50; some of them are paying the secretary-treasurer as much as $300 or $400 to administer the act.

Because of the limitation in this bill, my ministry is only able to subsidize the boards for the first $50, and we think it is in keeping with having the act up to date that we should remove this unreasonably low figure and let the boards establish their own fees for the secretary-treasurer.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

LOCAL ROADS BOARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 15, An Act to amend the Local Roads Boards Act.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I made a few phone calls to people I thought might be interested in this. They can find no problems with it. We are supportive of this and think it should simply go to third reading.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

AIRPORTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 16, An Act to amend the Airports Act.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, this too appears to be a simple amendment to the Airports Act. I wonder if the minister might favour us with some examples as to how he sees this amendment serving the current legislation and how he would see it work in practice. I am just wondering what the motivation was. I thought he might have an explanation for it.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I had only a couple of questions on it and the minister answered those questions during our fire drill or whatever it was yesterday. I believe the member for Beaches-Woodbine has a couple of questions. We would like it to go into committee so that she could ask those questions. I see no problem with the bill.

Ms. Bryden: On the principle of the bill, I would like to ask a question that perhaps the minister could reply to: I understand that the purpose of this bill is to speed up the approval of grants for airport construction and change, and certainly we would like to see the process speeded up.

I would like to ask the minister about a story which appeared in the Globe and Mail on March 26, suggesting that the government had expressed an interest in getting into the regional airline business on its own. I would like to ask him if this power that is being given to him instead of to the cabinet would be used in the implementation of such development, if that is being contemplated.

I would like to ask him also if his ministry has actually made plans to submit an application to the Canadian Transport Commission for the province to enter into the regional airlines business. If so, would grants for airports involved in such business come under this particular act? In a case like that, I think we would want cabinet approval, but if it's more for small grants for local airports, then it's a different matter.

I would like him to comment on that story in the Globe as to whether the ministry is thinking of making an application to get into the regional airline business on its own.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, as I recall the questions, I think the answer basically to all of them is no.

The member for Wentworth North inquired as to why we are doing this. My ministry will administer transfer payments to municipalities of something in the neighbourhood of $535,000,000 this year in the way of grants for road construction, road maintenance, bridge construction and transit capital and operating expenses. All of those grants come under the different acts involved. Once the appropriation of funds is approved by cabinet, the ministry is free to make those allocations of grants to the different municipalities under various formulas.

The Airports Act, I believe was set up back in 1968. Up until that time the government had not been involved in airports. There was no real past experience, so a provision was put in the act that each airport grant required an order in council. This now requires something in the neighbourhood of 40 to 50 orders in council per year.

The grants we're talking about are mainly grants to northern and eastern Ontario communities for the construction and maintenance of their airport programs. The grants are usually quite small, or relatively small, compared to many others. The proposed grants, for instance, for the coming year range from $5,000 up to about $310,000, which I believe is the highest we propose to make on the capital program. In maintenance, they range from $10,000 to $25,000.

As it is now, for each one of these grants the ministry staff must prepare an order in council; it must go to cabinet; it must go on the cabinet agenda. If all my ministry's grants, for instance, for roads to municipalities were done in the same way, I don't think we'd ever get the grants distributed to the municipalities because of the paperwork.

We now have the experience in airports. It's cabinet policy that only airports in northern Ontario and certain areas of eastern Ontario qualify for capital grants, and only those in northern Ontario qualify for maintenance grants. It's under that policy we distribute these funds.

As a matter of interest, the grants provided this year are to Atikokan, Cochrane, Deer Falls, Elliot Lake, Fort Frances, Hornepayne, Iroquois Falls, Kirkland Lake, Nakina, Parry Sound, Sioux Lookout, Terrace Bay—I think that one would interest you, Mr. Speaker—Thessalon, Belleville, Brockville, Cornwall, Kingston, Morrisburg and Smiths Falls. Maintenance grants, for instance, are provided to Atikokan, Sachigo, Elliot Lake, et cetera.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nothing for Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Snow: All this will do is let us operate the grants to the municipal airports on the same basis as we do all the other grants in the ministry. It has nothing to do with any airports in southern Ontario; nothing to do with any federal airports, and nothing to do with any possible provincial airline.

Mr. Wildman: Add Wawa to that list.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

ONTARIO UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved second reading of Bill 18, An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I should make a few comments before we discuss this bill on second reading. The bill proposes two amendments to the present Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975.

Section 1 of the bill clarifies the tax levying procedures of those area municipalities within regional municipalities which have been recently reassessed under section 86 of the Assessment Act. The municipalities affected are those within the regions of Waterloo and Durham and the city of Timmins in the district of Cochrane.

Prior to the implementation of section 86, these area municipalities had different property tax bases and different mill rates for each of their merged areas. Application of section 86 not only removes inequities between similar properties in these areas but also produces a single tax base for each municipality.

The proposed amendments to the Unconditional Grants Act are merely a clarification in order to bring it into line with the administrative implications of section 86 of the Assessment Act. It ensures that a single set of mill rates is struck across the local municipality rather than separate rates for each of its merged areas.

[3:30]

Section 2 of the bill allows for the payment, in the year 1979, of a special one-time grant to a number of municipalities which have been judged to be adversely affected in the calculation of the resource equalization grants because of the equalization factors which have been frozen and unchanged since 1970. I believe that all the members have had a copy of our statement and an explanation of how this ad hoc grant was arrived at, plus a list of those municipalities that would benefit from the ad hoc grant. We've already written to the municipalities on the strength of this bill being introduced for first reading and, of course, subject to the passage of the bill, the municipalities which have had indication that they will receive this ad hoc grant will then be paid the grant. I will be happy to discuss the bill in further detail with the members of the House as we debate it now.

Mr. Epp: I am pleased to be able to speak to Bill 18, which is An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975.

We will support this bill in principle, Mr. Speaker, but we have some serious reservations about the enactment of the bill and, in particular, the many years that have passed from 1970 to 1979 before trying to resolve some of the problems, although they are only being resolved in a very minimal way.

We see from the act and from the releases that the minister has made accompanying the bill itself that 39 municipalities will be gaining some amount of money from the provincial government. These 39 municipalities and the grants they will be receiving vary considerably. For instance, the city of Windsor will be receiving a sum of about $3,097,000, whereas the last one on the list, the city of Kitchener, will be receiving about $20,000; for a total expenditure by the government of around $6,628,000. This is somewhat short of the $8,000,000 we understood the government was going to allocate to the various municipalities last fall when a number of statements were made by the minister and by the Premier.

All these municipalities are deserving of the money they're receiving and there are other municipalities that should be receiving some of the dollars. I appreciate the fact that the government has not an unlimited pot of gold that they can dish out to the various municipalities, but I think that some of them, such as Windsor, Sarnia, St. Catharines and maybe a few others, have been singled out in the past as being deprived of this revenue. The reason they've been deprived, as I understand it, particularly some of them such as Windsor, is because they had a high assessment rate back in 1970 when the assessment for the province was frozen.

As a result of them having a fairly high assessment rate, they didn't get some of the resource equalization payments that they should have received and now, in order to correct that particular problem, the government is coming forth with this one-time unconditional grant.

My colleague, the member for Windsor-Walkerville, who wanted to speak to this matter and, unfortunately, will not be able to—

Mr. B. Newman: I will speak.

Mr. Epp: Oh, pardon me, Bernie. I was looking for you in your seat. You will be here. Sorry.

Mr. Nixon: He's always here.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, he's always here.

Mr. Swart: Don't hassle your own member.

Hon. Mr. Wells: There are other people missing.

Mr. Swart: Leave that to us.

Mr. Epp: He will want to speak to this matter a little later, but in order to cover the matter, I just want to say that I'm proud of my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville who was probably the first member in this Legislature to raise the matter. He was the first, I'm told, so there's no probably about it. He was the first, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. B. Newman: Darcy McKeough admitted it to me later on.

Mr. Epp: If Darcy McKeough admitted it, that's quite an admission by the former Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. The present minister will appreciate that.

As a result, the member for Windsor-Walkerville, the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley), another colleague of mine, the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston), the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) and the member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy), all of whom were affected by this shortfall in grants from the province, have drawn this matter to the attention of the government, and rightly they should.

As I understand it, back in 1973 when the resource equalization formula was first adopted there was a base of $10,300 for equalization across the province, on a per capita basis. Whatever municipalities were short of this $10,300—and this figure today, in 1979, has been increased to $10,800—the province picked up up to 60 per cent of that in resource equalization.

I know that my own municipality, which—fortunately or unfortunately—doesn't qualify for the grant, has a per capita figure of $11,823. They have to have more than $1,000 over the base figure in order to qualify for the grants. I don't think the city of Waterloo, for instance, has ever received a cent from the resource equalization payments.

These unconditional grants the government is now giving out raise another matter—one that has been raised in this Legislature a number of times by myself and by a number of my colleagues. That is the principle of "unconditional" grants. As the minister knows, approximately 83 per cent of the grants the province gives to municipalities are of a conditional nature. The former Treasurer commissioned a study—and that body was chaired, I think, by the deputy minister of the present Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs—which indicated the province should open up the flood gates—a little anyway—with respect to unconditional grants. They constitute only about 17 per cent—and I could be corrected here; it might be that 84 per cent are conditional or 82 per cent, something of that nature. Nevertheless there should be more unconditional grants given to the various municipalities. This, in turn, would provide greater need and greater opportunity for the various municipalities to make autonomous decisions at the local level.

I hope the minister will have something to say with respect to unconditional grants and the easing up by the government on the formula it presently has for giving out the very few unconditional grants. I know one of the ministries that is particularly reluctant to go along with this request is the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. The reason is that it likes to have its finger in the pot and likes to be able to control where the money goes and say how much municipalities are going to receive and where it is going to be spent.

This bill also clarifies the levying procedures of those municipalities which have opted for section 86 of the Assessment Act. For those members who aren't aware, what section 86 essentially does is equalize assessment within classes in the various municipalities. This is particularly important for such municipalities as Cambridge, where I think they have somewhere between 10 and 12 different assessments. They have both commercial and industrial assessment as one and the residential assessment as another, and then they have the three municipalities of Cambridge, Galt and Preston, which meant there were six assessments. They had another two assessments that were brought in from some areas annexed from the township of Waterloo. There were another two assessments from North Dumfries, and I think there was another small piece taken in from one of the townships in Wentworth county. In total, that would make 12 different assessments. There was, of course, a considerable problem and great consternation in Cambridge, where they had 12 assessments to work with, rather than two, which would have simplified it considerably.

Bringing in section 86—which I support in principle, as the minister knows—will simplify the matter for the municipality of Cambridge. That same problem carries through to other municipalities in the province, although may be not to the same extent.

One of the problems that we have on this side of the House is that equalizing assessment within classes means that a house—and this was the example given by the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) last summer in Cambridge; I remember him saying this—one house in Cambridge might be taxed to the extent of $1,400 or $1,500, while another house of similar market value might only be taxed to the extent of $600; so obviously there was that inequity.

Applying section 86, which this bill helps to clarify, means they will have more equalized assessment and, to follow through with that, more equalized taxation to pay during the current and future years.

The fact that these various municipalities—six of them in the region of Waterloo and another seven in other municipalities in Ontario—requested the government to invoke section 86 of the Assessment Act would help to strengthen the municipal governments' bid in trying to equalize the assessment.

Earlier in this session, one day when the minister was absent, I drew to the attention of the Premier the fact that the assessment on one piece of property in the region of Waterloo went up by 11,000 per cent. The Kitchener-Waterloo Record reported: "The biggest increase is for a small parcel of land at Pine Bush Road. Taxes for the land used for water purposes have increased from $44 last year to over $5,000 this year."

In this particular case the region, which owned that property, was in a position to pay that tax; but there are many other people who have difficulty in paying the increased taxes.

We on this side of the House recommended that the government seriously consider in the case of every municipality that asked for permission from the minister to invoke, I think, section 505 of the Municipal Act, granting that permission. I understand the municipality of Hamilton has requested this, and I believe the Premier indicated they would be permitted to use that.

Section 505 of the Municipal Act actually permits municipalities to phase in increases of more than $50 over a five-year period. As I indicated, this may not be of particular significance to the regional municipality of Waterloo, but it is significant to a number of property owners and particularly to property owners who are living on a fixed income, such as senior citizens, disabled people and so forth, and other people who have businesses where, because of some zone change or something of that nature, they suddenly find themselves paying hundreds and sometimes thousands of dollars more in their property taxes, which in some cases would force them to go out of business and which would be most unfortunate at a time in this province and in this Legislature when the emphasis is on trying to help small business people within the provincial community.

Another example we have is from the city of Kitchener, where a ratepayer experienced an increase in taxes of 4,300 per cent on an empty lot. His taxes go up from $39.10, which I agree is somewhat low for an empty lot, to $1,751.06. He found that increase extremely high and he obviously was going to appeal it, but if that assessment is correct it does mean that he has to experience a very sharp increase.

All this brings me to another point which I would like to raise with the minister right now, and that has to do with the transfer payments that the province is making to the municipalities in the province. I want to read into the record the release that the Association of Municipalities of Ontario made to the minister in 1979. It's called: "AMO response to the provincial announcement of 1979 transfer payments to municipalities." I'm sure the minister is familiar with this document but I also think that he probably appreciates having it read into the record so it's there for posterity.

I quote: "At its 1978 annual conference, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, reacting to the structural changes at the provincial level following the resignation of the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, issued a policy statement regarding future provincial-municipal financial relations. The spirit reflected in that statement flowed from the sincere hope that the new partnership being espoused by the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and wholeheartedly supported by the association would foster mutual respect and trust between the province and its municipalities. Such a condition in many respects had been absent since the initial manipulation of the Edmonton commitment.

"AMO believes that it provided both the new Treasurer and the new Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs with an unparalleled opportunity to develop the partnership anew. Even more basic however, was the municipalities' willingness to permit the province to extricate itself from the millstone the Edmonton commitment had become.

"AMO came away from a November 16 meeting with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs believing that the government had accepted the municipal proposal that transfers to municipalities in 1979 would be 'commensurate with the rate of growth of provincial expenditures.' The association's confidence was short lived however. Seven days later the Treasurer of Ontario advised the Legislature that while the government was prepared to accept the municipal transfer proposal, and while it was estimated that provincial expenditures would grow about six per cent, transfers to municipalities would average five per cent!

"At the December 8 Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee meeting the government's dichotomous position was reaffirmed, continuing the same type of tactic used previously to avoid the intent of the original Edmonton commitment. Such action can only lead the association to believe that once again the province has abused the good faith shown in it by its municipalities and resorted to the type of bookkeeping legerdemain associated with past announcements.

"The recasting by the province of the Edmonton commitment and now its successor, has become an annual ritual. For 1976 the municipalities believed the province would live up to the Edmonton commitment; the province's answer was to introduce the concept of overpayments. For 1978 the municipalities asked the province to live up to the Edmonton commitment. The province's response was to redefine it—retroactively, arbitrarily and unilaterally. This year, in a spirit of goodwill, the municipalities recommended that the Edmonton commitment be abandoned and that the rate of growth of provincial transfer payments to municipalities be commensurate with the rate of growth of provincial expenditures; the province's reaction was to manipulate its expenditure figures in an attempt to prove that six per cent at the provincial level equals five per cent at the municipal level.

"The association is also concerned about the manner and timing of this year's announcement. First of all, AMO believes it most unfortunate that the Treasurer of Ontario chose not to accompany the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs to the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee meeting to hear first hand the municipalities' reaction to the transfer announcement.

"It was recognized that with two new ministers in key positions there naturally would be a delay in making the transfer announcement. However, once it did come, apart from announcing that the general increase would be limited to five per cent, the municipalities were told that they would have to wait for individual ministries to release the details of their particular transfers. What AMO anticipates will be a dribbling out of information over the next three months will only add to the confusion and in essence will mean a return to the exercise of individual ministry prerogatives to the detriment of the overall process. Clearly, the absence of an early, comprehensive announcement inhibits timely and realistic budget preparations for the municipalities which begin a new fiscal year on January 1.

"AMO is concerned with a statement made by the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs at the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee meeting that his ministry is just a ministry like all other provincial ministries and must be subject therefore to the same expenditure guidelines. That may be true for ministry operating expenditures but that is not the issue. Transfer payments to municipalities cannot be considered as just another ministry appropriation.

"As the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs suggested in the Legislature on November 21, local government is an order of government just as the federal or provincial governments are orders of government.

"While the establishment of overall expenditure guidelines may be a new departure for the province, municipalities have utilized this approach for some time. AMO understands the provincial government's desire to achieve expenditure restraint, but does not accept the proposition expounded by the government that municipalities are not subject to the same financial pressure as it is. Like the province, municipalities are faced with certain expenditure commitments which cannot be arbitrarily restrained.

"Debt charges incurred on required municipal infrastructure during the rapid growth period of the past few years are a fixed commitment. In this respect, it should be remembered that not so long ago the Treasurer of Ontario was urging municipalities to make more use of their long-term borrowing capacities.

"Municipalities are committed to increase pension payments for their employees to meet the pension enrichments introduced in 1978 by the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System.

"Municipalities presently are committed to assuming their share of rapidly growing social service costs for such items as general welfare assistance, children's services and extended care for senior citizens.

"The province's decision to withdraw Ontario Provincial Police services from a number of municipalities has left those municipalities facing rapidly rising police costs. Presumably, there were off-setting savings at the provincial level.

"Several years ago the province encouraged municipalities to expand urban transit systems. Today the deficits from these operations continue to grow.

"Clearly, even if normal operating expenditures are constrained at the five per cent level, with the current level of provincial transfers there will have to be substantial property tax increases to meet the shortfall in transfer revenues.

"To understand the depth of despair and disappointment the association feels, it is only necessary to contrast the present position in which municipalities find themselves with the era of good faith which dominated provincial-municipal financial arrangements in the early 1970s:

"Municipalities had a revenue-sharing agreement"—which had been formulated in 1973 in Edmonton, as the minister is well aware—"now they must rely solely on government largesse—ministry by ministry by ministry.

"Municipalities had a long-term commitment which facilitated planning; now they have no such guarantee.

"Municipalities were provided with early announcements of grant levels; now this has disappeared.

"Municipalities were provided with a comprehensive announcement; now this is no longer the case.

"In conclusion, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario views with apprehension the significance of the 1979 transfer announcement. The association fears that it clearly portends a further deterioration of provincial-municipal relations.

"In the current atmosphere, it is difficult to see how the committee currently being constituted to study long-term provincial-municipal financial relations can possibly function. This is particularly true since municipalities already have expended expensive time, effort and resources dealing with such critical matters as property tax reform, grants reform and provincial-municipal transfers—all to little avail.

"AMO applauded the announcement that the government was in accord with the municipal proposition, that transfer payments to the municipalities in 1979 increase at the same rate as provincial expenditures, only to be faced—once again—with the manipulation of figures that if it is not, at least gives the impression of, duplicity on the part of the province."

That statement made by the association of municipalities on February 1, 1979, outlines the dilemma that the municipalities are faced with on a daily basis in trying to meet their financial commitments to their taxpayers and citizens. I am not sure but I hope that the present minister does not have the same attitude the former Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and the Treasurer of Ontario had—namely, that the municipalities are not taxed enough. He said on more than one occasion that he thought that municipal property taxes weren't high enough and there was no reason why they couldn't go higher. I think he would find serious disagreement by municipal elected representatives and by the citizens of Ontario.

I appeal to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs to give serious consideration to the brief that the Association of Municipalities of Ontario has placed before him, dated February 1, 1979, and seriously try to restore the feeling of good faith that was evident in the early 1970s, particularly in the period after the Edmonton commitment in 1973. The municipalities would much appreciate that. I can't emphasize that enough.

We on this side of the House would give him the kind of support he needs in order to try to live up to the commitments that the municipalities felt he had made last fall. If it is not possible to carry it through this year, we hope he will restore that good faith later this year and provide the municipalities with the kind of resource equalization payments, transfer payments and other kinds of payments they need and expect.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise to say, first of all, that I accept the explanation of the minister with regard to the purpose of this bill, which, I think is quite simple. It makes exceptions for those areas where section 86 has been invoked. The most important part of the bill is section 2, which provides for some interim ad hoc payments to municipalities where it has been proved that they have suffered rather severely because of an unfair equalization.

I think we all recognize that this is an interim measure only applicable for the one year. Because it was not necessary and because it had never been proposed by the former minister, I should say to the present minister that we welcome this bill and commend him for bringing it in.

I perhaps would make that commendation much more laudatory if we did not know the figures in it are really minimal figures. The minister may correct me if I am wrong, and I hope he will explain this, but I believe the equalization will be paid only to those found to be out by more than eight per cent.

Is that correct? Is he in fact, giving this ad hoc assistance to municipalities so those which have a six per cent or a seven per cent error in their equalization are receiving nothing? However, having said that, it is obviously an attempt on the part of the ministry to assist those which have been hurt the most.

I must say though I do not intend to get into the whole issue of transfer payments, as did the member for Waterloo North. It seems to me this bill deals solely with the matter of payment because of unequal equalization factors and does not deal with the whole question of transfer payments. I must say this bill is an admission of the mistake the government over there made in freezing assessment in 1970. I have never yet heard a reasonable explanation as to why those equalization factors were frozen.

If we extrapolate the figures which we have before us at this time of some $6,000,000 being transferred to the municipalities as payment for above an eight per cent error for one year, we can make some kind of an estimate of what the municipalities—those same municipalities and the others where there have been unfair equalization factors—have lost in the way of equalization grants.

In my understanding, for instance, in the case of Windsor, their equalization or their correction was about 18 per cent. Perhaps the minister could tell me if that figure is wrong. In fact, they only got over the eight per cent which would have been a 10 per cent adjustment—the difference between the 18 and the eight—and they got $3,000,000. If they had had the whole 18 per cent, they would have had something like $7,000,000. We do not know for how many years that figure of $7,000,000 would have applied. It would have applied this year; perhaps something less would have applied in previous years.

If you spread that over the 10-year period when equalization factors have been frozen, we are certainly talking in the neighbourhood of $35,000,000 to $50,000,000 that Windsor alone has lost. They are getting $3,000,000 paid to them as compensation for a loss of some $35,000,000 to $50,000,000 which they would have received if the equalization factors had never been frozen.

In the case of Welland this figure would have been in the neighbourhood of $3,000,000; granted, this is a ballpark figure. Welland is receiving $441,000.

If we spread that across all of those municipalities which have lost money—transfer payments—from the provincial government because of the frozen equalization factors, we are talking in the tens of millions of dollars. Taxpayers have lost perhaps $100,000,000 at least because of the equalization factors being frozen by this government way back in 1970. Of course, the new one won't be applicable until 1980.

I recognize of course that had there been an equalization factor there may have been other municipalities whose transfer payments would have been lowered—resource equalization would have been lowered—because of that. Nevertheless, if we in this Legislature are concerned and if the government was concerned about a degree of fairness over those years, they would have been making some adjustment during those years. Municipalities have unfairly lost money to which they were entitled.

It has been stated by the member for Waterloo North that a member of his caucus was the first one to make the proposal for these payments. I won't deny that, but I would point out that it was this party that proposed in 1976, and moved an amendment in 1977, and then last fall, 1978, tabled another amendment to lift the freeze that brought about the new equalization. That cannot be denied.

Mr. B. Newman: The minister first admitted it to me by letter. It's the first time he ever admitted making a mistake.

Mr. Swart: Their application was for ad hoc grants. Our amendment, which was first proposed in 1976, was to lift the freeze on equalization so that there would be a fair system across this province. I say to you here, if the Liberal Party had supported us in 1977 in that amendment, this year Windsor would be getting its $7,000,000 and all the other municipalities across this province that are losing, whether they are above the eight per cent or below the eight per cent, would also be getting theirs. There can be no denying that fact.

Mr. Epp: Now the reason.

Mr. Swart: The reason the municipalities are not getting it this year, the amount to which they are entitled, is because the Liberal Party did not support our amendment.

Mr. Roy: It would have been out of order.

Mr. Swart: It was not out of order; it was not ruled out of order. It was voted on in committee in this House, and the Liberals voted against it. I have to say, in all fairness to the Liberal Party—

Mr. J. Reed: Since when have you been fair to the Liberal Party?

Mr. Swart: —it is true that their critic at that time didn't really understand what the amendment meant.

Mr. Epp: For the record, tell us.

Mr. Swart: Maybe that was our fault because we didn't explain the amendment well enough. But, in fact, they did not understand what that meant. I would just like to read into the record—

Mr. Epp: For the record.

Mr. Swart: —the events last year leading up to what is taking place here today with regard to the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) saying: "If we were to accept this amendment as put forward by the member tonight"—referring to my amendment—"it would cause complete chaos in assessment in the other 800-odd municipalities in the province of Ontario."

Mr. Ruston: That is quite correct.

Mr. Swart: That is the same amendment we passed this last fall, and the Liberals voted for it.

Mr. Philip: Another flip-flop.

Mr. Swart: The member goes on to say: "If one was to accept this, as I said before, it would assist one or two municipalities but perhaps cause chaos in all those other municipalities. I can just see every municipality"—and I am still quoting the member for Erie—

"every clerk, every treasurer making application to the Ontario Municipal Board for a hearing on the matter of equalized assessment. I feel you are only going to open a can of worms and perhaps cause serious difficulty to the municipality and to almost every taxpayer in the community.

"First of all, you are going to have a person in the community say: 'I feel I have always paid higher taxes than my neighbour; I want to appeal my assessment on that basis.' I can just see the assessment appeal tribunal flooded with assessment appeals under this particular amendment."

That amendment in 1977, as in 1978, had nothing to do with individual appeals of assessment, as the member for Waterloo North now well knows. It was to provide for equalization between municipalities so they would pay their fair share into counties and into education costs, and receive their fair share of transfer payments, of resource equalization grants. The Liberals voted against that in 1977.

Even the minister at that time—that was the Honourable Mrs. Scrivener, and I know that wouldn't be true of the present minister—didn't understand that. She was saying: "If this amendment were to be incorporated within the bill, it would create assessment chaos in Ontario. Most definitely it would, Mr. Chairman, because it does introduce market value." She was saying it would introduce market value at that time.

"The equalization must be based on market value, and that is according to section 27 of the act, as the member must know."

We passed the amendment last fall, and it did not introduce market value. All that amendment is going to do is provide that an equalization will be in effect next year and that municipalities will get their fair share of the very minimal provincial grants that are passed out to municipalities; they will pay their fair share into the counties and regions and into the boards of education. That is all the amendment did in 1977, and that is all it did in 1978.

Today we are talking about an ad hoc payment of $6,000,000 when, if the Liberals had voted for our amendment in 1977, we would be having $100,000,000 being transferred this year to those municipalities that were rightly entitled to it because their equalization factor was at fault. It is only $6,000,000, but we are going to support this, because we think that a crumb of a loaf, or a very little bit of a loaf, is better than none.

We look forward to the new equalization factor being used next year in this province, and undoubtedly it will give a greater degree of equity.

Before I conclude, I would like to ask the minister on what basis the equalization was made to provide these additional grants. Was it on the work that had been done on market value, or has there been a fast equalization done since the amendment was passed? The reason I ask is that the figures are so much at variance with what was suggested by the previous minister as to the municipalities that were entitled to it and the amount to which the municipalities were entitled.

Finally, I have to say in conclusion that I doubt if there has been anything that this government has done over the past 10 years—and that is a pretty broad statement—that has shown as much ineptness and mismanagement as what it has done in the whole assessment field. To spend $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 of taxpayers' money on market value assessment and then abandon it, as this government has done, shows a very high degree of mismanagement.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill; but in doing so I would like to bring to the minister's attention that this legislation could have been passed and the problem resolved years ago.

If I am not mistaken, it was back in 1973 that the finance department of the city of Windsor, in comparing that city with the city of London, found that everything was not according to Hoyle; that Windsor was being unjustly treated as far as the resource equalization formula was concerned. It was in 1975 that Windsor first appealed to the cabinet in the city of London.

Bob Agnew and the mayor of the city, Bert Weeks, as well as other members of city council, made a very strong plea and presented a fairly substantial brief to the cabinet at that time, showing where the resource equalization grant did not treat the community of Windsor in the way that it should have been treated.

That was repeated again in 1976; I can recall talking about it myself in the House, practically reading the entire brief to put it in the record, so the ministry officials could study Windsor's submission to the cabinet and act accordingly.

I have had the opportunity to speak on this issue in 1975, in 1976, in 1977 and in 1978; but it was not until 1977, I think, that the then Treasurer did admit in a letter to me that there were inequities. But no solution was being proposed. Once the city found out there were inequities in the resource equalization grant, members can rest assured the city gathered its forces and did everything it possibly could do to emphasize to the ministry that a remedy was needed immediately.

I can recall a petition being signed in the community by well over 15,000 individuals. The petition was signed in the various shopping malls in the community and was strongly endorsed by the chamber of commerce. Practically every organization in the community supported the city in its stand for a better distribution of the grants. Finally, this year the present minister realized the community was not being treated as fairly as it should have been and, as a result, introduced the legislation we have here today.

I can only say that the $3,000,000 the ministry is actually going to be giving as a one-time grant to the city of Windsor is not even the interest on the money it would have owed them had it treated them fairly right from 1975 on. From what I understand, at one time we figured there was approximately $10,000,000 to $11,000,000 and a total of about $30,000,000 that the city was short-changed. Invested in securities, $30,000,000 today would certainly have presented us with at least a $3,000,000 return.

I support the legislation. I'm glad to see that once and finally the government has seen the light of day and decided that at least it can meet the communities, not half way but one tenth of the way. We appreciate the fact we are going to get the $3,000,000. It will be put to good use in the community. Our only regret is that we're kind of sorry the government couldn't have given us our fair share back when we first pointed out to it the errors in the way the resource equalization grant was calculated.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very briefly. I want to point out to the minister that today's victory for Windsor is as much a victory for the mayor of the city of Windsor, Mayor Weeks, as it is for the New Democratic Party. I seriously believe that if it weren't for the pressure from the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) and the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton), our revenue critic, to get the freeze on the resource equalization factor removed last year, after which the Liberal Party finally saw the light of day and decided to come along with us last year, if it weren't for those moves on the part of the New Democratic Party, Windsor would not receive the $3,000,000 it received this year.

Over the years Mayor Weeks has fought very hard for this particular grant. He spearheaded the attack against the government, collected petitions, got the labour unions behind him, got other communities across this province behind him and made them aware of their problems, wrote letters and had constant meetings with the local members of provincial parliaments about this problem. Windsor council passed resolutions that were circulated among all the municipalities.

As I say, this victory today for Windsor is as much a victory for the mayor of the city of Windsor as anyone else. I think he needs to be congratulated. I also think the former member who represented my riding, Fred Burr, deserves some credit, as he raised this matter back when he was first elected and when the mayor of the city of Windsor first started this fight. I'm sure Fred Burr is aware of the victory and he should share a part of the credit for today's bill.

I do want to say to the minister that I hope he'll talk to the Minister of Education and Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) because, as I understand it, Windsor and other communities—

Hon. Mr. Walker: Gee, I thought you would give the minister some credit.

Mr. Cooke: —are also missing out on a fair amount of money through the same problem through grants from the Ministry of Education. While we're getting $3,000,000, the government does owe us $50,000,000. Paying us what amounts to six per cent of what we deserve is a pretty good deal for the government, but not that good a deal for the city of Windsor.

Windsor has been among the highest-charging cities for property tax for many years. I think we're number two or number three right now in mill rates across the province, which does have an effect on industries that come to the city. Chrysler, GM, Hiram Walker and so on are paying much higher property tax than they would be if we received our fair share and that, obviously, is a deterrent for them to expand or locate new operations in Windsor. Over the last couple of years, we've had an unemployment rate in Windsor of around 12 per cent and I would think, if anything, the government should be trying to lower the mill rate even more in Windsor in order to attract more industry to that city.

I know the minister said when he was at the sod-turning for the Ford Motor Company in Windsor that we didn't really need the $50,000,000 because we were getting $28,000,000 from the province for the Ford Motor Company. I hope he doesn't use that same argument today to say everything has been equalized because that argument just doesn't wash either with myself or with the people of Windsor.

To conclude, I see the member for Essex North is still here, and I know that when the Liberal Party—

Mr. Ruston: I'm always here, Dave.

Mr. Cooke: —in 1977 voted against our amendment that would have solved this problem for 1978, he was down at Windsor attending a meeting and he tried to justify the Liberal position. It was very difficult to justify something indefensible.

Mr. Ruston: No problem. I'll send you an article from the Windsor Star from Mayor Blundy of Sarnia.

Mr. Cooke: I read the Windsor Star from cover to cover.

Mr. Ruston: He understood it better than you fellows.

Mr. Cooke: The fact of the matter is the Liberal Party didn't understand the problem—

Hon. Mr. Walker: Would you guys stop attacking each other?

Mr. Cooke: —in 1977 and, thanks to the Liberal Party of this province, Windsor lost out on money in 1978. We would have got the $7,000,000 last year. We would have got more money in 1979—

Mr. Bradley: You are being overly partisan.

Mr. Cooke: —and the problem would have been resolved, but because the members of the Liberal Party didn't understand the situation and the members of the government didn't understand the situation—

Mr. Epp: I didn't know we were running the administration of this province. Thanks for the credit.

Mr. Cooke: It's too bad they didn't have a member like our member from Welland.

Mr. Ruston: That is the radio fellow. That is the fellow that owns the radio station.

Mr. Cooke: You people were saying that night that the member from Welland didn't understand the problem and he couldn't implement his proposal.

Mr. Epp: Are you giving us credit for this now?

Mr. Cooke: Today his position has been vindicated and once again the New Democratic Party has been proved right and the people of Windsor, again, are benefiting from good NDP representation.

Mr. Epp: That is twice this year you are right.

Mr. J. Reed: If there is nothing to say he will say it.

Mr. Philip: Give us another flip-flop.

Mr. Ruston: I just have a few words to say with regard to Bill 18, on equalization grants. It is a bit of a problem for some of the people in the county of Essex. Out of the 21 municipalities, 15 received some form of increase because of this new legislation. Naturally, any amount extra is appreciated.

I've had calls from the reeves of a couple of municipalities and the mayor of another one that they are concerned that one of them got such a little bit and a number of other ones got nothing whatsoever. Of course, by doing the proper figuring, I'm sure someone will show they weren't entitled to anything, but the old saying is that figures don't lie but liars can figure.

The problem, I think, is with our grant structure—per capita grants, police grants, highway grants, education grants—which is rather complicated. A lot of people don't take the time to understand or figure them out. To a layman who sees the report that just came out it's a little concerning because Windsor received $3,097,000, a little over $15 per capita, and the town of Tecumseh with a population of 5,000 received $2,100, which is about 40 cents per capita.

The township of Tilbury North have asked their auditors to look over the whole situation of grants and find out why they weren't entitled to something extra. It is a little confusing to them.

However, Windsor did receive this, and certainly Mayor Weeks has worked a long time on it as well as many other people. I can tell him right now that he doesn't have to worry about where this money can go. There are two things in the county of Essex, being from the riding of Essex North, where I can tell him he can certainly use some of that money. One of them is on a sanitary landfill site. I am getting completely fed up with taking all the junk and garbage from Windsor out in my riding. It is unbelievable. In fact, they are talking now of setting up roadblocks of human beings to stop it from coming out.

Mr. Bradley: Including the members?

Mr. Conway: There are no Tories in Essex, but there is a lot of garbage.

Mr. Ruston: It is time the city started putting in its own system of handling its garbage. We are not going to stand for it much longer. Mr. Weeks can use some of that money right now to start putting in his own garbage disposal system.

Mr. Mackenzie: Did you clear that with the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman)?

Mr. Conway: Send it to Agincourt.

Mr. Ruston: The people of Essex county will be very happy because we are using up the most valuable farmland in Ontario to take their garbage.

He is worrying about the rates for suburban roads. He can put some of the money in suburban roads because, after all, they are getting all that taxation from the industrial buildings in Windsor. We are furnishing houses for the people. It is about time they shared a little more of the suburban roads.

I can tell the mayor of Windsor that there are two places he had better start looking at very fast or he may have a little bit of—I am not sure we are going to have any kind of confrontation, but from watching television on Sunday night, I wouldn't be surprised if they put up a few roadblocks to stop all those dirty garbage trucks and the papers and everything else that go with the garbage and blow all around Maidstone township.

Mr. Roy: You don't have to take that kind of abuse.

Mr. Charlton: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. Reed: It will be the first time in NDP history.

Mr. Charlton: I don't want to have to rub things in for too long. I just want to say that I am happy to see this bill here this afternoon. I am very proud of the efforts this caucus made to help this happen. I am having some difficulty understanding the position the Liberal caucus is taking this afternoon, in fact a great deal of difficulty.

Mr. Bradley: You always have difficulty understanding other caucuses.

Mr. Ruston: You have difficulty understanding period.

Mr. Charlton: The member for St. Catharines, for example, has been complaining in his own municipality about how St. Catharines isn't going to get any money this year.

Mr. Bradley: Are you supporting us now?

Mr. Charlton: What is painfully obvious about that complaint and what is painfully strange about it is that if the Liberal caucus had supported our amendment in the fall of 1977, the first fall that I was here, St. Catharines would be in a position of getting full equalization this year.

Mr. Bradley: No, we would have got nothing one year earlier.

Mr. Charlton: They are not, because the government party and the Liberal Party didn't see fit to remove the freeze on equalization in 1977. It seems strange to me that we are all here applauding this action this afternoon when on at least two occasions in this House that I can recall since I was elected, members of the government party and members of the Liberal caucus got up and spoke very adamantly and very strongly against removing the freeze because of the chaos they claimed it would cause.

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Mr. Charlton: Now we are here applauding it as if we had all been for it all the time. It just seems to me it should be made quite clear that, although we have this bill here this afternoon as a government bill, it didn't come easily and the government didn't present it all that willingly and not even on the first shot around.

I myself worked extremely hard over the past summer and last fall discussing the possibilities with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck). It wasn't until the very last minute the Minister of Revenue admitted his willingness to deal with this particular line of action we are dealing with here tonight.

[4:30]

Mr. Bradley: Pressure from the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Charlton: We are also in the position—although they didn't come out against it this year—of having a great deal of difficulty in convincing the Liberal caucus that they should have supported the amendment we were prepared to propose this year—

Mr. Swart: Again:

Mr. Charlton:—again, for the third time—if the government had not finally come forward with its own amendment. I think it should just be made very clear that none of these actions we're all applauding here today came very easily from the government party. Certainly, they weren't supported immediately and forcibly by the members of the Liberal caucus. The complaints some of them are making here today, in reality lie on their own shoulders. I just wish that on occasion people would have the guts to let people know why things really happen around this province.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, our first regret in the city of St. Catharines—and I'm sure this is shared by some of the other municipalities perhaps—is the fact that we did not have an earlier decision on this matter.

Hon. Mr. Walker: You are wearing a button. What does that say?

Mr. Bradley: We know that municipalities across the province attempt to do some preliminary work, in terms of striking their budgets even in January and February. Certainly, they are well into them in March and April. We were hopeful that a decision on at least the interim payments would have been forthcoming earlier, in order to facilitate some of that budgetary planning.

In St. Catharines, strangely enough, we were often at odds with the former provincial Treasurer and some of the policies he implemented in the Niagara Peninsula, particularly as they affected the constituency of St. Catharines. When the new Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs visited us recently, I found myself in the unique position of agreeing with the former provincial Treasurer, and disagreeing with the new Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, as to the formula to be applied, recognizing that the new minister has used a formula he feels is fair and equitable.

I never did feel I would come to the day when I would be casting my lot with Mr. McKeough. However, on this occasion, the figures provided—particularly those concerning Windsor and Sarnia—led us to believe that perhaps the city of St. Catharines would be the recipient of some $1,200,000 per year and, therefore, that a pro-rated interim payment might be forthcoming from the province. So naturally, we were disappointed when we found that not this formula but a new formula was to be used.

Our disappointment naturally was the joy of other municipalities. I'm sure the member for Welland-Thorold is delighted with the fact that both Welland and Thorold are to benefit from the new formula. One wonders whether, after all these years, he has been able to cultivate the kind of rapport with the government that has enabled it to bring forth a formula that would benefit his constituencies to such an extent. Of course, we recognize that's probably not the case.

Mr. Cooke: Just good representation.

Mr. Bradley: So we were disappointed that the cupboard was bare when it came to the city of St. Catharines, in terms of that interim payment.

We recognize, and the minister was kind enough to point this out on the occasion of his visit, that not all the moneys were used. If certain municipalities across the province are able to present compelling cases to the province for use of those leftover funds and justify their cases in an appropriate manner, such funds might be forthcoming. We're just a little bit encouraged by that and happy that the minister was able to provide this information on that occasion.

I know the member for Brock (Mr. Welch), who shares at least part of the city of St. Catharines with me in terms of representation, was making representations through cabinet channels while I was making representations on the other side. At least, he asked me to say that during my remarks.

We recognize on this side of the House, as I'm sure many members of the government do too, that municipalities—and the reason we like to see these interim payments is as a shot in the arm—municipalities in this particular year, and certainly last year, are facing great difficulties in terms of deciding to increase the property tax—which most people consider to be the most regressive kind of tax available to us and which is the only form of tax available to municipalities—or being forced to cut back what some consider to be essential services because of the lack of the level of provincial funding that they would like to see.

For instance—and, Mr. Speaker, you will forgive me for one sentence in varying from the bill—it is my understanding that the per capita grant to libraries is frozen again this year and that the only way that municipalities can gain further revenues in this regard is through an increase in population. We see not necessarily what one would call cutbacks; not the kind of increases that we would need in municipalities at least to keep up with the rate of inflation or even just below the rate of inflation.

I am optimistic in the second aspect. The first aspect I mentioned was those extra funds which the minister indicated are available.

The second aspect, and perhaps in the long run the most important aspect, is—we cannot say the thawing of the factors—the unfreezing of the factors that has taken place which will enable, at long last, the various municipalities across the province to receive the appropriate amount in resource equalization grants. We see this as being a very positive step, disappointed as we are that we are not receiving some of the interim payments.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few short comments, but I suppose my opening comment should be that the wheel that squeaks the most gets the most grease. Perhaps I can apply that saying to some of the municipalities in this bill that will receive additional resource equalization grants.

I am concerned about the formula that is presented in Bill 18. As I look at the bill and the municipalities within the regional municipality of Niagara that will be receiving additional grants related to Bill 18, I do not know whether I can justify the minister's moving in this direction. As I recall the implementation of regional government in Niagara and the bill that established the regional municipality of Niagara, one of my comments at the time the bill was introduced was that revaluation of assessment was necessary before we entered into regional government.

I can recall my days on Welland county council, and we had difficulties, as the member for Essex North has mentioned, relating to suburban roads. At different times, the chairmen of the Welland county roads committee questioned the share that the city of Welland was contributing to the county, because we did not have a true picture of the assessment in the city of Welland.

At that particular time I thought the county assessment was perhaps one of the best in Ontario. We had an exceptionally good county assessor, Mr. Ralph Wilson, who I think is with the department at the present time. We often questioned this matter of assessment. We tried to compare certain houses within the city of Welland with houses of similar nature and construction in other parts of the county, but we could not get a clear picture. We had problems with one or two municipalities.

The point I raise with the minister is this: Equalized assessment apparently is based upon the principle that industry, say, should pay some portion of it. As I look at the present assessment in the city of Welland—I am glad the minister lifted the ban on it—I hope we will have revaluation of assessment throughout the region. I think there are many municipalities that are handicapped by the freeze on assessment, or reassessment, throughout the region.

Mr. Swart: Then why did you vote to lift the freeze in 1977?

Mr. Haggerty: Because, under section 86 of the Assessment Act, we said it was going to cause some difficulties in certain municipalities throughout Ontario, and that has come to the forefront already. We can take Hamilton—

Mr. Swart: What has section 86 got to do with the freeze on assessment?

Mr. Haggerty: It relates to assessment, if the member isn't quite aware of it, and that is the point I am trying to state. There is inequity in assessment as it relates to equalization grants; I am aware of that. All I am suggesting to the minister is I feel, or in my opinion, although the cities of Welland and St. Catharines did receive additional grants, I think he is going to cause injustice to other communities within that region. I can think of the city of Port Colborne and their tax base, as it relates to residential and business, or commercial, or industry; and the town of Fort Erie, on the same basis. They don't have the same wealth of industrial assessment as Welland or St. Catharines.

When he brings in a bill like this he is saying, "Here, we are going to apply additional grants, additional subsidy to that municipality." I question whether it is justified. As I said before, the wheel that squeaks the loudest gets the most grease, I guess. In this particular instance, I feel this is what has happened.

I suggest before any additional equalization grant is provided to the communities of Ontario, he should take a close look at the assessment practices carried on and look at other assessments within that region or within that county structure. There is an injustice there and as my colleague says about Windsor, perhaps with their tax base they don't require the additional unconditional grants. All I am saying is I think he has opened the door now and he had better take a close look at revaluation of assessment.

The first mistake he made was freezing assessments. He has got a tiger by the horns here, I will tell the House right now, because he doesn't know what to do with the freezing of assessments.

Mr. Ruston: How do you get a tiger by the horns?

Mr. Haggerty: Well, there is a lot of bull that goes behind it and that is what we have heard over the last 10 years here in the Legislature. He has created a monster there and he doesn't know what to do with it.

Mr. Ruston: That is right.

Mr. Haggerty: The whole crunch of this thing is he doesn't know what to do with it. By changing this bill now—the minister is smiling perhaps at that comment—he has got a problem and it is causing unjust inequity in assessment in communities throughout Ontario.

I am all for market value assessment and there is no reason they can't move in this direction. They will have to move with some caution, there is no doubt about it, because the impact is going to be tremendous to certain taxpayers in communities in the province. It is his responsibility as to how he is going to tackle it and what he is going to do with it, but he has created that monster. I suggest to him the bill may mean great things for the city of Welland or the city of St. Catharines, but I can tell him there are other inequities within that region.

Mr. Swart: Welland and Thorold, Ray; St. Catharines didn't get any.

Mr. Haggerty: There are other municipalities that pay a large apportionment of the cost of regional government in Niagara that can't well afford it without a good sound tax base and they don't have it. Let's take a good look at this thing; let's take a look at revaluation of assessment within the regional municipality of Niagara. I have seen so many reports on it and so many different approaches to it, no wonder the minister is confused, or his predecessor was, because he didn't know in which direction to go.

Mr. Swart: He went the right direction—out.

Mr. Haggerty: He can put anything in that computer and come up with an answer, but is it the right one? I give the member for Welland-Thorold credit for bulldogging the minister into bringing something to that area, but I think there are other communities within that region that perhaps need increased unconditional grants.

Mr. Wildman: They need better representation.

Mr. Haggerty: I suggest the minister look into that area. Again, I suggest that before he implements any restructuring of county government, revaluation of assessment should be the top priority so we can correct the problem there before it gets out of hand as it has now in different municipalities within a region or a county.

[4:45]

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to tell my friend, the member for St. Catharines, the member for Brock speaks with me on his behalf quite regularly at quite great length. But he is also I think quite capable of speaking on behalf of the region. I think the message from the Niagara region reaches me from all sources.

I was most pleased by my visit there to learn about some of the problems in the Niagara region. I am sure my friend from Welland-Thorold probably will disagree but I learned one of the major needs in the Niagara region is for an economic study on industrial development and growth.

Mr. Swart: I do not disagree with you at all. Bring in the study and bring in the industries.

Hon. Mr. Wells: For too long all of us here have been led to believe that whole region was nothing but tender fruit and grape-vines. While we want to preserve those, we sure need industry in that region, and I told them we have to do something about that.

Mr. Swart: I am sure you never thought all the Niagara Peninsula was grapes and peaches.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No.

Mr. Mackenzie: The problem is whenever you want to develop something it is on the fruit land.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Certainly the key message to me was that the problems of the region of Niagara could be greatly alleviated by a little industrial development and growth down there. I am certainly going to do what I can to see that can happen.

Mr. Haggerty: It is all taking place in Welland-Thorold and in St. Catharines.

Mr. Mackenzie: It is all taking place on good fruit land.

Hon. Mr. Wells: In general terms, dealing with some of the things concerning transfers to municipalities—and of course this bill is transferring more money to municipalities—the statement the member for Waterloo North read from the Association of Municipalities of Ontario I thought was a rather ill-conceived document they sent to us. I appreciate they are probably playing a little politics with us too. But we discussed it at length at the final arrangements subcommittee of the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee.

I am sure my friend also knows the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee presented what I thought was a very reasoned response to our statement this year. We indicated we were going to achieve transfer payments at around the same percentage of growth and direct operating expenses of this government, which is five per cent. That is what we told them. They came back to us and said—

Mr. Swart: Read the statement Miller made.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am talking about the statement I made to them. The statement I made said it would be about the same. They said to us, "You increase your grants to us by about the same percentage as you are going to increase your own spending."

The fact of the matter is the actual percentage increase in transfers to municipalities will not be determined until we are further into this year. I would say when we table our document here in a few days on financial assistance to municipalities the growth rate may be around 5.3 per cent. When the year is out it may be closer to six per cent; it may be right at five per cent. The fact of the matter is the municipal liaison committee said to us, "Make it six per cent or add another $16,000,000." We are only talking about $16,000,000 difference between the five and the six per cent in grants to municipalities, excluding school boards.

As I am pointing out to the members now, when all is said and done and the books are balanced, we may be very close. So really the kind of statement that AMO made to us I thought was not particularly called for. Maybe they made it for their own political reasons; I accept that; we all make those kinds of statements. We have read it, I have responded to it. I am not going to read into the record my letter which I have written to about 253 municipalities that sent me a copy of the AMO statement and said, "What about it?"

The fact still stands, notwithstanding that statement, that we do have a long-term fiscal arrangement subcommittee meeting and AMO and the other municipal associations are taking part under the aegis of the municipal liaison committee. We are talking about long-term fiscal arrangements. We are talking about how the province and the municipalities can share revenue. I hope that out of that is going to come some new arrangement.

Notwithstanding that kind of statement there is a high degree of co-operation and co-ordination going on between ourselves and the municipalities. This bill represents a part of that process.

The member for Welland-Thorold asked why equalization factors were frozen in 1970. The equalization factors, as I am told, were not very accurate. Those that were in place in 1970 were certainly not very accurate, compared to market value assessment. Because at that time we embarked upon the kind of work that would perhaps lead to the imposition of market value assessment, it was felt that the whole process could carry on best if the factors were frozen, reassessment took place and then the whole thing was assessed and put in place.

As we all know, history shows us that didn't happen. The process of reassessment and of consideration of market value assessment was put off, year by year, and the factors remained frozen. That brought us to last fall, when it was decided that, once the imposition of market value assessment had been put on the shelf, so to speak, as a massive provincial project that would occur all at once, once that was put to rest last summer, the idea of unfreezing those factors certainly had to come to the fore, as it did.

My colleague the Minister of Revenue brought forward certain proposals to unfreeze the factors. We looked at using new factors for the year 1979, but it was obviously too late to introduce them in a proper manner and to have them in place for the taxation and apportionment system that would be used in 1979. So the announcement was made that we would bring in new factors this year, in 1979, allow for all the processes that will occur, such as appeals, et cetera, and then have those factors in place for 1980. That is what is going to happen. Those factors will be announced very shortly—by July—and then they will be used for 1980.

I want to read again, in case the members have forgotten it, one of the paragraphs from the Minister of Revenue's statement when he made that announcement. He said: "Even though the use of the new factors will cause a redistribution of grants among municipalities and school boards—there, of course, would be no point in using them if there were no redistribution—no municipality or school board will receive less grant in 1980 because of the introduction of new factors." I think it is important to remember that: no municipality or school board is going to receive less grant in 1980 because of the introduction of the new factors which will be in place.

Mr. Epp: In dollars, but not in per cent.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am talking about less grant, in dollars, in 1980. Let's remember that. That's the pledge we put in with the introduction of the new factors, which the members will have a chance to see and we will all have a chance to talk about as the year unfolds.

That being in place, we decided that because there certainly were some inequities, some perceived inequities, we should put in at least an ad hoc program for this year to bridge the gap. That is what we are talking about in this bill, an ad hoc program to bridge the gap until this plan comes in, and remembering the pledge we have made as far as this plan is concerned. Here we have the legislative authority to pay some ad hoc grants to municipalities that have been affected because of the frozen factors.

I was asked how we arrived at the municipalities that would get some of the money that was available this year for the ad hoc grants. I think it was outlined in the statement I sent around when we sent the list of the 49—and it's 49, not 39—municipalities. It may be that the last page of the copy of the statement which the member for Waterloo North has is missing; there are 39 on the first two, and then there are some on the last page. If the member has the ones from Stormont down to Waterloo, he should get 49.

On the statement we sent around when we announced these around the middle of March, the members will find the explanation of how we arrived at who would receive the money and how it would be allotted. In order to assess the impact, we calculated the 1979 resource equalization grants entitlements on the basis of the regulations. Then we compared that figure with what would have been payable had the 1978 local assessment been based on the 1975 market value, which is the latest market value data that the Ministry of Revenue's assessment department has available.

We decided there was justification for a special payment to those municipalities where the increase in the grants—that is, the increase in the grants using the 1975 market value figures over what was used, which is the normal way of calculating the resource equalization grants—would have reduced the 1978 levy by eight per cent or more. All those municipalities where, if they had got the difference, the levy would have been reduced by eight per cent or more were then considered eligible.

Having by means of this formula determined the municipalities eligible for special payments, in order to fit in with the money which we had available—which was not an unlimited amount and was in fact a set amount of money—it was then further decided that the grant would be one third of the potential gain.

When the city of Sarnia says, for instance, that the $411,000 it received is not what it was expecting and quotes a larger figure, it actually is a third of the amount it would have gained had we been using the market value assessment figure. In the same vein, the $3,000,000 that Windsor got would have been three times that or $9,000,000, which is about the figure that the mayor constantly quotes to us as being the amount it is losing because the new factors are not there.

When one applies the formulas we have applied, one will see that we have used a fairly equitable system with a special notching provision so that at the bottom of the list there weren't some who gained a lot more than those which would have been immediately below the eight per cent cutoff figure. By using that special formula there, we arrived at 49 municipalities that could share in the roughly $6,600,000 we had available.

It may not be the world's most perfect system, but it's the best system we have been able to figure out to distribute $6,600,000 on an ad hoc basis in a program that is only for one year and which will not be necessary next year because of the unfrozen factors in the commitment that we have given.

So I think this bill is equitable and fair. I know there are areas like St. Catharines that really felt, because of commitments or statements that were made, particularly by my predecessor, that they were entitled to something, but just happen to fall below the level in the formula. In the St. Catharines case, it is quite simple, as I explained at the time. The eight per cent cut off meant that St. Catharines, which was at about a five per cent figure, just didn't qualify. Conversely, we had the mayors of Thorold and Welland coming and asking me why they were getting money. They somehow didn't seem to realize that they were entitled to it. However, I must tell the honourable members that nobody has sent it back.

Mr. Swart: Before the minister sits down, what was the basis for the equalization factors he used?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The basis was 1975 market value data. We used actual 1975 market value data and used that as the basis for the equalization factors that were used, as opposed to the 1970 ones which are used to calculate the resource equalization grant at the present time, and then we took the difference.

I am happy that the members are supporting this bill. If we can pass it fairly expeditiously now, we can get out the money which has been promised to the 49 municipalities that will share in this special grant.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

Mr. Speaker: Since we've concluded this afternoon's business, we're going to call it six o'clock. We will resume at eight o'clock.

The House recessed at 5 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

TRANSLATION BUREAU

95. Mr. Grande: Will the Ministry of Culture and Recreation provide the following details of the translation bureau of the ministry: What languages are contracted out? What languages are translated by the bureau's staff? What percentage of the bureau's budget is spent on free translation services to newcomers? What percentage of the bureau's budget is used for translation of English into French and French into English? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: All languages not covered by bureau staff are contracted out.

Languages translated by the bureau's staff are: French, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Czech, Slovak, Hungarian, Russian, Italian, Serbian, Croatian, Slovenian, Macedonian, plus some Latin, Bulgarian, Roumanian, Polish, Ukrainian and Arabic.

Based on the current level of service:

Multilingual and French/English (free service to newcomers)	8.79%
Multilingual (to government ministries)	3.18%
French/English (government)	3.81%
English/French (exclusively government)	76.43%
General administration	7.79%
	100.00%

AID TO MULTICULTURAL GROUPS

96. Mr. Grande: Will the ministry table a list of all groups to which consultative and financial assistance was given for the purpose of the promotion and advancement of multiculturalism in Ontario in 1978/1979 fiscal year? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The ministry has been requested to table a list of all groups which have received consultative and financial assistance in fiscal 1978/79 "for the purpose of promotion and advancement of multiculturalism."

It is the view of the ministry that multiculturalism—namely, the fact that Ontario's population is composed of individuals and groups of diverse ethnocultural backgrounds—is now and has for a very long time, been a characteristic of the society of this province. It is therefore impossible to identify programs intended to promote and advance what is already present.

The ministry does, however, have programs in place which are in response to the multicultural nature of Ontario's population. These would include provision of consultative and financial assistance on the part of several divisions and agencies directly, and indirectly by ministry-supported bodies. They would also take place province-wide.

It is not practicable to table the requested data because of the sheer volume being sought. The ministry would be pleased to supply information regarding consultative and financial assistance if the specific area or areas in which the honourable member is interested could be identified with greater precision.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

99. Ms. Bryden: Would the Ministry of the Environment provide the House with figures, for the four most recent years for which they can be compiled, on the amount by active ingredient of each of the following herbicides which was applied in Ontario: 2,4-D and 2,4-DP; 2,4,5-T and 2,4,5-TP; other phenoxy herbicides; paraquat; atrazine? Would the minister further provide, for each herbicide in each year, a breakdown by method of application and agricultural versus non-agricultural use? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In recognition of the social, health and economic benefits of the use of pesticides and of the risks associated with some of these products because of their purpose and nature, Ontario has developed a control program that complements federal activities and responsibilities. All pesticide products offered for sale or use in Canada must be registered by Agriculture Canada. The registration process requires the applicant to provide detailed information on the toxicity of the active ingredients and other formulation compounds, on the efficiency of the product on target species, on the impact on the environment and on persistence as well as on proposed use patterns and related environmental impact. The application and data are thoroughly scrutinized by a multidisciplinary group of experts before acceptance for registration.

Ontario complements and builds onto the federal process using a licensing and classification system to extend control. It is a responsibility of the Ontario Pesticides Advisory Committee to assess need, efficiency and risk for each product and recommend a classification that regulates transport, sale, availability and use. Some products present no risk and may be sold in grocery stores and are available to all persons. Other products must be securely stored, are available only to a limited group or may require a specific use permit.

The availability of records on use is dependent upon the permit system. Few of the products for which data is requested are subject to permit and therefore limited data has been assembled within the ministry.

Atrazine and paraquat are in a classification that limits availability to licensed applicators and to farmers. Since permits are not required, data on use is therefore not available. Some formulations of paraquat are available to the homeowner because the concentration of active ingredient is very low and the package small.

There are several forms of the active ingredient for the phenoxy herbicides, 2,4-D, 2,4-DB, 2,4,5-T, 2,4,5-TP, MCPA and MCPB which results in placement of each product in three classes. Those having a high volatile ester form are available by permit only. No permits have been issued for these. Those having a low volatile ester form are available to farmers and licensed applicators without permit. Aerial and aquatic applications of this form require a use permit. Those having an amine form, and the trend has been to this form, are available to the public on the basis that they are effective and safe.

No permits have been issued for any formulation of 2,4-DB or 2,4,5-TP.

Figures available from the permit files for other phenoxy herbicides are listed in the attached table.

It should be noted that through a recent amendment to the regulations under the Pesticides Act, 1973, all formulations of the two herbicides—2,4,5-T and 2,4,5-TP—are now subject to specific use permits.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

BUDGET RESOLUTION

Hon. F. S. Miller moved that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Applause.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I wish I could count on the same response after I speak, Mr. Speaker.

As I look around me and before I start my prepared text, I feel very honoured to see two of my friends and former Treasurers in the audience, Mr. Jim Allan and Mr. John White, who are in the balcony.

Mr. Sargent: What about Gordon Sinclair?

Mr. Roy: Where's Darcy McKeough?

Hon. F. S. Miller: He is a private operator. He is out earning money.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That we are going to tax.

Mr. MacDonald: Where is the Treasurer's haberdasher?

BUDGET STATEMENT

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, this evening I am pleased to present to you and to the members my first budget. It's an honour to serve as Treasurer of Ontario and, under the leadership of the Premier (Mr. Davis), to share with my colleagues the opportunity to mould the future of this great province.

In carrying out the responsibilities of the Treasurer of Ontario, my goal is clear: to continue the outstanding achievements which have benefited this province so greatly in order to guarantee future employment, prosperity and happiness for our citizens.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You can at least look happy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Smile over there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Without question, the most important problem facing Ontario today is the need to create more jobs. The employment creation record of the province over the past few years has been outstanding. But because our labour force is growing so quickly—more than three times as quickly as Great Britain's or Germany's—we must further strengthen our efforts so that all new entrants to the labour force find employment.

In creating jobs, we must not fan the flames of inflation. If we do so, we will do lasting damage to our economic prospects. While employment problems affect some people, inflation affects everyone. It is especially hard on the elderly and those on fixed incomes.

When I sat down to prepare this budget, the issues of unemployment and inflation were the first priorities I had to face. I realized that Ontario was subject to national and international forces that strongly influence our economy. No one government can single-handedly wipe out inflation and unemployment. Also, while much of the responsibility for tackling these problems lies with the federal government, Ontario can and must provide responsible leadership and policy initiatives that will help create jobs and reduce inflation. I believe that the proposals I will place before you tonight will do just that.

The path to greater economic prosperity in Ontario is clear. Only by stimulating the private sector can we create lasting jobs and growing incomes for our citizens. That is also the only way for us to provide the taxable resources so essential to provide the high standard of public services our citizens have come to expect. The efforts of this government must be concentrated on making sure that we create the confidence and the atmosphere needed for private sector investment in Ontario.

The private sector flourishes best with a minimum of government regulation. In fact, one of the main reasons prompting me to enter politics was my perception as a small businessman of the need to encourage government to lighten the burden of regulation and interference on the business community in Ontario. To be candid, I also believe that businesses should prosper without a lot of government financial concessions. But we do not set the international rules of the game. When other jurisdictions are aggressively competing for new investment, we cannot bury our heads in the sand and let job opportunities slip outside Canadian borders into other countries. We must take effective action to make sure that the Ontario economy is secure.

In the weeks before preparing this budget, I met with many individuals and groups: small businessmen, consumers, corporations, union representatives, bankers and farmers. The meetings were very useful. I learned a great deal about the individual problems of each group. I want to thank them for the time they took to give me the benefit of their thinking about our economy and about our way of life. I can assure them all that I have listened to their recommendations very carefully and have weighed them while preparing this budget.

One point came up repeatedly in these conversations. If government keeps its own house in order, maintains a positive climate for the development of the private sector and aims for reasonable cost and salary increases, the outlook for our continued prosperity is very bright.

This government wholeheartedly shares those opinions. Accordingly, this budget proposes to maintain a high quality of public services in Ontario; to help create more jobs; to provide incentives for economic growth and small business development; to continue our sound management of provincial spending, thereby helping to contain inflation; and to reduce the deficit.

Mr. Bradley: You need water after that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Who says it's water?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do. So there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's water.

Mr. Conway: Tell us you can turn water into wine.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope the television sets are not colour sets, because I am blushing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who could tell against your jacket?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the interjections are supposed to come from the opposite side of the House.

Mr. Foulds: That's how bad your budget is.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They don't know what's in it yet.

Before outlining specific measures to achieve these objectives, I would like to review briefly the economic outlook for the province.

Ontario's economy continued to perform well in 1978. Growth was 3.6 per cent in real terms and a record 133,000 more people were employed in Ontario than the year before, on average. All of these jobs were created in the private sector. This was an outstanding accomplishment by any standard. I was particularly encouraged by the fact that our manufacturing output growth accelerated by almost one full percentage point, to 4.8 per cent, and 36,000 new jobs were created in manufacturing. In part, our economic performance was assisted by the lower value of the Canadian dollar, which improved our export competitiveness, as well as by the temporary reduction in retail sales tax.

There were disappointments in the year as well. Because of the rapid growth in the number of young people entering the labour force, an unacceptably high level of unemployment has persisted. While this surge will pass in two or three years, currently almost 75 per cent of the unemployed in Ontario are young people under 25 or adult women. Reducing the rate of unemployment is a major challenge for all governments. Comparatively speaking, however, the Ontario record of job creation has been outstanding.

Turning to the outlook, I have noted that many economists believe that the Canadian and Ontario economies will grow at a modestly slower rate this year. I have included a forecast for 1979 that reflects a consensus of economic forecasters, both inside and outside government. It calls for a slight moderation in the rate of real growth in Ontario to 3.3 per cent. This moderation in growth is predicated on the assumption the United States economy will experience some slowing down during 1979. Nevertheless, we can look forward to seeing well over 100,000 new jobs created in Ontario this year.

I would like to observe that this year—and it is almost our centennial year in this sense—Ontario's gross provincial product will, for the first time, exceed $100,000,000,000. This landmark takes on even more significance when one realizes Ontario's economy has tripled since 1969. As a matter of fact, I look back to 1953 and the Ontario economy was just under $10,000,000,000 in that year, so in 26 years it has gone up 10 times. They are all Conservative years too.

An hon. member: Most of it in price increases.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If the federal friends of members opposite could get a deficit in line with ours they would be proud.

Mr. Conway: Wait until Maureen gives them $7,300,000,000 extra.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's more than Margaret does for Pierre.

Ms. Gigantes: You are stupid.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At this point I would draw the attention of the members to budget paper A, which provides a thorough review of the performance of the Ontario economy through the 1970s and looks at our prospects for the next decade.

I noted with interest the federal Minister of Finance in his November budget referred to a recent survey which showed 300 large corporations in Canada are planning to increase their spending on plant and equipment this year by an average of eight per cent in real terms.

I have also had a survey conducted of 100 corporations in Ontario and that indicates that Ontario business is moving ahead with expansion plans at a healthy pace.

Mr. Foulds: What are the details?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am confident, as we continue to provide a sound climate for investment in Ontario, our citizens will reap the benefits of better jobs and higher incomes.

Mr. Warner: No one believes you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In fact, I would, personally, not be surprised if the forecasters have underestimated growth in 1979. It may turn out, in my opinion it will turn out, to be a year of better economic performance than 1978. This growth-oriented budget is designed to make this happen.

I have emphasized the need to improve the climate for employment growth in investment in Ontario. We must continue to seek new ways to help our people, especially the young, to find lasting and rewarding employment. To do this, the government of Ontario has led the way with programs such as the Ontario Career Action Program and the Ontario Youth Employment Program. Last week I announced the details of OYEP for 1979.

Mr. Wildman: Is that lasting and rewarding employment?

Hon. F. S. Miller: My statement contains a table showing the funding and job creation levels of Ontario's programs for youth employment in 1979-80. In total we will be spending $79,000,000 and creating directly some 70,000 jobs this year for young people in Ontario.

When we look at the problem of unemployment, we are confronted with the paradox that many job vacancies exist while a large number of people are seeking work. During my pre-budget consultations, both employers and union representatives told me of their concerns about the shortage of skilled workers. In fact in some parts of our province I am told machines are lying idle because there is no one to operate them.

Mr. M. Davidson: Because you never trained anybody.

[8:15]

Hon. F. S. Miller: Some of us are untrainable, and I am just hearing from one.

My colleagues, the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), and the Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie), are developing long-term measures which will improve the situation through better training and closer co-ordination among unions, employers, job seekers, and the educational system.

We will support these efforts with a new program to assist employers directly to hire and train people in areas of critical skill shortages. This program will be financed through the employment development fund which I will describe shortly.

The details of this new thrust for skilled training will be announced later in the session, but I'm convinced labour and industry leaders will co-operate with each other and with the government to design and carry out practical skill training programs.

In preparing this budget I conducted a thorough review of our taxation system to see what changes might be made to stimulate business development and enhance confidence. In this regard, I would direct the members' attention to budget paper B, which discusses the appropriate fiscal policy for today's economy and looks at the changing role of fiscal policy over the next decade.

At this stage, I don't believe any kind of across-the-board tax cut would be justified, but I do believe that some taxes bear particularly heavily on small businesses—and generally hurt the climate of confidence in the province.

Mr. Sargent: This is the year you were going to balance the budget.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, no; the member wasn't listening.

Ms. Gigantes: Next year, Eddie.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'd like to outline additional incentives to create jobs and improve our economic performance. In 1969, the honourable Charles MacNaughton, then Treasurer, observed that the introduction of capital gains tax would gradually eliminate the need for succession duties and gift taxes in Ontario. As revenues from capital gains increased, Ontario would be able to phase out succession duties and so avoid what many consider to be double taxation.

At the time, the province was prepared to vacate the succession duty field in return for a share of the federal estate tax. The federal government, however, unilaterally abandoned the estate taxation in 1971 when it introduced the capital gains tax. The province, therefore, continued to levy succession duties and gift taxes, although its long-run objective was to get rid of these taxes. Over the past seven years we've progressively reduced the burden of succession duties. But meanwhile, our sister provinces have vacated the field one by one, leaving only Ontario and Quebec.

I am convinced that the continuation of this tax is hurting our economic performance and costing us jobs. Business people making investment decisions, particularly as to location, are bound to take into consideration the tax position of their estates in Ontario. Succession duties and gift taxes have been a source of great concern to farmers and small business owners in Ontario. In spite of the fact that less than three per cent of estates in Ontario are subject to tax there is a widespread opinion the successors of the average citizen will be subject to tax.

For estates which are taxable, complex and costly legal procedures are involved to keep businesses within families. As well, individuals often experience great difficulty in disposing of assets so that they may pay duties. I'm satisfied the present combination of other taxes provides government with an adequate return as wealth is accumulated. As of midnight tonight, there will be no succession duty or gift taxation in Ontario.

Interjection.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Gordon, last till midnight. Pardon me, the House leader has adjusted it to one minute after.

Later I will be introducing bills to repeal the Succession Duty Act and the Gift Tax Act effective with respect to deaths or gifts occurring after midnight, April 10, 1979. I should point out that the legislation will continue to apply to deaths occurring and gifts made up to midnight this day.

I estimate that the annual revenue loss from this change eventually will amount to some $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 a year; however, in this fiscal year, the revenue loss will be $28,000,000.

It is much more difficult to estimate the revenue gains and employment gains that will occur in Ontario due to the elimination of succession duties. However, I am satisfied that on balance Ontario will profit in many ways from this decision. Our citizens will have one less burdensome concern to deal with in planning their private lives.

In addition, I heard the lawyers were a bit slack this week, and it will make for a lot of rewriting of wills.

Provincial revenues are bound to increase as investors take advantage of this decision.

I would now like to turn to the mining industry. The importance of mining in Ontario is unquestioned. Almost 20 per cent of Ontario's dollar earnings from exports are from its mines. Many northern Ontario communities depend entirely upon the mining industry for their employment. I am disturbed that this province has not seen a major new mine brought into operation for some years. Last year the federal government and the provinces reviewed the current situation in the mining industry. This review showed that high marginal tax rates were considered to be one of the most important problems facing the industry.

The members will recall that several beneficial adjustments were made to the Ontario mining tax last year. Tonight I am proposing additional changes to improve further the investment climate for mining in Ontario. First, the top marginal mining tax rate will be reduced from 40 per cent to 30 per cent. Second, the basic exemption from mining tax will be increased from $100,000 to $250,000 of mining profits. This latter move will encourage the creation of more small mining companies and assist those already operating.

I am also proposing a modest reduction in the top processing allowance rates. This will bring them more closely into line with those offered elsewhere and will soften the impact of the rate reductions on our revenues. These measures affecting the Ontario mining industry will apply with respect to fiscal years of companies ending after April 10, 1979. Enabling legislation will be introduced tonight by my colleague the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld).

I would like to discuss the situation in the province's hospitality industry. This important industry provides employment for over 400,000 people, or about 10 per cent of Ontario's labour force. In 1978, tourist spending in the province exceeded $5,000,000,000, including $1,000,000,000 of sales to nonresidents.

Mr. Warner: It would be nice if you would be a tourist.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In this job there is no time.

In the last two years, the government has undertaken to stimulate this industry through the temporary removal of the sales tax on transient accommodation, and other measures. This positive support has helped produce a momentum in the industry that I believe should be sustained. Accordingly, I propose the following:

First, the sales tax on kitchen machinery and equipment used in restaurants serving the public will be temporarily withdrawn as of midnight tonight. This will provide restaurants with the same kind of exemptions currently available to manufacturers.

Second, purchases of furniture and furnishings for use in the hospitality industry will also be temporarily exempt from the retail sales tax.

These two exemptions will be available until March 31, 1981, and will provide the hospitality industry with an incentive to upgrade and expand its facilities.

Third, the temporary sales tax exemption for transient accommodation that was originally scheduled to expire December 31, 1979, will be extended to March 31, 1981.

The combined additional cost of these measures to stimulate tourism will be $13,000,000 in this fiscal year and $45,000,000 on an annual basis.

One of the best incentives for economic development that any government can provide is to manage its spending and its affairs efficiently, and be seen to do so. This province has led the way in Canada in containing public sector spending. A great deal of the credit for this must go to my predecessor, Darcy McKeough.

In the fiscal year just ended, we have held spending below the original estimates for the third year in a row. This year, the estimates provide for an increase in our ongoing expenditure base of only six per cent. When we add the employment development fund supplementary estimates, our total growth rate will be 7.4 per cent. This is still well below the projected growth rate of the economy.

I want to make it abundantly clear what our expenditure control policy is all about. We are not trimming the growth of government spending because we cannot find the money to pay for high rates of growth. Ontario's credit is sound and its economy is strong.

Mr. Swart: There are 319,000 people out of work.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Rather, we believe that the same high quality of our programs can be maintained without excessive cost escalation. We do this by demanding more efficiency, and we are getting it.

Mr. Gregory: You would not know the meaning of that over there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The government will continue to allocate most of its resources to areas of high social priority, including health, education and social service institutions. The existing high quality of Ontario's health services is being upgraded with the extension of the home care program for the chronically ill to additional centres in the province. The budget of the Ministry of Community and Social Services has been increased by 6.9 per cent to provide greater emphasis on support services to the elderly and the handicapped. To enhance the participation of the physically handicapped in community activities, the five pilot projects providing special transit services will be made permanent. Additional funding has been made available to extend this program to other municipalities in Ontario.

Ms. Gigantes: What about all those people with estates?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I thought marriage would silence you.

Mr. Foulds: Why?

Mr. Breaugh: I have never seen a plaid sexist pig before.

Ms. Gigantes: Explain that to my husband.

Mr. Martel: The jolly miller.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In case that last remark be misinterpreted, I quickly explain to my wife I did not mean it.

In addition to the measures I have just discussed, I would now like to outline details of another important new program to stimulate the development of our economy. This is the employment development fund announced in the speech from the throne.

The fund will be managed by a committee of ministers called the employment development board, which I shall chair. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) will be the vice-chairman, and his ministry will carry out the administrative functions of the fund. The Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) will also be on the board. The major function of the board will be to co-ordinate the government's policies as they relate to providing direct economic development incentives to the private sector. The board will also participate in the development of, and provide funding for, the new job training program to which I referred earlier.

The amount of the fund has been set at $200,000,000 for 1979-80. I stress that the proceeds from the sale of our shares of Syncrude and of Ontario Mortgage Corporation mortgages, as well as additional revenues the province will raise from the corporate sector, are more than adequate to finance the employment development fund this year. This means that ordinary taxpayers' dollars are not being diverted away from the normal programs of this government.

To maximize the economic benefit to Ontario of the employment development fund, the board will encourage projects that make a long-term contribution to employment, foster the development of needed job skills, have the potential for significant export development or import replacement, involve the development of new products and processes through Canadian-based innovation and stimulate key industries and regional development.

There are some people who have questioned why we should be giving financial incentives to industry, particularly large and successful firms. Quite frankly, I was one of them. Nevertheless, I have concluded we must follow this course of action. Many jurisdictions are aggressively competing for new investment. This is a challenge we cannot afford to ignore if we are determined that Ontario should have its fair share of new investment. The financial incentives for the automobile and pulp and paper industries will be provided from the employment development fund. Further details on the operation of the fund are provided in appendix C to this statement.

We must recognize that Ontario's pulp and paper industry is facing tough competition. At the same time, the industry is under pressure from this government to clean up its pollution. The facts are simple. If we are going to impose high environmental standards we must recognize the competitive and cyclical environment in which the industry operates. Therefore, it must receive special assistance.

Mr. Cassidy: They didn't even ask for it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I've talked to a lot of workers in towns like Iroquois Falls, workers who follow the party of socialist members opposite, and they think we're right.

Mr. Martel: You're wrong.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You're never going to get another vote in Iroquois Falls.

Mr. Foulds: I'll bet you a dollar.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, who in this assembly prefers the alternatives of continued damage to our environment, or perhaps mill closures and whole towns out of work? Such alternatives simply are not acceptable to this government.

I would now like to turn to the area of small business development. Let me state I am a strong supporter of two principles. First, I believe the future success of our society is dependent upon the maintenance of a very strong commitment to free enterprise. Second, I believe the bedrock strength of free enterprise lies in private equity investment. Individuals should be encouraged to take risks through the ownership of equity, and hopefully most of them will turn a profit. I make no bones about this, and I say woe betide those who think we can prosper in the future yet give up on those principles.

Mr. Cassidy: Like preaching to the converted.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Ah, they're waking up on the right-hand benches on the left-hand side.

Mr. Eaton: You confused them, Frank.

Mr. Breough: If you were only a foot taller, Frank, you could get away with this garbage.

Mr. Cassidy: There is no left-hand side of those benches; none left.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Members will recall the government introduced the Venture Investment Corporations Registration Act in 1977 to encourage corporations to increase the supply of venture capital and managerial advice to small business. To be candid, this program has not worked. There appear to be a number of reasons for this. First, the federal government chose not to support the initiative, thereby reducing the tax incentives for investors; second, the incentive excluded individuals; third, some of the provisions in the legislation may have been too restrictive.

I believe it is vitally important to make sure there is a stream of equity capital available to new enterprises. Ideally, the lure of profit in return for risk capital should be enough to attract investors. People today, however, receive such generous tax treatment under the personal income tax for much safer investments, that they are reluctant to invest in new ventures. I believe we must do something about this.

Accordingly, I am proposing to introduce legislation this evening to encourage the development of new ventures in Ontario and to make it more attractive for more people to become directly involved in financing small business and building our economic future. Specifically, I am advancing the following program:

A Small Business Development Corporations Act will replace the existing venture investment corporations legislation. Individuals and corporations investing in small business development corporations, called SBDCs, will receive a share credit from the province equal to 30 per cent of their equity investment. The SBDCs will be empowered to invest in a broad range of new and expanding small business enterprises. This means if an individual purchased $1,000 worth of equity in an SBDC, the province would refund, directly, $300 to the private investor.

Mr. Sargent: In the meantime you won't loan them five cents.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Eddie, don't judge us all by your own loan applications.

Mr. Sargent: How did you know?

Hon. F. S. Miller: There's very little we don't know. I had your SIN number.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That should be numbers.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Honestly, I timed this earlier and it's not going to be as fast as I thought it would.

It is not possible to estimate with any precision the cost of this program; however, as the year progresses, I will set an upper limit to costs. Further details of the small business development corporations programs are included in appendix B to this statement.

I would like to propose a further measure to assist small business. Perhaps the tax that creates the most problems for small businesses in Ontario is the capital tax. While rates are not high, this tax poses complex paperwork problems for many firms.

Recognizing this problem and the nuisance of filling out a capital tax return, a reduced flat tax for small corporations was introduced in 1977. Tonight I am proposing to extend this benefit. The flat tax for corporations with taxable capital in excess of $50,000 and up to $100,000 will be reduced from $100 to $50. For corporations with taxable capital in excess of $100,000 and up to $200,000, a flat rate of $100 will apply instead of the regular rate. Also, in order to phase small corporations into the regular rate smoothly, I will introduce a formula to apply to taxable capital in excess of $200,000 and up to $300,000.

I am proposing one additional measure to lighten the burden of this tax. Real hardship exists for some small businesses in a year in which they have lost money, yet they still must pay the full tax on their capital. In recognition of this I am introducing, in lieu of the regular rate, a flat tax of $100, which will apply to corporations with taxable capital of up to $1,000,000 that have experienced a negative cash flow during the year.

I estimate these capital tax changes will reduce revenues by $20,000,000 in a full fiscal year, but they will ease and simplify the capital tax for some 58,000 small businesses in Ontario. Large corporations will continue to pay tax at the regular rates.

I would like to review briefly the area of provincial-local finance. Later this week, my colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), will be tabling a document entitled Ontario Assistance to Local Governments. This publication provides an overview of total transfers to the local sector and the details of the province's unconditional grants in 1979.

There has been some criticism of the government's announcement that total provincial transfers to the local sector would be increased by five per cent in 1979-80. This increase was directly in line with the target growth rate the government set for the total of its own regular ministry programs.

Mr. Speaker, politicians at every level of government worry about the amount of taxes they must collect, and so they should. Predictably, most politicians would rather see any level of government but their own raise taxes. Taxpayers, however, do not see it that way. They are concerned with the total amount of taxes they must pay. The obligation, therefore, rests with each level of government to contain the tax burden. We have to do this by controlling spending as much as possible.

To the extent that tax increases are necessary, politicians at every level of government have to take the responsibility for raising them. We have not asked any more of local governments and their agencies than we have asked for the last four years of our own ministries. If there still is a need to increase local revenues, then I'm sure the councils and local school boards will accept that responsibility, just as I must do.

I am pleased to note that local governments have followed the province's lead by achieving steadily decelerating growth rates in their spending. I estimate that total local spending in 1978 rose by only 8.2 per cent, compared to a growth rate of 20 per cent in 1975. In 1979, it appears likely the local sector will increase its spending by around seven per cent. I find this progress in restraint at the local level most encouraging.

This restraint, combined with realistic increases in provincial assistance, is reflected in local taxation developments. On average during 1978, residential property taxes per household rose only about five per cent and remained at about 2.6 per cent of average household income. In 1979, we expect increases in per household property taxes to average around seven per cent.

I would remind the members that the province's tax credits continue to modify considerably the impact of property taxes, particularly for low-income families and pensioners. This year some $375,000,000 in property tax and rent relief will be provided through this program.

Mr. Speaker, the financing of health care in Ontario has been a contentious issue in this assembly, and in this context—

Mr. McClellan: Sock it to them, Frank.

Mr. M. Davidson: Hit the working poor again.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —I think it is useful to draw to your attention the magnitude of our existing health budget. This year the health budget will increase by $213,000,000 to a total of $4,200,000,000, or on average $488 for every man, woman and child in Ontario.

Some members of this House participated in the review of health-care financing conducted last year by the select committee on health-care costs. In spite of its best efforts, the committee could not arrive at a consensus on the best way to pay for our health system.

The government has considered the committee's report and continues to study the issues. In so doing, we are aware of a number of important principles. We must continue to provide first rate health care on a universal basis, as we are now doing; the health-care system has to be adequately financed, and we must continue to control costs, despite the public musings of the spendthrifts in Ottawa.

With these principles in mind, the government continues to believe the OHIP premiums should be maintained. In my view, a visible financing link between individuals and their health-care system is useful. In an area of government expenditure as massive as health care, it is important that people contribute some portion of costs through a public insurance system.

Of equal importance, I do not believe our economy should be subjected to the massive disturbance that would be caused by a shift away from health-care premiums. I would remind the members that about 70 per cent of health costs are already financed out of general revenues. An analysis of the question of OHIP financing is included in budget paper D.

Mr. Speaker, we have made considerable progress in controlling the growth of health-care spending. We have done so without reducing the quality of services provided. However, costs continue to escalate; therefore, I propose to increase premiums by $1 per month for single people and $2 per month for families, effective for the benefit month of October. This modest increase of 5.3 per cent will be less than the growth of the cost in insured services, which are projected to increase by 5.5 per cent. I need not remind the members that elderly people in Ontario and those who receive social assistance do not pay premiums and will not be affected by this change. I estimate this measure will raise $40,000,000 in this fiscal year.

Turning to the question of providing assistance to lower income people, we have studied the features of a possible new health tax credit for Ontario citizens. A credit might better ensure that all who are entitled to premium assistance actually get it. Budget paper D lays out a possible design for a health tax credit. The government will be interested in the views of the members and of the public on the ideas outlined in this paper. In the meantime, lower income people remain eligible for assistance under the existing program operated by the Ministry of Health.

I now come to the most difficult part of the budget for any Treasurer, particularly a new one. I am going to talk about tax increases.

When I examined our tax structure, I was concerned not only with improving economic incentives but also with the overall level of revenue coming to the province; for while we have pared down the growth of spending our revenue growth rate has also been declining, therefore we still have a deficit level in Ontario, which in my view should be reduced. For those interested, I would direct their attention to budget paper C which analyses Ontario's revenue and expenditure performance over the past several years.

I will now propose a number of tax increases to restore a more appropriate balance between provincial revenue and spending. I shall begin with the area of corporate taxation.

I have outlined tax reductions for some businesses and given the House the details of the new employment development fund. While such actions unquestionably are needed, we must recognize that corporate profits, as a whole, have been growing at a healthy rate. It's only reasonable to expect the corporate sector to contribute a fair share of both the cost of incentive programs and the tax revenues required to improve the overall financial position of the province. At the same time, our industrial policy places a high priority on the need to upgrade manufacturing and to support small business.

I propose, therefore, to maintain the low 10 per cent corporate income tax rate on small businesses, and the 13 per cent rate on manufacturing and processing income as well as on income from farming, fishing, mining and logging. Effective midnight tonight, there will be a 14 per cent rate for all other corporate income. I anticipate additional revenue from this measure of some $36,000,000.

In addition, I propose to increase the capital tax rate on banks from three fifths to four fifths of one per cent effective midnight this date. This measure will increase our revenues by $5,000,000. The capital tax rate for loan and trust companies will remain unchanged.

Mr. Laughren: You really clobbered them, Frank.

Mr. Foulds: How much did you gouge out of hospital premiums? It was $40,000,000, and $5,000,000 from the banks.

Mr. S. Smith: You are sure they won't close their doors on that one, Frank?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I withdrew my $12.30 just in case.

Returning to the retail sales tax, I propose to expand the base of this tax by including all services relating to telecommunications. This will take effect at midnight tonight. Currently, only telephone and telegraph communications services are taxable. The major new areas affected by this change will be Telex and teletype communications. Cable television will be affected also. On average, cable TV subscribers will pay an additional 50 cents per month. This measure will augment provincial revenues by $30,000,000 this fiscal year.

The gasoline tax and motor vehicle fuel tax rates have not been changed since 1972. Fuel taxes are not applied on an ad valorem basis and, therefore, revenues have grown slowly. In the meantime, the cost of building and maintaining our highways has continued to escalate. Accordingly, I propose to raise the tax on both gasoline and diesel fuel by four tenths of one cent per litre to 4.6 cents and 5.9 cents per litre respectively. Contrary to what many people believe, revenues from road users still fall below spending on highways, roads and related services.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you talk to the ayatollah from Alberta?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I also propose to increase the tax rate on aviation fuel from 0.66 cents to 1.32 cents per litre. This tax has not been changed since 1968. Since that time, the province has significantly increased its expenditures for building and upgrading airports, particularly in the north.

Mr. Wildman: You give with one hand and you take away with the other.

Hon. F. S. Miller: With the $11,000,000 the government is planning to spend this year, the province will have spent $27,000,000 on airports since 1976. Railway locomotives, unlike other commercial transportation vehicles, are at present exempt from the tax on diesel fuel. To improve equity among commercial carriers, I propose to impose a tax of 2.2 cents per litre on diesel fuel used in railway locomotives. I might mention that until now Newfoundland and Ontario were the only provinces which did not tax diesel fuel used in locomotives.

These gasoline and fuel tax changes will become effective midnight tonight and will add an additional $79,000,000 to provincial revenues.

I also propose to increase revenues from alcoholic beverages and tobacco.

Mr. J. Reed: The wages of sin.

Mr. Bradley: How about cigars?

Hon. Mr. Davis: And pipe tobacco.

Hon. F. S. Miller: With respect to alcoholic beverages, I am making mark-up and licence fee changes effective April 30 to increase revenue by $22,000,000 in 1979-80. The changes are as follows:

Mark-ups on domestic spirits will be increased by the equivalent of 20 cents per 25-ounce bottle. Ontario table wine mark-ups will be increased by the equivalent of 20 cents per 26-ounce bottle.

The licence fee on the production of beer for sale in Ontario will be increased by the equivalent of 10 cents per 24-bottle case. A licence fee on sales by Ontario wineries through their own stores will be reinstated tonight at 10 per cent. The mark-up will be reduced on lower alcohol strength Ontario wine by the equivalent of 15 cents a bottle and the mark-up on Ontario brandy will also be reduced.

Mr. Conway: You will have to stick to moonshine.

Mr. Breaugh: That's the first Baby Duck you ever had.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Finally, there will be no mark-up increases for imported spirits and imported wine or for other provinces' domestic wines.

Mr. Foulds: What happens to Kool-Aid?
Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's easy to see where you spend your money.

Mr. Eakins: The tourism industry comes last.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Eakins: We need help for the tourism industry.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In spite of these changes, Ontario continues to have the lowest beer prices in the country, as well as the lowest prices for domestic spirits in any province that has a sales tax. Ontario's prices are still the second lowest in Canada for imported scotch whisky before sales tax is added.

With respect to tobacco, the tax on a package of 20 cigarettes will be increased by two cents effective midnight this day. Also, the taxes on cut tobacco and cigars will be increased.

Mr. Breough: By how much?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Retailers will not be required to take inventory of existing tobacco stocks. This will lighten the load for retailers and allow cigarette products on hand to be sold at existing prices. These tobacco tax increases will yield some $22,000,000 in additional revenue.

I propose to change and increase the basic rate of land transfer tax to two fifths of one per cent on the first $45,000 of the value of a transaction, and to four fifths of one per cent on the remainder. This change, which will take effect midnight tonight, is the first adjustment on the basic land transfer tax in seven years. I anticipate additional revenues here of $20,000,000 this fiscal year; and as well I propose to provide a tax-free roll-over for transfer of land to family farms and small business corporations.

Many fees and licences are related to the cost of services and I believe that they should be reviewed regularly. This year a number of fees and other charges will be increased. In total, I estimate that revenues will increase by some $15,000,000 as a result of the changes; my colleagues, whose ministries are involved, will announce the details in due course.

Before concluding taxation matters, I would like to propose a number of other changes, changes that reduce taxes. First, I propose to raise the retail sales tax exemption—and this is for administrative reasons—for all candy, confection and soft drinks to 49 cents, effective midnight this day. This measure will provide a tax saving to consumers of $16,000,000 this fiscal year. What it will really do is assist a lot of—

Mr. Cassidy: Is your mother a dentist?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Judging by the size, the member must be edentulous. Is that the right word? I have a dentist behind me to check that.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Send him my card and I'll make sure he is.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Did the member hear that offer from the dentist behind me? He said if he sent him his card he would make sure he was edentulous.

Second, I am proposing that, with respect to admission fees, the ticket price exemption for theatres and so on will be increased from $3 to $3.50. The annual cost of this measure will be only about $1,000,000. Exemption from the 10 per cent tax will be available to all entertainment provided by organizations qualifying as charitable, non-profit or amateur athletic associations under the Income Tax Act, Canada.

Third, all purchases of aircraft and aircraft parts will be exempt from retail sales tax for all carriers licensed to provide commercial, public transportation and cargo service. This action will eliminate an administrative discrepancy between inter- and intraprovincial carriers and will assist Ontario airline operators. It will cost $4,000,000 this fiscal year.

Fourth, to encourage energy conservation, promote safety and help homemakers cope with the cost of living, the following changes will be introduced. These measures will also be effective midnight tonight.

Retail sales tax will be rebated on all materials purchased for incorporation into solar heating systems. The maximum rebate will be $700. This measure will ensure that people who build their own solar heating units receive the same tax benefit available to those who buy factory-built models.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Can we have a brief caucus? I understand members supported that one.

Mr. Cassidy: Is this what you mean by a sunshine budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Anyone who goes around with a cloud over his head like the honourable member wouldn't recognize sunshine if he saw it.

Household smoke alarms will be exempted from sales tax.

In response to requests from consumers, I propose to provide a full sales tax exemption for yard goods and clothing patterns purchased for household use. The cost of these retail sales tax reductions will be $6,000,000.

[9:00]

In concluding my discussion of tax changes let me inform the members that my colleague the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), will be introducing a bill later tonight which will maintain Ontario's personal income tax rate at 44 per cent of basic federal income tax for 1979. This rate remains the second lowest in Canada. The Minister of Revenue will also be introducing other legislation to implement tax changes announced tonight.

For the next five to 10 minutes I will speak in Canada's other official language.

Monsieur le Président, avant de résumer notre position financière pour le nouvel exercice qui s'annonce, je voudrais récapituler brièvement, dans l'autre langue officielle du Canada, les principaux éléments contenus dans ce budget. Permettez-moi également de mentionner que cette année encore, le texte complet du discours sur le budget et des documents budgétaires est disponible en français.

J'ai déclaré que nos principaux objectifs consistent à maintenir la haute qualité des services publics offerts en Ontario, à créer des emplois, à prendre les mesures requises pour encourager la croissance économique et le développement des petites entreprises, à continuer notre sage gestion des dépenses provinciales et à combattre l'inflation en réduisant notre déficit.

Je crois que nous arriverons à atteindre ces objectifs grâce aux nouvelles initiatives que j'ai proposées.

Grâce à son programme d'emploi pour les jeunes, le gouvernement pourra fournir plus de 70,000 emplois aux jeunes de l'Ontario. Nous consacrons également de plus en plus d'efforts, en vue d'améliorer la formation professionnelle, afin que notre population puisse se trouver de meilleurs emplois et que nos industries deviennent plus productives.

L'élimination des droits de succession et des taxes sur les dons, contribuera à améliorer le climat susceptible d'attirer des investissements qui entraînent la création d'emplois, dans la province. Cette mesure fera également disparaître une source d'inquiétudes réelles pour les fermiers et les propriétaires de petites entreprises.

Le Fonds pour la croissance de l'emploi veillera à ce que les investissements et la création d'emplois dans le secteur privé continuent de s'accroître à un rythme vigoureux. Grâce à ce fonds, il sera également possible de réduire les effets polluants dans l'industrie des pâtes et du papier.

Notre nouveau programme pour stimuler les placements dans le capital-actions des petites entreprises contribuera à l'essor des petites entreprises, en vue de créer plus d'emplois et de revitaliser les collectivités. Je propose également de réduire l'impôt sur le capital et d'en faciliter la perception pour 58,000 petites entreprises en Ontario.

An hon. member: You do better in French.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At least members opposite are quieter when I'm speaking French. En tous les deux langues, c'est magnifique—n'est-ce pas?

Mrs. Campbell: Quel dommage.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Quel dommage?

Mr. S. Smith: Your French is better than your budget.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Your colleague said that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: L'industrie hôtelière, qui assure des emplois à plus de 400,000 personnes en Ontario, bénéficiera d'un stimulant qui prendra la forme de trois exemptions provisoires de taxe sur les ventes.

L'industrie minière, si importante pour le nord de l'Ontario, bénéficiera des amendements que j'ai apportés à l'imposition des compagnies minières.

Je propose certaines exemptions de taxe sur les ventes et une remise de taxe pour aider les consommateurs, promouvoir la sécurité et la conservation de l'énergie, et aider les ménages à faire face au coût de la vie. Ces mesures s'appliqueront aux friandises, aux boissons gazeuses, aux éléments utilisés pour la construction de systèmes de chauffage solaire, aux détecteurs de fumée pour usage résidentiel et aux textiles vendus au mètre.

Dans le secteur des services médicaux, j'ai proposé une très modeste augmentation des primes du régime d'assurance-maladie, de $1 par mois pour la couverture individuelle et de $2 par mois pour la couverture familiale.

Le gouvernement a fermement gardé sous contrôle ses propres dépenses. Cette année le taux global d'accroissement de nos dépenses sera de 7.4 pour cent. Si l'on retranche du total les sommes allouées au Fonds spécial pour la croissance de l'emploi, le taux d'augmentation de nos dépenses se ramène à six pour cent. Ces taux sont de beaucoup inférieurs au taux de progression de 10.9 pour cent prévu pour l'ensemble de l'économie de l'Ontario.

Je considère important de réduire le déficit de la province, si nous voulons continuer de lutter avec succès contre l'inflation. Dans ce but, j'ai proposé un certain nombre d'augmentations des taxes et impôts. Au total, notre déficit sera réduit de $184 millions.

Les augmentations de taxes affecteront les corporations, les utilisateurs d'essence et de carburant diesel, les usagers des services de télécommunication, les personnes qui consomment de l'alcool et du tabac. Il y aura également une hausse de l'impôt sur le transfert des terrains et de certains droits et permis relevant des autorités provinciales.

Même si nous maintenons un strict contrôle de nos dépenses, nous avons quand même réussi à allouer des sommes additionnelles pour répondre aux priorités sociales d'importance majeure. Par exemple, nous avons prévu une augmentation spéciale du budget du ministère des Services sociaux et communautaires, afin d'offrir plus de services aux handicapés et aux personnes âgées.

Je suis persuadé que le caractère progressif et judicieux de ce budget contribuera à assurer une plus grande prospérité à tous nos citoyens.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to sum up our financial position.

Looking at the fiscal year just ended, interim figures show that our total spending was $14,500,000,000, an increase of 6.9 per cent, which was under the original target. I would like to commend my colleague, the Chairman of the Management Board (Mr. McCague), for the fine job he has done in managing our expenditures, and his predecessor.

As I said earlier, for the third year in a row, we have spent less than was originally budgeted. That is what good management is all about.

Ms. Gigantes: Who pays? Who pays?

An hon. member: If you estimate high, you'll do it every time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They always wake up when the news is good.

Our revenues in the 1978-79 fiscal year were under $13,200,000,000, with the result that net cash requirements amounted to $1,300,000,000. This represents a substantial reduction of $425,000,000 from the previous year. Details of this improvement in our financial position have been documented in the quarterly Ontario Finances.

At the beginning of this statement I indicated that one of my objectives was to further reduce the province's net cash requirements and establish a better balance between revenues and expenditures. The government's expenditure plan, which the members will be asked to approve, projects total spending, including the $200,000,000 we have allocated to the employment development fund, of $15,600,000,000 in 1979-80. The increase in ongoing spending, excluding the fund, is only six per cent.

The tax changes I have proposed tonight will increase our revenues by $181,000,000 and all of these new revenues will be applied to reduce the deficit. The resulting net cash requirements of $1,153,000,000 are well within the financing capacity provided by the province's non-public borrowing sources. In fact, we will have additional financing flexibility this year of over $400,000,000. I plan to use part of this flexibility to reduce outstanding treasury bills by $195,000,000. This will help alleviate upward pressure on interest rates and improve the availability of capital for the private sector.

As members know, the bulk of our non-public borrowing comes from internal pension funds and the Canada Pension Plan. The entire pension system, both public and private, has been a matter of concern in recent years. In 1977 the government established a Royal Commission on the Status of Pensions to examine the issues and make recommendations for improvement. Later this year the government expects to receive the report from the very able chairman of the commission, Miss Donna Haley, Q.C.

Mr. Martel: I thought you were going to balance it by next year.

An hon. member: Here it comes, Old Man Ontario.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Look, I am becoming theatrical so sit down.

May I just add this concluding word? When I became Treasurer I wanted to set for myself a high standard. I could think of nothing better than to follow the creed of one of the finest Treasurers this province has ever known, the honourable Leslie Miscampbell Frost. A new portrait of Mr. Frost hangs in the lobby of the building which also bears his name and beside it is a plaque quoting from his first budget speech.

He said: "For the fine old province of Ontario there will be a great future. We are building not only for these times; we are planning for a greater population, for industrial expansion, for prosperous farms, for happy, healthy people. We are laying the sure foundations for a greater and stronger Ontario."

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the proposals I have put before you will meet the needs of our people and help build for the future. This budget will create more jobs for Ontario's young people. It will restrain inflation by keeping the cost of government in check—something you guys could never do; it will reduce the deficit; it will provide new incentives for job-creating investments; it will help our farms, small businesses and manufacturing industries to grow and prosper; it will eliminate the costs, delays and fears of inheritance taxes; it will improve the investment climate in Ontario; it will promote economic development and employment in the north; and it will ensure a dynamic and prosperous future for all of the people of Ontario. [9:15]

On motion by Mr. Peterson, the debate was adjourned.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

MEMBER'S BOOK OF POETRY

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, last week in this House the Premier of this province (Mr. Davis)—I wish he were here—in open assembly demanded a copy of a certain book. I think it's called "the psychotic personality of our time." Of recent date I have received a letter, and I'm sure it's no breach of confidence if I might just read one paragraph.

This letter which is addressed to the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) says: "The author very kindly in his usual non-business-like approach"—I suppose he's talking about me—"to things gave me an autographed copy. However, I am enclosing $10 since I would be more than delighted to receive another autographed copy."

I want the Premier of this province to know that poets, in my opinion, are probably the most business-like people. I would rather trust my business affairs to the poets than to a lot of lawyers I know, as with the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), and, even more so, than to a good many government people I have come across.

I took great personal offence to that particular remark. I have autographed another copy for the Premier and I'd be delighted to receive the money. Would a page take it and put it on the Premier's desk please?

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that there is a point of privilege there. There's obviously a very strong point of view.

I am pleased to inform all members of the House that we have a distinguished visitor in the Speaker's gallery today. In keeping with the order of business we've just completed, I want to assure him that I didn't consider that a point of privilege. We were discussing that at lunch today.

Mr. Lawlor: Neither did I.

Mr. Speaker: Our distinguished visitor is the Honourable Ripton McPherson, Speaker of the House of Representatives in Jamaica. I know that members will join me in welcoming him to our assembly.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT PITS AND QUARRIES

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that the government has received representations concerning imminent shortages of aggregate in the Niagara Escarpment area and has decided to initiate a comprehensive review process to consider new licences for pits and quarries on a site-by-site basis in the Niagara Escarpment restricted zone. The restrictions which were a freeze on new licences, were applied to the Niagara Escarpment area six years ago. Originally, the freeze was only intended for a three-year period because it was initially felt that the master plan for the escarpment could be completed and in place by the end of that time.

Mr. Cassidy: You cave in as soon as you are pushed. Another sellout of the escarpment.

Mr. Foulds: Name the places where the aggregate is in such short supply.

Mr. Swart: One more step backwards.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: However, the complexities of the issues in the Niagara Escarpment area have delayed the preparation of the proposed plan. It will not be ready for release until later this year.

Mr. Swart: After six years, you ought to be able to wait another six months.

Mr. S. Smith: That is one way to save the escarpment. Chop it up and put it into buildings.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Are you against buildings?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The subsequent steps in the process, including public review and discussion at hearings, are expected to take a considerable period more before the plan is finally adopted.

Mr. S. Smith: If you can't build it up, you are going to dig it out.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: In the meantime, the aggregate industry is experiencing difficulty in meeting immediate demands for their product in some areas of the escarpment.

Mr. Foulds: Table the information in the House.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Also some businesses fear they may be forced to close their operations because their licensed reserves are approaching depletion.

Mr. Cassidy: For every year you go forward, you go three years back.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The government decision to consider applications for pits and quarry licences in the escarpment area has been made after discussions with the various interests involved, including the industry and environmental groups. It is expected that most of the applications to be considered will be for extensions of sites currently being extracted.

The overall process to be followed will identify sites where additional supplies of aggregates are needed and will enable interested citizens and groups to have their concerns heard. The final decision on a licence will be made on the basis of specific circumstances affecting each site and after the following process:

To obtain a licence, an applicant would first have to satisfy the Niagara Escarpment Commission and the Minister of Housing, pursuant to the Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act, and then the requirements of the Minister of Natural Resources pursuant to the Pits and Quarries Act.

Mr. Foulds: That shouldn't be too hard.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: If objections are received at either of these points a hearing will be held before the appropriate bodies. In addition, cabinet must consider and decide whether the restriction should be lifted for each site in question.

Mr. Swart: Who will the hearing be before? The Minister of Housing?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The government agencies involved will do their licence processing within a six-month schedule, which is designed to give all parties an opportunity to be heard and, at the same time, not to delay or constrain acceptable aggregate supplies in the area more than is absolutely necessary.

WATER POLLUTION

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I dare to rise with a statement today, notwithstanding the Claire Hoy award, but I notice that I have company in the leader of the Liberal Party. Perhaps we can go down that road together in this instance. I am not sure.

Mr. S. Smith: He doesn't like you, he doesn't like me, and he does not like homosexuals.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think there are lots of us so named that we could choose our places wherever.

The major incentives in water management being taken by this government were described in the speech from the throne. I would now like to outline some of these incentives. Foremost, I believe, is our major commitment to identify and trace hazardous substances and to establish strict controls aimed at eliminating possible hazards from the trace contaminants which can build up in living tissue.

It is our policy to prohibit any new discharges of mercury, PCBs, Mirex or any similar new hazardous contaminants which are identified. This is one of the policies spelled out in our new handbook, "Water Management—Goals, Policies, Objectives and Implementation." May I say to the member for Lakeshore that it's readily available at the government bookstore without cost. I don't know whether he might consider doing the same for his own. I am not sure of that, but our books are available at the bookstore or from my ministry.

This new publication is a final revision and expansion of "Guidelines and Criteria for Water Quality and Management in Ontario," published in 1970.

Our policies and objectives, as they are set out in this document, have been brought up to date in terms of the newest scientific developments and the criteria established in the international Great Lakes water quality agreement.

Our water management goals are: to protect the quality of all waters for the sake of human and aquatic health and to restore quality to impaired waters; to manage our water quantity to ensure it is shared fairly by its users.

We achieve these goals by monitoring and strictly controlling the effects of proposed waste discharges to surface and ground waters—

Mr. Kerrio: And making the polluter pay, Harry.

Mr. J. Reed: Nineteen seventy revisited.

Hon. Mr. Parrott:—and stating clearly in my ministry's approvals to specific users our requirements for both the quality and the quantity of discharges.

To meet the challenge of sound water management, we have incorporated provincial water quality objectives in detail in our new publication. These objectives are based on a comprehensive study of all available information and on years of experience gained by my ministry and by other agencies and jurisdictions.

Other jurisdictions have incorporated inflexible standards in their water management procedures. We, in Ontario, have reviewed this approach, among others, and we are convinced that Ontario's traditional procedure of management is most effective in meeting our specific environmental needs.

Our water quality objectives are met by controlling the size of the discharges in relation to the size of the receiving waters and their ability to deal with these discharges. This approach assures adequate protection at all times and saves needless costs in some areas. Instead of assigning inflexible standards to the quality of the receiving water, we have chosen to use control programs and our approvals process to establish firm effluent limits at the point of the discharge.

In other words, individually determined effluent requirements are incorporated in control orders and approvals issued by this ministry and are, therefore, legally enforceable.

I would like to mention two achievements resulting from this approach: Every day, 200,000 pounds of suspended solids, 180,000 pounds of oxygen-consuming organic matter, and 40,000 pounds of phosphorus are removed from our municipal wastes. Secondly, our abatement program has served to reduce mercury levels in fish in Lake St. Clair steadily since the crisis of 1970, and we can now foresee levels below the guideline of 0.5 parts per million in average sized fish in most common species.

Our program is enabling us to prevent some serious problems before they occur. This is obviously a hard point to document, but let me give the member one example. We, in Ontario, were first to detect and identify Mirex from US sources in Lake Ontario fish. While the effects from our neighbour's discharges are still with us, we caught the problem in time to avoid any possible discharges into Ontario and in time to assist our neighbour in dealing with it.

Mr. Speaker, one of my major commitments has been and is to ensure that Ontario residents have continued access to a safe, secure water supply. This water quality program will help achieve that goal.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege regarding the credibility of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) in regard to my efforts last Friday to obtain copies of Ontario Hydro's internal significant event report.

Last Friday the Minister of Energy denied that these reports were classified secret and at any time anyone could go into Hydro and get a copy. I will read from Hansard what was said.

"I have knowledge that there is a series of happenings with dates on them that is of great concern to me as a citizen. If he has seen these reports, would the minister be so good as to supply the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) and both parties with copies of these reports as they come out. I know they are classified as secret, but what is more important at this point than that the members of the Legislature know what is going on in this very serious field?"

[2:15]

Hansard says:

"Hon. Mr. Davis: They are down in the Hydro library. Read them on the weekend.

"Hon. Mr. Auld: As I said, all the member has to do is walk down the street. They are in Hydro's reference library. They are not secret reports.

"Hon. Mr. Davis: Take them home.

"Hon. W. Newman: Why don't you do some reading for a change?"

Following this, I went to my office and called the minister's office and asked the exec for copies of the report. He said: "Yes, the minister says you can have them right away. I will send them right over."

I waited for a long time in my office. Nothing happened. I phoned back. They said, "There is a meeting arranged for you to go down to Hydro. You are supposed to meet this exec under the information board."

I did that. I waited there for a long time. Finally, the cloak and dagger started. For the next 45 minutes I met four other top execs who examined me and asked me questions. Finally, after 45 minutes, they took me to the top technocrat—

Interjection.

Mr. Sargent: —who wanted me to pinpoint a happening I wanted to see about. I said: "How do I know?" Finally, he produced a volume. He said, "Now, what do you want?" I said I wanted to look at it. He stood at my shoulder and watched what I was reading. I could not move around without him beside me. The net result was I could not have the book to take home, it had to remain there. It is very important; it is not for public consumption.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I say I am shocked the minister and the Premier would be party to a total coverup of this very dangerous thing. I know things are being experienced in nuclear energy. We should not laugh this matter off. I am very concerned about the credibility of the minister at this point.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister is not here and I am sure he will have something to say about the matter. We will defer any decision as to whether or not it is a bona fide point of privilege until we have heard the other side of the story.

SALES TAX ON TELECOMMUNICATIONS SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, since the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) presented his budget on Tuesday night, my ministry has been engaged in implementing the proposed tax changes. About 750,000 copies of nine special bulletins have been distributed to taxpayers—

Mr. Kerrio: We thought you were going to apologize.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —including the taxpayers of the members over there.

Mr. Kerrio: We thought you were going to apologize.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Members will be interested to know my officials are working with taxpayers and industry associations to ensure the tax changes are implemented smoothly. However, there is one area of difficulty which I would like to clarify at this time.

Mr. S. Smith: Get Roy to represent you.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: This concerns the extension of sales tax on telecommunications services.

An hon. member: Why don't you withdraw it?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would like to take this opportunity to describe the principles by which the tax will be administered.

First, I shall emphasize the policy is essentially an expansion of existing taxation of telephone and telegraph services to include a broader range of telecommunications services provided by substantially the same suppliers.

Second, the move parallels taxation in other Canadian provinces and is not new to major suppliers of such services across Canada. It is important to understand this involves only a tax on charges for the use of transmission facilities. It is not a tax on services provided by news wires, stock market quotation businesses or similar organizations.

What this means is that businesses will be required to pay tax on payments for the purchase of telecommunications services. They will not be required to collect tax on the sale of their services to customers.

Further, people who do not provide telecommunications services to others will not pay this tax on such services they provide for themselves. They will, however, pay the normal sales tax when they originally purchase the equipment.

Finally, what we are proposing is well understood by the telecommunications industry itself, both because of its familiarity with existing Ontario practices and because of similar taxation in other provinces. We have already met with a number of industry representatives and have scheduled further meetings to inform the industry their billings of telecommunications services will be taxed in the same way as telephone and telegraph charges are already taxed. We also want to reassure the industry my ministry will be taking appropriate measures to ensure Ontario's administrative provisions will avoid inequitable tax treatment for telecommunications services which cross provincial boundaries.

Let me now give some examples of how the new tax policy will be applied:

News wire services: Tax does not apply on charges made to customers of a wire service operator. The expanded tax only applies on charges made to the wire service operator by a telecommunications carrier.

Radio and television broadcasts to the public free of charge are not subject to the tax. Tax, however, will apply to telecommunications services purchased from carriers to distribute programs. For example, microwave or line transmission of programs from one station to another will be taxed if this service is purchased from a telecommunications company. However, if the radio or television network owns its own facilities for transmission between stations, no tax will apply to its own use of these transmission facilities.

Mobile telephone services: Charges for mobile telephone services are currently taxable. However, the tax will now cover charges for private mobile telephone and paging services which are sold commercially.

Cable television service, which is the transmission of signals, is clearly included as a taxable telecommunications service, and charges to customers by cable companies will be taxed.

Other private communications networks which do not involve the purchase of telecommunications services and which are not intended for sale to others will not be subject to tax. Examples of these nontaxable, in-house services are taxi dispatching systems owned and operated by the taxi operator, and in-plant voice and data communications services owned and operated by businesses and intended only for their own use.

I trust this explanation clarifies for the benefit of members in the House our approach to the taxation of telecommunications services, which we are developing with the co-operation of the industry.

The Treasurer's budget and bulletins issued by my ministry provide telephone numbers of staff who can be contacted for further information or assistance on any of the new tax changes.

PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, first I am tabling today a booklet entitled 1979 Ontario Assistance to Local Governments, which will be in the members' boxes very shortly. This booklet contains a general overview of 1978-80 provincial transfers, as well as details of the 1979 unconditional grants program.

Mr. McClellan: Is this stuff all packaged?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Figures shown in this booklet are projections of provincial grants for municipalities and agencies based upon the most recent information available to us.

Overall transfer payments to municipalities and agencies in the fiscal year 1979-80, excluding payments into teachers' superannuation and the home care program, are expected to total $3,872,000,000; this represents a 5.4 per cent increase over the 1978-79 figure.

The booklet shows the provincial funds allocated for various types also of conditional grant programs for this coming year.

Mr. Cassidy: Now you're two per cent under the promise.

VISITORS

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would also, in another vein, like to draw the attention of the House to the fact—since we won't be sitting tomorrow, we'll do this today—that tomorrow is baseball day in Toronto.

Mr. Bradley: Not beer day.

Mr. Breithaupt: Not beer day.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Toronto Blue Jays will be playing their home opening game; and this will mark the beginning of the third season of Toronto as a city in the American League.

We all know the Blue Jays had a very good spring training season. Part of that spring training season occurs because of the very fine area where the Toronto Blue Jays train: that is in Dunedin, Florida, a place known to many citizens of Ontario—

Mr. S. Smith: Do you have a condominium down there?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, I don't have a condominium there, but it is a very fine place, and if any of the members wish to visit Dunedin you will find the hospitality is exceedingly warm and they will be made welcome, just as the Toronto Blue Jays have been made welcome.

Mr. Warner: They have beer in their ball park.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Toronto Blue Jays enjoy very fine facilities in Dunedin, because the mayor and the citizens of that community—

An hon. member: Do you have a real estate licence down there, Tom?

Mr. Samis: See Canada first.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you planning an inter-governmental tour?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would think the House would like to show a little more decorum in this particular matter—

Mr. Cassidy: Are you criticizing the Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Wells: —because we have with us today in the House the mayor, the Honourable Cecil Englebert and several of the councillors from the city of Dunedin, Florida, who are here to attend the ball game tomorrow. I would like to welcome them.

Mr. Nixon: Bring your own beer.

Mr. Roy: Are you going to buy them the beer tomorrow?

Mr. Kerrio: I hope they bring their own beer.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I made my remarks in the way I did so that the mayor and his fellow councillors would see that the Ontario Legislature is just like the Dunedin city council meetings.

Mr. Samis: Did you tell them about the dry ball park, though?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you and the House are happy they're here and we're all happy that the Blue Jays are starting their third season tomorrow. We hope they have a very good season.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's bad luck for me to have to give a statement after that one.

Mr. Breaugh: Is this beer in the ball park, Larry? Have you finally come around?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would have gone before him if I had known it was on baseball.

Mr. Bradley: It must be private members' afternoon with all these statements.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Listen, I was in Chicago yesterday as part of our tourism campaign and I was supposed to throw out the first ball at the Blue Jays-White Sox game, but I was rained out, of course. It's not the first time that's happened to me. Don't you wish I were rained out here?

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the ministry we can only allocate a maximum of 30 minutes to ministerial statements; so if the minister doesn't get on with his he may be rained out here, too.

Mr. Cassidy: Dispense.

Mr. Grande: Thirty seconds.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Don't interrupt me, please.

TOURISM

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, somewhat apropos the last statement, I wanted to inform the House that our "We treat you royally" campaign has made the Stanley Cup playoffs. Tonight at centre ice at Maple Leaf Gardens the ministry's "We treat you royally" symbol will be seen by millions of people throughout Canada and the United States. As you know, the symbol is fast becoming a recognized sign of hospitality in Ontario.

I would take this opportunity to remind the House that it serves as a constant reminder to all of us to welcome visitors to our province, even including hockey players from the Atlanta Flames.

We expect fewer penalties on the ice this evening.

Mr. Bradley: I hope the Attorney General will be there tonight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We would seriously like to thank the Maple Leaf Gardens and its president, Harold Ballard, for their role in promoting the Ontario tourism industry and we would also take this opportunity to congratulate him for his recent $135,000 donation to the Ontario Community Centre for the Deaf.

Mr. Wildman: I thought you were going to congratulate him on his release.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We know you'll be watching the "We treat you royally" sign at centre ice this evening.

GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding earlier events, perhaps I might ask the consent of the Legislature at this time to make a five-minute statement on the GATT negotiations. I would first ask the consent of the House because we may go beyond the 30 minutes by a few moments; and, secondly, because the announcement came out at 11 o'clock this morning, we have not had an opportunity to distribute copies to the opposition, as is ordinarily the case. Might that be okay?

Mr. Laughren: I think the Treasurer should make this statement. The Treasurer should do it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to report to this assembly at this time that the Tokyo round of the GATT negotiations, which began in 1973, is now substantially concluded.

We were informed this morning that Ambassador Grey is signing a series of agreements on non-tariff barriers and other matters and that he will be submitting these texts to the Canadian government for consideration. With the exception of some minor last minute changes, these texts are virtually complete and the participating governments are expected to formally sign them later in the year. [2:30]

We cannot, at this point, comment on the details of the trade pact because these have still not yet been made available to us. However, we can outline the main thrust of the emerging facts.

On tariffs, Canada's industrial exports to the United States, the European community and Japan will be stimulated by an average reduction on tariffs of nearly 40 per cent. Significantly, more than 90 per cent of Canada's current exports to the United States, our major market, will face tariffs of only five per cent or less after the tariff cuts have been fully implemented, and close to 80 per cent of all our exports will enter duty-free. Market access to the United States, therefore, will be particularly beneficial to Ontario companies.

Mr. S. Smith: They're mostly natural resources.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On Canada's side, the average tariff rate on industrial imports will fall from, roughly, 15 per cent to nine per cent, with high rates remaining in place for a number of products. Most industrial raw materials will continue to enter tariff-free.

As a result of the reductions in tariffs domestically, it is expected that Canada's industries will be facing greater competition from abroad. However, reduced cost, coupled with improved opportunities abroad, should provide a needed stimulus for Canadian industry to adjust to these new competitive realities.

Appropriate adjustment systems programs, as we have pointed out earlier, will be critical to industry's efforts to adapt. We must be aware, of course, of some of the benefits to Canadian consumers of being able to purchase some goods, including some of those domestically manufactured, at lower prices.

On non-tariff barriers, agreements have been reached on many areas singled out by Ontario as being of vital importance to the province in order for us to achieve the required degree of reciprocity under the new gas deal. Although we don't have all the details of the agreements, we understand that the United States has agreed to accept the principle that injury must be found before countervailing duties can be applied.

In addition, the anti-dumping code will be revised and this, combined with the likely new safeguard arrangements, will improve Canada's capacity to deal quickly with unfair trade practices and injurious imports.

In the government procurement field—and I would like to emphasize that Ontario is highly competitive in the public goods market—our export ability in the past has been constrained by the practices of foreign governments. The MTN agreement will result in a marked improvement, at least as to the transparency of various practices of these other governments. The upgrading of international surveillance and dispute settlement provides the assurance that these essential gains in liberalizing non-tariff barriers will not be eroded.

Canada has agreed to comply with the new code on customs valuation. This will establish rules for determining the value of imported goods for customs purposes, but only on the understanding that we may offset any significant loss of protection that may result.

This possible loss of protection was a concern to Ontario. But Canada's conditional acceptance of the code seems to indicate that the concessions attained, with our compliance, will reduce the potential hardship.

Because we have very limited information at this point on the details of tariff and non-tariff arrangements, it would be premature to assess their impact on Ontario's industry. It would not be premature, however, to say that Canada's negotiations have broadened the opportunities for Canadian exports. On the other hand, Canadian business will inevitably be faced with much greater competition here, although I am gratified that import-sensitive sectors—particularly textiles, clothing and footwear—receive minimal tariff cuts only.

Mr. Laughren: We had no barriers on manufactured goods.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We would, however, once again urge the federal government to ensure that appropriate transitional assistance be available. Ontario has already submitted its views that Canada should implement a comprehensive federal adjustment assistance program to guarantee that this country, post the Tokyo round, is a strong, internationally competitive nation.

Of course, as details unfold over the next months, we will have more complete statements to make to the House. We will forward a copy of this statement, as soon as possible, to the opposition. I thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, could I rise on a point of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: Your point of privilege?

LIGHTING IN CHAMBER

Mr. Roy: In view of the statement that was made earlier, it's a good day to raise this.

In our attempt to film a program on provincial affairs here in the chamber this morning, it came to our attention that the lighting in this chamber is unfairly distributed; that the lighting on that side of the House is 64 foot-candles while it's only 32 foot-candles on this side of the House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's the same ratio as the election.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's a fair comparison.

An hon. member: They still don't look very bright.

An hon. member: You're still awfully dim.

Mr. McClellan: You are so dim over there.

Mr. Roy: Apart from the fact that the crew over there requires more light to shine, Mr. Speaker, could you explain why there is this unfair distribution of light in the chamber?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's the quality.

Mr. B. Newman: Discrimination.

Mr. Speaker: If you notice, the Ministry of Government Services is conducting an experiment on this chandelier—

Mr. Breithaupt: Has the minister been climbing up there too?

Mr. Speaker:—on the light levels to facilitate the operation of television cameras. It's strictly an experimental thing.

Mr. Roy: I see.

Mrs. Campbell: It just might be partisan.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Minister of Government Services or his staff will indicate that while perhaps it's not the ideal setup and should be more evenly distributed, it's strictly on an experimental basis.

Hon. Mr. Walker: We are just more illuminated over here.

Mr. J. Reed: We are just treated like mushrooms.

Mr. Foulds: May I move my seat, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Wildman: The minister saw the light.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HEALTH CARE FINANCING

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to address a question to the provincial Treasurer, Mr. Speaker. Can he explain how it is that while the increase in the budget of the Ministry of Health this year—about $213,000,000—would probably be about 75 per cent for insured health services—and, therefore, the increase for insured health services is about $160,000,000—the federal government calculates that, over and above the tax points which it gave up, its cash contribution to Ontario for insured health services has increased this year by $210,000,000? Could the Treasurer explain what he has done with the other $50,000,000 he has received for that purpose?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the federal government, to which the member was obviously talking today—

Mr. Breithaupt: Somebody has to talk to them.

Mrs. Campbell: You don't.

Mr. S. Smith: Where did you get the GATT stuff from?

Hon. F. S. Miller: —is quite quick to use figures to suit itself. What it tends to forget is that it withdrew the revenue guarantees at the same time as it brought in that fund and removed $455,000,000 from Ontario's revenue.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the Treasurer prepared to accept that when they withdrew the guarantee and, in point of fact, gave up tax room to Ontario, the value of the tax points they gave up plus the cash contribution as earmarked for insured health services, together comes to about $280,000,000? In fact, the whole health budget only went up this year by $213,000,000.

Given the fact that the extra money was there and earmarked from the federal government—

Hon. F. S. Miller: It was not earmarked.

Mr. S. Smith: Well, not earmarked, but indicated for that particular purpose, although naturally Ontario has the right to divert it from that purpose if it wishes. The question is: Why did the government decide to divert that money from insured health services and then go ahead and raise Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums and cut services in those areas?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would love to read some of the Honourable Marc Lalonde's comments in advance of going to the established program funding—

Mr. Eakins: No, let's hear yours.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —where he made a whole bunch of threats to the provinces in the year 1975. The member may not remember those threats but I was Minister of Health at that time. They said the provinces had runaway health care costs and that if the provinces didn't step in and take some action to constrain the growth in health care costs, the federal government would unilaterally—and they gave notice as required—withdraw from the Health Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

Mr. Roy: Yes, you were irresponsible then.

Mr. Sweeney: What did you do with the money?

Hon. F. S. Miller: They said they would do a whole series of things. Then they said that of all the provinces only Ontario was intelligently handling its health care costs. Of course, I was minister.

Mr. Ruston: And you didn't do very well.

Mr. Breithaupt: We want to know what has happened since then. That's the problem.

Mr. Roy: We know about 1975. You tried to close the hospitals.

Mr. Eakins: Who was the minister then?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I point it out. The fact remains that they recognized what Ontario and Quebec had been telling them, that the cost-sharing program wasn't working because it was directing moneys right into high-cost services in place of the better use of the system.

We worked very hard for this. They have given us a formula which they have tried, again unilaterally, to withdraw from. All 10 provinces have said it was negotiated, put into a statute and agreed upon, and they are sticking to it. It comes to 50 per cent in round figures of the combined costs of post-secondary education and health care costs. That was roughly the original cost-sharing agreement.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, surely the Treasurer will admit that the amount of premium income has increased in the last three years by more than 24 per cent, while the amount going from the more progressive general revenue fund of the province has declined by almost 27 per cent.

How does the Treasurer explain why he completely ignored the unanimous recommendations of the select committee on health-care financing and costs which would have reduced the impact of Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums on about 500,000 low-income people in Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the second part is really part of the original question, unless I am wrong. I am quite willing to address it; I do not mean I am not. I just feel the health premium was not the issue in the original question.

The whole purpose of any government dealing with any other inferior level, such as the federal government was doing with the provinces, in moving out of cost-shared programs—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: What do you mean by “inferior”?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Only in the sense that we are inferior in the law.

The purpose was to give them inducements to accept their own priorities and do well.

Mr. Kerrio: It could be worse; you could be a PC in BC.

Laughter.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Somebody must have said something intelligent over there.

Ontario was far ahead of some of the other provinces, but we actually had a lower percentage cost-shared formula basis before we went to established program funding. I know my friend knows that too. I am simply saying that we have done the very things Mr. Lalonde said had to be done within the system. We in Ontario will continue to spend the money needed for high-quality health care. We have the resources; we need the assistance of the members opposite to help us get good value for our money.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that the former situation was one in which this government matched the federal contribution—it was a 50-50 deal, and we know what was wrong with that—can the Treasurer explain why it is now that this government is not only not matching the federal contribution, but also it is not even using the entire federal contribution for health purposes? Where is the rest of the money going, and why has he made that decision?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely and totally incorrect. The total transfer of federal money under the EFP amounts to half of the money we spent in Ontario for the programs. So obviously we are spending $1 of Ontario tax money as well as—

Mr. S. Smith: But the increase is $280,000,000; your increase is $213,000,000.

Hon. F. S. Miller: When my colleague transfers funds to the municipalities in Ontario on an unconditional basis, I am sure he feels they should be left to make their decisions, and that is why we support them.

The federal government has admitted that its estimations of future rates of growth of inflation et cetera were richer than it meant them to be. All the sound and fury one is hearing out of Ottawa these days, claiming we are not providing the services, is simply because last November all 10 provinces, of all political stripes, united to say: “A deal is a deal; you are stuck with it, and we are living with it until 1981.”

Mr. Roy: What the Treasurer is saying is that this government is not spending all the federal health money—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sweeney: They are not spending post-secondary money on post-secondary education either—$37,000,000.

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have an unrelated question for the Treasurer, if I might, on his Ontario Employment Development Fund, which I call Grantario or the Cheaper in Tennessee fund.

Can the Treasurer tell us whether it is his intention to bring in an act to this Legislature with regard to the criteria which will apply for these grants and loans, the reporting procedure of the people who will be operating this particular fund and the responsibilities of the committee of ministers which will be administering this $200,000,000 fund?

Will he bring an act of the Legislature forward so the matter can be regularized?

[2:45]

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding—and I stand to be corrected if the lawyers in either my ministry or the Ministry of Industry and Tourism tell me otherwise—that the statutory authority for the Employment Development Fund, in the main exists in existing statutes and there will be no need to bring a new one before you.

The attempt always to define in words and in regulation, I should think all the requirements and requests and ways to do things, is just the opposite of what you've been preaching steadily. This is a group of ministers who are able to judge—

Mr. Peterson: You don't believe in the rule of law, do you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I believe in the rule of law. In this House if I break the law, the law has every right to come after me or any other member of this House—

Mr. Roy: But if there's no law, you can't break it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —because the provincial auditor will tell the House in a second if any moneys are spent improperly. I can tell the member of the staffs of the ministries would be the first to recommend to a minister not to break a law.

Mr. Peterson: That's why you don't want any law.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You will be voting this money in my estimates—

Mr. Peterson: Don't threaten us.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would never threaten the member for London Centre.

In any case we understand that the present statutes and the process of estimates cover the requirements of the House and I will be delighted to share with this House the decisions that are made as they come along. But one of the advantages of winning in this business is that you get to make the decisions.

Mr. S. Smith: Since a number of places in Ontario felt when they sent their representatives here that they would have some say in some of these decisions, could we have the minister explain why he is unwilling to have the rules and regulations, the criteria, the subject of legislative debate and scrutiny rather than setting up a kind of slush fund to be administered by the private criteria of three ministers of the crown in any way they see fit, with no check upon them except down the road when the public accounts committee may have a chance to look at it some time later? Why not deal with this large fund in an intelligent and democratic manner by having an act before the Legislature outlining the way in which the money is to be used?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I believe I've answered the question.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can I ask the minister whether I am right in concluding from his answer that because he was elected to power and is part of the executive branch he feels he can spend money, with no guidelines, at his absolute discretion, and not be accountable to the public through this Legislature? Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Ruston: That's what he said. That's what he's saying.

Hon. F. S. Miller: My honourable friend is suffering from his normal disease of not understanding what I said.

Mr. Ashe: He is not here often enough.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Treasurer. In view of the fact there is no mention in his budget of the number of jobs to be created in government programs, except for summer jobs for students—and we've done a few calculations, I should tell the Treasurer—and on the experience at Ford, the Employment Development Fund will create at the most 7,600 direct jobs, does the Treasurer think this is an adequate target for our government job-creation program, given the fact there are 319,000 people unemployed in Ontario at this time?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I guess one of the differences between the member and me is that I look upon the positive side of life and he looks upon the negative.

Mr. Swart: Oh come on, you're not unemployed.

Mr. Laughren: I'm concerned about the unemployed.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm keenly aware of the problems of the unemployed. I stated we will be working hard to help those in the critical groups: the adult women—I think 68,000 of them came on to the job market last year in addition to the numbers that were already there—

Mr. Cassidy: That wasn't in the budget.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —and the youths between 15 and 25 who make up the other half of the unemployed in that category. But I've said many times that the job-creation record in Ontario is very good. It isn't good enough as long as we have more people entering than jobs created, but within the government's ability to do so, we will be trying to stimulate job creation.

Mr. Laughren: You've done nothing.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't know where the member got the 7,600 figure. I am not going to be tied down to telling him it's 10,000, 1,000 or 100,000 jobs because I don't know. If I stood up here and told him I did, I would be lying. I simply say we will do our utmost to protect the most jobs and to create the most jobs and we are innovating in a new area. We will find out only through our efforts how successful we have been.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, is the Treasurer refusing to discuss any numbers or any specific numbers about the job-creation program through the Employment Development Fund because he intends to use it as a slush fund to maintain jobs as a result of adjustments resulting from the GATT negotiations announced by his colleague?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I wonder what kind of a job is the most important—one that is protected or one that is created. I would suggest we have highly skilled people in towns like Iroquois Falls and towns like Dryden and towns like St. Catharines and in the Thorold area. I am thinking of the pulp and paper area in Thorold. They would be delighted to have those highly skilled jobs maintained in Canada, and I hope we will see a goodly number of them protected and at the same time a vibrant, clean industry continue.

I will never get any marks for that. The members opposite will always feel they can come back to me and say, "Hey, in the Iroquois Falls plant; now you have modernized it, there are 75 fewer men than were there before." They will be right. All I can tell them is there are probably 950 more than there would have been if we hadn't helped them.

Mr. Peterson: In view of the increase in the work force of 133,000 last year, why is the Treasurer lowering his sights by 33,000 jobs this year to 100,000 when clearly the work force is expanding at this time? Why has the Treasurer given us those very pessimistic numbers and why isn't he doing something about it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the estimation of the growth in the labour force this year is lower than it was last year. I have the figures here somewhere. I don't recall them but I think 132,000 people will be entering the work force this year compared to about 158,000 last year. Does that sound correct in round figures in that order?

Mr. Wildman: Are you asking us now?

Hon. F. S. Miller: In any case, there's a decrease in the projected increase in the size of the work force. Secondly, in my budget I used the words, "a consensus of growth." I said in excess of 100,000. I didn't say 100,000. Our estimation will probably be in the range of 118,000 to 130,000 average new jobs in the coming year. It will be in that kind of ballpark, so we will be coming for the first time very close to the level of the growth in the labour force and have a chance of either equalling it or exceeding it.

If we exceed it, of course there will be a net reduction in unemployment during the year. I would hope that's the case. I would hope a combination of a more buoyant year than forecast two months ago when the budget was being structured, and the efforts of this government through a number of techniques such as the Employment Development Fund, will permit us at the end of the year to say we exceeded those figures.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, it's an interesting admission that there may not be any new jobs created by the Treasurer's programs at all. Supplementary: Will the minister guarantee us an employment impact study will be done on all applications to the Employment Development Fund?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, we certainly are going to be assessing every one of the applications on a number of bases. For example; can we see Canadian procurement; can we see how many jobs are going to be created? Those kinds of things are a vital part of the assessment.

Mr. Peterson: Would it be fair then for the Treasurer to characterize his program as always aiming so low that no matter how he does, he will never be disappointed?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Just coming into the House each day does that for me.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Treasurer have an answer?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I have been restraining them. I think I will pass.

INCREASE IN OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, at the risk of provoking a profane response, because my question is related to egalitarianism, my second question to the $45,000-a-year Treasurer is: Would he explain why he chose to raise a very regressive tax, namely the OHIP premiums, at a time when access to the health-care system is already being eroded, and can he tell the House how he can justify such an increase when, for a family earning $15,000 a year, the combination of provincial taxes and health premiums works out to a rate of 79 per cent of the federal tax, the highest combined rate in the entire country?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, members saw the white paper attached to the budget, one that we hope to have a good discussion on in the course of the year, to tackle some of the problems for low-income people. Apart from that, I have great confidence that most people in this province do not want to be fooled by governments. They recognize that if the cost of any commodity they are buying on a daily basis goes up, sooner or later they pay the price for it; if it is the cost of peas, then they pay more, if it is the cost of oranges they pay more.

I think they are also keenly aware that when governments pretend, as governments often do, that because they are spending more on a service they don't have to collect more for that service, such as OHIP, then they recognize that somehow, somewhere, they are going to be paying for it in a different way. One of those ways can be other forms of taxation, and the member may have chosen that.

I would say to him that since only 30 per cent, roughly, of the insured services of OHIP are paid for by OHIP premiums, if the arithmetic is right, then the 70 per cent on the other tax base fairly represents the variable amount. The 30 per cent is something most people accept as an understandable direct charge. About 85 per cent of the subscribers in Ontario, if I am not wrong, are on group plans—the member is aware of that—and of that 85 per cent a goodly number will have some or all of the premium paid for by their employers.

Mr. S. Smith: The worker pays; that is very interesting. What about pollution cleanup?

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Could the Treasurer tell us why in his budget he did nothing about property tax reform, why he failed to enrich the sales tax credit and why he ignored the promise last year to enrich the property tax credit for senior citizens?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I certainly am considering those but, unlike some people, I admit it takes me some time to learn. It has taken me a good part of this learning period to get ready for a budget. There are other problems, like property tax reform, that certainly deserve a lot of attention.

Members have seen some action taken by my colleagues, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), to start helping to solve the problems of Ontario's municipal taxpayers; the fact that we are unfreezing the equalization factors and the fact that we made certain transitional or ad hoc grants this year to assist municipalities like Windsor, Sarnia and Sudbury, if I am not wrong. Did Sudbury not get a fairly substantial one?

They are hardly what one would call dens of Conservative support, so we can't be accused of having given this kind of assistance to our own ridings. We did that as a first step towards solving some of the structural problems of the provincial distribution of money. Members have seen municipalities opt for and request section 86 parts of the Revenue Act.

Mr. di Santo: That is not the question. Sit down.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Those were aimed at the local option to solve certain problems.

Mr. Cassidy: You couldn't learn about senior citizens, but you learned about the needs of people who are very wealthy.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: In regard to insured services, the Ontario people put about $1,000,000,000 a year into OHIP at the rate of $20 a month, or $240 a year, each. If one put that $240 in the bank, one would expect to be able to collect that money at the bank when one goes to get it. But this government is not delivering to people the services they are paying for. When is the government going to realize that people have a right to demand that service and not be on a stretcher in the hospital emergency room for five days at a time? They are not delivering the service.
[3:00]

Mr. Warner: The system is being destroyed.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, while the honourable member for Grey-Bruce sounds angry at me, I owe my life to him. He is probably the one guy I can say that to in this whole House.

Mr. Peterson: The single biggest mistake he has ever made.

Hon. F. S. Miller: His single biggest mistake, his colleagues say. Nevertheless, I do. If it had not been for him, I never would have made it to an emergency room; and he knows they looked after me when I got there.

Mr. Foulds: How long ago was that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Three years ago.

Mr. Foulds: Before you started the vicious cutbacks.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, it was well after I had started that and the member knows it.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Even if it is only a husband and wife in OHIP today, without children, they pay $480 a year. Correct? The cost of the insurance services, if my arithmetic is right, is $1,000, so they are getting back a two-for-one basis even if there are no children. Add $500 more benefits for every other man, woman and child in the family, and you will see just how well off the Ontario taxpayer is compared to our friends in the United States who envy our system.

Mr. Laughren: Final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the Treasurer be very candid with us and tell us if, when he was preparing his budget, the decision was made to raise the OHIP premiums, in total, by an amount sufficient to cover the abolishment of the succession duty taxes?

Further, does he really think that the top three per cent of beneficiaries of estates in this province need tax relief more than lower-income people who are paying premiums in Ontario today?

Mr. Warner: Sheriff of Nottingham; rob the poor, give to the rich.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Just let me refer for a moment to my budget statement, if I may, Mr. Speaker.

"In spite of the fact that less than three per cent of estates in Ontario are subject to tax, there is widespread opinion that the successors of the average citizen will be subject to the tax," et cetera.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I like those words in that section so well I read them once and I said to myself whoever wrote those words had a gift, they certainly had thought it through and they emphasized my thinking. Do you know where I got them? From the Saskatchewan budget.

Mr. Conway: Final supplementary to the Treasurer on the mooted tax credit system in his budget paper: Can the Treasurer indicate, given the evidence presented to the select committee, what kind of priority his government gives to proceeding with removal of the quite ineffectual premium assistance program and replacing it with a meaningful tax credit system to relieve those 600,000 eligible people who at the present time are simply not being addressed under the premium system mechanism?

Hon. F. S. Miller: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the honourable member has been an extremely valuable member of that committee. I don't very often say that kind of thing, but he has been. I think he has been looking at those problems with us very well.

Mr. Foulds: And you are wrong again.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In putting that paper forward we suggested some changes that we hoped flowed from parts of the select committee's deliberations. We would be delighted if the present formula really got the money back to the people who deserve it. There is no desire on our part to see them not get a benefit to which they are entitled. Obviously they are not getting it, so obviously we need to change the system. This is one suggestion I would like the government to look at, and I would say we have given it high priority.

KAWARTHA LAKES SCHOOL

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Community and Social Services: In view of the unfortunate disturbance at the Kawartha Lakes School in Lindsay, in which the night shift supervisor was injured and hospitalized; can the minister tell me if it will be the policy in future to have two people on duty in this area during the night hours? And why was there no panic alarm hookup to the local police unit, since the staff has occasion to deal with some very dangerous situations?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I must say that if the honourable member is referring to a recent incident I have not yet been fully advised on the matter by my staff. I will respond to him as soon as I have been.

Mr. Eakins: I am surprised the minister is not aware of it since it happened at 2 a.m. last Sunday morning. I thought that, by this time, we might have an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a question?

Mr. Eakins: I would also like to ask the minister if he will be acknowledging the heroic stand taken by one of the supervisors, Mr. Ralph Tfoh, the night supervisor, whose bravery undoubtedly prevented injury to other staff and residents?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I will respond to the honourable member on all of these matters as soon as I have a full report.

Mr. S. Smith: As soon as I have heard of it.

Mr. Cunningham: Betrayed by your staff again.

MINI-SKOOLES LIMITED

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the Minister of Community and Social Services, arising from a meeting I had this morning with five day-care workers at Kingsview II Mini-Skool day-care centre. The five workers quit their jobs last Friday.

I want to ask the minister if he is aware of the following violations of the Day Nurseries Act at the Kingsview II centre reported to me by these five workers? Specifically, that one day-care worker was alone in a room with 10 children under two; a second worker was alone with 19 children under five; a third worker was alone with 11 babies under nine months; a fourth worker was alone with 23 children ages three and four; and a fifth worker was alone with 14 babies under eight months?

Is the minister aware there was insufficient food for the children, unsanitary conditions and a history of serious injury to those children at that centre? Is he ready now to undertake the kind of investigation into Mini-Skools operations in this province that I requested of him a year ago?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, in response to a question the honourable member raised earlier about that particular school, the matter is under investigation by the staff. I cannot at this point confirm whether the allegations made by the individuals to whom he has spoken are, in fact, accurate. I will respond again when I have the reports.

Mr. Swart: One year later.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary: I was told this morning, Mr. Speaker, that within the past three years a child had died at the Kingsview II day-care centre. I want to ask the minister if he is aware of that, and if it has been reported to him? Secondly, is he aware that on February 6, 1979, a five-month-old baby was found dead at the Mini-Skools day-care centre in Bramalea? Were either of these deaths reported to his ministry and is the minister aware of them?

Hon. Mr. Norton: To the best of my recollection, I know of no such incidents. I shall check with staff and see if they were aware of any such allegations. I am sure if those allegations were at all true they would have been reported to me as a matter of course; if not directly and immediately by staff, as the instructions are, then surely by those persons engaged in the investigation of the cause of death.

Mr. McClellan: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: You have had five questions now.

Mr. McClellan: This is an important issue, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the fact I verified the second death—the one that took place in February 1979—with the coroner today, I want to repeat my request as urgently as I can for a full and special investigation of the standard of care in Mini-Skools day-care centres across this province.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Until I have the advantage of a copy of the coroner's report, I am obviously not in a position to make a snap decision on such a matter.

BELL CANADA CASE

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Attorney General. Is the Attorney General now in a position to confirm or deny the fact of evidence being adduced in a serious criminal case recently, or within the year, where the accused posed as the husband of one of his victims and as a result prevailed upon the Bell Telephone Company to connect his phone in his office with that of the female person involved? Has he been able to get any further information about that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, the member for St. George first brought this matter to my attention last week, on Tuesday. She was kind enough to provide me with further particulars which would enable me to identify the specific case. Immediately upon receiving that information, on Tuesday afternoon the day before yesterday, I've asked my staff to obtain a full report. I'm not yet in receipt of a report; but as soon as I am I will immediately advise the honourable member and the members of the Legislature.

ST. LAWRENCE STARCH DISPUTE

Mr. Mackenzie: I have a question of the Attorney General. Is the minister aware of the police involvement at St. Lawrence Starch on Lakeshore Road last Friday, a full 48 hours before the strike commenced at midnight Sunday last? Sergeant M. Simpson of the Peel police met in company offices with the chairman of the unit, who was brought in by management personnel of the company. He proceeded to lecture him on the charges that could result in the event of a strike at the plant and any problems on the picket line, and to read to him appropriate sections of the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm not aware of that incident, but I will inquire into it—

Mr. Warner: Sounds like Fleck all over again.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—and report back to the honourable member and to the House.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Was there no directive from the Attorney General's office to police forces around the province following the Fleck situation? It was clearly indicated there, even by the OPP, that their actions prior to the strike would not be taken if they had to do it over again. Was there no directive from the minister's office to the police forces; and why was this kind of pressure exerted on the union in advance? That's clearly how it's seen in this situation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There may well have been some form of directive following the issues that arose during the Fleck strike. I'm not specifically aware of the nature or character of that directive at the present time.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not good enough.

Mr. Laughren: It's in your name.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The directive did not come from me.

Mr. Laughren: You didn't do it? You didn't send one out?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —it would have come from my predecessor. Again, I will make inquiries and report back to the Legislature.

TRENT-SEVERN LOCKS

Mr. G. Taylor: A question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Is the minister aware there is some indication from the federal government there will be a reduction of the lock hours and the employees on the locks on the Trent-Severn system this summer? This is a very vital part of the tourist trade of the Simcoe Centre riding. Is the minister aware of that and what is he going to do about it? Is he going to take any action?

Mr. Bradley: Same answer you gave him this morning, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the situation. The federal government made a decision, for budgetary reasons, after analysing the traffic for the last few years, that the move they've taken was a sensible one. We've already written our federal counterparts—soon to be colleagues—indicating to them we would ask that they reconsider it because we are quite aware of the essential part that system plays in the tourism trade in that part of the province. We have written as recently as this morning, or yesterday.

GRIEVANCE ARBITRATION

Mr. McKessock: I have a question of the Deputy Premier. In view of the fact a grievance settlement board ruled that a man fired by the Ministry of Labour be reinstated even though he had forged 55 reports and expense claims, can this minister tell me who appoints these board members? What qualifications do they have to have to be a board member; and how does the government go about replacing these board members if they find out later they are irresponsible?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this question as notice, to be responded to by the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. McCague).

[3:15]

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Breagh: I have a question of the Minister of Health regarding the agreement he announced on March 29 to provide physicians' services at opted-in rates.

It has been brought to my attention that, in one of our largest hospitals, the Toronto General Hospital, a woman was seeking the services of a gynaecologist. After calling the OMA hotline, the OHIP office, the Ministry of Health, the chief of gynaecology at the Toronto General Hospital, the Society of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and several general practitioners at a clinic, she tried our office. After all this, no one was able to obtain services for this woman. It is apparent that no lists are kept by the OMA.

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Breagh: I ask if the minister is aware of this?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the honourable member would send me over the name of the individual, and dates, then I will see that it is followed up as per our agreement with the medical association.

Mr. Cassidy: So if we raise it in the House then we will get an answer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I ask the member to send the name because I think it is quite improper to start trooping people's names through the media, especially when we're talking about something as sensitive and personal as gynaecological procedures.

Mr. Wildman: The minister is forcing it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the member sends it to me, I'll see that it is followed up.

Mr. Breagh: A supplementary: I would like to point out to the House that I did not use anyone's name. This matter has already been in the minister's office. Is he aware that the OMA does not keep a list of specialists in any of the cases that have come before us? In fact the OMA is simply referring them either to their own family doctors or back to the hospitals; so in practice, no assistance is being offered by the hotline.

Mr. MacDonald: That's a red herring. Those are the inadequacies of the new system.

Mr. Breagh: It's questionable whether the hotline is in existence anymore.

Mr. Cassidy: There is no hotline.

Mr. Laughren: What a system the government has.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member knows that the procedure in the interim will be to look at individual instances. I don't recognize the circumstances he described. My staff has been keeping me informed of people who have contacted my office. When the member says the woman contacted my office, maybe she contacted someone in the ministry, but if the member will send me the details I will be glad to follow it up, because I think the agreement we arrived at is one which will work very well.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is naive.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In fact, I think the situation here can best be described by this—I'd like to quote for the members from the Premier's statement, who best described this when he said:

"Physicians are allowed to bill direct"—I think that's the member's concern—"on the basis that their particular practices warrant more than the commission pays. This could be for cases where more specialized care of the patient is required or where the physician chooses to take more time in treatment. There may be instances where doctors practice medicine differently, then it would be appropriate for doctors to bill their patients directly and the patients could recover the cost and pay the difference."

That, I think, describes the system and is reinforced by our recent agreement.

Mr. Wildman: The member for Oshawa's description is more accurate.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That description, Mr. Speaker, is the description of the Saskatchewan system by the Premier of Saskatchewan, the Honourable Alan Blakeney.

Mr. Wildman: It may work out there but it doesn't work here.

Mr. Cassidy: If the minister thinks Saskatchewan is good, then take away the health premiums in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I didn't say they were good. I am saying that when you are in power it sometimes makes a difference, doesn't it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Armourdale.

FIRE DETECTORS

Mr. McCaffrey: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

A gentleman, a Mr. Gibson, the fire chief in the city of North York, recently expressed some very real concern about the Ontario Building Code. Specifically, his concern was why fire detectors were not mandatory in new apartment construction. Given the fact that fire detectors work and have been very well received, could the minister comment on an amendment, if it's required, to the Ontario Building Code that would change that legislation?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, right now the building code requires combustion detectors in new housing less than 6,000 square feet in area and three storeys in height.

Mr. Haggerty: The first three floors.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member across the floor is quite correct, but not in larger residential buildings.

At the time the building code was drafted the available fire statistics clearly indicated that lower density houses were a much greater fire hazard than apartments. Additionally, apartment buildings are built as compartments. They do have detector and alarm systems, and in storage areas they have sprinklers. These are all features, obviously, that minimize the hazards associated with fire. That was the reason for the original demarcation of under three storeys and over.

Notwithstanding the fact that I think statistically that position is still justified—statistically—our concern, of course, is for the maximum safety of every citizen. For some time there has been some serious thought about single-station detectors—which is a fancy phrase for individualized smoke detectors, in the unit—in new apartment suites. There would be in addition to the existing Ontario Building Code requirements for sprinklers and so forth.

We have come to the conclusion—and I will do it in this session—that such a mandatory detector within every unit is justified in terms of safety, notwithstanding the statistical evidence. I will bring in amendments to the building code, hopefully in this session, to have it done. In the meantime, we are circulating my conclusion, or the conclusion of the building code branch, to every builder in Ontario so that they can't say when we bring in the legislation that they were not aware of it, or that they cannot find a supply of these detectors.

Mr. McCaffrey: Supplementary: That would speak, then, to new apartment construction. May I ask about existing high-rise buildings in this province?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, as you know, the fire code, which really concerns existing buildings, is now in the process of review. The conclusions of a task force that studied this and did make recommendations about a fire code for existing buildings were published in the Ontario Gazette in January. It received the widest circulation across the province. At this time, fire departments, municipalities, regional governments and what have you are studying that. They are commenting upon the recommendations made.

I would be less than candid if I were not to point out that within the recommendations there appeared to be somewhat of a dichotomy involving the single-station detector. When there is a resolution of the fire code, I am quite sure that there will also be a resolution of the issue of the single-station detector, and indeed, some fire alarms.

One of the things I caution the House and the member who asked the question about is that we have to be practical in terms of a fire code when dealing with existing buildings. There are some cases where the construction of the building would not allow certain things. It is a little bit different situation and one must be much more flexible than when one is laying down conditions prior to a structure being built.

At the time the fire code comes in, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you—if this ministry still maintains control over the fire code, because there are suggestions by that task force that it be transferred to the Solicitor General in order to be in concert with the office of the fire marshal which is under his ministry—if it is with my ministry when the recommendations are translated into legislation, there will be priority thinking and priority recommendations, not only for alarm systems but for the single-station detector, or the smoke detector, as we know it.

HOSPITAL EQUIPMENT

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Minister of Health: In view of the fact that the joint role study conducted last year by a consultant for the three hospitals in St. Catharines indicated that there is an ample work load to justify ultra-sound imaging equipment in the Niagara Peninsula, and that such equipment should be located at St. Catharines General Hospital, would the minister indicate to the House if an early decision can be expected on this proposal?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having had notice of the question from the member. I can indicate that this is one of a number of things which are under consideration for funding in 1979-80 under our new and expanded programs allocation. Also, in the process we have been developing a policy for the distribution of ultra-sound equipment. It's another of the new, high-cost and innovative technologies. Yes, I can assure the member reasonably safely that within a month there should be an answer.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the Minister of Health. Why has he reneged on his commitment to small hospitals that they would receive a minimum increase of 5.3 per cent in budgets if they had less than 50 beds last year?

Specifically, why have Anson General in Iroquois Falls, Bingham Memorial in Matheson and Mattawa General all been offered only zero increase, and Red Lake's Margaret Couchenour Memorial only 0.87 per cent and St. Joseph's General in Little Current only 1.27 per cent, when all of them had less than 50 beds last year?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member knows that in the determination of budgets for 1979-80 in those areas we took into account a surplus active-treatment bed position. Also, in all of those areas the health councils—I think I am correct in this—are actively looking at their chronic-bed needs; and, as with most other communities, I think what one will find is that, in the process of trying to treat the system equally as far as distribution of acute-care beds is concerned, we will see more chronic-care beds opened. That certainly has been the case in every community whose representatives I have met.

The other day I met with the members for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) and Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) and groups from their constituencies. In the process of examining what they perceived to be a budgetary problem we identified that in fact they needed more chronic-care beds; we agreed that we would set about recognizing that and adjusting budgets accordingly. In those communities that work is already under way through their health councils, and I am hopeful that we can resolve their problems in the next little while.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, could the minister explain why these hospital boards and administrators and the health councils have to make this pilgrimage down here to meet with him to discuss chronic-care beds and to maintain their budgets?

Why does he not maintain the budgets while the adjustment is going on? These hospitals do not have the flexibility that other larger hospitals have to cut out the services.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, they certainly do not have to come to Toronto.

Mr. Wildman: A lot of them are.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Well, that is their option.

Mr. Swart: They just get a "no" answer if they don't.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The area teams of the ministry have been travelling extensively. In fact, the very day I met with the two delegations I referred to, namely, Tuesday—and that is why I was not here for question period that day—I was informed that the area team had met with representatives of five other hospitals in the southwestern Ontario area and sorted out their problems, specifically with regard to the identification of additional chronic-bed needs and the re-allocation.

Mr. Nixon: How about Brantford?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As my friend knows, Brantford is well on its way, with the co-operation of the health council, the local hospitals and the—

Mr. Nixon: The members?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —the members, the ministry and the minister, and the incentive I outlined in my letter to the health council—

Mr. Nixon: Half a million dollars will make anybody co-operate.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Well, sometimes. My honourable colleague the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) referred earlier to statements made in 1975 by the then Minister of National Health and Welfare. Mr. Speaker, I want to quote to you from a speech he gave to the Richelieu Club in Montreal on September 15, 1975, wherein he was talking about what he was looking for in all the provinces. This just reinforces what the Treasurer said. He was looking for us to "rationalize the system and make it more effective, shift the emphasis from high-cost services to the increased development of such less costly alternatives as extended and nursing home care facilities and ambulatory care services, and aim at an integrated system."

That is the point of all our policies: to identify chronic-care needs and to see them recognized out of re-allocation of the system; to identify extended-care or nursing home needs and, where they are needed, to increase them; and, for that matter, where additional active-treatment beds are needed to come up to the standards, such as in Newmarket a few weeks ago and in other areas, to identify those too.

ENERGY MANAGEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Has the minister, as of yesterday, disbanded or simply relocated the energy management team which has been perhaps the most singularly successful part of his ministry when it comes to the management of energy; and if this disbandment has taken place, are there any plans for the operation that was performed by that team to be taken up in other ministries?

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I'll test my cough and cold once again in reply.

Mr. Conway: How are you going to give away that $200,000,000 if you haven't got the fortitude to stand up to questions?

Mr. S. Smith: That's not money to be sneezed at.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It happened in Chicago yesterday.

Mr. Eakins: I'll take the hockey tickets tonight.

Mr. Peterson: Give him some chicken soup.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not during Passover. The member is quite right in referring to the success of our energy program. What occurred was that we had two energy buses running for a period of a couple of months. The first energy bus came in about 1975. It belonged to Mohawk College and we leased it from them. Because of the success of the program, as that bus got old and deteriorated, which it has, we were successful in getting the federal government to purchase a bus and allow us to operate it on a shared-cost basis starting last September or October. For the last few months while the old bus was being phased out there were two, but in essence the one new bus which is an excellent bus, serves the purpose. The program is continuing and is a very successful one.

Mr. Conway: Enough. He needs the help of the Minister of Health.

Mr. Peterson: You had better sit down and not tax yourself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There have been three persons in my ministry on contract working on some further energy programs. As a result of their efforts, they have been put on one-year contracts to suggest further and different ways in which our energy-saving programs might be developed. As a result of the success of their work, we've now been able to implement some new programs. These will operate through the aegis of the Ontario Research Foundation through a funding of something like $150,000.

Mr. Conway: Has your doctor opted in now?

Mr. J. Reed: If these people have been so effective and if they have been such a boon to manufacturers and industry in Ontario, where reports seem to be very positive about the work that has been done by these people, why did the ministry fire them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We didn't fire anyone; we hired three people—

Mr. J. Reed: Are they working today?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —as consultants on a one-year contract to analyse the potential and study what programs might be implemented. As a result of their recommendations and their work, we developed some programs—

An hon. member: They were fired.

Mr. Laughren: You de-employ them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —through the Ontario Research Foundation which will be established. As I say, the funding will be something like $150,000.

Mr. J. Reed: It's only one of their functions and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, that's not so. It is as a result of their work and the study we commissioned for one year that the new programs have been undertaken by ORF. Certainly some of their recommendations were not accepted, there's no question about that; but they were not hired originally to do work, which only the Ontario Research Foundation is equipped to do now, but which came about as a result of their studies.

SALE OF BEER AT BASEBALL STADIUM

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations on regional incentives. Could the minister tell us what it is about the sporting public of Metro Toronto that makes him feel that they can't be trusted to act maturely and responsibly if they are given the same right as any other sporting fans in any other franchise in North America, namely to have a beer at the ball game?

Mr. Conway: Give them your temperance speech.

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, I'm sure it comes as a grave disappointment to the member who asked this question and the newspaper that carried the item this morning that the cameras are turned off.

Mr. Roy: The lighting is not so good anyway.

Mr. Cassidy: Give your answer tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Quite frankly, I don't need that 60-foot power light or whatever the member for Ottawa East was suggesting it was.

An hon. member: You glow in the dark.

Mr. Peterson: When your nose is lit up nobody needs a light.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is not a question of trust. I would hope the member was misquoted in the paper this morning when he called me a temperance man, because I'd like an apology on that one.

Mr. Conway: We were just quoting the Premier (Mr. Davis).

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is not a question of that. Would you allow me just a moment, Mr. Speaker, because I think we should put this matter to rest today.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister of Industry and Tourism should stay here. He can't run out on this.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The policy on alcohol consumption in stadia in the province is not mine. It was enacted in 1977 by the cabinet and it was reaffirmed in 1978.

Mr. Cassidy: That's a copout. Do you support it or not?

Mr. Roy: It's not like you to skate around.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I want to put this on the record. It's cabinet policy. I've made these remarks publicly before. This year, Mr. Speaker, I can say as the minister responsible that there has not been an application, there has not even been one letter to me or to the Liquor Licence Board. To date, there has not been one to either, not one. I don't know why the member didn't even write.

Mr. Samis: You know why there hasn't been one, Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, there was no application before the board. I want to go into one other thing because I wonder how brave the member for Cornwall is going to be.

Mr. Samis: You know why there hasn't been one.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I refer this to the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) so she can watch this one.

Mr. di Santo: That's not the question.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The policy regarding liquor licences at the moment, and I think most of the honourable members agree with the policy I brought in last October, is the municipality must have input into the licensing procedure. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of record that the city of Toronto does not want alcohol served in the CNE stadium.

An hon. member: They voted on it.

Mr. Nixon: Oh baloney. How did you get it in Ontario Place? You've got it right across the road in Ontario Place.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, were an application to come and were I to ask the cabinet to change policy, I would be repudiating my word and my commitment on what has happened in the Beaches.

An hon. member: Shuffle off to Buffalo.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It would be the same thing for the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba). Mr. Speaker, I am not a friend of Mayor Sewell. I am sure the member for Cornwall (Mr. Samis) is much closer to him. I barely co-exist. If he wants to allow somebody to make an application that will not run counter to the wishes of his colleagues, I humbly suggest he go and see Mayor Sewell and have Mayor Sewell say he wants beer in the ball park.

Mr. Cassidy: This is so sanctimonious. It isn't true.

Mr. Laughren: It is hard coming from you, Frank.

Mr. Cassidy: What a copout.

MOTIONS

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ONTARIO HYDRO AFFAIRS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the select committee on Hydro affairs be allowed to sit concurrent with the House, April 19, 20, 25, 26 and 27.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that notwithstanding the orders of the House, private members' public business be considered in the evening of Thursday, April 19, 1979.

Motion agreed to.

ORDER OF BALLOT ITEMS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that notwithstanding the orders of the House, the order of precedence for private members' public business be changed so that Mr. Watson's ballot item be listed and called for debate May 10 and Mr. Handleman's ballot item be listed and called for debate June 21.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, just before calling the orders of the day, pursuant to standing order 13, I wish to indicate the business of the House for next week.

On Tuesday, April 17, the official opposition will reply to the budget in the afternoon, and in the evening, the House will resolve itself into committee of supply to commence consideration of the Ministry of Government Services estimates.

On Wednesday, April 18, the House will not meet in the chamber. However, the resources development, general government and administration of justice committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, April 19, in the afternoon, there will be a budget reply from the New Democratic Party, and in the evening, ballot items five and six.

On Friday, April 20, the House will be in committee of supply to continue its consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS FAMILY BENEFITS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Peterson moved second reading of Bill 11, An Act to amend the Family Benefits Act.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I understand I have 20 minutes—is that correct?—and I would like to reserve three or four at the end, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is quite right; he has up to 20 minutes to use as he sees fit, and may reserve some time at the end.

Mr. Peterson: Thank you. If you would be so kind as to notify me when there are three or four minutes left, I would be grateful.

I am glad the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) is in the House. I have waited a considerable length of time to have an opportunity to chat about this particular bill, Mr. Speaker. This is a simple bill; all it does is entitle, under the Family Benefits Act, a male head of a single-parent family to the same rights as a female would have in similar circumstances.

I know the minister is quite familiar with all of this, and I have tracked the history of this particular issue through this House for a considerable length of time. I can say without fear of contradiction I have never seen an issue discussed more dishonestly; I have never seen more obscure rationalization to prevent the coming into law of a principle that is clearly right; I have never seen so much fooling around and intellectual dishonesty on any particular issue that has faced this House.

It is an issue that every one of us knows; there isn't one member of this House who doesn't know the law as it stands at present is wrong.

Mr. Nixon: "Is a ass."

Mr. Peterson: The law, to quote my friend, "Anatole" Nixon, is an ass in these particular circumstances. We all know that.

What we need is just a tiny bit of courage to break out of this cycle of justifying the inequities and inequalities in the Family Benefits Act by saying we can't prioritize them, that we don't know which is more inequitous, by blaming it on the federal government or saying we can't afford it, yet at the same time not supplying the appropriate figures to the House so we can have any kind of scrutiny of the government's position on this matter.

I am going to read several quotations from past exchanges on this issue in the House. The minister is familiar with them, but I think they are important enough to state some of them.

I am glad the minister is here, and I hope he is going to listen because I want to introduce to him three people who are here in the House and who represent typical cases of the kind of inequity and injustice he is perpetrating on a daily basis. All of these gentlemen are sitting under the Speaker's gallery to my left.

The first one I want to introduce—and I would like the minister to look at them because he is going to have to respond to these people, not to me—is Terry Pembleton. I want him to meet these people. I want him to know what he is doing to these people.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I will respond; I will respond. Just carry on with the debate. What does this have to do with the principle of the bill? Stop grandstanding and tell me what has this to do with the principle of the bill? It has nothing to do with the principle whatsoever. Get on with the debate.

Mr. Peterson: I want the minister to know the kind of inequities he is perpetrating.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Get on with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Peterson: I wish he would get angry just once about an important issue rather than about a nonsense thing as he is doing right now. If he showed just a little bit of commitment, if he would stretch himself just once to try to show his cabinet colleagues that he has a little bit of clout we would be an awful lot happier.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Stop taking advantage of people and get on with the principle.

Mr. Peterson: He is turning out to be a disappointment; a case of promise unfulfilled. I was one of those people who said, when he was appointed to the ministry, "There is a bright young person who represents the new wave in Ontario." He has let us down, been a caretaker, he has not been innovative—

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't see what that has to do with the bill.

Mr. Peterson:—and here is one particular case where he can do something worthwhile. Meet Terry Pembleton. He has three children.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is baloney, baloney. If you were better informed on what is happening in the area of social services you would not be so preoccupied with the fiscal matters.

Mr. Peterson: They are 12, 11 and eight.

Mr. Gregory: What is this?

Mr. Peterson: He was deserted by his wife in March 1977. He worked to July 1977 when he was laid off. He was on unemployment insurance for a while and he decided at that time to be a full-time father. A fundamental part of my presentation today is that it is my profound belief that a father in those circumstances should have the right to become a full-time parent. I think there is no finer service one can render to the community, to society or mankind.

I would take you back to the throne speech of 1978, a year ago, when the government devoted six or seven pages to the strengthening of the family. Do you remember that, Mr. Speaker? Do you remember that marvellous diatribe about how important the family is, then the government conscientiously, legislatively wrecked that institution we all agree is so important

[3:45]

So Mr. Pembleton decided that he wanted to look after his children. He was on unemployment insurance, and he is on general welfare assistance at this point. That means he goes out every day to look for a job with all the attendant problems. He is still on general welfare assistance with all of the insecurity attendant thereto, because as you are aware, he can be cut off anytime, particularly after six months.

We have gone through every single review procedure available to Mr. Pembleton. I have even written to the minister. He responded to my letter after two or three months. He refused to take the case—or maybe he did take it—to cabinet. In any event, there was no order in council forthcoming for Mr. Pembleton.

Mr. Roy: You have no weight in cabinet.

Mr. Peterson: He is still in the same situation today he was in six months ago. We have had no help.

Mr. Ron Burrows wanted to be here today. He has children of five, seven, and nine—three little boys. He has been on general welfare assistance for a couple of years. He would have been here today but he could not get a babysitter because it is kind of expensive to get a babysitter for little people that age.

I want to introduce Bill Confiss. Here is another interesting case. He is sitting in the gallery. Mr. Confiss is the father of six children. There are three at home right now, one 17 and twins 11 years old. He was separated in 1967. At that point he was responsible for six little children—not five. He struggled along; he worked full time; he was a letter carrier, and he became a salesman after that.

His mother assisted in the raising of those little children. Go back 12 years and you will understand those were small, small children at that time. He and his mother, struggled on as best they could. His mother became ill and he then had no alternative but to become a full-time father.

In August 1978, he finally applied for family benefits because he was on general welfare assistance. He put in his application on September 6 of that year. In December, some three months later, a social worker came, talked to him, talked to his children, and then nothing was heard back.

He had no idea where to go. There were no forms to fill out; there was no notice from the ministry; there was no response whatsoever. Finally, he got in touch with the Ombudsman. The Ombudsman got in touch with the minister's office somehow and the word at this point according to the Ombudsman's office is that Mr. Confiss' case has been approved and he will get family benefits by way of order in council.

In the process, he has not gone through the same review procedures, he has not done all the same things other people in similar cases have to do. There is no rhyme nor reason. There are time delays, there are harassments and there is no regularity whatsoever to the process going on. He was not turned down by the welfare review board or any other agency that we can determine at this particular time.

I want to introduce one other gentleman, John Morrison. John Morrison is from Toronto and he has been carrying his case most intelligently for a considerable number of years. I think in some respects this is a very tragic case. I want to tell you a real situation: He has three children, 11, 12 and 14; three little boys. He has had custody of those kids for seven years since he was deserted by his wife.

He spent the first five and a half years as a mechanic, making $8 an hour. Today, he would probably be making $10, $11 or $12 an hour. He is not a poor man. He has other options. He has his class A mechanic's licence. He decided in November 1977 that the best service he could do was to become a full-time father to his three little boys. He was not happy about what was going on to influence them and he felt he could best serve them by being there.

He went through a litany of confusion and disaster and waiting and disruption that is almost a sad story. He had to go on welfare assistance. He applied for family benefits; they told him to get a doctor's letter; the doctor said it would be easier on his nerves if he could receive family benefits.

On January 18, he received notice his notice of intent was turned down. On February 10, his appeal was turned down. On March 6, the ministry wrote back acknowledging receipt of form 1 on the request for a hearing. On March 15, they gave a date for a hearing. On April 5, they reviewed the whole situation.

Mr. McMaster at that time said very complimentary things to Mr. Morrison about what a wonderful fellow he was, how he was doing the right thing, and that he was taking a conscientious role in the situation. On May 24, the decision came: he was turned down. On May 26, he went to the Ombudsman. The Ombudsman advised him there was still one other procedure he could go through. On June 16, he went back and filled in form 2 for a reconsideration on section 12 of the Family Benefits Act.

On July 18, he got a letter from a law firm, Campbell, Jarvis, McKenzie and Fulton, presumably acting for the ministry. If they had given him the legal fees in the first place they could have saved all the money they were probably charged. It is the most ridiculous system. The letter gave him notice that the application was turned down —a most ludicrous situation—and that they were going to close the file.

At that point he went to the media. He talked to the Globe and Mail, the Ombudsman, the CBC Ombudsman, the Ontario Human Rights Commission and everyone else he could think of, because he was desperate and frustrated in the circumstances. On August 24, he got an order in council to get $412 under the Family Benefits Act.

Mr. Speaker, you can see the different kinds of stories I am telling. I think it is important to explain, and that people understand, that there is no regularity. I think it is also important that people understand the frustration and the lack of hope. Most of these people are on general welfare assistance. They don't have the money to make the phone calls, or hire the lawyers; they don't know where to go. All of the uncertainty and inhumanity that is attendant thereto makes it a cruel situation.

I know these three gentlemen, and frankly I have had cases before this where I have been turned down. These are not welfare ripoff artists; these aren't the kind of people that Gord Walker would like to stand up and make speeches about. These are decent people making conscientious, conscious decisions to do what they feel is right in life. I admire them for it, I think it is correct, and I support their decisions.

I have a little time left and I want to go through some of the quotations. It is staggering, and I could go on at great length. This has been treated in such a cold, political way, with so many weaselly dishonest rationalizations to get out of it, that I am most disappointed.

Let me quote from the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz). He was discussing this in the Legislature one time. There's a case. We thought there was a person who would bring some humanity to this Legislature. He said: "I am convinced that the financial implications would not be formidable." That is a quote from Hansard, December 15, 1977. That was his opinion. Of course, using a convoluted sort of logic that only he can understand and no one else, he felt he would be expediting this bill. He voted against it. Obviously, he was told by cabinet to stand up and block the bill, which I deplore and which I hope the government will not do today. If they do, they should have shame on their faces.

Mr. Warner: They have done it before, and they'll do it again.

Mr. Peterson: Even the member for Ottawa West recognized, before the whips got to him, the inequality and the inequity here.

The Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) is sitting there and, I know she agrees with me on every single word I am saying today. I just hope she has the courage to use her influence as policy secretary to stand up today and do what is right in these circumstances. It will be an interesting test.

I have asked a considerable number of questions in this House on this matter in the last little while. The Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie), who administers the human rights bill, admits it is inequitable, discriminatory and everything else, but says that he can't touch it. The Provincial Secretary for Social Development has yet to table the studies, as far as I can see, but she has admitted that it is inequitable, it is inhumane, it is unjust.

The Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) said, on March 15, 1979: "First of all, the procedure that is at present being used by way of order in council does, I admit, leave something to be desired." He also makes a fundamental error of judgement. I also point out that a substantial majority of the male single parents who apply, do apply under circumstances which render them eligible for assistance. The government expects them to be blind, halt, lame or otherwise handicapped in order to receive any kind of fair benefits under this situation. I think it is a humiliating process to have to put people through. It is costly for the minister, it wastes his time and everybody else's time.

The constant response, of course, is: "It is going to cost $28,000,000 and we're not sure if that is our priority. If we attack this whole discrimination business we may have to worry about disabled spouses more than single fathers."

One of the things I have learned in this House in my brief period here is that we can't do everything at once, but sometimes we do have an opportunity to do something. To quote my friend, Anatole Nixon: "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness." We have a chance here to clean up one piece of discrimination. The government does not have to, at this time, get so global in its outlook to rationalize doing nothing. That is what I fear they are going to do.

Mr. Speaker, I have several other quotations, and I guess I have a little bit of time left.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You have four of your 20 minutes left.

Mr. Peterson: One of the most disturbing articles I've read on this subject was called, "Lone Dad, Poor Dad." It was in Weekend Magazine. I'm quoting a former Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. J. A. Taylor) talking about a particular case. He said the only reason he responded to this particular case was that it was before an election and he didn't want to end up in the election taking on motherless children. It was only the political considerations that made him change his mind.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Is that in the article?

Mr. Peterson: It's in this article. I'll find the particular quote and send it over. I'll give it to the minister in the windup.

These are the kinds of situations that previous ministers and future ministers have forced on themselves. The minister has an opportunity now to do something about it. I wish he would. I wish he would support this bill. If he stands up and blocks it, as I fear he may, not only will he be making a mockery of the entire private members' rules in this House, but he will also be doing himself, his government and every member of this Parliament, in my judgement, a considerable disservice, and that would make one more reason why none of us should be particularly proud of some of the inequities we're perpetrating on people.

When the minister speaks, I hope he speaks directly to those three gentlemen over there.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill because it's a very simple and straightforward bill, which reflects in a way a bill that was introduced last year by my colleague, the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), but which unfortunately was blocked by members of the Conservative Party.

As I said and as the member for London Centre said, it's a very simple, straightforward bill which attempts to remove a discrimination that exists at this point in the Family Benefits Act.

The bill wants to remove a discrimination in the act. It would enable either parent to qualify for family benefits. It lists the case of a parent who should qualify for a series of reasons, not only because he or she has been deserted but, as the bill says, because the spouse is a patient in an institution or the spouse has deserted the person for three months or more or the spouse is imprisoned in a penal institution or is divorced and not remarried or is living separately and apart from the other spouse and has been living separately and apart for a continuous period of five years or more.

There is a series of circumstances where single parents who choose to raise their children find themselves—in a situation where, unless they get support from the government, they cannot raise their children. Since the act excludes males from getting family benefits, we are faced with serious discrimination.

I think the rationale behind this discrimination is unacceptable as well. In fact, what many backbenchers are asserting is that perhaps if we remove this discrimination from the act, all single parents would like to stay at home and raise children. As a matter of fact, that was the very interjection the former Minister of Community and Social Services made during the speech the member for Sudbury East or the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) made. His interjection was: Do you want all of them to stay at home?

[4:00]

I respect those men who choose to raise their children and who prefer to make a personal sacrifice by staying at home rather than sending their children to a foster home and having them educated by outside people in an environment that they may think is not fit for their children. I think those parents deserve our respect. I do not think for a moment that all male single parents would like to stay at home and raise their children.

As a matter of fact, I should add that this government has been acting quite dishonestly in dealing with cases of male single parents. Last year, the minister said that orders in council had been passed and family benefits allowed in 25 cases. I do not think that is the way to deal with this problem; if we do recognize that there is a problem there, then we should correct it by passing an amendment to the bill.

The fact is that the government acts only when public opinion is alerted because the issue is raised—by the media, by the Ombudsman, or by a member in the House. In that case, in typical Tory fashion, in order to silence the male single parent, the government passes an order in council and grants benefits.

The excuse used in the past was that we should wait for the reform of the family law. We now have a new family law. We also have had judgements passed by several judges who have recognized allowances to the husband in cases of separation or divorce. Why not realize that values and needs have changed in our society today and, when we are faced with situations where males choose to perform what was considered in the past the role of women—specifically, to raise children—give them the same rights on the same basis as we give them to women? It is a basic right that should be recognized.

I hope the government does not again block this bill. It is a minor discrimination, but there are many people who suffer because of this discrimination. I do not think, as perhaps many people on the other side think, that all male single parents will take advantage of the amendment and stay at home, because it is a sacrifice to stay at home and raise children.

I believe the minister is going to speak on this bill; I hope he agrees with the principle of the bill and supports it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this private member's bill. At the outset I would say that I regret very much that in situations like this often there are allegations made which I hope are not honestly believed—allegations of dishonesty and, on other occasions, of having misled people. I think that is an unfair accusation to level at any member on this side of the House on this particular issue.

I would point out to the members opposite that being in a situation where one has to make, and is responsible for making, certain decisions with respect to changes and reform in the law as it relates to social services in this province can create the very difficult situation of establishing priorities. As the honourable member opposite has indicated, it's not possible to do all things at one time. It does mean that one has to establish priorities.

If this bill were in the form of a resolution, the principle of which related to eliminating any discrimination on the basis of sex, on that principle he would get little or no argument from this side of the House.

The point I would emphasize is that—although this is not the primary consideration, it is a consideration—there are costs involved. If a private member's bill at any point is going to be seen as legitimately dealing with expenditure matters it seems to me that there is also an onus upon the sponsor of the bill to indicate what the source of that revenue ought to be, because priority establishing clearly involves those kinds of issues.

I'm not going to allege that there is dishonesty, but I would just point out to the honourable members who moved and seconded this bill that there is something else that ought to be taken into consideration in terms of asking that question of themselves, as to whether they are being consistent. It's one thing to champion an issue such as this, on which we agree with them, that those distinctions have to be eliminated as soon as possible. At the same time, their honourable leader spoke on September 27 at a $100-a-plate fund-raising dinner in Frontenac-Addington, adjacent to my riding, he was quoted in the media at that time. The headline was: "Ontario Must Slash Spending, Warns Smith." The report goes as follows: "The Ontario government must make drastic spending cuts in every ministry." That has not taken place in my ministry. I can assure members of that. I don't agree with what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) was advocating.

This is what troubles me. When the honourable members opposite have their leader, on the one hand, saying one thing and they in fact are saying the other, I'm not sure what the policy is.

Mr. Foulds: In that party the leader says two different things anywhere he is.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The Leader of the Opposition went on to say, in claiming that there was a need for balancing the budgets in the provinces of this country, that we are in the greatest financial crisis since the great depression. That was the groundwork. Then he went on and he became more specific. He said: "There should be no new social programs until we get an awful lot richer." I'm not sure I would agree with his assessment entirely, but they can't have it both ways.

Mr. Foulds: I wouldn't agree with it at all.

Hon. Mr. Norton: They can't have it both ways, introducing money-spending bills and at the same time telling us we should be spending less money. I am very pleased with the achievements of my ministry.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Why don't you deal with the real problem? They are always doing that kind of thing. Deal with the real issue.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'm coming to that. I think this bill, although it identifies one specific area of bias in the legislation which I have indicated I do wish to eliminate—

Mr. Peterson: Why don't you?

Hon. Mr. Norton: It's a question of priorities. It ignores a number of other, perhaps even more serious, areas.

Mr. Peterson: Like what?

Hon. Mr. Norton: For example, disabled wives.

Mr. Peterson: You always use that one.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I use that example because, yes, it's an important example.

Mr. Peterson: Why don't you bring in legislation on that one and deal with them one at a time?

Hon. Mr. Norton: There is at the present time, however less than desirable it might be, available to single fathers the assistance that is available through the General Welfare Assistance Act, albeit on an average of about eight per cent less than they would be receiving on family benefits.

Disabled wives, at the present time, probably would not be eligible for that assistance. One has to take those things into consideration in terms of trying to determine what is the most effective way to approach the reform in the law that we recognize is necessary.

The other thing this bill does, which I don't believe it was intended to do, is create a very complicated situation with respect to creating a bias in favour of common law relationships as opposed to legal marriages. That I could explain in detail, but I don't wish to take the time doing that. It would create a very strong bias in favour of much earlier and more generous assistance.

It creates an other problem: we haven't got an answer yet from the federal government to our communication in the early part of this month asking whether a change in this bill would render certain programs under the Family Benefits Act ineligible for federal assistance. It is our belief this change would result in that—not in the case of sole-support parents, but other programs under family benefit which would probably be rendered ineligible for cost-sharing as a result of the passage of this bill, if it were to pass.

Ms. Gigantes: Why?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Because of the problem created by definitions. As I say, I would rather not take up all the time on this bill by getting into technicalities which, I suppose, if they were going to be dealt with at all, ought to be dealt with in committee. But I will send the member, if she wishes, an explanation of that and also let her know what the reply is when we receive it from the federal government.

As we approach reform in the area of social services, it is important that we ask some very basic questions. As we look towards equality and the elimination of sexual bias, I think we also have to ask what is the most appropriate basis to move to. For example, is the current circumstance of single mothers precisely the one that should be appropriate across the whole board, or ought there to be some modifications in the system as we reform it?

I have indicated a number of times, in response to questions in the House and in statements, that there have been ongoing discussions with the federal government. Discussions started with the provinces last September, began in earnest with the federal government about November, December, and in fact have been continuing since January, regarding some changes under the Canada Assistance Plan. These would allow us more flexibility in terms of making changes in social assistance, particularly in income support legislation.

I must apologize; I was in a rather enraged state the day I responded in the House to a question and mentioned that, but I am very disappointed at the response we have just recently received saying no. I hope that is not the end of it, but it appears for the time being it will be. I intend to pursue it further both with the federal government and, if necessary, with my own colleagues to see if it is not possible that we can find some money to go it alone with these reforms. I think they are fundamentally important. But it is clear at this time we are not going to get the co-operation of the federal government, even though it looked hopeful as recently as a couple of months ago.

As long as we have to live with a less than desirable situation—that is the order in council route—if there is anything we can do to improve that procedure I would be delighted to do it. Obviously I am not familiar with every detail the member read out prior to the debate this afternoon, but if we can do anything to improve that procedure to avoid those frustrations I would be delighted to do that.

I still think that until such time as we are able to move forward with meaningful reform across this piece of legislation, we will be stuck with living with the order in council route.

In the meantime, if I can work with the honourable members to improve that process, I would be delighted to. I hope that will continue to be a reasonably equitable way to deal with it. It is not going to be perfect, but we cannot view this family benefits legislation as a substitute for unemployment insurance. I am not suggesting it is or that others have viewed it that way, but it is not intended for that. Therefore one has to take into consideration, surely, the needs of the children. And surely there have to be some indications, especially when you are living in a society where you must bear in mind there are many, many families—

[4:15]

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —where both parents are working and are out of the home during the comparable periods of time.

Mr. Peterson: They don't have any choice.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, they have choice. But also, I think, in a situation like this, when we're dealing with single parents, it's important that the needs of the children be the priority consideration.

Mr. di Santo: Very disappointing.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, it may seem strange to the minister that I am indeed in support of this bill and its philosophy, because, while on many occasions I have debated with him the inequities under the act as they apply to women, I think there's been a major step forward as a result of the introduction of the bill. When we discussed the inequities to women, the minister considered those to be anomalies; now he has moved over a little more to recognize bias and discrimination. This is a step forward.

Perhaps, though, I could bring a different dimension to this debate. We are today and this year involved in the International Year of the Child. The Provincial Secretary for Social Development sent out suggestions as to what we could do for the child. I must respond to her that I really can't be a block parent.

I believe that the perspective of this entire bill is to give to the child in our community the same support, whether that child has a single mother or a single father. I cannot understand—believe me I would like to understand—how one can distinguish, simply by trying to balance the male/female equation in this kind of a debate. The children are in need.

Why is it—and I wish the minister would listen to what I'm saying.

Mr. Roy: Yes, if he wasn't always disturbed by the member for Thunder Bay.

Mrs. Campbell: How can we justify that one family of children should have less income provided, because they have a father, than a family which has a mother? It doesn't make any sense. I'm sure these boys of whom we've heard—

Hon. Mr. Norton: You see, I didn't argue that that should be the case. You are distorting.

Mrs. Campbell: —grow the same as any other children. Their requirements for shoes alone are no different from those of any other children. They eat the same, or would like to. Surely they are entitled, by reason of being disadvantaged in not having both parents in the home, to equal consideration.

I cannot believe that this principle has been put to the federal government in this way and that a child would be denied. I don't believe that this kind of thrust has been put to the federal government.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Yes, it has.

Mrs. Campbell: I do not for one moment say that I would doubt some of the things that have been said about the federal government; that is not the point. But, I certainly can't see that any government could accept the fact that we can discriminate against children who have absolutely nothing to do with whose custody they are in and allow them less than others.

I trust that we at least could take this bill to a committee. If there are flaws in the bill that cause concern I know that we are all prepared to look at them. It can't hurt this government to approve its going to committee, and with such a desire on the part of this government to gain equity, surely it is a very strong position that this bill should carry at this time to be referred to committee. That is a great argument for Ottawa.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Bill 11. I think it represents a move in the right direction. Even the minister admits that. To add to the discussion that is going on here this afternoon, I would like to provide the members of the Legislature with information which the minister himself provided to me in November of last year. This was information he sent me following discussions of the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services in October last year.

What this information indicates is that the total cost of eliminating sexual discrimination from the existing social service programs in Ontario would be $27,100,000. Of that total cost it is fascinating to see that only $3,000,000 would be the sum required to eliminate discrimination against men in three programs.

The program that discriminates against sole-support fathers would have to be modified with new funding of $1,500,000 net from the province. The addition of single men between the ages of 60 to 64 to the benefits program would add an additional net cost of $1,400,000, and the addition of funding for the husband of an old age security recipient would cost $10,000, for a total of $3,000,000 that the province would have to add to its funding of provincial support programs in order to eliminate discrimination against men.

If, however, we turn to two programs that would have to be modified to eliminate discrimination against women—namely, the support for separated mothers, which would require $4,600,000 additional money from the province in order to allow the sexual discrimination to be removed, and the second program, funding for a disabled or permanently unemployable spouse of a non-disabled husband—it would require an additional $19,600,000 from the province so there would be no sexual discrimination in the treatment of women as opposed to men.

What we find if we look at the total cost of changing the social service programs, the funding programs, of the provincial government to eliminate sexual discrimination, is that a total of $27,100,000 would be required to remove sexual discrimination and $24,200,000 of that $27,100,000 would have to go to the elimination of discrimination against women.

In the slow progress of our society towards the equality of the sexes, I am always glad to approach that goal in any way that seems to make life easier. If by adopting this bill we begin the process of eliminating sexual discrimination in all our support programs in the social services system of Ontario, and if this small step forward in eliminating discrimination against men will lead us to take a bigger step forward—the necessary and logical bigger step forward—to eliminate sexual discrimination against women, so be it. If we have to take a roundabout route to overcome the larger discrimination which exists against women under our social services programs, let's go the roundabout route. I will take any way I can to get there.

We have heard the words—the defensive kind of stance—put forward by the Minister of Community and Social Services. We have heard the suggestion his heart was breaking because he could not get federal agreement to eliminate sexual discrimination in the social service programs of Ontario. I think it is important to note that by his own estimates, if the province were forced to kick in $27,100,000 to provide for a cost-shared elimination of sexual discrimination in the social services programs of Ontario, the most the provincial government could hope to get on a cost-shared basis for the elimination of sexual discrimination would be $9,200,000. If the province had to pay the full shot of reforming the programs in the ways I have suggested, according to the ministry the cost of that full shot would be $36,200,000.

Now, really, is it just impossible for us to consider going ahead in this province, if we have to go ahead with the addition of $9,200,000 and carry our own burden? If the feds are not ready to kick in the $9,200,000—

Hon. Mr. Norton: That overlooks the problems created at the federal level that will render other programs—

Ms. Gigantes: —I think it is about time that we in this province said it is worth paying $36,200,000 and we will pay the whole shot to eliminate all sexual discrimination in all the social support programs of this government. I think the time is now.

This bill provides us with a kind of roundabout way of beginning to tackle the problem in real terms. It provides, as always I suppose, an approach for making sure men are not discriminated against before it makes sure women are not discriminated against. Fortunately, it would only cost us $3,000,000 to avoid discrimination against men, so let us begin and do that and move on and eliminate sexual discrimination in each and every one of the support programs of this government.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to say a few words in reference to the bill proposed by the member for London Centre. As was mentioned by the member for Downsview, the bill does reflect many of the sentiments of Bill 54, from the member for Sudbury East. If I understand it correctly, I think the difference between Bill 54 and this bill before us today is primarily the extension of the family benefit eligibility of males between 60 and 64 years of age who are either single, widowed, deserted, divorced, et cetera.

I see with interest too, that Bill 11 attempts to supply the necessary changes to definitions. In particular, the definitions of parent and spouse have been adopted, it would seem, from the Family Law Reform Act, 1978. In any event, it is difficult to oppose the objectives of the current bill before us today, and I am certainly not going to attempt to argue against the philosophical intent of the present proposed amendment.

The movement toward equality of the sexes and away from the traditional sense of discrimination by sex is both enormously positive—we have heard comments on it today—and, of course, it is a very necessary value in today's society. No one can argue that.

Often, though, in legislation that we must deal with in our day-to-day lives in Parliament, whether in Legislatures within the provinces or indeed in Ottawa, the legislation has been in force for long periods of time, and parts of it must be updated to reflect the changing needs and values of contemporary society.

Unlike some, I do not believe that the particular act we are concerned with today is intentionally discriminatory; many of the provisions contained within it simply have been carried forward from former acts. In this case, I would think it was carried forward from the previous mother's allowance; indeed, the Family Benefits Act is also a carry-forward from the disabled persons programs.

But, intentions aside, I will agree with the mover that the existing act, without doubt, contains discrimination. Not only should all citizens, regardless of their sex, have equal rights before the law; they should also have equal access to programs and benefits that are administered by the government. We see that consensus in the debate today.

My main concern with the bill is not with its intention, but rather with the means whereby the honourable member hopes to effect the change he desires. The legislation which preceded the drafting of the Family Benefits Act was, as I have said, born out of a time when men were primarily the sole supporters of their families. Times have indeed changed and, therefore, the legislation itself should be examined for alternatives which will properly reflect the current situation.

This is precisely the reason for measures taken in the last two years to comprehensively reform the family law and draft the Family Law Reform Act. I certainly felt at that time—and still do—that the Ministry of Community and Social Services and, specifically, the Ministry of the Attorney General were the proper vehicles for the examination and drafting of that act. The ministries have the resources and the expertise to assess the appropriate and most effective legislative guidelines dealing with the complex set of concerns that surround such issues as property and support obligations.

I am not saying that the Family Benefits Act is complicated in that way; although I do feel that if Bill 11 were passed, family benefits would be greatly dependent on provisions within the Family Law Reform Act. However, it is the ministries that I think can do the most proficient job of changing more than just sections of the current act dealing with single parents and those between the ages of 60 and 64; there is a need to examine the amending bill as a whole, both to detect unwanted or inadvertent side effects and to see if any sections other than those of immediate concern could be updated.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I recognize the proposal made by the member in his bill today. But there are three areas which are problematic and with which this amendment to the Family Benefits Act have to be reviewed.

First, the amendment does not eliminate all the sexist elements of the family benefits programs, albeit I agree they are trivial. For instance, one that I am sure is unintentional is that section 7(1)(d) appears to refer to "mother of a child born out of wedlock."

More important is the fact that, in order to address all aspects of sex discrimination, the regulations pertaining to the act would have to be changed, as the minister alluded to. These regulations contain certain specific sexist provisions which warrant consideration. The eligibility of disabled female spouses and of husbands of old age security wives are two examples I would think of inconsistencies as they exist.

The member for St. George in her remarks referred to the minister and said he might be surprised by her comments today. I think not. The remark I have just made is not original, because I do recall the member for St. George was quick to point out that fact during the debate on Bill 54.

It was my understanding that other provinces which have apparently attempted to eliminate sexist elements from family benefit programs continue to use regulations as work availability testing.

Secondly, I suspect, Bill 11 suffers a problem which Bill 54 did not; and that is due in part to the recent family law reform legislation. Regulation 287 provides no time limits on the period of cohabitation of common law spouses; whereas Bill 11, as I read it, proposes that where there are no children the couple must live together for five years.

The minister has mentioned some of the effects this change will have upon the equality of benefit dispensations and he shared with us some of the very real potential problems the government is working on with the federal level of government.

Personally, I would be concerned for some of the same reasons that he has expressed. Namely, that under the amendments, the common law spouse income assets it might very well not be considered for benefit discrimination.

Thirdly, there are a couple of categories of persons who are now eligible for family benefits but would appear to become ineligible if this amendment were passed. These are mothers who are deserted by dependent husbands, and those over 65 who have dependent children but are permanently unemployed or disabled.

I grant you, Mr. Speaker, these are probably not insurmountable, nor will they affect large numbers. However, I do feel it is important to make the point that any change in our social or welfare programming must be very carefully considered for its total effect and all of its side effects, no matter how seemingly trivial.

I remain strong in my conviction that such changes as the one being proposed here this afternoon are more properly the responsibility of the ministries that are concerned. An equally important point to be made is simply this: From the dollar point of view, the inclusion of males in the terms of the Family Benefits Act, particularly the extension of the eligibility to the 60-64 age bracket, would, as the minister has already said, increase costs to government. We can't ignore that. That does bring it into the purview of a money bill.

I do feel I'm not able to support the bill today, although I have made my thoughts known very clearly in support of the principle. I feel it is a contravention of the rules governing our private members' hour.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Will you ask the Speaker for a ruling on that?

Mr. Jones: These ministries have a budget within which they must work, and they must make adjustments in order to find those amounts.

Mr. Peterson: You guys have made this thing a joke.

Mr. Jones: We just heard the member for Carleton East referring to figures in the $24,000,000-$36,000,000 range, and that has to take place in the context of—

Mr. Peterson: It is not $24,000,000. Evelyn was right.

Mr. Jones:—those budgets through social development, through the ministries that have been mentioned in the debate. I would suggest that the question at hand is more correctly the responsibility of the government, because I feel a more comprehensive bill can come from the government.

Ms. Gigantes: We'll do it. We couldn't get a commitment from the minister on that. Are you promising us to do it?

Mr. Jones: Because this clearly is a money bill, as we mentioned, I see no way of avoiding, in this private members' hour, opposing it, even though it is equally as clear from the debate today that some action must be taken in the near future.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Ottawa East, for three and a half minutes.

Mr. Roy: That's just about what I wanted. Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Are you going to say we should vote on money bills?

Mr. Roy: I've listened to the debate by my colleague, the member for London Centre, and the member for Carleton East, and I've just listened to the apologia from the member for Mississauga North, and I frankly thought—

Hon. Mr. Norton: We don't need an apologia, but I would like to hear an apologia from the member when he goes down to eastern Ontario. I would like to hear your justification.

Mr. Roy: You should just keep quiet and listen, because you're another one of those ministers who says one thing and does something else.

Hon. Mr. Norton: When have I ever done that?

Mr. Roy: You've got to realize that you're the government now and that you can do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's an unfair accusation.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time is limited. Will the minister stop interrupting?

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

The reason my colleague has brought this bill forward is because the government, and the minister, who keeps talking about how he's sympathetic to that problem, is not doing anything about it. That's why my colleague is bringing the bill forward, and as he said, he's prepared to accept amendments.

What we are not prepared to accept is to listen to a member who's trying to give some reason why he's going to stand up later to block the bill. That is a front and that is just an excuse for doing nothing.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is a money bill.

Mr. Roy: When we take the initiative like that, the move is made in sincerity because the government is not doing it. If the minister really feels strongly, as he does and as other members do, about this issue, why doesn't he do something about it? This issue has been raised on a number of occasions by my colleague, by other people, and the minister keeps sitting there saying, "We're sympathetic to it. We think it's a good issue. We think that people should get equal justice before the law."

Hon. Mr. Norton: It would help if you spoke to your federal friends about my proposals.

Mr. Roy: His colleague from Mississauga North has just reiterated this.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Why don't you speak to your federal friends and get their support for my proposals? Your federal friends say, "No, no, no." Put your support where it really counts. Talk to your federal friends about it.

Mr. Roy: He gets up and gives the whole excuse of why the bill is going to be blocked. We think it's phony, and we think the minister should accept his responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, really. Talk to your federal friends. Tell them I need their support.

Mr. Roy: Listen to him. He never really stops. Maybe that's one of his problems as a minister. He should listen for awhile and stop talking—try to listen to what other people have to say. He's not infallible.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Don't you just talk. You go and get their support.

Mr. Roy: When a minister is not prepared to accept his responsibility, if he doesn't have the guts to do it—

Hon. Mr. Norton: I accept my responsibilities.

Mr. Roy: —why doesn't he piggyback on this bill and say, "We'll accept my friend's proposition. We'll accept his initiative," instead of using the—

Hon. Mr. Norton: I will accept it if he will go and get the federal government to change the regulations so we can go ahead.

Mr. Roy: —excuse that the bill has some technical fault and that he is going to get up to block it? We think that is unacceptable.

Hon. Mr. Norton: All I ask is that the member for London Centre gets the support of his federal friends so that I can do what I asked them to do.

Mr. Roy: The evidence that he is sincere and he wants to do something about it is for him to get up here this afternoon and support the bill.

Will he answer this question? Is he going to support this bill?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'll support it if you ask Madame Begin if I am not sincere.

Mr. Roy: Oh, don't equivocate. Is he going to support the bill?

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Roy: Has it expired? The proof is going to be in the pudding. We'll see what his position is when the vote comes along.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I need the regulation changed before I can do it.

Mr. Roy: I suggest that it's going to be as phony as it's been in the past.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The one that will make the difference will be the May 22 vote.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have never seen a minister so exercised.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for London Centre for three minutes.

Mr. Peterson: He is in the classic position of knowing what he is doing is wrong and he's trying to render the whole process nugatory. He's saying to us, "Bring in a regulation." That's a worse waste of time than what we're doing here.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I didn't say, "Bring in a regulation."

Mr. Peterson: He said, "Bring in a resolution," I'm sorry. He said, "Bring in a resolution and I'll support it." Like every other resolution in this House, it's a bloody waste of time. The government has made a mockery of the private members' hour. It's a mockery. We might as well go back and waste our time on the throne speech or budget debate. The minister knows it's wrong and he frankly hasn't got the clout. If he lets the thing go to committee the House will speak in entirety on the issue. I will go with him because they do like us and respect us a heck of a lot better now than they respect him.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Don't just talk about it, do it.

Mr. Peterson: We will go to Ottawa with the minister and talk to Monique Begin and Pierre Trudeau. They're going to be there after May 22.

Let me read a quotation to show how he has handled this issue. It's important. This was in Weekend Magazine: "I asked the social service minister why some welfare fathers could qualify for family benefits while others in—"

Hon. Mr. Norton: I took 10 provincial ministers with me the last time and she agreed for three months and then she said no.

Mr. Peterson: —the same circumstances could not. Taylor remembers the Currie case all too well. He calls it the cause célèbre.

"It was an us-versus-them situation, us being the Tory government only weeks away from election and not wanting to look like skinflint tightwads, especially to a family of motherless kids, and them being the Toronto family services association." That's the way they run this government.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is the case today. There is a clear policy today.

Mr. Peterson: That's why it was important that I draw attention to the case of these three gentlemen, and the minister didn't look them in the eye once.

Hon. Mr. Norton: He is not the minister.

Mr. Peterson: Shut up and listen. He didn't look at them once in the eye when he was making his little diatribe written by some grade B lawyer in his department. The same goes for the member for Mississauga North. For an insurance agent he is not a bad lawyer.

But he didn't look at them once because he knows it's wrong. He knows he is forcing them through an inhumane, unjust procedure. Each of those people was treated differently, even though the cases were similar.

It's quite clear the minister is going to stand up and block this vote. We know that. But I would ask the minister as a man, as a human being, as a compassionate person hopefully, would he meet with these gentlemen outside in the hall right after this debate right now and talk about it?

[4:45]

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have another meeting with another member of the Legislature which I'm late for now.

Mr. Peterson: I would like the minister to meet with them and explain it to them.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Carry on with the debate. I am not able to meet with them this afternoon.

Mr. Peterson: It's so easy for the minister. He's going to escape. He can take five minutes to meet with these gentlemen out in the hall.

Mr. Roy: He is dodging the issue.

Mr. Peterson: The minister is dodging it because he is embarrassed and knows he's wrong. He hasn't even looked at them. Frankly, if I were him, I couldn't look at them either.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The time for debating ballot item three has expired.

Mr. Peterson: I am disappointed. This is a classic case where we all know what is right and don't have the guts to do it. That is one of the things that makes politics so disillusioning to idealistic young people. The minister is doing his bit to turn a generation off politics.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If you will deliver support from Monique Begin, then we will do it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That was an abuse of the private members' hour. I'm really disappointed in the member.

EASE OF ACCESS BY PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

Mr. Renwick moved resolution 6:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should adopt policies and introduce legislation to require that the needs of physically handicapped persons be considered in the design and construction of residential housing, commercial development, transportation systems and, generally, all buildings and places to which the public is intended to be allowed access and that, in particular, the government should enact regulations amending part V of the Ontario Building Code to incorporate the recommendations of the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Proceed, if you will. Do you wish to reserve any time for the round-up?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that I will have some time and, if I do, I would like to reserve that time, if I may.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I shall so do.

Mr. Renwick: My purpose in debating this resolution is to speak against the discrimination we practise against the people in our society who are physically disabled. We distinguish unfavourably the physically disabled from the able-bodied in ways which are hurtful, detrimental and injurious.

My task is made much more difficult because I do not anticipate that anyone will speak against the resolution. Therefore, it will be my task to make certain that I bring to the attention of the House what information is available at the present time on this ongoing problem with respect to the access of disabled people to all sorts of buildings, be they privately or publicly owned.

My proposition speaks to one of the many ways in which we discriminate against the physically handicapped. My topic is basically access. Access is the precondition of equality of opportunity, let alone of equality of conditions. Without access we perpetuate inequality. Without access we imprison in isolation and alienation. Without access we segregate. Above all, without access we destroy dignity piecemeal.

Let me ask all of those in the assembly who are interested in this particular form of discrimination to read the report of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, Life Together, published some two years ago—or almost two years ago. Let them read also the mayor of Toronto's task force report on disabled and elderly people and the provincial-metropolitan task force report on elderly persons' centres, which affects directly not only the elderly but also the disabled. Then let them contrast that with the—if I may use the term—niggardly and very modest way in which the government of this province has alluded to the need for assistance to physically handicapped people, as set out in the throne speech of March 6 last.

They refer to the five pilot projects with respect to public transportation which have been introduced. Then they go on to say that they intend the introduction of a gradual expansion to other communities of this opportunity to provide assistance for the transportation of physically disabled people. They also go on to say that they will make a modest expansion of several pilot projects which were launched recently to provide special accommodation and necessary attendant care for the young physically disabled.

There are some other remarks in the throne debate but they do not relate specifically to this whole question of access to facilities, access to the public facilities in the province, and the use of those facilities by disabled people.

I have received—and I am certain other members of the assembly have received—the resolution passed by the city of Toronto council, and the resolution passed by the city of Chatham council and endorsed by very many municipalities, both relating to these two problems: that is, access to public transportation and access to buildings, be they private and institutional or public and institutional; and a wide range of amendments required to the Ontario Building Code. The resolution of the city of Toronto was passed in January of this year.

The Chatham resolution relating to the extension of the public transportation system for physically handicapped people was passed early in 1978 by the city of Chatham and by the city of Toronto in November of last year.

I am not going to take up the time of the assembly, in the time allotted to me, to discuss the actual mechanics or procedures to be followed with respect to this extension of transportation systems which were pilot projects in five municipalities outside of Ontario. But all of us can obtain Transportation for the Physically Disabled, the 1979 summary published by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. It spells out both the history of those five pilot projects and the intended expansion of those projects, on an equal sharing basis, with those municipalities which may wish to participate.

I do, however, want to make this point. It does seem to me and I suggest to this assembly that this is an area which should not be left on an entirely voluntary basis of co-operation between the municipalities and the government of Ontario. Surely the basic rights of handicapped people should be enshrined in the Ontario Human Rights Code, as recommended in the report of the commission—the two should be linked together.

Surely, then, on the basis of that statutory protection against discrimination which should be part of the law of this province—surely on that basis then there should be the kind of legislation which would provide the resources and require a mutual co-operation and a mutual sharing by the municipalities and by the province. Or, in the case of those municipalities which for various exceptional reasons cannot afford that kind of assistance, then the obligation for that transportation should be taken on by the province itself.

My second point with respect to public transportation is that it appears to be the policy of the government at the present time to opt for the so-called parallel system of transportation for handicapped persons, rather than to make presently existing public transit systems accessible to them.

In the United States, as many of us are aware, a federal statute provides the funds, the urging and the prompting to municipalities to provide for access to the existing public transit systems, even though it is a long-term project and even though it does require significant expenditure of public funds to provide the kinds of equipment which would permit readily available access.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: It doesn't work.

Mr. Renwick: Parallel systems are not really equal systems. Parallel systems also separate. It reminds us of the saying not so very long ago, "separate but equal." You cannot say that today about either the pilot projects which were instituted or about the intended expansion of the pilot projects to other municipalities on a shared basis.

The separate but equal doctrine is one I do not subscribe to nor do the people in my caucus. We should be moving towards, as the mayor's task force for the city of Toronto indicated, the accessibility of public transit systems—bus, subway and otherwise—to the physically handicapped.

I may say, because I see some sort of movement on the government benches, that that's my understanding of what the government's policies are at this time. The Minister of Transportation and Communications on November 22 last, in a letter to Mr. Dale Shuttleworth, the president of the Social Planning

Council of Metropolitan Toronto, stated: "We in Ontario have studied seriously the implications of providing an accessible system versus a specialized parallel system for transporting the physically disabled and are satisfied that our prime objective of providing mobility would be most nearly satisfied by a parallel system and that this approach offers a higher level of service to the physically disabled at a substantially lower cost. Our thrust at this time, therefore, is directed towards specialized parallel services."

Mr. Shuttleworth and the minister exchanged some documents that were available from the United States or comment available with respect to the relative merits of the two methods of providing for this assistance.

I want to move from that aspect of the public transportation question. I've touched upon it; I have referred to the documentation involved; and I have made the specific points in that area I wish to make in this debate. I do, however, want to touch upon now and turn to those questions relating to access of buildings. Very briefly, this has been going on for a long time because we have part V, the addendum to the National Building Code, which is only a document of advice and is required to be implemented by those jurisdictions having authority, did provide for those changes in the building code which would provide for access to public buildings.

That has been assessed by the mayor's task force, to which I have referred earlier. They have adopted it and requested the government of Ontario to pass those particular requirements into the Ontario Building Code and have, in addition, supplemented it by various recommendations of their own.

For example, the mayor's task force made some 88 recommendations, many of which did not deal particularly with the access question. But of those relating to the access question to transportation, there are some 16 recommendations and, for access to public or institutionalized buildings and public buildings of varying types, with the widest possible scope to the term "public buildings", there are another 16 specific recommendations as well as the many other recommendations with respect to use of those facilities by handicapped people.

For example, the main thrust of the building requirements for handicapped people, is set out in the report of the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped, which was published in August 1978. It proposed amendments to part V of the building code which would enlarge the type of buildings which we can call the institutional type of buildings, for example, by adding to those types of buildings, the present 14 categories which are listed, another 37 categories of institutional public buildings. I'm not going to take the time, but I want to indicate that the present existing 14 categories of institutionalized buildings require to be supplemented by those additional 37 categories of public access buildings to which physically handicapped people should be entitled to access.

For the other classifications—government and office buildings, retail and commercial buildings and residential buildings—there are suggested enlargements of the area of ambit of those categories. For example, it specifically provides that all government-owned office buildings, not just government-occupied buildings, used for public purposes, should be so adapted to provide access.

There are several other extensions of the kinds of buildings which are to have access provided for. Throughout the report of the advisory council there are the specific recommendations as to the nature and quality of the access provisions, both to the buildings themselves and to the facilities within the buildings which should be made available to physically handicapped people.

[5:00]

All of those matters, particularly the basic recommendations that not only new buildings but, to the extent that it is possible for us to arrange to do so, existing buildings, should be adapted to provide access. The other additional recommendations set out in the mayor's task force form an almost complete addendum to the advisory council's recommendations which, if implemented, would permit us to make Ontario a province of all the people.

I want to say we must have not just a commitment of money; we must have a commitment of will and a commitment of resources other than money, in order to make that kind of Ontario a recognizable place for all of us.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot help but think at this particular time of the preface to the report of the human rights commission of Mr. Tom Symons, who was then the chairman of that commission. It deserves a reference to underline the points which I have tried to make in this debate:

"It is now essential that the human rights of the people of this province be redefined and extended in the light of these changes, that is, the changes which have taken place over the last 15 or 16 years since the code was first enacted, so that life together in Ontario may continue to be marked by an atmosphere of mutual understanding and by respect for the dignity of every person."

Further on, in the preface to that report it says:

"It is vital that the province give a high priority to human rights and that the province review at regular intervals its commitment to this area of its life to ensure that the needs are met." I underline this next statement: "This is particularly true in the current economic climate when the need for financial restraint is often matched by increasing incidence of discrimination."

In the body of the report, in the very first chapter, apart altogether from that section of the report beginning at page 72 which deals with the physical disabilities of people in relation to human rights in specific terms, there is the reference in the first chapter of the report that:

"The physically disabled are no longer content to stay in institutions or in somebody's back bedroom. On their emergence they are finding that their communities have been designed with somebody else in mind. Steps and curbs and telephone booths prevent them from participating in the common life and prejudice regularly prevents them from being considered for jobs within their competence."

As the mayor's task force has said, for physically disabled people, life is very much an obstacle course. I know I have the vocal support of members of the assembly for the purport and the implicit force of the resolutions which are brought forward, but I am saying to the government, which appears to be less than anxious to revise the Ontario Human Rights Code, let us at least start now to select those areas which touch upon so many ministries of the government. We can end, by the turn of the century at the very latest if we start now, that kind of discrimination which we have lived with for too long against those persons who are physically disabled.

I urge the House to support the resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has two minutes remaining. Does he wish to reserve that?

Mr. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible for the building code, I would like to make a few comments on this resolution today, particularly in regard to getting on with the job. The job isn't necessarily money; I agree with that. There has to be an allocation of resources. I presume that really means intellectual and thinking resources, as well as financial ones and, I agree with that. I want to put the facts of the matter on the record.

Both the building code branch of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations and the Provincial Secretariat for Social Development have been working on this, in concert with the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped, ever since that blue-covered book was published last August. Indeed, in my view, we have achieved some significant progress.

Before I go into it, I do wish to commend the member for Riverdale for putting this resolution forward so that it does get an airing in the House and so not only that the handicapped portion of our population can be made aware of the fact that people are moving towards some of the remedies which, quite frankly, are long overdue, but also that a good deal of thought and consultation is taking place.

I often wish that, someone would raise a question on a matter like this in the question period, so that it would not be necessary for a member to bring it up in private members' hour via a resolution in order that there could be commentary and dialogue upon it. But I suppose I am not exactly the kind of minister they would want to ask questions about the Ontario building code. They seem to prefer some other items.

I want to state the position of the government and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations—I want to do that first—and then I will come to the consultation and the positions adopted, in concert with us, by the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch).

In response to the recommendations of the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Disabled—and we have additional recommendations from other groups besides that—for amendments to the building code to assist handicapped persons, the building code branch requested that the newly organized Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped undertake the role of reviewing these recommendations and reporting on them.

I think it is obvious from the number of reports and so forth, which the mover of the motion either read partially or alluded to in his remarks, that there is a great body of information, suggestions, and recommendations and data out there. The first thing we want to do is co-ordinate it and bring it all together.

As a result of this initiative, the advisory council has prepared the set of recommendations that the member for Riverdale has referred to. At the same time, those recommendations were forwarded to us by the Provincial Secretary for Social Development and have been under review for some time by the building code branch. Part of the review included obtaining comments from other affected interests, particularly the study group on part V of the building code.

I will give you an idea of the particular affected interests, Mr. Speaker. I will do that in a moment, because I think one of the concerns we must have, notwithstanding the urge to get on with the job, is to be practical, not only in regard to new construction but also in terms of doing something in existing buildings. In the case of existing buildings, we are talking about 95 per cent—perhaps not in floor space—95 per cent of what is there. Certainly in Canada and Ontario we have changed in the past few years; buildings just do not last only 20 years any more and then go down under. Many of them are renovated and so on and last a considerable time.

Quite frankly, in the building code branch of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, we are now proceeding with the preparation of appropriate amendments to the building code in this regard. Since the work has just started, and there is continual dialogue on those recommendations, I am not going to go into them in individual detail. I would just like to point out some of the implications.

For instance, in one senior citizens' apartment—I think it is in Burlington or Hamilton—there is an elevating device, a lift, specifically designed for the handicapped which is working fine. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to your attention that that type of lift would not work in a commercial building. It's fine for that particular type of building, but it couldn't be brought out immediately as a design for a commercial building where there is a mixed usage. Those are some of the things we are looking at.

Ontario has been in the forefront in requiring new buildings to be designed and constructed to incorporate the features to make access and the use of buildings possible by the physically handicapped. With this review, I would like to tell the member we have a three-fold action program within the ministry in consultation with the Provincial Secretary for Social Development.

First, the preparation of the draft amendments on the proposals by the advisory council on which there is general agreement. These cover the majority of the recommendations made by the council.

Second, to undertake to resolve the recommendations that are sensible—I underline that—but about which there are implications. What implications? Are there available alternatives that achieve the recommendation without adding to the cost of a building? One of the things is improved wheelchairs that are collapsible. Is that a better alternative than widening the door for the conventional one? These are things that still have to be decided.

Then there are the implications for small business of access by the handicapped, the implications of the recommendations pertaining to residential accommodation and the cost of marketing implications. I don't mean to imply that these are deterrents. But we have to know where we're going or otherwise we're going to have a program that doesn't work. Then it has to be changed around again and we really have not achieved very much.

Finally, we want to inform the advisory council on anything on which we cannot proceed, because they're not building code matters. For example, the width of parking spaces, the height of electrical outlets, telephones, drinking fountains, elevator requirements and so on and so forth. There are a number of very specific and detailed dimensional requirements. We want those to go out to the architects, to the handicapped organizations, to builders, designers, et cetera.

I think that outlines the considerable amount of work that is being done by the ministries. Ontario has led the way. For instance, all new public buildings have had to have these for some time. We're not just talking about primary access. We're talking about real access, floor by floor, so the handicapped person is just as much at home within that structure as are you and I, the non-handicapped. There is Wintario money available for the conversion of public buildings that were built before these requirements.

Some of the designs being incorporated in Government Services projects, such as the Wentworth Regional Detention Centre, will play a very important role in the future. I know a jail is the last place you would want to look at the improvements that can be made in life for the handicapped. But bear in mind that this is a six-storey jail without a single stair, with absolute access to every floor by means of very skilfully designed ramps.

Already a very large number of designers are taking a look at that building. Nowhere else has that type of thing been done. The reason it was done was for security. But, by the same token, it is a very practical example of what can be done in a highrise building that does have a considerable population and a considerable mobility of population.

The Liquor Control Board of Ontario, for which I report to the House—

Mr. Haggerty: They're all on ground level, aren't they?

Hon. Mr. Drea: —is studying design changes and so forth because of the program that was instituted after I became the minister that there was to be a thrust to employ the handicapped. Part of the problem in existing liquor stores is stairs. We're talking there about employment and not just about the ability to get into the structure.

I raise these examples not because I think they are the outstanding things in the programs of the government but because as minister in two portfolios—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The other thing I would like to say in closing is that the other day I opened up a senior citizens' residence that was built by Metropolitan Toronto. For the first time the first floor instead of being wasted space had seven units for the handicapped. One of the people who was there was in a motorized unit. He was not a senior citizen but a relatively young man. His previous residence, the best the government could find for him, was on the 12th floor of a public housing building.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, the honourable member's time has expired.

[5:15]

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the member for Riverdale for his thoughtful introduction of the resolution we are debating here today and to let him know that I completely support the resolution. I have been fortunate in the past to have been on several government committees that have studied this problem, but really peripherally. It makes one wonder, when one listens to others speak, why we, in society, have taken until 1979—and I am not necessarily referring to this government, I am referring to society—to decide that the handicapped should not be discriminated against. They have an awful lot to contribute to our society but we don't give them the opportunity. We throw up, or have thrown up in the past, all types of road blocks to prevent them from taking the active role they would like to take and make the contribution they can make to society.

We are losing a valuable resource in not providing accessibility to many who are so unfortunate to be afflicted with various types of disabilities that prevent them from being as mobile as you and I, Mr. Speaker. Maybe not me today.

It was back in 1963 that a select committee was set up by the government to look into the problems of youth and, in the study of the youth problems, one of the things that was brought very forcefully to our attention was the fact that handicapped youth wanted to partake but were denied that privilege because of the physical makeup of various types of municipal, provincial and general institutions and/or buildings.

That committee did not make direct recommendations as far as the physical structure of buildings was concerned, but they made other recommendations and, to the best of my knowledge, it was the first time that we in government started to pay attention in some tangible way to the people who are disadvantaged for one reason or another, mobility-wise.

We have gone a fairly long way since then. I know we have attempted to accommodate them, when it comes to expressing their physical abilities, by games for the handicapped and I think that is a real forward step. Now, the handicapped can walk proudly down and say they are able, not only to compete with one another, but also compete and even excel when it comes to certain types of athletic endeavours. I commend the government for implementing that type of program. I think it is nice we now look on the handicapped in a different light.

One of the problems, as far as accessibility is concerned, is that in the past we haven't paid attention to the handicapped, or maybe the handicapped have not been vocal enough. Now they are finding if they become vocal, we listen and try to respond to their requests.

When travelling, as I have opportunities to do, I find out what other jurisdictions are doing, then come back home and see we haven't adopted some of them, and even though some may be very minor as far as we are concerned, they are very important to the handicapped. I cannot understand why on highway 401 we will not reserve special parking locations for those who are handicapped.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Every service station along highway 401 has reserved parking space for the handicapped.

Mr. Nixon: Cabinet ministers' cars are in them all the time.

Mr. B. Newman: They are available now? I am very pleased to hear that. I raised that issue in the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications last year because several handicapped people had mentioned to me that they have a fairly long distance to walk to get into the service centre.

Another thing I would suggest, so those who don't have a physical handicap don't come in and take the parking location, is to provide those who wish, either through an association for the handicapped or through government, with a sticker that can be put on the car for that one use and then taken away from the windshield, so that only those who have that sticker can park there. I know there is a disadvantage in that because some handicapped people may not remember to ask for a sticker, and as a result they would park there and, as I have seen happen in some cities, their car would be seen parked in the area and the penalty is extremely high. It's up to $100 for parking in a spot reserved for handicapped persons' vehicles.

I think we have to look into some of these minor things that can convenience the handicapped. I mention the window decal so that you can identify the vehicle. I spoke with the Minister of Transportation and Communications and suggested special licence plates with the handicapped symbol on them. One of my constituents who is a paraplegic drives his own vehicle, but he finds himself at a disadvantage when it comes to parking the vehicle. We could provide him with—and he suggested this—licence plates with the decal on them. I know some people wouldn't like to have that, and that is why I suggest a sticker which can be removed when it's not being used by the handicapped individual.

Another thing is the use of ramps. We are going into the use of ramps more and more, but there are still a lot of municipalities that hesitate to make those curb cuts so that the wheelchair patient can be easily moved about.

We have completely neglected them when it comes to accessibility of voting privileges. The minister may say that there is a location in the community to which the handicapped can drive and be moved in by wheelchair, but some of these voting polls are quite removed from the curb. As a result, there is a long way to push the wheelchair and/or other means of transportation that is being used to move the individual. I would suggest that to accommodate them the ballot box be brought to them. I don't think there is anything wrong with that.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: It can be. That's already available.

Mr. B. Newman: I was talking to an individual who was involved in that and he mentioned it wasn't allowed.

Mr. Haggerty: Where are they?

Mr. B. Newman: If it is allowed, that's wonderful; that's the thing we certainly should be doing.

My own community is specially fortunate, because we happen to have an individual by the name of Jack Longman who is a real activist. He has a walking handicap, but in spite of all that he is extremely concerned and has been able to convince the government, and I would think it was probably through the minister. As a result of his conversing with government and convincing others, we now have in the city of Windsor an ALPHA program, apartment living for the physically handicapped. It is, I think, either the first or one of the first in the province of Ontario. I was there for the ground-breaking, but I wasn't able to be there for the official opening. Let me tell you, when speaking with the people, smiles light up on their faces because of the fact that now they have accommodation where they don't have to depend on others to bring them into the building. They are either able to use their own wheelchairs or get in in a difficult fashion using some type of crutches, be they underarm or forearm support.

There are many other things one could say concerning this. Time limits one. There was a study by the select committee on the utilization of educational facilities. It made recommendations concerning section five of the building code. I know some of these recommendations do take time.

In conclusion I commend the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) for bringing in this resolution and I know he will have the full support of everyone in this Legislature.

Mr. McClellan: I am pleased and very delighted to rise in support of the resolution of my colleague from Riverdale. I want to speak a little about what I would see as the implications of a phrase in the resolution that I quote: "The House should adopt policies and introduce legislation to require that the needs of physically-handicapped persons be considered in the design and construction of residential housing."

I want to remind the House that in 1974 there was developed a program which was referred to as the care package program. It would have permitted funding on a program basis for the development of the physical housing for the handicapped—specially designed apartment facilities. Secondly, it would have provided on a program basis the requisite personal support services and attendant care to be built into that kind of accommodation. Then people with severe physical handicaps would have the opportunity, through a program systematically and regularly funded, of obtaining independent community living accommodation in apartments throughout the communities of this province which would have built into them personal support services.

The care package proposal received approval at a number of levels within the social policy field, but it was one of the first victims of the social service cutback in 1975. It was one of the first things Jim Taylor cut.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That is not true.

Mr. Nixon: It wasn't subverted by his employees then.

Mr. McClellan: No, it wasn't subverted by his employees; it was done in by the man himself. This was one of his first neanderthal acts.

He made some promises at the time he killed the care package. He said we weren't going to be moving into a program of funding independent community living for the physically handicapped but he made a pledge. He said every project that came forward to the ministry would be assessed, and if it was a viable project it would be funded. He made a promise that in exchange for a regular program, there was a commitment to project-by-project funding. That promise wasn't kept either.

There has been a number of excellent project proposals come forward over the past three and a half years for independent community living for the physically handicapped which have not been funded. As a matter of fact—I don't have my file with me but I believe there have only been four pilot projects funded in the province since the care package proposal was scrapped and the original promise of additional funding was made.

That is the tragedy in this province. We know, through the success of projects like the Clarendon Foundation, it is possible to build independent community living accommodation for the physically handicapped that gives them the kind of independence, with support, that permits them to continue their studies, and indeed to hold down full-time jobs.

[5:30]

You can't do that from an institution. People don't want to live in institutions. Nobody wants to live in institutions. People want to live as independently as possible in normal living accommodations, normal apartments within the community. This government has so far been unwilling to provide sufficient resources, even on a pilot project basis, to make this possibility a reality, despite the fact we know how to do it.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That's not true.

Mr. McClellan: The Provincial Secretary for Social Development is saying that's not true, but she wasn't in the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services last fall when I brought to the minister's attention the project proposal of the Clarendon Foundation for an expansion. The minister was not willing to fund that. There are people who are physically disabled who are living in chronic-care hospitals, and the only reason they are in chronic-care hospitals is because there were no independent community living facilities for them to move into.

The proposal from the Clarendon Foundation had been sitting on ministry desks for a long time. So much for Mr. Taylor's commitment and his promise on the part of the government to fund projects as they come forward.

We've had some promises again in the throne speech this year, and one of those promises was there would be funding available for normal community living facilities for the physically handicapped. I hope that promise is kept a little bit better than the promise about the care package proposal in 1974 or the promise to fund all viable pilot projects as they come forward which was made in 1975, because those promises weren't worth the paper they were written on. They simply were dishonoured.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That is not true at all.

Mr. McClellan: It was true and it is true and she knows it's true.

I still think the wise course of action for the government is to bring in legislation that establishes on a program basis, the possibility of providing community living alternatives for the physically handicapped as a matter of right. It should not be on a pilot project basis because we have sufficient experience to know normal community living facilities for the physically handicapped are as easy to design and to build and to run successfully as living accommodation for anybody else. We know we don't have to prove anything, we don't have to discover anything. All we have to discover is whether there is a government in this province with the decency to bring in program funding for community living for the physically handicapped. So far, the answer to that question is no.

The importance of the resolution is it provides once again a way for the government to hear the will of the House with respect to this most important issue. There is absolutely no reason why physically handicapped people cannot just live in communities with their friends and neighbours and families, but they can also work and study in the community. The handicapped, not even the most severely disabled have to be incarcerated in institutions. In 1979, we know how to help the physically handicapped to live normal and productive lives that involve working as well.

The second importance of this resolution is that it addresses itself to making the kinds of adaptations of commercial development that will make it possible for the physically handicapped to gain access to places of employment as a matter of course and as a matter of right.

I think it is a great tragedy this government has not seen fit to put together a major program for the physically handicapped. I'd like to suggest to the minister, as a very worthwhile government initiative, that he set aside a year, possibly next year, as the year of the handicapped and initiate a major government program on a whole series of levels, not just on one or two levels. Make it a major priority of the government in terms of program—not in terms of platitudes or rhetoric, but in terms of program—to move into the field on a programmed basis of providing sufficient community living accommodation to house all of the handicapped who need such accommodation; and that includes many people who are now in chronic-care hospitals or in places like Lyndhurst Hospital because these facilities do not exist.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

There is a great opportunity for the government to move in providing services to the handicapped. I hope, on the strength of this very excellent resolution, that they will find the will and determination to do just that.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure, and I would like to thank you for the opportunity, to speak in this debate this afternoon.

Knowing that the minister responsible for administering the building code would be speaking today, I chose particularly to speak on the first part of the resolution. Specifically, I would like to discuss transportation and housing in terms of what the government is doing to alleviate some of the problems of those who, unfortunately, experience physical handicaps.

As far as transportation for the handicapped goes, I should say that some immediate problems become apparent when considering the introduction of legislation requiring the needs of the disabled to be considered in all design and construction of transit systems. I am assuming, of course, that the resolution by its wording calls for accessibility to all classes of transportation.

Before I address one of the problems in particular, I would like to indicate my feeling that this government has already done much in the way of fulfilling the first proposal carried in the resolution.

We have, in fact, adopted policies which strongly encourage the inclusion of the needs of the handicapped in the design of transportation systems. While the government does not demand that absolutely every transportation system cater to these special and very important needs, it does provide many advisory services and monetary incentives that promote and support active planning on the part of communities and interested citizens who are in a position to best analyse the specific requirements of the handicapped in particular areas.

This brings me back to the major concern I share with the government concerning legislated transportation recommendations; in fact, present government initiatives have grown out of this concern. The study commissioned in 1974 by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, dealing with transportation services for the physically handicapped, concluded that construction or modifying all public transportation to accommodate the disabled would necessitate enormous expenditures and in many cases was not at all realistic because it could never be totally effective.

By the same token, recognition that many marginally disabled persons have been using conventional transportation systems with some difficulty has led the government to include the cost of extra grab rails, stanchions, preferential seating arrangements and stair markings within its municipal transit funding program.

It seems that while we must do everything possible to integrate the disabled into our transportation systems, as well as other aspects of society, we must be realistic. Realistically speaking, more mobility and quicker implementation of transit services can be achieved by providing parallel service for the disabled. If greater mobility can in this way be ensured, then I think the handicapped will become more easily integrated into society.

The study to which I referred mentioned problems encountered with existing transportation alternatives for the disabled. These included such things as the high cost of services, over-reliance on friends and relatives for continued support, and the difficulties of obtaining taxi service during peak periods.

The 1976 pilot project for the provision of systems overcoming these difficulties began in five municipalities. The project utilized modified mini-buses, special vans, passenger cars and taxis and was available to any member of those communities who was not able to board conventional transit.

Within a few days of the throne speech, the Minister of Transportation and Communications outlined the new program to the House in some detail. He announced then that, due to its initial success, service for the disabled has now been approved on a provincial basis. The 50 per cent funding of both capital and operating expense of the service was based on the knowledge that there are numerous effective methods of operating such services, most of which, however, are more expensive than conventional systems. I can, therefore, assure the members of this House, in much the same manner as did the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, that as of July 1, when this program becomes effective, there will be no need for any disabled citizen in any city to pay a transit fare exceeding those charged on regular transit systems.

I am of the strongest belief that the kind of service developing out of this kind of program will, in the long run, prove effective in answering the needs of this important group of individuals in society.

Ontario's program on transportation for the physically disabled is perhaps appropriate as we enter a time when this government and the opposition parties are preaching municipal autonomy and community responsibility. Surely we are in a period too when local involvement and the spirit of volunteerism are all-important in the consideration of supplying social services.

In this day and age, with demands on the government to assume a larger role in the delivery of social programs, we must be careful not to lose sight of the fact that our service structures as well as our institutions are most relevant and responsive to individual needs when we solicit community initiative and individual involvement.

Concerned citizen groups, non-profit organizations and municipal authorities should remain the key to determining the best means of operating and co-ordinating transportation services for the disabled.

Development of suitable accommodation for the handicapped poses particular problems. There are still many issues which I think we all realize need to be addressed. Perhaps most importantly, we know the alternatives available to the handicapped, either to total independent living in the community or to total care in an institution, are too few at the present time. I think we also realize that a shortage of adequate personnel for the provision of support services to the handicapped exist.

Both these concerns are mentioned in the second annual report of the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped. It was this report which formed part of the basis of the government's approval of four demonstration projects for handicapped adult accommodation in Toronto, Windsor, Ottawa and Thunder Bay. The aim of these projects was to encourage the financial independence of the handicapped while integrating them into the community. Support services such as homemaker aids, attendants and cooks are an important aspect of this program. Without these it is felt that little justification for the overall expenditures could be provided.

From the statement made in the throne speech, and because of their initial success, we can expect some expansion of these pilot programs for youth accommodation. A point I wish to make is that care certainly must be taken in moving towards provision of suitable housing for the handicapped. Perhaps St. James Town, where special modified units were constructed at considerable cost and left vacant because support service and location were unsuitable, can be seen as an example of this need.

It simply is not enough to legislate regulations encompassing all residential housing design and construction, when the particular requirements of the handicapped are so varied. I am pleased, therefore, with the recent initiatives taken towards establishing the framework for comprehensive housing and support services that retain a high degree of flexibility.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Belanger: I would like to finish off by adding that the intent of this resolution is to be heartily commended, since there is certainly great need for efforts to improve the integration and mobility of handicapped persons within communities, across this province, and in society as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa East has about a minute and a half.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to join with my colleagues in supporting the resolution of the member for Riverdale. I had the pleasure of participating in the planning of a senior citizens' home in my riding. As the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations was saying, I found that ministry extremely co-operative in planning facilities on the bottom floor of that building for physically handicapped individuals in the riding. I don't compliment the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett) all that often but, in this particular situation, he certainly acquiesced to the initiative taken by the handicapped in the Ottawa East and Vanier area in providing these facilities.

Mr. Nixon: He was a good minister. You don't get so much co-operation now.

Mr. Roy: It was extremely heartwarming to participate in the opening and see the handicapped. By that time they had integrated into this small community that builds up in these senior citizens' units. I really appreciated that.

Je veux dire juste en finissant brièvement, monsieur l'Orateur, à mon collègue de Prescott-Russell—que cela fait deux fois qu'il fait un discours en deux semaines. C'est extraordinaire.

Mr. Nixon: Deux fois?

Mr. Roy: Deux fois. Est-ce qu'il y a une course à la chefferie? Is there a leadership race going on out there?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired. The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Roy: Les gens vont être fiers de toi, à Prescott-Russell, Albert.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the participation in the debate by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, by the member for Windsor-Walkerville, by my friend from Prescott and Russell, by the member for Ottawa East and, of course, by my colleague, the member for Bellwoods.

Two or three very brief points: I want to emphasize, of course, what should not need emphasizing: that I was only speaking to one aspect of one kind of discrimination. I do not want anyone to think, simply by dealing solely with physical access to premises that that will deal with all the kinds of discrimination which affects handicapped people, or other minorities.

I say to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations that what prompted me to deal with it, in the time available to me as a private member on public business, was the apparent disregard by the government of the report of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, Life Together. I tend to think that the best way to prove commitment in this field and, therefore, provide the correlative resources required, would be for the government to implement recommendation 78 of the Ontario Human Rights Commission. Under that umbrella, that kind of programmatic approach, which my colleague, the member for Bellwoods, indicated was the proper and appropriate way to deal with it, could be the method by which this severe problem of discrimination could be urgently attacked and eliminated.

Mr. Speaker: The time for this item has expired.

Mr. Renwick: In closing, I want to say I appreciate the support of members and I also want to be certain that the government restraint program does not limit the commitment of the government to the elimination of this aspect of this form of discrimination.

FAMILY BENEFITS AMENDMENT ACT

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on Bill 11.

EASE OF ACCESS BY PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Renwick has moved resolution 6.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: Could you tell me which is the greater honour: to have the vote refused or to have the motion carried?

Mrs. Campbell: To have it refused.

Mr. Speaker: I will leave that to the judgment of the honourable member.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 5:53 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: Pauline M. McGibbon, the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1980, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, April 17, 1979.

VISITOR

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of minor privilege: I want to call the attention of the members of the House to the presence in the gallery of a good friend and former colleague of all the members here, Mr. Ed Good, the former member for Waterloo North.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Clerk had received, and laid upon the table, certificates of by-elections in the electoral districts of Scarborough West and Wentworth.

Electoral district of Scarborough West:
R. F. Johnston.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

This is to certify that in view of a writ of election dated February 19, 1979, issued by the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario and addressed to Mrs. Muriel Neundorf, returning officer for the electoral district of Scarborough West, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Scarborough West in the Legislative Assembly of this province, in the room of Stephen Lewis, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Scarborough West, has resigned his seat, Richard F. Johnston, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated April 14, 1979, which is now lodged of record in my office.

(Signed) Roderick Lewis, Chief Election Officer; Toronto, April 17, 1979.

Richard F. Johnston, Esquire, member-elect for the electoral district of Scarborough West, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Electoral district of Wentworth: C. Isaacs.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

This is to certify that in view of a writ of election dated February 19, 1979, issued by the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario and addressed to Mrs. Mary Wiebe, returning officer for the electoral district of Wentworth, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Wentworth in the Legislative Assembly of this province, in the room of Ian Deans, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Wentworth, has resigned his seat, Colin Isaacs, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated April 14, 1979, which is now lodged of record in my office.

(Signed) Roderick Lewis, Chief Election Officer; Toronto, April 17, 1979.

Colin Isaacs, Esquire, member-elect for the electoral district of Wentworth, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

BAPTISTE LAKE RESCUE

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of informing the members of still another act of bravery and resourcefulness by another member of our staff, Frank Hicks.

Mr. Hicks was instrumental in the rescue of one of five men when their snowmobile went through the ice on Baptiste Lake, in the Bancroft district, on March 31. Mr. Hicks, who is a fisheries biologist in the Algonquin Park district, was off duty and spending the weekend at his cottage by Baptiste Lake, northwest of Bancroft. Later that Friday evening, after the 11 o'clock news, Mr. Hicks retired. He had earlier heard two snowmobiles cross the lake and stop at a neighbouring cottage. It was near midnight and he heard the two machines start up for the return trip across the lake. Moments later he heard a third machine starting at his neighbour's, and, suspecting something might be wrong, got out of bed and watched his neighbour's machine go out on the lake. When the tail light dipped suddenly and disappeared he knew the machine had gone through the ice. As it happened, the third machine had been going to the aid of the two men with the first two machines, which had also broken through the ice. In all, three snow machines and five men were in the frigid water of Baptiste Lake.

Mr. Hicks dressed hurriedly, grabbed a flashlight and part of a wooden extension ladder, and made his way out on the ice to the shouting victims who were about 200 yards from shore. By the time he arrived one man had got onto the ice and was making his way back to the cottage, and two other men were out of the water and trying to rescue a fourth.

Mr. Hicks fell through the rotting ice in the darkness and the fog, but managed to reach the pair and help pull the fourth man out. He told him to make for the cottage and set about to rescue the remaining fifth man who was some distance away and separated by open water. Mr. Hicks returned to shore to get his canoe and could not locate the paddle. He launched the canoe and used the ladder to paddle kayak-style to where he had last seen the remaining man in the water. As he was trying to rescue him the canoe capsized and Mr. Hicks was thrown into the water. Using the ladder he clambered onto safe ice, emptied his canoe and launched it again. Using the ladder to steady the canoe, Mr. Hicks managed to pull the fifth man into the canoe.

The unfortunate victim had been in the water for almost half an hour and was nearly exhausted. To reach safe ice, Mr. Hicks had to make several attempts to force his canoe to override the edge of the shore before succeeding. Once on firm ice he used the canoe as a sled and dragged the man to shore.

Frank Hicks is 33 years of age, married, with three small daughters. He acted without hesitation in going to the help of the victims of a potentially tragic accident in which he might well have lost his life. Indeed, others close to the scene have commented that Mr. Hicks could have lost his life during his rescue attempts.

I am sure that honourable members will share the pride I feel that in the Ontario government service we have such splendid and selfless people as Frank Hicks of Whitney and pilot Bob Grant of Kenora whom I commended in the Legislature on March 29.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have another brief statement in connection with flooding in southwestern Ontario.

The Easter long weekend brought more flooding problems to southwestern Ontario. I would like to bring honourable members up to date on what has happened, and also what we expect will happen in the next 24 hours.

Mr. S. Smith: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I am having trouble hearing the member and I haven't a copy of his statement.

Oh, here is the copy, thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, this was compiled just after lunch.

Based on information from the staff of the Lower Thames Valley Conservation Authority, I can say I am cautiously optimistic that the flood crest which is passing through Thamesville now will not cause serious flooding in the Chatham area later today. I am also cautiously optimistic that the dikes along the lower Thames, including the sections where we experienced problems last month, will hold.

I would like to mention that the people of south Chatham have already experienced serious flooding this weekend. We understand that more than 200 homes have suffered water damage as a result of heavy runoff from McGregor and Indian Creeks. The flooding in this area was as serious as it was in 1968—the worst flood year in south Chatham. We fully sympathize with residents in the south Chatham area who we understand suffer damp basements almost every spring.

Let me review quickly what happened and what we expect. Between 1 p.m. Friday and 1 a.m. Saturday at least 50 millimetres—that is about two inches—of rainfall were recorded in some parts of southwestern Ontario. The soil in that area was already saturated. Any additional moisture simply runs off. The effect of that runoff from small creeks and feeder streams was felt in the main waterways on Saturday and Sunday. During this time the Ministry of Natural Resources advised the following conservation authorities that they might experience some trouble: St. Clair, Ausable-Bayfield, Kettle, Catfish, Upper Thames, Lower Thames, Saugeen Valley, Maitland Valley, Grand and Nottawasaga.

[2:15]

Water levels in the smaller watersheds peaked on Saturday morning. Water levels in the lower reaches of the Grand peaked on Monday. Some flooding had already occurred at Galt (Cambridge), Brantford and New Hamburg on Saturday and Sunday. There was also some flooding at Dresden and Wallaceburg.

We are paying particular attention today to the Lower Thames area. There is now a crest of high water passing through Thamesville. This crest is flowing at a rate of 27,000 cubic feet per second. The rate of flow during last month's flooding was 30,000 cubic feet per second. Conservation authority flood forecasters here in Toronto tell me that this particular crest has flattened out. They expect this flattened crest to reach Chatham at approximately 10 o'clock tonight and Dover township 12 hours later. I repeat, we are cautiously optimistic that no serious flooding will occur in these areas.

Elsewhere in the province, in the Sudbury area 55 millimetres of rain have fallen, but as yet we haven't received any reports of flooding. Lesser amounts of rain have fallen throughout central and eastern Ontario, but we do not expect problems in those areas.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. S. Smith: If I may, I would direct a question to the provincial Treasurer, Mr. Speaker, following the information which the Minister of Natural Resources was kind enough to give us on the recent flood situation.

Is the Treasurer prepared now to accept some of the suggestions that have come from this side of the House and elsewhere to set up a proper disaster relief fund in Ontario, and not one that depends on the government's being able to match the contribution within a local municipality, given that flooding has become a rather regular and widespread occurrence and given that not every municipality has the same capability of fund-raising within its own local area? Does the Treasurer not think that a disaster relief fund which did not depend on the matching grant formula would be a fairer and more reasonable and equitable way to do things?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I thought for a moment the member was raising funds for his party.

Mr. J. Reed: You really don't take it seriously, do you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am sure the government would be glad to review the kinds of relief we have for disasters in the province. Yet, generally speaking, I feel that the form of assistance has been fair in the cases where it has been required. The member made the comment that we are having floods more frequently or on a regular basis. I think he used words to that effect.

Mr. S. Smith: It was more regularly than frequently.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was going to say that certainly the experience with the various conservation authorities would show that with minor exceptions the efforts that have been taken, particularly in southwestern Ontario, have been very useful. I have had some exposure to that, as the member knows.

While we lack them in several areas, the Upper Thames River Conservation Authority, I believe, is studying the Glen Gowan dam proposal at this point and a few others of that nature. Generally speaking, these efforts have really minimized insofar as possible the overall risks in those parts of the province subject to flooding.

The Chatham-Kent area, and I am sure parts of Essex, are particularly subject to flooding. In fact, if one used flood-plain criteria such as we use in other parts of the province, my recollection is that they would all fall below the requirements of the flood-plain criteria. Therefore, we have a particularly difficult situation in those parts of the province.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: in addition to changing the disaster relief fund from a matching grant formula to a more direct grant basis, would the minister consider a government-run flood insurance scheme, in which part of the premium would be paid by the government on the equivalent basis of what it now pays for disaster relief, while the remaining part of the premium would be paid by the people who would be receiving the insurance?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would never reject out of hand any useful proposal. I don't know whether that has been considered before or not. Rather than simply saying yes or no, I'd be glad to check into it.

Mr. Yakabuski: Supplementary: If the Treasurer is considering a change in the formula insofar as disaster funds in this province are concerned, would he also give consideration to changing the formula that might apply to Renfrew county with regard to the snow damage that destroyed so many farm buildings this past winter?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That was not only in Renfrew county. I would suspect that my own constituency had a good deal of snow damage. I learned, much to my surprise, that that now appears to be an insurable risk in certain policies. Therefore, if it is, I would think it is best to let the individual make the decision.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: If the Treasurer is going to look into aspects of these disaster funds, I wonder if he would consider making available low-interest loans to some municipalities which feel that matching dollar for dollar in a disaster-type fund might not be adequate, but a low-interest loan from the government of Ontario might be more adequate. Would he also look into that area?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would have to check the details of the two kinds of relief we have. It seemed to me that the fundamental part of shoreline protection was that approach, where the interest rates were either lower or very low. Again, I'm not saying anything will happen. I'm simply saying I would be pleased to look at these kinds of programs to determine if they're adequate, and if they are—

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Is the Treasurer able to recall the situation where the government was able to send aid to the victims of the fire in Cobalt, without using the normal procedure of meeting dollar for dollar the funds raised locally? Would he not appreciate that in certain natural disasters the dollar-for-dollar formula serves the government, but does not serve the people who must either rebuild or replace the property they have lost and that, therefore, it is necessary to have a program that meets the actual needs of the community?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think I answered the suggestion earlier when I said I'd be glad to look at it.

Mr. S. Smith: Have a flood before an election.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't recall exactly how the moneys to Cobalt were handled. I recall the fire very well. I think it was in June 1977.

Mr. Bolan: It was during an election campaign. That's why you gave the money.

Mr. Nixon: You are prepared to play politics with anything.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Or anyone.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At that point I believe we diverted all of our fire bombers—

Mr. Warner: You are going to study it. You would send Al Capone to study the banks.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —from a very bad fire in the Cobalt area—in fact, it got out of control as a result of that action—to save what parts of the community we could. In the case of that kind of action, that was a terrible fire at a very hot and windy time, if I recall.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the Treasurer referring to the election campaign? It was a hot and windy time.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It was hot and windy because the Leader of the Opposition was there.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Energy? I guess this is a kind of supplementary question to the discussion we had a few days ago about the Babcock and Wilcox boilers which were returned.

Can the minister provide further details, which he said he didn't have at the time, concerning how the inspection was done, an inspection which apparently allowed these boilers to be installed and only later discovered the problems in the tubing? Can the minister tell us what are the costs involved in this regard that might have to be picked up by Hydro?

How could the inspector, on behalf of Hydro, have missed the error in the first place? Is this not a serious oversight from a technological point of view? Will we be getting further details from the minister?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, answering the last part of the question first, yes, we will. I have not seen the interior of one of those boilers, but I can send the Leader of the Opposition a sketch. It's a very complex and large mechanism. Certain tests are done, I assume, at the factory. Certain other tests are done by Hydro when the unit reaches the site and further testing has been going on of specific boilers because of various anomalies that may have been detected, or the fact that the testing process by Hydro, as I mentioned, is a very lengthy and cautious and careful process.

It actually took several months to get to the point which Hydro did—I guess it was mid-December when it suggested that manufacturing on the remaining numbers cease until further and more detailed testing was done, which I believe eventually involved the taking apart one of the units to check the inside.

I will send the Leader of the Opposition a sketch showing this, and I will attempt to get the detailed information for him as to the methodology as soon as I can, although I am not sure that all the tests have been completed.

Mr. Warner: Right; the minister should study the boiler from the inside.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As far as the matter of cost is concerned, as I mentioned, this is a matter of discussion between Hydro and the supplier, and apparently Atomic Energy of Canada Limited which is also involved and was involved in the design. It may take some time to resolve this matter. I will not speculate, but I think there are a number of costs involved and some of these may be expected by Hydro to be borne by the manufacturer and, conversely, expected by the manufacturer to be the cost of Hydro or Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Mr. Warner: This is nothing, wait until supplementary time.

Mr. Martel: Would the minister repeat that answer?

Hon. Mr. Auld: After I've seen Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is in Hansard.

Mr. Grande: Does the minister mean that Hansard picked it up?

Mr. S. Smith: It's with the greatest of trepidation that I hazard a supplementary question.

The minister will appreciate that bent, pinched or narrow tubes seem rather fundamental to a boiler. Could the minister therefore explain how it is that these tubes could have escaped the notice of Hydro until the installation had taken place and that only then, at that point, did it realize that this very fundamental deficiency existed? The whole thing had to be disassembled, taken out; and now there is a dispute, I take it, regarding tens of millions of dollars of cost as to who pays for the taking out and re-installation of the boilers. How could Hydro have missed in the inspection the fundamental problem with the tubes right from the beginning?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was going to say unfortunately, perhaps I should say fortunately, I don't have the details. I have the wrong book for the details today.

Mr. Nixon: The minister left the details book at home today, did he?

Hon. Mr. Auld: A possible, very simple explanation which I understand—

Mr. McClellan: Possibly an explanation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —is that previously the tubes, of which there are several hundred and which are inside a thing called the moderator, were heat treated, and the rest of the structure was heat treated, and then the tubes were welded into the other structure. It may be that in these ones—as I mentioned it's a different metal too—when they were assembled and then heat treated it was in the method of heat treating.

Mr. Laughren: Are you Tory backbenchers following this?

Mr. Turner: Are you?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Would the Leader of the Opposition like me to continue?

Mr. Nixon: I'm sure the minister could.

Mr. S. Smith: Did they meet Hydro specifications when they left the plant?

Mr. Turner: Listen to this, Floyd.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'm sure the specifications didn't change. It's what happened inside the boiler that may have changed.

Mr. M. Davidson: A supplementary: Can the minister confirm that the damage to the tubes resulted primarily from a change in method of process, a method of process that was being carried out by Babcock and Wilcox, and on instructions from either Atomic Energy of Canada Limited or Ontario Hydro to Babcock and Wilcox the method of process be changed?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can't confirm that, because I have read that Babcock and Wilcox indicated there had been some change in the specifications, not put forward by B and W, but recommended by either the customer or Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the member for Halton-Burlington.

Mr. J. Reed: When the minister is apprising himself of the facts surrounding the inspection and standards expected by Ontario Hydro, would he also do a comparison as to the method of approval used by Hydro right now, as opposed to the way it was seven or eight years ago when Hydro inspectors actually went into the processing plants? At that time they took for testing samples of the castings that were being poured and their related ingots. Would the minister find out if in fact they still do that kind of thing; or are they now relying more on what is being told them from a distance?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It would seem to me there is a great opportunity for honourable members to get the technical details first hand, because, I believe Hydro will shortly be appearing before the select committee to answer questions about its safety program. If there are questions unanswered at that time, I will be delighted to try to get the answers and relay them to the House; although I do think it would be more effective to get them directly from the technical people involved.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Health arising out of questions I put to the Premier (Mr. Davis) last week. The Premier said last week that the minister would endeavour to find a solution to the problems facing people in Windsor, where the only two neurosurgeons have both opted out of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. One of these neurosurgeons is now charging rates that are almost double the OHIP rate.

Can the minister say what the government intends to do to ensure that patients needing office care by such opted-out physicians can get that care at the OHIP rate, without paying a surcharge? And how is this covered by the government's recent agreement with the Ontario Medical Association that was meant to guarantee universal accessibility to health-care services?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think the principles as outlined in my statement of March 29 are very clear. With respect to in-hospital care, the principle that applies is that the services will be available at the OHIP rates. As regards other aspects, where the patient has not agreed beforehand he does not pay. I have not had any report back on that particular situation.

The member might be interested to know that just about a year ago right now the concern being expressed in the city of Windsor was that it was not going to have any neurosurgeons at all. The concern a year ago was that the elder of the two gentlemen was going to retire and leave the practice of medicine completely, and that the younger one was going to leave the city. There was very real concern that in emergencies people would have to go to Detroit.

It was with that in mind, being very much concerned about providing incentive to keep neurosurgeons there, that I approved putting a CAT scanner in Windsor as an inducement to retaining their neurosurgical expertise in the area, or to recruit others if in fact either of those gentlemen, for whatever reason, did leave their practices in that community.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister hasn't answered the question at all. He says his agreement only covers in-hospital care and he hasn't said how it relates to care in the offices. Since one of the doctors in question, Dr. Kleider, the elder of the two, has said that he has doubled his rates in an effort to force the Ontario government to put doctors on salary—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Oh, come on; you've got to be kidding, you really have to be kidding.

Mr. Cassidy:—can the minister explain why the government is not providing this alternative for doctors who wish to practise medicine this way; and why the government instead is sticking so rigidly, and only, to the fee-for-service system?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, we do have salary arrangements through the hospitals, for instance for emergency services; there are a number of hospitals in the province where the emergency departments are operated by groups of physicians on a contractual basis. I would not be opposed at all to considering that kind of arrangement, if the doctor wants to propose that through the hospital in which he has privileges and if they want to put it forward to us.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: I was going to ask exactly the same question the member asked of the minister. I wonder if the minister would consider having him put on staff at one of the hospitals and put on salary?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, each physician of course deals with individual hospitals on the question of hospital privileges. It so happens the Hotel Dieu of St. Joseph is the centre for neurosurgical services in that community; that is where the new CAT scanner is going to be located. All I am saying is, if those physicians want to put together a proposal through that hospital, I am quite prepared to entertain it.

Mr. Cooke: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that both these neurosurgeons in Windsor have sent out letters to all general practitioners in the Windsor-Essex area telling them that if there is any hardship on the patients they are to contact the doctors and more or less plead their case for charity medicine in the city of Windsor? Does the minister approve of that kind of process?

Instead of giving us all this waffling, as he has done today, what is the minister prepared to do? The facts are clear. What is the minister prepared to do to guarantee neurosurgical service in offices and hospitals in Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, one possibility would be to introduce what has been proposed by the Ontario Medical Association, namely patient streaming and balanced billing. If the honourable member is saying his party now believes in patient streaming and balanced billing, that is an interesting revelation.

Mr. Warner: What are you going to do?

Mr. Breagh: Is that your answer?

Mr. Cooke: You are a disgrace.

Mr. Martel: You are digging yourself in.

Mr. Cassidy: Every day we lose a bit more of the health system in Ontario, and it is because of that minister and that government.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Balderdash! The only people who are destroying the health-care system are the NDP.

Mr. Martel: Oh, yes. We are in power!

FOOD PRICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Premier and Provincial Secretary of Justice.

Since the price of beef has gone up by 24 per cent in the three and a half months since the government promised action to monitor the outrageous food prices we are having today, and since food prices are now running at 21 per cent higher than a year ago, could the Deputy Premier tell us when we can expect some action from the government to protect consumers from the seemingly relentless increase in food prices which is going on week after week and month after month across the province?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize for the fact that my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) is not here. No doubt he is out giving some thought to that particular question now.

There was, as the honourable member will know, some reference in the speech from the throne with respect to that ministry having some responsibilities to monitor that; and certainly when the minister gets back he will no doubt be able to respond more fully to that question.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Deputy Premier aware of the existence of the group Women Against Rising Prices, a group which was established in the backyard of the Premier (Mr. Davis) himself because of concern over the inaction of the government in terms of not just monitoring prices but also rolling them back?

Is the Deputy Premier aware that this week the group has called upon consumers across the province to boycott flour because its price has gone up by half in the course of the last three months?

Is the Deputy Premier aware that the group is now calling upon consumers across the province to boycott chicken because the price of chicken has gone up by a third over the course of the past year?

Does the Deputy Premier not think it about time for the government to step in, rather than making ordinary consumers do the work of the government for it by having to step in because of the inaction of this government?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, while the member is looking at his notes for a supplementary question, I should point out that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations did not have to wait for any organization of women to remind the people of this province of the power of the consumer in the marketplace; indeed, his record speaks fairly clearly on that matter.

Mr. Foulds: Give us one concrete action he has taken.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am aware of all of the concerns. I did not have to have an organization of women to tell me; my wife has been telling me that all weekend.

HYDRO TRANSMISSION LINES

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy: Now that the southern three municipalities in the regional municipality of York, namely, Markham, Vaughan and Richmond Hill, have passed a resolution calling for an environmental assessment study of the 550 kilovolt transmission line through their area, would the minister exercise his discretion and grant them this much-sought-after impact study?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the part of the transmission line that is in the parkway belt could not be moved outside the parkway belt without really starting from scratch. However, I will be delighted to look into the honourable member's suggestion, although I think that, legally, it is not possible in part of the route. There would be no point in doing an assessment unless there was going to be a change which could not be achieved otherwise.

As the honourable member is aware, the parkway steering committee has been looking at a section of the line, has been in touch with the municipalities, has had several public information meetings, has been in touch with the members involved, and is expected to report very shortly. When we have seen that report, then we would be, again, in a better position to judge what the next step would be.

GLANBROOK LANDFILL SITE

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. With regard to the hearings that are going on in Glanbrook under the Environmental Protection Act, could the minister explain why his staff are participating in those hearings in support of the application for a landfill site when it is the responsibility of the board to make a recommendation to the director, and hence to the minister, concerning the disposition of the region's application for a dump? Does the minister not agree that participation by his staff in support of the application of the application suggests prejudice on the part of the ministry?

Mr. MacDonald: That's what I call a sharp question.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I wonder who prepared it for him.

Mr. Cassidy: How much does the minister's speech writer get?

Mr. MacDonald: That's why he got elected.

Mr. Speaker: The question was fairly direct; it is to be hoped the answer will be equally so.

Mr. Cassidy: Who wrote Gordon Dean's speeches?

Mr. Laughren: What a cheap shot.

Mr. Cassidy: When in doubt, bluster.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is an interesting experiment with which the member has started off his career, and I am sure he sees that his party is perhaps more interested in the question than it is in the answer.

Mr. Laughren: What a silly man you are.

Mr. Cassidy: Withdraw your staff from the hearings now if you want to be impartial. Withdraw your staff now, that is what you should do.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, if we should withdraw our staff from the hearing, I am sure the first thing we would hear is that we refused to put forward any information that might help. It is so typical of the position; regardless of what stand this ministry and its staff will take we will be subject to criticism, that is normal for the course.

However, I think we can be at those hearings without showing a bias for or against. We have an obligation to put as much information forward for the environmental assessment hearings as is possible. We want those decisions to be made based on facts, not emotions. That's why we are there, trying to put facts forward that will allow the assessment board to make a valid decision.

[2:45]

Mr. Isaacs: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given the minister's non-answer, will he assure this House the services of his staff will be made available on an equal basis to those who oppose the landfill site on environmental grounds, as they are being made available to the proponents to the site?

Mr. S. Smith: You wouldn't want them, they wouldn't be much help.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to put as much information forward as we have. It matters not whether it supports the application or is in opposition to it. Our attempt is to put forward the information. We don't have a closed mind on the value of that site like the members opposite have.

Mr. Foulds: You have a closed mind and an open mouth; you are a bad loser.

Mr. Cunningham: I would like to ask the minister, recognizing this proposed site involves 550 acres much of which is very good farm land, if this is not in his view a case for consideration under the Environmental Assessment Act what is?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No one questions whether or not we should have an environmental assessment; that was our position. I don't understand the question; of course we believe it should have an environmental assessment.

Mr. S. Smith: Under which act?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Well I am not sure it matters.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Sometimes it is wise, I would say to the member for St. George, to wait until the full sentence is completed.

Mr. S. Smith: What is the point of having an Environmental Assessment Act?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am not sure that in this particular case, given the broad parameters under which the board always hears matters, whether it's under the Environmental Protection Act or the Environmental Assessment Act, that there's any real difference. The board has not limited discussions to the pure technical aspects of the matter. It has heard the broad concept, as it would under the Environmental Assessment Act; therefore it makes very little difference which act it is heard under. There is a difference in the appeal procedures but not in the hearing procedures.

THAMES RIVER FLOODING

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Minister of Natural Resources come to order?

Mr. Watson: I guess he is the Minister of Energy at the present moment. I appreciate very much the statements the minister released today on the flood conditions, but I do have a question. There have been, from time to time, proposals for a dam on the Kent system to prevent such floods from happening. It is my understanding about two thirds of the water that goes through Chatham does not now go through any restraining system. Would the minister consider some type of study or some kind of investigation into a dam, and specifically the Wardsville dam that has been proposed? Could that be looked into again?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Thames River study did recommend the possible construction of two other dams below Glen Gowan. One was to be located at Thamesville or at Wardsville. Apparently the soil conditions at Thamesville were not adequate for a dam, consequently Wardsville would be the choice. However, the Wardsville dam would not be effective, as I understand it, until the Glen Gowan dam is completed. At the moment there is an environmental assessment in progress about the Glen Gowan dam. We expect that to be completed very shortly and then there will be a decision taken about proceeding with the Glen Gowan dam. I will attempt to get for the honourable member the latest information about Wardsville, although my understanding is it would not be effective, as I said at the outset, without the Glen Gowan dam.

FOREIGN PURCHASES OF AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr. Riddell: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food on the business of foreign investment in land, which doesn't seem to excite him too much. Would it cause the minister concern if I told him that just recently $45,000,000 in German money has been transferred to banks in Huron county and surrounding areas to be used for the purchase of farm land and that that represents somewhere in the neighbourhood of 30,000 to 40,000 acres?

Hon. W. Newman: I am always concerned about agricultural land and its proper use in this province.

Mr. Martel: That is why you didn't follow up the resolution by the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot).

Hon. W. Newman: I pointed out to the member that we were doing an update on Kent county. We are also doing a study on Huron county, which should be completed before too long, and a study on Huron township and Bruce county. We are looking into that request by his seatmate.

If there is this money in the banks that the member is talking about to buy land in Huron county and in other areas of this province, I would like to know to what use that land is going to be put, if foreign interests are buying it, and if they are going to put people on it.

I wouldn't want to remind the honourable member that in Huron county there is an operation, which I think his seatmate knows very well about. It is a very well-run operation, and representation was made by his own party to release the land transfer tax on that particular property.

I am not criticizing the member, because I think he did the right thing.

Mr. Gaunt: Those people are actively farming the land and are exporting hogs all over the world. That is quite different from absentee foreign ownership.

Hon. W. Newman: Let me say that I am concerned if large tracts of land are being bought. At this point in time, one real estate person writes me a letter or somebody else phones me and tells me they are going to buy a 1,000-acre block here and a 1,000-acre block there and they are taking the going price, whatever price the farmer sets. Until I have some facts and figures in front of me, I want to have a very close look at it and see what those are.

An hon. member: That is too late.

Hon. W. Newman: No, it is not too late at all.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that at least four other provinces in Canada have passed legislation restricting foreign ownership of land? Is he also aware that just recently the United States government sent out a questionnaire to every landowner in the United States requiring them to disclose who the owner of the land is and whether there is foreign capital in that land? If they fail to provide that information the penalty amounts to 25 per cent of the assessed value of the property. If all these other jurisdictions are concerned, what in the world is it going to take to move the minister?

Mr. Mackenzie: Ontario for sale is government policy.

Hon. W. Newman: To deal with the member's specific question regarding the US legislation; yes I have read it, I am fully aware of the fact that foreign owners of land must register with a certain agency in the US to acquire it. I am also aware that some of the provinces do have some legislation. The member may forget that we do have a land transfer tax.

Mr. Riddell: Which means nothing.

Hon. W. Newman: That's the member's opinion. There is a 20 per cent land transfer tax in the province of Ontario on farm land and recreation land.

By the way, I have read the speech the member gave in the House. I would suggest he check his figures in Hansard, because I think he was misquoted. Outside of that, I would point out that there are a lot of good people buying land and that money is coming from other countries. Many of these foreign citizens are coming here to farm that particular land and many of them are taking out landed immigrant status.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: Would the minister consider making representation to the cabinet for the establishment of an investment review board in the province of Ontario so that we will know what is going on in this gradual takeover of so much agricultural land by foreign interests?

Hon. W. Newman: I just finished saying that we are keeping an eye on the two areas of concern which have been brought to my attention.

Mr. Mackenzie: Branch plant farming as well as branch plant manufacturing.

Hon. W. Newman: We did a study of Kent county when members opposite were making a great deal of noise about the takeover of land in Kent county; it turned out to be about one per cent of the land, and that wasn't necessarily being taken up by foreign owners. They could have been Canadians who were resident somewhere else—in the United States or some other part of the world. The member is making a tremendous hue and cry—

Mr. MacDonald: Answer my question.

Hon. W. Newman: I just point out that the member always likes to make a lot of noise about these things. Let's get the facts and I will make the decisions.

Mr. Foulds: That's what he asked you.

Hon. W. Newman: I said I will get the facts and make a decision.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. He informs the House that his staff is reviewing this problem in many parts of Ontario. Does the minister have a specific plan that he would be prepared to implement if his staff finds that foreign ownership of agricultural land in Ontario is very large? Does he have a plan he is prepared to implement?

Hon. W. Newman: We are always looking at plans and programs in my ministry.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That means no.

Hon. W. Newman: We have looked at the foreign ownership of land. From the last survey we did we do not feel there was any major problem to be concerned about at that time.

Mr. MacDonald: It was all gone by then.

Hon. W. Newman: Oh nuts. What does the member know about farming? I have to give him a lot of credit. I say we are watching it very carefully. We have the capacity of the land here to do what we want to.

Mr. Riddell: The select committee of which you were a member made recommendations that the sale be restricted and you dissented.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Does the minister not recall a select committee on which the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) and a number of his cabinet colleagues served and which called for all land to be sold only to Canadians or landed immigrants, and when does the government intend to move in cabinet to have those recommendations adhered to?

Hon. W. Newman: I believe the member had better read that report again and see what I said at the bottom of that particular page. I think he'd better read that report again.

Mr. Martel: I was there.

AID FOR ELDERLY

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Given that many of the alternative-cure experimental projects that are at present provided in communities to support the elderly around the province are fast approaching the end of their initial funding period, can the minister inform the House as to the date or dates upon which these projects will receive confirmation of their 1979-80 funding status? They are all a little nervous about their ability to continue.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, in so far as not all of those projects are under the jurisdiction of my ministry, I can only respond for those which are. I cannot give the honourable member a specific date but I can assure him that they will be advised in the very near future as to the future funding that will be available to them.

Mr. McClellan: When is the very near future?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Very shortly.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary for the minister: The majority of these projects under his ministry have already been evaluated by his ministry officials. I am wondering whether there is any intention either to duplicate or expand the successful projects, whether he plans just to let them all die and just keep on the present ones at their present level of funding, or is he going to make some sort of major commitment to keeping the elderly in our communities and in their own homes?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I think it is evident from the conduct and attitude and approach of my ministry over the last several years that we do have a major commitment to assist in maintaining the elderly in their own homes or in the community. That is clearly the direction, as I have indicated numerous times, that we are moving in, and that commitment will be maintained throughout this fiscal year and ensuing fiscal years.

[3:00]

DISCRIMINATION IN HIRING

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) asked a question regarding the hiring practices of the recreation committee of the city of London. The Ontario Human Rights Commission's regional supervisor was in touch with the personnel director of the public utilities commission and the human rights officer was advised that this was not the policy of the public utilities commission.

The personnel director himself had just heard the recreation committee was pursuing such a policy and was looking into the matter. He also stated that currently many of the employees of the public utilities commission live outside the London area and he agreed with the human rights supervisor that such a preferential hiring policy would offend the spirit, if not the word, of the Ontario Human Rights Code.

As a result of these discussions and an apparent misunderstanding, I understand that the personnel director of the public utilities commission has issued a memorandum to all branch directors that hiring is to be done on the basis of qualifications and not on the basis of residence.

Mr. Eaton: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I have in writing a direction from the public utilities commission stating they will not hire people from outside the city. Would the member take that letter, when I deliver it to him, and see it is followed up on and that the situation is fully corrected, not just indicating that that is not their policy?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have been assured that a memorandum has been sent to all portions of that public utilities commission indicating that is not the policy of the public utilities commission.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I would like to clarify the record in respect to this question. As part of the question, the member for Middlesex asked whether I had anything to do with that policy which is alleged to have been discriminatory. I would submit that the reference to me was for that period of time in which I was the commissioner and also chairman of the public utilities commission.

Mr. Peterson: You did a grand job.

Mr. Van Horne: To support the statement of the minister, and in defence of the commission more than of myself, I would submit that I, personally, have checked with the general manager and I am satisfied there is no discrimination in their policy. I have a copy of his statement to all department heads. Unfortunately the member for Middlesex has in his possession a letter from a constituent of his, a letter which was written by a department head who had not the authority to respond as he did. That department head has been told of his error, and all department heads are now in receipt of a directive from the general manager making it very clear hiring is on competence only and not geography.

Mr. Speaker: That was a statement to correct the record, not a supplementary.

FLOOD RESCUE

Mr. Nixon: I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Natural Resources. Is the report I heard on the news over the weekend true that rescue in the London area of people marooned and endangered by flood waters was by an American coast guard helicopter?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I don't know, Mr. Speaker; I didn't hear that report. I shall inquire.

Mr. Ruston: Yes, it is true. There was a picture in the paper showing "US Coast Guard" right on the side.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Did the honourable member say the London, Ontario, area?

Mr. Nixon: It was Dorchester.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not aware of it. I will inquire.

Mr. Nixon: As a supplementary: Since the veracity, at least, of the report has been confirmed by my colleague, and it was mentioned in a number of news reports, I want to ask the minister if it is not possible the many airplanes and helicopters that come under his jurisdiction could be made available to assist in these flood rescues and flood work?

Does he recall one of the arguments against dynamiting the ice floes in the Grand River that caused flooding was that no helicopter was available except through the OPP and that their helicopter in that area was busy on police work? Does the minister not think that with the scores of aircraft under his control, these aircraft could at least be made available under some circumstances in these weekend floods?

Surely it is ridiculous that our many millions of dollars worth of equipment just sits there idle under these circumstances, and we have to depend on the Americans, who evidently work weekends.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The Ministry of Natural Resources does not own any helicopters. We have two score and a quarter of mainly pontoon-equipped aircraft. We lease helicopters in the summertime and sometimes in the winter for such things as putting radio transmitters on moose and so on.

Mr. G. I. Miller: What about Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Ontario Hydro have three, I believe, which they use for patrolling the lines. I am not sure they are suitably equipped with windlasses and so on. But I will inquire about the report in the first instance.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The Wright brothers live.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I might say that the Canadian Coast Guard have a number of their coast guard vessels equipped with helicopters and perhaps that's the area we should be looking to for liaison.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Since there is such concern in these flood communities where neither the conservation authorities nor the Ministry of Natural Resources are doing much but issuing press releases after the flood as to why they can do very little under the circumstances, would he not take the responsibility to see that there is a co-ordination of provincial and federal facilities, municipal and conservation authority facilities so that there is not going to be pressure brought to bear on our citizens who are having to cope with these matters so frequently?

Mr. Breithaupt: Sort of an emergency measures organization.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I expect to be getting recommendations from the committee that I set up about a month ago. I believe their report is in the process of being typed, and we'll certainly look at that. However, the honourable member knows the primary responding agency in the province for disasters of any kind is the OPP, who have the communications network to do it. We would be looking at any scheme with that in mind.

Mrs. Campbell: Maybe they don't work on Sunday either.

MINING TAX

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. Could the Treasurer tell us how he justifies reducing the top marginal tax rate for the mining industry from 40 per cent to 30 per cent, in view of the fact that we already receive only about one half of one per cent of the value of mineral production in Ontario in the form of revenues, a total of about $40,000,000 out of over $2,500,000,000 worth of mineral production, and in view of the fact that when Inco Metals Limited appeared before the layoffs committee last year, they indicated to us quite clearly that the problem with exploration and development and so forth was not the tax rate in Ontario but rather, world markets?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the member is judging the entire metal industry on the basis of one company's comments. Two things: Last year the federal government, with the help of the 10 provinces, had a sectoral study. That sectoral study specifically looked into the problems of the mining industries in Canada.

One of the recommendations of that sectoral study was that greater uniformity of both taxation and processing allowance criteria be set up within the provinces.

Mr. Laughren: Which you took to mean lower.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In fact, it was requested that there be absolute unanimity across Canada. I think that would be very difficult to achieve in mining taxation as it would in any other form of taxation, whether it be gasoline or income tax, you name it, because individual provinces' needs vary.

Whether the 40 per cent rate did or did not get used I can't be categorically correct, but it was very seldom; I believe once, maybe, on Inco. I once said it had never been used but Inco corrected me and said in 1974 or thereabouts it did apply. The fact remains though, that decisions made by mining corporations are often based upon hearsay and upon perceptions, not necessarily upon fact.

Ontario responded to two things in our current budget—

Ms. Gigantes: Especially if the Premier goes around spreading misconceptions.

Hon. F. S. Miller: (1) the recommendations of the sectoral study; (2) the obvious perception abroad that the 40 per cent rate, coupled with a 36 per cent rate, for corporate tax—

Mr. Laughren: That's nonsense.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —was very high. I know it's nonsense—

Ms. Gigantes: Well, you kept saying it was nonsense.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —in terms of what, in fact, applies. I'm not arguing that. I'm talking about perceptions.

Ms. Gigantes: You have been arguing that for years.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Perceptions are often more important than fact when other people who don't take the time to check them out hold them.

Mr. Cassidy: Boy, you pander to the pre-conceptions of the corporate sector.

Mr. S. Smith: You've done something meaningless to the tax.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: I have some sympathy for a Treasurer who's whip-sawed in such fashion, but I want to ask him how it is that he explains the fact that Saskatchewan—which has one of the healthiest mining environments in all of Canada—at the same time received 22 per cent of the value of production to the consolidated revenue fund instead of the one and a half per cent we do here in Ontario?

Further, the Treasurer stated in his budget that many northern Ontario communities depend entirely on the mining industry for jobs. Could the Treasurer tell us how he justifies, when he's saying that many northern towns depend on mining industry for jobs, a reduction in the top processing allowance which would encourage further processing and, therefore, more jobs in the north? How can he justify how he encouraged, or let stay on the books, the exemption to section 113 of the Mining Act which says they should process here?

Further, how is it he endorses the whole foreign processing allowance which allows them to write off processing costs against their Ontario operations? How does the Treasurer fit all that into a scheme to create more jobs in the north, given the fact it hasn't worked in the past and the fact we have a 9.4 per cent unemployment rate in northern Ontario at the present time—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Laughren: —and 12.4 per cent in Sudbury?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, that was a very long, involved question

Mr. Mancini: It was a statement.

Hon. F. S. Miller: First of all, the processing allowances have to be in harmony with the tax rates. Therefore, if one changes the tax rates, and we did, one has to change the processing allowances. You could have had processing allowances exceeding the tax rate had we not also brought those down because the maximum processing allowance rate was 35 per cent, and the maximum tax rate was 40 per cent. We have brought the processing allowance down so it cannot exceed the maximum tax rate. I hope the member will accept that as a reasonable solution.

Ms. Gigantes: The Treasurer is going the wrong way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The balance is probably better answered by the Minister of Natural Resources.

Mr. Foulds: Nothing is better answered by the Minister of Natural Resources.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In his absence, I would point out last year when I was Minister of Natural Resources I dwelt at length upon the need, at certain times, to have processing done elsewhere when, in fact, we are not the only source of the semi-processed materials. There were, as I recall, seven jobs in the mining concentrating end in Canada for every one we lost offshore and, in fact, we were protecting Canadian jobs to the maximum of our capability.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, the minister doesn't believe that?

Mr. Peterson: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. Peterson: It is an important question.

I would just like to ask the Treasurer what those two increases in allowances he talked about have to do with his stated intention of bringing new mines into production in this province. How are they related?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Again, Mr. Speaker, when I was Minister of Natural Resources I chatted with a number of companies that had prospective sites for development here, proven or reasonably good ore reserves, who were making economic assessments on incorrect figures or turning down a decision to go forward because they heard our tax rates were prohibitive. The fact is they were reasonably competitive when one allowed for the processing allowances. To listen to my colleague from Nickel Belt, one would say they were overly generous. He tends to dwell upon only mining tax as the only source of revenue from that industry, but I do not. I look upon the creation of wealth, the creation of employment—

Mr. Laughren: No, no, corporation taxes too.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —the creation of corporate tax and the creation of a taxable income for the workers.

Mr. Laughren: There are fewer jobs now than there were 10 years ago. What is the minister talking about?

Hon. F. S. Miller: All of those are just as important.

Mr. Laughren: There are fewer jobs.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They're all very important, I'm sure the member would agree, in the process. The mining tax is a direct raw material charge for our share of the wealth.

Mr. Laughren: There are fewer jobs, not more.

Hon. F. S. Miller: With great respect, I'm sure there are other mechanisms that are needed and, I'm sure, we will find ways and means of stimulating more development apart from just this change.

Look at the small business development corporations, I'm sure in the member's speech today he may have something to say about those, and undoubtedly it will be supportive. If he looks at that, mining development is eligible under the SBDCs because we're trying to funnel more money into the exploratory steps. The creation of a good junior market for mines is important.

Mr. Laughren: Stop the giveaways. What nonsense.

MINING EXPLORATION

Mr. T. P. Reid: I really find the remarks of the minister offensive considering it was the government that ruined the junior mining exploration—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the member have a question?

Mr. T. P. Reid: —business in the province.

I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources on the junior mining section of the province that accounted for about two thirds of the active mines in Ontario. The minister indicated that the Hudson Bay lowlands would be made available for mining exploration by way of tendering or lease, is there any guarantee that the smaller, junior mining exploration companies will be able to get a piece of that action, or are they going to be simply at the mercy of the large companies in the tendering process?

[3:15]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as I think I indicated in the statement, it is open to everyone. So far I'm not sure who has indicated interest. My expectation is that there would be some interest on the part of some of the smaller companies.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: My question to the minister was: is there any formula or guarantee that these smaller, junior exploration companies will be on a par in being able to bid against the larger companies for the exploration rights.

Secondly, in relation to the Treasurer's statement, when is the minister going to make a definitive study about junior mining exploration in the province? He has all kinds of studies on the role of small enterprises in the Canadian mineral industry with a focus on Ontario which indicate that it was this government, particularly through the Ontario Securities Commission, that destroyed junior mining exploration in Ontario. When is he going to do something about that instead of giving tax breaks, or the perception of same, to the larger companies?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It's certainly agreed by the Ontario Mining Association and the Canadian Mining Association that the security rules in Ontario are not conducive to encouraging exploration by the smaller—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Your own study says that.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —by the so-called junior companies. Discussions are going on with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations in connection with some change.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. T. P. Reid: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What part of your privileges have been abrogated?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on April 10 in the Legislature the Minister of Natural Resources, in response to a question from myself and the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) in regard to disposal of hazardous wastes, stated that, and I quote: "This news report was not accurate and has subsequently been corrected. Ontario has not yet approved research drilling near Atikokan, although I understand the Atikokan municipal council supports such drilling, as does the member for Rainy River."

I would like to state that I did meet with members of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I was under the impression that they would be having public information sessions with the people in the area and that they would not proceed with any drilling until those public information sessions had been carried out. In fact, I asked in the House—obviously, because the minister responded—what Ontario's obligation was in ensuring protection to the people of—

Mr. Speaker: Which of your privileges has been abrogated?

Mr. T. P. Reid: I think I have been misquoted, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Well, you didn't say so.

REPORT

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee reported the following resolution:

That supply in the following amounts to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Correctional Services be granted Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980:

Ministry administration program, $6,204,100; institutional program, $105,365,000; community program, $19,857,000.

MOTION

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTION

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Mr. Cureatz be substituted for Mr. McNeil on the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs.

Ms. Gigantes: No more Ronnie McNeil? That's terrible.

Mr. Nixon: We know why you got it, Ronnie.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

FUNERAL SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Foulds moved first reading of Bill 61, An Act to amend the Funeral Services Act, 1976.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to bring some modest reform to the Funeral Services Act in order to provide some consumer protection in this neglected area.

There are seven amendments in the bill. The number of consumer representatives on the board of funeral services is increased. The responsibility for the bill is moved to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations from the Ministry of Health. Those other than funeral directors may provide removal services, funeral supplies and advice in respect of funeral services. Embalming may take place only by the consent of the purchaser or if the body is to be transported out of Ontario. Finally, the bill makes it mandatory for a funeral director to provide an itemized price list for funeral supplies and services supplied to the purchaser.

ONTARIO HYDRO ACCOUNTABILITY ACT

Mr. J. Reed moved first reading of Bill 61, An Act respecting the Public Accountability of Ontario Hydro.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide a means of clarifying the functions and duties of Ontario Hydro related to the production, generation, transmission, distribution, supply, sale, use and development of energy resources in Ontario.

The bill requires the Minister of Energy, on behalf of the government of Ontario, to issue a policy directive setting out the policy framework within which Ontario Hydro is to make operational and management decisions.

The Power Corporation Act is amended to clarify that it is a responsibility of the board of Ontario Hydro to ensure that the business of Ontario Hydro is conducted within the limits established by the policy directive issued by the Minister of Energy.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Breaugh moved first reading of Bill 62, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the application of part XII of the Employment Standards Act, 1974, to employees who are employed for a definite term or task and to persons who are laid off or terminated during or as a result of a strike or lockout at their place of employment.

This unfortunate slippage in the current act was brought to my attention more than a year ago by some employees at a plant called Robson-Lang in Oshawa who even the employment standards people themselves felt were entitled to certain benefits, most notably what is commonly known as severance pay or payment in lieu of notice.

There was a hearing on that, and it was then ruled that they would not be applicable—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Any further comment would certainly be extraneous.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 58, 104 and 105 and the interim answer to question 113 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1025.)

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'd like to take this opportunity to indicate our proceedings for today. As members know, we'll call the order for the budget debate and the member for London

Centre (Mr. Peterson) will make his contribution to that debate. There's some reason to believe that might be completed before six. If that were to be the case, we'll then have royal assent. There are two or three bills that require royal assent and Her Honour has to be brought into the House for this assent because of a supply bill.

So, when the member for London Centre is completed, we'll ask Her Honour to come in. We'll have to bring Her Honour into the House for assent, following which we'll then go into committee of supply and start the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services and continue after supper until 10:30 with those estimates.

As members will recall, we reversed the proceedings for Thursday. In the afternoon on Thursday next, we'll have the contribution of the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) on the budget debate and in the evening the private members' public business.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

BUDGET DEBATE

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to rise on behalf of my party to contribute to this debate which will go on for some months and which, I gather, will come to some sort of resolution in December next. That, of course, gives us some time to monitor the affairs of the government—the management ability of this government—and we are going to be looking very carefully at that. We are limited today, of course, to confining our remarks to what was presented by the new Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) just last week.

It was an interesting budget by virtue of the fact that the Treasurer was new. The member for Nickel Belt is, of course, an experienced critic by now and has been doing this for years. As a financial critic, he has proved a wonderful school teacher over the years. Of course, I am the eldest one in the whole group, this being my third year; my third opportunity to respond to the Treasurer.

I'm a little bit at a disadvantage because he's not here right now and some of my very best stuff I save for him specifically.

Mr. Nixon: He's washing his hands.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He'll be here to hear it.

Mr. Peterson: Perhaps the House leader would undertake to discuss my response with the Treasurer and tell him of all the good advice I had to provide for him.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Too bad Hansard can't record how well dressed you are today.

Mr. Peterson: If you would like to make an interjection about how well dressed I am, I'm sure Hansard would record it and I would like to show it to my children at some time in the future.

Mr. Nixon: Is that a carnation or a pansy?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Argument weak, fragrance strong.

Mr. Peterson: Like all budget nights, it was an auspicious occasion. It's virtually impossible for any private member to get tickets to this House because the galleries, of course, are packed with the friends of the Treasurer.

Mr. Laughren: No problem to them.

Mr. Peterson: They were all particularly curious, in these circumstances, to see what kind of man the Treasurer is and probably more important, in his case, to see what he would be wearing. That turned out, in retrospect, to be the most interesting part of the entire evening. There was some speculation afterwards, of course, that the Treasurer had got dressed in the dark that particular morning. Why else would anyone—

Mr. T. P. Reid: It was the same way he wrote the budget.

Mr. Peterson: There goes my best line. If the member for Rainy River has to go somewhere else to a committee meeting or maybe even go and do some constituency work for the next two or three weeks, he's certainly welcome; he's certainly free to do that.

Over the years, you know, I've always chosen a text for my remarks. A couple of years ago, it was Darcy McKeough himself who said something to the effect that "government spending is the chief cause of inflation." Then, of course, he went on to rack up the biggest single deficit in the history of this province.

I have chosen a text this year. It's not the Bible but it's as close as I could come; it's the Toronto Star, January 20, 1979. It was quoting from an article by the Treasurer. He had been interviewed, I gather, and he said, "I make decisions on intuition and impulse and that is a terrible admission." And the article said, "he says, with a chuckle." I think that's disturbingly accurate.

I hope not to take as long as I have in the past, although, if the House leader from the government party threatens me, I may. So I reserve my right to speak for up to four or five hours, depending on how he behaves and how attentive he is. But I think one will see, in looking at that quote, how that is exactly the way the Treasurer has devised the budget at this time.

[3:30]

I want to present an overall view, if I may, of how the Liberal Party sees the bind we are in today, our thesis about why we got into the troubles we are in today, and then finally the only way we see our way out of some of the present economic difficulties we have created for ourselves.

We have always been constructive in this House. If one looks back over the past two or three or four years, we have tabled in this House a myriad of position papers and constructive suggestions. If members check the speeches of my leader, he has always taken the view we would never criticize unless we had a responsible alternative to present to the people of this province. Without one single deviation from that course, we have always been prepared to stand up and present our alternative.

We gave the Treasurer a very distinct advantage this year. We presented to him in advance our industrial strategy, and of course he had time to work on that. We gave him at least 12 hours' notice. Government members should not say that isn't enough notice; they should remember the famous educational about-face of Tom Wells.

Mr. Foulds: Given that strategy, it is ample notice.

Mr. Peterson: That came two hours before a speech our leader was going to make about two or three years ago.

Mr. Nixon: Intellectual theft.

Mr. Peterson: So one cannot say we have not given the government enough time. I think had the Treasurer taken that document seriously—

Mr. Nixon: If he had only got it right.

Mr. Peterson:—and if he had been able to run down to the printing press, he would have had a far more impressive budget than he had. It is interesting to note that even by his own admission he is not at all sure that one of the principal proposals of his budget is going to work—and of course I share that view. We predicted in 1977 that his VIC proposals would not work. We weren't unduly pessimistic about it, but it's true in retrospect there was not one single registration under that piece of legislation. The Treasurer quite frankly admits it probably won't work. At least he's not at all sure—I don't mean to misquote him—it's going to work this time.

If I were Treasurer, I would probably be darn sure when I brought in things that they would work. I wouldn't put my credibility on the line for things that were questionable. When I had enshrined in legislation something I believed in, I would make darn sure it worked. It's a different point of view.

Mr. Laughren: Pretty heavy stuff for a Liberal.

Mr. Peterson: You got the ink. You had John Bulloch running around the country saying what a wonderful fellow you were, taking credit of course for drafting that act with a few minor deviations. Two years from now, if there are no registrations under that act, who is really going to know? There will be an innocuous question in the House some time: how many registrations under the SBDC Act. The Treasurer will say: "None, and I am terribly sorry. Gee, I guess we misjudged it." But again they were the beneficiaries of publicity for some modest attempt to be creative.

I will get to this later in my speech; I use this only as an example of the kind of commitment that the government has to basic reform, to structural reform and to changing things. To a large measure, this Treasurer is a victim of, and captive of, the same rhetoric that we have heard from Treasurers in this province for a goodly amount of time. I will prove later, I think, when we examine the deteriorating figures, when we examine the deterioration of manufacturing output, not only in historical context but in a context relative to the other provinces, thoughtful people are saying: "We must change our point of view." The old laisser-passer, laissez-faire point of view is not at this particular time in history serving Ontario very well.

But given that—and I will come back to some of these things in more detail in a moment—we are fundamentally in an economic strait-jacket today that we have not been in before. We were in it last year but not as bad, and every year it has deteriorated. I am one person who has a great deal of sympathy for anyone charged with responsibility for developing fiscal and economic policies for this province at this time, because we have so little room to move. That is a function essentially of some of the sins of our past, sins of the past decade, principally the Davis-McKeough regime.

Our new Treasurer inherited those things. He is trying to do the best he can in the circumstances and I think in retrospect, and I am looking at it, it wasn't a very creative endeavour.

There is more that could have been done, there are more creative ways to use that money and we have to refocus the concentrations of the power of the government and resources of this government in the province, and they have to be in the future, on the creation of wealth. We have been so busy spending it, we have been so busy thinking of new ways to tax, but we haven't been thinking of any new ways to develop and create wealth, and that is the basic thrust of the Liberal Party's proposal that I will present, and has been presented in some detail and I want to summarize in the House today. That is our concentration.

The government's concentration is only to increase taxation. It is a very interesting point of view for a free enterprise government. The Treasurer was presented with a shopping list and he said to himself: "My goodness, I am committed now. We were committed to balancing the budget in 1981, now we have to balance it in 1984. I had better generate some more revenue somewhere." So he looked at a big long list of potential tax increases and a few potential decreases and said: "We will steal a little more here and a little more there and give a little back here and a little more there," none of which alters the fundamental structural problems in this province, in my judgement at least, but what they do, and even more insidious, is reveal a mentality that says: "We must go on increasing our taxation," and we see no end to that.

This year, of course, he will generate another $181,000,000 worth of revenue from so-called new taxation, new taxes or at least new increases on old taxes; all of which are regressive, all of which hit the little guy, the small taxpayer, from a percentage point of view much harder than they hit the wealthy person. I say, as one committed to fiscal responsibility, probably more so than the government, but I say as a Liberal I am one who is committed not to tax the lower stratum in our province from an economic point of view any more than we already are. Any taxation increases have to be done on a progressive basis; we are already choking them to death as it currently stands.

Just let me take you ahead a year, Mr. Speaker, because it is important. Even though the Treasurer says his net cash requirements are going to be about $1,153,000,000 in fact his deficit is closer to $1,700,000,000. I will speak more of this later on, but it is important to know that even to finance his decreased cash requirement in his estimate, he is still borrowing over $1,500,000,000 from his internally-generated pension fund to pay for that net cash requirement which he says is lesser. What it necessarily commits us to next year, and which is so disturbing, is at least $130,000,000 more a year in interest, minimum.

I can sit right now and predict what is going to be in the budget next year. It is going to take 9.4 per cent more just to service this year's debt next year. That necessarily means we are talking next year about an additional $355,000 a day minimum just to carry new debt incurred this year, and rather than an interest bill of $3,800,000 a day, as we have this year, it will at least be $4,200,000 next year. That will bring debt servicing, interest payments on past consumption, to in the order of 10 per cent of the budget next year. That is what is so disturbing about it; because if one looks back to the beginning of the decade about 4.9 per cent of our budget was going on debt servicing, this year it is 9.2 per cent, next year it will probably be 10 per cent.

We can see the unending chain, we can see the unending spiral; and the year after that it is going to be worse and the year after that it is going to be worse, and after that and after that and after that. I will prove to you, Mr. Speaker, later when I show some of the debt figures we are going to have to deal with in the future, how terribly disturbing that really is.

Mr. Laughren: It's almost as bad as the federal Liberals.

Mr. Peterson: Collectively, we are experiencing some of the worst crises in our institutions in this province, worse than we have had in a goodly length of time. They are difficult problems for everyone, for the government and the opposition, and we all share them communally from a broad point of view.

There is no question that we differ in many respects on the priorities of this government, but I want to quote a couple of figures to show the kind of crisis we are in.

In 1970, we were spending 29.6 per cent of our budget on health care. In 1979, we are spending 27.7 per cent of our budget on health care. Of course, those health-care institutions and the people involved look at those numbers and say, "Why are you giving us the short end of the stick?"

In 1970, we were spending 31.4 per cent of our budget on education. Today, we are spending 26.1 per cent of our budget on education.

These percentages are declining for a simple reason: Our interest payments are going from 4.9 per cent of the budget to, this year, 9.2 per cent of the budget. Necessarily—without massive tax increases—the government's share in transfers to these various services is going to decline as our interest burden accelerates as a percentage of our budgetary expenditures. That is probably the most disturbing underlying trend in the budget the Treasurer has presented to us: We are going to have less for programs and more for interest.

The Treasurer has spoken, and of course it has been a fundamental tenet of this government, about balanced budgets. Remember the famous Brampton charter, or Bramalea charter? Everyone is trying to deny responsibility for it; so they are trying to move it to another jurisdiction. Pretty soon it is going to be the Muskoka charter, because everybody is so embarrassed about it and will blame it on this Treasurer.

In any event, remember that charter saying we were going to balance our budget in 1981? That was a foundation principle of the government in the election in 1977. Of course we found very quickly, and I am sure sophisticated observers inside the ministry knew at the time, that it was impossible, given this government's record.

In fact this Treasurer, after he inherited the mantle, was under a considerable amount of pressure. People wanted to find out, who is this man? What does he really believe in? Is he really just a used-car dealer come to the big city? We have had our experience with used-car dealers in politics before, and they do not always command the highest amount of respect in the community. In fairness, I would never equate the two, but I say that at face value there is a presumption against used-car dealers in politics.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have a deal for the member.

Mr. Peterson: I could not afford to deal with the Treasurer; I know he would do it to me somehow. He would change the numbers somehow and I would get fooled in the deal.

The net cash requirements, as I said, are $1,153,000,000 this year. But in fact, the real budgetary deficit—in our judgement, a deficit means the difference between current revenues and current expenditures, not taking into account all of the non-budgetary transactions which we have seen fiddled dramatically for the last two years to the benefit of the government; and I hope everyone can see through that—the real budgetary deficit has improved by only $38,000,000 this year. There was no $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 improvement; it only improved by $38,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I say this to you: I have had sophisticated trained economists look at this, and what they tell me is, that it is going to take 43 years to balance the budget of this province at this rate. That is the kind of budget that has been presented to us. That projection does not consider the selling off of the assets. One never knows about this Treasurer; he might run across the street and try to flog off the Robarts Library if he could find a taker. That is the kind of accounting he is involved in. He is flogging off mortgages; he is flogging off Syncrude interest. Who knows what asset is next? It may be your chair, Mr. Speaker; so hang on to it, it is a handsome chair.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If I could sell the member's, I would.

[3:45]

Mr. Peterson: But it is very important that we look at these things in seriousness. What it comes down to is that this government has a vested interest in inflation. The greater inflation is, the less the government has to pay back. That is why we have seen no serious commitment by this government to bring spending and revenues into line to lessen that deficit, to lessen those net cash requirements, all of which have a very profound inflationary influence. That is why one can argue that governments, and this government especially, has such an interest in inflation they will never really address their minds to those problems; because they will be paying back in 10 years in much cheaper dollars than they are right now.

Mr. S. Smith: Why is the Treasurer leaving? Does he not want to hear the criticism? We had to listen to his speech.

Mr. Kerrio: We hung in through yours, Frank.

Mr. Peterson: As I said, our thesis is we must concentrate the power of government, the resources of government, the imagination of government, the ingenuity of government and all of its attendant people, into the creation of new wealth. Principally, in our view, that is manufacturing here in the province.

We have seen the difficulties of relying on the vicissitudes of the resources sector; and today we are paying a price, I think, for an economy that got to be prematurely wealthy. We generated a degree of wealth we didn't genuinely deserve in terms of our real contribution to production of that wealth. Today, with the change in the commodity market, with international competition abroad, we are paying a price for not having invested in the things that are going to carry our children 10, 20, 30 and 40 years from now.

As we see the declining manufacturing base, as we see our economy becoming increasingly untenable in the way we are doing it, that sounds the alarm to serious people and they say, "We must do something specific." I say with pride we have been specific; we have been never afraid to lay our program on the table in this House or anywhere else. If the government wants to steal it, God bless them, because it is probably the best source of ideas they have; in our party we work fairly cheaply.

On Thursday our friend the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) will be responding to the budget. In a sense, I regret I don't have the opportunity of following him. He has the advantage on me. It's not that I really want to switch from official opposition to the third party, I don't want that read into these remarks.

Mr. Foulds: That's going to happen, give us another by-election.

Mr. Peterson: In some respects I wish I had an opportunity to follow him, because I am convinced I probably know in advance what he is going to say. He is a reasonably predictable fellow.

Mr. Laughren: Can I borrow your flower?

Mr. Peterson: In about two days it will look just about right for you. It will be faded and wilted and droopy; just perfect to match your outfit.

Mr. S. Smith: It will be light pink by then.

Mr. Philip: Right now it's rich and thorny, just like your ego.

Mr. Peterson: I suspect my little friend won't address himself to some of the problems, at least the way I see them. I see all of our problems in the overall fiscal framework with which we have been presented. I think any kind of responsible budgetary response or budgetary proposal will have to be done in that particular context. I hope my friend will address himself to those kinds of things. Heretofore I have never seen anyone in his party do that with any degree of precision or commitment. They have been like the transit riders who jump on the bus for any cause that happens to come by and it doesn't really matter very much, because they never ask where the money is going to come from, they only think of new, creative ways to spend it.

Mr. Kerrio: Don't bother us with details.

Mr. Cassidy: No wonder your party is going down the drain in the federal election.

Mr. Peterson: It is very interesting that the leader of the third party says our party is going down the drain. I say with a great deal of pride our party has never been in better shape in 36 years. It is his party that is going down the drain. In every single by-election we have increased our percentage of the popular vote. We are moving; everywhere in this province we are picking up a new credibility; there are people coming to our party today.

The third party has a distinct advantage: nobody takes anything they say very seriously anyway so it is not subjected to the same kind of scrutiny. People are coming to us today; they are looking at our proposals seriously and looking at our people. I say with pride, I have some of the finest of colleagues in this House sitting within our party; we are in a position to form the government tomorrow.

Mr. Laughren: Name one.

Mr. Peterson: Don't press me; I allow the member a little fanciful rhetoric.

Mr. S. Smith: Does he have time for 34 names? Explain that to him.

Mr. Peterson: I want to talk about Ontario's relative position, because I think it is important to put this debate into the proper context. We have found that Ontario has a declining share of production in this country over several years. Capital investment in Ontario is declining as a percentage of the national total, both for total capital investment and for private sector capital investment. For example, we are forecast this year to have about 32 per cent of the total capital investment and 34 per cent of the private sector investment, versus 38.5 per cent of the total gross national product. In 1972 Ontario had 42 per cent of the gross national product. Now it's down 3.5 per cent.

Some of these figures won't be particularly meaningful to those listening today, but if they see them in context it will sound the clarion call for some kind of positive action.

According to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Ontario at the end of 1977 was doing better than Canada as a whole on eight economic indicators and worse on two. By October 1978 it has slipped to doing better on only four and worse on six, including manufacturers' shipments, retail sales, car sales, non-residential construction and housing starts.

On gross provincial product per capita, Ontario has been the slowest-growing province per capita throughout the 1970s. So it is not just as if we are comparing ourselves to Alberta. We are comparing ourselves to the national average, the good and the bad.

The Conference Board in Canada states that output growth of the manufacturing sector as a whole last year in Ontario is now estimated at less than five per cent, in contrast to national manufacturing output growth of 6.4 per cent. This estimate is clearly supported by the manufacturing shipments data. These reveal Ontario's rate-of-shipments growth to be the lowest of all 10 provinces in terms of the first 10 months of 1978 over the corresponding period in 1977, with Ontario's manufacturing industries trailing their national counterparts in 14 out of 20 classifications.

According to the Financial Post, Ontario manufacturing shipments grew at 12.9 per cent in the first six months of 1978 while the rest of Canada had a growth rate of 18.3 per cent. Ontario's share of Canadian manufacturing shipments also fell to 49.7 per cent in the first half versus 50.8 per cent a year earlier.

Employment in manufacturing increased marginally, to 783,000 in May 1978 from 781,000 a year earlier; but it's still well below the peak of the summer of 1974.

In the pulp and paper industry Ontario had an increase of eight per cent in the first half of 1978, versus 11 per cent for producers in the rest of the country.

In the electrical products industry, Ontario's increase was six per cent—a small decline in real terms—versus 16 per cent for producers in the rest of the country.

In the machinery industry, Ontario's increase was nine per cent versus 13 per cent for producers in the rest of the country.

Slow growth in Ontario was also experienced by the transportation equipment and non-metallic mineral production sectors.

In terms of employment, the conference board forecasts an unemployment rate for Ontario of 7.8 per cent for 1979, narrowing the gap on its national rate to less than one per cent. The budget forecast is only 7.1 per cent, though the real unemployment rate in March 1979 is 7.6 per cent.

The conference board also forecast the employment growth rate for Ontario would be 1.8 per cent for 1979, which is less than the national rate of 2.1 per cent. The budget forecast is for an increase of 3.3 per cent.

The Conference Board in Canada forecast an increase of 8.9 per cent for 1979 in retail sales, about the same as the national rate of increase. In 1978 Ontario lagged behind the national rate by almost a full percentage point.

In terms of housing, during 1978 urban housing starts for Ontario declined 12 per cent from 1977. The nation as a whole experienced an overall decline of 11 per cent.

During the first two months of 1979, urban Ontario starts fell 41 per cent from the same period in 1978, while urban Canada had 33 per cent fewer housing starts.

I know it's not all that attractive for the members to listen to a long list of figures like that, but they are important. Without that, I couldn't tell the story as I see it.

Mr. Foulds: That's right; carry on.

Mr. Peterson: Without that, I couldn't explain what, in reality, is happening in this province.

I want to speak very briefly—

Mr. Eaton: We are all listening intently, Dave.

Mr. Peterson: We had a little word from Thelma Eaton over there.

Mr. Eaton: I just said we were listening intently.

Mr. Peterson: Good.

I want to give a little historical perspective on what has happened in this province in the last decade. We have found budgetary expenditures have more than tripled, from $4,200,000,000 to $13,900,000,000—an average annual rate of increase of 14.4 per cent. The projection for 1979 is over $15,000,000,000.

From a budgetary surplus of $150,000,000, we have now a budgetary deficit totalling over $8,000,000,000. The projection for 1979 adds another $1,700,000,000 to that deficit.

The province's funded debt—and there's been a change in the way figures were presented this year—has increased 233 per cent, from $4,200,000,000 to $14,000,000,000. The projection for 1979 has the funded debt rising a further 9.3 per cent, to $15,300,000,000, an increase of 263 per cent over the decade.

Interest payments on the public debt rose 489 per cent, from $209,000,000 to $1,200,000,000. Projections for 1979 show a further increase of 12.6 per cent to a total of $1,400,000,000 in interest payments, that's $3,800,000 a day in interest on the public debt.

Mr. Nixon: Three million eight hundred thousand a day?

Mr. Peterson: Isn't that terrible? And next year it's going to be $4,200,000 minimum.

Mr. Nixon: It's time for a change.

Mr. Peterson: The funded debt per capita has increased 200 per cent, from $551 to $1,653; and it's projected to rise this year to almost $1,800, an annual increase of 14 per cent.

All of this has left us in a financial position which has substantially declined since the beginning of the decade. It has left us with a debt load that is going to be very difficult for our children to carry. We have virtually used up all of the internally-generated sources of capital that were at our disposal.

I spoke last year at great length of the pension funding crisis in this province, but the fact remains that this province has had unlimited access to pension funds in the order of billions and billions of dollars. I have subscribed to the thesis that they've worked on an availability-fed demand thesis, in that they have spent almost every penny available to them. They have said: "The consequences be damned." They are saying: "Somebody else will look after that later." This year, for example, we will borrow over $1,500,000,000 from these internally-generated funds. All of these funds, or the majority of them, have large unfunded liabilities, for some of which the province is responsible. We are seeing a drying up of that capital and no one, including the Treasurer or his advisers, has any idea how we're going to refund, roll over or repay that debt. They all say, "We will worry about that at some time in the future." It is a known fact that we're going to run into a negative cash flow situation with the Canada Pension Plan early in the 1980s when our interest payments on an annual basis are greater than the amount we can borrow. They're going to start drawing down capital in, probably, the year 1985 or 1986. By the year about 2000 the fund will be bankrupt, so they will have to draw back not only all the interest that we owe them but all the capital that we owe them. Where are we going to get the money?

We will invade the private capital market—it's highly inflationary; we'll compete for capital with the already capital-starved industrial infrastructure, and that's highly inflationary—or we will increase taxes. Any way you cut it, our children are going to pay. We have put our burdens, our debts, onto someone else.

I think one of the worst things history is going to say about these neo-Keynesians is that we have been so involved in these inter-generational transfers of wealth that we have been, in the grand scheme of things at least, irresponsible. We have no right to extract more than our fair share as we go through at any given point in history. We are creating a crisis that is going to be absolutely stupefying.

I want, if I may, to read a few numbers into the record. We have done a considerable amount of work trying to determine the extent of the liabilities of this province, and we have talked about the public debt that is owed.

Mr. Eaton: Who are you talking to?

Mr. Sterling: He's talking to Bob.

Mr. Nixon: He's sick of talking to you.

Mr. Ruston: There are only four on the Conservative side. It's pretty weak over there.

Mr. Peterson: We've talked about the non-public debt that is owed. We've talked about certain transactions that have been undertaken in Deutschmarks; and I'll talk about that in a moment, but that turned out to be one of the most flagrantly irresponsible things ever done in the history of this province. We've talked about unfunded liabilities, the billions of dollars worth of unfunded liabilities that no one knows how we are going to finance in this province. Then we look at the total amount. If one extends it out to about the year 2018 we find that—excluding Hydro, which has an additional debt on top of this of something in the order of $9,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000, that I won't get into today but we are going to have to start repaying this debt in the very near future—we will have to repay a total of public, non-public, foreign, unfunded liabilities—as you add all of those things together—in 1979 we must repatriate $574,000,000 worth of debt; in 1980, $269,000,000; in 1981, $251,000,000; in 1982, $261,000,000; in 1983, $343,000,000.

From the period 1984 to 1988 it is $2,539,000,000; an average of about $507,000,000 a year. From 1989 to 1993 it is about $3,371,000,000; an average of $674,000,000 per year. Between 1994 and 1998, $5,522,000,000; an average of over $1,104,000,000. In 1999 to 2003, $2,547,000,000; an average of about $509,000,000 per year. So it goes out to the year 2000, 2010, 2018, a total debt we are going to have to pay back of $16,455,000,000.

[4:00]

Mr. Ruston: Shocking, shocking.

Mr. Peterson: And no idea in the world where it is going to come from—not a clue, and no plans therefore.

Even the great, august Darcy McKeough, when asked about these kinds of problems said, "We will worry about it later. No sense getting too excited now. I'm not particularly sure. Growth may take care of that in the future."

Certainly there are different points of view on the growth of this province. According to the Treasurer's formula and the way he is behaving I suspect the growth is going to be relatively small. Some people have optimistic forecasts, others less optimistic; but in my judgement it is going to run between two and four per cent in the foreseeable future. That is not, by historical standards at least, a great deal of growth which is going to automatically look after some of these problems we have created. We are going to have to look at new sources of financing, new devices, new taxation to handle that debt.

I want to speak briefly about the borrowing this year. As I said earlier, the budgetary deficit is not $1,153,000,000; it is close to $1,700,000,000. It is $1,659,000,000, an improvement of $38,000,000 over last year; really, by any standard, peanuts in terms of improvement. Frank Miller has not improved the financial health of this community one little bit.

Mr. Laughren: Where is Frank Miller?

Mr. Peterson: What we are doing is interesting. As I said earlier, we are borrowing $1,554,000,000. We are actually borrowing more this year—I want to make this point very strongly—we are borrowing more this year than we borrowed last year when we had higher net cash requirements and a marginally higher budgetary deficit.

The only reason it is as low as it is, is because again this year the government has fudged the figures. On their non-budgetary deficit, they are selling off $105,000,000 worth of their Syncrude repatriation. They are taking into current income—or at least, to reduce the deficit with that—they are also taking into account $100,000,000 worth of mortgages they are going to sell to reduce the net cash requirements.

Mr. Eaton: Didn't they create a requirement the year they were acquired?

Mr. Peterson: They use those figures in many different ways throughout the budget. They say, for example, the Employment Development Fund is really not going to cost anybody any money because they are using that money they are repatriating to finance the Employment Development Fund. Had they not done it, of course, had they not had the Employment Development Fund, they would have taken that into current revenues.

Every single time you look at the budget and a particular presentation of numbers, Mr. Speaker, it is always presented in a most self-serving way; it always distorts, in my judgement, the real picture. That is a major problem.

Mr. Nixon: Then cook the books.

Mr. Peterson: For example, I tell you, the Employment Development Fund is presented on the books this year as an investment in capital assets. That is no more an asset than fly to the moon. That money is not going to be retained in any furniture, fixture, roads, bridges or whatever by this province; it is going to be given away to corporations. How can you possibly call that a capital investment? But they do that to support their old argument that they never borrow more than their capital investment.

It just isn't true. They are borrowing more than they are spending on capital investment. They are borrowing today to finance current consumption. It is that simple. As much as they tried to fudge it in the past, that is the reality of today.

Mr. Nixon: That's what they did with the Syncrude revenue. They sold the farm to buy liquor.

Mr. Kerrio: They are burning the furniture to keep the house warm.

Mr. Nixon: That's a better analogy, I've got to admit.

Mr. Eaton: Didn't they put that money into expenses when they purchased it? Or doesn't that count?

Mr. Laughren: David, do you need this support—the backup you're getting?

Mr. Peterson: I'm very grateful to my caucus, I have a first class caucus.

Mr. Nixon: We'll help you on Thursday too, Floyd.

Mr. Peterson: Beyond dispute, we have the finest interjections in the whole House right here in this caucus.

Mr. Nixon: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peterson: Because they have the finest wits and the quickest brains in this whole House; not only the most profound are they.

Mr. Philip: They know that you can't get many of your ideas out because you've got chapped lips from kissing mirrors.

Mr. Peterson: I want to talk very briefly. There's Ed Philip now he's a quick one isn't he? Are you grumbling about something?

I want to talk briefly about the revenue side of the budget this year. We're seeing taxes increase about 14.1 per cent, which is faster than the growth in—

Mr. Philip: Stay out of the bush in the mosquito season, boy. Your nose will catch them.

Mr. Peterson: —gross domestic product of 10.9 per cent and our expenditures at eight per cent. Clearly the amount the government is spending is inflationary. It's the amount of government taxes that really hits the little guy and that's what we are seeing in this particular case; they are extracting taxes out of the taxpayer's hide at a faster rate than real wealth is being created.

This gets back to my original point at the beginning of my diatribe today. With this government we are necessarily committed to a course of higher taxation year after year after year. Our Treasurer talks about controlling expenditures; some time in the very near future he's going to have to talk about controlling taxes.

Another interesting point on expenditures, Mr. Speaker. The expenditures are really up eight per cent this year when you include interest. He says, of course, that real spending is only up 6.9 per cent because he doesn't want to look worse than last year. In fact, real spending is up 7.4 per cent this year because he excludes the $200,000,000 in the Employment Development Fund. You see he wants credit for it on one hand in one part of the budget, but he won't take responsibility for it in the other part of the budget.

That's the kind of dual presentation of various facts that we've had presented to us by the Treasurer. People are going to say, "Look very seriously at Frank Miller." Sophisticated analysts are going to say, "What is this man really up to?" I don't think he has gone any further than he did pre-budget in answering the question, "What is Frank Miller, or what does he really believe in?" Because we have been presented a document absent of philosophy, absent of purpose, absent of vision, totally absent from our point of view.

I talked earlier about the balanced budget, and of course as I said earlier this was a fundamental tenet of this government. This year in the budget they want to ensure the capacity to achieve a balanced budget, or they talk as if the scope exists to balance the budget. There's nowhere contained herein a commitment to so do. It would be interesting to ask the Treasurer what his real commitment is.

The Treasurer says that net cash requirements could be reduced to zero or a surplus position by 1984 if revenues grow by two and a half per cent more on average than expenditures. But it's interesting that that did not take place in his budget. Budgetary revenues grew 9.4 per cent; budgetary expenditures grew to eight per cent, a difference of 1.4 per cent. Even by his admission, we will not be able to balance the budget by 1984, or probably never.

If you include the non-budgetary inflows and outflows—and here is where I was referring to him selling off the furniture—with non-budgetary revenue it's up 9.6 per cent; with non-budgetary expenditures it's up 7.4 per cent, a difference of 2.2 per cent. Still, including the below-the-line non-budgetary transactions, he is not hitting his own goal of keeping a differential of 2.5 per cent. He has made no progress towards balancing the budget.

One has to assume that he doesn't intend to balance the budget, that it was only a politically expedient thing to say at the time because he felt there was pressure for it, and that there is no more real commitment to it today than in fact there ever was.

It says this in the budget paper: "Efforts will be directed towards holding spending growth below the rate of revenue growth in order that tax increases may not be required." Last year the government increased taxes; this year they increased taxes. They will continue to rise, as I pointed out, because of the large debt load increase this year. The real deficit decline of 2.2 per cent falls away off the projected figures.

Then there are the current figures and the performance this year by which to judge this Treasurer. Let us not forget, also that this government changes its commitments as easily as it changes cabinet ministers. Both its ministers and its principles are highly expendable. But, given the brief look we have had at this new Treasurer, we are seeing that we haven't got a chance of balancing the budget, judging by current performance, before 43 years.

I want to turn to something that has been discussed in this Legislature, namely the entire matter of foreign borrowing. It shows the problems one can get into if one has to borrow and if one has necessarily to borrow abroad. I will start in 1968 after the Treasurer at the time, Charles MacNaughton, had just returned from a trip to Europe. He announced to the Legislature that he was considering borrowing funds in offshore markets. A debate at that time was initiated—not by Morty Shulman, I want you to know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because you will be proud to know it, but by our esteemed leader of the time, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon); he was the one who asked the Treasurer at that particular time what he was up to. He was joined by Don Deacon and Jim Bullbrook, other esteemed members.

I want to say Morty Shulman participated with great perception in that debate too, and I will get to some of the remarks. The debate took place on a bill authorizing the raising of money on the consolidated revenue fund. At that time Morton Shulman put on the record, and it turned out to be prophetic—the following, quoting from Hansard page 5,156: “Mr. Chairman, I would like to sound a warning, if I might, to the provincial Treasurer and to the government. I fear you may be making an error financially in doing your borrowing in the United States and in the European market.” Morty Shulman was talking about revaluation and the dangers attendant therein. The Treasurer (Charles MacNaughton) replied this way: “The possibility of revaluation must always be considered. I would have to say, upon investigating this matter and discussing it at length, not only in Germany but in other markets and in other areas, that it is regarded as a very unlikely possibility.”

Mr. S. Smith: He must have talked to his cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Peterson: I suspect that the present Treasurer is getting the same financial advice as Charlie MacNaughton was getting some 10 years ago. That's the quality of it. Don Deacon, in the same line of attack during the same debate, said at the time: “We may well be paying back—” and they were talking about a $400,000,000 loan at the time “—in the order of $450,000,000 for that loan.” It seemed like a staggering amount of money at the time.

The Treasurer, nonetheless, repeatedly told members that he was just considering a loan; that all was well and no commitments had been made, and would not be made until all the matters were properly pursued. In 1969, despite the warnings and the admonitions of the members opposite, he went out and borrowed money in German Deutschmarks, and the results have been incredible. I want to read the results of that into the record because they are important. I know one must appreciate that very much depends on what day one is talking about because of fluctuations in exchange rates that are still constantly going on.

Deutschmarks have been one of the strongest currencies in the world. The first of the loans became due and payable in 1975. Along with this, a portion of the second loan became due and payable on February 1, 1975. The principal amount was $28,000,000 and change at the time. The face amount had skyrocketed to $37,000,000 in exchange. It left Ontario with a loss in 1975 of $9,552,026 due to an upward revaluation of the Deutschmark from the issue date of those debentures.

The province at this time still holds two debentures issued in Deutschmarks. The first of these issues was originally taken out on February 1, 1969, in the amount of 150,000,000 Deutschmarks, or $40,100,000 Canadian. From February 1, 1975 to February 1, 1984, an amount of 15,000,000 Deutschmarks—that's a little over $4,000,000 Canadian—was to be redeemed annually. The second issue, originally taken out on September 1, 1972, for 100,000,000 Deutschmarks, is redeemed on the basis of 12,500,000 Deutschmarks annually from 1980 to 1987. The amounts outstanding for these two issues, as of October 31, 1978, was recorded at $48,400,000 Canadian.

However, due to the upward movement of the Deutschmark, the Canadian dollar equivalent at that date had risen from $48,400,000 to an unbelievable—can you imagine it, Mr. Speaker—$114,000,000, a loss of $65,600,000 because of one bad loan. That is almost two and a half times the original issue price—2.4 times to be precise.

This is a loss that will not be fully realized if the Canadian dollar recovers, vis-à-vis the Deutschmark, before all those debentures are redeemed. However, since 1975 we have been redeeming a portion of the principal amount, 15,000,000 Deutschmarks on February 1 of every year. That means we have been realizing an actual loss every year on the annual maturity of 15,000,000 Deutschmarks at a face value of about $4,000,000 Canadian. Last year it took an extra $3,620,800 to make up our foreign exchange payments.

We are told that $200,000 of this amount can be attributed to US dollar issues. All of the rest was for the principal repayments in Deutschmarks of $4,000,000 Canadian. That means in 1978 it took almost twice as many Canadian dollars to pay back the Deutschmark loan as the amount we actually borrowed. Since that time, the Deutschmark has continued its upward climb. This year it took more than twice as many Canadian dollars to meet our principal repayment on the loan. That is still going to cost this province a great deal.

I want at this point to mention Hydro too, because that has been a subject of contention in this Legislature, just to show the kind of exposure we have in this province. Let us not forget that we in this province have responsibility for all of Hydro's loans. Not only did Hydro take out loans in Deutschmarks, it also had the foresight to take out loans in Swiss francs, the only currency in the world that was stronger than the Deutschmark. In fairness, they did not take out any loans in yen. That showed they only missed on two out of three.

As of September 30, 1978, Ontario Hydro had outstanding loans of 380,000,000 Deutschmarks and 330,000,000 Swiss francs. The face value of the Deutschmarks was $126,600,000 Canadian. The value on December 31 of last year $245,000,000 Canadian, showing a face loss of $119,000,000 Canadian for Hydro. The Swiss franc loan was $114,700,000 Canadian; its face value on December 31 of last year was $238,000,000 Canadian, a face loss of $124,000,000 Canadian.

Hydro also held $4,500,000,000 in US funds at the time. We pointed out last fall from Ontario Hydro's own prospectus that if those loans became due and payable we would realize a real loss in this province of $924,000,000. That shows the problems of exposing oneself to the foreign currency markets and the foreign investment dealers.

If we had been more prudent with our own pension funds, if we had used Canada Pension Plan, teachers' superannuation and OMERS funds, not to finance consumption in this province but to finance real wealth-creating devices like Hydro plants and things like that, we would have not been subjected to the vicissitudes of the foreign market. In addition to that, we would have created real wealth in this province by Canadian dollars. Herein lies the story and the dangers of being too heavily involved in the foreign marketplace.

Just to put this into perspective, there was a prospectus floated by Ontario Hydro last year. On one issue they wrote off $48,000,000 in Swiss francs because it had to be refinanced. That is in their prospectus; it is also public knowledge.

Let me just return now to the province's balance sheet. Our foreign exchange payments for 1977-78 totalled $3,620,800, all of it on the DM issue. The foreign exchange payment in 1976-77 was $2,300,000; in 1975-76, $1,600,000; and in 1974-75, $10,052,627, which represented the $9,500,000 loss on the 1975 redemption of the DM issue to which I referred earlier.

The total cost to the province in foreign exchange from 1975 to 1978 was $17,565,813, a real loss realized at this time and excluding future losses of up to the order of $1,000,000,000. We have already lost $17,565,813. Another repayment of 15,000,000 Deutschmarks was made on February 1 of this year. That cost in the order of $9,000,000 to pay back $4,000,000 this year already. In addition to the $17,565,813 we had lost up to last year, we have lost an additional $5,000,000 this year, bringing our total, real, incurred exchange loss to this point up to about $22,500,000.

This, of course, does not include the difference in interest on these amounts. That is a separate calculation and would bring the amount much higher because as the face value of the currency changes, necessarily, we are obliged to pay a higher amount in interest to pay that off. I think it is a horror story that should be told in this House and should be repeated to the future Treasurers and money managers so that government will never have to get involved in that kind of operation again.

One of the things that can operate in our favour—and from this point of view I hope it does—is that if the Canadian dollar rises all those liabilities are lessened. Of course you face the danger there that if Joe Clark is elected he wants Sinclair Stevens to become Minister of Finance. He wants to hold the dollar at about the 88-to-90-cent level, a level that we are very close to today; and of course the lower he holds it the more Ontario is going to suffer.

I would like you, Mr. Speaker, to use your good offices, perhaps, to speak to Sinclair Stevens. Perhaps you can explain to him the dilemma in which he is placing the province of Ontario; you, by your own eloquence, may convince him to take a somewhat different point of view on that matter.

Mr. Roy: He may not have to speak to him. Joe Clark said to the financial community that Sinclair Stevens would not be the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Peterson: If Joe Clark can find anybody in his caucus who can add, that guy is up for Minister of Finance. I would suggest, respectfully, that in the Conservative government, even a member like the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) would have a chance to be Minister of Finance; that's how desperate they are. He is probably tempted right now to cross the floor and run federally and everything else.

Mr. S. Smith: Broadbent says he will support Clark.

Mr. Peterson: That is how grim they are, Mr. Speaker.

I want to talk very briefly about forecasting by this government, about the accuracy of some of the predictions over the years. Of course, I could speak for four hours on this subject alone but I don't intend to.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: Do I hear a popular request to expand this a little bit? My good friend the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) is really enjoying it.

I do want to put into the record some of the predictions of the past. I think they will prove to all of us that one can only look at this budget document with a high degree of suspicion at best. We have become so sensitized to governments presenting figures that are only in their interests and that have very little to do with the realities of the marketplace and what has actually happened in the province, scarcely any number given by this government can be taken at face value. The only numbers I take at face value are the ones that have already happened; I take none of the predictions at face value.

We have detailed the budgeting inaccuracies of the government during the Davis years, almost a decade now. The record is consistent; expenditures consistently underestimated, revenues overestimated, leading to grossly low deficit predictions year after year.

Mr. Gregory: Good management.

Mr. Peterson: Maybe it is good management because they are consistent; they were wrong every single year. The government whip does make a good point.

Mr. S. Smith: It can hardly be an accident. You still get votes and you are still there; it is amazing how lying to the people gets votes.

Mr. Peterson: Rather than repeating that record this year, we will look at some details of the government's record over the last three years, reported by quarters. As the figures clearly show, estimates for all the major revenue sources have deteriorated from quarter to quarter. At the same time, the budgetary deficit has consistently increased each quarter. This is because the Conservative government tends to paint a pretty, although distorted, picture at budget time when public attention is focused on its management of the economy; then it revises its figures downward in the quarterly Ontario Finance which receives virtually no public attention.

Mr. S. Smith: That is right, that is the game.

Mr. Peterson: In all examples given, the final revenue figures are substantially lower than the budget forecast and the budgetary deficits are higher; and that is without exception.

Mr. S. Smith: Without exception.

Mr. Peterson: As an example, the discrepancy between the original estimates and final figures for corporation tax in 1977-8 was 23.9 per cent. On the deficit side, the discrepancy was 25.8 per cent in 1976-77, 78.3 per cent in 1977-78 and 25 per cent in 1978-79. The corresponding dollar figures in those miscalculated deficits are increases of $252,000,000 in 1976, $777,000,000 in 1977 and $337,000,000 in 1978-79. In the last two quarters of this year there was some deviation from this pattern; however, the result at year end was still the same.

This year's third quarter improvement in personal income tax and budgetary revenue figures was largely due to an increase in the federal government's estimate of personal income tax revenues for Ontario. The only figures which show some in-year fluctuation are budgetary expenditures and revenues, and that is because they are the only ones which the government can manipulate. However, despite such manipulation year-end revenue figures for the three years examined have been $300,000,000 under the budget estimates in 1976-77, $884,000,000 in 1977-78, and $337,000,000 in 1978.

The government's gross provincial product estimates for the same years demonstrate clearly the very same pattern. In 1976-77, the estimated real growth of 5.3 per cent turned out to be 3.6 per cent. That is a key figure, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, in jimmying all the numbers in the budget. In 1977 they predicted five per cent real growth, an average of four in the first half and six in the second half; it turned out to be 3.6 per cent. Last year they estimated 4.3 per cent; it turned out to be 3.3 per cent.

There are two conclusions that can be drawn: either the government deliberately misleads the people of this province in order to make their figures look more rosy at election time; or failing that, they are incompetent.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right. Those are the only two possible conclusions.

Mr. Peterson: I want to read into the record the estimates for this year, the government's estimates as well as the Conference Board in Canada's estimates:

In terms of gross provincial product, they are advocating an increase—not in real terms—of 10.9 per cent; the conference board estimates 11.2 per cent. Personal income, 11.8 per cent; conference board forecasting 10.5 per cent. Retail sales, 10.5 per cent; conference board forecasting 8.9 per cent. Employment up 3.3 per cent by the government; up 1.8 per cent by the conference board. The government says 127,000 jobs; the conference board says 71,000. The unemployment rate according to the government will be 7.1 per cent; according to the conference board it will be 7.8 per cent.

I think that is an important bit of background to explain why we view the government figures with some jaundice; how we see ourselves in relevant juxtaposition, not only to the other provinces and to the Canadian averages, but also to our past. It brings us to our analysis of the 1979 budget, the Treasurer's attempt to deal with some of these problems, and I want to present along with that the way we would have handled it.

I am going to spare you some of the detail, Mr. Speaker. I want you to know I expect you will probably be the first one to come down to my office afterwards for a copy of our industrial strategy, and I would willingly and happily provide that to you. I recommend it to you as excellent reading. I think, frankly, that you are one person, being as sophisticated as you are, who would derive a great deal of pleasure from reading that particular document.

At the outset I want to talk about job creation measures in this budget.

Mr. S. Smith: That should be a brief talk.

Mr. Peterson: It should be a very brief talk, because it wasn't dealt with. It shows a disregard by this government for the 319,000 Ontarians who are currently out of work.

In March the unemployment rate in Ontario was 7.6 per cent; 45 per cent, or 145,000 of the unemployed, are young people under the age of 25. All they talked about in the budget was temporary jobs, the majority of which would be taken by students. It doesn't even come close to dealing with these numbers at all. Equally appalling, the number of unemployed in their peak earning years of 25 to 54, who are often the sole support of families, was even higher at 149,000, or 47 per cent of Ontario's unemployed.

Yet for the third consecutive year this government, now with a new Treasurer who acknowledged that unemployment will continue at about present levels throughout 1979, has not brought forward one permanent job-creation proposal.

It is difficult to understand how the Treasurer can be proud of the fact that 133,000 jobs were created in Ontario in 1978—all of them by the private sector he stresses—when close to two and a half times that many are unemployed. There is clearly room for the government to become directly involved in job creation, indeed by such direct measures that are necessary. We have a number of specific proposals that I will discuss in a moment.

This year the Treasurer hopes that well over 100,000 jobs will be created—obviously, again, by the private sector. He has lowered his sights and is aiming for 127,000 jobs this year—6,000 fewer than last year. The Conference Board in Canada thinks he should be lowering his sights even further. It predicts only 71,000 jobs will be created this year.

The Treasurer does talk about unemployment. He says in the budget statement, "We must continue to seek new ways to help our people, especially the young, to find lasting and rewarding employment." Then he proposes to buy some of our young people off for yet one more summer. I say "some" because, with 145,000 young people currently unemployed—and with their ranks swollen to 163,000 in July of last summer, the Treasurer hopes to create just over 70,000 jobs. These will be temporary jobs, many lasting over 16 weeks, and none carrying any guarantee of future employment.

I guess what is most disturbing to me is the Treasurer's expressing concern over skills training and job matching. He says his colleagues are developing—but they are not doing anything about it—a program to deal with matching skills training with the job situation.

Since 1963—about the same time that the new Premier (Mr. Davis) became Minister of Education—five government reports have strongly recommended expansion of alternatives to formal institutionalized education and training. After more than 15 years of study there is still no definite plan. The situation cries out for action. This is one area that the government of this province cannot blame the feds for. It is clearly 100 per cent their responsibility. I can personally think of no areas where they have failed to carry the ball like they have in this area.

About 73 per cent of our young people do not go to university or community college. They need help to bridge that gap between school and work. We cannot just throw them on the scrap heap. We must exercise a much greater responsibility than we have discharged so far.

We have concrete, specific proposals. Honest to God, Mr. Speaker, sometimes it is so frustrating being in opposition; you come into this Legislature with goodwill, filled with idealism, trying to make a contribution, and you present many concrete decent, workable proposals, but all are universally disregarded.

I guess that is the most frustrating thing about being in opposition and what inculcates in all my colleagues, as well as myself, a desire to form the government. We know, not spending any more money, we could do so much better because we have more imagination and we are not tied to the old sacred cows of the past.

Applause.

Mr. Peterson: That got them going, didn't it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Acting Speaker: It woke them up.

Mr. Peterson: I made some sort of a commitment that we were going to be out of here by—we want royal assent; I'm just having a time aside here.

Mr. Nixon: Her Honour is probably out somewhere listening to this.

Mr. Peterson: In some respects I would like to put this on the record; however, if I am told that I should hasten, I can cut out some of this.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The House leader is not in his seat. Proceed.

Mr. Peterson: It's good stuff. I know that all the people in the government gallery will be enthralled to hear this.

Mr. Samis: The galleries are jammed.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, let me talk briefly about our apprenticeship and job training programs. We have laid it all out in our industrial strategy, which was presented to the people of this province the day before the budget was presented; and I must say, serious observers gave it a great deal more attention than they gave the budget. I say that with some pleasure.

I will not go into all the details of that at this point. Suffice it to say that this is about the third or fourth time in this House that my colleagues or I have presented specific and detailed proposals. We necessarily need programs at this time. We are experiencing a drain of young people. We are seeing young people thrown on the scrap heap, with no imaginative programs.

There have been imaginative programs out of the government in Ottawa to develop job skills and experience in industrial design and various other types of highly skilled technologically-oriented jobs; and that is where the thrust has to be. To that end we have a specific number of proposals. I won't go into them in detail; suffice to say I recommend them to government. Perhaps one of my colleagues at another time will bring those before the House.

I do want to spend some of my time, before I get thrown out by the clerk, on a couple of government proposals that are, in my judgement, the most disturbing.

The Employment Development Fund: I'm not aware of any other time where the government has tried to set aside $200,000,000 for a slush fund. It's not as if this thing is even going to be administered by bureaucrats. At least sometimes when bureaucrats administer things there is an appearance of objectivity, they not supposing to be political beings. But there is no shame in this thing. We have the minister, the Treasurer, and the secretary of something or other, and the secretary of the north, administering this $200,000,000 fund as a slush fund.

It's going to be like the Wintario grants. Every member of this House, with their pet project, is going to be writing letters to the minister and saying, "Won't you please give some money to a particular company in my area, because it's going to create jobs." Why shouldn't they; they've exposed themselves to that kind of political influence. All these proposals are going to be discussed in cabinet. It's going to be on the basis of who supported the party and who gave what to the party; and where do we get the maximum political benefit, not necessarily financial benefit, not necessarily in jobs or anything else.

This is a most dangerous fund, it is a most dangerous precedent; it's a catchall. The government still really doesn't know what it is doing in this area.

It proposed originally that it would come out with $100,000,000. First of all, it got involved in the Ford grant, saying, "Gee, we'd better give them some money; we've been caught off guard." We in the opposition supported that on a one-time exception basis, given the circumstances. So the government voted $4,900,000 in supplementary estimates last year; there's about $22,000,000 or $23,000,000 still to come, and that's coming out of the $200,000,000 fund.

Then the Treasurer says, "Gee, we've got to develop a plan for pulp and paper." No one still knows the details of how it is going to be done; what the terms and conditions are or anything more about it; and there is nobody more confused than the industry. The Treasurer says: "We'll extract that out of the fund." Already, about $125,000,000 of the fund has been committed.

We referred earlier to the Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie) and the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) being appointed to develop some job training programs. How are we going to finance that? The Treasurer said in his budget, "I guess we can get that out of the fund." So there is a fourth drain on the fund.

Then we asked the bureaucrats about the small business development corporation, how that was to be financed. There is no budgetary appropriation for that. No one has any idea if it will work, and if it does work how much it will cost; they don't know. They're not prepared to budget, so they say, "We will take that out of the fund."

So what they have done, in effect, is turn every corporation into a beggar. There isn't a corporate manager or corporate owner or director or president in this country who will be considered worthwhile or doing his job if he doesn't line up at Queen's Park, through the auspices of some politician or under political influence along the way, cap in hand, begging for a job, begging for money from the fund. The first question they're going to ask the guy is, "Tell me, would you be going to some other country or some other state if we didn't give you the money?" How many people are going to say "no" to that question?

They are holding this government up to ridicule, to blackmail, to threats, to coercion of the most unsavoury and silly nature. Rather than promoting free enterprise, this government is destroying free enterprise.

Mr. Laughren: Even Martin Goldfarb, for heaven's sake, would say he is going to Tennessee.

Mr. Peterson: I've used the analogy before, it is like playing poker.

Mr. S. Smith: Exactly.

Mr. Peterson: They decided they have to enter the international poker game, bidding for industries. These people they are working with are not unintelligent, they are not stupid people. If I were them, if I were running a company, of course I would be here threatening to go to Tennessee or North Carolina or whatever—of course I would; if it is free why wouldn't I? These guys who run these companies are no different than some of the people who look at welfare and say, "Everybody else is doing it, why shouldn't I get my share?" This government is part of a conspiracy, inarticulate as it is, to ruin free enterprise. Rather than building it, they are destroying it.

Mr. S. Smith: Exactly, no free lunch.

Mr. Peterson: It is exactly like a poker game. We are entering a poker game with a small bankroll and we are going to be playing with a lot of guys with a lot more money than we have. We may win one or two hands, but all we have done in the long run is driven up the stakes, because we are destined to lose. I think it shows a serious lack of principle and lack of commitment by this government ever to get involved.

My leader has stood up in the House, rightfully, and asked the Treasurer to bring into this House the terms, the conditions, what he wants out of this fund; to say on what basis he is going to allocate the money. But how can the Treasurer say, because he doesn't even know; and probably never will know. If that ever came before the House we would have real trouble voting for it.

It is not that we are sabre rattling or trying to threaten an election. We are not like the NDP who threaten an election every time they turn around. If they ever had one they would be wiped out as a political force and a party, there is no question about that.

Mr. Martel: We brought two new members in today. Did you notice who the two new members were today?

Mr. MacDonald: Have you looked at the Liberals in western Canada recently?

Mr. Peterson: We don't say irresponsible things. When we are serious, members will know it. When we are prepared to go to the people, as we were last year on the OHIP issue—we fought that one right down the line and we were prepared to go to the people—when we are ready to go the government will be the first to know.

I don't want to be irresponsible, our party does not want to threaten this government, but let me say that this is a most dangerous precedent. It disturbs all of my colleagues. Like all political parties, our caucus represents a spectrum of political opinion, but even the right-wingers, even people like my friend the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio), this concept disturbs deeply. Am I right?

Mr. Samis: The Social Credit member—the Lorne Reznowski of the Legislature.

Mr. Laughren: Are you going to take that, Vince?

Mr. Kerrio: It is true.

Mr. Peterson: I won't dwell on that any more, but it has been very poorly thought out. It still hasn't been thought out, as best we can see. The criteria are juvenile, silly; they invite dishonesty, they invite us to lose in the long run, and I am most disturbed about this approach that has been taken.

As I said earlier, that fund of $200,000,000 is increasing government expenditures 7.4 per cent more than they increased last year. The government denies responsibility, but clearly if they want the credit they have to take the responsibility. In fact, they shouldn't be involved in it at all.

Our proposal would direct all of our government assistance to those companies that are indigenous, that are owned here, that abide by our code of behaviour, that are building jobs—exporting, manufacturing, creating high technology, research and development here in this province.

It is not as if we are anti-American, it is not as if we are anti-multicultural; but, good Lord, it is time for some priorities. Every single fourth quarter there is a run on the Canadian dollar as dividends, profits, royalties, interest payments are run across the border, depressing our dollar. That is a spectre we are going to face. It is not so much the manufacturing trades that are the problem. It is because we are so completely foreign-owned that necessarily we are going to be in a serf relationship until we start breaking out of it.

We don't want to buy them up tomorrow because we don't have the money to buy them up. We don't want to kick them out either because there are ways we can deal with them. I say, with conviction and seriously, we must start now putting all of our emphasis on our industry—and I emphasize “our”—on industry that has a loyalty and commitment to Ontario and to Canada. To that end we have suggested a substantial number of programs. They are good programs. They are excellent programs.

I am not going into great detail about some of them because members have had an opportunity to read them. I have been talking to your predecessor in the chair, Mr. Speaker. I invited him to come to my office for a copy of our paper, and I invite you too because I know it would behoove you, in your esteemed status in this Legislature, to read that. You would probably want to talk about it in the next election to show what kind of responsible people are involved in government in this province.

We have several propositions. I want to go over them briefly. We have talked about procurement; that is an intelligent way to assist Canadian industry. We have said we are even prepared to pay a premium—obviously we do not like it, but we are prepared to—up to certain maximums, depending on certain conditions, to assist Canadian, Ontario-based industry to build jobs here.

I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker: As a businessman, the nicest hand we can give a businessman in this province is not to give him a cash grant, but to give him an order—something to start building his production on. That is how we can help. We have to be helping those industries, and we have to be buying from them.

Every other country in this world with any kind of industrial infrastructure has preferential purchasing policies. We have been so juvenile; we have allowed ourselves to be so outclassed by tougher and more intelligent trading competitors around the world. That is one of the reasons we have the problems we have today.

I am almost embarrassed. When you go to Germany, to Japan, even to the United States, and talk to these people, they say: “How could you be so dumb? You weren't raped; you invited it.” When you invite it, as you know, Mr. Speaker, it is not considered rape under the Criminal Code of Canada.

We offered no defence; we offered nothing in its place. At least if we had put in a little resistance, we could complain; but we did not, and that probably is the most telling indictment on this generation of government and financiers and people involved in this thing that one can possibly make. I for one, as a Canadian and as a committed citizen of this province, am extraordinarily sad about that particular fact of our economic existence today.

We also made two specific proposals on venture capital. The government has its own proposal on venture capital. We have looked at the bill. We will have further debate on this bill when it comes to second reading, which I suspect will be reasonably shortly; the government House leader is nodding his head, and who knows.

The Treasurer has already said he has no idea whether it will work, and probably he is right. He is clearly right about the fact that he has no idea about it, but probably he is right in the sense that it will not work—or at least not in the way it should work. A bill of this type should be designed to liberate money into higher-risk propositions—Canadian-owned mining, manufacturing, our kind of industry—to build our industrial infrastructure and to give the little guy a hand.

What is going to happen, in our judgement, as to the small business development corporation plan is, it is going to become an alternative source of financing only for relatively successful companies. By definition, by the way it is constructed, it is going to be conservatively orientated rather than risk-orientated. If one has read that bill, it is the most bureaucratic, complicated bill one can possibly imagine, with a disturbing degree of ministerial discretion. Every time you make a move in a company like that, a minister has to approve or disapprove: getting the money out of trust, putting it into escrow, paying out so much, every time you change shareholdings, make a purchase or whatever.

In the Treasurer's plan, you buy shares in a small business development corporation that buys shares in an investee company; so you have two sets of shares, none of which is marketable. Shares in small companies are not particularly marketable. We do not have securities laws to protect them. Anyone who invests knows that a minority position in a private company is dangerous and fraught with dangers at the best of times.

Understanding that, what is going to happen with this bill—in our judgement, at least—is that if it works, it will only work for the sharpies. It is going to be a tax dodge or tax subsidy situation, subsidizing large companies and wealthy people to divert money into a company in this way that they would divert in another way. All this will be doing is subsidizing the 30 per cent and not really solving the problem of diverting risk capital into new kinds of ventures. If it works, that is how it is going to work, and we are going to look back and say the results were not what we wanted. Probably it won't work because the funds are not going to go where they are wanted, nor will they attract the kind of people we want. The Treasurer talks of wanting to develop this great nursery for capitalists in the province of Ontario. What he is doing is creating a graduate school for tax evaders; that's what he is actually doing with a proposition like this, and it's structurally wrong too.

If we are looking for small business, then the $250,000-limit is too small because the kind of SBDC I envisage or the kind of SBDC or VIC proposition I think will work will be one that brings the investor together with the investee and minimizes the baggage in the middle, that is the VIC or SBDC. That is one aspect of our particular proposal, but a $250,000-minimum is probably going to prevent that kind of relationship.

On the other hand, a $5-million maximum is high and the sharp people will take advantage of it, although it's probably too small to syndicate. It is not as if the same people, the brokers, the drilling funds or the MURBs and those kinds of things, are going to be interested and go to the marketplace for a fee and raise the money and look for places for investment. It is probably structurally wrong. That is why we presented, in advance of this proposal and not knowing what this proposal was, two alternative proposals, both of which satisfy in our judgements a different kind of a need for two different kinds of companies.

Let us recognize there are different kinds of investors and we want an opportunity for both. One is a more conservative one, government-run. You can tick it off on your tax form. You could put up to five per cent of your Ontario tax into a fund of this type. It will be invested with some kinds of government guarantees and government supervision.

It may not be as risky as one would like, but it's going to have the surety. The investor will know, or the widow who is oriented towards more conservative investments will know, that the province of Ontario stands behind its credibility and its integrity.

It's a sensible move. Give people a chance to put some money in Ontario. Give them a chance to invest in their own province. We don't have that now; we let New Yorkers invest in Canada, we let Germans invest in Canada, either to buy land or buy our bonds that cost us so much extra money. Let's give the average Ontarian a chance to have a stake in free enterprise in this province. That's one proposal.

Our other proposal is a different one. It tries to avoid the bureaucracy. It tries to bring the investor close to the investee. It tries to create a flow for money between people who have it, can invest it and get it immediately into the kind of high risk propositions where we think the money should be directed. Recognizing that the ideal venture capital situation is necessarily in conjunction with the federal government, the ideal situation we would like to see—and we would use our good offices, if we were ever the government; and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, when we are the government we will have much better offices in Ottawa with whomever is the government up there than probably this government has ever had—we would like to see a tax deferral program along the lines of an RRSP, MURB kind of a program that gets money quickly, directly and without bureaucratic control into the proper kinds of vehicles and defers taxes—though one pays taxes coming out, whenever that is.

I think the tax deferral program is a good program, just like the RRSP has become a good program for this country. It's a good program for several reasons. It encourages savings, but it also liberates those moneys into many small pools, many small funds competing and building capital infrastructure in this province. More important, they are out of government hands so governments cannot consume those for current consumption.

I wanted to speak briefly on the SBDC because I am concerned about it and because I don't think it is going to work. We will have an extension of this debate later. We are going to put forward our proposals, and definitely that bill will be in committee where we will discuss it at great length.

In my time remaining, I want to deal with some of the other proposals in the budget. Really there is not very much to grab on to. I am sure that the Treasurer subscribed to the theory of Jean Baptiste

Colbert who—as you know, Mr. Speaker, and the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) would know this—was the controller-general to Louis XIV. He said the art of taxation is the art of so plucking the goose to get the maximum number of feathers with the least amount of hissing.

Can't you see the Treasurer sitting down and saying: "Gee, I think we can get a little more there. It is going to be a little tough to get that. Gee, we will make people mad. Don't fool around too much with premiums because, gee, you know, the NDP, what are they going to do; and the Liberals, what are they going to do. Gee, we can stick a little more on road tax here, even though we are squawking and the principal part of our energy policy is to keep Alberta's prices down, we can still weasel a couple more cents a gallon."

You see, Mr. Speaker, there was no rhyme or reason to it; it was completely politically motivated; and I guess that is what is so disturbing about this budget from this new Treasurer. There was an absence of vision; there was an absence of clarity of thought; there was an absence of purpose. Really, when he leaves his chair—probably sooner rather than later—one is going to say, "What did Frank Miller stand for? What was his vision of Ontario?" At least we knew with McKeough. He was wrong, but at least we knew. With this Treasurer we still don't know; because he is fooling around, tinkering around, putting this tax up, putting that tax down; and what he has done in total is raise about another $181,000,000 of taxation through new sources or increased contemporary sources.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The old shell game.

Mr. Peterson: What do we have? What can you say about it? You know, we are not going to go to the people on the alcohol tax or the tobacco tax, but we do say and we do recognize that we are committed to an irrevocable course of increased taxation forever.

I think it is this absence of vision, this tinkering, this fooling; it is the media-oriented campaigns—the Employment Development Fund, which I discussed earlier; the SBDC, which probably won't work. The member for Muskoka will be known more for his failures, as he was in the Health portfolio, than he will be for his successes.

Mr. Laughren: Boy, he could sell used cars, though.

Mr. Bolan: Who would buy one from him?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have not dwelled on, as much as I have in the past two years, our positive proposals. I made an assumption this year that our friends in the House will have some knowledge of them; certainly my own colleagues are very familiar with them, and I decided to spare the members some time today by not going into them in any more detail. If I have sounded negative it is because we have done the positive, we have the positive suggestions, but—

Mr. Laughren: Gloom and doom Liberals. They are always so negative.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Bite your tongue.

Mr. Peterson: —it is part of our specific obligation to criticize, as intelligently and as responsibly as we have. Don't ever misconstrue that as an absence of commitment or an absence of vision in this party because I say with great pride, under the leadership of the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith) we have a clear vision, competent people, and a plan that we are prepared to lay and have laid before the people of this province.

Before we make any more tax expenditures of the type that the Treasurer has made, or before there is any more superficial tinkering with the budgeting, our commitment is to concentrate on the fundamentals. This is one leader in this House who had the courage to tell people the truth, even when it is politically not attractive. I never heard that out of the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and I have never heard that out of the Premier (Mr. Davis), and that is why I am proud to be delivering his response on his behalf.

Mr. Laughren: Our leader likes Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Peterson: It is irresponsible of a politician today to jimmy the figures to his advantage, or to cloud things and make promises that he cannot deliver. Our only solution is a fundamental approach, a structural approach, which is not necessarily going to be easy; but only if we do that are we collectively, those of us who are charged with the administration of this province and legislating for the benefit of the people of this province, only then are we going to be able to leave some kind of a legacy, a financial legacy, a legacy that doesn't burden our children with debt or with taxes to the extent that it destroys their initiative; only then, if we concentrate on building new wealth for them now, can we leave them the legacy I am sure we all want to leave them.

On motion by Mr. Laughren, the debate was adjourned.

[5:00]

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario entered the chamber of the Legislative Assembly and took her seat upon the throne.

ROYAL ASSENT

Hon. Mrs. McGibbon: Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly of the province has, as its present sittings thereof, passed certain bills to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said Legislative Assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 13, An Act to amend the Ministry of Transportation and Communications Act, 1971;

Bill 14, An Act to amend the Statute Labour Act;

Bill 15, An Act to amend the Local Roads Boards Act;

Bill 16, An Act to amend the Airports Act;

Bill 18, An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, we, Her Majesty's most dutiful and faithful subjects of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario in session assembled, approach Your Honour with sentiments of unfeigned devotion and loyalty to Her Majesty's person and government, and humbly beg to present for Your Honour's acceptance, a bill entitled an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain additional sums of money for the Public Service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth thank Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, accept their benevolence and assent to this bill in Her Majesty's name.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to—I really enjoy that applause.

I don't often get that when I get outside the House. It feels pretty good to get a little bit of it in here.

Mr. Samis: You sound neglected over there.

Mr. Riddell: I hope you give the same applause when Larry Condon wins.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is a bit debatable. You haven't been down in Lambton or Middlesex lately, or you wouldn't be making statements like that. The third party might disagree with you.

Today, as we approach the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services, I'm very happy firstly to bring to your attention that the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) was critic for that party last year. I look forward to his help with my estimates this year.

From the New Democratic Party, the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) and I have been around here about the same length of time. I think it was about eight o'clock in the evening, September 25, 1963, that the honourable member assumed his role to represent the people of Yorkview.

Mr. Young: A long time ago.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mind you, I've been there a few times since to try to tell the people they should have somebody else representing them, but they pay more attention to him.

Today, I can't disagree too much. Of course, I've tried that with Essex North too, without much success. However, I look forward to the two of you and whatever assistance you might get from your colleagues.

Mr. Riddell: I have a sneaking suspicion you've been up in Huron-Middlesex too.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not for a few days. It was about two weeks ago.

Mr. Chairman: Shall we get back to the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Ministry of Government Services provides accommodation facilities and a wide range of goods and services in support of government programs.

The operations of the ministry are grouped into three major programs of service; accommodation, supply and service and the communications and computer service.

Number one, the accommodation program has the responsibility for the provision and maintenance of accommodation for the ministries and agencies of government.

Number two, the supply and services program involves the provision of a wide variety of centralized services and facilities to ensure efficiency and economy in the supply of purchased goods and services as well as certain commonly-used government support services.

Number three, the communication and the computer service program has the responsibility for the supply and promotion of computer processing services as well as the provisions of local and intergovernmental telecommunications services for government use.

The ministry's annual report for 1978-79 provides information on the achievement of all ministry programs and, in addition, complete information on tenders and contract awards is published each year in the ministry's annual report.

I will conclude these introductory remarks by saying the 1979-80 estimates of the Ministry of Government Services are within the target established by the government and are in accordance with government programs of expenditure restraints. I will be pleased to answer questions concerning the estimates of my ministry. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex North.

Mr. Ruston: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to congratulate the minister on his activity over the past 12 months.

I have a few remarks for the lead-off. I am one who feels we should spend a little more time going through the estimates in detail to discover what the ministry is accomplishing each year; to see if the minister is improving his operations as to the cost of operations and manpower; to determine his ability to carry on the work without increasing the overall cost to the budgets to which some of the departments are trying to adhere.

At one time the Ministry of Government Services was probably something like a ministry of highways, more or less a patronage type of operation, or I suppose you might call it a pork barrel situation. As you go back over the years, you were not a good member if you didn't get a new highway in your area after four years. It even went back into the county council. The present Minister of Government Services, having served on a county council, I would suppose can recall being a reeve. I believe he was warden of Lambton county at one time, where he used to have little discussions, as the fellows say in the backroom, about whether he might get a road approved in this area. For that you try to get support from a fellow councillor.

I think over the past number of years that has gone by the wayside to some extent. I think we had road need studies and need study reports. I know when I was on county council you kind of planned things out more by way of a long-range program. To some extent, that has gone by the wayside, and probably just as well.

[5:15]

The way the situation is now with regard to the environment and so forth and all the talk about saving land, if you say something about putting in a new highway you may have more people objecting than wanting it in their area. That is the kind of situation we are in.

Take Hydro towers, for example: everybody wants lots of Hydro service available but they don't want the towers going through their property. That's a problem we have in our own area. They are expanding the industrial areas in some towns. Now they need more Hydro service so someone is going to be asking permission to build towers on private property. So the trend has changed from what we used to call the "patterned" situation; now it is more or less a case of looking after what we have and trying to improve the operations.

The minister is involved with new buildings; he is involved in the lease buy-back situation where, as in Windsor, a new office building was built on a 25-year lease buy-back and in 25 years the ministry owns the building. It is financed by the contractor who has a 25-year guaranteed lease. He has no problem financing it through lending institutions, and of course it saves the government from going out and borrowing the money directly itself; otherwise it would have to obtain a large block of money each year. Whenever it is erecting new buildings it would have to go to the Treasurer and request more money.

The only disadvantage in that, I suppose, is that the money is tied up. In other words, every year there is so much money in the budget before the government can start budgeting for anything else it wants to do in that particular year it is already tied up with payments and so forth for the next number of years.

I don't disagree with that system; it has some advantages. I would hope that when we get onto that particular vote there may be some questions as to how planning is actually coming along and how much saving there is by doing it that way.

I often think about this esteemed building we are sitting in. It has been here for a number of years and we keep making little repairs here and there. We have the new committee room on the main floor, room 151, on which we are spending considerable money to make it one of the best rooms we have. We have lacked proper committee rooms. We haven't had proper sound equipment in them or room for the public to participate; certainly we need a good committee room. We probably need even more than the one large one. The costs of improvement are certainly enough. One cannot help that, because when you are repairing and adding to an old building sometimes you spend many days just doing what you could do in one day on a new building.

I am sure no one here would like to see this building removed or torn down and a new one take its place. That is something we are going to have to be looking at each year. I am sure the minister and his officials are looking at the repairs this building needs now and will need in the coming years. I understand that the slate tiles on the roof are starting to fall. I noticed there were problems with some tiles in the high winds the other day. To put on a new roof alone could run into $1,000,000 cost just as a rough estimate; maybe even more than that because slate is very hard to replace. I suppose it could be replaced with copper, but probably some support work would have to be done to the roof structure itself.

I noticed in one of the American papers the other day where the home of the vice-president of the United States has a slate roof. Mrs. Mondale had to go around with pans and pails to catch the water from the leaking slate roof. They hadn't allocated enough money to have the roof repaired so she was having a bit of a problem with a leaking roof. I guess we're not the only ones who have problems with older buildings that need a great deal of care in maintaining them.

I'm sure the minister has some estimates on the cost of refurnishing this building, to keep it in its proper state of repair. I hear rumours of figures that almost scare me. Over a period of years we may have to spend from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 to keep this building in a good state of repair.

However, when you drive up University Avenue I'm sure there is something about the structure of the building that many of us feel must be left in that general state because of the environment and so forth.

I really don't have very much more to say at this time. I only say I would hope when we're going through the estimates vote by vote that perhaps the ministry could in some way supply us with information about whether they are doing any new type of experiments on the upkeep of buildings and the cost of maintaining the many buildings the government owns. They might be inquiring too as to the course mentioned. I think our leader asked the minister the other day about a block of buildings owned by the province located between Bay Street and Yonge Street, south of Wellesley Street. We can get into some discussion on that I'm sure, but that's all I have right now.

Mr. Young: I appreciate the kind words the minister directed toward this side of the House. It's been quite a few years now since the minister and I came in here, he on one side of the House and me on the other. It's been quite an exciting time in many ways and a very frustrating time for some of us on this side; particularly at election time when we saw certain things happening, although the last couple of elections have been much more encouraging to those of us over here.

It may well be that certain fundamental changes are taking place in the thinking of the people across this province.

Mr. Samis: Obviously.

Mr. Young: I do want to say first of all, Mr. Minister, as a bit of criticism, I doubt if you should have brought your staff in as early as you did this afternoon.

I couldn't help feeling it was a little unfortunate that all these wise people should be brought here to listen to a criticism of your government—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We love that.

Mr. Young: —particularly where that criticism was of policies which were identical with those of the federal Liberal government.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You are getting better, Fred.

Mr. Young: Such as this matter of foreign ownership in the acquisition of land and a dozen other things. All these other matters, many of which were mentioned, stem right from policies in Ottawa, which you in your turn sort of go along with. I'm simply saying I doubt if you should expose these tender minds, mature as they are, to that kind of —what; wisdom, a lack of wisdom—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No; they enjoy it all.

Mr. Young: —or whatever it may have been this afternoon.

Mr. Ruston: You may learn something, Fred.

Mr. Young: In speaking to your staff, Mr. Minister, through you Mr. Chairman, I do want to pay tribute to one of your staff members whom I understand is fairly ill at the present time, Mr. Gordon Laws. He has been here a long time; we have known him, we have respected him. He has played a very useful part for this province and for the people within this complex. I know the people in this House want to express our sincere sorrow that he is at the present time ill and wish him well in the days ahead.

I don't think any of us could criticize Gordon Laws in any real way, because he has been helpful. Whenever we have gone to him with a problem, we have found it solved, if possible, very quickly and expeditiously. If he could not solve it, he would tell us; he was honest with us. I hope the minister will pass on the wishes of this House for his speedy recovery.

Mr. Chairman, I realize this ministry is not a policy-making body as such; it carries out policy more than makes it. But there are certain fields where it does initiate and carry through some policy of its own, although my suspicion is that that policy is part of the policy of the Management Board, the Premier or whatever. When I speak of certain things today, I realize this minister may be in a bit of a bind because he has to carry out certain policies and directions that are handed to him. Perhaps he would do better if he were entirely on his own. I do not know; I hope so.

I heard him mention, first of all, a report for 1978-79. Is a report for 1978-79 available? The last one I had was for the year ended March 31, 1978.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It was filed this morning, Mr. Chairman. It should be in the member's mail box today. Does he have this report?

Mr. Young: No, I do not have it. The last report I have is for the year ended March 31, 1978. It may be in my mail box, although my mail came up this morning.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is in his mail box. I will send over a copy to the member; I have some spare ones.

Mr. Young: It may have been put there after my mail was delivered this morning; I do not know. I appreciate the minister's sending it to us today, although again it does make it a bit difficult for those of us who have this kind of responsibility to criticize properly when we do not get the reports until the day that the estimates start. The minister understands that, but it is still one of those things which perhaps we cannot overcome unless we start estimates a little later and spend a little more time on legislation and other matters earlier in the session.

I have the report now; I thank the minister for it. Perhaps over the supper hour, I will have a chance to peruse it and the wisdom therein, if there is wisdom there—and we take for granted there is.

I want to spend a bit of time on a matter which the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) mentioned on the way through and which I want to bring back to the minister's attention. It is a matter of which he has been very much seized in recent days, because he has heard a lot of criticism. To give him his due, he has been doing a lot of work in this field, but we on this side of the House feel that that work has not been as adequate as it might have been.

I turn to the report of the select committee on the fourth and fifth reports of the Ontario Commission on the Legislature, which was filed on February 9, 1977. That committee was chaired by Donald H. Morrow, who was a former Speaker of this House and a very respected member of this Legislature for many years. It was also signed by the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck), who since that time has become a member of the cabinet and is, we hope, doing a good job in that field. It was also signed by the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), who wants to be in the cabinet and has not yet made it, but I am dead certain that all of us on this side of the House wish him well and hope that the Premier (Mr. Davis) has his name on that list which he will consult from time to time when vacancies occur. We are not hoping there will be a vacancy in this particular ministry.

Mr. B. Newman: He didn't ask you to say that, did he?

Mr. Young: No, he did not. We feel like helping along a fellow member of the Legislature, and we like telling the Premier what he ought to be doing. If the minister here wished to vacate that seat and let the other member slide down one row, we do not know whether it would be an improvement or not; we doubt it at this point, because the member for Middlesex might have other gifts which could add greatly to the deliberations of this House.

I am pointing out that three very prominent, up-and-coming members of the House and one past member signed this document. I simply want to read a couple of paragraphs to put them on the record again for the minister's edification, because it hasn't yet sunk in as to what they mean.

[5:30]

"In the opinion of the committee, responsibility for the Legislative Building should be transferred to the Speaker. This would avoid the divided jurisdiction that currently creates problems, ensure that the legislative function has primacy in the building and also ensure that future planning for the building will be carried out in a non-partisan basis. The necessary changes,"—and I emphasize that word "changes,"—"to the Legislative Building can be carried out adequately only under the direction of the Speaker. To avoid duplication the Speaker should contract with the Ministry of Government Services for the operation and the maintenance of this building." We agree with that. "However, the direction of the building and the well-being of its employees and occupants must be the responsibility of the Speaker."

Then I quote again: "The committee feels strongly that under the direction of the Speaker sufficient funds must be dedicated to bring the Legislative Building up to a standard that befits the capital of Ontario and meets the needs of the members.

"The committee is now of the opinion that the renovation and restoration of the building must be carried out as a matter of urgency. The project will be lengthy"—and advice is offered as to what can be done, but—"it is the opinion of the committee that the project should be scheduled for completion by 1980."

This is, I think, very important: "The committee notes that the government has been willing to dedicate substantial funds to communities for the preservation of historic buildings, such as Osgoode Hall in Toronto, Victoria Hall in Cobourg, city hall in Kingston, and the Norfolk county courthouse in Simcoe. In view of the importance to Ontario of the Legislative Building, it should be given even greater priority."

Since that time we have seen the minister carry through a bill in this House in connection with the Middlesex building. There is some little snag now, but when that is carried through there will be substantial grants from the treasury for that building.

That report, which I think is very fair, and which is imaginative and looks forward to the future, is signed, as I said, by two New Democrats, two Liberals and by three respected members of the government party.

Let us look at what has happened since that time. We have seen plans carried out, and I have before me the Queen's Park space allocation. There has been a good deal of discussion about this between committees and the minister, and it is a very interesting document which I hold here. It shows that far from the Speaker getting control of this building, there has been a reluctance not only on the part of the minister, but as I said before by the treasury board and the Premier, I suspect, pushing him a bit, to allow that to take place. Whether it is because there isn't the trust in the Speaker—not because of the present Speaker, because this didn't happen before this Speaker was appointed—or whether it is the feeling that the Speaker might do something in a non-partisan way with which the government itself might not agree in the future, I don't know.

I'll just quickly go over the maps which I have before me. We see the Legislative Building basement, where we have the dining room under the responsibility of the Speaker, the restaurant under the Speaker; we have the southeast corner under the Speaker. Then we have the New Democratic caucus room with the lounge, and strangely enough the various print rooms, including the government print room, I understand, under the Speaker. That is a strange thing to happen. But outside of that, the whole basement is still under the direction of the minister.

I don't know why it is; I suppose this is the Tory underground and perhaps where the Tory machine is cranked up behind all those doors down there. There it is and it is not quite as much as we had expected.

When we come to the first floor the entrance to the building is under the Speaker. Some of the offices in the sections to the left and to the right of the Speaker's office are under the Speaker. Back in the north wing, most of that is under the Speaker except for the elevators and washrooms. If we want to go up and down or we want to go into the washrooms, we have to leave the jurisdiction of the Speaker and go to the jurisdiction of the minister. Why that should be I am not certain, but that is the way it is.

Mr. Roy: That is typical of this government. They want to keep control over the washrooms.

Mr. Young: The committee rooms on the first floor are under the Speaker.

Mr. Roy: That is where they get all their ammunition.

Mr. Young: When we come to the second floor—this floor—we have this chamber under the direction of the Speaker. We have the Liberals to the left of us.

Mr. Eaton: To the left of you, you said.

Mr. Swart: The Liberals aren't to the left of anyone.

Mr. Eaton: Nobody is to the left of you.

Mr. J. Reed: Not philosophically anyway.

Mr. Young: We have the offices in the back where the New Democrats are, except again for the washrooms and the elevators, with the back entrance, stairway and that elevator under the Speaker. When we look at the offices of the Premier, they come under the genial minister, as well as the government caucus offices and the office of the whip—the Tory whip only, the other whips are under the direction of the Speaker. Why that should be I am not sure. Perhaps something goes on in there that the Speaker should not know about. Then there is the caucus room.

We go around to the wings where we find two committee rooms. There has been a real scrap about this because the minister insists on having jurisdiction over rooms 230, 229, 228 and 227, to count backwards, because I think it is a backward step. The minister is holding on there, and holding on tight, at the very time when we need that space for other purposes. That is where government members can meet and plans can be made, I suppose, for toppling seats in Ottawa and other places. They have that for their own.

There is one thing that really gets me. We just had the Lieutenant Governor come in here as an impartial person. She is the representative of the Queen, and the Queen of course could not be more impartial. Here is the representative of the Queen, whose quarters logically should be under the Speaker, but evidently they have given her a blood test and she comes out a Tory in these matters.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: A great lady.

Mr. Roy: The minister has a great sense of priorities. He has the Lieutenant Governor, the Premier and the washrooms.

Mr. Young: Both her second and third-floor premises are white on this map, denoting under the jurisdiction of the minister. In other words, the minister is her boss in this respect and not the Speaker. That seems a strange and weird thing to me.

When we come to the floor above us, the galleries are under the direction of the Speaker. The Liberal members' offices are under the jurisdiction of the Speaker and the Hansard rooms are under the jurisdiction of the Speaker. The library and those offices in the back where the New Democrats are now all come under the Speaker. But the legislative counsel offices are under the minister; and again the stairways, the washrooms and all of these places.

Mr. J. Reed: Does the minister have a thing about washrooms?

Mr. Young: On the other side we have the cabinet offices all down that wing, where the cabinet makes up its mind. It seems to me we have a lot of office space there which some time ago the minister was told perhaps is a duplication, because some cabinet members have office space outside and perhaps should have less in here. The interesting thing to me is when we come up to the fourth floor where we have the Tory MPPs. This is really interesting, because the Liberal MPPs and the New Democrat MPPs are under the Speaker. The cabinet members and some others, like the member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg), are under the minister.

Mr. Worton: I wouldn't want to be under him, Fred.

Mr. Young: Well, there it is; a pretty tough job. You might be surprised, but there it is; when it comes to the ordinary MPP on the Tory side the Speaker gets them. What the difference is in the blood test between the minister, the aide to a minister and the back-bench MPPs I am not sure.

Mr. J. Reed: Some are more equal than others.

Mr. Young: They come up here in the blue colour—or green I guess it is, which is turquoise really—so they are under the jurisdiction of the Speaker.

Then we come to the top floor; there's the "roost". Up there too it is all white, under the jurisdiction of the minister. We have quite a lot of attic space up there. What goes on up there I don't know; there are a lot of locked doors up there.

Mr. J. Reed: That's where they store old government policies.

Mr. Young: That's where the Tory skeletons are hidden, I think, up in that tower.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No; Tory strength.

Mr. Young: The Tory strength; I thought the Tory strength was in the basement.

Mr. Worton: Well the roof is leaking there.

Mr. Young: In any case, there we have it. As I look over this whole thing, it is just incredible the way this whole situation has been divided up. I find it hard to understand why these things are so. Why there is a lack of space on the part of this government; and why the Speaker, in his office, can't carry out the kind of supervision carried out in most Parliaments in the Commonwealth around the world, where the Speaker is the supreme in this kind of a building. Why in the world does this minister refuse to listen to reason and to bring about this fundamental change in jurisdiction? Perhaps he will explain a little bit more of that to us in his reply. Perhaps during the estimates we will get further explanations about these changes.

It seems to me that the government has seen fit to assign plenty of little spots and cubbyholes in these places for the government party. Perhaps that is only fair; if we were the government party perhaps we would want to hang on to them, I don't know. I doubt it; but there they are, and they are white on this map. Yet adequate space has not been assigned to the opposition parties.

I leave that, but I will ask the minister if he will perhaps explain the reasoning behind all this.

There is only one other matter that I want to bring before the minister at this time. He set a good example and so did the member for Essex North; I don't want to take up too much time because of the limited number of hours we have for these estimates, but I do want to bring to his attention a letter written by one Lynne Gordon, chairperson, on the letterhead of the Provincial—the trillium is there—Secretariat for Social Development. She says this:

"At a meeting of the Ontario Status of Women Council on March 9, the members passed a motion recommending that provincial employment development funds be used to further the goals of equal opportunity for Ontario women." Now, the minister may say at this moment "That has nothing to do with me"; but wait a while.

She goes on to say: "We believe that the government has a responsibility to ensure that those in receipt of public funds use the same to benefit Ontario women, who make up a substantial proportion of the work force, but who are disproportionately disadvantaged"—those are two big words, Mr. Chairman—"in income during their working years and subsequently in their retirement."

The last paragraph says: "Therefore, be it resolved that the province recognize the urgent need to pursue economic and social goals simultaneously to ensure that all companies in receipt of provincial employment funds establish affirmative action plans for hiring and promoting women."

That addresses one aspect of the government's activities, but I want to bring this to the minister's attention because he is the one who through his ministry allocates a great deal of this government's funds. He lets the contracts for many departments and those contracts are important in doing exactly the things mentioned here as far as the use of employment development funds are concerned.

Lynne Gordon, chairperson, on the letterhead of one of the government departments, the Provincial Secretariat for Social Development, Ontario Status of Women Council, asks for this consideration. I would ask the minister to get together with Lynne Gordon and ask her what she has in mind in respect to this, particularly in view of what he might do to further this general idea in the letting of contracts for the province of Ontario in a dozen different fields.

I think this is something he might well discuss with her; and it should be considered this year, when we are thinking in terms of the status of women and doing what we can, as a Legislature, to advance the status of women in the province of Ontario.

I think anything else I have to say I can say during the votes as they come through. Having brought these pearls of wisdom to the attention of the minister, I'm looking forward to his reply and I'm looking forward to the discussion we can have with him as we enter the votes, one by one, in this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: First, in response to the member for Essex South, in fact in response to both parties' critics, let me touch on the building we're in.

Mr. Ruston: Essex North.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The member for Essex North—I don't know why I want to get over south, maybe I like the climate. I'm going down his way tomorrow to see what the climate is like—so I'll have a better idea then.

Mr. Ruston: It will be warm tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: With respect to the condition of this building and the possible future of the building, we all feel the same about the building. We feel it should be refurbished and put back into its original condition. It's going to take a great deal of money. I personally have had my engineers and architects look at proposals, proposals that could refurbish this building from its present condition.

I wish the member for Yorkview had been here a week or two ago when the member for Essex North requested to look at the fifth floor and the condition of the building. We had a tour of it. He had the opportunity to see what we're faced with in refurbishing this building.

First, when we go to bring new air into the building we feel we must bring it from above. We feel the air down at the ground level is such, from the exhaust of the automobiles and what have you that we shouldn't bring it into this building as fresh air. We believe we should bring it from up above. When you start that type of work and you get into the equipment you've got to carry up there, you have to go up into the attic to do reinforcing and a great amount of work to set up the machinery to supply the necessary ventilation.

The cost of that unit when completed is not far from $500,000. This is for the committee room and the room next door. We have had to do it right up the four floors. That in itself will give you a guideline as to what it will cost to do the complete building. The member for Essex North suggested many millions, maybe $25,000,000, $30,000,000, $35,000,000.

I have looked at the needs of the private members. We're all aware of a report I presented to each caucus that would give us the necessary accommodation—maybe not the necessary, maybe I would challenge my own statement on that, but it would give us the accommodation recommended by the committee headed by Donald Morrow, a former member of the Legislature.

The accommodation that the committee recommended was such that a member would have a private office and space for a staff of two. It was pretty limited accommodation. When one sees their recommendations and looks at the square footage, it is pretty small.

I did present a report to the committee headed by the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) on what I felt would provide the necessary accommodation for all members here. That report, and the necessary funding for it, is in the hands of the three party leaders until they work out an arrangement.

I could see us going to great expense. I could see us building a major addition on to the back of this building which would accommodate all the members and all the staff of the Legislature here on this site. But the cost of that would be enormous—perhaps $60,000,000, $70,000,000 or $80,000,000. The present minister cannot convince himself that he should go forth with those recommendations to his colleagues in cabinet. In a time of restraint, I think we, as members, must practise restraint.

The members of the House are fully aware that it was about September 1, 1978, I believe, when the three policy secretariats were moved out of this building and across the street into the Whitney Block. At that time, all parties got additional accommodation. I know it is not the accommodation that I feel a member is entitled to. I know it is not the accommodation that each one of the members opposite believes he should have; but I would have to say that it is the best accommodation available in this building under the present circumstances.

The member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) went into detail about the coloured map which I had a little bit of input into colouring, and the order in council went through in connection with that map. I would have to say to him that the rooms in the basement that are still under the minister's jurisdiction are more or less service rooms used by my staff. The rooms do not have much to do with the operation of this body.

When we get to the main floor of the building, the offices of the Leader of the Opposition, the committee rooms, and the north wing were turned over to the Speaker, but the area at the other end of the first floor was kept for the government as such. The rooms up to room 180 we turned over to the Speaker for the actual administrative staff of this building.

The other ministers who have rooms in this building are ministers whose offices are away from this complex. When I say "this complex," I include the Frost Building, the Whitney Block, the Macdonald Block, the Hepburn Block, the Ferguson Block, the Hearst Block and the Mowat Block. Any ministers who are in that area do not have an office down here, but I do carry room 180 under the name of the Minister of Government Services. There are 15 ministers who have offices across the street. We share those four offices. In fact, when I left here this afternoon, after we had completed the question period, I attended a meeting of a committee of cabinet which meets in that area every Monday afternoon.

When the different ministers who have offices in the complex adjacent to here—I could name them, but I do not think their names matter; the members opposite know the ministers' names—when they have groups to meet while the House is sitting, they use room 180. Any other ministers who have rooms on the first floor, repeat, are ministers who are outside of that area. I would point out that the offices of the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) and his parliamentary assistant are on the first floor, while those of the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) and the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) are in that area.

When we get to the second floor, the area immediately to the left, as the member for Yorkview said, was turned over to the Speaker. The other areas in the main building on the second floor all have to do with the government. The north wing, second floor and third floor, was turned over to the Speaker.

Some of the third floor area of this building was also turned over to Mr. Speaker, the area used by the press, Hansard and the Liberal caucus. I believe the New Democrats were moved from there down to the north wing.

When we get to the fourth floor, I believe there is one place where the people operating Hansard have a repair room. The rest is taken up by the staff of the Premier. It was the decision of the Minister of Government Services that any rooms taken up by the government, not the private members, should stay under the Ministry of Government Services.

I went before the committee, which is headed by the member for St. George, and I pointed this out. It was my belief the committee did accept that decision.

Mr. Young: What was the reason behind that decision?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We felt the government offices should be under the government, not under the Speaker. I might say the committee did agree with us on that, they openly agreed. They may personally and individually have had reservations but it was my understanding, when I went before the committee and presented that map to them, that they accepted it though they expressed some hesitation, the same as the member for Yorkview has today.

The same member brought out a letter from Lynne Gordon, one whom we respect and believe to be a very capable lady. In response to her letter, it has been the practice of the government to hire ladies or women wherever possible. In fact, the Minister of Government Services could be criticized for saying that in a job which ladies can do they do a better job I would say than the other sex. We think if a lady can do the job she does it much better than a man.

Mr. J. Reed: I wonder if the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy) would agree with that?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: He would agree with me, I am sure; I am sure the complete House would agree with me on that. In my particular department, as members know, I have many jobs women would not want to do, but 28 per cent of my staff is of the fairer sex. That will complete my reply to the opening statements.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

HOMEMAKERS' SERVICES

58. Mr. Breugh: What is the ministry's position on training and licensing homemakers for chronic care? [Tabled March 7, 1979]

Hon. Mr. Norton: In response to the above question, originally directed to my colleague the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), I would advise that we are presently working towards the development of uniform standards in homemakers' services. We have requested input from agencies and municipalities respecting desirable criteria and we plan to produce a manual of standards in homemakers' services during this fiscal year. Our intention is to enunciate policy guidelines expected of agencies which offer a homemaker service to the public.

To reassure the honourable member about current practice, those who are employed as homemakers are carefully screened beforehand, either by an agency or a municipality. Some community colleges in urban areas have developed continuing education programs for homemakers. Most agencies now provide in-service training to homemakers. In areas which lack adequate facilities, training grants are available for attendance at short term courses.

PROPERTY TAX CREDITS

105. Mr. Dukszta: Will the Minister of Revenue please indicate how long has the investigation of property tax credits been going on. What have been the findings of this program to date as to: (a) number of claims investigated; (b) paid in error rate; (c) actual amount paid in error; (d) amount recovered? [Tabled April 2, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The property tax credit is part of the Ontario tax credit system.

The Ontario tax credit system, provided for in the Income Tax Act, Ontario, has been in existence since the 1972 taxation year, administered by Revenue Canada pursuant to the memorandum of agreement made under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

As part of the administration, the federal authorities selectively audit all of the tax credit claims filed. The Ontario Ministry of Revenue assists federal authorities in identifying and establishing selective criteria. The audit has been in effect since the program began.

(a) Number of claims investigated: The annual review of OTC claims, of which the property tax credit is the largest component, consists of an audit of a selected number of files in categories where a higher potential for error is thought to exist; as well as a computer match of spouse files to ensure that the claim is made by the tax filer with the higher income. The total of claims reviewed up to the end of the 1976 taxation year was 268,073. The process included a computer spouses' match of well over 1,000,000 claims annually.

(b) Paid in error rate: As the form of audit review covers a very large number of claims, especially by the computer match, and concentrates the audit effort in areas where a high potential for error is perceived, any attempt to define an "error rate" on the basis of total claims is meaningless.

(c) Actual amount paid in error:

Taxation Year	Total OTC Claims $ Millions	Total Amounts Overpaid $ Millions
1973	296.0	0.7
1974	385.0	1.5
1975	414.0	3.5
1976	420.0	3.2
1977	434.0	*

*Audit for 1977 is still in progress.

(d) Amount recovered: Under the terms of the memorandum of agreement, Revenue Canada reimburses Ontario for all amounts found to have been overpaid.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

113. Mr. T. P. Reid: Would the ministry provide the titles and subject matter of all public opinion polls for each government ministry, the cost of each poll, and the name of the company which conducted the poll from April 1, 1978 until April 1, 1979. Would the ministry table copies of each such opinion poll. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. McCague: The above question cannot be answered within the normal 14 days but an answer will be tabled on or about May 24, 1979.

GOVERNMENT MEMBERS' TRAVEL

104. Mr. Van Horne: Will the minister please indicate which government members travelled outside of Toronto on government business in 1978-79? Please indicate the name of the community or other province or other country visited, the length of the visit, the purpose of the visit, the number of civil servants (if any) accompanying the government member, the accommodation cost and travel cost for the government member and the accommodation cost and travel cost for the civil servants (if any) who accompanied the government member. [Tabled March 30, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Amassing the data necessary for even a partial answer to this question would constitute an overwhelming cost both in man-hours and in dollars.

The Legislature or any member therein is free at any time to question ministers in the House or under estimates about travel in and outside of Toronto undertaken by them, their staff or ministry officials.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

On vote 501, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Just as we retired for the dinner hour I stated that about 20 per cent of my staff are female. I still maintain that particular position, but we have certain contracts jobs with the trades and the female force has not yet entered that field. When we get away from the trades field, 50 per cent of our staff our women and 50 per cent are men; we're pretty well split down the middle.

I wanted to bring that to members' attention tonight as I look up in the gallery among the people there and see a future generation of young ladies from Agincourt. The member for Yorkville would want to know that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You mean the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young). The minister will have you from Yorkville yet.

Mr. Nixon: He spends a lot of time in Yorkville.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Sorry, Yorkview.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister can add anything to the answer he gave to our leader the other day with regard to the east of Bay site—between Bay Street and Yonge Street, that section in there—with regard to any agreement that may be forthcoming with the city of Toronto as to that property.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the honourable member, we have approximately 13 acres east of Bay Street and south of Wellesley Street. This belongs to the people of the province of Ontario. The city of Toronto presented a proposal but we as the government are not ready at this moment to let that land go. I met with the mayor of the city of Toronto about a month ago and pointed out to him certain interests that we as the government have in that land. He pointed out the city's interest, which he had done earlier. I told him that I could not accept his proposal at this moment.

I'm sure you all read in the paper about the bus companies that are interested in that piece of property. I pointed this out to his worship.

Mr. Nixon: Bus companies.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, busing companies. A whole group of them went together. They put forth a proposal that that be the centre for the city of Toronto. The city did not accept that immediately. I asked his worship to go back and take another look at it and said that I'd be glad to meet with him again in a few weeks. At this moment we're not sure, as the government, that we don't want some additional buildings in that area. We don't want it all, but as yet we're not in the position that we want to say so much of it is surplus.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I know my colleague the member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) wants to ask a question of the minister, but perhaps I may be permitted to follow up on a bit of a review of that property, which is south of Wellesley Street and east of Bay Street. Did the minister receive a letter from a developer in recent days, which I believe was received by a number of members?

Mr. Worton: I have one here.

Mr. Nixon: Was the member talking about this this afternoon?

Mr. Worton: No.

Mr. Nixon: It asked if we had any views on a proposed apartment-hotel development complex that might very possibly be used by members. I think the letter came from Greenwin Developments. Is there a possibility that the government is thinking of either selling or leasing that land for private development? Perhaps I should ask the minister's views.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: First let me respond that I'm not aware of that letter; I'm not aware of that development. The only proposal I have had is the one presented by the city of Toronto. I'm not aware of any proposal. If I've got the letter, I don't remember receiving it. How recent is it? Could the member send it over?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, if the minister would permit me: I do not believe this letter is dated, but the letterhead says "Greenwin, 111 Davisville Avenue, Toronto." It's addressed to "Dear member of the Ontario Legislative Assembly: The Greenwin Group, a private company involved in land development and property management in Toronto, is planning to construct a high-rise residential building at the corner of Bay and Wellesley Streets in downtown Toronto." Now, it cannot be the Sutton Place, the Sunoco building, or the southwest corner; so it has to be the land that the ministry owns.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We have not been approached by this company, but let me try to help the member. When cabinet was dealing with the petitions respecting the Toronto central area plan, there was an area immediately north of the Sutton Place where we understood a development was going in; I guess it's Dundonald Street, just to the north. I am not aware of that, but I can assure the member that we as a government have not been approached by this company.

Mr. Nixon: It may very well be that but, when the location was given as the corner of Bay and Wellesley, and since I believe Mr. Eddie Goodman is the lawyer for Greenwin, it just naturally occurred to me that probably something had been arranged.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I give you my word—

Mr. Nixon: Maybe this time Eddie has struck out.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I give you my word here in the House that I have not been approached by this company. Maybe other members have. The member must have some particular tie-ins with this company that they would send him that letter and not me.

Mr. Nixon: It went to all members of the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am very disappointed. I will have to approach them.

Mr. Young: Isn't it possible, Mr. Chairman, that the minister would be the last to hear about it; that plans might go forward and then it would come to him only when the building is a sort of fait accompli? Or does he have to sell the land first?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, I can give the honourable member the assurance that the government as such has not been dealing with this company. I can give him that assurance.

Mr. Young: It is a pipe dream, I guess.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, I feel there's always an appropriate time, and I think it's in this vote, to say a few words of appreciation to the minister for the co-operation I have received for my constituents, especially in terms of the buildings that his ministry has provided through the association with the University of Guelph.

I also want to pay tribute to the minister for his co-operation and that of his deputy and staff with regard to the Macdonald Stuart Centre, which has now come into being and which I am sure will be a good asset for the city. The minister was very co-operative and in his usual manner got things done in a hurry. We appreciated that; it had been hanging fire for some two years. The other big thing of importance, which has happened in our main building, is that my former leader, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), the member for Windsor-Walkerville and I have been provided with new and very impressive offices overlooking University Avenue. Mine is the biggest office I have ever had down here—

Mr. Nixon: It's not as big as the mayor of Guelph's, though.

Mr. Worton: The funny thing about it is that, prior to this office, I had always had too much furniture. In this one, I didn't have enough. My wife likes to spend my money; so I sent her out to buy a chesterfield of my own. I just wanted the minister to know that it's a great improvement on what the three elder members have had here. Perhaps, if I consult with them too, we will have an official ribbon-cutting and have the minister cut the ribbon. I thank him very much.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the honourable member for those kind remarks.

Just after the six o'clock adjournment I had the opportunity of visiting in his office the honourable member on your right. I have to agree. I think it is about the best office he has had around here in what—20 years?

Mr. Cooke: When do the rookies get half decent offices?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Time goes on; it is a great healer.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I don't know whether I want to pay tribute to the minister or not. But I tell you, when I look out the window from my office, I look over the park just in front of the buildings. There, framed in the window, is the headquarters of Ontario Hydro. I hope to goodness this minister will never allow a building, such as Ontario Hydro, to be constructed under his responsibility. It was built without any tender whatsoever being called. Surely it wouldn't be possible for any other government ministry to erect a building without calling for tenders? Can he give us his assurance in that regard?

Mr. Wornton: I use it for a looking glass.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am sure the honourable member is well aware of the policy carried out by the departments that I speak for tonight.

Mr. Nixon: Only Ontario Hydro builds without a tender?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Well, you know, that is a little bit debatable. I was one of those who sat down in the north room, where the NDP have their caucus, one summer not too many summers ago, listening to evidence over that particular building.

Mr. Nixon: Was there evidence of a tender?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There was evidence that we were getting good value for our money. In fact, the chairman tonight was the chairman of that committee. But we, within the Ministry of Government Services, certainly do tender. It is only in extreme circumstances that the low tender is not taken. The minister has to be satisfied that it is a "must" that we not take the low tender.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, if I may just pursue this general field for a moment. I had occasion to write to the minister a couple of weeks ago—he was good enough to respond—bringing to his attention the rather disreputable appearance of some of the properties under his care on University Avenue, somewhat below the headquarters of Ontario Hydro. Of course, the building immediately south is the old Ontario Hydro headquarters. It has remained empty and totally unused for these many years since Ontario Hydro moved into its new facility.

Farther down from that—and really I should have the address here but the minister knows the buildings—farther south on University Avenue there are two office buildings which I suppose are two of the dirtiest, dingiest buildings in Toronto. You might see them down by the slaughterhouse or down in the factory section. But these are sitting there with their venetian blinds askew, filthy from top to bottom, except for the sign in the front that says, "Ontario Government Office Building."

I don't believe they are even used. But they comprise extremely valuable real estate, as does the old headquarters for Ontario Hydro. We don't want to go over the decision to build the new headquarters for Hydro again. I still think it was a very bad decision on the part of all concerned; really, a serious, bad decision. But I would hope this minister, with the kind of initiative and influence he has demonstrated in the past, can turn those buildings into some good use for the benefit of the taxpayers.

One of the obvious moves, in my view, would be to turn one of those buildings over to the ombudsman. In this House, there has been debate in the past about the rather luxurious and certainly very expensive facilities used by the ombudsman for his offices. I have never visited them myself, but I certainly have received reports from those who have, from both Legislature members and from people reporting for newspaper. I would hope that the new ombudsman, using the good sense he has demonstrated so far in his career, would use every opportunity he might have to what you might call "rationalize" the costs of his important office.

[8:15]

I would hope he would move out of his present location. Although it is centrally located at the corner of Bay and Queen, he could very well reach an agreement—an arm's length agreement—that would maintain all of his autonomy, which is so important both to him and to everyone else, to rent some of the facilities that are under the jurisdiction of the government of Ontario. It could be the old Hydro building, although I suppose that still rests with Hydro. We might very well take it over from them since they have shown something less than initiative and skill in getting it rented. Ontario Hydro has this huge office building, which it cast off because it happened to be a few years old and which has been sitting there empty. It has been paid for by the consumers of electricity across this province now for a number of years. It is in the area that should and could command some of the highest rent in Canada if it were properly administered, but it sits there empty.

The minister has two other buildings that I have already described as somewhat disreputable further down University Avenue. They should either be sold to allow the private sector to use them and pay taxes on them or else put to some profitable use for the taxpayers of Ontario. I have just made one suggestion and that is we ought to approach the ombudsman and make him an offer he cannot refuse as far as financing is concerned in providing him with the kind of office facilities he needs. I know he would be somewhat unwilling to deal in anything other than an arm's length way with any emanation of government. He understands his responsibility there better than anyone else.

I am very satisfied in that connection but I wanted to bring this to the attention of the minister because I, as a taxpayer, am offended every morning when I come up University Avenue to see those buildings sitting there unutilized. If we cannot use them, we should give them to somebody who can. We should bring to the attention of Ontario Hydro the fact we do not appreciate the inadequacies of their management in this connection.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am sure the honourable member last week was aware there was one of the committees of this House listening to an employee who had left the Ministry of Culture and Recreation. It was brought out at that time that one of these buildings is going to be occupied by the staff that has to do with our new Canadians. We hope, within a few weeks, one of these buildings will be occupied.

Mr. Nixon: I thought they were going to use the old Ministry of Labour down on Front Street.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They are. We have not got full plans for it at this moment. We are going to move them from 8 York Street up to the complex to which you are referring.

Mr. McClellan: Put the Ministry of Labour back.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You are correct, Ontario Hydro does have an empty building that should be looked on in a useful way. In the next few months one of the two buildings will be in full use.

Mr. Nixon: If I may just take another moment: The Ministry of Labour, as I recall, rents office space in that black tower, Travelers Tower, that brand new building.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: 400 University.

Mr. Nixon: Yes. It concerns me—and I see the Minister of Labour and Manpower is here—that they would leave behind these buildings as they get 10 or 12 years old, and get a little dingy. There is no way the ministry could stay there. They have got to move into these new facilities.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: You don't mean that.

Mr. Nixon: I would suggest the financing for that Travelers Tower was probably based on the fact one of the important ministries of government would enter into a long-term lease at the top per square-foot fee, plus. They would be able to borrow money to build that blooming building, whereas the ministries leave the buildings owned by the government, or owned by agencies of the government, because they are not fancy and posh enough.

The honourable minister is a good, practical man from Lambton county. He was not in the driver's seat when this happened, but I would certainly hope and trust he and the present Minister of Labour and Manpower are not the sort of top government people who would allow this sort of wastage of public money to go on. When you look at the government offices around—we want everything nice for our people but it has got to be just the worst kind of wastage of public money and ought to infuriate taxpayers. My own experience is they are used to this attitude after 36 years. There is this feeling, "What can you do about it?" It probably takes a change in government to change the attitude. But in many respects, I have a feeling that the minister in charge of government service shares some of these views.

I don't spend a lot of time in ministers' offices—maybe sometime in another incarnation I will spend some time in a minister's office. But I don't believe there is anything more luxurious and ornate, short of Valhalla and Nirvana, than you ministers have provided for yourselves. I don't mind, you can come into my office and I am just as pleased as can be. It's right handy to the House, and I am just absolutely pleased. There is only one other move that I want to make before I go to a more important reward.

But there is something going on in this big mob of ministers; they go and visit each other in their offices, and they say, "Wow, he's got a bigger refrigerator than I have." Or, "His carpets are deeper than mine." Or, "I see he's got a Group of Seven on the wall, and I've just got those old calendars back from the garage in Petrolia." It is not even one-upmanship; it is keeping up with the Joneses and the McMurtrys that really is just murder around here.

I've heard the Tories in Ottawa rake the Liberals back and forth over the coals for their delusions of grandeur and the penthouse suites; I really think it is terrible down there too. You can have good offices and whatever staff you need; but just be careful when you treat the taxpayers with that kind of dismissal.

It is true, I suppose, that when the delegations from Brigden on Wyoming come into your office it would take their breath away. They would say, "Gee, we thought Lorne really had it great when he was in the warden's office there in Sarnia. But look at this." Well, you've got to watch it. In our system, there is some justice; and we certainly don't want you people to be dissatisfied with the private members' offices when you have an opportunity to occupy them. It may not be our responsibility to provide them; but whoever does, I hope at the same time they don't provide for themselves in such a way that would be offensive to the taxpayers if they could see what was being done.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Prior to the commencement of the estimates, the chairman of the committee of the whole House sent out a little memorandum to all of the members, drawing their attention to section 48(c) of the standing orders. I will just read it again: "Latitude shall be permitted to opposition critics on the first item of the first vote of each set of estimates, and thereafter members shall adhere strictly to the vote and item under consideration."

Mr. Nixon: I hope you are going to tighten right down.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Not on this item now. I think everybody who wants to speak to this item of lavish accommodation should have the right to do so. But when we are through with this, I suggest that this more properly belongs under item 502.

I never know when you are going to talk about policy and when you are going to talk about something else. But that latitude belongs to the party critics.

Mr. Nixon: I certainly appreciate the situation you find yourself in.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I will allow the minister to reply. Then I will recognize the member for Bellwoods on the same item.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to have the honourable member inform me about these offices. As I suggested earlier, we are moving one group up to one of these buildings. Next, his proposal about the ombudsman is a good proposal. At the appropriate time it will be looked at.

Just to comment about the warden's office in Lambton county, anything in Lambton county is outstanding within this province. That would be my response.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the member for Bellwoods have any response to make on the accommodation in Lambton county?

Mr. McClellan: No, I don't, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: On the same item?

Mr. McClellan: I just wanted to ask for two pieces of information. I thought this was an appropriate time to do this so that I will, hopefully, have them tabled by the time we get to the item, which is under 503. The first of these pieces of information I would like is the current fair wage scale, or fair wage rates that are used by the ministry when they are awarding cleaning contracts, particularly for the office buildings here in Toronto. The second piece of information I asked the minister to provide for us is the salary rates per hour paid to regular civil service janitorial staff, who are performing cleaning and maintenance work as regular members of the staff.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is under 503. We will have that for you when we get to that vote.

Mr. McClellan: Right. Thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted first to thank the minister for the very nice way he treated me when they were opening the provincial public building in the great riding of Windsor-Walkerville. I thought it was very nice of you, Mr. Minister.

While I'm on that, I wanted to ask the minister about the policy of the government in relation to surplus buildings. The minister can recall my discussion with him and his deputy concerning the old Essex county jail and the desires of several groups in the community to develop sort of a cultural centre there. How far has he proceeded with the various groups in assisting them to eventually acquire that property and develop the cultural centre, the arts centre, they so eagerly would like to develop on the west side of Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'm not personally acquainted, as you know, with the particular property. Is this part of the building you and I spoke about approximately a year ago, when I made it clear to you the way we would make it available? Is that still satisfactory to the honourable member? That offer still stands.

Mr. B. Newman: I thought possibly you had gone further than that, Mr. Minister, and already come to some type of an agreement so either they or the municipality would take possession and they would develop it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't have anything further than when I spoke to the honourable member eight or 10 months ago.

Mr. B. Newman: Maybe even a little longer.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. It could be a year ago. But our offer still stands.

Mr. B. Newman: If you wouldn't mind, Mr. Minister, I would appreciate your officials looking into it and the next time we come around to the estimates, in a day or so, maybe they might have an update for me.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I would like to come back to the question raised by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, about the lease on the black building down the street by the Ministry of Labour. Has the answer been given as to how long that lease runs? I may have missed it. What is the possibility of a move from that building to one of the others we now have?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The lease expires March 1, 1983.

We have taken some additional floors in that since I became minister. We consolidated the Ministry of Labour, all of it into that building.

Mr. Young: You are tied to that lease for another five years or better?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Four years approximately.

Mr. Young: Are you planning ahead to what you're going to do at the end of that period? Have you any definite plans laid for that particular lease?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We generally do five-year leases. We're not planning beyond that at this moment. If we planned on leaving the building, we would be making our plans to move two years ahead. We are satisfied. The rate is $7.50 per square foot, which is a pretty competitive rate in Toronto, I think you'd agree. Did that answer your question?

Mr. Young: I'm just wondering what the possibility is of that kind of move into some of the buildings we own, such as the old Hydro building, and others, and whether there are any long-term plans for those buildings. You mentioned you're thinking in terms of plans for the building, but nothing definitive yet, nothing definite.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I thought I made it clear that one of the buildings vacated by the Ministry of Labour is being used by the Ministry of Culture and Recreation which will more or less highlight the building as the greeting place for our new Canadians.

[8:30]

Mr. Young: That would be the one down at the corner of Dundas Street and University Avenue?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. They are now down at 8 York Street, the old Ministry of Labour building. We don't think they have a high enough profile there. We think they're entitled to the higher profile farther up University Avenue. That will leave us with one building we're looking at, the one at 434 University Avenue; the Commission of Inquiry on Aluminum Wiring is now using that building. The Ministry of Culture and Recreation is going to use the one, as I suggested, and the Ministry of Community and Social Services is using a portion of one of the buildings; also, the Ministry of Labour is using it for the summer students program. So they're pretty well in use—not on a full-time basis, but they are actually being used.

Mr. Young: Is there still a great deal of vacant space in those buildings at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There is vacant space, but when you compare it to the overall office space we have, and the movement we've got to accommodate, such as that of the aluminum wiring inquiry commission, it's not that great. If you look at those buildings, the vacant space may look great; but in terms of the overall government buildings we've got here, it's a very small portion of one per cent.

Mr. Young: So it's a space absorber?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct some questions to the minister, and I hope I will get some answers from him, which I'm sure I will.

To enter this building on the east side, I often walk up the travelled portion of the roadway, and I'm concerned to find automobiles parked on the sidewalks. I often think it may be required to get emergency equipment, such as fire equipment or fire apparatus, to come in off the main streets, in which case it would encounter those vehicles parked on both sides of the street. What is the policy of the government? Do we allow cars to park on the sidewalks here?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the member, he's pretty well aware why the cars are parked in the street to the east side of the building. That's really not a traffic artery. Yes, if there were an emergency, it might cause some anxiety, but it's not that far from University Avenue.

The situation has been looked at within the last month, but we don't have a reasonable solution. We don't have parking space in the immediate area.

When I look out the front of the building and see the cars parked there, it concerns me. I would personally like to see the whole front of the building kept clear. To me, the front doors of this building are very important. It's a heritage and a privilege for the member and me to be able to walk up to those front doors and take our seats in here.

The situation concerns me, but it's the lack of parking space within the immediate area that causes the problem mentioned by the member.

Mr. Haggerty: The reason I raised the question with the minister is that on different occasions, the fire department has had to come into this building. I'm sure if they had to bring an aerial truck into that laneway, with parking at both sides, they'd have some difficulty, because they would have to get to the east side if the building to hook up to the standpipes.

I think some of the vehicles that are parked there ignore the signs. I suggest that the custodians at the entrance perhaps should give a little guidance as to where these persons should park. Often you have to walk up the middle of the road and sometimes you don't hear the cars coming up behind you; somebody is liable to get clipped one of these days.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Correction: You have to do it pretty near all the time; not often. Practically all the time you have to walk up the middle of the road. I walk that way morning, noon and night over to my office, and I would have to agree with the member about the sidewalk. I always have to walk out in the middle of the road—not often; practically all the time.

Mr. Haggerty: The other matter I want to bring to the minister's attention—I think I brought it to the attention of the previous minister—is my concern about the design of handrails around these buildings, particularly those at the Macdonald building, for ramps for handicapped persons to come up or down in wheelchairs. I don't know who designed them but if you look at the design of those handrails, they didn't design them right. The bar projects out about 18 inches. If you sit in a wheelchair, you will notice it is about at height where it would almost project into a person's eye. I suggest in future these things should be either changed or the design made so that there is a loop there with no sharp edges or corners that a person would encounter and which might cause injury. I suggest you or someone on your staff should look at it.

The other matter I want to raise with the minister is the disposal of crown land or lands owned by MTC. I understand much of this may go through your ministry in the disposing of these excess or surplus lands. Normally, the practice is that the conservation authorities in local communities will have the first offer. In some cases in the past, they have almost given it to them. I suggest to the minister that we should be looking at other ways of disposing of that land. The land should go back to the original owner from whom it was taken for the purpose of road widening or reconstruction of a new highway. They should at least be given the opportunity to purchase it either for themselves or for a member of their family. If that can't be done, I suggest it should be put on the auction block so that anyone who wants to purchase it may have the opportunity to bid on it.

We are now giving it to the conservation authorities. I can think of the Niagara Peninsula Conservation Authority which has a surplus of land now. If we ever get into the business of market value assessment or assessing all the properties, that burden will have to be borne by the region or the municipalities that are contributing to the cost of operating the conservation authorities.

My main concern, as was mentioned this afternoon in questions to the ministers, is that the purpose of the conservation authorities is flood control, not buying up or getting their hands on all the small pieces of property which can be anywhere from one acre to two acres to 65 acres of land.

In particular, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, which is not under this ministry, in the reconstruction of the Welland Canal bought property on both sides of the Welland Canal which extends out to where the railroads were relocated. There is property in Wainfleet township, for example, consisting of well over 400 or 500 acres of land. The policy of the federal Department of Public Works is to notify any of the provincial government ministries to see if they want first choice of buying that property. In this particular instance, I understand the Niagara Peninsula Conservation Authority is again interested in this land. If you keep on building up land for the conservation authority, eventually it will cost the taxpayer a fortune in taxes.

I suggest there are other uses for this land, that is, to let the individual who is interested in buying it buy it and let him pay the taxes on it and generate revenue to the municipality. I don't know what your policy is on that, but that of MTC is to give it to your ministry. Then you turn around and give it back at a reasonable cost—in some cases almost for nothing—to the conservation authorities. May I have your comments?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: This is a very important point and I think we should all know the policy of the government. Firstly, if the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has a narrow strip of land—odds and ends, foot patches or what have you, it disposes of that. Before they dispose of it, they circulate a description. I might say that when my ministry has land to dispose of, it does the same.

We get the land appraised by a qualified appraiser. We circulate a description to all ministries of our government to see whether any government agency wants it at the appraised value. Next we circulate a description to the local municipal authorities to see whether they are interested in it. Following this, if no governing bodies are interested in the land, we put it out for either public tender or public auction. We use both methods.

Earlier in the member's statement, he suggested the original owner should have an opportunity. Where the land has been expropriated from the original owner, we go back to him and he gets the first opportunity to buy it at the appraised value. We do that where there hasn't been a willing seller.

Mr. Haggerty: What I am suggesting to the minister is that, where there is a larger acreage of land that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has acquired for road construction purposes and so on, perhaps adjoining farmers should have the opportunity of purchasing it and putting it back into farm production, instead of letting it grow over with weeds over the years while waiting for MTC to decide what it is going to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is not the present policy of the government. I fully understand what the member is saying. Maybe the government should reappraise its position. If it's going to be out of farm production for even five years, that to me is wrong. I'm not aware that there is a lot of land in the position that the honourable member is mentioning; it was my understanding that, when MTC gets to the point where it knows it is not going to need that land for a highway, it takes the necessary steps to dispose of it.

As I suggested to the honourable member, MTC does dispose of the odds and ends. But if there's a parcel of land large enough for a building lot, the present policy of the government is that it is referred back to the Ministry of Government Services, and again MGS takes the same action as MTC takes.

I am not aware of what the honourable member brought up about the St. Lawrence Seaway and the Welland Canal. I can't answer him on that; I don't have that information yet.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman; I want to spend a little while, if I might—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: These are policy matters?

Mr. Martel: It is a policy matter. It deals with a specific building—in fact, not just a building, but a series of buildings.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In Sudbury?

Mr. Martel: In Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The member is always telling me I don't do anything for Sudbury.

Mr. Martel: I want to chat with the minister tonight about a little establishment called Burwash, if I might.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That's south of Sudbury—

Mr. Martel: It's still in my riding. I tell the minister it's still in my riding.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It's not anywhere near your riding.

Mr. Martel: We have some problems. I may take the Minister of Labour and Manpower there and show it to him; maybe he can impress upon the government the need to do something in view of the fact that we have had that in mothballs at a cost of about $300,000 or $400,000 a year since 1974. We have spent several million dollars keeping it in mothballs.

The minister's predecessor, as the minister is aware, took it upon herself to sell it; she got one offer, I think, of $1,000,000. The place is, as he knows, about 5,000 acres or more. There are 95 homes there—or at last count there were 95 homes; I'm not sure how many are being demolished.

As a result of the decision of the minister's predecessor to sell, a committee made up of the chamber of commerce and Sudbury and District Labour Council, the local members of the regional council, and the local members of Parliament, came to Queen's Park to meet with the Premier (Mr. Davis) and asked that a study be done along the lines I'd been asking for since 1974: a multi-use concept for this facility that sits there idle and could provide many of the services that are not available to people in northern Ontario and for which we're paying $350,000 to $400,000 a year to keep in mothballs.

I would remind the House that it was this government that wiped out the fourth largest employer in the Sudbury basin when it wiped out that institution, and relocated it in the Minister of Transportation and Communications' (Mr. Snow) riding. The argument, of course, in those days, was that half the prisoners—pardon me, 90 per cent—were from southern Ontario and it was difficult for people to go and see them. Now, prisoners are taken from the Sudbury area and sent to Monteith at Thunder Bay and it doesn't matter that it's a 600-mile trip from Sudbury to Thunder Bay for anyone who wants to visit. But the government couldn't have somebody from southern Ontario travel 200 miles from Sudbury to Burwash to see someone in the institution. That was the excuse and it was closed, wiping out the fourth largest employer overnight. I remember Dick Potter—you remember that fellow, don't you?—saying to us in the House, "You know, I am not running an employment agency," when we complained that the government had wiped out a variety of jobs in the Sudbury area. He said, "I am not responsible for running an employment agency. I am Minister of Correctional Services."

We came to Queen's Park, after three or four years of agitation, and finally the minister decided that she was going to sell it. We met with the Premier and the Premier, at our request, indicated that a study would be done. It took a year and a half. It was this little document. I well recall the day the Minister of Government Services announced this study in this House; that it was finalized after 18 months and he was tabling it and there were three recommendations. I have the minister's press release on that occasion when he said:

"This proposed use is considered to be the most appropriate for the following reasons: It provides for an integrated use of the entire site, it will effectually utilize the arable land and institutional facilities, including Camp Bison, which the federal government had previously purchased from the province for $1,800,000, and it will provide jobs for local residents."

Before this study was completed, the federal authorities had decided they weren't purchasing Burwash and weren't going in there. Jean-Jacques Blais couldn't get the bundle to utilize Camp Bison and here we have a study handed down saying, "That's the use it should be put to." My, what a magnificent study. I wrote the Premier, when this study came out, because the Minister of Government Services thought this was a great report.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: What was the date of that letter?

Mr. Martel: December 22, 1978. I will quote from it in a moment. I wrote the Premier and I made the following observation with respect to that study. Let me just quote what I said. "After over a year and a half of study, the recommendations put forth, which would see the federal authorities purchase the rest of the property in the Burwash area for use as an integrated maximum and minimum security institution and farm, are totally useless. M. M. Dillon Limited's report could have been prepared by a six-year-old after a cursory walk around the property."

Mr. J. A. Taylor: You wrote that?

Mr. Martel: I think I did. I am saying a six-year old could have done it better because

I want to tell you that that report is a sham. I am going to quote some people you know well before I am through tonight; some people you know well who are great supporters of the government of Ontario. There aren't many in the Sudbury area but there are a few. There are a few.

I am going to quote a few letters and indicate what the reaction or the response to this study is. Before I do that, though, I want to say that there are people in the Sudbury district, Mr. Minister, who have made the following two observations: (1) that it was decided beforehand what the facility would be used for; in other words, the study was a sham and what M. M. Dillon did was a waste of everyone's time; (2) that the government had decided it wasn't going to spend any money. So how in God's name could you have anything else but the type of recommendations that are contained here? It obviously had been decided you couldn't put any money into it.

I want to tell you that if you put money into Burwash as you did into Minaki Lodge, we would have a great service for the residents of the Sudbury area. You know that monstrosity that hangs around your neck, that millstone from northwestern Ontario you can't even give away—

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Careful now.

Mr. Martel: —on which you have spent $10,000,000 already. It hasn't created a job. If you had put that kind of money into Burwash, some of the types of things that have been recommended could be done.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: In fairness now, the Speaker of the House (Mr. Stokes) might have different reasons.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, would you tell that popinjay to be quiet for a while? If he wants the floor, I will sit down.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I will take you up on that.

Mr. Chairman: Well, will I recognize the member for Prince Edward-Lennox? The member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I think in fairness, if the member would just consult with the Speaker of this House, he would realize Minaki Lodge is something close to his heart. Don't you for a moment think he wasn't in favour of the government taking over that lodge and spending the kind of money it did. Now, let's be fair.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am afraid he is right, Elie.

Mr. Martel: Now we have got that in the record, it is not even in the Speaker's riding I believe it is in the great riding of Kenora.

Mr. Mackenzie: Wrong again. What's new?

Mr. Martel: I think the responsibility for all of that great expenditure for nothing lies with that public relations firm called the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier). That is who is responsible for that. It had nothing to do with my colleague, the Speaker.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: He was in favour of the north and you should be concerned. You can't write off the north.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: You have done a pretty good job of it up to this time.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: You can't write off the north.

Mr. Mackenzie: When are you going to be right for a change?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: You know that is wrong.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, let me go back so the minister understands what I was saying before we were so rudely interrupted. The government decided the outcome before the report was even commenced and they had decided not to spend any money. Let me tell you what the decisions were, even the back-up positions.

You were going to have a federal institution. The federal government didn't proceed, either on the maximum security prison you were talking about or the minimum. You were going to tell Jean-Jacques Blais he should let the rest go for farming purposes. I can imagine the response Jean-Jacques Blais would give you when you told him the rest of that land was going to be for agricultural purposes. That is like someone coming down here and saying you are responsible for cleaning up the mess Dennis Timbrell has got himself into with OHIP. You would say, "No, that has nothing to do with me. Go away."

So you had a federal prison. Let me tell you the list of recommendations: A Sudbury and district kennel club to train retrievers. My golly, are we going to create the work for the people in the Sudbury region. By the way, Mr. Chairman, it is already there. They have a little plot and they go and train their dogs on the weekends. That is one of the things going to create some of the employment the minister spoke about the day he read the recommendations in the House.

Mr. Sterling: What have you got against man's best friend?

Mr. Martel: It will provide jobs for local residents.

Mr. Worton: They have gone to the dogs.

Mr. Martel: What else did they recommend? A children's camp. Well, the children's camp is already there. It was built by a church group and has been there for a good number of years. It is nothing new, but that is what they are recommending.

Snowmobile trails: Wow, is that going to create employment and opportunity for the people of the Sudbury region.

A truck inspection station: That ought to do us a lot of good. We own all the property, you know. Somebody decided here is something to fool the peasants; we will put a truck inspection station there and that will create two jobs. You only removed 250, you have to recall.

What else are you going to do? Hay production; we are going into hay production. It has already been leased, as the minister knows, to I believe four or five different farmers. That is already there. Everything that was recommended was there. There is nothing new.

The things the committee recommended, the committee established in Sudbury which met with the Premier, dealt with the meaningful things, things that are now lacking in terms of services, opportunities for work. Let me tell you just a few of them.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Tell us what you want.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you listen?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: We have heard all this before.

Mr. Martel: We wanted—this was recommended by the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce—a market garden. By the way, the member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane) has, on a number of occasions in estimates, recommended that part of it should be utilized for that purpose.

We also recommended a commercial campground. We recommended—and this came from the University of Sudbury through Rev. Newbery—a community for non-reserve Indians who had been in trouble with the law. We could use part of that as a facility for them to be rehabilitated both in the sense of breaking away from the habits they had that got them into trouble in the first place and, also, to do something useful once they were outside. A whole community could have been established there—a very small community—using the facilities that were there. A village for the handicapped was recommended.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: That is what you wanted.

Mr. Martel: Let me tell my friend what I wanted, because he was minister at one time.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: That is right.

Mr. Martel: I wanted 15 of the homes to be utilized for mentally retarded kids who are now stuck in Smiths Falls, so we could bring them back and put them in group homes, then transport them daily from there to the city of Sudbury to work in the Jarrett Centre or to go to school, and make that just as a stepping stone to being totally integrated into the community eventually. They objected to that in the Dillon report. Dillon distorted what we said. He said we wanted a whole village. My friend was the minister and he recalls my saying we only wanted to use 15 homes. That is the type of distortion that is in this report.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: It was only feasible as I understand it—

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Sudbury East has the floor.

Mr. Martel: That is right.

Mr. Chairman: Would you please direct your remarks through the chair to the minister?

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, what we are talking about is that we said if the whole village were utilized we would use 15 of the homes for kids, remove them from Smiths Falls and bring them back into Sudbury. That is why we are talking about a multi-use concept, because as I understand it no one ministry is big enough to handle the whole facility that is there. But Dillon distorts it; he says we wanted the whole village. My friend, who was minister at the time, knows we did not ask for that. That is why there is no credibility to this report, Mr. Chairman. The minister can ask his colleague, we did not ask for an entire village.

Through the Sudbury and District Labour Council we also asked for an occupational health and safety centre, because no area has had more problems with health and safety and a variety of cancer—whether from Elliot Lake or the sintering plant in Sudbury, or the types of accidents that are unique, I guess because of the severity of those accidents in underground mining. We asked for that as one of the things for which it would be utilized. We also proposed a rehab centre. We proposed a psychiatric hospital, a therapeutic camping program. In other words, on one of the lakes build a camp for emotionally disturbed kids so they could be taken from the Algoma sanatorium in summer to this area for several weeks during the vacation period.

An industry training and apprenticeship centre was also recommended; the Labourers' International Union asked for that so that we could train people in a variety of skills. A construction industry training centre was also asked for.

Cambrian College wanted to utilize part of the facility. It was interesting that the government played games with that one. They said to Cambrian College, "You can have that or you can have phase three; which are you going to take?" What we have now is that Cambrian College accepts phase three at the community college and all the kids from the Sudbury area who are taking apprenticeship come to Toronto or go to Sault Ste. Marie for that purpose.

These were just some of the ideas we put together as potential uses. Out of that we hoped that a scheme would be established which would utilize what was there and provide benefits which weren't available and, at the same time, provide job opportunities, particularly when this government wiped out the fourth largest employer by the stroke of a pen.

I want to mention a couple of other things. Because there is a huge gymnasium with, I believe, four brand new basketball courts, the northeastern Ontario regional sports committee wanted to utilize part of it. It sits there vacant. We are spending $400,000. This whole range of ideas was presented—and I only listed some of them; there were many more—and what does the Dillon report come up with? A federal prison, a district kennel club to train dogs, a production which is already there, a children's camp which is already there, and a snowmobile trail which is already there. For good measure, they are going to throw in a truck inspection scale.

I want to say that is a sham. Let me tell you what some of the people think of it. I want to read a letter to you very carefully. I want to tell you before I begin that this is written by the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce. I want you to get the flavour of what they think of this report by M. M. Dillon.

Mr. Young: You wouldn't accuse them of being New Democrats.

Mr. Martel: I don't think they're New Democrats, either Dillon or the chamber.

Mr. Van Horne: You can't even spell it.

Mr. Martel: I wouldn't want to.

Mr. M. Davidson: It is an unbiased opinion.

Mr. Martel: I think this is unbiased. It is written by the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Eaton: You were never unbiased.

Mr. Martel: It is addressed to the Premier—

Mr. M. Davidson: Your friends.

Mr. Martel: —with a copy to me. I want you to get the flavour of this.

Mr. M. Davidson: It starts off "Dear Bill."

Mr. Martel: No, it says "Dear Sir." It is dated March 21, 1979.

Mr. Eaton: It has probably got a raspberry flavour to it.

Mr. Martel: It says: "We are sorry to have to pursue further the matter of the Burwash land-use study, which upon serious examination we find to be a disservice to yourself, your government and the people of Ontario."

It reminds me of that other report that was done just about a year and a half ago. What was it called? A Profile in Failure.

Mr. Young: That's the one.

Mr. Martel: It says there are three troikas.

Mr. Worton: It is called snafu.

Mr. Martel: Yes. It says you aren't doing anything in the north.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Whatever happened to the letter?

Mr. Martel: Let me go on. "This is a sad conclusion regretfully arrived at and which we suspect that you may have already shared, having regard to what we understood to have been a very substantial cost to the taxpayers of the province to produce a document of 223 pages which is permeated"—and get this—"with bias, contradiction and imbalance of emphasis, both in the selection of study areas, conformity to accepted terms of reference and failure of terms of reference to reflect both in spirit and action the commitments which we felt to be normally binding between us."

That's a pretty strong line adopted by the chamber of commerce. It says quite categorically that what they thought was an agreement between the Premier and that committee has been totally negated by this study. I remember the minister when he came in. I questioned him on this crazy report. Let me read what else it says:

"The steering committee formed by your authority was to address itself to concerns originally identified by the Sudbury Burwash committee"—that's what we thought—"formed around local citizens and groups which met on chamber of commerce premises to effectively document their collective concerns and which we felt would ensure us of effective, ongoing, direct input and liaison with the steering committee.

"In reality, we were exorcised from further involvement by the procedure of holding meetings alternately in Sudbury and in Toronto, which effectively ensured the nonparticipation of the chamber volunteers and others, both through cost and the subsequent failure to invite meaningful participation."

"This point was brought more precisely into focus by independent and voluntary appearance of chamber members at the public information gatherings, and meetings held by M. M. Dillon Limited; during which no specific recognition was accorded the visitors, no special courtesies extended, and no notes made or tapes recorded; so that it is then bemusing, in the ultimate, to encounter the outright gall evidenced within the report, wherein it states that interviews were held with the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce—page 93.

"This statement is so lacking in substance as to bring into question the quality of all purported contacts and leads us to the following observations . . ."

That's pretty strong language, Mr. Minister. It says, quite to the point, that the report is not even factual, that they reported there were meetings and people had an opportunity to provide input, and that the chamber was consulted. The chamber is saying, rather dramatically: "That's a pile of bunk." This didn't occur. What's even more intriguing is that notes weren't even taken. Nothing was recorded.

I said to you earlier a decision had already been reached—I'm convinced—before the work commenced, as to what the ultimate recommendations would be. So we went through this charade, this exercise.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: That's what studies are for.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, you heard the former minister say—and he's supporting my contention—because he said we did not ask for a village for the mentally retarded but, in fact, only for 15 homes. M. M. Dillon's study says we were asking for a village for the mentally retarded. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that he's obviously supporting the position I take that—

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Point of order, Mr. Chairman: My name has been taken—I don't think in vain—

Mr. Martel: It wasn't.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: —but it's in connection with the concept of utilization of this complex. I think I should call it a complex. It is my vivid understanding—and my friend can correct me if I'm wrong—that the concept was really a multi-use concept, in terms of utilizing the complex for different functions, whether commercial, industrial or social. Within that environment, some of the housing would be used to accommodate the mentally retarded. Through that, they would be in sort of a mini-community, which would normalize them to some degree, in a half-way house on the way to full integration with the community.

That was my concept of it. I don't know whether my friend from Sudbury agrees with that or not, but as I understand it, that was the proposition put to the ministry at that time.

Mr. Martel: We're on exactly the same wavelength. I agree with you: that's what we asked for. The point I'm attempting to make here is that we have the chamber saying Dillon distorted the facts in his report to the minister. I'm indicating that not only do they say they were not interviewed—although the report says they were—I'm indicating further that the former minister was prepared to have 15 of those houses utilized for mentally retarded children, as part of a community. Dillon says—and that was fought by the chamber of commerce—on page 28: "Village for the mentally retarded: specific proponent, Ministry of Community and Social Services." That was never the case.

I just make the point again, that Dillon obviously went its merry way—on whose instructions maybe we'll find out before the night is over. But the whole report, the chamber says, is really a distortion of what the committee studying this fought to obtain for the Sudbury area. Dillon is so far out to lunch that it has no credibility with anyone who knows the area at all. That's the reason I'm addressing these remarks to the minister, because I want to ask the minister later on whether he will do what we're hoping will come, and that's to establish a committee of local residents and government officials who know the Sudbury area well to see whether we can put together a real multi-use concept based on the ideas that were put forth. I've tried to get an answer from the Premier for three months on that, but his writers are all on strike and they just don't bother responding.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: No, it's the umpires who are on strike.

Mr. Martel: Is it the umpires who are on strike? I knew someone was on strike.

Let me go on with the chamber's letter to point out some of the inaccuracies in this report. They start out on page two of their letter with the following title:

"Credibility Analysis: Perceived need of a steering committee:

"The structure of the above to preclude any ongoing input by the Sudbury-Burwash committee was not in keeping with the spirit of your commitment to that group and led to a totally imbalanced, biased, bureaucratic delivery of terms of reference which, enunciated by a Dillon representative, amounted to instructions from the Ministry of Government Services to place emphasis on approved governmental programs and to relegate to the near impossible anything that might involve cost."

Was it this ministry that did that? Was it this ministry that decided, although it is spending $400,000 a year to keep it in mothballs, to set out some terms of reference that indicate rather clearly that we're not going to spend any money, so don't come up with programs that are going to cost the government any money? If this ministry did that, then it has distorted the whole purpose of that exercise and it has distorted what the people in that area thought the government was committed to trying to do.

"Throughout, it is strongly evident that entrenched interests are totally dedicated to maintaining the status quo, and the cost of this report is an expensive way of telling the citizens of the province that their views are secondary in consideration and quality to those of the bureaucrats."

That's pretty tough language in any man's ballpark. I think the government has to answer to the charges of the chamber, in addition to those of other groups, including the Sudbury and District Labour Council and just about anyone who was involved, who feel that this document is an insult to anybody's intelligence. As I started out by saying, it does two things; it recommends that we retain what is already there and we don't spend any money.

It's interesting to note that I did not speak to the chamber from the time this report was tabled until they wrote. I might indicate that I sent copies of this report to them, as well as to other people, because I got 15 copies to send out.

It's also interesting, I say to my friend the minister, that once I received the report, I wrote a number of people a very brief letter and simply asked them, because of the content of both reports, to petition the Premier and to ask him to do as I recommended and establish a committee of local residents and civil servants who know the area and who would take the ideas that were presented and try to cost them.

[9:15]

I think that can be done. I know some of the concerns that were expressed, but I think one can cost what the total outlay in cash would be to put kids in 15 group homes there. I think we could have a training centre for civil servants in the north in the single male quarters, which is brand new. I know one of the objections to it was it was going to be too costly to take them from Sudbury to Burwash. I can't understand why it is any more costly to take them from Sudbury to Burwash than it is to take them from Toronto to the camp at Barrie where civil servants go almost daily during the summer.

There are groups in there from various government branches. Why would it be any more costly to go 20 miles to take civil servants to train from Sudbury to Burwash than it would be from here to Kempenfelt Bay? We send them up there by the carload. One of the concerns was it was too costly to do that in Sudbury. Close down the one in Kempenfelt Bay, then. Those are the considerations that went into this report.

It is just nuts. When you want something down here, it goes. When you need something up there, all the obstacles possible are thrown in the way. My friend is a reasonable man. Maybe he can tell me why it is more costly to go 20 miles in the Sudbury basin than 60 miles from here to Barrie. That was one of the considerations in ruling out, I am told, the utilization of those $500,000 quarters that sit empty. The quarters are brand new. I don't think they were used six months. They could be utilized for training, but that was ruled out: "You can't train civil servants up there. It's too costly."

Mr. G. Taylor: Where would they swim there, Elie?

Mr. Martel: There is all kinds of water; there are all kinds of lakes there. There are all kinds of lakes and rivers around there, although not quite as close as Kempenfelt Bay, where you just run down the hill and jump in.

Mr. G. Taylor: It would be colder, wouldn't it?

Mr. Martel: Not in the summer.

Mr. Ashe: Just as wet, though.

Mr. Martel: For the life of me, it was as though this whole thing were designed and the study was organized in such a fashion as to rule out a multi-use concept. I realize it is going to cost money, but I see it sitting there year in and year out, with a $400,000 or $500,000 cost. I see the services lacking in northern Ontario. When the only place for the young mentally retarded right now is on the fourth floor of a nursing home where the play yard isn't as big as this area and there are 64 young people there, there is something wrong with a government that can throw obstacles up.

Mr. G. Taylor: Are they still there, Elie?

Mr. Martel: They are still there.

Mr. G. Taylor: You are kidding.

Mr. Martel: No. They are all supposed to be bedridden except there isn't one who is bedridden. Yet they are all there. I just think it is a disgrace when we have a facility available to us 20 miles away that we can't come up with multi-use concept that is meaningful in terms of providing services that are lacking or providing jobs so desperately lacking in the Sudbury area.

Sure it is going to cost a little bit of money, but as I was saying a few moments ago, it costs money to keep those children in Smiths Falls, probably more than group homes would cost. It costs more or as much to train civil servants in Kempenfelt Bay as it would in the single quarters in Burwash. It is only 20 miles away.

I think we could cost the obstacles which are there. I think if you put the task to some of your staff who have a great deal of expertise, but with a different set of references, we in fact could come up with a multi-use concept for those 95 homes, for those single quarters, for the gym and for those six buildings that used to house all of the equipment. They could be turned into training areas for apprentices so they wouldn't have to come to Toronto for eight or 10 weeks every year for three years. Maybe the Ministry of Labour could help. They wouldn't have to go to Sault Ste. Marie.

This is the kind of thing we're talking about. There's not a great deal of capital cost. There are going to be some renovations but you have to remember the Ministry of Correctional Services spent $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 in the two years before they decided to close it. It sits there, and it's a bloody disgrace that it sits there vacant when we so desperately need services and we so desperately need jobs. As a result of this report, I wrote to the various groups.

Listen to what Henry Best said. I think you know Henry Best, don't you? Dr. Best is the president of Laurentian University and I believe he is a rather well-known Tory.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: He must be good.

Mr. Martel: That's why I wrote to Dr. Best and asked him if he would write to the Premier to see if we could get this group of civil servants in the area to help us do the costing. Here is what he wrote to the Premier: "The utilization of the Burwash facilities is of extreme importance to the Sudbury region. In today's tight economic situation which, at the present time, is more restrained in this area than in many others, it would seem that the funds used for maintenance could be put to much better use in a productive capacity." In other words, we could take those funds for mothballing it and utilize them.

"It seems to me that the implementation of a viable plan for Burwash has already been delayed too long. Since it is the people of this area who are most concerned, I would therefore like to endorse Elie Martel's suggestion that you establish a local committee of civil servants and interested citizens to study the utilization of the Burwash facilities now that the decision has been made not to utilize it as a federal prison. A multi-use concept for Burwash is needed and we should get on with drawing up a plan." It is signed by Henry Best, president of the university.

I could go to the regional chairman, Doug Frith. I could go to the corporation of the town of Onaping Falls or of Rayside-Balfour. By the way, Mr. Pelland, who is a Conservative candidate, wrote: "I am in receipt of the report you sent me on the Burwash land-use study for which I thank you. Enclosed herewith is a copy of a letter which I have forwarded to Premier Davis."

He is supporting it. So is Dr. Newbery at Laurentian University. The corporation of the town of Nickel Centre endorses the establishment of this committee to get on with the work immediately. So does the town of Valley East.

It goes on and on. People see this facility vacant. They see this crazy study which is so distorted that they don't believe it because they come from the area. The last letter I wrote to the Premier about it was on April 5. I said: "Further to my letter to you of February 5"—that's two full months ago—"concerning the Burwash facilities, I am wondering at this time if the government has decided to establish a committee of Sudbury people to study the utilization of the facility."

I am still awaiting a reply. It's now April 7.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Did you send it by post?

Mr. Martel: I sent it from here right across. It was hand-delivered, just so it wouldn't get lost.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: The government will live longer than you.

Mr. Martel: You've had four and a half years—five years almost. You've played around with this.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Just remember, government goes on forever, but you'll die one of these days.

Mr. Martel: Unfortunately we're all going to go, hopefully, not soo soon.

I don't know if he's got permission from the big brass but I ask the minister if he is in a position to indicate what the government intends to do with the Dillon report. Scrap it is my recommendation. Secondly, would he establish a committee such as has been endorsed by every municipality in the regional municipality of Sudbury? Thirdly, would he let us get on with the job of utilizing that to provide services which are not there by establishing a multi-use centre and to provide jobs for an economy that's staggering because the mining industries continue to cut back and capitalize so intensely that we're losing jobs every day? I ask the minister to give me some indication of what he is prepared to do.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable member, you will note that I have listened to each and every word that the honourable member has said tonight respecting Burwash. I was also listening to my colleagues on this side of the House. Mr. Chairman, this Minister of Government Services listens to all proposals. I am a little bit surprised to hear the member suggest that a decision was made in Ottawa before the report was presented. I believe he read out October 16 as the date I presented the report.

Mr. Martel: December 15 was the day you tabled it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The date I tabled it was December 15? I don't have my file here with me tonight but it was a good two months before I heard back from our colleagues in Ottawa to the effect that the report was not suitable and they really didn't care about Sudbury. I think that you would have to say that.

Mr. M. Davidson: You mean the Liberals said that?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I have listened to the member's suggestions. I can assure him that I will be rechecking them all. I will be visiting that area within a very few weeks and might well ask the member to accompany me out into the area.

I note a former colleague from Windsor in the gallery, if I might refer to him; Fred Burr, our former colleague. Mr. Chairman, if you would allow me to speak to the former member through you, I would have to tell you that when we served on the land drainage committee we were not made aware of this great agricultural land in the Sudbury East riding. I am a little shocked, a little disappointed that he didn't tell our committee—

Mr. Martel: It was a prison in those days.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —when we travelled throughout that area and he really was not helpful to us.

Hon. Mr. Walker: That's the reason it was closed.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the report is a major one and as I said I will be in the area within a few weeks. By that time we will have recorded everything he has said tonight and will be looking at it. I thank him for his suggestions.

Mr. Martel: May I pursue it for one more moment? When the minister does come to the Sudbury area will he be in a position to indicate whether he will establish a committee of his own staff, who are very competent in the Sudbury area, select a group from the citizens at large, ask them to put together a multi-use concept utilizing that facility and then present it to government rather than this hunk of junk? I hate to call it that but it is.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, no, I would not give that assurance tonight. I want to go there first. I am not like some of the rest. I have never had the pleasure of spending a few days in that particular area.

Mr. Martel: I will take you around.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Black fly season.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Maybe we could go out and—

Mr. Martel: We will do that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, but I won't give you that assurance tonight. That may follow my visit, but at this moment I am not ready to make that commitment.

Mr. B. Newman: Last Thursday a resolution was debated in the House concerning the accessibility of government buildings to the physically handicapped. Does the minister have a program or a schedule indicating when and how he intends to improve the accessibility of various government buildings to those who are afflicted or have some type of a physical handicap?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the only response I could give the honourable member is that all of our new buildings are provided with the facilities to take care of the handicapped and for several years now we have been working on the older government buildings to provide this service. We feel that we are well along with the project. If the honourable member has some buildings in mind where we have not done a full job, I would be very glad to hear about them.

[9:30]

Mr. B. Newman: I am not referring to any particular building; I am referring to a general policy and maybe a deadline by which the minister would hope to have most of the buildings made accessible to those with handicaps.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: As to setting a deadline, I really believe that deadline is here. That is the reason I would request him to advise me if there are some buildings where we have not done that. We believe we have provided access to all government buildings at present. There may be one or two we have missed out; if there are some, I would certainly appreciate the member's bringing them to my attention.

Mr. B. Newman: I couldn't name buildings that are or are not accessible, I am sure the minister understands the concern of all of us in this House. We would like to show to the handicapped that the discrimination that has been imposed on them in the past—the discrimination of accessibility—is going to be eliminated as quickly as we possibly can.

I want to ask of the minister if he is considering, for all provincial buildings, having parking areas specifically designated for the handicapped. The location of those areas would have to be as close as possible to the entrances to the building. I can see this building itself having parking areas at the back end as well as the front end, or at the east or west doors, so that the handicapped could have ready access to the inside of the building. Mind you, going in the east or west doors, or in the front door, there are all the stairs that make it extremely difficult; at the north door that problem is minimized a bit, but still it is a difficult task for the handicapped to go up those stairs.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable member's suggestion, the handicapped get priorities in all our parking areas, wherever government buildings might be. We do give them priorities, and they are number one in our minds. I was here for part of the debate on the resolution last Thursday, and the honourable member will remember that our windup speaker, the member for Prescott-Russell (Mr. Belanger) who is not here tonight, did offer the congratulations of this side of the House to the member who brought forth that resolution. We thought it was a good resolution, and our party did support it, as the honourable member will remember.

Mr. B. Newman: I know the minister would have parking areas available, but I think they should be designated, because the areas are taken over on sort of a first-come, first-served basis. I think we really should have one or two locations right at the front for those handicapped individuals who may come in by vehicle; they should be set aside and maybe even painted, as they do in a lot of the US centres, "For handicapped only," so that those who aren't handicapped, when they see a vacant spot, won't just plough right in with their vehicle.

I was very much impressed, in travelling on the freeways in the United States, to see how at all of the service centres there, spaces as close as possible to the door entrance to the service centre are set aside solely for the handicapped.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the honourable member's point is well taken by the government. We don't think only of this building; we think of all our buildings.

To set space aside, this can be considered, but I am sure you would recognize that if we set two or three spaces aside, they would not be used most days. I would sooner feel that the attendants surrounding this building would be aware, and would see that the handicapped were taken care of by being given an appropriate parking space. It matters less who was here than that they be taken care of. I am sure they look on it that way.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Minister, could I suggest that you actually designate them by marking them in some fashion, possibly by a sign? I know it means an expenditure of funds and I hesitate to suggest it because of that, but that's the least we can do for the handicapped, I think. I know you are concerned and I know everyone else is concerned, but I think we can express that concern visibly by identifying the location in some fashion.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, we will certainly look at this proposal.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Minister, my colleague, the member for Sudbury East, has just brought to your attention some of the problems that exist with the vacant and unused section of land and buildings known as Burwash. On a smaller scale, I would like to refer back to a year ago when you and I had some discussion regarding another parcel of land that I understand now falls under your ministry. It contains, I believe, four dormitories, an auditorium, an arena and a swimming pool. It still sits empty within the community of Cambridge, with the exception of a portion which is being utilized by the Ministry of Correctional Services.

But I am given to understand that they have in fact now declared the rest of that lot surplus land and it now rests in your hands.

Can you inform me at the moment, what, if anything, is being done with regard to that property? I am aware that you are negotiating with the regional government for around six to seven acres that probably will be used for the site of a regional police headquarters.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman: Yes, this parcel of property does come under the Ministry of Government Services. Yes, the region has looked at buying six acres—a small portion of it. There are several buildings on it. Recently—not recently, maybe late December; I really don't have the date—but after the present mayor was sworn in at Cambridge, she and a lady controller came in to see me. I spent quite some time with them and got their ideas on the building.

I informed them at that time that if there was no proposal for some of the buildings we would erase most of the buildings on the property. But I told the mayor I would not do anything further—and I believe I gave her until about this time of the year; I think the end of April—to come back to me with a proposal. In view of that I just have not made any plans. I am waiting for her proposal from the municipal council.

I am sorry I cannot tell you whether that was December or January, but it was in that general time period when I had them in. We had a really good debate; they brought many things forward to me.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Minister, when you say, "Erase the buildings," I hope you don't mean you are going to level them, I do not know whether you are aware or not that the buildings on that property have all been recently renovated. When it was in the hands of the Ministry of Correctional Services as a juvenile centre thousands and thousands of dollars were spent converting those buildings into what supposedly was going to be a co-educational centre. If you are talking about levelling those buildings on that property, you are talking about throwing somewhere in the neighbourhood of $400,000 of the taxpayers' money out the window. I do not know how you can explain to the people of Ontario that that is in fact what you intend to do.

Before I go into what I want to say, I understand you have allowed the community the use of the arena; you have allowed the community the use of the swimming pool; and you have allowed the community the use of the auditorium. For that, I am sure everyone in the Cambridge area is grateful.

Certainly, I don't see how you can justify tearing down the dormitories and living accommodation after more money has been put into them because you can't find any other use for them. I don't know what proposals the city has recommended to you. I know they have held discussions and I know they probably are still holding discussions as to what can be done.

There are many organizations within the community of Cambridge who are trying to assist people. For example, we have a group of volunteers who are providing a form of halfway house for alcoholics and drug addicts. They rely primarily on grants from the region of Waterloo in order to conduct and operate this kind of program. Out of those grants they must pay rent. Your ministry is paying out money to maintain that land and those buildings at the present time, and I am quite sure you could provide accommodation at a lower rental cost than these people are currently paying.

We have a group of volunteers in the city of Cambridge who are trying to provide some assistance to battered wives and battered children. They are conducting their operation by trying to raise funds and relying on grants from both the municipality and the region. Their purpose is to set up a place where, if a wife is being beaten in her home, or the children are being beaten in their home by a male parent, there is a place for them to go. There are people there who understand those problems and deal with those problems and can look after them in those circumstances. They also rent a place and I am quite sure you could provide a place for those people at a lower rent than they are now paying.

In the communities of Cambridge and North Dumfries township the list of volunteer groups that are doing these kinds of things in an effort to help people goes on and on.

I would think, Mr. Minister, that rather than suggest tearing those buildings down—you are paying the cost on the property in any event; you are carrying the cost of looking after it—you could probably recoup some of that expenditure by providing space to these groups within the communities of Cambridge and North Dumfries which are attempting to help people.

By doing that, you would be not only maintaining the buildings as they are—as I said, they have been renovated at a cost of thousands of dollars—you would at the same time be helping to provide a service to the community. You would also, in some way, be getting some remuneration in the form of rent. I don't know what kind of rent you would ask, but I am quite sure that, knowing you and the kind heart you have, you would certainly give them a better deal than they are getting at the present time in the locations they have.

Believe me, they are doing good work, Mr. Minister. They are doing excellent work in the fields in which they are working. They could get that kind of help from your ministry at the present time, until some decision is made as to what will be done.

I can well see I am probably going to be standing here again this time next year asking you what is happening with the Grandview School property. The buildings will still be there. The auditorium will still be there. The arena will still be there. The swimming pool will still be there. The 250 acres of land, or whatever amount it is, will still be there. If you could only utilize it for the betterment of the people in the community, then really we wouldn't have to be asking these questions.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the main reasons I brought this to the attention of her worship, the mayor. I wanted to make her aware, as the situation now stands, the government doesn't have any use for those buildings.

The heating plant is not the best. If we continue with those buildings as they are for many more years, it is going to involve great expense just to maintain them. I felt by informing her worship that we would erase them if there was no use for them, this would make her aware of the situation. I am sure she will come forth with the community groups, or at least that is what we are hoping.

I think the deadline was the end of April. I told her we were quite flexible, and if she needed another week or two at that time, yes. We're out for the good of all the people of Ontario.

I would suggest that you should bring your proposal to the attention of her worship.

[9:45]

Mr. M. Davidson: I certainly will do that. As a matter of fact, I will attempt to contact her first thing tomorrow to find out what, if anything, the city council has decided with regard to any proposals it may be putting forward to you. I will also contact some of these other groups I have mentioned to you and ask them, if they are interested, to contact the mayor of the community and request her on their behalf to get in touch with you and let them know that they are interested.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss with the minister his policy in regard to preservation of some of our historic sites in this province. As he knows, a couple of weeks ago we passed a bill in this Legislature which gave the title of the courthouse in Middlesex county to the county of Middlesex. It received support on all sides of the House, except maybe from the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson). Even his comments were perhaps critical of what had been the failure of a committee from London Centre.

The member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) apparently gave lip service to it too. I say that because I understand from one of my colleagues that I got considerable criticism from him in the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for not being there. I have been standing by here, waiting to get on to discuss this particular item.

As far as I'm concerned, all the member for Huron-Middlesex has given to this particular project is lip service. In fact, I can remember being at two or three openings in his portion of Middlesex county at which he wasn't present. I feel it's rather small of him criticizing me for not being down in that committee when I was waiting to do a service for Middlesex county. I hope some of the members of the Liberal Party will relate that to the member for Huron-Middlesex who is down in that committee and who brought on those personal remarks.

The situation with the London-Middlesex courthouse has been going on for some time. It's been one that many of us had wanted to see proceed because it's a rather historic site, not only to that area but to the province of Ontario. We felt it was proceeding extremely well. The Minister of Government Services brought in a bill to turn over the title to the courthouse. He had committed $800,000 to that project to see the preservation of that historic site.

He had committed that money on the basis that the federal government would be committing $800,000 to the same project in preserving the courthouse and that the county of Middlesex would be committing $600,000 to that same project to do some things that were probably beyond the preservation that they had to do because they were going to use the building for administration at the same time. It is a very practical use to preserve it as a historic site and at the same time have it for the functioning of the administration of the county of Middlesex.

I'd like to look back over several letters that have come out over the period of our discussions. Those were discussions in which I took part before this particular minister was in his chair and since that minister has come to the job. Since then, he has certainly made it proceed with much expedition.

I refer back to August 9, 1977, at which time a letter was sent to the clerk of the county from the Ontario region of Parks Canada. It is signed by a Mr. Christakos, a director of that branch. The letter indicates that the federal government would be prepared "to enter into a cost-sharing agreement on a 50-50 basis between the provincial government and Parks Canada in restoring the courthouse." That was the first indication we had that they would share 50-50 with the province in providing the funds for the restoration of the courthouse.

I refer to a letter of only one month later received in September in the county clerk's office, actually dated August 31, from Susan Smith, special assistant in the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in which she indicated:

"As you are now aware, according to our mandate, Parks Canada is willing to participate on a 50-50 basis with the province of Ontario," once again referring to the restoration of the courthouse.

I think from our discussions, and I understand from correspondence that I have from the minister, he was of the understanding that Parks Canada would be sharing with the province on a 50-50 basis on the restoration. The province was willing to put up to $800,000 into this project, and I took from our meetings, and I'm sure the minister did too, that the federal government was willing to put $800,000 into the restoration project. The county had originally indicated $300,000 and then, after some further discussion, indicated that they would go for $600,000.

Basically, this broke down to a cost of $1,600,000 for the restoration of the project; $800,000 from the province and $800,000 from the federal government and the $600,000 being for additional factors that would come about for their administrative use. I would quote from a letter from the minister, dated October 5, 1978, in which he indicated that because of our discussions at a meeting he was prepared to see that the land which had a cloud on the title was turned over to the county of Middlesex. I quote from his letter to our warden:

"In addition, I will be prepared to execute an agreement on behalf of the province of Ontario with the appropriate federal government minister and yourself by which each party agrees to contribute to the cost of rehabilitation of the courthouse building. Under this agreement the province will agree to pay up to a maximum of $800,000 for the restoration work providing the federal government will contribute a like amount and the county will contribute approximately $600,000 towards additional costs required for the rehabilitation of the building to the needs of the county."

I think the minister made a pretty firm commitment. His word is usually pretty sound on things like that and I certainly am one who respects it as do the members of this House.

We had meetings in January at which staff of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development of the federal government were present. It was certainly my opinion that they were making that same commitment that if the province put up $800,000 and turned the land over to the county of Middlesex, they would put up $800,000 and that the county would pick up that difference.

A letter from the minister, of January 26, 1979, to the Honourable Hugh Faulkner, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, indicated the same thing:

"During our meeting, we discussed the letter of January 3, 1979, to Mr. Eddy and the cost breakdown provided by the architect was reviewed. Mr. Smith of Parks Canada was most helpful during this discussion and advised the county representative that it might be possible for a grant to be made by your department once all of the requirements had been met prior to the decision to proceed. He indicated that if approved the grant from your department would be a one-time payment and there would be no possibility of additional future subsidies."

The letter goes on to state, and I quote from it:

"It appeared to the county, and to me also"—and I might interject at that point, to myself also, who was present at the meeting—"that it might be appropriate for the governments of Canada and Ontario to share equally in a cost of restoring a heritage building, but the two governments should not also be responsible for the cost of the interior work required specifically by the county. This proposal would divide the cost in the following manner: Government of Canada $800,000, government of Ontario $800,000, and county of Middlesex $600,000."

Since that letter went to the Honourable Hugh Faulkner, the county has received further correspondence, and I would quote from that:

"There appears to be some confusion, however, on the method of cost sharing. [This is from Hugh Faulkner.] The maximum cost level of $800,000".

At that point he agrees to the maximum cost factor of $800,000, but then he starts to back off. He indicates there appears to be some confusion on the method of cost sharing:

"As indicated in past correspondence, we are prepared to share equally in the cost of restoration aspects of the courthouse with the county of Middlesex as the landowner and the provincial government."

Here is where he starts to renege, because before he had indicated quite clearly, through two members of his staff, that they were prepared to share equally with the province of Ontario up to $800,000. I further quote from his letter:

"Accordingly, as expressed in my letter of January 3, 1979, to the county of Middlesex, we are ready to enter into an agreement for the restoration on a cost-sharing formula of 33-1/3 per cent to each party. Any costs other than for the restoration would be outside the terms of agreement."

I think everybody at all the meetings we attended agreed that any costs other than restoration would be carried by the county of Middlesex, but the cost of restoration would be shared equally between the province of Ontario and the county of Middlesex.

I believe this Minister of Government Services has carried forth his commitment on this. We have certainly seen a speedy movement by the province in seeing that the bill was carried through—it was the first bill given royal assent in this session—to ensure that the county of Middlesex would get ownership of this particular property. Now the federal government seems to be backing off on the agreement.

After some two years of working on this particular agreement, not to say four or five years of working to save that historic site in our province, we now find that the federal authorities are backing off.

I want to know the minister's position on this; whether the Ontario commitment of $800,000 still stands. Certainly I know the bill turning the property over has already been passed, as committed. We had indications from local federal members that the federal government was going to share in this, but the local members have never given a commitment as to how much. Unfortunately, I guess they are like the member for Huron-Middlesex; they gave lip service to it but they never got directly involved in it. They weren't at the meetings we had, and they have really never given their personal commitment to it as have some members of the county council; nor have they given the time that has been given by council members, by me personally and, since he has become involved, that the minister has given to this project.

I would ask the minister to clarify the provincial position on it and say what he feels the federal government has done; if it is reneging on its position, and if he will in some way pressure the federal government at this point to live up to its commitment of $800,000 shared equally with the province to make it possible to restore this historic site.

If the federal government has backed down to one third of the cost and we meet that equally, it means the share for the county of Middlesex will go from $600,000 up to probably $1,000,000 and maybe $1,200,000. It will just be impossible for the county to carry it. The county cannot do that on its own.

I have already heard from some of our county councillors who have thrown up their arms and said: "We just can't do it. We will let it deteriorate. We will let it go."

There are people in Middlesex who are far more committed to it than that. They have worked hard on it for a number of years. We feel the federal government has pulled the rug out from under them. Maybe you have some further information from your discussions with the federal government. Mr. Minister, I would ask you what you have received in commitment from them. What can you do to see this historic site is saved?
[10.00]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the member for Middlesex, I would have to concede and admit I am very disappointed in the present status of this project.

Not many weeks ago, I went to the House leader of that night of the New Democratic Party, to request third reading on the bill before the House. I was told their party wanted a chance for their critic to be here to speak to it. I informed them that in October I presented to the county of Middlesex the letter to which the member for Middlesex has referred. I made it quite clear in that letter I felt the moneys mentioned firstly were for the refurbishing of this building.

Middlesex is left in a very peculiar position with this building. In 1963, Parks Canada had this declared as a building that should be preserved and maintained. Following this of course, there was a new provincial courtroom, a new jail. Middlesex county themselves built new buildings only to find they have a piece of property with a building on it they cannot tear down. They don't know where to go or what to do with it.

The Minister of Government Services has a letter of February 1978 from the federal minister, the Honourable Mr. Faulkner, in which he reassures the federal member, Larry Condon. He refers to the letter you referred to of August 1977. He referred to that letter and stated that the offer of that time is a firm offer and they are quite willing to carry out the proposal of August 1977.

Just to reaffirm that, clause one of that offer definitely stated the government of Canada were willing to share on a 50-50 basis with the government of Ontario the refurbishing of this building, or they would go one third for Canada, one third for Ontario, and one third for Middlesex in refurbishing it.

Middlesex have a county building. They don't need this building for themselves. With this thought in mind, my letter of October and my meeting with the Middlesex committee was to confirm that we, as the province, felt the government of Canada and the government of Ontario should refurbish this building.

The architect appointed by Middlesex estimated the cost of the refurbishing of this building at $1,600,000, so my offer of $800,000 was half of that estimate. He also, in the same estimate, proposed that the cost of updating the building to today's needs—air conditioning, an elevator to help the handicapped and what have you—would be an additional $600,000. I felt the county of Middlesex should bear that.

Early in January I got a copy of a proposed contract from the government of Canada. I got a letter which said they had backed off from the 50-50 to one third. I felt there definitely must be a mistake. A letter I received some three weeks ago says there is no mistake. The government of Canada have said that they will pay a third of the cost of refurbishing.

They will provide nothing for the updating of this building. Nothing at all.

As the member for Middlesex has suggested, the government of Canada have suggested the architect's estimate of $1,600,000 is quite likely outdated and will not meet today's needs. The cost will quite likely run to $2,400,000.

I regret to have to report this to the House tonight. I have met with the Middlesex committee. They are convinced that Middlesex cannot proceed, as suggested by the member. If Parks Canada's estimate of $2,400,000 is correct, Middlesex would have to spend some $800,000 for the renovation. If their architect is that badly out on the refurbishing, their estimate on the updating must be out as well. Middlesex already has a county building, and sufficient area and accommodation space. So the county would possibly end up spending maybe another $700,000 to $800,000—$1,500,000 which is not necessary, as far as they're concerned.

Yes, the member for Middlesex is correct. I am disappointed. I could read several letters in here that I feel were firm commitments. I let the federal minister know of my disappointment and I believe Middlesex county has let the government of Canada know. It's very disappointing.

I would only add that when I went to Middlesex last October we were looking ahead one year. It was our thought that that contract with the government of Canada could be closed by February of this year. The architect at that time suggested to us that if the contract could be completed in that four to five months he could have the building ready for tender calls in July. This is what I went over with the New Democratic Party when we were debating the bill to clear up the ownership; that tenders could be called in July with the contract to be awarded in September. Work would start in October and thereby create employment in the London area for the upcoming winter.

Now you can fully realize the position in which it has put the architect and the county of Middlesex. Action is going to have to be pretty quick for that architect to call tenders. If I were a Middlesex county councillor, I don't believe I could accept the present position that the honourable minister of the government of Canada has put them in.

Mr. Eaton: A further question of the minister: The minister agrees then that throughout our discussions this was the indication; there would be an $800,000 sharing. We still feel and the architects still feel that we can do it within that amount. If you will support that position, you then support the position that Middlesex felt they had an agreement with the federal government and you will work towards establishing that agreement still, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, as Minister of Government Services I would have to take it a step further and tell you that the federal minister reinforced—I just want to bring it out again—that in a letter of February, 1978, to Larry Condon, the federal member for the larger portion of Middlesex county. In it, he reaffirmed—

Mr. Eaton: Only after May 22.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Well, of course, I am possibly going to end up referring to May 22 but this summer—

Mr. Ruston: A federal election campaign is going on, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The letter of February 1978 from the federal minister reaffirmed the position of August 1977. The letter that I received from the federal minister some three weeks or a month ago put forth a different position.

Yes, the offer of the government of Ontario stands firm, sound—whatever you want to say. We would like to see the building refurbished. But, in the present position, I say again: if I were a county councillor in Middlesex, I would have a difficult time convincing myself that they should proceed under the present proposal.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening with interest the last while as the member for Middlesex discussed the problem they had with their historical site. It seems as if we are running a kind of secondary election campaign in the federal election, involving the member for Middlesex and the Minister of Government Services. It seems as if they are working on a little plan here.

I believe $800,000, $800,000 and $600,000 come to $2,200,000. Generally the normal procedure when a municipality owns property and the province and the federal government make agreements to supply money or whatever the case might be—and we had one or two cases in our own area in the past number of years—is that the federal government agrees to contribute on a one third, one third, one third basis. Where the province owns the property, the cost-sharing is done on a 50-50 basis. Since the property is now in the name of the county, then naturally the federal government contribution would under normal procedure revert to a one third, one third, one third basis.

I am not protecting anybody or speaking for anybody, but I am just looking at the situation. This is the general procedure I have seen in agreements in our area. I am wondering what the minister might have to say with regard to that specific point. That would then mean $733,000 on an equal basis by the federal government, the province and the county. It would mean less money from the province, but it would also mean $133,000 more from the county. That is the figure that was quoted by the member for Middlesex.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I want to read a portion of a letter here, but first let me clarify the last part.

The government of Canada's contract under clause two of its proposed contract definitely singles out the refurbishing as one item that it will share in. The cost of the refurbishing, according to the architect appointed by the county of Middlesex, is $1,600,000. As to updating the building, as I said earlier, the cost of air conditioning, partitions within and changing offices comes to $600,000. The government of Canada has made it quite clear that it will not share in that $600,000 at all.

You are all pretty reasonable people. I could read you paragraph one of this letter, but I would like to read you paragraph two. I would have to tell you that I personally had not been involved previously in the refurbishing of an historic building. This is the first one I have been involved in where the three levels of government might be involved. This is a letter signed by a director for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

It says: "The Middlesex county courthouse was declared of national and historic importance by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada in 1955. In 1963, the Historic Sites and Monuments Board recommended federal assistance towards preservation of this historic structure. These recommendations form the basis for Parks Canada's mandate for involvement with respect to the restoration and preservation of the courthouse.

"Within our mandate we can only concern ourselves with the courthouse. In addition, our involvement must be on the basis of actual costs incurred for acquisition, restoration and preservation in an equality-shared arrangement."

[10:15]

I want you to really listen to what follows and you can form an opinion the same as I did. "For the past number of years, the following options have been under discussion with the city and the province of Ontario: (a) a cost-sharing agreement on a 50-50 basis between the provincial government and Parks Canada; or (b) a cost-sharing arrangement with Parks Canada, the local government and the province of Ontario each contributing 33⅓ per cent of the total cost. With either option it will be necessary for the property to be brought under the administration and control of the local government as a party to the agreement."

Those particular three lines are very important. They have made it clear that it must be owned by the local government. Furthermore, it is essential that all parties to the cost-sharing agreement fully participate in such an undertaking. That letter was dated August 9, 1977.

I have another letter here signed by the minister, the Honourable J. Hugh Faulkner. The date on it is the date Larry Condon, the local federal member, received it, February 7. The clerk of Middlesex received it on February 20, 1978.

After I became minister and more or less got my feet under me, I met with Middlesex. I had them here one morning and I felt I did not understand it fully. At that time, I had a member of staff go into it and I got a full updated report. That is when I was convinced we, as the province, and the government of Canada should pay the cost of refurbishing this building. That was the basis of my letter of October 1978. I hoped we would be given a year's advance to make winter works projects for the fall and winter of 1979 and 1980.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Minister, you said sharing the refurbishing which was $1,600,000, which is $800,000.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is the architect appointed by Middlesex. There is a little discrepancy there in the letter I have received from the federal minister. It gets a little more than that. This letter was dated April 2. I won't go into details. You would say that was getting political. It gets a little different.

Mr. Ruston: You still read in a letter the municipality owns it. The federal government said in their letter from Mr. Faulkner it would be one third, one third and one third. I am having trouble figuring out where you got the share of refurbishing of $1,600,000, which is $800,000. We have another figure of $600,000 for other work which brings it to $2,200,000. In the letter you were reading you did say under a cost-sharing agreement the province and Parks Canada would pay 50-50, but when the ownership comes to the municipality it is one third, one third, one third. I must say from what I have heard so far, I think there is a misunderstanding either by someone in your ministry or from Middlesex county as to what Parks Canada was saying in its letter.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to give the honourable member a copy of the letter of August 1977 that Parks Canada sent to Middlesex. I will be very glad to give him a copy of the letter sent by the minister to Larry Condon, the local MP, which Middlesex received on February 20, 1978. I will be very glad to supply him with a copy of my letter to Middlesex of October 1978, and a copy of the letter the minister sent to me, dated April 2. In between there is another letter he sent to the clerk of Middlesex in January 1979.

In the letter of August 1977, Parks Canada left "(a) a cost-sharing agreement on a 50-50 basis between the provincial government and Parks Canada; or, (b)"—and they put the word "or" in there; either/or—"a cost-sharing agreement where Parks Canada, the local government and the province of Ontario each contribute 33-1/3 per cent."

The next paragraph: "In either option it will be necessary for the property to be brought under the administration and control of the local government as the party to the agreement." That was following either (a) or (b).

Let me try to clear up the difference in the estimates of cost. An independent architect appointed by the county of Middlesex, an individual whom I have met only in the presence of the Middlesex county council, made it quite clear to the committee of county council and to myself—the member for Middlesex was also on hand—that the cost of refurbishing was $1,600,000. That figure is still good in his mind with today's dollar, with tendering in the midsummer of this year.

The cost of updating the building—the air conditioning, elevators and other things—is $600,000. That is from the consultant architect appointed by Middlesex county. In the letter that I received from the minister last week, dated April 2, he pointed out that the estimated cost of refurbishing would be $2,200,000. Now, we don't have that figure; that is the figure he quoted in the letter. He doesn't document who said that, but that is the figure the federal minister quoted. He pointed out that with the escalation of costs it would quite likely run to $2,400,000 for the refurbishing, not for the updating.

He went on to say that the federal government would be willing to pay one third of the cost of the refurbishing.

Mr. Ruston: Up to $2,400,000?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Up to $2,400,000.

Mr. Ruston: One third of $2,400,000?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. Up to $800,000; but only on the basis of thirds, not on a 50-50 basis. I will quite gladly supply you with the letters from which I took this, not my staff. It was this minister who read the letter and felt it was a firm commitment, as did the members of Middlesex county council.

Mr. Ruston: In other words, they are committing themselves to the original $800,000 that you felt they were going to give?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They commit themselves to $800,000, provided the cost is $2,400,000, and provided Middlesex puts in $800,000 towards the refurbishing. Then, in addition to that, Middlesex still has to update the building, which the Middlesex architect says will cost $600,000. But I say to you, if he is out that badly in his estimates on the refurbishing, it will likely cost $800,000. So this would put Middlesex at $1,500,000 or $1,600,000 for a building they really don't need but are hooked with because it was declared an historic building under Parks Canada, back in 1953.

Mr. Ruston: I thought I understood the minister to say that the $1,600,000 for refurbishing was a pretty firm estimate.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Ruston: So why are they then saying $2,400,000?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't know.

Mr. Ruston: Don't you think they're putting the updating and air conditioning and elevators into it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No.

Mr. Ruston: It looks like it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No. They make it quite clear in the proposed contract that it is only the refurbishing.

Mr. Ruston: You had better put that all in at the same time when you refurbish it. Then you would get your $800,000.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No. The proposed contract they have presented us with doesn't permit the updating.

Mr. Ruston: I think it is a matter of interpretation, Mr. Chairman, and I wouldn't care to go on any further. I really think it has to be a matter of interpretation, and probably a bit of a political football. So I would prefer to let it go at that.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Henderson, the committee of supply reported progress.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

DEATH OF DR. ROBERT JACKSON

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I believe all the citizens of Ontario are aware, and I am sure deeply saddened to learn, of the death yesterday of Dr. Robert W. B. Jackson in a tragic motor vehicle accident in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Dr. Jackson was recognized as one of Canada's outstanding educators. He served as the first director of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education from 1965 to 1975 and was largely responsible for establishing that institution as an educational facility with international acclaim. Upon retirement from the institute, Dr. Jackson moved to Halifax to become the senior research associate at the Atlantic Institute of Education.

In August 1977 Dr. Jackson was appointed by my predecessor as a one-man commission to study the effects and the implications of declining school enrolments in Ontario. The scope of that inquiry by the commission was the most comprehensive on the subject of declining enrolment ever undertaken anywhere on this continent. Over a 15-month period Dr. Jackson assembled a group of eminent Canadian researchers, who produced a large volume of research material on this topic. That material is being widely used by educators in Ontario faced with the problems of declining enrolment. I should like the House to know that requests for research reports have been received from many other provinces and from several other countries as well.

On behalf of the government of the province of Ontario I should like to extend our sincere sympathy and our condolences to Dr. Jackson's family, his widow Heather and his two sons. I should like the members of the House to know that the funeral service for Dr. Jackson will be held tomorrow in Halifax, but at the same time in Toronto there will be a memorial service held at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education auditorium, 252 Bloor Street West, at 2 p.m.

Mr. Cassidy: On behalf of my party I would simply like to express our feelings of deep sympathy and regret to the family of Dr. Jackson, who died yesterday in a tragic accident in the Halifax area. Dr. Jackson has provided to this province, and I believe also to this country, long service in the area of education and a great deal of leadership.

While members of this House know we had some reservations about parts of the recent report he was preparing for the government, we felt the final document he prepared on the area of declining enrolments, which reflected his lifetime of experience in the area of education, had excellent recommendations to make. We would only wish that, as a tribute to his contribution to education, the government had been prepared to put the recommendations of that report into practice.

I want to join with the Minister of Education in expressing our regret. We would have hoped that Dr. Jackson could have continued to make a contribution as the elder statesman of education in this province and not had his life cut short in such a tragic way.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a word at this time on behalf of the official opposition—a word of condolence to the family of the late Dr. Jackson, and a word to indicate how much the citizens of Ontario have to appreciate people who devote themselves to public causes and who take on, even at later stages in their lives when they could well decide simply to enjoy leisure time, very difficult and onerous duties in the public interest. Dr. Jackson was such a person. In that regard we certainly owe a lot to the late gentleman and certainly want to give our sincere condolences to the family.

TRAINING SCHOOL CLOSURES

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the honourable members will recall that in February 1978 I announced a three-phase plan to reduce the number of provincial training schools to three or four and to provide alternative forms of treatment in the community for children who are wards of the juvenile corrections system. Under the plan only those who are a danger to themselves or to others and require special care will be placed in a training school.

Research has questioned the necessity of institutionalization for many juvenile delinquents. Alternative types of community care have shown positive results for this type of child. At the same time, the populations of our training schools have been dropping because of an overall decrease in the numbers of children in the 12-to-16 age group, the use of community group homes, and shorter and fewer committals to training schools by juvenile-court judges.

The first changes affecting training schools took place when Elmcrest School in Toronto was closed in 1973 and Grandview School in Cambridge was closed in 1976. Last year Hillcrest Training School in Guelph was closed. The wards of the training school in Hagersville were transferred to more modern facilities at the Sprucedale School in Simcoe.

Even with last year's closing, the training-school system has more room for wards than can be justified by reason of either program or budget. The maximum capacity of all our existing training schools is approximately 850. Under present conditions only about 450 wards are in residence at peak periods of the year. Operating any type of institution below capacity is clearly not an effective use of either financial or staff resources for ensuring the most appropriate type of care for these children.

Today, therefore, officials of my ministry are meeting with employees of the Kawartha Lakes School in Lindsay and Pine Ridge School in Bowmanville, to announce that those institutions will be closing as training schools later this year. The Lindsay school will close July 31; the Bowmanville school will close October 31.

Under the new policy for care and treatment of juvenile offenders I announced last year, we still require a training school for each of our province's major regions. The opening of Sprucedale in Simcoe ensured adequate facilities for western Ontario. Cecil Facer School in Sudbury is the only training school in the north and will continue to serve that region. In eastern Ontario we have four training schools. In addition to the two which will close we have Brookside School in Cobourg and Champlain School in Alfred near Ottawa.

We chose Pine Ridge and Kawartha Lakes for closure because both schools are felt to be unsuitable for use in our overall plan for juveniles found to be delinquent.

I would like to reassure the honourable members concerning provisions made for the employees and wards of the Kawartha Lakes and Pine Ridge schools.

The two employee unions concerned, the Ontario Public Service Employees Union and the Federation of Provincial School Authority Teachers, have been advised of the changes. Senior officials of my ministry are informing the staff of both schools and community leaders of our decision and our reasons today.

Classified civil servants at both Kawartha Lakes and Pine Ridge will be offered other jobs within the ministry and government which utilize their skills and experience. There are sufficient vacancies within the government to offer alternative positions to these employees.

Children placed in training schools stay an average of five months. This means that most children in Pine Ridge will have graduated by October 31. Many will also have left Kawartha Lakes by July 31. In the six remaining schools we have ample space for any remaining wards.

A comprehensive review of Champlain School in Alfred is under way and we hope to develop a program there that will benefit a wider range of children than are presently being served. It is our intention to develop a broader use for this school with its 163 acres of land and buildings.

A special school, Project DARE in South River, will be maintained, but not as a training school. Its unique Outward Bound program will be made available to a wider range of juveniles, not only training school wards.

I know concerns have been expressed that in reducing the capacity of the training school system, the province will be returning difficult-to-manage children to communities that may not be fully prepared to deal with them. We will continue to place children in the community only when and where there is appropriate care for them. The closures I have announced today will allow us to reallocate funds to develop new alternative programs in the community.

Group homes for juvenile offenders have been a feature of the correctional system for several years. We will continue to develop other kinds of community programs, including specialized foster care and selective intervention, which give individual support to wards who are able to live in the community.

During the planning stage of these closures, we asked the federal government and all other Ontario ministries if they could use any of the training school facilities for other purposes. While none was in a position to do so, I sincerely hope that by making our plans public today, we can more easily approach business, industry, municipalities and private groups to find uses for lands and buildings in Lindsay and Bowmanville. Residents of both of these communities have proved to be excellent hosts to our training schools over the years. We plan to work actively with these communities and other ministries to develop new job opportunities.

Mr. Mancini: That's why you're taking them away?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Finally, I would like to stress that the changes I have announced today—the closing of two training schools, the new roles for two others, the more efficient use of the remaining schools and the development of more community resources—are all part of our long-term program to make better use of the funds at our disposal and to provide improved types of care and rehabilitation for delinquent juveniles in our province.

GO TRANSIT TICKETING FACILITIES

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to advise the House today that the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority, which administers GO Transit, is about to embark on a program to assume the operation of GO Transit ticketing facilities with its own staff, phasing out the existing contractor, Canadian National Railways, over a two-year period.

The phasing-out procedure has been adopted following my discussions with my colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), Cliff Pilkey, president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, and representatives of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers. It was agreed that the changeover would minimize the effect on the 80 CN staff involved.

In a subsequent meeting I had with Mr. A. R. Williams, CN vice-president of the Great Lakes region, I was assured that CN will have little difficulty reassigning existing staff within the company during the transitional period; and further, CN will do everything in its power to minimize any possible adverse effects on its employees.

The change in staffing procedures will enable TATO to unify GO Transit's complex ticketing function throughout the entire area served by the system.

ORGANIZED CRIME

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the Legislature the contents of a letter I have received signed by some 52 members of the Italian-Canadian community which was prompted by the recent Canadian Broadcasting Corporation production titled Connections. This letter is signed by 52 people, as I mentioned, including labourers and professionals, businessmen and union leaders, teachers and students.

I will read an excerpt from the letter and then table it. I would also like to deal briefly with some matters raised here on April 9 by the members for Downsview (Mr. di Santo), for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) and for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid).

The letter, briefly, reads as follows:

"This program has improperly created the impression among the viewing public that the Italian-Canadian community is riddled with members associated with organized crime. It is a well-known fact that presently and historically our community is, and has been, as law abiding as any other in this province.

"Our greatest concern is the adverse psychological and social effects which this program has had on our children who, we hope, will be among the future leaders of our country. The unspoken reality is that innocent children are continually being taunted simply because of their cultural heritage.

"We certainly lend our support to the efforts of any media source in their attempt to surface these kinds of issues and inform all citizens about criminal activities in any community. However, the CBC must recognize the effect of journalism which, in our opinion, has created an image that the Italian-Canadian community as a group condones elements of crime. Our community, like all other communities, assists in and wholeheartedly supports the enforcement of law and order for the well-being of all citizens.

"Our comments are couched in words of disappointment and sorrow rather than anger, since a community of approximately 600,000, ranging from the professional to the labourer, from the child to the elderly, and who have had and will continue to contribute, now have been maligned by being cast among the handful shown by the CBC."

I have great sympathy with the sentiments that are contained in this letter. There, of course, should be no doubt about the truly phenomenal contributions that Canadians of Italian origin have made to this province. The evidence is all around us, be it social, cultural, charitable or political.

As someone born and raised in Metropolitan Toronto, I personally have experienced how much our community and our lifestyle has benefited by our Italian-Canadian citizens.

As Attorney General and Solicitor General I am in regular contact with law enforcement officials and I have no hesitation in stating once again that the Italian-Canadian community is as law abiding as any other community in the province.

Members asked last week whether I would make a statement on the status of our continuing law enforcement efforts against organized crime as a result of the CBC program.

I want to emphasize that the key individuals identified on the program in this jurisdiction have been convicted and imprisoned or are now before the courts on a variety of charges. Unfortunately, the program made little or no mention of this fact and because of that viewers may have been left with an inaccurate impression of the activities of the police agencies and the administration of justice.

Several years ago the three major police forces involved in the fight against organized crime—the Ontario Provincial Police, the Metropolitan Toronto police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—formed a tri-force task force. In early 1977, I directed that senior members of my ministry be available to advise the task force on a continuing basis.

As a result, senior officials of the crown law office are consulted by and advise members of the task force at regular intervals in the course of every major investigation. In addition, there are regular meetings and exchanges of intelligence information that have enabled us to develop expertise in both the investigation and prosecution of organized criminal activities. Counsel in the crown law office have also participated in intensive courses dealing with the prosecution of organized crime at Cornell University.

Both the Ministry of the Attorney General and the Ministry of the Solicitor General are, of course, committed to this effort. The government stands ready to provide additional financial assistance to the police for use in this regard as we did in 1977 when an extra $1.25 million was allotted to the OPP.

Through this concerted effort charges have been laid against approximately 250 persons involved in organized criminal activities in the past two years. This, as I have already mentioned, includes most of the individuals identified on the CBC program.

Among the charges are several involving complex conspiracies. Others involve loan-sharking, extortion, counterfeiting, gambling, burglary, theft, forgery, fraud and other criminal rackets. These prosecutions are as a result of intensive investigation into patterns of criminal activity that are planned and organized by persons acting in concert, to paraphrase the law-enforcement definition of organized crime.

As I have said on previous occasions, it is a significant fact that the number of convictions of organized-crime members brought about as a result of the tri-force effort has exceeded that of any other comparable jurisdiction in North America during the period the task force has been in operation.

It is the view of the police and counsel in the crown law office criminal that the fight against organized crime can most effectively be waged by established police methods; that is, gathering evidence on which to secure convictions in court. It is the police view—and I share it—that a public inquiry at this time would interfere with a number of investigations under way and with the cases currently before the courts, and would simply not be as effective as the task-force approach.

ORAL QUESTIONS

REED PAPER COMPANY

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), who is not here. But I also have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources; I see him arriving now.

Could the minister comment on the allegations regarding the cut of Reed Limited? Could the minister explain whether in fact it's true that in the southern portion of Reed's timber rights they have exceeded the annual allowable cut by some 50 per cent? Could he comment on whether this represents good forestry practice?

If he wishes to deny this report would he be good enough to give us some explanation for how this report arose and to bring us up to date on the actual figures with regard to the allowable cut in the southern portion of Reed's timber limits?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really don't know how the report was put over the air—as I understand it, in Thunder Bay by CBQ, I believe it was—

Mr. Foulds: It was from your ministry's figures. It is from figures supplied by your ministry.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That's right, but the figures they used were not the figures that were supplied by our ministry.

In the southern working circle, there are two areas that Reed has for a period of, I think, some 20 or 25 years. The actual cut from the spruce working group is less than the approved allowable cut over the last five years. In the northern working circle, the actual cut from the spruce working group has been slightly higher than the approved allowable cut over the last 15 years.

Reed has advised us that since 1969 the company has spent approximately $4.5 million on road and bridge construction and maintenance in the northern working circle to distribute its cutting operation more properly. This will result in the balancing of the spruce allowable cut over both working circles, which is a situation totally acceptable to the ministry.

I might add that the allowable cut is generally based over a period. Quite often companies will exceed it in one year and be well below in the following year, for a variety of reasons—weather, conditions in the mill, conditions in the market, a variety of things. As I understand it, Reed has a volume agreement. It's based on a 20-year period, so there can be variations from year to year and from one five-year period to another.

It's difficult to understand how the information originally supplied by the Dryden office of the ministry in response to a query from Thunder Bay came out over the air in the form it did.

I might say one other thing. White spruce, which is what I believe they were talking about, comprises only 0.6 per cent—six tenths of one per cent—of the total allowable cut of Reed. It's considered to be an incidental species because the big cut there is black spruce and jackpine.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, would the minister be good enough to supply the House the figures for the annual allowable cut and for the actual cut for the various species in the various timber limits that Reed has had, so that we can judge for ourselves what the situation has been over the years?

I take it that the minister is saying that the annual cut is a kind of mean around which fluctuations are permissible. I'm sure the minister wouldn't like us to believe that the whole cut of a 20-year supply could be cut in one year, because of the implications for re-growth. Could the minister, therefore, tell us what kinds of variations are permissible around the annual cut as a mean figure, and what the figure has been this particular year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'll be delighted to do that, Mr. Speaker. I would say that in the normal course of events we don't give yearly figures.

Ms. Gigantes: Who says they are going to be around in 20 years?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We will be delighted to give the allowable cut but not the actual cut—for a variety of reasons, as far as the companies are concerned; competitive conditions, negotiations, a variety of things.

I can give the member the cut over the period and I will give him the allowable cut each year, and the total to date, but I would prefer not to give a breakdown for each year in the last two or three years and the current year because, as I say, this information is of advantage to one's competitors, I'm told.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, come on.

An hon. member: Give them to him for all of them.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I realize that some of the honourable members over there don't believe in competition, but there is some.

Mr. Wildman: Give it to us.

Mr. S. Smith: It belongs to the people.

Hon. Mr. Auld: And I think that it is important that we recognize that. I will try to give the member all the information that is available and, in fact, if it is insufficient we will have another go at it.

Mr. Foulds: Can the minister tell us how many other companies are engaged in the practice outlined in the radio story yesterday, allowed and abetted by the ministry, of cutting on a global-lease basis? In other words, can he tell us how many other companies are engaged in overcutting certain parts of their limits or leases and undercutting in other areas? Does he not think it is time for the ministry to abandon its nine-year-old global-lease cutting policy and adhere strictly to cutting the allowable cut, with minor variations, in the individual tracts as they were leased by the companies?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I haven't seen a transcript of the broadcast so I'm not sure what companies were involved, but I will endeavour to get the information. I would point out to the member that the DREE agreement that the province and the federal government have entered into for northern Ontario for, amongst other things, access roads in the forest areas—some $60 million—is to get at over-mature lumber. So there will be, I would assume, some additional cutting going on to harvest that fibre before it is too late.

Mr. S. Smith: If I may ask a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: That's your second final.

Mr. S. Smith: It was final for me.

Would the minister reconsider his statement that he might withhold from us the annual cut of crown timber by various companies in the light of the fact that these are crown resources and that if a company were to leave, for instance, its entire cut to the end of its lease, this would have very important implications for reforestation, among other things, such as the possibility of giving them new leases if they've mismanaged the first one?

Would the minister recognize that in fact the companies announce their production each year, anyway—

Mr. Martel: That's two.

Mr. S. Smith: —which is really cut under a different name? Would he, therefore, provide the annual figures—

Mr. Martel: Three.

Mr. S. Smith: —and allow us to draw our own conclusions in this House as to whether proper forestry practices are in vogue with regard to the Reed paper company?

Mr. Martel: That was three questions.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will give the honourable member as much information as I can, and if there is some problem I will be in touch with him before I give the final figures.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Can the minister tell us whether or not, under the terms of the DREE agreement for additional forest roads in which Ontario is participating, one of the terms of giving funds to companies to build those additional roads will be a far stricter adherence to cutting less in the limits that are now accessible and nearing the overcutting stage; in other words, that we will develop the northern parts that have been leased and have not been cut because of inadequate roads, in order to use the mature timber that is there?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would say this: The agreements will be implemented in the way which will achieve the best forest practice.

Mr. S. Smith: I had a question for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott). I was told he'd be here, but I guess he is delayed.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He'll be here.

HYDRO URANIUM CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: I'll ask a question then of the Minister of Energy. Is there an agreement between Shell Canada and Ontario Hydro concerning uranium exploration in Ontario? Can the minister tell us how much has been spent by either party for exploration for uranium in this province? Can he tell us whether there is some exclusivity in the exploratory rights granted under this contract and whether the costs and benefits are shared equally by Shell Canada and Ontario Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I can't say at the moment whether or not there is such an agreement. I have an idea that Hydro has agreements with a number of possible suppliers of various kinds of materials, such as coal in the United States. I will get that information for the member and provide it on Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, has the minister received complaints, as we have, that persons have been prohibited from contracting with Ontario Hydro to explore for uranium in Ontario because of this agreement with Shell, specifically in the Elliot Lake area? Is the minister not concerned that Ontarians are prevented from exploring for uranium in their own province because they haven't reached some agreement with some multinational company, namely Shell? Has he received complaints, as we have, with regard to this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have received no complaints. Who would be prohibiting companies from exploring?

Mr. Mancini: We're supposed to ask the questions.

An hon. member: Shell.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary and, I guess, by way of an answer to the minister, it would appear that Ontario Hydro is prohibited—

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister aware—But he asked me the question, after all.

Mr. Breithaupt: Obviously he wasn't aware of it.

Mr. S. Smith: He's getting used to what the situation will be some year or two hence.

Mr. Breithaupt: He has to be a little crisper.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister aware that Hydro appears to have been prevented from entering an agreement with a particular consulting geologist on the basis that Hydro is already in an agreement with Shell which would appear to give Shell exclusive rights to explore in the Elliot Lake area and other places? Can he tell us what has been spent and how these benefits have been divided and what he thinks of an agreement where multinationals can prevent Ontario people from exploring for uranium in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: First I should clarify something. It is the Ministry of Natural Resources which issues licences to explore and stake claims and so on. Hydro has no authority in that field. However, I'll find out exactly what agreement Shell and Hydro have and what Hydro may have with other companies and I will report.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Carleton East with a final supplementary.

Ms. Gigantes: Can I ask the minister if he understands the arrangement of Ontario Hydro to enter into co-operation with companies for exploration of uranium to be an indication that Ontario Hydro is thinking of trying to get out of its existing contracts which will provide an oversupply of uranium for planned nuclear plants?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would say, assuming that Hydro has these agreements, the opposite would be the case. Hydro is attempting to ensure it will have a long-term supply of uranium.

Ms. Gigantes: They already have it.

[Later (3:13):]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Earlier this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) asked me a question about Hydro and an agreement with Shell Canada. I've come across some information about it which I thought I should give him today.

As part of the program to improve security of supply for its long-term nuclear program, Ontario Hydro is providing financial support for selected uranium exploration projects. Late in 1975, Hydro entered two exploratory ventures, one with Shell Canada Limited and one with Amok Limited. The former involves a five-year program of exploration. Work has been carried out in northern Ontario, the Northwest Territories, Labrador, Quebec and British Columbia. The Amok program is a continuation of work already done by the company on its property near Cluff Lake in Saskatchewan which has led to the discovery of uranium deposits on another part of the property.

In 1977, Hydro acquired a 15 per cent interest in uranium explorations being carried out by Norcen Energy Resources Limited in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario and Nova Scotia.

Mr. di Santo: Statements, statements, statements.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Through this venture, Hydro has an interest in the Blizzard uranium deposit in the Kelowna area of BC, where mining development is planned, subject to the outcome of a board of inquiry into uranium mining in that province.

Mr. di Santo: Time, time.

Hon. Mr. Auld: In 1978, Hydro acquired a 20 per cent interest in a uranium exploration program being carried out in New Brunswick by Canadian Nickel Company, which I believe is an Inco subsidiary.

Ms. Gigantes: Is there an excess profit tax on that?

[Reverting (2:35):]

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. Can the Minister of Health confirm that the government's present intention is to cut more than 4,000 hospital beds in Ontario over the course of the next two and a half years as a result of the cutback policy which the minister has decreed? Can the minister say what the medical justifications are for such a sudden reduction in beds in Ontario and what studies or preparatory work was done before the ministry reached that decision?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can confirm to the honourable member that what we are planning, and what is becoming more and more apparent in most areas of the province, is to see first of all a recognition of the need for more chronic- and long-term care beds. Wherever possible, we plan to see those met out of conversion to those uses of beds which, while called acute-care beds, are actually being used for that purpose, in order that new programs will be established or existing ones expanded.

I think at this point it would be quite irresponsible to speculate on 4,000 beds closing. I think the change in terms of numbers will be minimal over the coming years, but the uses will certainly change. This is what I have been saying all along when I talk about the health-care system in transition—that we have to see the system change, preferably first within our resources, to meet our changing needs.

Mr. Wildman: Not in transition, in limbo.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact Ontario already has the lowest proportion of hospital beds to population of any province in Canada, and in view of the fact the minister is proposing to reduce the number of active-treatment beds from what was estimated at 4.63 beds per thousand a year ago to 3.5 beds per thousand in southern Ontario by 1981, can the minister say whether that decision was motivated purely by budgetary grounds, as appears to be the case? If not, what is the medical justification which the ministry went through before deciding that it was going to impose those hospital cutbacks on many communities where hospital treatment available is already in short supply?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Comparisons with other jurisdictions can be sometimes quite difficult inasmuch as one doesn't always use the same base. I would invite the member to look at the statement I made on February 7, 1978, at which time I announced the budget for hospitals for 1978 and indicated what the budget figures would likely look like for 1979. I also announced the change in the active-treatment bed planning guideline.

I went on to say that the guidelines for chronic- and extended-care beds were being retained as the minimum level. Where needs above those levels were identified, the government would move, over time, to see that those needs were met.

In particular I would draw to the member's attention his own city. There the local health council, the overall health planning body for that region, examined the need for chronic-care beds and made a recommendation to me that we make provision for 150 more chronic-care beds with the ability to expand to 200 chronic-care beds for the future.

As a result of that, even while the new Ottawa health sciences centre general hospital is under construction, even while the new rehab unit at Royal Ottawa is going ahead and while the new forensic unit at Royal Ottawa is going ahead, we have approved the conversion of the "old" Ottawa General to provide for, initially, as soon as it is renovated, 150 chronic-care beds with a capacity for 200 eventually.

That kind of thing is going on all over the province. It is perhaps one of the better examples of what I have been talking about with the health-care system in transition. We are recognizing that many beds we presently call acute-care beds have to be reordered in order that proper chronic-care programs—this is what I am concerned about—that chronic-care patients who need the chronic-care program are going to get it and not be lost, as it were, in the shuffle of a much larger acute-care ward.

Mr. Cooke: Isn't the real problem in this transition that the minister has not bothered to put the alternatives in place, such as chronic home care, before he decided to close many of the active-treatment beds and make the switch to chronic beds? Wouldn't it have been better planning and make more sense if some of those alternatives would have been put in place first and more nursing-home beds provided? Further, since the minister says he believes in decentralizing decision-making in this province in health care, wouldn't it have made more sense for the minister to allow the district health councils in the various communities to determine what the proper number of active-treatment beds would be for their community, rather than have the bureaucrats here in Toronto and the minister making the decision strictly on budgetary grounds?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, I think if the honourable member thinks one can run something the size of the Ministry of Health, which spends over $11 million a day, without having some kind of standards by which to plan, then he's misleading himself and the House really.

Mr. Swart: He can but you can't.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You can say that; I won't say that.

Mr. Renwick: Why not cut the red tape?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We've got to have some kind of standards and some kind of benchmark to plan by. One of the points that bears repeating is that when we talk about moving over three years—not over one year because that kind of change in one year would be too traumatic—to 3.5 active-treatment beds per thousand in the south and four in the north—

Mr. Warner: You should be replaced by a computer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —we're talking about moving towards the day when that number of beds will be available purely for active-treatment purposes.

Mr. Wildman: What is the justification for that remark?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In the process we are moving to identify what numbers of beds are required for chronic long-term care and extended care and to put the wheels in motion to address those needs as well. In planning for the health-care system we can't say, "All right, today we'll fix it all up, that will be it, and we won't have to touch it again." It is an ongoing process obviously.

Mr. Swart: It should have been finalized years ago.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member cannot—and I think this is a mistake which is made by many so often that I'm not being critical of him—look at a chronic home-care program as something which can replace every person who is now, ever was, or ever will be a chronic- or extended-care patient. It will address the needs of a number of them. It will help to keep people out of those facilities longer and to maintain their independence in their own home. It will help perhaps to get some of them out sooner. But we cannot equate one with the other because we are always going to need institutional services for some people.

Mr. Foulds: Bring back Matt Dymond.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I would say to the minister, Mr. Speaker, that I find it hard to stomach—

Mr. Speaker: Then ask the minister then.

Mr. Cassidy: —today a proposal for 200 chronic beds which was promised by this government in 1975, before he even became the Minister of Health. I want to say to the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Ask a question please.

Mr. Havrot: Never mind grandstanding.

Mr. Cassidy: My question is can the minister explain why on March 27 he told this House: "We have set standards for the province which compare well with any jurisdiction which one chooses to bring forward in Canada or in North America," when in fact the latest figures available at that time indicated that the number of hospital beds per thousand on average across Canada was 5.76; that Ontario already had a full one hospital bed per thousand less than the rest of the country; and that the minister's new standards are now going to reduce that to a point where we would have more than two beds per thousand less than the rest of the country?

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Cassidy: The question is—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked. Let the minister explain.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, let him explain.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I'll take a look at the member's figures, but if memory serves me correctly what he is in fact quoting for the other provinces is all beds—chronic, extended care, psychiatric and acute care. What he is quoting for Ontario is just acute care. He has his figures mixed up, and I'll confirm that for him.

Mr. Cassidy: Those figures came from—

Mr. Foulds: The College of Physicians and Surgeons. They must be true.

Mr. Cassidy: —from the Ontario Hospital Association. If the minister wants to take them on, that's fine.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Education who is responsible, among other things, for apprenticeship programs, at least until the Minister of Manpower takes on his new responsibilities. Can the minister explain why, when we had 319,000 people out of work in Ontario in March and when we had 145,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 out of work, the government of Ontario was advertising in the daily newspaper, The Sun, in London, England, for qualified and experienced tradespersons to work in the GM transmission plant in Windsor?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have no knowledge at all that the government of Ontario was advertising for anything in any newspaper in London, England.

Mr. di Santo: You were in China. That's why.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the government of Ontario's selective placement service was advertising in The Sun for industrial pipefitters, electricians, machine fitters, millwrights and tool and die makers to go and work in the GM transmission plant in Windsor, can the minister explain why we are not training people to fill these positions here in Ontario?

[2:45]

Why, in particular between April of last year and February of this year, did the number of pipefitters apprenticing in Ontario fall from 610 to 606; why did the number of industrial electricians apprenticing fall by close to 200; why did the number of millwrights, now being sought in London, England, to apprentice here in Ontario, fall from 349 to 131? Why is it that the only sector showing an increase in apprenticeships is tool and diemaking in the areas I have cited? When will this government begin to ensure that Ontario men and women can train for these skilled trades that are so badly needed in Windsor and throughout the province?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, we have indeed taken, I think, significant steps to increase the number of available training positions for individuals within the machine-tool trades specifically. However I would remind the honourable members opposite that while the places for training are there, it is not this government's position that we go out and coerce people into the training programs. The retraining is available through the AOTA agreement with the federal government. The places are there and available to young people who wish retraining in this province. If they do not take them up, we cannot, unfortunately, coerce them into doing so.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What steps is the ministry taking to update the counselling or guidance programs in the secondary schools of this province so that students can be made much more aware of potential opportunities and so that they will be given more encouragement? We are not asking that they be coerced but they could be encouraged to consider seriously these areas of employment. What updating is taking place?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of very real concern. The information in the process of being developed will be distributed not only to secondary schools but to parents and to young people both inside and outside the secondary school system. It will be available very shortly for perusal by all members of this House.

Mr. Swart: After 34 years of Tory government.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We have embarked on a very active campaign of public information in an attempt to bring about the important and absolutely necessary change in public attitudes regarding the acquisition of such skills as appropriate career choices for our young people. That program is actively in production right at the moment and should be available very shortly.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, could the minister explain why the Ontario government is advertising on behalf of General Motors of Canada? Couldn't they do that little task themselves?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I said earlier I had no knowledge that the government of Ontario was advertising at all. I shall be pleased to investigate this matter and to inform the House. I have not seen it.

Mr. Breaugh: It is coming over.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Thank you very much.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Would the minister look back to the program set up during the Second World War when they used vocational schools throughout Ontario for development of the various types of skills needed for the war effort? We could look back at the past. I think we could resolve part of our problems by the full use of these schools. At that time they used them from right after regular school until eight o'clock the next morning.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, we have most certainly been aware of the traditional kinds of programs developed in other jurisdictions as well as in Ontario. I am happy to be reminded again of the program established during the Second World War in the vocational schools. We feel there is a great need for increased utilization of those facilities that are available to us now, as well as increased co-ordination of all the programs available in Ontario. That's precisely the route we are attempting to follow at this point.

GREAT LAKES POLLUTION

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Does the minister agree with the Great Lakes pollution assessment by the American head of the International Joint Commission supported by the past Canadian chairman, Maxwell Cohen, in which they said such things as, "We may have to write off the Great Lakes, particularly Lakes Erie and Ontario, as sources of fish and drinking water unless measures are taken by governments to control the input of toxic waste," and, "We have a time bomb on our hands and it is up to government to stop it from going off"?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: He denied that in a later speech.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is very difficult, Mr. Speaker, to answer that yes or no.

An hon. member: You've never answered a question yet.

Mr. McClellan: Let Stephenson answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I do not disagree that we must be very careful, and to have someone bring this so forcefully to the attention of people will I think do nothing but good for those of us who are concerned about the environment. On that note I welcome the article.

I am not so pessimistic as to believe that the Great Lakes must be written off. I would, however, go so far as to say—and I probably agree with the member—that unless all of us become—

Mr. T. P. Reid: There is government accounting.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —concerned and do something about it—and that means more than just government, that means all of us as concerned citizens—we do have a potential serious problem of great magnitude.

So I guess I would take the public position that I welcome that kind of flag-waving for those of us who are concerned about the environment and would join with those who say we—if it is more than just government—must be doing something about it.

Ms. Gigantes: Some of us do more about it than others.

Mrs. Campbell: And wave the flag, too.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the government is doing a fair amount; I think the things we proposed last fall and the deadlines we placed for January 1 are significant and will be effective. So I guess I am somewhat supportive, yet I don't go quite as far as that gentleman did, or indeed the headline might suggest.

Mr. Warner: We will use the fish for thermometers.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, may I ask, what has the minister and the ministry done in carrying out the toxic substances control program specified in the new Great Lakes water quality agreement that went into effect some five months ago? In other words, what are the minister's plans, what are his programs with respect to that particular agreement?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think there are many plans. Some of them are to find better sites; some of them are to find better methods of controlling toxic waste.

Part of it, I think, has already been accomplished. I am not persuaded that the waybill system, improved as it is, has still reached its ultimate in sophistication to do the job it should do. We will be making further amendments to our waybill classification system.

I think when I put that to the House I said better we do something today and get it started than to wait until it is perfect. We now see some areas where we think there could be some improvements and in the not too distant future the honourable member will find us making changes in the waybill classification system.

I think we have to do a more constructive job with the private sector in the testing of wastes as they are accepted. I think in the private sector we are short of adequate control of materials when they come into their possession. Those are the kinds of things that will be done this year that I think in many ways will address the problem the International Joint Commission was trying to bring to the attention of the people of Ontario. Without that help on their part, I think it will appear as though we are putting something onto the private sector, onto society, that they may not want.

I am sure, knowing of the honourable member's interest—I hope he knows of mine in this regard—we welcome that kind of bringing to public attention of the importance of government's doing something, but in conjunction with the private sector and the individual citizen.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister when is he going to institute mandatory registration of all hazardous chemicals used by industry so that he can see whether they are providing adequate methods of disposal of any waste from them and whether they are testing them before they put them into manufacturing processes?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can give the honourable member a specific date on that. We have attempted to address that issue in meetings with sister ministries because I think we have arrived at the point in time in our society when if you are going to produce a chemical you should be responsible not only for its use but any side effects it might have and its after-use care. I do not disagree with that at all.

Ms. Gigantes: What about environmental assessment?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I do not think it necessarily should fall within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of the Environment for Ontario. I think the honourable member would agree that if we are going to that degree of control, there is significant involvement for the federal government.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, does the minister intend more strict enforcement as it applies to industry with regard to the regulations and acts that are now in place? Secondly, is the minister intending to put the 2.5 phosphorus limit on dishwashing and commercial detergent to accord with the limit on household detergent?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The answer to the first portion of the question is yes, we will. I only wish I were in a practical position to do it today. I wish we had, not only in this province but in all 10 provinces, sufficient sites for the treatment of our waste. The fact is, not only Ontario, but many places—

Mr. Kerrio: Wishbones instead of backbone.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —and certainly the states to the south, are not in a position to control to the degree I think we should. We have to have those facilities in place.

We have, as the honourable member knows, a significant study contract with a firm to find those sites. That is progressing very nicely. That was the first step. Last fall, we tried to set out step-by-step programs that will allow us to be more stringent than we are today, but I cannot be stringent when I do not have, nor does the rest of society have, some of the necessary facilities to treat those wastes. We are trying as quickly as we can to get those facilities in place. Once they are in place, it is the time to get more stringent and we will.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of the statement by Dr. Arthur Porter in his interim report for the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning that the implementation of recommendations by the International Joint Commission for control of radiation levels in the Great Lakes would seriously affect the development of the nuclear program in Ontario? Does he not think that is a good reason to have an environmental assessment of Darlington?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I fail to understand that as a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It relates to the other ministry.

ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question to the Attorney General. Why has the government procrastinated so long in responding to the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses with regard to amendments to the Election Finances Reform Act? Quite apart from his past procrastination, is it the government's intention to move in implementing those reforms, 17 of which date as far back as the 1976 report, and if so, when?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I do not concede we have procrastinated at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Three years.

Mr. Warner: That is your normal way.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would be happy to review the specific proposed amendment. We will be introducing an amendment in relation to the limitation period, that is clear. There has been some debate over the responsibility for the initiating of charges and we have made it very clear that in our view that is primarily their function as the investigative agency. I will be quite happy to review any other amendments that may have been suggested and report back to the honourable member.

Mr. Warner: When?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there are over 20 recommendations; 17 of them date from 1976, three years ago, with requests for amendment. Would the minister, when he reports back, indicate why he is picking only two and leaving the other 20 to be neglected still further?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I said we will report back.

[3:00]

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the chairman of the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses has also had the responsibility of being Attorney General over a considerable period of time, and it is his view that the Attorney General does have the responsibility to prosecute charges, would not the Attorney General feel he might get an impartial opinion on this matter, since it seems quite reasonable that the chief law officer of the crown might very well implement the charges recommended by the commission?

Would the Attorney General comment on the fact that one of the charges pending would be against a Conservative who had defaulted on the requirements of the act?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member has demonstrated by his question the enormous confusion that exists in some people's minds, obviously including his own, in relation to the responsibility of the Ministry of the Attorney General.

The member has lumped two issues that are of fundamental importance and difference; that is, who initiates the prosecution and who prosecutes it. I want to make it very clear that there has been no issue as to who prosecutes it. We made it very clear that, once the charge is initiated, we will prosecute the charge.

Mr. Nixon: The former Attorney General says you should initiate it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: With respect to the former Attorney General, I think perhaps he misconstrues what the role of the Ministry of the Attorney General is in this respect.

There is absolutely no question in my mind that it is important to point out that the Ministry of the Attorney General is not an investigative agency, and that the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses is properly constituted to investigate any possible breaches of the Election Finances Reform Act and to initiate any charges. Indeed, a private citizen can initiate a charge, except that the legislation makes it necessary for that person to obtain the consent of the commission.

I might say further, with respect to matters that were drawn to our attention, these matters were drawn to our attention after the limitation period had expired in relation to the initiation of any charges.

BELL CANADA CASE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, on April 12, 1979, in response to a question posed by the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), I indicated that I had asked my staff to obtain a report on the incident referred to wherein an accused person prevailed upon Bell Canada to connect a telephone in his office, said phone being an extension to that of the victim of a criminal offence.

As the accused is appealing his conviction and sentence, it would be inadvisable for me to comment on the case in detail. But, inasmuch as the evidence was led in open court, I can indicate that the accused person did in fact pose as a young lady's husband and succeeded in having Bell install an extension phone in his office.

The accused person, by virtue of a previous social relationship with the victim, was able to gain access to her apartment and, with the assistance of an unknown female accomplice, was able to convince Bell employees, when a check was made by them, that the request was authentic and that the holder of the telephone number in question did in fact wish to have an extension placed in her husband's office.

This extension was in effect for approximately 11 days, and the extension telephone and other equipment were seized by the police during the investigation of an offence of counselling to commit murder.

Since the accused was convicted and was sentenced to a lengthy jail term in the penitentiary, and because the evidence of the deception practised on the telephone company was led in court, it was decided not to lay a separate charge with respect to this incident. Undoubtedly, this deceit practised by the accused was taken into account by the presiding judge in sentencing the accused on the main charge.

I understand the police have brought the matter to the attention of Bell and in similar applications for extensions in the future we trust Bell will govern itself accordingly and take extra precautions to ensure it is actually the subscriber who is requesting the installation of the extension.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Attorney General's response, but does he not feel something more than a trust in Bell Canada is indicated in a case where they would put an extension on a phone without ensuring the phone, in fact, was the subscriber's phone and that the subscriber approved of that extension? Does he not think he has to exercise more than a trust?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know what the honourable member has in mind in relation to the jurisdiction I should attempt to exercise over Bell, but I can indicate there is no question from the evidence that rather a clever deceit was practised, so far as Bell was concerned, and as a result this extension phone was put in place, as the honourable member well knows, having brought it to my attention.

Bell Canada, firstly, having been advised of the deceit that was practised upon that company, and secondly, knowing that that deceit was part of an offence of conspiracy to commit murder, I think it would naturally follow that, having been apprised of these details, Bell would take greater care in the future to avoid a repetition of that type of deceit. I would be curious to know what further the honourable member would like me to do so far as Bell is concerned, the police having already brought this situation to the company's attention.

Mrs. Campbell: I'll advise the minister.

Mr. Speaker: I think in the future when ministers have an answer that lengthy, it should be done by way of ministerial statements. Do you have another?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have another statement of the same length in reply to a question by the member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Speaker: Go ahead with it. I'll add to the question period.

ST. LAWRENCE STARCH DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) raised a question about the involvement of the Peel Regional Police in the strike at St. Lawrence Starch Company Limited. Since that time I have received a report on the matter and am able to make the following comments.

The Ontario Police Commission has developed standard procedure for municipal and regional police forces to deal with labour disputes. When a police force becomes aware of an impending strike and there is information that suggests there may be a confrontation between management and the union, the police liaison officer discusses with both management and the union leaders the role the police play in such matters.

Legal picketing is discussed, as are the various sections of the Criminal Code that are occasionally violated by either side in the dispute. The officer stresses that the police are not available to assist either side but only to ensure that peace and order are maintained. He also explains that the police presence at a strike will be only for the purpose of preventing incidents of violence or ensuring that streets, roads and access to the establishment do not become blocked.

When the Peel Regional Police force became aware of the impending strike at the St. Lawrence Starch Company, a liaison officer visited the premises on April 6. The officer made arrangements to meet with the company manager, Mr. Fred Troughton, and Mr. William Spencer, the representative of Local 410 of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union. The meeting was held on neutral ground in the employees' lunchroom.

At that time the officer explained what the role of the police would be during the strike and provided both sides with copies of the relevant passages from the Criminal Code. Both union and management, I am advised, expressed their desire to co-operate with the police and expressed their appreciation for the time and trouble taken by the police to acquaint them with the relevant information.

I am further advised that the ensuing strike at St. Lawrence Starch Company premises on Lake Shore Road in Mississauga has not been unusually disorderly. There have been approximately five charges laid. I want to add further that the police presence at the scene has consisted of one officer in a marked police car. I believe the situation has been handled reasonably and professionally by the Peel Regional Police. Both union and management have generally conducted themselves responsibly.

I want to conclude by stating that the Ontario Police Commission ensures on a continuing basis that police forces are provided with adequate guidelines for dealing with situations involving strikes and lock-outs.

TRAINING SCHOOL CLOSURES

Mr. Cureatz: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. In the light of the closing of the Pine Ridge School and in the light of the fact that the Participation House group over a year ago submitted to his ministry a proposal for using one of the facilities there, would his ministry now consider funding the Participation House project group and permitting it to use of one of the facilities?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, in each of the communities where training schools are to be closed we have been engaged, in so far as we were able prior to this date, in seeking within government alternative uses of those facilities, both at the provincial and at the federal level. I have had discussions with the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson), who will have responsibility for the future use of the facilities. I have been assured by him that we will have the co-operation of his ministry in co-operating with the communities in seeking to find alternative uses.

I am advised by him that the policy currently in place would require, prior to any direct consideration being given to local groups, that the ministry first seek alternatives within government and then seek alternatives at the level of local government, following which the facilities would then be open to alternatives from private groups.

I can assure the honourable member we will certainly follow that course and offer any assistance we can, along with the Ministry of Government Services in finding alternatives.

An hon. member: What about Burwash and Grandview?

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, following the minister's announcement of the closing of the training schools at Lindsay and Bowmanville I would like to ask him whether he has a report on program options. If he has, has it been released and if not, when will it be?

What are his real alternatives for these young people living in a community setting? If the alternatives are group homes, does the minister feel there are sufficiently trained personnel to staff such homes, both at present and in the immediate future?

Hon. Mr. Norton: In answer to the latter part of the question first, yes, I believe that in so far as the reference would be to the number of group homes at present in operation, there are adequate numbers of trained staff available and employed in providing that service.

I would emphasize, though, that the transition in terms of the reallocation of funds within the children's services division from the existing training-school operations to the alternatives is not something that is going to happen overnight. There will be a phased-in period and in the course of that we are not going to be faced with placing large numbers of children or, necessarily, any children, immediately back into a community setting for whom a more appropriate setting would be a training school.

I would emphasize that even with the closings I have announced today, we will still have approximately 50 per cent excess capacity within the existing training schools. So there will be no need for us to return children unnecessarily to the community because we don't have the accommodation for them in training schools. But as a result of the closings, the funds that are freed up by that for the alternatives, both in the community and in improved programming and physical plant within the remaining training school system, will then be applied to those purposes. This has been the case over the last couple of years, as we have improved the community resources for children.

I don't think there should be any concern on the part of the communities that there will be any need to attempt to absorb children they cannot, and are not equipped to, cope with.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister tell me how many total employees will be affected at Lindsay and Bowmanville combined? Will the minister give me his assurance that every effort will be made to accommodate the long-term employees at the Kawartha Lakes School who have invested in property and who are a vital part of that community?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Absolutely. As I indicated in the statement, beginning at two o'clock this afternoon, the senior officials from the ministry began meetings both in Lindsay and in Bowmanville with the staff of each of the training schools discussing questions of alternative locations and assistance that would be offered to the staff.

The number of persons who are affected in Lindsay—classified or full-time, long-term staff—is 55. There are also approximately, I believe, 27 unclassified staff who had been hired on shorter-term contracts. In Bowmanville, there are 66 full-time, classified staff and 26 unclassified staff.

We have assured all the classified staff we will offer them alternative employment within the ministry or within government. In some instances, it will be in the remaining training schools. In other instances it will be alternatives for them in terms of employment in community-based programs that are being developed or are developed.

We cannot make that assurance to the unclassified staff. I believe it was the understanding at the time of hiring that we would not be able to offer them the longer-term job security. But we are prepared to say to them that once we have assured the relocation of the classified staff, we will lend every assistance we can to the unclassified in terms of future employment as well.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, further to the minister's statement, and by way of supplementary, since this is the second phase of the training-school review program, whatever happened to the small, secure facility to provide treatment for severely disturbed adolescents to be located in Oakville and which was promised in the original February 1978 statement announcing the program? It was originally promised by the Provincial Secretary for Social Development in November 1976. Has the minister made any progress in obtaining a small, secure facility to provide treatment for severely disturbed adolescents?

Hon. Mr. Norton: As the honourable member knows, certain difficulties were encountered.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) torpedoed it because he didn't want it in his own riding.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The Minister of Transportation and Communications did not torpedo it, I can assure the member of that.

An hon. member: He sat on it.

Mr. Cassidy: He tabled it.

Mr. Samis: He stonewalled it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think the member is also aware that there were certain concerns in that community that made it very difficult at that time for us to proceed. I can assure the member though that on giving further consideration to that project we hope to proceed with a model that would allow for the development of a small, secure unit in each of the regions of the province.

For example, if one looks at the physical structure of the buildings that we have, as stated in today's announcement, chosen to retain, for example, in Cobourg, the relatively new buildings that have been built there in the last few years are on the model of separate cottages which would lend itself to several levels of security. It's our intention—

Mr. McClellan: It's been almost three years.

Mr. Martel: You guys live on announcements.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —that provision can be made within that facility for the more highly secure and intensive treatment unit for disturbed adolescents.

Mr. McClellan: Some of us reread your old announcements, you know. You keep recycling your old programs.

ATTACK ON UNION OFFICIAL

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. Samis: Come on, Roy.

Mr. Breugh: He's down in the penthouse.

Mr. Samis: He's burning magazines over there.

Mr. di Santo: Given the considerable concern created among the members of Local 1 of the Bricklayers, Masons Independent Union of Canada as a result of the attack on John Meiorin, business manager of the local and president of the Confederation of Canadian Unions, on March 7, 1979, has the minister ordered an investigation into the case; and, if he has, has the investigation led to the identification of the authors of the attack?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, my information is that there is a very complete police investigation currently under way. A number of union leaders from across the country have corresponded with me in relation to their concerns following this attack. I haven't had any report from the police officials as to the success to date of their investigation, but I do know that an extensive investigation has been made and is still current.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: Given the nature of the attack and the position of the person attacked, Mr. Meiorin, can the Attorney General undertake that the investigation will be intensified and will he report to the House and table the results?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will obtain a further report as to the nature of the investigation and attempt to satisfy myself that—as I believe that it is—it is in fact being carried on in an intensive fashion. I will report to the House in due course as to the results of the investigation.

EASTERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. In view of the fact that negotiations have been going on for some time with the federal government in relation to the eastern Ontario development agreement, I would like the Treasurer to bring us up to date as to exactly where those negotiations now stand.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Set up.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to re-establish those negotiations. A week or two ago in a telephone interview Mr. Lessard, who was then at his home in Alma, told me that he had to withdraw, I think it was the $10,000,000 industrial stimulation package from the eastern Ontario development agreement. Our staff reviewed the implications of that and felt we really needed that package in the eastern Ontario agreement or else we would have very little left.

We have since then received some indication that ARDA agreements for drainage already started would be honoured, but little else.

As of this morning I couldn't find any response at all from the DREE group. My staff told me they had run into a brick wall and were getting no response at all in their attempt to negotiate there.

[Later (3:30):]

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Last Thursday the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) rose on a point of privilege and questioned, "the credibility of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) in regard to my efforts last Friday to obtain copies of Ontario Hydro's internal significant event report."

I am sorry the honourable member isn't here. He was not here on Tuesday either, but I would like to respond to this question.

Mr. Mancini: He is back home working for his constituents.

Mr. Gaunt: I will tell him all about it, Jim.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Good.

Actually what transpired was that on April 6 the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) asked the Premier (Mr. Davis) a question about nuclear plant safety. The Premier answered and also said the minister would pursue this further.

The Leader of the Opposition asked me a question on April 6, to which I responded, and a supplementary, to which I responded, which had to do with Hydro's Babcock boilers; and then the member for Grey-Bruce asked a supplementary:

"The Babcock boilers? I have knowledge that there is a series of happenings with dates on them that is of great concern to me as a citizen. If he"—meaning me—"has seen these reports, would the minister be so good as to supply the Leader of the Opposition and both parties with copies of these reports as they come out. I know they're classified as secret, but what is more important at this point than that the members of the Legislature know what's going on in this very serious field?"

In replying to the Leader of the Opposition a few moments before that, I had said: "I am aware of the reports but I don't see them on a regular basis. They are mainly of a technical nature. They are given to the Atomic Energy Control Board, I believe, on roughly a daily basis and then they are filed in the public reference library so that any member wishing to see them can go down to the Hydro library and see them."

After the member for Grey-Bruce had asked that question, the Premier said, according to Hansard on April 6: "They are down in the Hydro library. Read them on the weekend." Then I said: "As I said, all the member has to do is walk down the street and they are in Hydro's reference library. They are not secret reports."

Subsequently, in the honourable member's question about privilege—

Mr. McClellan: How do you turn him off?

Mr. Conway: I don't know. There's got to be a plug.

Mr. McClellan: Somebody unplug the speaker.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —he said: "I have a point of privilege regarding the credibility of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) in regard to my efforts last Friday to obtain copies of Ontario Hydro's internal significant event report. Last Friday the Minister of Energy denied that these reports were classified secret and at any time anyone could go into Hydro and get a copy. I will read from Hansard what was said."

Mr. McClellan: Take your time.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Subsequently, he said: "Following this, I went to my office and called the minister's office and asked the exec for copies of the report. He said: 'Yes, the minister says you can have them right away. I will send them right over.'

"I waited for a long time in my office. Nothing happened. I phoned back. They said: 'There is a meeting arranged for you to go down to Hydro. You are supposed to meet this exec under the information board.'

"I did that, I waited there for a long time. Finally, the cloak and dagger started. For the next 45 minutes I met four other top execs who examined me and asked me questions. Finally, after 45 minutes, they took me to the top technocrat who wanted me to pinpoint a happening I wanted to see about."

Mr. Speaker, my understanding is my office received a telephone call from the member for Grey-Bruce that afternoon, shortly after the question period. My secretary, who answered the call, said Mr. Sargent said: "I have just talked with Mr. Auld and he has said I could have a copy of the papers." Mrs. Marshall said: "I'm not familiar with the papers you refer to, Mr. Sargent, but we will call our energy communications officer and arrange that they be delivered to your office as soon as possible, since Mr. Auld has agreed that you should have them."

I just refer back to Hansard. I did not say the honourable member could have them, I said they were available to be seen at Hydro.

My secretary called the information officer from the Ministry of Energy who indicated he would get in touch with the honourable member. Eventually, he did. He suggested he go to Hydro and he would be met there and could indicate what he wished to see.

I understand he was met there by an information officer from Hydro. Hydro had some delay in finding a person technically competent to in effect explain and understand the notes, which are of a highly technical nature. The Hydro policy is that those notes not be removed from the library, because they are highly technical and technical people are required to explain them. Explanations were given as requested by the honourable member.

REPORTS

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr2, An Act to revive the Portuguese Club of London Inc., the title of which is to read an Act to revive Portuguese Club of London Incorporated.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the actual cost of printing, be remitted on the said bill.

Report adopted.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaunt from the standing social development committee presented the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Resolved that supply in the following amounts and to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Culture and Recreation be granted Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980: ministry administration program $7,611,300; heritage conservation program $18,735,700; arts support program $38,603,000; citizenship and multiculturalism support program $8,923,500; libraries and community information program $143,436,200; sports and fitness program $20,714,000; ministry capital support program $51,150,100.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE TRAVEL TO KINGSTON

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing resources development committee be authorized to travel to Kingston to visit the Urban Transportation Development Corporation test site on Wednesday, April 25, 1979; and that two and a half hours be credited against the time allocated for the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications; and that provisions of section 66 of the Legislative Assembly Act be not applicable.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

SIMCOE DAY ACT

Mr. G. E. Smith moved first reading of Bill 63, An Act respecting Simcoe Day.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. G. E. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as in previous bills, the purpose is to change the name of the public holiday celebrated in many municipalities on the first Monday in August from Civic Holiday to Simcoe Day in honour of John Graves Simcoe, who was appointed first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada on September 12, 1791, and who convened the first Legislative Assembly and established the capital of the province at York, now Toronto.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Breithaupt moved first reading of Bill 64, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, this is a re-introduction of my bill in the last session, and the purpose of the bill is to provide for the appointment of a curator of Queen's Park. The curator of Queen's Park would be responsible for advising the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly and the Lieutenant Governor in Council concerning the conservation, protection and preservation of the heritage at Queen's Park.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the interim answers to questions 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 126 and 127 standing on the Notice Paper. I wish to table the answer to question 121; and the interim answer to question 114 standing on the Notice Paper. At the same time I wish to table the answers to questions 111, 112, 115, 117, 118, 119, 120, 124 and 125; and the interim answers to questions 116, 122 and 123 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1104.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt. Applause.

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and a special thanks to my colleagues who have done what they were told to do.

This is a good time for a New Democrat to be responding to the budget of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), not because of the ammunition we have with which to respond but because it is a good feeling in general in Ontario today to be a New Democrat. Ever since a year ago, when we elected a new leader, we have gone onward and upward. We saw, just a couple of weeks ago, the election of Colin Isaacs and Richard Johnston to this chamber, both of whose presence will be felt.

When occasionally I ramble through the back alleys of bureaucracy around Queen's Park, the word I hear from the bureaucrats, many of whom are in highly placed positions in the civil service, is that the Liberal Party in Ontario peaked early and it's all downhill from now on for them; that the Conservatives under the benign neglect of the Premier (Mr. Davis) are withering on the vine; and that tomorrow belongs to New Democrats. So I serve notice to them: "Move aside; we are coming through."

Mr. Nixon: That and 60 cents will get you a ride on the subway.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would know—certainly the Treasurer would know if he were here; and I understand he is coming back—that preparing a budget is an onerous task, and I can assure you that responding to one in a serious way is also an onerous task. Whatever my input is today, it would not be as good as it is without the assistance of some people who are very important to me: namely, my assistant, Claudine Salama; and two researchers in our research group, in the economic area, each of whom has more cumulative knowledge about economic matters than the Treasurer and I combined: Anne Martin and Sym Gill, who have done a yeoman job.

Mr. Samis: Neither one of them sold cars, either; or tampered with odometers.

Mr. Laughren: I shall try to proceed despite my colleagues. Seriously, it really is a pleasure to be out and about in Ontario these days. No matter where you go in Ontario, you see the strength of this party. In eastern Ontario we have our leader and the member for Cornwall (Mr. Samis), and the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes), who is doing an excellent job in this chamber and back in her riding. When you go to western Ontario you have our member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall); and a little closer, the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart). No one knows more about budget matters dealing with municipalities than my colleague from Welland-Thorold. He has a great deal of knowledge about that. In northern Ontario, of course—well need

I say anything about the quality of the members from northern Ontario?

Mr. Makarchuk: Self-evident.

Mr. Laughren: Perhaps a special comment should be made about our critic from northern Ontario, the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman), who has the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) on the run daily. The Minister of Northern Affairs never knows when he is going to find the member for Algoma hounding him about one problem or another in any part of northern Ontario.

Then of course there is the Metropolitan Toronto area. I see the Liberals immediately turning all green with envy when I talk about representation in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Nixon: How can we turn green with envy? We have the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) on our side.

Mr. Laughren: It is with enormous self-discipline that I refrain from responding to that.

Mr. Gaunt: A wise course.

Mr. Kerrio: You daren't; she is bigger than you.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I shall—

Mr. Makarchuk: You will pay for that one.

Mr. Martel: I am sending her that Hansard.

Mr. Laughren: I shall attempt to address myself and this chamber to the problems of the Ontario economy.

The New Democrats regard the annual Ontario budget as both an economic and a social document. We regard it as an opportunity to either reinforce the existing economic and social system, or to effect changes in it. This budget obviously has done the former. I have never seen an Ontario budget that changed so little, yet so strongly reinforced an economic system that rewards and punishes in such perverse fashion.

I shall indicate in some detail the considerable shortcomings I see in the budget. But first, it is appropriate to lay before this Legislature a vision of the future towards which we believe a provincial budget should take us. My criticisms are based on the degree to which this budget fails to provide the proper direction and stimulus towards such a future.

By the way, I am happy to see the Treasurer here. I hope that he can stay and absorb a little.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't say. I can't guarantee the absorption.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, New Democrats are optimistic.

Mr. Martel: He absorbs very little.

Mr. Laughren: We believe Ontario has enormous potential to provide its citizens with a healthy, prosperous and satisfying life, but we also believe that such opportunities will not be fulfilled unless our social and economic priorities are changed.

The Davis government, even more so than those headed by John Robarts or Leslie Frost, is lacking in leadership that provides us with direction and goals. It is a sad commentary on this administration that it hearkens back to the days of Leslie Frost, rather than looking forward to a better Ontario.

New Democrats have a vision of a better Ontario; that vision includes a determination to build an egalitarian society; the determination to build a full employment economy and the determination to make our own economic decisions here in Canada, to build a healthy manufacturing sector and to be industrially more self-reliant. Those are our visions. In those visions, we put first and foremost our determination to build a social system that is not designed solely for the young and the swift. We firmly believe that individual initiative and personal growth can best be realized and rewarded within an economic system that insists on equality.

This government—and both the Premier and Treasurer are its strongest advocates—believes that we need a healthy private sector if we are to provide the social services that people need. This government will never build an egalitarian society because there will always be other priorities. The Treasurer believes that social services can be enhanced only if the private sector creates sufficient wealth to do so. We oppose this residual or trickle-down approach to vital social services.

New Democrats understand, of course, that social services are not free, but at the same time we know that the Tory free enterprise theory will always ensure an inequitable tax system and perverse distribution of wealth. The evidence is not even debatable. Since the Second World War, almost 35 years ago, the only redistribution of income has been to the top 20 per cent. Of course, this has occurred while the bottom 40 per cent has been deluged with a plethora of income support programs.

Never has a Treasurer so graphically demonstrated that he has no commitment to redistributing income. His abolishment of the succession duty tax, which applied only to the top three per cent of estates, is a good example but by no means the only one. Thus we have a budget that raises OHIP premiums, which everyone pays regardless of income, while the beneficiaries of the wealthiest three per cent receive tax relief. The Treasurer would have us believe that this kind of action is necessary in order to encourage investment in Ontario. He is wrong.

New Democrats want to build an Ontario economy that distributes income in an equitable way. We want an Ontario that distributes its wealth fairly, whether our wealth is increasing or even decreasing. We think that can be done and we would introduce budgets that would lead us in that direction.

Secondly, New Democrats want to build a full-employment economy. The social and economic costs of unemployment are unacceptable to us. We know as well that Ontario citizens will be impatient with political parties that ignore current problems while planning for and building a better future, and so they should.

That is why we accept the need for short-term measures that resolve some of our problems while we implement a longer-term strategy to rebuild Ontario. In the short run the government has an obligation to tackle our unemployment problem; 319,000 Ontario citizens, including 145,000 youths, are looking for work and this Treasurer has offered them absolutely nothing. His entire job creation program consists of 70,000 summer jobs for students.

When this government comes face to face with its own ineptitude over unemployment, how does it respond? First, we had the former Treasurer raising the level of unemployment that is acceptable; a wishful reaction that imagines away the problem. The present Treasurer at least acknowledges that there is an employment problem, but fails to create a single full-time job in this budget.

A year ago my leader laid before this Legislature a series of short-term job creation proposals. These proposals, if implemented, would create 45,000 jobs. None of them was simply a make-work project, all would have had beneficial social and economic effects, but this government chose to ignore all of them.

I would like to reiterate those proposals at this time: a shared cost program on apprenticeship training, 10,000 young people at a cost of $40,000,000; a home insulation program, 2,300 jobs at a cost of $10,000,000; a solar heating subsidy, 1,500 jobs at a cost of $30,000,000 a co-operative and non-profit housing program of capital grants, 14,000 jobs at a cost of $35,000,000; more assisted housing for families and senior citizens, 8,000 jobs at a cost of $55,000,000; a $25,000,000 expansion of the Ontario home renewal program, 1,500 jobs; special grants for hard services in northern Ontario, $25,000,- 000 for 1,000 jobs; and $150,000,000 to accelerate provincial and municipal capital projects for 7,500 new jobs.

That is a reasonable, thoughtful and immediate response to our unemployment problems. Such proposals would not only create 45,000 useful jobs, but the spinoff benefits would have added another 90,000 jobs. Such a program would not in itself put all our unemployment back to work, but it would have been a good beginning.

Thirdly, the NDP has a vision of an Ontario that has a viable manufacturing sector and is industrially more self-reliant. We believe that we can never determine our own priorities as long as the economic decisions are made elsewhere. The costs of a weak manufacturing sector and continuing dependence on imports to the Ontario economy would be devastating in both social and economic terms. At stake in the rebuilding process are several hundred thousand jobs, our massive current account deficit, the creation of good jobs for our people, a healthy, diversified tax base and industrial self-reliance when our non-renewable resources are depleted.

The task of achieving self-reliance and rebuilding our manufacturing industry, is difficult, of course, because of the US domination of our economy. It is difficult also because the problems in Ontario's economy are not cyclical; they will not go away when the value of the dollar declines or when our labour force ceases to grow so quickly. Our problems are of a structural nature and thus require a long-term economic plan.

One wouldn't think the Treasurer needs reminding that the Ontario economy is in fundamental structural disequilibrium. His own ministry prepared a devastating report as the Ontario government's submission to the federal government on the repercussions of the GATT negotiations. However, I will remind him of a few facts.

We lead the industrialized world in the duty-free import of manufactured goods. We lead the industrialized world in the importation of high technology goods—54 per cent of the market in the mid-1970s. Canada's share of world manufactured exports has declined dramatically in the five years between 1970 and 1975 from about six per cent to about two per cent. In Ontario, our value of manufacturing shipments in 1978 grew at a rate slower than any of the other provinces. Perhaps the Treasurer should reconsider some of the remarks he has made on the manufacturing sector.

The Canadian current account deficit in 1978 was $5,200,000,000. Even though we had a $3,400,000,000 surplus on goods, it was not manufactured goods. The Canadian deficit on fully-manufactured end products is $12,000,000,000, a record high, and it has risen dramatically in recent years.

Mr. Swart: What a testimonial to this government.

Mr. Laughren: Research and development in Canada has declined from 1.3 per cent of gross national product in 1969 to about one per cent in 1977, a 30 per cent reduction.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You're a gloom and doom artist.

Mr. Laughren: Today our research and development spending ranks 14th in OECD countries, just ahead of Greece and Turkey. The US industry spends 40 times more on research and development.

Ontario's manufacturing industry is 55 per cent foreign owned, with some sectors running much higher; such as chemicals at 82 per cent, rubber at 99 per cent and electrical at 74 per cent. The decline in manufacturing employment in the period 1974-77, in virtually every city in Ontario, is shocking. Recoveries in 1978, which the Treasurer is so fond of talking about, did not make up for that loss in many cases.

The New Democrats understand that without a strong government presence in the economy all our goals cannot be realized. We know that the day has gone when governments can stand on the sidelines and count on the invisible hand of the marketplace to shape events in our favour. We have seen that invisible hand shape our economy that has made us inordinately dependent upon our natural resources and foreign capital.

This Treasurer knows that our economic problems require government intervention. That is why he has introduced the Employment Development Fund, but he comes so reluctantly to the whole idea of intervention in the marketplace that his programs are apologies for their very existence.

The Treasurer has a responsibility to provide leadership and direction in the private as well as the public sector, but he has abdicated this responsibility to strike a balance between policies designed to stimulate the private sector and those designed to protect and improve the quality of life for our citizens. Thus we have a deterioration in the quality of health care. At the same time, costs to the patient are increasing while cash incentives are given to the Ford Motor Company and others.

The Treasurer's hesitant, contradictory statements and policies have allowed his colleague, the lean and hungry Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), to move in quickly and implement programs based solely on the needs of the private sector.

We New Democrats do not believe that Ontario's interests have been well served by either its director, this government, or by the cast of characters who have dominated the economic stage for so long. That is why we must intervene. New Democrats know that rebuilding our economy will not be easy. We know that we cannot lead the world in all our endeavours, but we know as well that we must, first of all, identify the areas of the economy that offer the most potential to build upon our natural strength, to replace imports and to provide export opportunities over the long run. Until that is done, we can only flounder.

This government is floundering in its half-hearted attempts to develop an industrial strategy. This government is floundering because it does not know where it wants Ontario's economy to be in 10 or 20 years. Any such plan cannot be designed or implemented overnight, but we must begin to lay the foundation now for a healthy economic structure in the years ahead.

The NDP believes that we can achieve full employment. We believe our economy can be healthy and relevant with a major share of high-technology manufacturing. We believe that Ontario can play a major role in reducing the growing current account deficit that is directly the cause of our devalued dollar. This cannot happen as long as imports meet most of our demand for manufactured goods.

We believe Ontario can lead the way in the development and use of renewable energy sources, such as wood products, solar and wind. We are in an excellent position to pioneer a new method of home insulation as a commitment to conservation. We can also be world leaders in pollution-control equipment.

New Democrats believe that we, in Ontario, can reap the benefits from our mineral resources, and that much more processing and refining can be done here. We believe that much of the machinery used in Ontario's nickel, copper, zinc and gold mines, and the machinery used in Saskatchewan's potash mines, Alberta's oil wells and in heavy construction projects can be produced in Ontario.

We believe food processing that will reduce our import dependence can be done in Ontario. We believe that we can produce the consumer electrical products so much in demand in this country and get a fair share of the booming electronics market.

The Minister of Northern Affairs made one of his normally irrelevant interjections a few minutes ago when he said we were the gloom and doom party. What I have just been telling you is that we have enormous optimism for the future of the province of Ontario, but not with this Treasurer in that seat.

The Treasurer knows we have problems and he knows that they will not be solved without government intervention, so he has reluctantly agreed to budget $200,000,000 for the government's industrial incentives program.

New Democrats have never backed away from government intervention, but we condemn the way this government is proceeding. This government is prepared to give out $200,000,000, and more over the years, on an ad hoc basis. They are giving the money without a long-term economic plan. It is quite conceivable that this government would give out $200,000,000 worth of grants, which will be spread out over virtually the entire economy in each of the next 20 years. At the end of those 20 years we will have provided over $4,000,000,000, and I suspect the result will not be obvious to anyone. We will still have a truncated, branch-plant economy; we will still have massive trade deficits and the deindustrialization process will be continuing.

How is it logical to provide industrial incentives to the agriculture, tourism and manufacturing sectors when you do not have any idea of what role you want those sectors to play in a revitalized Ontario?

We know our manufacturing sector is in trouble, and since we cannot possibly solve all the problems at once we want to be selective. We must select those industries that have growth potential, that are high technology, that have a high import replacement factor and that dovetail with an overall provincial economic plan.

It is outrageous to ask us to approve a budget that toys with jobs, our industrial future and the balance of trade while spending public money.

We say to you, as clearly as we know how, any incentive program must have the following guidelines:

One, an economic plan must be in place to indicate where we want to be in the next 10 or 20 years. Specific sectors of the economy must be selected and a major commitment made to ensure their growth and success.

Two, repatriation of the economy must be part of our economic plan; and incentives must be designed and provided with this goal in mind.

Three, a central consideration must be import replacement. Replacing imports in the short run and stimulating exports in the long run should be a major consideration in any incentives program.

Four, major commitments should be made to specific sectors at any given time so that the incentives program is not dispensed in shotgun-like fashion over a number of sectors with no real impact on any of them. A sector should be selected and pursued vigorously in order to achieve the goals of self-reliance and job creation.

Five, incentives provided to the private sector should have built into them an individually-tailored planning agreement based on a combination of equity participation, job guarantees for Canadians, environmental protection, research and development guarantees, buy-Canadian commitments and reinvestment of profits in Ontario.

Six, an incentive program must not be allowed to exacerbate the lopsided development of Ontario. Regional development must be a major consideration whenever practical.

Finally, a comprehensive employment impact study must be carried out before any applications are approved.

Those are some guidelines we think make sense, and that we think the Treasurer should take and work into his employment development fund.

We in the NDP would select one or two key industries at a time and move in an aggressive, selective way, based on the criteria I have just outlined. Nowhere in the criteria for funding in the Treasurer's program is there mention of the key manufacturing industries that need to be strengthened.

[4:00]

Let me tell the Treasurer what he should be doing with the Employment Development Fund. He should select a key manufacturing sector such as auto parts, machinery, electrical products, transportation equipment, or food processing. He should select a sector and proceed to rebuild it; to replace imports, to invest in research and development, and to reinvest earnings in this country. By concentrating on one sector at a time we will begin to correct our structural deficiencies, and in the process we may even be able to do something about stimulating our underdeveloped regions in Ontario. I shall give the Treasurer some specific examples in a moment.

The Treasurer's criteria are an invitation for every branch plant, every manufacturer, indeed every business in Ontario to join a lineup at the door of the Employment Development Board. What nonsense. The strongest and most aggressive applicants will get the grants. Most of those are US subsidiaries.

If this Treasurer succeeds in strengthening the role of US subsidiaries in Ontario it will be an ironic tribute to him; he will have succeeded in making worse a problem most of us think he should be solving.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism talks ominously of making strong industries stronger. I find that ominous because I think I know what the minister has in mind. He intends to go with winners; and they tend to be in southern Ontario, and more specifically in the golden horseshoe.

I know what that means to regional development and I know too what it means for small, innovative, Canadian entrepreneurs. Not only will the Employment Development Fund ignore small business and regional development but it is singularly lacking in its main purpose, namely to create jobs.

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Mr. Laughren: Using the Ford incentive grant as an example—a $68,000,000 grant to create 2,600 jobs—the government's grant works out to $26,000 per job. Using that figure, the $200,000,000 fund will create 7,600 jobs.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's not fair.

Mr. Laughren: It's more than fair, because I think we've used the total value of the Ford plant—the $500,000,000—rather than the government money going into it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You didn't use the Ontario grant, you used the total grant; and you just took the end jobs in the one plant.

Mr. Laughren: The total grant, yes; that's what the grant was for

Mr. Wildman: It's even worse if we just use your figure.

Mr. Laughren: The arithmetic is right.

Mr. Foulds: We gave you the benefit of the doubt in all cases.

Mr. Swart: You didn't include the services in that figure.

Mr. Laughren: If the Treasurer's Employment Development Fund works out the way I've outlined, it will solve about 2.4 per cent of our unemployment problem in Ontario at the present time. I think that's why the Treasurer refuses to even speculate on how many jobs his employment fund will create; he knows the sum is embarrassingly low.

If my figures are wrong, let him tell us the correct figures.

Mr. Wildman: He doesn't even know what they are.

Mr. Laughren: Perhaps even more worrisome, is the evidence that the Treasurer and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism have already decided the fund will be used to protect existing jobs in the pulp and paper and other industries. Have they established that industrial dislocations as a result of the GATT negotiations will be such that they are setting up an adjustment fund that will protect jobs threatened by reduced tariffs? If so that's fine, but they have an obligation to be honest with us on the matter. We shall be monitoring the allocation of the fund, very carefully.

The New Democratic Party is particularly concerned about the government's virtual abandonment of regional development. Unemployment figures show a very real need for a regional development policy in Ontario. In February of this year northeastern Ontario had a 9.4 per cent unemployment rate. In eastern Ontario it was eight per cent. In the Peterborough area it was 9.2 per cent. In the Hamilton-Niagara area it was 10.7 per cent. In Windsor it was nine per cent. In St. Catharines it was 14.5 per cent; and in Sudbury 12.1 per cent.

As a matter of fact, in 1978 all areas except Toronto had an unemployment rate that was worse than in 1977. The minister's response is not to create a single full-time job in this budget.

Mr. Wildman: Typical.

Mr. Laughren: Given those figures, the government's Employment Development Fund must not be implemented so as to aggravate the already substantial regional disparities in Ontario. The fund must be used to stimulate the slow-growth areas, while at the same time make a serious attempt to rebuild particular industrial sectors.

We believe the government should use the fund to solve a number of problems at the same time. We believe it can be done, and I will illustrate with a couple of examples.

It is generally conceded that Ontario needs a mining machinery industry, that the north needs a more diversified economy, and that our deficit of manufactured goods—over $12,000,000,000 in this country last year—is too high.

A mining machinery industry located in northern Ontario would help us to meet those needs. Canada is the third largest mining producer in the world and the second largest consumer of mining machinery, but we are the largest importer of mining machinery in the world. The share of the market captured by imports was 59 per cent in 1965; it was 91 per cent in 1978. The job loss represented by these imports is staggering. Given the fact that spin off employment results from manufacturing jobs, we estimate that as many as 18,000 jobs are being lost. For Ontario, where about 70 per cent of all machinery is purchased, that represents about 12,000 jobs.

In 1977, imports of machinery and equipment used for mining, oil and gas and excavating, amounted to $800,000,000. There is no reason why Ontario industry cannot displace a large proportion of these imports. Other countries have done it. Sweden, Finland, Britain and Germany all have healthy mining machinery industries. It is no coincidence, of course, that 70 per cent of the Canadian machinery industry is foreign-owned, that the bulk of our imports are from the United States and that the United States has a trade surplus in mining machinery.

Let me quote from the Ontario select committee report on natural resources foreign ownership and economic development. I would remind the Treasurer that his colleagues from his party sat on that committee as well. I quote from that report:

"There is scope for the development of a significant, Canadian-controlled presence in the mining machinery and equipment industry. The committee recommends that the government actively encourage the development of Canadian-controlled firms in the mining machinery and equipment industry through the provision of loans and research assistance and through purchasing policies.

"The committee recommends that policies be developed to improve the performance of mining machinery and equipment firms in terms of exports, research and development and increasing Canadian value added.

"Furthermore, the committee is of the view that if the private sector does not respond to the policies designed to encourage the development of the mining machinery and equipment industry, it may be appropriate for the government to become involved in this area directly."

Further on, the same select committee suggested, and I quote:

"The development of an indigenous mine machinery producing industry could be assisted, for example, through the purchasing policies of a provincial mining company. Also, the provision of equity and/or working capital could provide venture funding for one or more new Canadian-owned companies."

A study done for the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in 1976 suggested the same thing. It recommended:

"Government-controlled development and manufacture of new process equipment. This could be achieved through the use of the Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology to develop new technology, with manufacturing and marketing functions done either by a crown corporation or existing equipment suppliers."

I am telling the Treasurer this but, if he had been listening to my colleague from Sudbury East these many years, he would already have absorbed that information.

The New Democratic Party believes that it is irresponsible to allow the mining machinery industry to continue to shrink. We support direct government involvement in the mining machinery business through the establishment of a machine crown corporation to be financed by a fund set aside for this purpose from the revenue accruing from Ontario's natural resources. We have called such a fund the Ontario Tomorrow Fund.

If the private sector will not or cannot move, then the government itself has to see to it that a strong domestic service industry is built up around our strong primary industries. An NDP government would not tolerate more than 91 per cent of the market for resource machinery being provided by imports. And the capital investment needed to create jobs in mining machinery is much lower than it is for smelting or refining. The NDP has promoted northern cities—Sudbury, Thunder Bay and Sault Ste. Marie—as potential sites for a resource machinery complex. If the Treasurer needs any advice, the member for Algoma has a plan in his head for the development of all of northern Ontario which would put the Minister of Northern Affairs to shame.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Pie-in-the-sky.

Mr. Martel: Pie-in-the-sky? That's the trouble with you guys; you just tinker with the system, and it's in chaos now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What have you guys done in northern Saskatchewan?

Mr. Samis: Listen to the nattering nabob of negativism over there.

Mr. Wildman: It's strictly doom and gloom over there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Look at the mess you made in northern Manitoba.

Mr. Martel: Look at the mess you made in this province.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could restrain the gloom-and-doom Minister of Northern Affairs.

Mr. Samis: The nattering nabob.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I have to restrain the entire House. Order, please.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in the north is high, our trade deficits are staggering, and regions such as Sudbury are desperately in need of industrial development and diversification. We believe that a mining machinery complex in the north makes good sense on all three counts.

The Treasurer would be well advised to concentrate his efforts on making Ontario and Canada self-sufficient in mining machinery by the year 2000 or earlier. We have the world's greatest natural laboratory in Sudbury, we have a university which could become a centre for research and development, and we have a skilled and ready labour force. What we lack is a Treasurer who is willing to confront the problem and intervene in this specific industry where his private sector friends have so obviously failed.

He knows it is safer to spread his incentives around; so he does just that and prays for a slower growth in the labour force and for a boom in the United States economy. Knowing this Treasurer, he probably also prays for a lower value in the Canadian dollar.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At least I pray.

Mr. Foulds: Is that for your sins of commission or your sins of omission?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have both kinds. I'm human.

Mr. MacDonald: Really? You're very human all right.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I would give several examples of how we would run the employment development fund differently.

The building of a viable mining machinery sector is one way. The rebuilding of the food processing industry is another. Rebuilding this industry would provide jobs in the Niagara and southern Ontario regions; and if I'm lacking in expertise in this area, I would direct the Treasurer to my friend from Welland-Thorold.

For some time now, the National Farmers' Union and the Canadian Food and Allied Workers have been aware of Canada's declining position in fruit and vegetable trade as well as in other food products. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture has sounded the alarm to this government too.

The problem is not that Canada has ceased to be a food exporter, but that our exports are becoming more specialized. For years now, Canada's farmers have been pressed into producing for sale abroad more wheat, more of other grains, more oil seeds, and less of everything else, including meat, fruit, vegetables and dairy products. Ontario now has a 42 per cent deficiency in fresh fruits, including pears, peaches, grapes and apples; for all of these latter products our dependence on imports is growing, with no end in sight. From 11 per cent in 1965, imports as a percentage of Canadian food consumption had edged up to 13.4 per cent by 1976. This results in a loss of jobs for farmers, meat packers, fishermen, cannery workers and others. It also means a growing dependence for all of us on the availability and the cost of food produced in other countries.

Some time around the turn of the century, unless we adopt a new approach to our food system, the present policy will create an overall deficit in our food trade. We have already registered an overall trade deficit on processed food products between 1974 and 1976. As a nation we will be able to breakfast on our own milk, eggs and toast with margarine, but we'll have to send out for lunch and dinner. That says something.

The deterioration in trade of fabricated goods and end food products is especially serious. These areas are especially important to Ontario and to Ontarians working in these industries. In the end products sector, only four of the 12 major foods were in a trade surplus position by 1977. Unless this government takes drastic action, the prospects are for further deterioration in the 1980s.

We want to know what this government is going to do about the fact that Canada's perpetual trade deficit in processed fruit and vegetables is $300,000,000 and that imports account for 15 per cent of the market. We can grow 12 per cent of end products here. What about vegetable oil products, where imports capture 34 per cent of the market? Or confectioneries, where the trade deficit is $112,000,000? Or miscellaneous processed foods, where the trade deficit is $178,000,000.

We have estimated that imports of processed fruits and vegetables that can be produced in Canada—$200,000,000 worth in 1977—alone are costing Ontario 2,200 direct jobs and 4,400 spinoff jobs, for a total of 6,600 jobs. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture has similarly estimated that replacing the annual 50,000,000 pounds of cheese imports with domestic production would support 1,000 additional Canadian farm families.

Mr. Wildman: Does the member for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve) hear that?

Mr. Laughren: Does the honourable member hear that?

Food processing is a relatively labour-intensive industry.

Mr. Martel: Repeat that; the member missed it.

[4:15]

Mr. Laughren: I will repeat it for the member for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry: Replacing the annual 50,000,000 pounds of cheese imports with domestic production would support 1,000 additional Canadian farm families. Why doesn't the member tell the Treasurer to get off his seat and do something about it?

Mr. Villeneuve: Quota production is in Ottawa.

Mr. Samis: Don't blame it all on them now.

Mr. Laughren: A lot of the problem is here in Ontario and if the member is suggesting the Treasurer wait for those in Ottawa who presided over the decline, that is a pretty sad excuse for strategy for rebuilding the industry.

This is another industry where this government cannot try to shift the responsibility to the federal government.

Mr. Martel: Everything is Ottawa's fault.

Mr. Laughren: It is the segments of the food processing industry that are the most heavily concentrated in this province that are contributing most to the trade deficit. Ontario produces 40 per cent of all food and beverages; and produces 60 per cent of the $1,000,000,000 production in the fruit and vegetable processing sector, the industry in most severe trouble.

The food and beverage sector employs 10 per cent of Ontario's manufacturing labour force, approximately 90,000 people. Nearly 19,000 of those are employed in the fruit and vegetable sector; and this government says the problem is in Ottawa.

I want to talk about tomatoes, a crop every Ontarian associates with southwestern Ontario, just as they do peaches with Niagara. Since 1967 there have been no significant exports of this commodity. Imports on the other hand have quadrupled since 1967; $12,000,000 worth of tomatoes and $19,000,000 worth of tomato paste in 1977.

By 1976 the Canadian Food Processors' Association reported that 54 per cent of the market for tomatoes was met by imports. Our projection of this trend would lead to complete elimination of the domestic tomato canning industry by 1985. The canned tender fruits, canned mushrooms, potato processing, poultry eviscerating and beef sectors are also in major difficulty.

One of the things we have been trying to impress upon this government is the negative effect foreign ownership brings to this economy. While foreign ownership is relatively lower in this industry than others at 36 per cent, certain subsectors, especially end-food products, are heavily foreign owned. It is no coincidence that a high degree of foreign ownership directly correlates to trade deficits in these particular sectors. Nor is it a coincidence that these same sectors exhibit a high degree of monopoly control.

Together, agriculture and food is our biggest industry, yet they have been thoroughly neglected by the Ontario government. Examples are not hard to find. The estimates for the agriculture ministry in this year's budget show a miserly 1.1 per cent increase.

Promotional plans in Ontario supermarkets to buy domestic produce may have turned customers on with flashy posters, but we pose the question: what good is promotion if Canadian produce is not available at the supermarket, even in season?

We know the Ministry of Industry and Tourism set up a task force in the fruit and vegetable processing industry in Ontario. It is about time. As far back as 1962 a federal government study warned that many fruit canneries, the economic mainstay of the Niagara Peninsula, were in danger. My friend from Welland-Thorold now says there is only one left and it is owned by a multinational conglomerate. Now, a decade too late, we have a task force. Where was this government when it was needed?

The Ministry of Agriculture and Food's latest food land guidelines are just that, guidelines; and I quote from them: "Municipalities are encouraged to review and update their plans."

In other words, business more or less as usual. The entire thrust of this statement is to leave a matter of province-wide concern strictly to municipalities. Meanwhile, the amount of land available for growing food continues to drop.

To sum up, the Ontario government has no comprehensive food policy. It has closed its eyes to the strategic importance of food.

Mr. Wildman: Agriculture is not even mentioned in the budget.

Mr. Laughren: The NDP would develop a food policy which would provide a guarantee for a satisfactory level of income for the farmers, and fair and stable food prices for consumers.

As a top priority we would establish self-sufficiency in all foods, raw or processed, that we can produce ourselves in order to protect and create jobs in food processing and agriculture.

The NDP would take a public hand in food policy. The required public commitment to food self-sufficiency reaches out into industrial policy, and that is why I am stressing this particular sector to the Treasurer today.

An NDP government would treat food processing as a key manufacturing priority and move aggressively into planning agreements with food processors that would guarantee jobs, modernization and rationalization, but not more concentration. We would also do more basic crop research and explore the possibilities for alternative types of commercial food production, for example, to reduce energy use.

Two, the NDP would consider direct participation, through publicly-owned canneries for basic food commodities such as the critical fruit and vegetable processing area, especially where such canneries are nearly extinct.

Three, we would lobby against any move to enter into duty-free bilateral agreements with the USA that would further decrease our self-sufficiency in food. We would lobby for more protection where the long-term benefits in increased self-sufficiency warrant such action; for example, products such as canned tender fruit, canned tomatoes and mushrooms.

Four, the NDP would undertake moves to ensure future production. We would, through legislative action, move to reserve for farming all class one, two and three land, and special crop lands. Any alternative use of food land would be permitted only with the unanimous consent of local planning authorities, councils and provincial planning authorities, including the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

The NDP would ensure that the results of government producer initiatives were not lost in the corporate maze between farm gate and checkout counter. We would do this by reviewing the retail prices of all foods produced under government improved-income or marketing plans, and by outlawing predatory practices.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a food and agriculture policy.

Mr. Swart: By being in that government the member for Chatham-Kent moves agriculture in Canada backwards.

Mr. Kerrio: Everybody would work in the government.

Mr. Martel: He didn't mention the government, you dummy.

Mr. Kerrio: You couldn't save the country that way; use your noodle, will you.

Mr. Martel: I bet you couldn't even comprehend anything, you couldn't understand anything. You should go back to pre-kindergarten books and learn to read.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: I mean you're out of it; you're sick.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt has the floor.

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I have talked about two manufacturing sectors which need rebuilding. Both could benefit from a properly managed Employment Development Fund. They are examples of what can be done by government to rebuild our manufacturing industries.

There is another sector that is in a state of crisis. Government attention in this industry should not come in the form of tax concessions or incentive grants. I am speaking of a sector that instead—are you ready for this, Vince?—that instead needs direct public participation, a sector in which private enterprise has lost all credibility; and that sector, of course, is mineral resources.

This government's record as a guardian of our resources is simply unbelievable. For decades, the private sector has extracted the resources and done with them exactly as it pleased. In an act of hypocrisy, this government inserted section 113 into the Ontario Mining Act, stating that our minerals must be refined here. Then this government proceeds to grant exemptions with indecent haste.

Falconbridge has been mining nickel in the Sudbury area for 45 years and has yet to build a refinery there. Inco has a refinery but still ships about 20 per cent of its ores to Wales for further processing. And the Treasurer was a former Minister of Natural Resources.

As though that's not bad enough, last year this government gave Inco and Falconbridge permission to continue to ignore section 113, and as well decided to allow them to charge their offshore processing costs against Ontario operations. If ever a government was whipsawed by a couple of wealthy multinationals it is this government.

This Treasurer acts as though he is fearful of being judged harshly by the mining sector and has ingratiated himself by giving the big operators even more. He reduced the top marginal mining tax rate from 40 to 30 per cent. Only the three or four giants in the industry will benefit from this reduction. The Treasurer knows that. The Treasurer argues that he took these actions in order to encourage new exploration and development. What a joke. The Treasurer is being snickered at in every mining company board room in New York.

Last year, Inco officials who appeared before the select committee regarding the Sudbury layoffs told us their problems were caused by world markets, not taxation rates. In fact my colleague the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) and my colleague from Algoma were on the committee and can verify that.

The mining companies say one day that the problem is world markets, not taxation; and the next day they are asking for another concession or a tax allowance.

I suspect that they saw the Treasurer coming and suckered him into yet another act of kindness. Let me tell you about how kind this government is to the mining industry, Mr. Speaker. In 1977-78 the value of mineral production in Ontario was $2,700,000,000; yet the province received, in corporate income tax and mining profits tax, the grand sum of $39,000,000. That is a return of 1.4 per cent on production. With that kind of management, I am not surprised that the Treasurer has put his personal business interests into a blind trust.

Mr. Speaker, Saskatchewan is a contrast. Knowing how the Treasurer likes to use examples from that fine province, let me point out that the value of mineral production there in the same year, 1977-78 was $511,000,000, less than 20 per cent of Ontario's production. The return to the people of Saskatchewan from their resources was $113,600,000, or 22.3 per cent of production. So with five times as much production, Ontario received about one third of the return.

Mr. Swart: Whose resources are they anyway?

Mr. Martel: A scandal. You guys should hide your heads.

Mr. Laughren: This Treasurer and his predecessors have all taken the same line, namely that tax concessions are necessary to encourage investment and protect jobs. Perhaps the Treasurer could explain why, in the last decade, employment in the Ontario mining industry has dropped from 34,600 to 25,300, a shocking 27 per cent, while the value of production has risen 228 per cent. Perhaps the Treasurer could tell us why there is more exploration and development occurring in Saskatchewan right now than in any other province.

This year, $80,000,000 will be spent on exploration and development in Saskatchewan. In Ontario, the mining industry will spend about $25,000,000.

Mr. Martel: They are escaping the socialists, eh Leo?

Mr. Laughren: Obviously, it is possible to get substantial revenues from the industry while at the same time encouraging mining development. The NDP government in Saskatchewan has learned how to manage the province's resources by an intelligent and fair use of the tax system and a commitment to the public ownership of mineral resources.

The New Democratic Party has a policy determined by convention and reaffirmed and refined over the years. That policy is to bring into the public sector the mineral resources of Ontario, with those resources playing a key role in an industrial strategy for this province.

We believe our resources can be used as a lever to help us regain our rightful position as an industrial province. We believe that with our resources in the public sector backward linkages will encourage the development of a mining machinery industry. We believe that forward linkages will lead to further processing, more research and development, and the development of more end products. We believe that with our resources in the public sector we can work towards the creation of a mining sector that is a model of environmental protection, industrial relations and occupational health and safety.

I would like to say a few words about the small business sector. It is a sector that sometimes gets shunted aside due to government preoccupation with enterprises that operate on a grand scale. But we should not forget that it is the small business sector that has created the large bulk of the jobs during the last 10 years.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has done its homework and points out that between 1971 and 1977 58 per cent of new jobs in the private sector were created by small firms. I must say that while these statistics are startling a word of caution is in order. The small business sector is greatly dependent upon the state of the economy in general. As a matter of fact, the greatest stimulation the government could give to small business would be a commitment to a full employment economy. For example, a large mining machinery complex in a northern Ontario community, where there is 12 per cent unemployment would inject new life into existing small businesses and offer exciting new opportunities to new ones.

The small business sector can be a dynamic, vital area of our economy. However, the dominance of large corporations in our economy has made it difficult for small businesses to compete because of lack of access to sophisticated financial, managerial and technical advice. The government has not seen fit to provide this expertise and it is not usually available anywhere else. As a result bankruptcies have increased each year for the past several years. They have been highest among small business and among businesses in operation under six years, which were in need of capital and advice and got neither.

Big business corporations, such as oil companies, have been systematically eliminating small businessmen for many years now. Small businessmen and the NDP have a lot in common in their opposition to the growing concentration in our economy and their feeling that this is not the most efficient way to do business. NDP provincial governments have all taken steps to ensure the continued health of the small business sector in their respective provinces.

There are several things this government should do, and should urge the federal government to do, to help small businesses and in the process diversify our economy. West Germany, Japan and many other countries have set up vigorous trading companies which make contact with overseas businessmen, arrange contracts and allow local businesses to fill those contracts. The Export Development Corporation, which should be active in this area, has always favoured big business. The federal government should emulate the American government procurement program, in which one third of the US government's spending on goods and services is guaranteed to small business, and for which much of the purchasing has been decentralized to the local level.

Central to the problem of small business development over the next few years is the control and use of technology. If we are to de-emphasize the selling of unprocessed raw materials we must be prepared to replace the branch-plant structure of our economy with a vigorous small and medium business sector which will develop and use Canadian technology. This implies changes in all the government policies that affect small business—government procurement, taxation, licensing and use of technology, foreign investment, the availability of venture capital, and so on.

This government has done little to relieve the day-to-day aggravations that small businesses have. I am thinking of property taxes and the lack of uniform store hours as two examples.

In his budget, the Treasurer has decided that small businesses need venture capital.

He is right. New Democrats support the principle of making venture capital available to small businesses; but we think the Treasurer has gone about it the wrong way. The NDP does not think that investors should be rewarded by the taxpayers to the tune of 30 per cent. That is simply a regressive way of providing funds, because we know that only people with a relatively high income will invest in Small Business Development Corporations.

Our second problem with the SBDCs is that there appears to be no guarantee that small business will be able to obtain money from them at a rate lower than from the traditional lending institutions. Government-guaranteed loan insurance would go a lot further towards helping Canada's small businessmen raise capital. We shall be watching carefully the Small Business Development Corporations program to see if its intended role is realized and to monitor the cost to Ontario taxpayers.

Prior to the budget being introduced, I indicated that it was time for Ontario to press for the introduction of a takeover tax. When I recommended that, I was thinking not only of the potential revenues but of the small businesses in Ontario as well. The trend to increased concentration in our economy is an ominous one. Recently released figures from Statistics Canada show that Canada's 25 leading enterprises made 24.2 per cent of all profits, the 100 leading enterprises made 43.2 per cent of all profits and the 500 leading enterprises made 64.2 per cent of all profits. These figures indicate an alarming amount of concentration of economic power.

The Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Tourism both have refused to answer a question from me as to the criteria on which they recommend to the Federal Investment Review Agency approval of applications from foreign corporations. FIRA tells us that it concurs with the recommendations of the provinces in 95 per cent of the cases reviewed. The number of takeovers allowed has risen from 33 in 1974 to 282 in 1978, and the percentage allowed from 80 to 91 per cent. So the government of Ontario is obviously in agreement with both the increased foreign control of our economy and the increasing concentration of economic power in fewer and fewer hands. It is no wonder the small business community feels threatened.

We do not support corporate takeovers that simply reduce competition or unduly increased concentration of economic power. There is something wrong with the corporate world investing without creating a single new job. We understand, of course, that some mergers or takeovers are to be encouraged, if for example they help to rationalize an industry and allow companies to operate with greater economies of scale and efficiency. As a matter of fact we would encourage such mergers in some manufacturing sectors such as mining machinery or electrical products. We believe that the current rash of mergers and takeovers are not in our best interests. It is madness to allow large corporations to indulge themselves with investments that serve no useful purpose.

I have spent considerable time discussing the broad economic issues. I now turn to our health-care system. New Democrats have a special passion for medicare. We regard ourselves collectively as its founder. We fought long and bitter battles in Saskatchewan, as we did federally and here in Ontario. There is no issue on which we will fight harder.

The Treasurer should know that health-care costs in Ontario are not out of line with other jurisdictions. According to the Economic Council of Canada, health costs within this country have not escalated as much as they have in the United States. The share of health costs in the US GNP has risen steadily to 8.6 per cent in 1976, while in Canada it levelled off at 6.8 per cent in 1976. That is medicare here and private health care in the United States.

This government pretends that health-care costs are getting out of hand, yet as a percentage of budgetary expenditures health care is lower now than it was in the first year of the Davis administration. In more recent years the proportion of health-care expenditures paid out of Ontario's general revenues has declined in absolute terms and as a percentage of expenditures.

Mr. Martel: Hear that, Frank?

Mr. Laughren: By 1979-80, OHIP premium revenue will have risen from 22.8 per cent three years ago to 24.7 per cent of health-care expenditures, while the share paid out of Ontario's general revenues had dropped from 28.1 per cent to 19.8 per cent. This Treasurer, a former Minister of Health, should know that much of our health cost is not in the public sector. If he stopped listening to his fiscal technocrats he would be tackling the hidden problems of health care, not shifting the burden to the users by increasing OHIP premiums.

We have, in Ontario, only part of our health-delivery system in the public sector. Multi-national corporations dominate the health-supplies field and the drug industry and the private sector dominates our medical labs, nursing homes and homes for special care. As a result, the profit motive still shapes many priorities; and that, of course, is why small communities suffer from a lack of personnel, ambulance services and nursing-home facilities.

The Treasurer should know there is already a shortage of health-care facilities in northern Ontario and that universal cutbacks make no sense whatsoever. If he doubts that he should have a chat with my colleague the member for Algoma.

The medical supplies and equipment industry, largely US-owned, is contributing mightily to our health-care costs. This government should move immediately to effective centralized hospital purchasing by establishing a crown corporation to purchase health goods in bulk for distribution to hospitals, drug stores and community clinics. A second crown corporation would produce, either jointly or by itself, the most common goods required by the entire health-services field.

If this government wants our support in controlling health-care costs it must restructure the system. We must move toward the establishment of community health and social service centres with a team of doctors, dental practitioners, nurses, social and legal workers and so forth, all of whom would be on salary. For further advice on that matter I would refer him to the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh), our Health critic, and the member for Parkdale (Mr. Dukszta), our previous Health critic, both of whom know a great deal about the provision of health care in Ontario.

The Ontario Council of Health's recent report, Health Care for the Aged, indicates that nine per cent of Ontario's population are now over 65 years of age. This will increase to 13 per cent by the year 2001. Surely this government should move now to provide specially trained medical and paramedical personnel, chronic-home care service, senior citizen housing, homes for the aged and nursing homes in anticipation of this demographic shift.

A chronic-homecare program for Ontario must be implemented now all across the province, not just in a few pilot areas. Such a chronic-homecare program would enable many of our citizens to remain in their homes and communities, where they want to be. This would result in savings by relieving pressure on our nursing homes and hospitals.

It is also wrong to impose deterrent fees on chronic-care patients. That is a despicable way to raise revenue.

Raising OHIP premiums is not the answer to controlling health-care costs. Premiums should be progressively reduced until the burden has been shifted entirely to the more progressive corporation and personal income taxes. Even the Ontario Economic Council has recommended this in its latest report. The NDP would do that, because there should be no higher priority for a government than the provision of quality health care to every citizen of Ontario regardless of financial means.

As my colleague from Parkdale says, "The fight for universal health care is a significant part of our party's struggle to equalize the distribution of wealth and income in our society." We serve notice to this government that we will never support a budget, a throne speech, a bill or a resolution that erodes universal access to health care. We believe this government is in the process of doing just that. There is no issue on which we will fight so hard; and both the government and the Liberal Party should have no illusions about that.

I would like to talk for a moment about the housing problem in Ontario. This is the final major topic.

Despite the Ministry of Housing, the Ontario Housing Corporation and property tax credits, there is a distressing shortage of housing for low- and middle-income earners. The introduction of a rent review process in 1975 provided a degree of protection for tenants, but this government has been a reluctant supporter of the whole process.

That fact is illustrated by their failure to implement a massive public housing program when rent controls were introduced. The most effective rent control should be accompanied by a substantial commitment to the construction of public housing for low- and middle-income people.

The cost of housing in Ontario has become prohibitive for people unless there are two income earners in the family. In Toronto the average price of a home is now over $67,000. In 1971, the beginning of the Davis government years, one third of all Toronto families could afford to spend 25 per cent of their income on a mortgage. Now, eight years later, only 10 per cent of Toronto families can afford a mortgage on the average home. To buy the average home in Metro today, the average worker would have to spend half his wages on mortgage payments. This means that with a 30-year mortgage a worker must earn $3.53 an hour just to make his mortgage payments. Over the lifetime of the mortgage the cost of the house could be $226,800; and this does not include property taxes, heat or maintenance.

Mr. Swart: It must be the fault of your developer friends.

Mr. Laughren: Last year the budget promised property tax reform and enriched tax credits for senior citizens.

Mr. McClellan: Whatever happened to that promise?

Mr. Laughren: We have been given neither. This government continues to shift the tax burden from general revenues to tenants and home owners. New Democrats indicated to the government last year that we are prepared to support property tax reform on certain conditions. The government could have introduced property tax reform, knowing it would have had sufficient support in this Legislature. But it chose not to do so.

As a result, tax reform is taking place anyway, through the appeal process, and the burden is shifting from the commercial-industrial sector to the residential property owner.

New Democrats believe the education and social service component of property tax should be reduced and shifted to more progressive taxes, but this government is putting more and more reliance on the regressive property tax. In 1975 the government met 61.4 per cent of average education costs across the province, leaving 38.6 per cent to be paid out of property taxes. This year the government share is expected to be only 51.5 per cent, so that property taxpayers must meet 48.5 per cent of the total.

In Metro Toronto the shift is even more dramatic. The government provided 35.1 per cent of education costs in 1975, but will pay only 20 per cent this year. Property taxes had to provide 64.9 per cent of Metro's education dollar in 1975; but for 1979 they must meet fully 80 per cent of the cost.

Just as the former Treasurer reneged on the Edmonton commitment to keep assistance to municipalities in line with the growth of provincial revenues, so has this Treasurer found a way to weasel out of a commitment. Last year the Treasurer promised the municipalities that assistance would be forthcoming in accordance with the growth in provincial expenditures. When the announced increase in provincial expenditures was six per cent, quite naturally the municipalities assumed their grants would go up six per cent; but in a dazzling display of footwork and doubletalk, the Treasurer announced the municipalities would get only a five per cent increase. This Treasurer had unilaterally decided to subtract debt charges from his commitment.

Mr. Martel: He has lost all credibility.

Mr. Laughren: The municipalities have learned that what the Treasurer promises is not what he delivers, and every municipal official is braced for the Treasurer's next act of fiscal deceit.

[4:45]

I said earlier this was a budget of lost opportunities. An Ontario Treasurer has opportunities greater than those in other provinces, but this Treasurer is letting opportunities slip through his fingers. The Treasurer has neglected opportunities to create jobs for unemployed, to begin the process of rebuilding our economy, to reclaim our resources for us and to tax people according to their ability to pay.

While our suggestions for creating jobs in the short term are a beginning, the real potential lies in rebuilding and recreating our manufacturing sector. The Treasurer has an opportunity to use his Employment Development Fund for that purpose, but he indicates he has no intention of selecting one sector at a time and rebuilding it.

The job-creation possibilities of replacing imported manufactured goods with ones produced here are enormous. Jobs lost to imports are increasing. The latest figures on imports of machinery, for example, represent 132,000 potential jobs in Ontario. Electronic imports represent 102,600 jobs; electrical products 52,500; and processed fruit and vegetables, 6,600 potential jobs.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism says we shall rebuild our manufacturing sector by stimulating exports. He should know that the first step towards selling on world markets is to develop the expertise and economies of scale at home. That means serving our domestic market first. An aggressive policy of replacing imports would help us to become more self-reliant, would ensure that more economic decisions are made here and would address the severe balance of payments problems.

Rebuilding our manufacturing section by replacing jobs lost due to imports should be the linchpin of any industrial strategy; even this government's poor excuse for one, the Employment Development Fund. The Treasurer is letting that opportunity slip away.

The Treasurer has increased revenues by $269,000,000. All but $36,000,000 of that comes from regressive taxes. I have noted the Treasurer's tendency to quote from the Saskatchewan budget. I hope he read the table that compares the provincial tax loads of an average family. If he has, he must have noticed that the burden of provincial taxes, plus health premiums, is lowest in Saskatchewan. For a family with an income of $15,000, the highest tax rate in the entire country is imposed not by the socialists in Saskatchewan but by the government of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: How come the Treasurer didn't quote that?

Mr. Laughren: Think about that. In the richest province we have the highest tax rate for ordinary working people. Even after tax credits and rebates, Ontario still imposes the highest burden on ordinary people.

Mr. Martel: You give more tax breaks.

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer may have wondered how an NDP government was able so easily to outdistance not only this Tory government but all other provincial governments. In large part NDP governments are able to carry out progressive policies because they rely on progressive sources of revenue.

Mr. Cassidy: You have to die here to get a tax cut.

Mr. Laughren: In Ontario, an NDP government would increase taxes on large corporations across the board to 15 per cent. We would retain succession duties, increase the taxes on mining corporations and impose a capital gains tax. Our tax changes would raise more money and would be from progressive sources.

We regard this as a budget of lost opportunities.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Even Mr. Barrett wouldn't put back succession duties. He was asked that last week.

Mr. Laughren: I want to tell the Treasurer that the NDP governments that have abolished succession duties have compensated for it by a progressive tax system and by abolishing OHIP premiums. The Treasurer hasn't done that.

Mr. Swart: It was part of a package.

Mr. Laughren: We regard this as a budget of lost opportunities. We cannot support this budget. We could not do so whether a vote was to be held today or next December.

It is a budget that is not only regressive but points in a direction which we find abhorrent. The shift from progressive to regressive taxes, the disturbing suggestions that OHIP premiums increase with the cost of insured services, the callous indifference to the plight of people trying to cope with inflation and the neglect of the unemployed are all unacceptable to us.

We are angry at the Treasurer's cynical and hypocritical rhetoric, which promises but fails to deliver. The Treasurer says: "The most important problem facing Ontario today is the need to create more jobs." He introduces not a single program to create a single new job, and he admits it. The Treasurer says: "Ontario must provide policy initiatives to reduce inflation." He does not do that in his budget. In fact his regressive measures are in themselves inflationary. He fails to establish an Ontario food prices review board to protect consumers from unjustified increases in the price of food.

The Treasurer abolished succession duties, which affected only three per cent of estates in Ontario, and says: "The continuation of this tax is hurting our economic performance and costing us jobs." That is nonsense; the Treasurer knows he cannot back it up with any evidence.

The Treasurer brags that Ontario's personal income tax rate—at 44 per cent, our basic federal income tax—is the second lowest in Canada. That is a distortion of the facts, because the Treasurer knows that OHIP premiums are a tax, whether paid directly by individuals and families or paid by employers in lieu of wages.

The Treasurer has said: "In recent years, the competitive position of the manufacturing sector has been restored." Why, then, did the manufacturing trade deficit rise to a record $12,000,000,000 last year? Why did the machinery and auto parts deficits get worse? The Treasurer has not faced these realities in his budget.

The Treasurer says there has been no reduction in the quality of health care. Such a statement shows gross indifference at a time when hospital budgets are being slashed, extra billing and opting out of physicians is rampant and universal access to insured medical care is being eroded.

For these reasons, I move the following motion:

Mr. Acting Speaker: Mr. Laughren moves that the motion be amended by striking out all words after "that" and the following be substituted therefor: "This House deplors the government's failure to recognize the seriousness of the unemployment problems in Ontario by providing any full-time jobs; rejects the increase in OHIP premiums and other regressive taxes while doing nothing to protect consumers against rising prices; condemns the lack of commitment to rebuilding any specific industry within our manufacturing sector, and the failure to attach any performance and employment guarantees to its Employment Development Fund; opposes the continued giveaways of our mineral resources; and finally, condemns the shift of the cost of education and social services to municipalities, and for these reasons, the government no longer enjoys the confidence of this House."

On motion by Hon. Mr. McCague the debate was adjourned.

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

On vote 501, ministry administration program; item 1, main office.

Mr. Acting Chairman: The member for Essex North.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, on the last evening—

Mr. Grande: Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Acting Chairman: I'm sorry, I recognized the member for Essex North. I'm sorry; I didn't see the member for Oakwood.

Mr. Grande: I was on my feet on the last evening, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ruston: I just wanted to follow up—is this the same thing, with Middlesex?

Mr. Grande: Go right ahead.

Mr. Ruston: I'll be brief. I want to check with the minister about the remarks by the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) and by the minister as to the Middlesex building we were discussing the other night. Would the money involved, the Ontario government's share, be coming from the Ministry of Culture and Recreation, or would it be coming from his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, it's in the estimates. It's here in the book.

Mr. Ruston: It's in this ministry's estimates?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The honourable member will have a chance to approve or disapprove of it.

Mr. Ruston: All right. Thank you.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Chairman, are we going to follow up on this courthouse matter? I want to say something on it too but, if the other member was on his feet and talking on the same thing, fine.

Mr. Acting Chairman: The member for Oakwood had the floor when we adjourned. Perhaps we could go back to the matters raised by the member for Oakwood, and then we could deal with the courthouse matter following that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, if I might help you: You were not in the chair the other night; we were discussing the Middlesex building. At the time we adjourned, the member for Oakwood was on his feet, but we really hadn't got away from the Middlesex building at that moment. I don't think he is interested in the Middlesex building. But I'll be glad to answer whatever is asked of me.

Mr. Acting Chairman: In view of that, would the member for Oakwood agree that we should complete the courthouse matter and then return to the matters which he wishes to discuss?

Mr. Grande: As you see fit, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Chairman, when this discussion took place last Tuesday, I was fulfilling my responsibilities in the committee considering the Ministry of Transportation and Communications estimates. I didn't realize this matter was being discussed or I would have come up to the House and participated in the debate.

I was a little annoyed at the comment made by the member for Middlesex when he indicated, in connection with this particular matter pertaining to the Middlesex courthouse, that I had just paid lip-service. I simply want to indicate to the minister that I am the type of person who does work behind the scenes. I don't particularly expect to get bold print in the papers every time I happen to contact a federal member to see if we can't get them to live up to a commitment they made, or when I attend meetings. I didn't attend all the meetings that were called, but I certainly attended the meetings I was invited to attend in connection with this particular matter. I was working behind the scenes. I'm not saying this because I want to take a great deal of credit, but because I take exception to what the member for Middlesex said, that I simply paid lip-service.

There is a lot of confusion in connection with this whole matter, and I would like to try to put it in its proper perspective.

The total cost of restoring and renovating the courthouse in Middlesex amounted to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $2,400,000. The total cost of restoring the building was estimated at $1,600,000.

Before the title had been turned over the municipality, I believe the federal government had agreed to match the provincial government funding on a 50-50 basis, which would mean 50 per cent of $1,600,000, or $800,000. But, as one reads through some of the correspondence from Hugh Faulkner and others, they seemed to treat the total cost of $2,400,000 as the total cost of restoration, which simply was not the case.

[5:00]

Then when title was transferred to the municipality I believe federal government policy was that once the municipality becomes involved, any funding is treated on an equal-cost formula basis. That means the federal government would contribute one third to funding the restoration; the provincial government would contribute one third; and the municipality would contribute one third.

I believe Middlesex county council misunderstood what Mr. Faulkner had tried to indicate or was not knowledgeable about the federal government policy, which I believe has not changed. I believe that has been its policy for some time; that if there is going to be funding for the restoration of buildings which are declared historic, the municipalities will share equally with the provincial government and the federal government.

I am saddened to think that the Minister of Government Services would try to bring federal politics into the Ontario Legislature, as he and the member for Middlesex obviously did the other night when I wasn't here. They got up and condemned the federal government. I believe they had something to say about the federal member, Larry Condon. I believe some reference was made to Judd Buchanan.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of personal privilege: I did not refer to the local member. I did not criticize the federal government. I explained the actual facts, on which you have documentation. At no time did I criticize the minister or the local member. I never mentioned the local member's name.

Mr. Riddell: If that's the case, I must apologize to the minister. I must read Hansard. There must have been some reason for my colleague, who is the critic for this particular ministry, to get up on his feet and indicate that it appeared as though we were fighting the federal election in this particular chamber.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the honourable member, I don't think those remarks were directed at the minister.

Mr. Riddell: If that's the case, I still hold the minister in the same respect I did before. I guess I can't say the same for the member for Middlesex, if indeed he was the one who tried to bring federal politics into the Ontario Legislature.

I was going to retaliate, Mr. Minister, by saying we know that you are personally carrying a member by the name of Sid Fraleigh on your shoulders. He happens to be the opposition to Larry Condon, the federal member. We know this, but we'll let it go at that. If you didn't bring federal politics in here I won't have any more to say about that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, let the record show that he did say "the federal member"; not until after May 22.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Chairman, I'm not going on further, other than to say that the municipality of Middlesex is assured of the $800,000 which the federal government apparently committed itself to from the very beginning. I hope that sets the minister's mind at ease. I hope that sets the mind of the member for Middlesex at ease. I know it has set the minds of those on the municipality of Middlesex county council at ease. I would just like to say—and I think you'll see it in the London Free Press tonight, Mr. Minister—that the federal government member, Larry Condon, has assured the council that the $800,000 will be forthcoming. So I expect that the provincial government will live up to its commitment of $800,000 and that will leave the municipality with the $600,000 renovation fund for its share.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the honourable member, I really appreciate knowing that there has been a definite clarification of the federal government's position. When we were debating this Tuesday night I read portions of letters. I don't think I misread the letter from the federal government, a copy of which I have given you; dated, I believe, August 1977. I am sorry I don't have that file with me. I had it out in the east lobby an hour ago not realizing we would be going back to it this afternoon.

The other night I read the bottom portion of page one of the letter of August 1977, and if you would look at it you will note item (a) said 50-50 sharing with the province. Item (b) suggested one third, one third, one third.

If you go over to the top of page two, it definitely makes it clear the title would have to be vested in the county or the local municipality. I am not sure if it said the city of London, but it did refer to the local municipality.

The difference in the most recent letter pointed out that in 1977 the architect's estimate was $2,200,000. The estimate from which the Ministry of Government Services was working last October was that of the architect hired by Middlesex county. That was $1,600,000 for refurbishing. I don't have the architect's report of $2,200,000 for the refurbishing in 1977.

I want to thank the honourable member for giving me the assurance the government of Canada is accepting the proposal that I put in my letter of October 1978 when I suggested the province put up $800,000, providing the federal government put up $800,000, making a total of $1,600,000; and providing the county of Middlesex would complete the job at an estimated cost of $600,000. I just want to thank him for giving the House that assurance. I can assure you we are ready. Our $800,000 is in the vote to use when we have an opportunity.

Mr. Grande: I really have very few questions for the minister. Some of them relate to the Welcome House which the minister mentioned at the beginning of the estimates. As we have just come from the estimates of the Ministry of Culture and Recreation where we heard the decision was made to turn over the facility on University and Dundas, I wonder if the minister could let us know how long have these negotiations been going on between the Ministry of Culture and Recreation and his ministry about the movement of Welcome House from the present location on York to the future location on University and Dundas?

As the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) is next to the minister, I guess he can also fill him in on that information.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the honourable member, I don't have the actual request here, but it came from the Minister of Culture and Recreation about three weeks ago. I can't say whether the same request came to me from the Premier (Mr. Davis) or not, but the Premier was well aware the Minister of Culture and Recreation had requested it.

I want to go a step further and inform the honourable member that in the present process of government, once the decision has been made it has to go before Management Board for approval, and from there back to cabinet. That part hasn't been done. So in the last three weeks we have agreed to do it but the final approvals are not completed.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Chairman, what I want to find out from the minister is an idea of what goes on in the decision-making process. We heard from the Ministry of Culture and Recreation in its estimates that discussions have been going on for the movement of Welcome House since 1976, two years back. I'm just wondering, why did it take two years for that decision to come to fruition? Were there any other plans your ministry had for that particular building at University Avenue and Dundas Street?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable member, I am sure he realizes that the staffs of the two different departments certainly meet. But once they come to an arrangement it's at that stage that they come to the minister to get the necessary approvals. Now I can't answer whether or not my staff negotiated—I can find it out for you. Standing here as the minister I would say that our staff and Culture and Recreation have been negotiating, but from my position it was three weeks ago.

Mr. Grande: This obviously does not contradict the letter that we discussed in Culture and Recreation estimates from the Premier to the Minister of Culture and Recreation dated February 27. In essence, as far as I am concerned it issues a pretty stern order to both the Minister of Culture and Recreation and to the Minister of Government Services that that building at 454 University Avenue should be turned over to the Ministry of Culture and Recreation.

Let me leave it at that. It is obvious and it is confirmed then that until the Premier stepped in, Welcome House was to stay on York Street. The Premier stepped in through a letter to the Minister of Culture and Recreation and it says at the bottom of that letter: "I'm sure if you decide to do this, Lorne Henderson and his deputy John Thatcher will co-operate in every possible way." That is dated February 27 and I guess it coincides very well with what you said in terms of the decision being made three weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If it was five weeks ago—you know how quickly time goes by when you're busy. I'm trying to answer you off the cuff—I don't have the file here—from my memory of it. I haven't been informed. I was told once that there was charges made towards me but I haven't had time to see what the charges were. I'm sitting here and I don't know what your committee learned.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Minister, all I wanted to do was to confirm that when the decision was made from your particular ministry, it was made at the same time as the Premier ordered that decision to be made. Not before and not after. That confirms some of the thoughts I have on that matter. For the time being I am satisfied with those answers that you've given me, in other words.

The next area is in regard to the approximately $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 grant—I don't know whether it's a grant or not, but anyway it's about the $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 that went from the Ministry of Government Services over to the Villa Colombo complex at Dufferin and Lawrence. It's about a year and a half ago.

At that particular time they were trying to buy the approximately 12 acres of land and facilities adjacent to Columbus House or the Villa Colombo. They did not have the money to pay—I don't remember exactly how much it was. For some mysterious reason the Ministry of Government Services got involved and coughed up between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 so that purchase could be made. I just want to find out how the ministry entered that picture, and I would like the minister to tell me a little bit of the background in terms of how his ministry related to Villa Colombo.

[5:15]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Again, Mr. Chairman, I am trying to respond off the cuff; I don't have that file here. Before I became Minister of Government Services, I was chairman of cabinet, and I well remember cabinet approving the purchase of this property. The local people did not have the money; so cabinet authorized the minister at that time—and the member will understand that I am speaking off the cuff from my memory of what happened in cabinet with another ministry.

We authorized the Ministry of Government Services to purchase this property. My memory tells me the price was $2,000,000; I trust the member will take it as that—we can get the actual figure, but I hope he will accept it the way I am telling it because he will realize that, not being the minister, I could make a slipup there.

At the moment, we are in the midst of selling that property to that body of people. We don't want to make any profit in selling it to the club. I don't have all the facts to assure the member that it's at the cost, less or more, but as minister I would hope that the price would be what it cost us. We think we were of service and help to the club.

Mr. Grande: All I am trying to find out is how the Ministry of Government Services got involved in that transaction. It's very strange to me that a particular group or community would come to the ministry and say: "Look, we are $3,000,000 short"—and if my memory serves me correctly, it is $3,400,000—that all a group has to do is come before the ministry and say: "We are $3,400,000 short. Would Government Services buy this particular building for us?" Does the ministry do that with every other group in this province? Is it customary that the government does that as a policy?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: As I said, I am speaking of something that happened about two years ago now, I think. I was chairman of cabinet at the time; so I remember it. The Minister of Government Services at that time—I believe it was John Smith from Hamilton—

Mr. B. Newman: A fine fellow.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. I believe he was the minister who came to cabinet and suggested the purchase of this parcel of property for so much money—the member says $3,400,000; I will accept that. The minister recommended that we purchase Villa Colombo because it was for sale; we would purchase it outright. He hoped that Government Services would hold it and, if these people came back—and he suggested a time limit to us; I don't have the overall thing—the government would offer it back to them at the time they felt they could afford to buy it. The member says it was $3,400,000. I will accept that. I thought it was $2,000,000. I haven't looked into it recently, and I don't have the file in front of me.

Mr. Grande: Would the minister undertake to take a look at that particular file and get the details? Perhaps before these estimates are over, we can come back to that, perhaps under another item. I am not familiar with this minister's estimates, nor am I familiar with the votes, but perhaps we will find another time when we can come in and the minister can give us that information.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I will try to speak to that item when we go on with the estimates tomorrow morning. I am advised that it comes under vote 502, item 5.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I notice in the report of the design and construction program for 1979-80 that the former Sprucedale School site at Hagersville is slated for demolition. I was wondering what the minister has to say about that.

I know it was drawn to the attention of the city of Nanticoke and the region of Haldimand-Norfolk that this property was available. There is a good swimming pool located on the site. I realize the buildings are an old air force base going back to the 1940s and many of the buildings are old, but there is a good heating system, and water and sewage services are available and in working order at the present time. It has been vacant since the winter of 1977-78, I believe. I wonder what plans the minister has for that, and if the area municipalities will be given an opportunity of making use of that land?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Before the minister answers, I would remind the member that that question is rather a specific item which might best be dealt with somewhere else in these votes rather than a general policy matter. The question has been asked, and a great deal of latitude has been given on matters earlier, so I will ask the minister to respond. But we have been on these estimates for some time and we are still on vote 501; in fairness to the members who may be reserving their questions for a particular vote I think I should perhaps be ruling a little more sternly than I have on these matters. Perhaps you could answer that, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to request a little bit more information. I am really not familiar with that one. It is the Sprucedale School at Hagersville; formerly occupied by Community and Social Services, right?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Yes. I think it is on page 36 that it indicates it is slated for demolition. It was my understanding the buildings were going to be removed and I wondered if there was any interest from the region of Haldimand-Norfolk or the city of Nanticoke.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Can the minister remember to raise that when we come to that specific vote?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: One or two seconds here. The Ministry of Community and Social Services have a consultant reviewing the property for that ministry to see if they have future use for it, or to bring in proposals for using it. At this moment it is still under their jurisdiction. Until we get the report we are not in a position to answer your question as directly as I would like to be able to answer it.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I wonder when a decision will be made. Is there any deadline or any time element there? It has been sitting there now for one year. Again I would like to point out there is a good swimming pool there and there is a good heating system. I would assume it is going to be put in mothballs. I know there are many municipalities in my riding, and probably elsewhere in Ontario, that would like to have access to a swimming pool of that type. So my concern is that it should be utilized and made available to the public.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We didn't hire the consultants, but it is our understanding they hope to report by the end of May. We can't say positively, but that is what we are told from the other ministry, that we should have something by the end of May.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Riverdale on a policy matter.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am in your hands. I wanted to raise a specific question about the ministry's position with respect to the conflicting interests in the old Don Jail property.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Proceed; in view of the fact everybody else has had a great deal of latitude to this point I don't want to come down on the member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: I don't mind if you do; I just would like to know the appropriate place to raise it. If now is the time it would be—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right, the minister is prepared to deal with it now.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can we have a vote on that now; to come down on the member for Riverdale?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Proceed.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Minister, my inquiry is simply for the purpose of trying to get some clarification and not to confuse an otherwise already confused issue. The interests involved are the Ministry of Correctional Services, the Riverdale Hospital and the Toronto Humane Society. It is interesting that of the two aldermen for the city of Toronto representing ward seven, one of them sits on the board of the Toronto Humane Society and the other one sits on the board of the Riverdale Hospital.

I have had some correspondence with the executive director of both the Riverdale Hospital and the humane society about their positions in connection with it. Perhaps the easiest way would be simply to ask the minister where the matter now stands, then in the light of any comment he wants to make I can decide whether I need to pursue it further now.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to answer this question. I have spent a great deal of time on this particular project. Members will note I did not have to consult staff on my position on it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Would you want to answer it now?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is right. I felt the question would give me a golden opportunity. The Don Jail, as you know, was offered to the humane society and tentatively accepted.

At the same time, the Minister of Culture and Recreation assured them $1,000,000 for the restoration of the Don Jail. Everything was going along quite well until a Mr. Tom Wardle, who is the chairman of the Riverdale Hospital board and a former member of this House—I use his name because we all know Tom quite well—he and the executive director and another member of the board approached me a few months ago and told me the plan of the hospital. Their real concern at that time was we were working on an agreement with the humane society which would take up the next 99 years. You can understand the concern of the hospital board on this land across the road from them which they felt they needed for future expansion.

Immediately after I met with the board I sent my architects to see if all bodies could be satisfied and if there was sufficient property. I will approach it this way: On examination of the Don Jail the property, on one side is a parking lot; the Ministry of Correctional Services requires that. As you view the site from the front, the left hand side is what the Riverdale Hospital would require, along with a portion of the front of it. They would need more than that, but the expansion they have in mind for the next 25 years would take a portion of it. As we look more deeply into it, Correctional Services needs an exercise yard for outdoor recreation.

Here we are with a piece of property of which Correctional Services needs maybe three quarters; the hospital needs about one fifth; and the remainder would be left for the humane society. The humane society is pretty well convinced, and I am too, that the portion left would not meet their needs.

Three public bodies, all serving a useful purpose, want a portion of the property. The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker), the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) and myself—the four of us—have had two meetings. We have sized it up in all ways, shapes and forms. We are not in a position yet to state one body or another body will have it.

[5:30]

Our position is this: We are convinced we have to help the three bodies and satisfy the humane society. We've made a pledge to them and we've got to satisfy them first. Correctional Services have to be satisfied. I won't guarantee it, but I'm hopeful that when we come to a conclusion we will be able to satisfy the need of the hospital board. We might not satisfy their desire; their desire would be that they get the complete property, that's the way they left it with me.

We can't let them have the complete property. They don't have any approvals from the Ministry of Health for additional hospital growth, but I believe they do have money from other sources and they want to do some building there that doesn't involve the province.

I can't answer the honourable member yet. The ministers have met and we are mulling over ideas. We haven't really come to a full conclusion, but we're hoping to satisfy all three bodies.

Let me change that "satisfy". We are hoping to meet the needs of the hospital. We're not going to try to give the hospital half the property as they would have liked, but we hope to be able to work out a method so they will get sufficient land for the development they propose.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, can the minister give any indication when the problem will be resolved? Does he really think all parties can be satisfied: given the relatively small piece of property involved; the significant interest now in restoring and preserving the exterior of the old jail building, the interests, as he has stated them, of the Ministry of Correctional Services with respect to parking and the exercise yard; the extension of the hospital services over a period of time with the funds which the hospital has and with their long term plans; and the relative urgency of the Toronto Humane Society's need because of the expropriation of the property by the government along Wellesley Street and the purchase—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Let me correct that, Mr. Chairman. The government did not expropriate the Wellesley Street property. We had a willing seller and the government bought it for $1,000,000 in 1973.

Mr. Renwick: That's fine, I'm sorry; but it's all part of the acquisition by the government of that property. The humane society then bought the property down on River Street and as we thought were going to proceed with their new premises on River Street. At that point the Don Jail question came up and they entered into negotiations with the ministry, which appeared to indicate that, subject to terms being worked out, there would be a 99-year lease for the premises.

The hospital board members, I think, felt themselves caught unawares by the interest of both the executive committee of city council and of the humane society; they felt they should have been consulted. When they—"intervened" is probably too harsh a term—when they let their interest be known there was some concern to try to work out an amicable arrangement amongst all three of the interests involved.

Does the minister really think it's possible to work out a plan that will meet those three interests?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I would prefer not to go into what my thoughts are until I have an opportunity to speak with the humane society and the hospital board, but yes I think they will all be satisfied.

My friend on my right says happy. There's no way you can make three people overjoyed, but I think they will all be satisfied. We have not gone back to them, because there are some minor details between the ministers that we want to satisfy ourselves on.

Mr. Renwick: I suppose there is no question that it's the intention of the ministry that the lessees, presumably—whoever they are—of that property, from the government will, as a condition of whatever arrangements are made, maintain the exterior of the old jail building and proceed to renovate and use the interior of the building. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the plan is that the building as such would be preserved. There are some jail walls and one small building that will have to be removed to satisfy the needs of the hospital. When you're facing the jail, there's a wall to the left that will have to be removed; it's not part of the building.

Mr. Renwick: Standing on Gerrard Street and facing north, the old building will still remain there, with whatever adjustments have to be made?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If our proposal is accepted by all ministries that will happen; it will be maintained.

Mr. Renwick: Just a couple of more questions. I certainly don't want to upset any of these private discussions the minister is having either with his colleagues or with others. But in fact is the minister now in discussions with both the Toronto Humane Society and the hospital and his colleague in Correctional Services about the resolution of the problem? Or are these discussions about his proposed plan a matter within the government at the present time which in due course will be conveyed to the hospital and to the humane society as a proposal?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We ministers have worked out what we feel will be satisfactory. But the legwork for us is not completed yet. Once we get it completed and think it will be acceptable to all three bodies, we will contact the humane society and the hospital board and we'll put it on the table for them before we take the necessary action.

Mr. Renwick: How long do you anticipate the balance of this work will take?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would like to say to the member for Riverdale that the minister and I might get it finalized either next week or the following week. But, to be fair, we'll try to get the message back to them within a month. We're close to finalization.

Mr. Renwick: That's what I wanted to get a sense of. The minister is saying that, by the end of May the proposal would be put forward to the private bodies?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. I would hope that by the end of May we could come back into the House with the proposal and that we will have conveyed that to the local bodies. But there are two or three things we're not satisfied with. We ministers hope to get our problems ironed out within the next week to two weeks.

Mr. Renwick: Just a final remark: Perhaps the minister would be good enough—to the extent possible in a busy schedule—to keep me advised of what progress is being made and to let me know about the matter. While it's not strictly within the riding of Riverdale, being across the street—it used to be, and on any proper redistribution will be back in Riverdale—I have a very real interest on behalf of the people in the area as to just what does happen to that property.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The honourable member could be helpful to me if he would put forth a proposal of his priorities.

Mr. Renwick: I don't have any specific position. I recognize the needs of the Toronto Humane Society, and I recognize the needs of the Riverdale Hospital. I'm not an expert who can make up his mind as to whether there's any incompatibility between the purposes of the humane society and the purposes of the hospital, so far as the care of people on the one hand and the care of animals on the other hand are concerned. I don't know whether there's a basic incompatibility that can't be resolved there.

I would assume at some point the remnants of the jail property will likely be moved so there will be more property available at some time, although it may always remain as a staging jail for the purposes of the courts in the old city hall.

I do have one concern. I'm on the side of those who believe the old structure should be maintained and restored. I was concerned when the original intention was expressed that it had so many odious recollections involved it should be demolished. I had that view about the old hospital at 999 Queen Street, but I don't share the same view about the building there, perhaps for reasons that my grandfather and father used to deliver the groceries to the old Don Jail. I, fortunately, have never had occasion to be inside those premises myself.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will be very happy to inform the member. I would want to thank him for his remarks and his concern about the building, about the property and about the hospital.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, to the minister, I'd like to go back for a moment to the item raised by the member for Oakwood (Mr. Grande) in relation to the Italian-Canadian Benevolent Corporation. As the minister stated previously, it seems that under vote 502 the minister is going to provide the information which was requested by my colleague. In doing so, I would like to ask the minister if, under the same vote, he will table a full disclosure of the transaction between the government and the Italian-Canadian Benevolent Corporation?

Also, I would like to ask the minister—if he doesn't have the answer I'll wait until full discussion under vote 502—if under the transaction there is any particular clause which guarantees that if the corporation chooses to buy the land they will be prevented from selling it to private individuals, companies or other people outside of the corporation. The reason I would like to have this information is to determine if the province, the minister or this government were assured at the time the transaction took place that the land to be transformed to the Italian-Canadian Benevolent Corporation will be used in the future for the benefit of the Italian community as a whole. If the minister has such information, I'll wait until vote 502 is dealt with.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: When we deal with vote 502 I will have the documentation here to answer the question. I don't have it here now.

Mr. Grande: My intent in raising this now is that the you table that documentation ahead of time so that at the time the vote comes up we could have a discussion? Would you table that?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You realize how much time I've got left on my estimates. I would expect we will be in that vote tomorrow morning and I will have it with me tomorrow morning. I don't know how I can table it ahead of time.

Mr. Grande: Just send it to us.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I will have it with me tomorrow morning.

[5:45]

Mr. Makarchuk: I notice that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wiseman) comes under your ministry. I have had some dealings with a previous Minister without Portfolio in Brantford who is currently selling licence plates. Would you kindly outline to us just exactly what you are spending $145,000 for, what are the duties and functions of the present Minister without Portfolio, and what has he been performing?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I had hoped I would be asked this question. Last week I asked the Minister without Portfolio to outline for me his interpretation of his duties. I also asked if he would be available if you people wished him to be, and he will be available.

I have a letter dated March 29, 1979, addressed to the Honourable Lorne Henderson, Minister of Government Services. It is about the duties of the Minister without Portfolio. It says: "Firstly, he is chairman of the regulations committee which meets two hours at least every week. He sits on the legislation committee, chaired by the Honourable Lorne Henderson, which meets twice per week, sometimes sitting from four to five hours per week."

"We meet every Monday afternoon at 3:30 and we go on through to six or 6:30 or seven o'clock. If we don't get our work wound up on that day we come back Tuesday afternoon for a similar session.

"He sits on the Board of Internal Economy, which meets every week or every second week. A meeting usually lasts three hours. Plus there is preparation for all the foregoing committees.

"Tuesday at 8 a.m., (he is at) Management Board (which is) usually going through until 12 noon. This varies when the estimates are going through. (The) sitting (is) two or three times a week or whenever necessary. Wednesday, (is) cabinet."

Cabinet meets each Wednesday morning at 9:30 and the odd day. Yesterday the Premier (Mr. Davis) was out of town and we didn't deal with policy but just with regular business. We were through at 11 o'clock. But the usual Wednesday meeting is from 2:30 to four.

"(On) Thursday, he sits on the justice policy field for approximately two or three hours." He does see delegations. "(He is) chairman of the agency review committee. This committee meets with the Clerk, the secretary of the committee, as well as with the committee members and staff. Time of the meetings varies according to the availability of members, et cetera.

"(He fulfils) speaking engagements for ministers when they are unable to attend."

Here is the main one: "Looking after constituents and being in the Legislature."

Mr. Bradley: How much money does he get?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Whip is after him every day because he's not in the Legislature. Then it says: "(He fulfils) regular duties that any member has regarding constituents."

That's the letter. It's signed by the Honourable Douglas J. Wiseman, Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, after listening to that recital of rather onerous duties, I wonder what is the difference. Each member sits on committees. We have our members who sit on the Board of Internal Economy. We have our members who are part of the justice policy committee and other committees and everything else. These are the normal duties that members perform.

There is absolutely nothing in the list you read that is any different from what the ordinary member performs in this House. Yet it is costing the government $145,000. I don't know whether that includes the car and chauffeur or not or whether that's an added cost.

It seems to me this is a waste of money. For $145,000 you're not getting your money's worth. Probably it should be something the provincial auditor should investigate. After all, he has been empowered by the new Audit Act to see if we're getting value for our money. What the minister has read out are exactly the duties of a member. In fact they're less than the duties of a member because he has more assistance and more help in his office, than a member has with the limited supply of assistance he has at this time.

I want to know who directs him. Who tells him what to do if there are any duties? Does the direction come from you or from the Premier or the cabinet or from whom? Where does the direction come from?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would have to disagree with the honourable member's remarks. Firstly, committees of cabinet are set up by cabinet.

Mr. Makarchuk: Just like committees of caucus are set up by caucus. That also is a profound statement.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Again, I would have to disagree with the honourable member. Management Board has certain responsibilities.

ties. The board meets, as he suggested, every Tuesday morning and generally goes through to noon. The Board of Internal Economy, as he knows, is appointed by order in council. The chairman of the regulations committee is appointed by cabinet. The chairman of the committee looking into regulations again is an appointment of cabinet.

The justice policy field meets every Thursday morning. I sat on the justice policy field, but it was for only two or three months. The resources policy field, as I remember, used to meet at nine o'clock Thursday morning.

Mr. McClellan: Where?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They meet now over in the Whitney Block; the three policy fields all meet over there.

Mr. Breagh: That's not the one in the Park Plaza?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No. No justice policy field meets at the Park Plaza.

The three boards all meet Thursday morning. I don't sit on any of the three—

Mr. Makarchuk: We meet Thursday morning in public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Okay; so the committee meets while the House is sitting Thursday morning.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, it doesn't sit Thursday morning.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, but while the House is in session.

Mr. Breagh: Which one meets at La Scala?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That, I understand, is a very important committee.

Mr. Breagh: Which one is that?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is the committee that keeps the body going.

Mr. Breagh: Whose body?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Whichever person might be there.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are they warm bodies?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The member would have to be there at the right time to know.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, basically what the minister is saying is that he goes to meetings. If you ask any member, they all go to meetings. Everybody has meetings Monday mornings, Tuesday mornings, Wednesday mornings, and Thursday mornings; some of us meet on Saturday mornings and some Saturday afternoons, and some of us have meetings on other days. I am sure he has meetings out there.

What I am trying to point out is that what he does is nothing out of the ordinary from what every other member does. What bothers me about this is that we are spending an extra $145,000 for this person who goes to a meeting. That's great. But what does he contribute? I have never seen anything. We spend $145,000 to set up a whole complex up there, and I can't see any results. I can't see any advantages.

I don't see any difference between him and a member who gets a normal salary and does not cost an extra $145,000 to be able to attend meetings. Unless we give him some specific responsibilities that are visible and put him in a position to make some decisions et cetera, I suggest it might be an idea for this government to abandon that position.

Does the minister remember Dick Beckett? He used to be Minister without Portfolio from the city of Brantford. The citizens of Brantford used to wonder what he did; they wondered for so long that, when he ran for re-election, he came third. I think that is a reflection.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That was the member's fault.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, it was my fault; no question about it. I made sure. But that is a reflection on the magnitude of the office of Minister without Portfolio.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister about his policy on temporary employees filling in when extra help is needed for short periods. I understand the government did set up its own temporary employment agency called GO Temp and it has people on call for that agency. In addition, I understand it also uses some private temporary employee agencies.

I would like to know how much was spent in the last year on the private temporary employee agencies and how much was spent on GO Temp in the three categories of stenographic help, clerical help and data processing and keypunch help. I have the feeling it may be that the government is using private employment agencies as part of its effort to appear to be keeping the civil service down in numbers.

The private employment agencies' charges do not show up as salaries for civil servants but they certainly cost the government at least as much, and probably more, than if it hired its own GO Temp employees for all these temporary jobs. Obviously, the private employment agency has to take a profit out of the fee paid for supplying temporary help.

I'd like to know how much was spent in the last year on GO Temp and how much was spent on private employment agencies? What are the plans for this coming year for using the outside temporary employment agencies?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, firstly in response to the honourable member, we are not aware of any other agency. We want to qualify it when we say that, since there may have been a director or somebody who was in a real bind for a day. We use GO Temp on a regular basis, that's our usual source of extra help. Standing here, I'm not aware any other agency was used. My staff will try and find out for the next sitting of the committee; but at this moment, to the best of our knowledge there was no outside agency used. We admit there may have been one or two occasions, but we're not aware of it here. It's not our practice anyhow. We do use GO Temp.

Ms. Bryden: That's good news, Mr. Minister. I did have one person who was on GO Temp staff, in the data processing field, who reported that she understood when she was available work was given to an outside private employment agency in this field of data processing. She felt she should have been called instead.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That helps us when you tell us it was in our data processing department.

Vote 501 agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McCague, the committee of supply reported a certain resolution.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

LEARNING-DISABLED PERSONS

111. Mr. Blundy: For the year 1977-78, how many learning disabled children and how many learning disabled adults applied for services through the vocational rehabilitation branch of the Ministry of Community and Social Services? How many children and adults were declared eligible and feasible for vocational rehabilitation services upon first application? How many cases were appealed? What was the result of completed appeals? How many appeals are still in progress? What is the full range of services provided to eligible applicants? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: Information on applications for provision of basic educational services under the Vocational Rehabilitation Services Act of the Ministry of Community and Social Services made by learning disabled children and adults, is collected by academic year.

Information for the 1977-78 academic year is as follows:

Total number of applications, 192; number approved by VRS, 118; number of cases appealed, 58; number of appeals granted, 38; number of appeals denied, 17; number of appeals in process, 3.

The full cost of tuition and books and supplies are provided under the Vocational Rehabilitation Services Act if the application and the program are approved.

Supplementary services may be provided under the Vocational Rehabilitation Services Act if required to enable the client to take full advantage of the program. These include travel expenses for the client, overnight accommodation and meals during travel and incidental academic costs such as field trips.

If a residential facility is requested, clients may make application for a maintenance allowance under the Family Benefits Act to assist them with the cost of room and board and other personal expenses.

The foregoing relates only to applicants requesting basic educational services, i.e. those services which ordinarily are provided by the public educational system in Ontario.

FRAUD TRIAL

112. Mr. Nixon: What was the cost of the trial and retrial in the county of Oxford involving the matter of fraud? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Regina v. Foster et al: Dates of trial, November 1, 1977-December 16, 1977 (holiday break); January 16, 1978-February 10, 1978, date of mistrial.

Witness fees (includes travel and accommodation), $9,373.92; jury fees and mileage, $18,304.20; total $27,678.12.

Dates of retrial: Trial commenced January 15, 1979; verdict reached March 25, 1979; sentenced on March 30, 1979.

Witness fees, $1,776.97; jury fees and mileage, $21,605.05; total $23,382.02.

Total cost of trial and retrial, $51,060.14.

Note: In July, 1978, Ontario Regulation 949/94 was amended. The amendment provides for a juror's fee of $40 per diem to be paid for each day of service after 10 days. A fee of $10 is paid for each day of service up to and including 10 days.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAMS

114. Mr. Bounsell: As the provisions in the 1979 general legislative grants will generate a significantly reduced amount of provincial funding per classroom hour of instruction in Heritage Language Programs, is it the intention of the ministry that local school boards pay their increased share of the costs by raising property taxes? If this was not the intent of the ministry, outline other specific courses of action open to school boards. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: More time is required to respond to this question. A final answer will be available on or about May 15, 1979.

FARM TAX REBATES

121. Mr. Ziembra: Would the Minister of Revenue table the names of property holders receiving farm tax rebates during 1977, giving the number of acres upon which the rebate was paid, the assessment, the property tax levied and the amount of farm tax rebate paid in each case? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Wells: Payments to property holders under 1977 farm tax reduction program: The large volume of material—some 20 binders totalling about 13,000 pages—and the resultant cost makes it impractical to table this information in the Legislature.

The information, however, is available in the subsidies branch of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs and arrangements can be made to examine the records during regular office hours. This should be done through the director of the branch.

SCHOOL BOARD STATISTICS

115. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry extract from its 1974, 1976 and 1978 September board reports the following information for each Ontario school board: (1) Total number of teachers as defined in the report by type of duty; (2) number of principals; (3) number of vice-principals; (3) number of regular teachers; (5) number of other; (6) number of department heads; (7) number of students. For each board give the PTR according to the definition used in Education Statistics. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

See sessional paper 36.

STUDENT DROPOUTS

116. Mr. Bounsall: (a) Will the ministry provide details about the percentage of the total students who drop out of the Ontario elementary and secondary schools and who cease formal education before graduation? (b) Will the ministry, please, break down the statistics by: (i) school board; (ii) elementary/secondary; (iii) native people/others; (iv) male/female? (c) In each case, will the ministry provide data for the last 10 years? (d) Is the ministry satisfied with this present level of student retention? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We require additional time to prepare our response to the above question. The answer will be ready for tabling on or about Friday, April 20, 1979.

EDUCATION RESEARCH

117. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry provide a complete list of all research undertaken by the ministry or local school boards on student retention and student dropout since 1971? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Attached is a list of studies bearing in whole or in part on the question of student retention and dropouts.

Process of Leaving School: Characteristics, Two reports—Archer; York Board of Education, A Survey of High School Drop-Outs in Two Schools in the Borough of York, 1971-72—Stobo.

SCHOOL CLOSURES

118. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry provide a list by year and school board of all schools that have been closed since 1975? For each school give details of either the present use of the school or if the school is no longer in the hands of the board of education, give details as to whom it was transferred or sold and a breakdown of the revenues generated from such school closings. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

The information as to the present use of the closed school, where such information is not provided in the above list, is not available at this time.

Prior to 1977, revenue to school boards from the sale of schools and sites is as follows: 1975, $3.7 million; 1976, $2.8 million. Information with respect to 1977 and 1978 is at present being collected.

FRENCH LANGUAGE PROGRAMS

119. Mr. Bounsall: As the federal government intends to cutback its support for French language instruction by 20 per cent per year for the next five years, will the ministry explain how this will effect the financing of existing programs of French language instruction in Ontario? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Instruction in French as a second language and the provision of education in the French language continue to be priority programs of the Ministry of Education. In 1979 the ministry will continue to provide the same level of funding to school boards for these programs as in 1978. The future level of funding for these programs will depend on the allocation of funds to finance education in the province.

SALE OF SCHOOL PROPERTIES

120. Mr. Bounsall: What financial benefits accrue to the province through the closing of schools, and the sale of school buildings? Will the ministry estimate the value of such benefits for each year since 1975. What provincial benefits accrued to the province through the sale of school sites prior to the current policy (which expires December 31, 1979) of waiving negative grant rights on the sale of such sites. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No financial benefits accrue to the province through the closing of schools except that the ministry ceases to pay grant on any outstanding debentures.

Where a school board sells a school building the ministry imposes a negative grant on the sale of such buildings in accordance with a formula that reflects the "depreciated value" of the building at the time of the sale.

For the three years prior to 1977, negative grant on the sale of sites and buildings was not calculated separately and is estimated to be: 1974, $1.6 million; 1975, $0.9 million; 1976, $1 million.

Information concerning the benefits from the sale of school buildings and the negative grant waived on the sale of school sites in 1977 and 1978 is presently being collected.

LAB BILLING ERRORS

122. Mr. Ziembra: Would the Minister of Health indicate the amount billed OHIP in error by private medical laboratories, giving the name of the medical laboratory, the principals, the business address, the amount found billed in error in each case and the amount recovered in each case? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our response to the above question reads as follows: Because of the number of questions that are now being worked on by my ministry, this question will be answered on May 15, 1979.

LEGAL SERVICES CONTRACTS

123. Mr. Ziembra: What are the names and business address of lawyers who performed contract work for the government last year and how much was each paid? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Contact has been made with all ministries and the offices of the Official Guardian and the Public Trustee, and the collection and collation of the material required for the answer to question 123 is proceeding, and should be ready to table on or about May 18, 1979.

Reference is made to the response to question 137 tabled on December 15, 1978, which detailed the retention of outside counsel by the Ontario government, for the fiscal years of 1976, 1977 and that portion of 1978 ending on October 31, 1978.

When the information referred to in paragraph one has been received from the ministries, a final report covering the period from November 1, 1978 to December 31, 1978 will be tabled.

MINING ACT EXEMPTIONS

124. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry provide a listing of the applications, by name of company and mining location for exemption to section 113 of the Mining Act for the years 1975 to the present? Will the ministry also list the exemptions granted and those refused? [Tabled April 6, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: 1. Applications for exemption from section 113 of the Mining Act for 1975 to present: Agnew Lake Mines, North Espanola, three export contracts (see note d); Algoma Steel Corporation, Wawa, one renewal application; Belmont Magnetite, Belmont Township, one new application, one renewal; Consolidated Canadian Faraday, Bancroft, one export contract (see note d); Denison Miner, Elliot Lake, one export contract (see note d); Falconbridge Nickel Mines, Sudbury, two renewals; Inco, Sudbury, four renewals; Mattabi Mines, Ignace, one renewal; Noranda Mines (Geco Div.), Manitouswadge, one renewal; Rio Algom Mines, Elliot Lake, eight export contracts (see note d); Selco Mining Corporation, Uchi Lake, one renewal; Sturgeon Lake Mines, Sturgeon Lake, one renewal; Texasgulf Canada, Timmins, two renewals, one withdrawal; Willroy Mines, Manitouswadge, one renewal.

2. The above list represents 30 applications formally submitted. One exemption was cancelled in 1975 (applied for in 1974). One application was withdrawn after submission.

Notes: (a) Companies find it expedient to consult with ministry staff before formally submitting an application. As a result, only applications with some degree of validity are formally submitted. (b) Alternatively, where companies have not had prior consultation with ministry staff before submitting an application, subsequent dialogue results in suitable modification or in withdrawal before formal presentation to cabinet. (c) Reasons for granting of exemptions are summarized in pp. 31, 32 of the mineral resources branch discussion paper The Ontario Metal Mining Industry—Present and Future dated 1977 and attached as Appendix "A". (d) The relatively large number of applications for the uranium mining companies is due to the fact that, for uranium export monitoring purposes, they are required to seek a separate exemption for each export contract.

Appendix A: Further processing; the policy of the government of Ontario is that minerals produced in the province shall be processed to as advanced a degree as is reasonably possible before being exported from Canada. An advanced degree of processing increases the income to Canada from the minerals exported and results in more skilled employment for Canadians.

This policy has been followed for over 60 years with considerable success and in recent years about 65 per cent of Ontario nickel production, 90 per cent of copper production and 40 per cent of zinc production has been processed to the metal stage in Canada. Gold and silver production from precious metal mines is now fully processed in Canada. Gold and silver produced as a by-product from base metal mines is shipped as a constituent of the base metal concentrates and therefore has a similar distribution as far as processing is concerned. More iron ore is consumed by Ontario steel mines than is mined in the province. Uranium is fully processed to the fuel form needed for reactors of Canadian design. Investment in an enrichment plant to produce fuel suitable for foreign reactors cannot be justified at this time. No Canadian refinery as yet exists for platinum group metals.

Further processing policy is implemented by two methods. Section 113 of the Mining Act provides a legal basis for the government to insist on processing to the metal stage in Canada. The Mining Tax Act provides for tax incentives to encourage it.

From the time of the passage of the original version of section 113 in 1917, it has been recognized that passage of a law does not automatically make economic sense out of economic nonsense and that in some cases 100 per cent processing in Canada is not a sensible objective. Provision was therefore made for exemptions by order in council. Exemptions currently existing were obtained for one or more of the following reasons:

(i) Where no further processing facilities exist in Canada and the benefits obtainable appear to be too low, in relation to costs, to justify construction; (ii) Where inadequate further processing capacity exists in Canada and funds for construction are not available at this time; (iii) Where inadequate further processing capacity exists in Canada and ore reserves are insufficient to justify construction; (iv) Where quantities of semi-processed material exported are too small to justify construction of a Canadian processing plant; (v) Where the semi-processed material is not acceptable to Canadian further processors due to impurities which interfere with refining of other metals. Quantities involved are insufficient to justify modifications to Canadian plants; (vi) Where the semi-processed material is not acceptable to Canadian further processors due to impurities causing environmental pollution. Quantities involved are insufficient to justify modifications to Canadian plants; (vii) Where foreign customers are unwilling to accept fully processed material and are able to obtain their requirements from other sources if denied Ontario supplies; (viii) Where export of semi-processed material is necessary until new Canadian plant construction, now in progress, is completed.

Section 113 serves as a useful monitoring device and enables the government to regularly review the situation and to ensure that as much processing as is economically feasible is carried out in Canada. The tax incentives under the Mining Tax Act are more positive and therefore more effective in that they increase the economic advantages for industry of building processing plants in this country. Additional incentives are offered for construction in Canada and especially northern Ontario. These incentives, and particularly the increased processing allowances, have been instrumental in inducing major new investments in northern Ontario, such as Inco's strip mill and the Texasgulf copper refinery.

FOREST REGENERATION

125. Mr. Foulds: Will the Ministry of Natural Resources provide a listing of the number of acres of forest that has been cut over and regenerated for the most recent 12 month period possible? Will the minister detail the cutover and regeneration figures by sub-category, as contained in ministry annual reports? Will the ministry further provide the above mentioned information by ministry district as well as region? [Tabled April 6, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have prepared a table showing the number of acres cutover by region (appendix I); and a table showing the acres regenerated by region for the year ending March 31, 1978 (appendix II).

I will table comparable tables for the year ending March 31, 1979 as soon as they are available, approximately by mid-June.

Because of the cost, and staff time required to compile this information by district, I would be pleased to obtain, on request, the data for any particular district or districts.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

105. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy tell the Legislature what the permissible dose to the general population of (a) whole body radiation, (b) radiation to the thyroid would be, under the existing Atomic Energy Control Board licensing criteria and according to the revised criteria which have been proposed by the Inter-Organizational Working Group, in the event of each of the following dual-mode failure accidents: (i) a loss of coolant accident accompanied by a loss of containment; (ii) a loss of regular coolant accompanied by a failure to shutdown; (iii) loss of regulation plus failure to shutdown? Since the permissible exposures under the proposed revised criteria are based in part on the probability of the accident in question, would the minister table in the Legislature the assumptions and calculations used to determine the probability of each of these types of accident for the purpose of calculating permissible exposures? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

107. Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister table in the Legislature all studies and evaluations done by or for Ontario Hydro on the potential environmental effects, specifically the possibility of widespread radioactive contamination of lake waters, in the event of a major nuclear reactor accident in any generating plant located on the shores of Lake Huron or Lake Ontario. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

108. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy table in the Legislature all the Pickering Generating Station Quarterly Technical Reports produced by Ontario Hydro up to the present time. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

109. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy table in the Legislature all the Bruce

Generating Station Quarterly Technical Reports produced by Ontario Hydro up to the present time. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

110. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy table in the Legislature the Pickering Loss of Coolant Accident Report (October 1978) produced by Ontario Hydro. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

126. Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister table in the Legislature all technical documents and calculations produced or used by Ontario Hydro in assessing the probability of fuel melting in a Candu nuclear reactor in the event of loss of regular cooling accompanied by failure of the emergency core cooling system (ECCS)? What is the probability of fuel melting in the event of such an accident? [Tabled April 6, 1979.]

127. Mr. Cassidy: Since the vacuum building is an essential part of the containment system at the Bruce and Pickering nuclear generating stations, will the minister tell the Legislature for how long negative pressure can be maintained in the vacuum buildings at those generating stations without having to pump any air out of the vacuum building? If air had to be pumped out of the vacuum building how could it be purified to remove all radioactive contamination? Would the minister table in the Legislature all technical documents and reports produced by and for Ontario Hydro when he answers these first two questions? [Tabled April 6, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Additional time is required for the Ministry of Energy and Ontario Hydro to prepare the answers to these questions. It is anticipated that answers will be available for tabling in about one month, that is by about May 17, 1979.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. MacBeth moved resolution 7:

That, in the opinion of this House, Ontario should seek more distinctive separation of responsibilities and powers between the federal and provincial jurisdictions in future federal-provincial discussions concerning the British North America Act; that, while recognizing the need for provincial equalization payments, exclusive fields of taxation should be defined so that each government may finance its own responsibilities without subsidization from another; and further that provision should be made for this principle to be extended to municipal governments.

Mr. MacBeth: My main purpose, Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution, which is a matter that I have spoken to on a number of times before in this House and a matter in which I have some personal interest, is to provide the members who are here and those who, I hope, will assemble in the next few moments an opportunity to speak on what I consider to be one of the major issues in our country today. It is not necessarily the major issue but one of the major issues and certainly a major issue for the future of our country.

Under many of the pictures of the Fathers of Confederation, one will find the caption: "They builded better than they knew." That is the theme of the proposition that I put before the House this evening. What we have in the BNA Act is a good concept. It is not in need of any kind of revolution nor is it in need of any kind of a replacement, but rather of renewal with a few modernizations to keep in step with the spirit of the times. I say "renewal" because I believe we have departed from some of the original concepts and our country would be stronger if we returned to those original concepts.

I believe most of us in this House this evening consider ourselves first and foremost as Canadians and not as Ontarians. The latter nomenclature does not even have a proper ring to it. Likewise, I am bold enough to consider myself first and foremost a Canadian, but being Canadian does not mean that we must all be cast in the same mould.

I think we are no less Canadian because some of us believe that the strength of this country can best be maintained by a reasonable exercise of provincial rights. I think, rather, the reverse: Our strength as a country is in our diversity and our glory is in our infinite variety.

Maybe we, as taxpayers here in Ontario, have been somewhat remiss in standing up for our provincial rights, and our country today might be stronger if we had not allowed the encroachments that have taken place. In this respect I pay tribute to Quebec, because they at least know where they stand on this issue; they stand firmly for exercising the provincial rights as originally given to them under the British North America Act and, because they do so, I do not think that makes them any less Canadian.

I would like to quote for a minute from the report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, and that is a document which I think should receive more attention, both in this House and at all levels of government as well as from the press, which to a great extent has ignored that report. Quoting from page six:

"Not only must we learn to accept the fact of diversity, but we must also discover how to cherish and embrace it. If we can learn to believe that our neighbours' differences are not a threat to us and what we stand for, but a part of the neighbourhood within which our own identity finds free expression, we shall have moved a long way towards understanding what the Canada of tomorrow must be about."

Section 91 and section 92, as well as other sections, of the British North America Act set out the separation of powers to be exercised by the federal government and those that should be exercised by the provincial government — a true federal system, each supreme in its own distinctive field. Section 91 and section 92 are commonly referred to as the "separation of powers" sections, and the word "separation" to my mind is an important one: not the combining of power, not the sharing of power, and not co-operation in the use of power, but the separation of power. This separation of supreme powers is a principle which has become lost through a variety of circumstances over the past 112 years of our Confederation.

Some argue that because we are a dispersed nation we must be held together by strong lines of central power. All honourable members have heard the story of the railway that linked us together but, because it was such a tentative thing and our settlements were so separated over these 112 years, many have argued that we need to keep this country together by stronger power centrally and so cement it. The argument, I suppose, has some validation to it.

Then, again, times of war led to the provincial surrender of direct taxing powers to the central authority; those powers, even in times of peace, have not been federally vacated. The financial depression of the 1930s brought about amendments to the BNA Act to provide for unemployment insurance, and there were other amendments along the way that also added to the central government's power.

To my way of thinking, many of the judicial decisions that have come about, although they have gone both ways as to provincial and federal rights, on balance and, I think, in later days perhaps because of the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada, have for the most part favoured centralization of power. So we have experienced a gradual growth of central power—not by way of any clear-cut transfer of power, but by way of encroachment and dilution.

The most insidious encroachment on provincial power has been by way of income tax, a source which, true, is open as a means of direct taxation not only to the federal government, but also to the province. Yet until recent years the pot of income tax was so drained by the federal siphon that there was little left for the provincial sponge. This enabled the federal government to invade almost every field of provincial power by offering grants for education, for highways, for health, for buildings and for building senior citizens' homes and other types of buildings, but they have all been given conditional upon doing it their way. That is the way of the federal government.

The encroachments however, have not been all one way. In fairness, while Ottawa has been building parks in Toronto—and I don't know why Ottawa should be building parks in Toronto—Ontario has been building airports throughout the province and trying to out-CBC the CBC. It is no wonder the country is somewhat confused.

What is good for the Maritimes is not necessarily good for the Prairies, but regrettably the rules are the same.

Mr. Gaunt: The Joe Clark of the Legislature.

Mr. MacBeth: What might go over and be very suitable in British Columbia is not necessarily the suitable way to do it in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Kerrio: You wouldn't dare be a PC in BC.

Mr. MacBeth: I did not get the significance of that. Over in this corner I am a little deaf, I'm getting a little old, so I do not hear all these clever remarks. However, let me return to my subject.

The rules are the same throughout the country because to get these grants you must comply. While provinces are encouraged to spend a dollar of provincial income to get a dollar of federal income, the resulting value may only be $1.50 for the $2 that are in fact spent. Only the Canadians are the losers.

Mr. Speaker, I am not meaning this to be a speech geared at the political time today, because when the Conservatives were in power in Ottawa there was little change in this regard. The Conservatives were not ready to change the rules at that time either, but I am saying these rules must be examined now because only the Canadian citizens as a whole, are the losers.

Where one level of government in 1967 might have been able to build a road or a school, it now takes co-operation among three or four levels. Co-operation is a great ideal and one that we all look on with favour in the same way as motherhood, but this matter of co-operation is a great hindrance to public achievement. It is the bureaucrat's delight.

Some years ago, I had the good fortune to take a series of lectures in political science from Robert MacGregor Dawson. I am trying to curry a little favour with the Liberals at this point, because Robert MacGregor Dawson was one of the editors of the diaries of William Lyon Mackenzie King. If he could handle that, I think he could handle a great many other things. I do put a great deal of faith in the maxim he used to try to teach us when we were students under his guidance. His theory was simply this: Responsible government is dependent upon the spending power being the taxing power, and likewise, the taxing power being the spending power. Through these 112 years we have departed a long way from that principle, yet, I think that was one of the basic principles of the Fathers of Confederation.

I have seen fit to enter my resolution. I believe we need a return to distinctive fields of power, as conceived by those who built better than we give them credit for building, who had a keener eye for progress and a truer understanding of Canadian unity than many of today's theorists. They realized the need of equalizing payment. My motion, you will note, provides that equalized payments should be continued. There is no reason why the wealthiest province should receive a nickel from the federal government to pay for those items its own provincial government could supply if it had the tax source to do so.

[8:15]

The same principle applies to municipal governments. I know there are certain problems with municipal governments where they don't have access to taxes and I see some difficulty in giving them access to taxes; but I think that can be overcome by unconditional grants. But I would prefer we try to find some way whereby they themselves could tax that money, rather than depend on a handout from the provincial level. But, in theory, I think the principle I am putting forward applies at their level as well as to the provincial level. They should not be "poor cousins" but should have enough fields or access to money—certainly, if there is no other way, by conditional grants so that they, in turn, can look after their own responsibilities.

I am sorry that time does not permit more elaboration on this but I simply mention it in passing: that, if it applies to the provincial level, it applies likewise to the municipal.

Our present position on taxation is in inverse relationship to the services rendered. The federal government, with the greatest power to tax, is charged with providing the least costly services. For example, defence. This is probably the heaviest matter that the federal government is charged with looking after under the BNA Act.

It is charged with monitoring the financial system. That in itself should not be a very heavy expenditure. It is charged with such matters as external affairs and running a post office and things of that nature. They are not the big items of expenditure yet they are the ones that have the greatest source of expenditures. Whereas the province is charged with looking after the real heavy expenditure items: health, education, highways and welfare.

In fact, sir, it is my contention that, if Parliament Hill in Ottawa should disappear tonight—I am not advocating it—it would be a month before we missed it. If Queen's Park disappeared tonight—

Mr. Kerrio: That's what will happen if Joe Clark gets in.

Mr. MacBeth: You'll like the next line. If Queen's Park disappeared tonight, the people might miss us in a week. I'm hoping my wife might miss me before that but the people generally might not miss us for a week. However, if any of our municipal governments disappeared tonight and the water was not in the taps tomorrow morning, disaster, as we know it, would have struck.

In closing, I draw your attention to the following recommendations of the Task Force on Canadian Unity. On page 15, beginning with item 30, there are these recommendations which, I believe, support the resolution I have put forward:

"The present distribution of legislative and executive powers should be clarified and adjusted to contemporary needs and realities." To that I agree.

"37. The use of a list of exclusive powers for Parliament and a list of exclusive powers for provincial legislatures should be retained in a new Canadian constitution." And I say three cheers for that.

"38. Concurrent jurisdiction should be avoided, wherever possible, through a more precise definition of exclusive powers. Wherever powers are concurrent, a federal or provincial paramountcy should be stipulated."

Then, finally, 39, and I'm not advocating this one but I think it's of interest: "The residual powers should be assigned to the provincial legislatures." That I'm not buying and I certainly don't buy all of the report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity. But I'm suggesting to this House that this document deserves more study than it has received. Many of the recommendations in it I find are in support of the position I hold personally—not all of them and I referred to 39. I don't go so far as to suggest that residual powers should be provincial. I think they're fine where the Fathers of Confederation put them.

So I am saying that the BNA Act is not such a bad document. I couldn't care less whether it is patriated or not. I know that is a major issue to some people; to me, it is peripheral. I think there is much need for looking at it again and updating it; but more by way of a return to it as it was, rather than the way we have interpreted it. I hope, when our government again sits down to discuss this at a provincial-federal conference, that it will take some of the thoughts I have expressed tonight into consideration at that time.

The document that has been produced by Mr. Pepin and Mr. Robarts, among others, is a commendable document. It speaks about a future together. I think if we adopt some of those recommendations and give some serious thought to how the constitution of our country can be updated and improved, rather than dealing with some of the other matters we seem to be tied up with in the political sense, we will indeed have a bright future together for the next 100 years to come.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Humber has two minutes remaining. Does he wish to reserve them?

Mr. MacBeth: I would rather share them with somebody else.

Mr. Sweeney: I would begin by complimenting the member for introducing such a resolution, given the present sense of disunity in our country today, at the two levels which he so aptly identifies—between federal and provincial on the one hand and between provincial and municipal on the other hand. It is well that we do take some time in this Legislature, to re-examine what our own feelings are about these types of relationships.

I would also compliment the member for clearly pointing out the areas where we should direct our attention. On the one hand, he talks about a clear separation of responsibilities and powers among the various levels of government. I'm a little bit hesitant about the use of the word "separation"; I very much like the distinctive aspect of it. Unfortunately, in our country today that word "separation" has too many negative connotations, and I feel a little bit uneasy about it. But I think I understand what the member has in mind. I think he's made his point pretty clearly as to what he meant by it.

I also want to compliment him for identifying the fact that even though there will be some distinct powers more clearly identified and more clearly recognized than what they are now, he still recognizes there needs to be the continuing principle of extended equalization among the various parts of our country. We can't cut them so fine that we leave everyone out there floating on their own and doing the best they possibly can with whatever resources there are available to them. The member continues to recognize that's not how a confederation works.

Finally, I want to compliment him for taking that next logical step. I would say for a member of that government, particularly a former minister of that government, it takes courage to take that next step and say: "Look, fellows, it also works the next step down. Just as the federal government may not always play ball the way we want with the provinces, it is equally true that the provinces—this province being one of them—don't always play ball the way the municipalities would like it to be done."

I think the member will probably recall from time to time the interjections that come from this side of the House, when the Premier (Mr. Davis) in particular draws a bead on the deficiencies of the federal government with respect to its dealings with the provinces. We can usually identify some parallel situation where the provinces—

Mr. Kerrio: Grossly unfair.

Mr. Sweeney:—haven't really been all that fair with the municipalities. For these reasons—for identifying the issues and for taking it all the way—I would certainly compliment that member.

I stand in support of this resolution. The principle behind it, the guiding spirit behind it, is one I can clearly identify with.

The reason for supporting it is because in our society today I think one of the main problems we face is a muddying of the waters. Far too often we have arranged things at the government level and at the various social levels where no one is really responsible. There are so many people who have their hands in the pot. There are so many cooks in the kitchen that it's very difficult to identify who is responsible. That, of course, is not something that has been deliberately designed. As the member has so clearly pointed out, it's something that has happened over the last century.

It is certainly difficult for us to go back to 1867, to 1864, when the British North America Act was being drafted, and to see into the minds of the Fathers of Confederation; to begin to appreciate the state of the country as it was at that time; to recognize the social conditions, the economic conditions, the vast transportation problems, simply being able to communicate with one another, that existed at that time, and then try to transpose that kind of mentality many years hence into 1979. It just couldn't have been done. We have to appreciate the fact that many of the things that have happened have just happened. As the expression sometimes goes, they "grewed", like Topsy.

We recognize that. We recognize that far too often the various levels of governments are unintentionally, I would say in most cases, interfering with each other's jurisdictions. So we should do anything which will more clearly identify who is responsible for what—number one. Secondly, we should make it much more possible for the level of government responsible for providing a service to also be responsible for raising the necessary funds to pay for that service.

I find it increasingly ludicrous to see these transfer payments flowing back and forth between the various levels of government. Just take, for example, the ones between the provincial government and municipal government. The local property taxpayer has to fund a number of what I would call human services—services for education, services for parts of health, services for various welfare programs or social services programs. At the same time, the local municipality has to provide for what we call the hard services—the road, the police, the sewers, the fire departments, these kinds of things. And there's money flowing back and forth between them.

It would seem to make so much more sense if we could clearly identify it by saying this is your area of responsibility and you use your local tax base to provide the funds to pay for those responsibilities. The same thing should be told the provinces instead of having money flowing back and forth from the federal to the provincial government.

The member himself has clearly recognized that's not going to work in all cases. All levels of government don't have equal access to taxing sources, and we have to take that factor into consideration. But surely we can clear the muddled lines a great deal more than what they are at the present time.

I also think it would clear up some of the present problems in terms of what the money is used for. It has already been raised in this House on two different occasions that in this year alone the federal transfer funds to Ontario—first of all for post-secondary education—has not been used for that purpose. Neither was the federal transfer of funds to the province for health services used for that purpose.

I think members on this side of the House can quite legitimately complain about this. The people who are operating our post-secondary system and the people who are operating our health system are concerned because they don't have enough money to provide the services they have been told they should be providing. One of the reasons we complain is that we see dollars coming from the upper level of government to this level and not being used for the original purpose.

I think the government of Ontario leaves itself open to criticism when we have that kind of transfer arrangement and we use those dollars for other purposes. If the province were to raise its own funds for those areas for which it is responsible—health, social services, education, all the way through—then we would have less concern with that kind of problem.

I think we would also need to clearly recognize—this is the point that we referred to a few minutes ago—that there are inequalities in this country of ours. I want to go on record as saying very strongly I believe in the need for a strong, well-endowed, central government. I do not believe you can have any kind of a federation or any kind of a confederation if you do not have a strong central government.

There is a very distinctive difference between the type of federation we have here in Canada and the one they have down in our sister country in the United States. There, as the member has drawn to our attention, the residual powers in the United States rest with the states. That's the way their fathers designed their program. On the other hand, our constitution clearly gives the residual powers to our central government.

I think that was a wise move. Our countries are different. In no way do we compare with the United States. We are stretched from sea to sea in a relatively long, thin line. Our economic problems, because of our climate, because of our distribution difficulties, because of the manufacturing runs we can have, are very different. Our resource base is very different. Therefore, wisdom was shown many years ago when our Fathers of Confederation gave the residual powers to the central government. I think that wisdom has been borne out.

I was very pleased to hear the member indicate he would not support changing that because it is through that mechanism that we have the opportunity to take a look at other parts of this country which are in greater need than Ontario, which are less well off than we are and, through that mechanism, provide the necessary assistance and help they would not be able to fund by themselves. That is what is going to keep this country together, as it has in the past.

In closing, I want to indicate I do support the spirit of this. I support the distinctiveness of identifying programs and identifying their financing with, at the same time, a spirit of co-operation between all levels.

Mr. Breagh: I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate because I feel this is one area where duly elected politicians in this House have not exercised their prerogative to discuss something of national importance. I cannot support this resolution, not because I am basically against the notions described in here, but for some rather important reasons upon which I would like to elaborate.

This House has not given its members the opportunity to discuss at any length what should happen in the constitutional reform program which will be carried on, in some form—whether anybody likes it or not—over the next decade in Canada. That is a shame because that is saying only members on the government side—and I dare say that, even over there, it will only be a very small number of people—will contribute input to federal-provincial constitutional meetings.

There are members on this side of the House. There are backbench members on the Tory side of the House who have contributions to make about the shape, size, form and format of this country. If we are serious about this, then we should at least be prepared to listen to one another.

I do not see, frankly, a sharp consensus forming about where this nation is going and what it will look like, or how it will function, ten or 20 years from now. I hope there is, at least among those elected to public office in Canada, a concern about it and a desire to express opinions and to exchange thoughts.

The reason I can't support this resolution is pretty simple. The process of keeping the nation together and the process of changing the rules of the game are matters of rather delicate negotiation. None of us will be able to sit down and write out a new constitution for Canada which does exactly what we want it to do in exactly the way we want. It will be negotiation between the federal government, between the provincial governments in Canada and, I would also hope, a matter at least of consideration, if not negotiation, among the people of Canada. There are a lot of things which have to be done before we get to that stage and I am not prepared to go to the bargaining table with one locked-in position.

There are some small deficiencies in this resolution which I would like to discuss—at least a little bit. The strength of the resolution is barely this. Each member of this House now has an opportunity to express an opinion and, in private members' hour, a personal opinion. I think such opinions are sadly lacking.

There is a need, regarding this one issue, to set aside those things we call political parties and to speak as Canadian citizens and more importantly, as politicians in the Canadian political system, because we do have a different perspective on that.

I am concerned, and it is happening again in this federal election campaign, that the political process itself works against a sensible and rational extension of the discussions, debate and negotiation about constitutional reform.

A basic problem in this kind of resolution is to say we could find a simple answer that says the provincial governments will do this, the municipal governments will do this, and the federal government will do that. Those are the roles, the responsibilities of each of those levels of government.

I am the first to admit the thing is now without question, a "dog's breakfast." In Canada, one can't look at a road project or a post office or an arena, or virtually any kind of government activity in the broadest sense, without finding almost all levels of government participating in that in some way, sometimes funding, sometimes exercising control powers and sometimes blocking. I think that is in part the string of truth that holds this resolution together and makes it certainly worth the consideration of the House. That does need to be sorted somewhat. To suggest it could be handled so simplistically as to sort them all out so neatly and cleanly would be to deny there are parts of this country that don't have the population base or the taxing power or the financial support that, for example, Ontario has.

To say that Ontario could utilize a sorting system because it has eight million people and a financial base as strong as most countries in Europe, and to say what's right for Ontario is right for Prince Edward Island, is not fair and is not being realistic.

There are needs in other parts of the country and the basic requirement, in my mind, for keeping this country together as a unit is to recognize that there are differences, very distinct ones, very different needs and very different abilities from one end of this country to the other, and that there is great potential here to be realized. But if it's to be realized by Canada as a nation, we have to be a little more sensitive about it than this resolution would allow me to be at this time.

I beg forgiveness of the mover. In normal circumstances, if this was just private members' business and we weren't dealing with a country that has some very definite problems, I would be less concerned. We have a formally elected government in power in a major province in our country saying, officially at least, that it wants to break away from the rest of the country. That's a very difficult thing to try to digest when one believes, as I do, that one is a Canadian above all other things.

I believe I am different from other people in the world and that my culture, my arts, where I work, how I work and the conditions under which I work are unique in the world. They aren't the same as the Americans'. I would be the first one to say that though my culture may be very heavily influenced by American media, I want it to be distinctly Canadian. I want people in Canada to recognize that for a variety of reasons, some economic, some cultural, some having to do with linguistics and some having to do with the lifestyle we live, I'm happy to be what is now called a Canadian.

I'm a little concerned that the other people who live around me haven't come to that realization or at least don't want to talk too much about it. I want that. I believe a strong federal government is vital to this nation. It can't function, as other nations in the world can, with a disunited and disjointed system of government.

This country began in the very first instance because there was a crying need to put together people who live a long distance from other people who were Canadians. That's still true today. It differs in many contexts and mass communications and mass media have changed many aspects of that, but that fundamental truth still derives. We are still in many senses a frontier nation, clustered together in places like Ontario in the southern-most part of the province, with that vast potential for resource development, for expansion of our economy and for expansion of our culture to develop a Canadian identity left pretty much in isolation in the northern part of this province and in the northern parts of this country.

I don't pretend to be a hard-nosed negotiator on this. I wouldn't negotiate sovereignty-association with Rene Levesque because he hasn't bothered to explain to me what that means. I'm not prepared to say that this province, this country or any one of us should take a hard and fast position on any of these things until we have discussed what exactly we're putting on this bargaining table. What are we negotiating? What are the ramifications? If I can't get my personal viewpoint accepted around that bargaining table on any given issue, what other issues are there available to discuss that might be negotiable?

I think that this is, brief though it might be, an important debate in the history of this House. I might congratulate the member for providing during private members' business that opportunity for even a limited number of us to talk even for 10 minutes about this particular issue. I can't accept his suggestion just now. I appreciate the opportunity to engage in that debate. I think this House will be well served if we as other private members put in resolutions of a similar nature to provide the forum for that discussion. I am not prepared to leave that to the media. I am not prepared to leave that to other politicians in the middle of a political campaign.

I am crying out for a need for members of this House, in the absence of a political campaign and without the hindrances sometimes of party obligations, to speak as individual members of our own political system, to offer our own personal, political and just Canadian points of view and to let that long and involved process of negotiation, discussion and dialogue take place because I think that this country of all the countries in the world has a potential for greatness that has never been realized.

Our constitution, to me as a politician, creates great problems that perhaps my brothers and sisters making trucks for a living don't see. It's my obligation to point out some of those things. I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate. That is probably the most important opportunity that members of this House will have perhaps even during this session.

I am not prepared yet to say that this House ought to adopt hard and fast decisions on any given aspect of that. The Premier has made his point quite clear. He's not prepared to accept any hard and fast decisions on debating or accepting sovereignty negotiations. That's fine.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Breagh: Could I just end on one note, Mr. Speaker? I would ask that other members of this House in future private members' hours provide other occasions when as individual members of this House we can take part in this ongoing discussion.

Mr. Cureatz: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great pleasure and an opportunity for me at this time to take part in this debate. As the member for Oshawa has indicated, this should be an ongoing discussion, especially at the time of turmoil that is taking place within our confederation system.

Tonight let me express some of my thoughts in regard to the resolution and also my support of this resolution. I should say it is easy in theory to support it and avoid discussion of concrete proposals that might tend to shift this country toward extremes of either decentralization or centralization. Regardless of how a division of powers is fashioned, there is a need to add more definition to what is at present a big constitutional framework.

I do not think it is at all difficult to establish this need. One can also safely say that a feeling shared by many is that Canada should continue to have strong governments at both the federal and provincial levels. In the broadest sense, the fact that we have a balance of powers in this country is not a matter of choice. Clearly, we are too large a country with too many regional differences to have either a unitary government or one with highly centralized power. Besides, unique cultures such as our francophone population obviously require a large and effective local or provincial government to ensure their protection.

There is a limit to decentralization which would be encountered if our central government were weakened to the point where it was unable to manage the national economy or provide for defence or where citizens cease to identify with it as a government of all Canadians. We can conclude that a strong federation requires this kind of balance or sharing of powers, but the precise definition of that balance is an enormously complex matter.

The principle of avoiding overlap of powers has merit from two standpoints. Firstly, and very simply, it is essential that some areas not be overlapped through legislative authority as even the limited use of power at one level would negate or undermine existing interests. This is what I believe has prompted the member's resolution. Overlapping of power can result in frustrations between various levels of government and it can cause conflict as well as resentment on the part of the government which has not achieved paramountcy. Also, as has been mentioned, duplication and unwarranted growth in bureaucracy are tremendously costly and sometimes lead to difficulties in ensuring that government accountability is maintained.

While I strongly endorse what I feel is the intent of this resolution, that is, to reduce overlap and burdensome red tape, there is an argument to be stated for not assigning exclusive powers to either level of government in a constitutional reform. The feeling has been expressed that exclusive power results in rigid interpretation of certain legislation. Certainly there have been periods in Confederation when Canadians have experienced just this kind of rigidity.

However, the extended use of federal-provincial spending powers, a delegation of administrative powers, some widening of concurrent fields of government power and also more flexible judicial interpretations of the constitution have led away from compartmentalization. Consequently, a stricter definition of "powers," or the assigning of exclusive powers, or indeed a shift away from concurrence in powers, is not a measure that will cause us to lose our highly valued flexibility. Indeed, I have no difficulty in supporting a resolution calling for more distinct separation of responsibilities.

[8:45]

However, I do not feel that total separation of powers is possible. Canada is a nation made up of competing viewpoints but not necessarily always conflicting. We are diverse and we are regional. Interests are not always consistent, nor should they be, and it would be unrealistic to expect otherwise. It is, therefore, also unrealistic to form the belief that any one model for a strict division of powers would be acceptable to each province and to Ottawa as well. For this reason, too, I would think it unreasonable to assume that we can or even should eliminate all areas of concurrent jurisdiction. Canada's need for compromise, tolerance and flexibility would undoubtedly overshadow attempts to neatly and consistently define the broad range of powers in which each level of government has an interest.

The Canadian Bar Association's committee on the constitution made the obvious but pertinent observation that even at very basic levels cultural considerations impinge on national economic policy. Education, one of the so-called guarded provincial cultural powers, we all know has, through its effect on labour skills, a profound impact on the performance of the labour force. As the committee on the constitution stated, "Local matters should be provincial but when, in our interdependent world, is anything purely local?"

That committee pointed out also that Canada as a nation and as a particular cultural unit must at the federal level seek to assure the preservation of cultural ties if we are going to remain distinct in any way from the very influential culture to the south of us.

These two statements serve to illustrate the constitutional committee's opinion that while the traditional viewpoint of economic-cultural division of power is not wrong, it is very parochial.

Most situations can be looked at from several perspectives. This is certainly the case when we discuss matters of taxation. When the broad division of powers we think about today was incorporated into the British North America Act, it was generally held that the costs of education, welfare and administration of justice could largely be met through limited taxation or, where necessary, through constitutional subsidies. It was for this reason that provincial taxation powers were restricted to what we call direct taxation.

History, of course, has charted the changing revenue needs of the three levels of Canadian government. In 1946, almost 72 per cent of government expenditures were made at the federal level; by 1975, this figure was reduced to 43.7 per cent. Provincial and municipal expenditures account now for well over half of the Canadian spending. The point has been made, therefore, that the actual allocation of taxing resources should be broad and overlapping in order that changing needs can be met with shifts in the distribution of taxes.

The Canadian Bar Association's committee on the constitution suggests a rationale for ascribing such broad taxation powers to both the federal and provincial levels. In its own words: "The federal government must have the resources to respond to whatever eventuality the country may face, and it must not be forgotten that federal taxing power is needed not only for the purposes of raising revenue; it is essential for economic policy. Finally, it is the only government in a position to redress the economic balances among the provinces—balances flowing in no small measure from the creation of a single country. It is evident, too, that the provinces need the financial resources to meet their own responsibilities which, in a federation as decentralized as ours, are indeed very broad as well.

"This is not to say that the tax fields cannot be better defined. We certainly have matters to clear up, most notably the question of avoidance of multiple taxation and provincial limitations to taxing within our provinces. There is no doubt a need during constitutional revision to search for mechanisms that will ensure a balance of powers but at the same time reconcile competing interests. Limiting federal spending powers through provincial consensus would be one such example."

Mr. Lawlor: Are you saying that the provinces should not have indirect power?

Mr. Cureatz: The distribution of power or the role of government, if you will, now more than ever require definition if Canadians are going—

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, he is reading. Are you saying—

Mr. Cureatz: —to live in a harmonious and constructive manner. I, therefore, commend the member for Humber for his introduction of this resolution.

I am so pleased that the member for Lakeshore has interjected on my speech. If he would bear with me, I might read passages from his wonderful book that he gave me—

Mr. Lawlor: Don't do that; don't do that.

Mr. Warner: Read his book.

Mr. Lawlor: Stick to the business of the House.

Mr. Cureatz: —but I will not intrude on the member for Humber's wonderful resolution at this time; I will forgo my time to the next speaker.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I first of all commend the honourable member for Humber for introducing this particular resolution. I do so because I think it is very important that we have people within provincial legislatures across this country who show interest and concern for questions of a national nature. There has been a tendency in recent years for many, particularly those who serve at the provincial level, to view all matters in the provincial context and not to look beyond the horizons of the provincial scene. The fact that a member of the provincial Legislature has a concern about the national unity question and about constitutional questions as they relate to the country as a whole, I think is commendable. Certainly, he should be complimented by all member of the House for that. I do see some cause for concern.

Mr. Lawlor: You would have to be pretty backwards not to. Does he live in the same country?

Mr. Bradley: My remarks will be similar to those expressing the concern of the member for Oshawa who found some fault with the resolution. The circumstances I see at the present time across this country are such that I see an assault on the powers and responsibilities of the federal government, powers and responsibilities I feel are very much required if we are to deal with problems that beset this country in a cross country manner and in a national manner.

The provincial premiers, particularly those who have very good resources, resources which are often related to energy and therefore can be marketed at a very high price, are naturally jealous of retaining responsibility and control over those particular resources. However, I recall very well the speech—I believe it was on the last speech from the throne or a budget speech—made by the member for Kent-Elgin. He listed some of the resources and some of the assets this country has as being national assets. I recall his speech in which he talked about the fish of the Maritimes being the fish of Canada; the Prairies meaning every bit as much to a person from Ontario as they would to a person, from the prairie provinces; Alberta oil being Canadian oil; hydro-electric power produced in the province of Quebec should be Canadian hydro-electric power, and so on. He was emphasizing the responsibility of those of us who believe in a strong national government and, indeed, believe in the future of this country, to ensure there is the necessary mechanism for the federal government to legislate in these particular areas.

We have had a situation evolve over the last several years where provincial premiers have now probably reached the point of great power. We certainly had this with the major provinces, and in almost all of the provinces. The provincial premiers are now viewed as people with much greater powers, with much more responsibility, with much more prestige than federal cabinet ministers. There was a time in this nation's history when many felt the cabinet minister or cabinet ministers from various provinces were those to be looked up to to speak on behalf of those provinces. I think this has changed substantially. The federal-provincial conference, in many ways, has replaced the cabinet meeting as being an important area, at least of public discussion, if not of bringing about solutions to problems.

There is a natural tendency for provincial premiers to see things in the provincial context. I am very concerned when I see resolutions coming forward looking for precise definitions in the context of times when many people, particularly those of the vocal majority at the present time, advocate more and more exclusive provincial powers. It is my view that national goals may be reached or attained only with participation of the federal government.

The problem that arises, and the member for Humber has pointed this out very well and others recognize this in this House, is the same problem that exists in the relationship between the provincial government and the municipal government. That is, funding in the initial stages of any particular program that may have a good deal of merit is often rather lucrative. When the crunch comes, when there is a need for restraint, it is always restraint at somebody else's expense. It is easy for the national government to indicate it is slashing budgets as long as the budgets it is going to slash are those which are going to affect provincial jurisdictions.

We see a similar situation from time to time at the provincial level when the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, or the Treasurer, indicates we're going to have a program of restraint in this province and we're darned well going to do it on the backs of the municipalities.

Therefore, this problem has existed in the past and I am sure it is certainly part of the reason for the member for Humber advocating a resolution of this kind; to have those kinds of definitions, to try to avoid those kinds of problems, by placing the right to taxation in the hands of the various levels of government to have the ability to look after their own financial problems, those that lie within their jurisdiction.

As I said, I do see problems when we have an assault on the federal powers when defining these precisely, because there are times and circumstances in a nation's history when the federal government must act, and there must be sufficient flexibility within a constitution to allow the federal government to act. To define these powers too precisely, to talk about exclusive control over areas, would remove that kind of flexibility and would, I am afraid, to use an overworked term, tend to balkanize this country.

The member has talked about the need for the continuation of equalization payments which I'm happy to hear, as a member from a province which we consider to be a have province—at least we have in the past and I think most of us at the present time, by our own definition consider us to be a have province, a province blessed with some of our own natural resources, with industry certainly, and with the capital necessary to carry out programs that are very useful and beneficial to our population. So I would agree with that. I think it goes almost without saying if we believe in national unity that we must have a continuation of equalization payments.

I don't think we will ever reach a situation in this country, however, where each level of government will be able to finance its own responsibilities without subsidization from another level. That is always going to be necessary if we wish to achieve national goals, whether those goals be in terms of education, the social welfare field, transportation or other areas. There are certain national goals which can only be achieved with the financial participation of the federal government and the possibility of the federal government having at least some jurisdiction in that area.

I do think we have a need, however, for long term commitments from the federal government in relation to the provincial government, from the provincial government in relation to municipal governments, so that there can be a planning process, and so that programs which are set in place be allowed to continue for a long period of time and not be discontinued without meaningful consultation with the other level of government. I think that would be a difficult goal to reach, nevertheless a goal we should be seeking.

It seems to me that at the present time, looking at the national picture, there are only two areas in this country where people feel they are genuinely benefiting from Confederation, where people feel they are Canadians first and provincials second. One area, of course, is in Ontario where we are very favoured because the national capital is here, the financial capitals of this nation are here, where we have everything in central Canada, so it is natural that we in Ontario, I suppose, feel Canadian first and Ontarian second.

The other place in this country, I think, would be in the Maritimes where they are often very dependent on equalization grants from the federal government for many of their financial resources. Other parts of the country don't have that same feeling perhaps and we can instil it only with a strong national government.

I would hope that the feeling would be in Alberta, for instance. I view with some concern that if we were to allow Alberta—and I don't wish to look at personalities so much in this case—to have exclusive control over oil, that would be fine if you were in Alberta, but for the people of Ontario to know that Alberta would have exclusive control over its oil, that it would be a provincial resource to be marketed at the world price as we market, I suppose in Ontario, some of our goods at the world price—and we certainly can be subjected to criticism in certain areas—would be an abhorrent situation for the people as a whole.

Therefore, I am once again concerned at precise powers being given exclusively to a provincial government in an area as important as resources development.

Mr. Lawlor: Not another country in the world does that. You get your gasoline cheaper in Colombia or Venezuela. They don't sell domestically on the same basis.

[9:00]

Mr. Bradley: I think the member for Lakeshore makes a very valid point. This is one of the few countries where that goal would be a goal of any person within the country.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on this resolution. The resolution, as it appears on the paper, is one which is very difficult not to support, particularly inasmuch as it's been proposed by the member for Humber, who has an undoubted reputation for honesty and sincerity in everything he does in this House. I have never found a time in which that has ever been doubted.

Mr. Bradley: He is putting that in his brochure next time.

Mr. Bounsall: After having said all that, I hate then to add my "but." The "but" isn't a very big one and it is a conditional "but" as well. But the member cannot, in a simple resolution, in an hour and a quarter's time of debate, treat with the whole subject of how we may revise the British North America Act. He's picked a small portion dealing with taxation, and he's confined himself in his remarks to the tax-sharing situation and the distinct separation of powers that would accompany that.

The only problem is once you use the term "discussions concerning the BNA Act," the whole field opens up to your mind. Despite oneself—although one is attempting to think only of what's written in the resolution—all these other concepts start coming into play and one finds it difficult to agree with what's written because that will affect some other area. That's really the only major drawback I see with the resolution.

We take one small part of what needs to be discussed to keep this country together or to have a redefined act under which we and all the provinces would operate in the best interests of one country, and we leave out via this resolution all the other things which come to mind. I cannot disagree that there should be a distinct separation of powers. We get into problems when we don't. Certainly in terms of cleaning up the areas of what is taxable by one jurisdiction vis-à-vis the other—particularly the member's continued recognition in his resolution that equalization payments should continue—speaks to the area of national unity. This is certainly something which must be maintained if there's any hope of that continuing. And certainly I applaud his recognition that we must do the same thing with our municipalities in terms of defining where their tax base is, where their taxes will come from, and implying thereby what is very desperately needed—that there should be a larger tax base for the municipalities, a redefined one, which does not leave them so wholly dependent upon the very regressive property taxation system we have now. The implication that will occur is all positive in the member's resolution.

However, what also comes to mind are some examples of this in the past. I believe it was in the spring of 1972, in a provincial-federal conference, the federal government—in terms of doing what this resolution would do—more clearly define one area of taxation—said to the provinces: “We will give you exclusive jurisdiction over succession duties. We will step completely out of the succession duty field so the provinces may have that jurisdiction completely.”

What do we find seven years later? Ontario, having been given that area of taxing power, steps out of it entirely by abolishing succession duties in the province at the very time when only three per cent of the population has an estate—when they pass away—of $300,000 or more. It's therefore not a very onerous burden on the general population of Ontario, but we decide to abolish it.

There's no doubt a philosophical difference between the member for Humber and me about whether we should tax moneys that pass from generation to generation. I strongly think we should. We are all born, or should be born, equal in this world. One does not need, or should not have, a silver or gold spoon in one's mouth or hand, in order to continue.

Mr. J. Reed: I wonder what they're saying about you in Milton tonight? The high school will never be the same.

Mr. Bounsall: The real means of equalization, in terms of equal shots at opportunity, which is a good free-enterprise concept, should be one in which one starts out financially equal as well. The way you do this is to have succession duties. This is one area the federal government gave to the provinces. Ontario has now opted out completely.

On the other hand, there are advantages in more clearly defining the taxing power of each jurisdiction because, in the shared programs we have, we now see the federal government backing out. The health field is clearly within provincial jurisdiction. In order to get the national health plan which came in in 1967, the federal government entered into a rather straightforward agreement with the provinces about how much it would pay in order to get that health plan established. Some few months ago, we had the federal government saying it was going to decrease those payments to the provinces in a systematic way—I believe over the next five years—only some 12 years after instituting it. The provinces are now left holding the bag financially for the health system worked out in agreement some 12 years ago.

So, in retrospect, that's the way the central government operates in terms of such a well-defined area. And we, as a province—and all the other provinces—went into that agreement in all good faith, expecting that it would continue. Now we find that the condition we desperately need, the sharing of finances, will not continue in the form it started. It's that kind of separation which we very desperately need in this province, as embodied in the member's resolution.

The same thing is happening, of course, in the field of education. The federal government, in view of discussions of different tax sharings and different tax clarifications on who does what, and in the absence of clear delineation and definition, has passed along various grants in the field of education. Only we find, in this particular year, that now it's backing out on one quarter of the French-language education grants which it has provided in the past.

When I see this happening, and the ability of the federal government—the power it has—to change its mind on what it will cost-share with the province, the more I agree with the member in his resolution that those areas should be clearly defined. If there's an agreement on certain moneys to be transferred in view of a strict definition of the taxing power, then changes should not be allowed. The federal government should not be able to make changes unilaterally, as it has in the financing of our health system and in the grants to education; particularly in its decreased grants for French language instruction in this province which had just nicely come into effect.

It's hard, as I say, with a resolution dealing with the British North America Act—even though it deals with distinct separation of powers and, particularly, tax powers—not to get into the whole general area of the British North America Act. I feel very strongly that we need a strong central government in Canada and are running into danger in our definitions of balkanization of our provinces; we act as 10 different entities. This resolution could lead to that, although, of course, it doesn't specifically put any emphasis there.

We're just saying: “Let's define it more clearly.” I can't be against that, of course. I just wonder if this doesn't lead to a bit of balkanization because I, probably like the member for Humber, am a believer that Alberta's oil, Ontario's uranium and Ontario's hydro-electric power should be national resources; perhaps even more so than they are provincial resources. We need a government federally which will work out honest, fair arrangements that will cause this to occur.

I might just end by saying I was rather appalled that the Prime Minister of our country in the first week of the election campaign came out trying to make national unity an election issue. It is an area in which Canadians need calm, cool thought at all times and, above all, the ability to sit down and work out the arrangements that will keep this country one, rather than sloganeering at election time.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Bounsall: I was particularly affronted when he indicated that Canadians who didn't think national unity was an issue in this campaign were traitors. I would just say that for the first time in my life I feel most comfortable in my traitorous feelings, which I sometimes have.

INNOCENT PERSONS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Stong moved second reading of Bill 28, An Act to protect the Reputation of Innocent Persons from Untimely Publicity.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, in proposing this Act to Protect the Reputation of Innocent Persons from Untimely Publicity, I recognize the fact there are certain time constraints and restrictions on private members' bills, and I would like to reserve for myself the last five to seven minutes for the rebuttal of any arguments which may be proposed in opposition to my bill.

The bill itself is wholly adequate and required. I might say it arises out of a concern I have had for some 12 years now as a defence counsel practising before the courts and defending those who can be considered to be in the lower echelon of our society and those who find themselves confronted with, and perhaps in opposition to, the law, but at least those who find themselves before the due process of law.

The bill recognizes as inherent the proposition that each and every citizen of this country, of this province and of this city, stands innocent before the due process of law before the courts until he is proven, beyond all reasonable doubt, to be guilty. That is the prime and very fundamental principle of this bill.

In paying recognition to that premise, the bill also goes on to ban the publication of the names of those persons who find themselves charged with offences, whether they be provincial or federal offences, until the trial commences, and only until the trial commences. When the trial of an individual commences by way of a plea of guilty or a plea of not guilty, then the media can take over and report the actual occurrences and events in the courtroom.

The protection of a fair and open trial is in no way interfered with by this bill. This bill protects the reputation of an individual who finds himself before the courts charged with an offence.

The bill also sets out offences and punishments in the event of a conviction of an offence against this bill.

This bill has been attacked on grounds of constitutional validity. In my respectful submission to this House, there is no greater interest in any individual of this province or of this country than his own reputation and the protection of his own innocence. That is wholly within the civil rights aspect of each and every member of this country and this province. That is protected by the jurisdiction of the British North America Act and is guaranteed and relegated to provincial authority.

In my respectful submission, this bill is not unconstitutional and is not ultra vires this House; it falls wholly within the protection of the civil rights aspect of my reputation, Mr. Speaker, of your reputation and of everyone's reputation out there on the street. In that regard this bill is intra vires.

[9:15]

There is a concern that this bill curtails the freedom of the press. I submit to this House that the real issue to be concerned with here, and the real issue with which we are confronted in this bill is simply a recognition of the innocence which we uphold of every individual. We pay lip service to it daily before our courts and our laws are founded on it. It is a recognition of the innocence of an individual before the courts, when confronted with the due process of law and the freedom of the media to market the news, to sell the news, to sell newspapers and to sell broadcasts. That is the real issue as I see it, and that is what we must decide on.

There is a conception that the common good overrides that of the individual and there is some misconception, in my respectful submission, that the common good, being the mass of organization and the mass of people out there, has some overriding concern over individual concern.

Mr. J. Reed: Only the NDP can do that.

Mr. Lawlor: The NDP and the Pope.

Mr. Stong: I would like to refer to a lecture that was given by a well-known philosopher and humanitarian, Jacques Maritain at the University of Toronto as long ago as 1940.

Mr. Lawlor: He was one of my teachers.

Mr. Stong: I'd like to quote from that. He said: "The end of society is its common good, the good of the body politic."

Mr. Lawlor: You're telling me.

Mr. Stong: "But if one fails to grasp the fact that the good of the body politic is a common good of human persons as a social body itself, as a whole made up of human persons, this formula may lead in its turn to other errors of a collectivist or totalitarian type."

Mr. Lawlor: It's possible.

Mr. Stong: "The common good of society is neither a simple collection of private goods nor a good belonging to a whole, which draws the parts to itself as if they were purely means to serve itself alone. The common good is the good human life of a multitude of persons. It is their communion in the good life. It is, therefore, common to the whole and to the parts on whom it flows back and who must all benefit from it. Under pain of being itself denatured, such a good implies and demands the recognition of the fundamental rights of the person. It involves as its chief value the highest possible accession of persons to their life as persons."

As early as 1940, our humanitarians, our eventual lawmakers, those upon whom our jurists rely in determining law have indicated that it is the individual who is important in society because, without respect for the value, the importance and the dignity of the individual, we can never have a strong and respected community. It is only in that respect and upholding the freedoms and the dignities of the human being, the individual, that we can possibly hope to have laws that pertain to the common good, meaning the entire society. Society is structured on the individual.

Mr. Lawlor: Maritain would be ashamed of you.

Mr. Stong: I quoted right from Maritain from Scholasticism and Politics, 1940.

Mr. J. Reed: The member for Lakeshore has got to support this bill.

Mr. Stong: In my respectful submission, we must concern ourselves about this. In fact, all of our law is oriented and based on the fact of the recognition of the value of the individual human being in determining and protecting his freedom before the law, his freedom before us, his freedom before that giant branch of government which is the judiciary.

It is in that sense that I present this bill and say that it protects the individual. The paramount consideration is not the freedom to sell the news and not the freedom to market events, but to protect the rights, the dignity, the freedom and the reputation of each and everyone of us here and each and everyone of us out there. That's what this bill is all about—nothing more and nothing less.

It is simply a recognition of paramount consideration, of priorities. Where are our priorities as legislators? In my respectful submission, they lie in the protection of the individuals who make up the community and on whose back the community is formed.

This bill probably will be challenged tonight on the basis that it interferes with this freedom. I ask what is freedom. Do we recognize freedom? Is it licence? I respectfully submit it is not licence. No one has the right to play on the hardships of others and make a profit on it. No one has it. There isn't one in this House that would hold to that principle.

Is freedom such that it ought to tolerate irresponsibility or does freedom carry with it a demand which would guarantee the preservation of the individual and individual self-respect and the furtherance of common decency? To me that is an important part of freedom. That freedom does not pertain to the sale or the marketing of events or news. The paramount consideration is the individual.

This bill is not new; it is not foreign to our law. It is found in the Juvenile Delinquents Act, where the juvenile delinquent is protected from being named—not just before the trial, but right through his trial.

And there are other mechanisms built into the Criminal Code that permit a judge to ban the publishing of names and events as they occur in the court room and that is not foreign to our law either. Another example is the protection of an individual from any information arising out of his bail hearing or from any information arising out of a preliminary hearing.

I cannot take credit for it. It already exists in certain circumstances. But this law simply indicates that we must protect the individual prior to his trial. There are other mechanisms that are available. There are libel, slander, defamation of character suits that are available for any of those who are worried about rumours that may arise pending trial. This bill protects the individual prior to his trial.

I know the time is running on but I do have some other things that I would like to include. There are aspects of this bill that do not concern others—for instance, the secret arrests that may arise. This does not allow secret arrests or the clandestine incarceration of individuals. We have protections built into our law right now to abolish that and to protect an individual from being held unnecessarily. There are laws that govern that situation right now in existence that can be enforced and are enforced on a daily basis. Everyone is subject to this law.

Briefly summing up my argument, the side effects of this bill can be regarded—I did not introduce this bill for this purpose alone—but we all recognize that deterrents to crime are early detection and early trial. One of the side effects of this bill could very well be the pressure built up from the media themselves upon our judiciary to have early trials and not delay trials.

Those who want to sell the facts, those who want to have the facts known and reported to the public, can put pressure on our system to have early trials so that they can be on top of the situation. There is that possible side effect to guarantee there will be less time between the time of apprehension and charge and the time of trial at which full reporting can be made.

As late as yesterday, the Right Honourable Lord Justice Denning, Master of the Rolls of the House of Lords, speaking to the Advocates Society in Toronto, described lawyers as the backbone of upholding the law and order and the rule of law in a nation. They maintain the freedoms of the individual. He spoke to the Advocates Society and the Criminal Lawyers' Association of Toronto, and I might say that the Criminal Lawyers' Association has referred a letter to all the members in support of this bill on the grounds set out in it; and I don't have to reiterate them or dwell on them, because they are self-evident.

Mr. Lawlor: Yet they find your bill defective.

Mr. Stong: They find it defective, but not in principle; they would like to extend it farther.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the last five minutes for rebuttal.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the member for York Centre for having presented to us this evening a bill on an extremely important matter of substance which, unfortunately, we do not often have an opportunity to debate in this assembly. It brings to us the opportunity to debate the very delicate balance between fair trial and freedom of the press, a balance which has been described through the ages.

I would like to begin by quoting from Samuel Johnson's The Life of Milton, when he wrote:

"If every dreamer of innovations may propagate his projects, there can be no settlement; if every murmur at government may diffuse discontent, there can be no peace; and if every sceptic in theology may teach his follies, there can be no religion. The danger of such unbounded liberty and the danger of bounding it have produced a problem in the science of government which human understanding seems hitherto unable to solve."

So the member brings to us something which we have not yet been able to solve but with which we must wrestle from time to time, as we are doing tonight and no doubt will do for many years to come.

As we try to weigh the balance between fair trial and freedom of the press, it is only fair to remember that there are many reasons for an unfair trial. In addition to the chance that the press will not assist, we often have the problems of coerced confession, absence of competent counsel, racial prejudice, clogged court calendars, various economic discrimination, shabby conduct by attorneys in court on occasion, archaic attitudes sometimes by those who are sitting in judgement, sometimes political pressure or community prejudice and, unfortunately in some cases, simple corruption. There are many pressures upon the courts; not just the press. I think it is wise for us to keep that in mind as we try to decide what bounds, if any, should be placed upon the press.

There are obviously many jurisdictions which have approached the subject, and two in particular I found interesting. One was the state of Oregon, which issued a very lengthy statement of principles. What the state of Oregon attempted to do was to outline principles which it felt had to be adhered to if the media were to cover trials. They are too lengthy to read into the record tonight, but they did start off by saying, "The news media have the right and the responsibility to print and to broadcast the truth." That in itself may pose a problem, but at least they recognized that was the starting point.

They then went on to list, on several pages, guidelines for disclosure and reporting of information on criminal proceedings, guidelines on photography, guidelines surrounding juvenile court proceedings—they went into quite a few details. They saw fit in the state of Oregon that they should have these kinds of guidelines for the media to adhere to. Similarly, the state of Washington drew up similar guidelines; there were some variants to Oregon's, but again they felt the guidelines were extremely important.

[9:30]

I was interested to note that in a little document called Advice to the Press they put forward several items which they felt were important for the media. It suggested the media should have open access. However, the media must recognize the implications of the fair trial; free press issues for larger issues of censorship. Making a legal trial possible is an important social interest but it is not the only or even the most important social interest. The press should not confuse winning issues with losing ones. It should not confuse a claim to access with a right to publish.

By the same token, the press should not submerge the tough right to publish in a wishy-washy slogan of the people's right to know.

Mr. J. Reed: Are you going to support it or not?

Mr. Warner: You are just going to have to wait.

An hon. member: This is a very temperate speech.

Mr. Warner: The media should always ask their lawyers to stop winning battles in ways that lose wars and learn enough themselves to tell one from another.

An hon. member: Down with the media.

Mr. Warner: The media should stop thinking of constitutional freedoms as something to be protected only by courts.

What I am attempting to point out to you, first of all, is through the years many jurisdictions, many individuals, have attempted to draft some code of behaviour or code of ethics for the media. Obviously, in some cases they have tried to gag the media in some way or other.

Mr. Kerrio: Do you think you can gag Claire Hoy?

Mr. Samis: Control yourself, Vince.

Mr. Kerrio: Would you like to try to gag Claire Hoy?

Mr. Warner: Not entirely; he has been the one verbal member in favour of beer in the ballpark.

Mr. Samis: Bring on the guzzle.

Mr. Warner: An interesting comment on the press in a book called Crime and Publicity appears on page 255: "With distinguished exceptions, crime reporting in the American press compares lamentably in thoroughness, sensitivity and responsibility with its increasingly expert coverage of other subjects. Quite apart from any considerations of prejudicing fair trial, its coverage of crime is coarse. If it debauches nothing else, it debauches the high standards the media proclaim and in other fields uphold."

In this book, as I read it through, the conclusion is generally reached that the press should be allowed to have pretty free range in reporting on trials, although it recognized carefully that in many cases the press does a disservice. On balance, the disservice was not that frequent.

Mr. J. Reed: We want to know what you think. Anybody can read out of a book. What do you think?

Mr. Samis: Where does Vince stand on this?

An hon. member: This is the Harold Ballard bill, isn't it?

Mr. Bounsall: He warned you he was doing research on this.

Mr. Warner: Those who do not get the opportunity to participate in the debate are the most vocal hecklers. I have always noticed that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kerrio: What about those who are debating?

Mr. Warner: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, on balance—

Mr. J. Reed: Here it comes.

Mr. Bounsall: Here it comes.

Mr. J. Reed: On balance we are ready. We would like it to be your thoughts.

Mr. Warner: Are you ready for this? The freedom of the press represents in measure our freedoms. If we attempt to curtail the freedom of the press, too soon we lose our own freedoms.

An hon. member: There is your answer, Julian.

Mr. Bradley: That is going to be etched on the wall.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has one minute.

An hon. member: We will take on Harold Ballard.

Mr. Warner: Thank you. I have more than that, but just one minute tonight.

An hon. member: No beer in the ballpark.

Mr. Warner: The press act as the gatekeepers to the courts. They report in an honest and fair way often—most times.

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: I will rephrase that. I retrieve that one.

An hon. member: Occasionally, sometimes.

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: They do make an honest attempt to report as fairly and accurately as they can. Obviously, on occasion not all is done perfectly.

I must in good conscience oppose the bill. This will come as a shock to some members of the assembly but for once, Mr. Speaker, and maybe for the only time, I will support the status quo.

Mr. Sterling: I, too, would like to add my congratulations to the member for York Centre for bringing this issue to this forum. I think it is indeed an issue which merits discussion.

However, I must express some disappointment in the fact it's not placed in the form of a resolution, which I will allude to later in my remarks.

Mr. J. Reed: You are only angry because it is not a Tory bill.

Mr. Sterling: I understand the concern of my colleagues and the public in relation to this problem, as one of the very bases of our justice system relates to the innocence of the accused until he is proven guilty. Should a person who is accused be exposed to publicity before he goes to trial?

Mr. Kerrio: On a point of order. Do you think it's proper for you to sit in the chair? Don't you have a conflict of interest tonight?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Certainly not on this particular item and I expect to be out of this chair long before any votes are taken on anything.

Mr. Sterling: I know only too well the problems related to publicity and the results of that publicity to men who have been charged with offences and have been later proven innocent. I know how important this can be to, or how severe the effect can be on, the family. I know how damaging the suspicion created in a community can be to the individual.

I am sure this feeling has generated the support of the Criminal Lawyers' Association to this bill. However, I must express some surprise that in their letter, which most members or all members of the Legislature received this morning, they wanted to extend this not only to the pretrial period but until the trial was disposed of.

Mr. J. Reed: That's not the bill.

Mr. Sterling: I realize that's not the bill.

Mr. J. Reed: You're out of order. Speak to the bill.

Mr. Sterling: Balanced against this unfairness to the individual is a very important issue that is basic to our judicial system. That principle is it is inherent in our courts that freedom of information on the court proceedings should be available to all members of society. There are, of course, exceptions to this, and the member for York Centre mentioned some. They have been set out in both provincial and federal legislation.

There are other powers inherent in the court to see that scandalous and extremely embarrassing matters should not be made public. Most of these exceptions are in place to ensure a fair trial takes place.

It should be noted that within the Criminal Code of Canada there are seven separate sections dealing with exceptions and dealing with the publication of information resulting from a trial procedure. The Juvenile Delinquents Act, the Child Welfare Act, the Family Law Reform Act and the new Provincial Offences Act all have sections which deal with the publication of information relating to the trial.

Judges of the Supreme Court now possess an inherent power in their discretion, in appropriate circumstances, to order that the identity of the accused be withheld from the news media. I am not misleading the Legislature; I would point out a justice of the peace does not have this power at this time.

Mr. Kerrio: You're just confusing us.

Mr. Sterling: Why is an open court necessary at this time, and why should Bill 28 not be supported?

First, I submit that to eliminate publicity as to the name of the accused is to make the trial have some secret connotation. An open trial is needed so all matters relating to the judicial process will be open to public scrutiny. J. Wigmore, in his classic treatise, Wigmore on Evidence, explained the importance of publicity when he stated: "In all experience, secret tribunals have exhibited abuses which have been wanting in courts whose procedure was public." In other words, once you put a shroud around the process, you invite abuse.

Mr. Kerrio: Somebody accused Clark of being a politician.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kerrio: And he's not guilty.

Mr. Eakins: And they put it on the front page of the paper.

Mr. Sterling: He also points out that in the pretrial stage, publicity is needed so that informed persons will bring forward evidence. There is a possibility that a third party who had witnessed the incident, or in fact had seen the accused, would not know that a trial was taking place.

How does the public control abuse by either the prosecution or by the police? Would such a law raise unfair criticism of police practices in small centres? Would the rumours surrounding the charges be more damaging than the actual charge which would be published?

Mr. J. Reed: The uncrowned Attorney General of Ontario.

Mr. Sterling: The policy of openness and publicity is intended to ensure the legitimacy and acceptance of the law and the institutions charged with the responsibility of enforcing it. Openness is of critical importance to ensuring that the presumption of innocence in our law does not become a dead letter.

May I say that in researching some of the papers within our province we have found that few papers actually have a policy in relation to this matter. I do not condone this, and I hope many of the papers would formulate policies as a result of this debate.

While I truly sympathize with the accused persons, I cannot support this bill on principle, in that an open court must be the rule, and not the exception. Having said that about the principle of the bill, I would also point out that there are serious problems with the constitutionality of this piece of legislation.

Mr. Kerrio: No, there isn't We checked that part. It's okay.

Mr. Sterling: The key question is whether Bill 28 is a law in relation to property and civil rights or in relation to the administration of justice in the province and, therefore, intra vires. Or is it, on the other hand a law dealing with criminal law or procedural and criminal matters and therefore ultra vires this Legislature?

The answer to that question can be determined by asking two further questions: What is the object or purpose of the bill? Second, what is the effect of the bill?

It is interesting to note from the prohibition under section 1 that this bill would apply, for example, in a case where a Manitoba resident who was charged with murder in Manitoba could be released on bail, and, if he visited Ontario, it would prohibit the papers within Ontario from publishing the name of that individual.

By referring to the preamble of the bill and section 1 of the bill, it is clear that the purpose is both federal in the criminal law procedure and provincial in protecting the reputation of the individual, as the member for York Centre has put forward.

One of the effects of the bill is to supplement and duplicate some of the statutes of Canada respecting publicity bans. I have mentioned before that there are seven sections within the Criminal Code of Canada which already deal with publicity and the banishing of publicity.

In order for this bill to achieve its declared purpose of protecting the reputation of innocent persons, the bill has been designed to alter the public policy reflected in the Criminal Code of Canada in terms of the criminal procedure which governs from the moment that the criminal process has been set in motion. This public policy at the federal level is one of openness and publicity. It is intended to ensure the legitimacy and acceptance of the law and of the institutions charged with the responsibility of enforcing it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. J. Reed: And he has almost expired.

Mr. Sterling: I would therefore conclude that it is the view of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry) that this bill is unconstitutional in its form.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak in support of the bill that has been put forth by our colleague from York Centre.

Mr. Bounsall: You are getting quite a workout tonight with two private members' bills.

Mr. Blundy: I believe he has shown a great deal of foresight and, particularly, he has shown a lot of thought for his fellow human beings in bringing forth this bill.

I speak in favour of the bill as a non-lawyer. I am not going to get into matters of law. I am going to speak from the standpoint of what this bill could do in the way of protecting the ordinary citizen out on the street. Every one of us has seen what has happened before in cases in which, in my opinion and in the opinion of many others, people have been tried and convicted in the press long before they ever came for trial. This has been done long before they ever get to court. Some of these people have been proven to be guilty, but some have been proven to be innocent. The effect this has had on each of them has been the same.

We all know people who have lost their job, their family, their position in the community, their assets and everything from having all this publicity about an offence to which they have not yet pleaded guilty or been found guilty. For the protection of the ordinary man, the ordinary citizen, we ought to support this bill.

Another thing that I have thought of in my mind is that in some of the more bizarre or very unusual cases the reports are carried in the various media for weeks and weeks. I've often wondered how they could ever pick a jury of 12 people who could honestly say they had not formed an opinion in their minds already from what they had read in the paper, seen on television, or heard on the radio. This is a thing that ought to be thought about.

I'll bet you two cents, Mr. Speaker, that they will have a tough time finding a jury to try Jeremy Thorpe. This case has been before the media of the world for months now, but the man has not yet come up for his trial. I'm sure that most of us have already formed in our mind some kind of an opinion on the innocence or guilt in that case.

A lot of people will say, and some have said to me, "What about the freedom of the press and the media?" I am the last person to say anything should be done to keep the media from covering events to do with politics, our way of life, our community, our corporations, our unions—anything. They can talk about that. But when you get down to talking about one individual and one problem in his life that individual may have or may not have been involved in, then I think we have to weigh the freedoms that we stand for.

Are we going to opt for freedom of the individual to support his civil rights, opt to support the individual in the eyes of his peers until such time as it is shown that view is uncalled for, or are we going to opt for the freedom of the newspapers and television and so forth to sell their newspapers or sell their programs on the back of what is possibly an innocent citizen? When I have to weigh the taking away of those freedoms, I have to opt to support the individual to see that he is given his civil rights in this life. If he is innocent, then he will have benefited by our view. If he is guilty, then nothing we have said or done here tonight is going to change the situation; he is guilty and he will be sentenced for whatever he has done.

Much good can be achieved, in my view, for the individual in our society by ordering the press not to report all the supposed evidence and so forth before the trial. We have much to gain by supporting this bill and supporting the individual in our society.

I am interested in a letter received from the Criminal Lawyers' Association in which they quite obviously are supporting the bill put forth this evening by the member for York Centre. I note they are willing to go even further than this bill. They would extend it from the beginning of the trial to the end of the trial—to the rendering of a verdict. The bill which has been proposed here tonight by the member for York Centre does not go that far. I believe it is a reasonable bill and I believe it can help to save the lives of many people whose lives would otherwise be so severely damaged that in some cases they have committed suicide, they have had to flee the country and so on, even though they were innocent.

With those few thoughts from a political person, a person who is interested in the people and from someone with no legal training, I would like to submit my case.

Mr. Lawlor: I would say to the member for Sarnia, that's not what the bill is about. I think his colleague will say one doesn't suppress the details of substance and procedure prior to trial. One is only concerned about somebody's name being disclosed and their reputation suffering before trial.

Mr. Stong: That is what he is basically saying.

Mr. Lawlor: The only backing the honourable member has out of a very large number of parties, all the way from the Canadian Civil Liberties Association to the British Press Council, to the Ontario Press Council, to the John Howard Society, which are all "agin ya," are the criminal lawyers.

Mr. Stong: No.

Mr. Lawlor: I have the text of the statements here. He produces the one from the criminal lawyers. What do you think the criminal lawyers are going to say, Mr. Speaker? They defend accused persons. They would be the first ones to say they didn't want names disclosed to protect their clients. That's what they're paid for.

I do want to point this out. They come down and they kind of give some niggling assent to what the member for York Centre contends and they say the objective should be that the individual be protected whether the charge be under provincial or federal laws. This association would prefer to see the protection extended beyond the beginning of the trial to the end of the trial.

In his wishy-washy, fence-sitting, half-articulate way, the member stopped half-way. He goes up to the time of the trial. If he really believes what he says, why shouldn't the name of the accused be protected to the end of the trial? Then if he's adjudged guilty, maybe he might consider letting somebody know he has been subject to this. If he's acquitted then so be it and bless him and he ought not to be pilloried. Maybe in his seven precious moments—I hope it's moments—he will tell me just why he stops in midstream and drowns.

Mr. Stong: Five minutes.

Mr. Lawlor: They find the bill defective on another score, as there may be occasions where an individual might wish to highlight police harassment or an unjust prosecution. They would appreciate an amendment in committee, which of course it will never get to, to change the whole bill and make it something sensible. I think, by and large, the present law is adequate to the intent and need to this. In preliminary inquiries, the first step in a criminal process, he's completely protected under the terms of the Criminal Code sections 467(g) and 465(j) where the court can exclude witnesses, exclude all the press, exclude everybody from the courtroom and proceed with the case in desirable circumstances. Surely, that's adequate protection.

In jury trials, the jury may be sequestered, sealed off from publicity so it won't be affected in this particular way. There are instances where this has happened, particularly in the United States. Remember the case of Dr. Samuel Sheppard, who was greatly prejudiced by a press, a scandalous press.

There are things called defamatory libel. There are charges and methods of attacking the press on these things. If they bring people under a shadow in this particular way these methods should be ventured upon rather than venturing upon a new mode of procedure which has hidden defects and can lead—shall I say it?—to Star Chamber proceedings in the court. Take Jeremy Thorpe. Take Jeremy.

An hon. member: You take him, we don't want him.

Mr. Stong: He hasn't even been tried yet and everybody says, "You take him." This bill is necessary.

An hon. member: The good Liberal.

Mr. Lawlor: Nevertheless, he's holding himself up for election. I make no judgement on the man. I trust he's not guilty. He has had an outstanding career; he's a very brilliant and witty man. It pains me to see him pilloried in this way, but, surely, he has been accused of a fairly serious matter and he's running in an election.

I think the public has a right to know. They may make their own judgements on this. Under this particular bill, they would not. It would be all suppressed. It would all be hidden and, Mr. Speaker, you could hold yourself out as holding one set of opinions when you're under criminal charges with respect to the exact contrary. Take Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Lee Harvey Oswald, Jack Ruby, any number of people who, under this kind of legislation would be protected ab initio. That is not desirable. The public, in most circumstances, has the right to know throughout the whole proceedings, not just when one of the parties begins to introduce evidence at the trial.

[10:00]

I agree with the Attorney General of Ontario. This legislation is unconstitutional in any event. We have the provisions under the Criminal Code; if I have a moment, I'll read one, section 442:

"Any proceeding against an accused that is a corporation or who appears to be 16 years of age or more shall be held in open court, but where the presiding judge, magistrate or justice, as the case may be, is of the opinion that it is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice to exclude all or any members of the public from the courtroom for all or any part of the proceedings, he may so order." So what does my friend want?

Mr. Stong: That doesn't exclude publication either.

Mr. Lawlor: No. But it goes a long way to protecting the reputation and position of the accused. In any event, they have set out what their protection is. The field is occupied, and we can't move in with our own legislation in an area that has already been pre-empted by the federal government; it's a well-known doctrine in criminal law.

This matter should be handled by the Ontario Press Council. There has to be a press code. That's the British solution to the matter. The solution in the American states is to have a deal between the bar and the press; it's done in Nebraska, in Oregon, in Washington. Half of the states in the United States now have set up codes as between the bar and the press in which they set out the terms, and these are honoured by the judges. Voluntary relationships of that kind are far preferable to the kind of thing the member is putting forward at this time.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate this evening on this particular bill. In so doing I would like to say at the outset that there is one basic fault I find with this bill, and that is simply that it has been too late in coming to this assembly.

Mr. Stong: I agree.

Mr. Williams: It is a matter that should have been brought forward in the form of legislation long before now, and it is unfortunate that the members of this Legislature and its predecessors have not seen fit to enact this type of legislation long before this.

The principles enunciated by the sponsor of the bill this evening are fundamentally important to our democratic way of life. There can be no greater freedom than that of the individual; it is not only a fundamental right of the individual, but also the fundamental consideration in our free society, that the individual must have his freedoms preserved and protected, and those freedoms include the fundamentally important right of the person's reputation. Any act or undertaking that would impair, prematurely judge or prejudice the reputation of an individual in this society has to be properly controlled by an orderly and legislative means.

At no time is this type of individual freedom and the vulnerability of the individual greater than when a person has been publicly singled out as having a charge laid against him for some act or alleged criminal act. At no other time in that person's lifetime can he feel more vulnerable and more devastated from what has happened, and it only contributes to and greatly impairs the rationale of the individual when the whole incident is reported in the news media.

What concerns me is this. I think there has been some distortion of what this bill is about because this evening the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere has wrestled with the two principles he sees in it; the principles of preserving freedom of the press and of ensuring a fair trial. But the whole point of the bill is that it speaks to the pretrial period, not to the trial period. In fact, it doesn't in any way inhibit the press from reporting the trial period.

Mr. J. Reed: That is the best thing you have ever said in a speech.

Mr. Warner: Now, convince me I am right.

Mr. Williams: I think, if the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere had simply read the bill, he would have understood that it is preventing the news media from prematurely labelling a person as having committed a crime; because the public at large does not always make the distinction, Mr. Speaker, between the fact that a person has been charged but has not yet been convicted. The only way the public can understand that it's in doubt is when the trial is going on and being reported.

A case in point is the ongoing Lorenz trial. The press has had a field day with it and yet the public understands that the man's innocence or guilt is still in doubt and is before the courts. On the other hand, when a charge is laid against a person, the public, by and large, does not distinguish between the fact that the person has simply been charged but not yet necessarily found guilty. Sometimes they find a oneness in the two and this is how the reputation of the individual charged is imperilled.

Another case in point is the Demeter trial with which the press had a field day. I understand and I respect the need of the press to report important issues in which the public will be interested. The news media reports sensationalism and they do it well, but it should not be at the expense of the individual's reputation and it is imperative that the timing be controlled.

There is no suggestion in this bill, Mr. Speaker, that the press be denied the right to report a trial fully, just as they did in the cases I have cited, the Lorenz trial and the Demeter trial, or any other trials that come up. They will have free access to the courts; they will have free opportunity to report every whit of evidence they feel is juicy enough for the public; they will not be curtailed in any way whatsoever.

It is imperative, however, that an individual's reputation be preserved until he comes to trial, because the time period from when the charge is laid until the trial actually begins may be days, weeks, or months. In the meantime, that person lives in persecution through public exposure in the press. If the members don't think that reputations, lives and families are destroyed because of this premature publicity, I cite the example of a noted radio columnist and TV personality, one Alan Spraggett. His particular career has been decimated because of the publicity given the charges laid against him.

As recently as this week, Mr. Speaker, on the front page of the Toronto Star it was reported that a well-known developer was charged with bribing a politician. It made the front page; he got his picture in the paper; there was a big news story on page two. It was preceded by a report in the Star two days earlier about the same developer being charged with bribing a municipal councillor. But what adds to the tremendous trauma that individual must be suffering is the way in which it was reported at the time. It just added confusion to the situation because of the lack of information forthcoming when it was reported.

For instance, the story said Chief Bruce Crawford refused to name the politician because his men were still investigating the case. Then the article goes on and says: "He would give no details except to say that the councillor had reported an incident." So, it left the public guessing.

Obviously, that was the lead article for the big one that came out two days later where the individual was shown coming out of the courtroom with his lawyer. What kind of freedom preserves that man's reputation when this kind of pretrial publicity is given?

I think that the freedom of the individual is far more important than giving the press a premature opportunity to publicize his or her plight. They will have lots of opportunity when the case comes to trial and that is simply what the sponsor of this bill is asking. That is why I think it is imperative that we support this type of legislation. It is not imperilling the freedom of the press whatsoever. Without this type of legislation, because of the desire of the press to be the first paper to come out with the story, it will continue to imperil people's reputations when they have yet to be proven guilty of a crime for which only a charge has been laid against them.

We must clearly distinguish what this bill is trying to accomplish. Some speakers this evening have suggested that it is a question of the battle between the freedom of the press and the right to a fair trial. It deals with the pretrial period, and I cannot stress that strongly enough.

I note that all of the speakers this evening have quoted a number of jurists, philosophers and other noted authorities on the subject. I do not intend to do that; I am simply speaking from the point of view as I see it.

The one document I will refer to, which was referred to earlier, is the Criminal Lawyers' Association letter that was sent to all members of the Legislature. They wanted to take the matter further through the trial period, which was the point the member for Lakeshore spoke to. In that instance, they would be locking out the news media totally until the verdict was rendered.

Mr. Kerrio: Irresponsible.

Mr. Williams: The bill is not suggesting that at all. What really pulls the rug out from under the validity of the criminal lawyers' submission, however, is the second last paragraph where they want to have it both ways. They say: "As there may be occasions where an individual might wish to highlight police harassment or an unjust prosecution, we would appreciate an amendment in committee to provide that the accused may expressly authorize the publication of his name prior to verdict."

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Williams: They cannot have it both ways. We have to preserve the rights of the individual and we cannot make that type of exception. For the reasons I have stated, I support the bill that is presented this evening.

Mr. J. Reed: That is the best speech you have ever made.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill presented by the member for York Centre. It is a bill which addresses itself to a problem recognized by those who are vulnerable to the adverse publicity that could be generated by being accused or those who have experienced trial by the media in the past.

We assume in this country that there is innocence until guilt is proven. However, the publication of the identity and the charges against an individual before a trial begins often makes him guilty in the public eye ahead of time. There may be circumstances where he may have been subject to false arrest or where a mistake may have been found that removes the necessity for a trial or charges may be withdrawn because of lack of evidence.

The consequences for the individual and the family have been well outlined by members of this Legislature. They include the family itself suffering in terms of its standing within social groups; the children in the school being subjected to abuse by other children who are making judgements based on the publication of charges and the individual's name; the unnecessary effect on those in the family who might be ill; the guilt by association that the family feels; attacks of a verbal or physical nature, telephone calls and things of this kind, all of which are suffered unnecessarily if the charges are withdrawn.

The accused himself may face mental and emotional instability, may perhaps contemplate suicide, may face the loss of a job or a chance for promotion, his reputation may be destroyed and he may be unwanted in service organizations and other organizations which he may wish to join.

Those in political life and, I suppose, the clergy, those in business and in union executive positions and others in positions with high profiles would recognize their vulnerability to the judgements made by the publication of their names and the charges against them, while there is no reason to believe at that time that the charges can be substantiated or indeed that the matter will even go to trial.

The member for York Centre has mentioned the safeguards that are necessary and are in place. He has mentioned the existing situation as it relates to juveniles. It seems to me with the support of the Criminal Lawyers' Association and other members of this Legislature that this bill offers the merit that is deserving of the votes of the members of this Legislature. I very proudly support this bill and think it identifies and will bring about a solution to a problem that exists.

[10:15]

Mr. Stong: Very briefly in rebuttal, I believe the member for Oriole has rebutted as well as I could the remarks made by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. He just simply and clearly missed the point. The point does not deal with trial, it deals with pretrial procedures and pretrial matters, and does not affect at all a fair trial.

Of course the press is free to cover a trial because that guarantees not only a fair trial but an open trial and it protects the system of justice and our laws as such. The bill does not deal with anything in that respect.

The member for Carleton-Grenville dealt with those acquitted, but this bill goes beyond those acquitted. It goes to those who are found guilty after a trial of a much lesser but maybe included offence which would not even have been reported if it had been laid initially. It deals with not only those who are acquitted, it also deals with those whose charges are withdrawn prior to trial. We are familiar with the newspaper story recently in Toronto in which a 16-year-old girl was charged with purse-snatching and robbery of a 74-year-old woman who was knocked down and injured. She was charged and publicity followed—her family suffered even to the extent of a brick through the window. Two weeks later the charge was withdrawn.

That's the type of individual we're trying to protect. That's the type of individual who is paramount. We all have types of information and examples such as that.

This bill does not curtail freedom of information. The press is free to report a factual situation such as an individual charged with trafficking in drugs—whatever. It can report the factual situation. It cannot identify the individual until his trial commences. That's simply it.

The member for Carleton-Grenville is concerned about rumour surrounding the matter coming to trial. There are built-in protections in law, as the member for Lakeshore has pointed out. We have defamation of character suits, we have libel and slander suits. They are available already.

The member for Lakeshore talks about self-interest groups and that this bill doesn't have the support of the media. Perhaps this bill does have the support of the media—

I don't know how my friend from Lakeshore can make such a blanket statement.

But there are self-interest groups and he takes on the Criminal Lawyers' Association. The Criminal Lawyers' Association is a self-interest group and if there was ever a group that ought to deny this bill that is the group, because it thrives on publicity. Lawyers need publicity; the more publicity the case gets, the better it is for the lawyer. The lawyers have taken the opposite stand because they're in the courtroom daily, defending people, innocent people. We are throwing innocent people to the wind if we follow what the member for Lakeshore says.

The member for Lakeshore also referred to open trial. There is a confusion. The member for Oriole quite clearly designated that this bill does not deal with trial procedures.

The members for Lakeshore and Carleton-Grenville read off the protections built into our law dealing with procedures during trial. Of course, they're built in. There is no law—except the Juvenile Delinquents Act which deals with this type of situation in relation to juveniles—that protects the innocence of the individual before his trial.

The argument of that well-known jurist, Oliver Wendell Holmes, was that it is better that 99 guilty persons are acquitted than one innocent person is convicted. If we adhere to that principle in our law as the basis, then this bill is simply an extension of that principle prior to trial.

Mr. Speaker: Will all honourable members take their seats, please?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Speaker: Mr. MacBeth has moved resolution 7.

Resolution concurred in.

INNOCENT PERSONS PROTECTION ACT

The House divided on Mr. Stong's motion for second reading of Bill 28, which was negatived on the following vote:

AYES

Blundy, Bradley, Campbell, Cunningham, Eakins, Haggerty, Hall, Kerrio, McCague, McGuigan, Miller, G. I., Newman, B., Norton, Pope, Reed, J., Reid, T. P., Stong, Sweeney, Williams.

NAYS

Auld, Baetz, Belanger, Bernier, Bounsall, Breaugh, Bryden, Cooke, Curetz, Davison, M. N., Drea, Edgihoffer, Epp, Gregory, Havrot, Johnson, J., Lane, Lawlor, Lupusella, MacBeth, Mackenzie, Maeck, Martel, McCaffrey, McNeil, Newman, W., Philip, Sterling, Taylor, J. A., Turner, Villeneuve, Warner, Watson, Wiseman.

Ayes 19; nays 34.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would like to bring the House up to date on what is going to happen in the next week.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In your ministry you don't know what is going to happen tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will remember that the next time you come over for a favour...

Mr. T. P. Reid: The last favour you did was to Rainy River and they are Manitobians.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Pursuant to standing order 13, I wish to indicate the business of the House for tomorrow and next week.

Tomorrow, at 10 o'clock, the House will be in committee of supply considering the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

On Monday, April 23: House in committee of supply to finish the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services and begin the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On Tuesday, April 24: legislation in the afternoon; Bills 41 and 25 for second reading; then committee of the whole House on Bills 8, 41 and 25. Then Bill 53 for second reading, if there is still time available.

In the evening: Bill 19 to begin at eight o'clock, then we continue with Bill 53 if it hasn't been finished before six in the afternoon, followed by Bills 56, 54, 55 and 57, in that order.

On Wednesday, April 25: the resources development committee, administration of justice committee and general government committee may meet in the morning. That hasn't been cleared up completely. I understand there are still negotiations going on.

On Thursday, April 26: in the afternoon, ballot items numbers seven and eight. In the evening, order number 35 now on the Order Paper, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the adoption of the March 29 report of the standing procedural affairs committee regarding the change in order of estimates. Then, we will continue with legislation which hasn't been finished on Tuesday evening.

On Friday, April 27: budget debate.

The House adjourned at 10:35 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 1979

The House met at 10:04 a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Mr. S. Smith: What ministry? Only a third of the cabinet is here.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Are any of the ministers expected later, Mr. Speaker, may I ask? One third of the ministers of the crown are here at the moment. Will the House leader tell us who is coming?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Don't you like us?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle), the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) and the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) will not be here today. All other members of the cabinet are expected.

Mr. Kerrio: Is Joe Clark in town today?

JOB CREATION

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Can the minister tell us, in view of the fact that the Premier is still making jaunts to the United States begging for more foreign capital for more branch plants here in Ontario—exactly what we don't need—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Get that recorded.

Mr. Swart: What a conversion! What do your Windsor members think of that?

Mr. Martel: You have left me speechless.

Mr. S. Smith: —what he has done with regard to a very large and significant pool of Canadian equity capital, namely, that in the hands of Brascan? Has the minister spoken at all to the people at Brascan, who now seem intent on using this very large pool of potential risk capital to buy out the F. W. Woolworth Company in the United States? Has the minister even spoken with Brascan to try to persuade them to use their capital here to create jobs in Canada and in Ontario, instead of going on bended knee to the United States and Japan to hope they will give us some money from foreign off-shore interests to build more branch plants in Ontario? What has he said to Brascan?

Mr. Turner: Sit down and start over again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When it first became apparent that Brascan would have a fair amount of cash at hand as a result of their sale of Brazilian Light and Traction, we did contact Brascan and urged them to consider Canadian and specifically Ontario investments as they were considering the next steps in their corporate strategy.

They indicated at that time that they were considering very many Ontario opportunities. In the event that our assistance was required, we indicated it was available and they indicated they were absolutely determined to look at Canadian opportunities. We did act, and I might say we did that some two or three months ago, immediately upon the $200 million or $300 million coming out of Brazil.

Mr. MacDonald: And you see how well they responded.

Ms. Gigantes: Did they ask your advice?

Mr. S. Smith: I am pleased that the minister was speaking with Brascan when he realized the fund of capital was there. But given the fact that Brascan now seems interested in using these hundreds of millions of dollars to acquire an American outfit, has the minister been back in touch with Brascan to remind them of the first conversation and to find out why it is they seem unable to find good investment opportunities in this province, which has been under this government's direction for the last 36 years? Why can they not find opportunities here in Canada? Why do they have to be seeking the F. W. Woolworth Company in the United States?

Mr. Breithaupt: It's the province of opportunity, you know.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I might say I'm not prepared to answer for the corporate decisions of Brascan. I think it was clearly our obligation as a province to make the call we made to make sure they were aware of all the opportunities. In fact, with their corporate abilities and connections throughout Canada, I'm sure they would be well aware of many of them. We can invite them and we can encourage them, stopping short of perhaps legislating them into having to do that, which I haven't heard the Leader of the Opposition advocate yet, but he probably will in a couple of weeks.

Mr. S. Smith: I didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case, we have had that first discussion. We've been in touch with them a couple of times since then. I don't know what else the Leader of the Opposition would like us to do. If there's something specific he would like us to do, then that's fine. I'm not prepared to apologize for the corporate decisions Brascan makes, which are related to a whole host of things, of which he's well aware.

Mr. Martel: He left it to the next guy.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Has the minister made any representation to the federal government concerning the rash of mergers and takeovers which has a danger of restricting competition? In view of the federal Liberal Party's endorsement of the Bryce commission reports on corporate concentration in this country, in which they said there was no problem and, as a matter of fact, they would encourage more of it—that was the Liberal position—has the minister made any representations to the federal government that there should be a restriction on these kinds of takeovers that create not a single job in all of Canada, let alone Ontario, and has he given consideration to suggesting to them that there be a takeover tax to discourage this kind of thing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is no to the last part of the question.

Mr. Mackenzie: In other words, you don't intend to do a darned thing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The response to the earlier part of the question is that what we've been seeking from the federal government is a more rational response to the whole question of mergers than we've seen previously. For a long period of time, as the Leader of the Opposition well knows, there has appeared to be no real policy on mergers. Most of them were able to carry on as they wished. With the recent spate of mergers and attempted acquisitions, Mr. Allmand indicated they were suddenly going to come down with both feet on mergers, which is something I suspect the Leader of the Opposition might be more comfortable with. At least he raised the spectre, to be more accurate, of coming down harder on mergers.

I think our policy has been a more practical one. It has been to indicate that the world isn't built into neat little categories which say all mergers are good or all are bad. Rather, we are seeking a more realistic assessment, to be made pursuant to perhaps some new federal legislation—I don't know—which would give us the opportunity as a province, for example, to meet with firms that occasionally consider closure or layoffs or rationalization, and have the merger as an opportunity open to them to save some employment or expand their opportunities.

On the other hand, there are situations in which mergers don't create jobs and in fact operate against our best interests. We think the manoeuvrability ought to be there to move in in those circumstances.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since most of the minister's colleagues seem to laugh at the idea that Brascan is investing $200 million to $300 million in the United States, and since the minister said he is ready to assist the company, is he really saying he is ready to give Brascan a grant in order to invest the money in Canada in the same way he did with Ford?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. There's been no discussion on that whatsoever.

Ms. Gigantes: By the time you get to it, there'll be one company left.

Mr. Martel: It will be called Grossman's.

LEAD LEVELS

Mr. S. Smith: I wanted to ask a question of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) who came in after question period last day and who is not here today. But I'll ask the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs whether he's had any representations from the city of Toronto or from the board of health of that city regarding the way in which the Ministry of the Environment seems to wish to deal with information given to the public. Has he received any kind of representation concerning the ministry's statement?

I will read the first paragraph of an article in yesterday's Globe and Mail: "Residents with property containing lead levels higher than that recommended by the Ontario government have not been told about it because it would only upset them, an Ontario Environment ministry official said yesterday."

What is the minister's opinion of this way of dealing between levels of government and dealing with the residents of Toronto?

[10:15]

Hon. Mr. Wells: To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any representations made to me. There could be some letters in the mail that I haven't seen. I would not agree with that kind of stance. I believe the public should be told if there are any levels that are detrimental to it and that we should practice an open information policy as much as possible. I think the member should really ask my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, the full details about that statement.

The member has asked whether any representations about it have been made to me. To the best of my knowledge, none has.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Would the minister speak with his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, when he is here on some occasion, and explain that opinion he has just given to this House? Also, would he ask the minister to report to this House as to who is going to pay for the cleanup of those yards? Is it once again going to be the public of Ontario through the lottery fund that has to pay for that cleanup? Or will we finally come to the situation the minister has been promising, namely, to make it very clear that the yards are to be cleaned up and the polluter will pay for the cleanup?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, my colleague will read that question and will respond. I'm sure he has the matter in hand. I'm sure the Leader of the Opposition, from long experience, knows it is probably not a good idea to take all one's facts strictly from a newspaper story where some ministry official may have one sentence taken out of context. The Ministry of the Environment, I'm sure, has the whole situation completely under control and will handle it well.

The minister had to be away today for some urgent problems of another nature because we had arranged some meetings with the Provincial-Municipal Committee to discuss some of his concerns. He wasn't able to be here today but he is busy on provincial business, as are all the ministers who are not here.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that General Motors is advertising for 350 skilled workers in Britain for its transmission plant in Windsor, can the Minister of Labour say how many of the 500 skilled workers that Ford will be requiring for its engine plant in Windsor will be found in Canada? What action will the government take in order to ensure that any of those workers found in Canada aren't found at the expense of smaller companies?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure the member appreciates, the speech from the throne indicated that in the future the Premier (Mr. Davis) will be asking the Minister of Labour to assume some guiding and co-ordinating role with regard to manpower activities within the province. To date, we are at present in the process of gathering the information we feel the Premier should require in order to make that decision and in order to designate the terms of reference more completely.

I am, therefore, not cognizant of the details of the question the member has put to me, but I do know he put the question to another member of cabinet yesterday. I want to assure the member I share his concerns that skilled tradesmen should be trained in this country for the skills that are required. Whether or not there are some short-term and immediate needs that have to be filled from outside the country is a matter to which I have not had any access so far.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the minister, with his new responsibilities, bring the House into his confidence and let us know just who were the 30 companies that have used the selective placement services to advertise in foreign countries for skilled workers in Ontario over the past year? Will he table which companies, how many jobs and what skills are being looked for abroad? Will he say what the government is doing in terms of upgrading qualified or nearly qualified workers in this province so that those immediate needs can be met and not just the needs for skilled workers five or 10 years down the line?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: When I have that information in my possession, and exactly when that will be in terms of when the Premier decides to designate it as my role, I will be pleased to discuss that matter with the member and with the House. At the moment, I do not have that information. If the member would like me to find out which particular ministry is involved in those present activities that he has referred to, if they are going on, I'll be pleased to do so.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: When I raised this matter a number of months ago in so far as Hydro's importing of English skilled workers to work at Douglas Point was concerned, I was told by the then Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) that he and some of his federal colleagues were meeting to try to resolve this matter. What has happened since that time?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'm always interested in discussing what might be available to me, in terms of knowledge of the activities that are going on and have gone on, when they have become my responsibility. Until that time, I would suggest the member ask the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) about the details.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker: I'd like to ask the minister if he's aware that yesterday the Minister of Education said one of the main problems was that there weren't enough young people who wanted to go into apprenticeship. Yet, according to her ministry official, Al Dumouchelle, in Windsor, this morning, there are more applicants to get into apprenticeship programs in Windsor than there are positions.

Mr. McClellan: What do you know, she was wrong again.

Mr. Cooke: Secondly, is the minister aware that in the General Motors transmission plant in Windsor they have at present only 20 people in apprenticeship programs? None of the Big Three is represented on the task force recently set up in Windsor to try to overcome the problems of skilled trades, and yet, again—

Mr. Speaker: Was there a question there?

Mr. Cooke: Yes, there are a couple of questions.

Mr. Speaker: Would you please put them?

Mr. Cooke: I would like the minister to respond to the very real concern of the members of our party that his government and the federal government gave Ford Motor $68 million and there will be a need for 500 skilled tradesmen, yet the present needs can't even be met. How are we going to get all the jobs for our $68 million?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The indication in the speech from the throne that the Minister of Labour in future will be asked to have some role in guiding and co-ordinating the manpower activities of the government, more than gives a firm commitment of our role and underlines our concern about the question of skilled manpower in this province.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, get it away from Stephenson.

Mr. Cooke: Concern is not enough; we want answers.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I appreciate that your own member has trouble getting his question across. I seem to be having trouble getting the answer across.

Mr. Mackenzie: You haven't answered the question yet.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The response to the question the member has put will have to come at this time from one of the other ministers.

Mrs. Campbell: Which one would you suggest?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: In particular, I would transfer the question, if it's your wish, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not concerned about the adverse effect on the small manufacturer and on small industry that the new developments in the Windsor area will have? Their skilled employees are going to be stolen away. Would the minister not consider contacting a lot of these industries and finding out if they could take on additional help—I would assume assisted by the government—so that at least by the time the new Ford plant is opened we would have additional numbers of skilled tradesmen?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Clearly I have the same concerns the member has, and clearly, when the Minister of Education was in Windsor recently to open the employer-sponsored training program there, she demonstrated the same concern.

Mr. Cooke: The Big Three aren't even involved in it.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I would again ask the member to put his question to the minister who has been involved with that project.

Mr. McClellan: She's incompetent in everything.

Mr. Warner: She's advertising in England.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister assure the House that within a month he will take over the duties of minister of manpower and make that a reality, or is this just another Conservative promise that will not be met by any effective action out in the province?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, once again I would ask if you would consider allowing the involved minister to respond to the question. I might just say that I think the member for Ottawa Centre should know that the ad hoc advisory committee, with representatives from all segments of society—management, labour and education—shares a concern with me that there is no serious commitment—there is a serious commitment to manpower and I have a commitment to it.

Mrs. Campbell: A Freudian slip.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: He shouldn't play that sort of game.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Labour has continually referred to a redirect to the Minister of Education, may I ask her a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Sweeney: Thank you. What specific programs are now in place in the Windsor area, particularly at St. Clair Community College—and in other places in the province where it's appropriate—which would prepare people for specific job openings the minister now knows are going to occur in a year or two years?

Mr. di Santo: Don't lie now.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, under the direction of the employer-sponsored training program in Windsor, there has been developed a community industrial training committee with representatives from labour, from management, from the educational institutions, from the boards of education and from representatives of the general population in Windsor.

An hon. member: But none of the big auto companies.

Mr. Warner: The government should advertise for cabinet ministers. Put an ad in an English paper.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The community college in Windsor has been working diligently—in fact on shifts—in order to accommodate the requirement for educational training programs in areas related specifically to the machine tool industry.

In addition to that, just about four weeks ago we inaugurated a new program of employer-sponsored training in the Windsor area which will, within the next 12- to 18-month period, involve 2,000 individuals in training programs specifically related to the increased requirements of the automobile industry in the Windsor area.

These trainees have already begun and they have begun in the smaller plants in Windsor because we feel very strongly that these small plants in that area should not be jeopardized by increased demand for skilled workers at the Ford plant when the Ford plant opens.

We are moving in this direction in several other communities as well and I believe by September there will be 17 communities in which employer-sponsored training programs will be in active progress by the fall of this year.

Mr. Swart: You are doing tomorrow what you should have done years ago.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In addition to that we are attempting to upgrade with some speed the program of apprenticeship in a number of areas specifically related to skilled trades in terms of requirements, computerizing the recording program, shortening the length of time necessary, hopefully, and co-ordinating that more effectively with the secondary school system and with the college school system.

Mr. Foulds: That's why the numbers are plummeting.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: This too is an initiative that is being carried on vigorously right at this time.

Mr. Cassidy: We have heard the words too many times before.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We are working with the task force committee established now under the authorization of the Minister of Labour to define those areas in which we have acute and specific needs, in order that we can begin to move as accurately in those areas as well.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, a point of order: In this last exchange of questions, I believe on three occasions the Minister of Labour suggested the question be redirected. Could you advise the House as to the procedure expected in this matter? When redirection is suggested by one minister, is the minister to whom that redirection is suggested expected to answer, or is the person asking the question expected to direct it by himself or herself to the other minister, or shall the direction come from the chair? It would appear there is some uncertainty as to just who should answer and on whose suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: There is no uncertainty in the mind of the person who occupies this chair. It is up to the questioner to direct the question to the minister who the questioner thinks is appropriate. As long as it is within the purview of the minister in question, he or she can answer in any way he or she chooses. I see no reason why anybody shouldn't redirect the question, but it is not up to the chair to do it; it is up to the questioner.

Mr. Cooke: Regarding the various questions I asked, the Minister of Labour could not answer them and tried to redirect them. I tried to get the attention of the chair to redirect them. I wonder if the Minister of Education would attempt to answer, since the information she gave yesterday to our party leader was completely and totally inaccurate.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The honourable member for Windsor has just said that the information I gave yesterday was entirely inaccurate. I would like to know what it is he is talking about.

Interjections.Mr. Speaker: Order, orderMr. Cooke: She said there were no interested young people and that is clearly inaccurate.Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the original point of order, if I might: You have indicated it is up to the member to redirect the question. You do realize, I am sure, that requires standing on one's feet again, getting the recognition of the chair in a supplementary and asking for redirection. Given the very reasonable but strict limitations put on the number of supplementaries, you recognize the difficulty this imposes.

I hope you'll take that into consideration in deciding how we should deal with these redirect problems. When one minister suggests redirection to another, perhaps it might not be out of line to consider that the other minister might complete the answer given by the first minister rather than demanding another supplementary from each person. The member for Huron-Bruce, for instance, had a clear situation which should have been redirected but had no opportunity to do so, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I disagree completely with the Leader of the Opposition. When the member for Huron-Bruce got up he specifically asked a supplementary of the Minister of Labour. He had every opportunity to redirect, as was the case with the member for Kitchener-Wilmot. It was a very legitimate request and I acceded to it for the very reasons suggested by the Minister of Labour. I see no problem whatsoever.

[Later (10:44):]

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I think I have a point of privilege in that yesterday the Minister of Education in this Legislature made the following statement:

"However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the honourable member opposite that while the places for training are there, it is not the position of this government that we would go out and coerce people into the training program."

Yet this morning when I asked a question of the minister and reminded her that yesterday she said there were not enough young people to go into these programs in the Windsor area, she said she had not said that yesterday. Mr. Speaker, it is about time we got straight answers from this Minister of Education.

[10:45]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I do not think my answer could have been straighter yesterday. It is the informed opinion of many people who have examined the problems that we have with skill training in the province of Ontario that recruitment to skill training has been impeded by a lack of enthusiasm on the part of our young people.An hon. member: That's just your opinion.Mr. Mackenzie: You don't know what you are talking about.Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am sorry, I am not reporting my opinion. I am reporting the opinion of knowledgeable individuals who have examined this problem over a period of time from many areas, including the teaching professions, those who employ such skilled workers and some representatives of trade unions, all of whom confirm that it has been difficult to recruit young people into the skilled trades as well. Those who attended the Skills for Jobs conference last June would, I think, have supported that statement without any question at all.Mr. Warner: It would be nice to get some straight answers from you here.Hon. Miss Stephenson: There has been a decrease in the total number of places in apprenticeships over the last decade, for reasons which have to do with changes in the industrial program within the province of Ontario, but there have also been places which have been unfilled because recruitment has been difficult. I did not specify the Windsor area at all, and I had no intention of doing so.Mr. Cooke: This minister is a total disgrace.Hon. Miss Stephenson: Therefore, I believe that I did not in any way mislead the honourable member opposite.Mr. Martel: You are a disaster waiting for a place to happen.Hon. Miss Stephenson: The member just doesn't like facts.

[Reverting (10:31):]

FUNDING OF HOMES
FOR HANDICAPPED*Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development arising out of the catch-22 situation facing Participation House in Ottawa, a residence for handicapped adults, which is part of the program that was agreed to by the government back in 1972, but which is now blocked from getting capital funding from Wintario and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation because the ministry or the government will not make a commitment to provide ongoing funding after 1980-81.

Will the minister make that commitment now, so that Ottawa can have this residence for handicapped adults, which is so badly needed and which is comparable to the ones now funded by the government in Markham, Hamilton and Brantford?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, through you to the honourable member, I have no knowledge of the problems of that particular Participation House. It has not been brought to my attention. I will look into it and study the details and I will respond later.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm surprised at the minister's response, in view of her responsibility for the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped. Can the minister say how this particular project is to get under way if they're being told they can't get capital funding until they have a commitment for operational funds, and they are being told that they can't get operational funds until they are built. How does this project get out of that catch-22 kind of situation? Does what the government is saying really mean that because it will guarantee funding only on a year-to-year basis it has effectively said it will veto any future such residences for handicapped adults in the province?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated I'm very interested and I will look into the situation and find out what the problems are. We on this side of the House are just as interested in providing accommodation and support services for handicapped people as the members on that side. They have no monopoly on caring for people who are handicapped.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you have the answer to something once in a while?

Mr. Speaker: The minister says she has not sufficient knowledge to answer. She will take the question as notice and report back at a later date.

LIQUOR, WINE PRICES

Mr. Breithaupt: A question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Is the minister familiar with this five-year-old report of the Ontario Wine Advisory Committee, whose chairman was Mr. A. Gordon Cardy and one of whose members was the Honourable John Robarts? If so, and in view of the widespread and growing support for the revision of imported wine prices, would the minister advise what consideration he has given in particular to the proposal to set up a sliding-scale markup on imported table wines?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'm vaguely familiar with that report. Markups, whether they are sliding scales that are 123 per cent or other markups, are not my responsibility.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Before the estimates of the ministry come before the justice committee, and since the Liquor Control Board of Ontario is a responsibility of the minister, would the minister have officials of the board attempt to bring the statistics in the report up to date so that the House and the public would know what the current figures are and so that we could then discuss the matter during the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would be delighted, Mr. Speaker, but I draw to the attention of the honourable member that yesterday, for quite a period of time, the public accounts committee dealt with all of this. We can give him statistics—I can give him a statistic right now; Canadian whisky prices, even with the increases, are far less in terms of disposable income than they ever were. We can give him that. But we went through all of this yesterday.

The markup, which is really what I think he is looking at, or a sliding scale, which would be a new, more flexible form of markup, is really a policy matter that is outside the scope of the board and of the minister. What is within the scope of the board and my scope as the minister responsible here—but primarily the board—is that the wholesale price, or the price delivered to the board, whether it's a foreign or domestic product, is an accurate price.

As the honourable member knows, we have no control over foreign prices. We do have control over domestic prices. The domestic whisky and spirit industry, the Ontario wine industry and the Ontario beer industry all have to seek approval through the board for production or pass-through cost increases. But that is the limit of what the board does with prices other than to combine the wholesale price and to add on the markup.

Mr. Breithaupt: Now that the matter is clearly on the record of the House as to the Treasurer's responsibility, could I redirect to the Treasurer the question with respect to considerations that the Treasury is making with respect to the suggestions in the report?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have read the report, Mr. Speaker, and I am surprised that the House has suddenly discovered that the Treasurer sets the markup. It is not something new. It has been going on for years. I am glad to read the headline in the Globe today that recognizes the responsibility rests here. It is one I do not shirk. The only thing I can point out, as we have said a number of times, is that it is cheaper to buy liquor in Ontario than anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Martel: Did the Treasurer cut up his jacket and make a tie with it?

Mr. Germa: He murdered the bagpipes.

Mr. Warner: I'll bet it glows in the dark.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You should see his socks.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I want the members to know that the constituent from Muskoka who made me this asked me to be sure I wore it.

Mr. Warner: He is now without his bagpipes.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is loyalty above and beyond the call of duty; no question about it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: How many of the member for Sudbury East's constituents have made him a tie?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Certainly in the pre-budget process I read that report and gave it consideration.

There is a common misconception about normal commercial practices in the business world when people look at the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. When the price of Volkswagens goes up at cost, the price goes up at retail by the same percentage. Retailers traditionally have had markups which they apply to their costs. The idea that we should not do that because it is liquor seems to me to be rather foolish. It is a fundamental fact of normal commercial practice.

The suggestions made are interesting. They are certainly worth consideration. But they also have to be tied into the current General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations, which are fairly involved in this kind of thing. Any one move by the province right now, I believe, could leave us in a poor position in some of the agreements going on with GATT. That is why I chose for this year not to make any basic change in structure without saying it would not be something we should consider.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the Ontario wine growers claim their percentage contribution to the operating costs versus their total sales in the liquor licensing operation is greater than that paid by the importers of wine, is the minister planning to change or adjust some of the prices to make the contribution to the operating costs of the board more equitable?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I read a very interesting speech given by the president of the board in, I believe, Barrie, where he set out the hidden costs of handling, and they were quite interesting. I think the sum and substance of that speech was we netted out in about the same position with the markups Ontario had on Ontario wine and the markups we had on the foreign wines, when one took into account all the other true costs of handling that were involved. We did change the markups on Ontario wines, as the members know, in the budget by two ways; we brought some down and brought some up to an equal, uniform rate.

Mr. Makarchuk: That was to discourage the consumption of fortified wines by certain elite citizens.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No. Really, I think it was to recognize that the "pop" wines, the seven per cent wines, have become very popular. They are filling a very real demand in society and the 70 per cent rate that used to apply to them should be equalized with whatever rate we choose to select for other Ontario wines. We also had another phenomenon to take into account and that was the growth of company stores, in which the LCBO has not participated and the government now does.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary; the honourable the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Just very briefly, since the Treasurer indicates the sliding markup scale is somehow totally out of keeping with his experience of Volkswagen and normal commercial practice—

Hon. F. S. Miller: I didn't say that; that is not what I said.

Mr. S. Smith: Well, since the Treasurer has very plainly indicated he believes a straight markup is normal commercial practice and he is surprised—

Hon. F. S. Miller: You don't know anything about commercial practice.

Mr. S. Smith: The record will show, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer has just said normal commercial practice is to mark up Volkswagens by the same amount retail as they are marked up wholesale. This kind of markup is a normal commercial practice. Is the Treasurer suggesting a sliding markup is somehow an abnormal practice? Is he suggesting Mr. A. Gordon Cardy, Mr. John Robarts and Mr. Dean Muncaster, the head of Canadian Tire, didn't understand normal commercial practice when they made this report in the first place?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the member from the Kitchener area has a much better grasp of fundamentals than his leader. He at least understood my response. I shall let it rest; the member can go back and read it and I hope somebody will interpret it for him.

Interjections.

PROVINCIAL SCHOOLS DISPUTE

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister now involve himself directly and immediately in speaking to the Provincial Schools Authority, the management bargaining agent with the provincial school teachers, to ensure the final salary offer of a pitiful 2.6 per cent increase is increased—an offer which comes along with restrictive staffing cutback problems as training schools are closed, an offer which was rejected by 87 per cent of the teachers in that bargaining unit? Will the minister become involved in an attempt to avoid the strike situation which will arise early next week in our Correctional Services training school centres and our schools for the deaf, blind and retarded across this province?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and answer the member on Monday.

Mr. Bounsall: In taking that under notice would the minister point out to the Provincial Schools Authority the arbitration award of 6.5 per cent to Liquor Control Board of Ontario employees, which was made known only yesterday, so they will know by how much, therefore, their offer is patently ridiculous?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I am sure they are well aware of that offer.

TEACHER-BOARD DISPUTE

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. In view of the discussion this morning in this Legislature over the real concern for job opportunities and job training, and in view of the fact that I have had many calls from student councils and students going to schools under the Haldimand Board of Education expressing the concern that they would like to get back to school because they know they need their education, can the minister indicate to me what rights the students have?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can define specific rights on behalf of students in the face of an altercation between a school board and the teachers employed by that board. However, I am aware that if the required number of educational or instructional hours has been completed by the students in certain subjects, they may be able to gain credit for that subject on that basis during the school year and may not have that portion of their educational program in jeopardy.

It is my understanding that that board has made some tentative recruiting feelers in various areas in order to try to ensure that those students who are in grade 13 will not face severe jeopardy in terms of their education. I can tell the honourable member that the Education Relations Commission is monitoring the situation very closely and that the chairman has been requested by me to let me know immediately he believes the educational program of the children is in jeopardy so that we may attempt to find some other solution.

At this point in time, it is my understanding as well that the mediator who stands ready to serve both the board and the teachers in that situation has not had his services requested up to this point. I would urge the trustees and the teachers, in the interests of the students' educational program, to make use of the mediator's services as rapidly as possible to try to develop an agreement.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: Can these students receive diplomas or certificates indicating where they now stand so that they may apply for positions which are or may be available at plants such as the new Stelco complex in Nanticoke?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: As I said, if they have completed the required number of instructional hours with reasonable, average marks at this time in this school year, I am sure that some letter could be granted by the school board to inform prospective employers of that; but they certainly could not, I think in most instances, be granted their secondary school graduation diplomas or their honours graduation diplomas because of the fact that the entire instructional year has not as yet been completed.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Given that the practice in the past has been to wait six or eight weeks before these things are settled; given that we have waited until the mediators have been called in; given that a report to her ministry last September clearly showed this procedure had resulted in grade 13 students being negatively affected by it, how can we continue to go on with this procedure? When are we going to move in more quickly and say that the first and foremost concern is the good of the students?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Because of my concern about the future and the jeopardy in which students have been placed in certain situations, as this House knows I have asked for a complete review of Bill 100 and the procedures thereunder. It is absolutely essential, I believe, that we, at this time, examine the effects of the procedures established under Bill 100 in order to ensure we are moving in the right direction in the resolution of problems.

The amount of time that has been lost by those students in Haldimand has, in actual fact, been not as great as it appears, taking into consideration the long Easter weekend, the school break period and some other things. I have specifically asked the Education Relations Commission, whose responsibility it is under the act, to inform me about the degree of jeopardy they believe those students are under. I am very much concerned about this, because I don't want any one of those students to be even slightly damaged by whatever happens in the Haldimand area at this time.

Mr. Sweeney: They went too long in the past.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: At this point, there is no fixed time established in terms of jeopardy for the educational program, and I would not anticipate that the Education Relations Commission would consider there was any fixed time. They have to monitor the situation on its own merits and make that information available to us.

GAINS PAYMENTS ERRORS

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Revenue. I wonder if the minister can comment on a statement made by one of his staff people that there are many instances of senior citizens being asked to repay huge sums of money paid out by accident under the Gains program as a result of poor co-ordination between provincial and federal authorities. Can the minister inform the House, or table with the House, how many people have received Gains payments to which they are not entitled, how much the ministry is attempting to collect that has been paid out accidentally, and what is the average amount that he is attempting to collect from each of these people who have been overpaid?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, that particular question and most of the details for which the member is asking were on the Order Paper not very long ago. I believe it was answered.

However, those are the types of figures that I wouldn't have with me. Certainly I will get them for the member.

Mr. Philip: I wonder, then, if the minister can answer this question: Why has there not been a system developed by his ministry to automatically inform recipients in advance when they should apply for federal benefits and when they will no longer be entitled to full Gains payments? I wonder if he would look specifically into the case of a Mrs. Alice das Dores Silva, who has allowed me to use her name, whom the ministry neglected to inform of her ineligibility for full payment of Gains upon receipt of the old age pension and supplement, and who is now being asked to repay $5,266.36 which this ministry has paid out by accident?

Mrs. Campbell: "We care."

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If the member would send me the information regarding that particular case I would be happy to look into it. But I must remind the member that the Gains program is one that is actually tied on to the guaranteed income supplement, as I am sure he is aware. It is administered by the federal government, rather than our ministry, to the greatest extent, because it is tied in to the income tax system, which again is administered by the federal government.

We have been very lenient in the past and will continue to be so in cases of actual hardship where people are asked to pay money back. If I can have a look at that particular case, the woman in question may be one who would qualify.

VIOLENCE IN SCHOOLS

Mr. Bradley: My question is for the Minister of Education. In view of continuing media reports of violence, vandalism and certain criminal activities taking place within the confines of some secondary school buildings in Ontario would the minister indicate to the House what action her ministry is taking to assist teachers and administrators to alleviate this problem?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, there are two problems inherent in this. First is the problem of what could be construed as violent action between teachers and students, which comes under the full responsibility of the principal of that school. The disciplinary action to be taken is the decision of the principal of that institution.

The problem of intruders into the school building is one that was of sufficient concern that a special committee was established, made up of representatives of school principals, secondary school teachers, boards of trustees and Ministry of Education representatives. That report has been submitted to my office. I gather it was submitted just before I returned from China. It is on my desk now and I am hoping I am going to have a chance to complete reading it this week in order that we may act on some of the recommendations contained therein.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker: Would the minister indicate whether she feels—with a preliminary look at the report, or any information she has at the present time—she would be initiating any legislation within the Legislature to deal specifically with that problem as it relates to the Petty Trespass Act and the Education Act and how they might be strengthened to keep intruders out?

Secondly, would the minister indicate whether she feels boards of education and the ministry are giving sufficient backing to secondary school principals and vice-principals to deal with disciplinary problems that originate within the school itself?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In answer to the first question, that's a very real possibility. As to the second question, I'm not sure I can answer that right at the moment.

ENERGY MANAGEMENT PROGRAM

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In the light of the discontinuation of the work within his ministry in the area of energy conservation and renewable energy, can the minister tell this House if he considers the Ministry of Energy's $5.6 million in provincial support for the development of renewable energy and conservation to be a sufficient level of support for the development and marketing of this very promising technology?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I answered a comprehensive series of questions on this very topic last week from the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed). We undertook the energy conservation program—which is what it was—for industry several years through the energy buses. The energy buses are continuing to service our industrial clientele. Apart from that we had some three consultants working on energy—

Ms. Gigantes: I didn't ask you what they were doing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member had studied the program, she would know that what she is talking about in terms of the Ministry of Energy's program really does not relate to the work that was being carried on in our ministry by the consultants.

As a result of our consultants' work—as I indicated the other day—further work is being undertaken by the Ontario Research Foundation funded by our ministry to continue the energy program, as it relates to industry, to replace the work that was done earlier.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister tell us, when Ontario Hydro is going to be permitted to borrow close to $2 billion on the international money market this year for its nuclear program, whether he doesn't feel the government should be devoting more than a total of $9.7 million, through the Ministry of Energy, for the encouragement of industry associated with energy conservation and alternative energy supply technologies?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I might say we are quite satisfied with the level of support we are giving industry—

Mr. Warner: You're always satisfied with mediocrity.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—in terms of energy conservation. We think the programs are excellent ones. They apparently are very well received by industry. Industry is not indicating the level of support from this government for their energy programs is falling short.

RYERSON POLYTECHNICAL INSTITUTE

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Education. In view of the fact our young people are showing remarkable enthusiasm for polytechnical education, and since Ryerson's enrolment is on the increase—reversing the trend in other institutions—would the minister advise this House in precise terms what steps she is taking to ensure that Ryerson continues and has an enriched program to meet the needs of our young people?

[11:00]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the member that Ryerson is not the only post-secondary institution enjoying an increase in enrolment.

Mrs. Campbell: I didn't say it was.

Mr. Warner: Answer the question.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The community colleges are also moving in that direction as well and there are certain universities within the province of Ontario in which the enrolment is increasing in addition. About five weeks ago I met with the president and representatives of the board of Ryerson, who had come to discuss the funding of Ryerson specifically.

We reviewed the funding mechanism which had been established in the past as a result of agreement with the Ryerson board in 1974 that the basic income unit level for Ryerson would be at a specific amount of 1.3. It was suggested to me that the situation had changed and that Ryerson deserved examination in terms of an enriched funding formula for BIUs. I requested of the board and the president that they develop their proposal and submit it to the Ontario Council on University Affairs, which is the procedure which is followed by all universities, and by Ryerson and the Ontario College of Art.

That meeting was either held yesterday or it's to be held next Thursday, one or the other. The proposal will be made by Mr. Pitman to OCUA at that time and then the recommendation will come to me from OCUA. We shall examine the recommendation of OCUA with real sympathy, because Ryerson does have a unique role in this province, there is no doubt about that.

Mrs. Campbell: A supplementary: Does the minister not realize that referring the matter to OCUA—and I'm perfectly aware of the procedures—is not going to resolve the problem when Ryerson, for example, is faced with the same formula as those with decreasing enrolments and suffers thereby? The formula is at stake for Ryerson, on the slip-year financing as well as the rest of the formula, and she cannot go on waiting for OCUA to take from one university or college to give to Ryerson.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I would remind the member that Ryerson agreed to the formula which was established at that time—

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, they did. Their Tory appointees did.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —and they have now decided that there have been changes which require a modification of the formula. OCUA is a committee which is made up of extremely knowledgeable people who are not tardy in making their recommendations to the minister, I can assure the member of that. It has been requested of them that they do so as expeditiously as possible and I'm sure that that will happen. The meeting will occur on April 27.

Mr. Warner: The minister should get a job selling baloney.

Mr. Cooke: A supplementary: I would like to ask the minister if she really realizes how desperate the position of Ryerson is at this point when, for example, the faculty-student ratio at that institution has increased consistently over the last number of years to 16.1 to one, whereas most polytechnics, like the ones in Britain, are at eight to one? And in referring this matter to OCUA, would the minister not agree that since she has not accepted the recommendations on funding from OCUA, and her predecessor has not, what credibility does referring this matter have, because even if OCUA agrees with Ryerson's position she will reject the recommendations anyway?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That, of course, is entirely erroneous, because the formulae which have been developed for funding of universities have been accepted by my predecessors and I have no reason to suspect that I would do anything differently at the present time.

I believe it is important that OCUA, which has responsibility for making recommendations about Ryerson as well as about universities, has an opportunity to look at the proposals made by Ryerson. I have not seen the proposals made by Ryerson because they were not developed. I asked for the proposals to be developed so that we could examine them, and when they are presented to OCUA I'm sure that I will see a copy as well, and I shall examine them in that light too.

I would remind the member opposite that the faculty-student ratio is not the only factor which is important in the effectiveness and in the efficiency of any educational institution. There are space requirements at Ryerson—

Mr. Cooke: You just don't understand and you never will.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —about which we have made specific recommendations recently, which the Ryerson board is looking at and which they're going to come back and talk to us about.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: She's way ahead of you fellows.

Mr. Cassidy: You make Margaret Thatcher look like a bleeding heart.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I feel sorry for you, Michael.

BUILDING MATERIAL PRICES

Mr. Swart: I have a new question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Housing. Is the Minister of Housing concerned about the tremendous escalation in the price of materials in the construction industry? In particular, does he know the price of the type of copper tubing which is standard in house construction, type M half-inch, has gone up 38 per cent in the last six months—

An hon. member: Have you seen the price of copper lately?

Mr. Swart: —and that although it is made in Canada from Canadian copper, the price of that tubing is set at the United States dollar level plus the import duty?

In view of the fact that housing starts are down by a third in this province this year, would the minister tell the House what steps he has taken, with the federal government or through his own government, to endeavour to stop this continuing escalation in the price of construction materials?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have the belief that the Ministry of Housing was not trying to establish or certify prices relating to the cost of materials going into the development of the housing industry.

Mr. Havrot: How can you regulate the price of copper pipe like that?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Obviously, the manufacturers of this province—indeed, of this country—are producing materials for the construction industry, regardless of whether it's copper tubing or whether it happens to be one of the very important products of house construction, which is wood. Both of them have escalated rather substantially over the last period of time.

Mr. Swart: What have you done? That's the question.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'm not here to defend the lumber industry or any of the others, but I think if we go back a few years we'll see that the lumber industry—

Mr. Cassidy: Longer.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The member should listen for a minute, because it will be information for him. The fact is that back a few years ago the lumber industry was suffering a downtrend—

Mr. Warner: He didn't ask about lumber.

Hon. Mr. Bennett:—and was priced lower than it cost to produce 1,000 board feet of lumber. Today, it is at a market position which returns a profit for those industries to continue to function in various parts of Ontario. I do not, in any way, shape or form, attribute the cost of building materials to the downtrend we have in the construction industry at this time in Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Unanswered.

MOTION

PRIVATE BILLS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Bill Pr3, An Act respecting Young People's Theatre, and Bill Pr4, An Act respecting the Financing of the Huronia District Hospital, be withdrawn from the standing general government committee and be referred to the administration of justice committee.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL

ELECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Leluk moved first reading of Bill 65, An Act to amend the Election Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Leluk: Mr. Speaker, section 1 of the bill, the re-enacted section 35 of the act, enlarges the grounds upon which a person is entitled to appoint a voting proxy. Section 2, the re-enacted section 134, extends the offence for improper voting by proxy to include the inducement or soliciting of proxies and the appointment of proxies for reward or remuneration.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I had asked the minister for some information with respect to the fair wage and salary scales of maintenance staff in the permanent civil service. I wonder if we could be provided with that before we get to the vote. I asked for it about three days ago.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I believe I will have the information for the member in a moment.

On vote 502, provision of accommodation program:

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There are three or four items I would like to bring to the attention of members as a result of earlier questions.

The member for Windsor-Walkerville earlier in the estimates requested information on—I thought he referred to the county jail.

Mr. B. Newman: The old county courthouse and the county jail.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That's what I wanted to clear up. I have here a map of that property; the honourable member will recognize the county administrative building, the jail and the registry office as being shown on this map.

The other day I understood him to say "jail"; I was a little hesitant in answering because I didn't think the jail was part of it. Neither the jail nor the registry office is part of it; it is the county administrative building. I just want to clarify that so that there is no misunderstanding. It is the portion outlined in red, as the honourable member well understands.

The honourable member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), on Monday of this week in my estimates, brought to my attention a letter addressed, "Dear Member of the Ontario Legislative Assembly." This letter was sent by Greenwin, and the honourable member asked for my assurance that this group was not going to construct a building on government land at the corner of Bay and Wellesley, as indicated in the letter.

I would like to advise that I have had my staff investigate this matter, and the site on which Greenwin intends to construct this 19-storey high-rise residential building is 62 Wellesley Street, which was the War Amps building, located just to the rear of the Sunoco building. This land is privately owned and is on the opposite side of the street from the government's land.

We have been unable to determine when this building will be constructed, because the Greenwin company is doing a market research study on the viability of proceeding with this building. One way of completing this study was to determine the interest that the members of the Legislative Assembly might have in such a complex because of the nearness of the site to the Queen's Park area.

I trust this will alleviate any concerns the honourable member may have relative to the possibility of this ministry dealing directly.

The member also was interested to know that it wasn't the East of Bay site; it is on the opposite side of the street.

[11:15]

I was asked questions last night, and this is my statement in reply to the question re the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation by the members for Oakwood (Mr. Grande) and Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella).

On March 15, 1977, this ministry was advised that Management Board had approved the purchase of the former girls' training centre at 3044 Dufferin Street on the corner of Lawrence Avenue for use as a culture centre basically for the Italian community, to be administered by the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation. This was on the understanding that the site would be leased to the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation until such time as the association had sufficient funds to repurchase it from the government.

A lease was arranged with all the responsibility for maintenance, upkeep and taxes being assumed by the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation. This arrangement carried on until Government Services was advised on November 28, 1978, that the cabinet had directed that the property be sold to the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation for the acquisition cost of $2,607,125. An order in council approving this sale was completed on April 11, 1979, and the transfer of the deed is in its final stages. The sale to the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation was without restrictions.

I'm open for questions on that.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I am in some ways surprised about the conditions of such a lease of the land for a certain period of time to the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation. What strikes me is that there are no conditions on the transaction. The principle which should be considered in such a transaction is that this land is going to be used for the Italian community to expand a project which will incorporate different principles from which the Italian community can benefit.

I do not want to advance a particular hypothesis about the future because nobody knows what can happen to the corporation. But, as I stated before, it strikes me that this government has got into this particular agreement without any restrictions. In other words, the option is open to the corporation after a certain period of time—I don't know how long because I don't have the information in front of me—to repay this amount of money to the government.

Because of my concern about the expansion of the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation through future projects which might take place on that site on which the government entered into this agreement with the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation, I guess that this government has the right to put certain restrictions in order that the land won't be resold to private individuals or to private companies in the event that something goes wrong within the corporation. I think that common sense dictates that the government should follow this particular route.

In view of this particular concern, I'm not sure if it is appropriate at this point in time to request all the information available about this particular transaction. The conditions, as the minister has stated, are without restrictions. I guess that the government has a duty to put certain restrictions on public funds which are given, in principle, to good community projects like the one which has been developed by the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation but I don't want to express my pessimism about the particular issue. We never know the future of the corporations.

We never know the future of a particular community project.

In view of this particular vote I am requesting your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, that as soon as we have this statistical data, if it is permissible, I would like to rediscuss this transaction. In other words, when the minister makes available the details of the transaction and other material in relation to this agreement which took place some time ago between this government and the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation, I would like to have an opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this further.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I informed the honourable member last night that I would try to bring him the information. I know he requested documentation. Now the honourable member knows—

Mr. Grande: You said you were going to Xerox them and bring them here today.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They were just not available this morning. As you know, we left here at six o'clock last night and I was back here at 10 this morning.

Let me go back over a little bit of it, Mr. Chairman. Back in March 1977 the government of Ontario, through my ministry, purchased this property. I believe it was on March 17, 1977. A few weeks earlier the Ministry of Community and Social Services became aware that a developer had an option to buy this property from the sisters. The developer had all the approvals to go ahead and develop this property, as I remember. Maybe the honourable member knows about that. I can get that document.

Mr. Lupusella: I don't. That's why I'm requesting the information.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: All right. The developer had all the approvals to go ahead with it, but, situated immediately behind this property was a home for the aged. That is where the Ministry of Community and Social Services became concerned. I am sure the honourable member knows the site. I haven't been there; I am being honest with you. The member recognizes what I say about the senior citizens' home, does he?

Mr. Lupusella: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, so that part we understand. The Ministry of Community and Social Services became concerned and felt something should be done to keep this major development from moving ahead and the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation wanted to acquire it for community uses. With this in mind, cabinet instructed the Ministry of Government Services to get an appraisal of this property, which it did. It was appraised at $2,675,125. That was purchased by the government.

Mr. McClellan: From whom?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: George Heenan, the developer. Maybe some of the members know him. The name doesn't ring a bell with me. Anyway, there are 6.42 acres. The property was appraised and a price agreed on between the developer and the government, as part of the package.

We purchased it on the assumption, and on agreement with the benevolent corporation, that they take over the property immediately on the day of purchase. They took it over; we had nothing more to do with it; they pay the taxes; they pay the upkeep; they do any renovation—everything. We just purchased it as a holding company, you might say, and paid for it out of provincial dollars. When they got to the point where they were ready to purchase it back—because they did have 10 years to do what they have now done; under that lease-purchase arrangement they had up to 10 years.

The suggestion that the honourable member is putting forth now would have had to have been in that lease-purchase two years ago. We don't have the option now of putting in your proposal. These terms were set out two years ago.

Mr. McClellan: There is nothing to prevent them from selling to a third party?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, I don't believe there is. Not that I am aware of, anyway, and the present minister doesn't have authority to put that in.

Mr. Lupusella: But it can happen.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I wouldn't disagree with you. There is no—

Mr. Lupusella: That's why I'm particularly concerned.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Well, as I say, these terms were set out in the agreement signed March 17, 1977.

Mr. McClellan: The Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) is shaking his head. I wonder if he is shaking it in disbelief at the terms of the contract or whether he has a different understanding of the terms of the contract? I would be interested in knowing.

Mr. Chairman: Order. I think anyone can shake his head, if he wishes. The honourable minister?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was just reading about the Russian-Canadian hockey game.

Mr. Lupusella: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude my remarks by making the main point that I think the doubts I had are shared by the minister as well. This piece of land can be resold to other people or private companies and that is why I have a particular concern about the whole issue.

I guess the intention of the government was to acquire or to buy this piece of land for the development of community projects from which the Italian community was going to benefit. I think that this government was completely wrong to leave this particular option. Not to put restrictions on this particular transaction, I think, was totally wrong.

Again, I am urging the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, to table all the information available in relation to the acquisition of this land—any terms of reference in relation to the transaction which took place in 1977 between this government and the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation.

Now, I am not sure myself if there are remedies that can be applied in order to put on restrictions—which I feel quite strongly about—in order to remove this open option whereby the corporation might resell this piece of land acquired by this government because it was concerned about community projects in relation to the Italian community. Again, I am not sure if there are remedies which can be applied to prevent such a particular event from taking place. In the meantime, I am really urging the minister to table all the information available to his ministry about this affair. Also, Mr. Chairman, as soon as this material becomes available, I urge you to give us approval to go back to this vote, if we are going to vote today.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, as you know, when we reach one o'clock today we will only have 20 or 25 minutes left in my estimates. If there are specific questions I will do my best to answer them today in order to help the honourable members, but time will certainly run short Monday. We won't get that much time to debate them. I am ready to answer any question you might have.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude my remarks.

Mr. Chairman: I must remind the member too of standing order 48(b). The chairman has the responsibility to make certain all members can share in the allotted time. One more.

Mr. Lupusella: I am going to conclude my remarks, in view of the fact the estimates might terminate on Monday. I do not know how many hours are left. The minister has to take into great consideration and investigate any alternative option in order that we can put a restriction on this transaction and prohibit the reselling of this particular land to private companies or to private individuals. I am urging the minister, in cooperation with the Attorney General, Solicitor General or other branches of his ministry, to make sure this particular clause is going to be implemented. I hope the minister will take my suggestion into consideration and will table the information in this House.

Mr. Chairman: Any comment, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am talking to my staff here. I am sure I signed the deed; this deal is closing Monday. The sale is that far along the way.

Mr. McClellan: Give us the documents we are asking for.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will have them Monday.

Mr. McClellan: You cannot get them today?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, we cannot get them today. We do not have available today the appropriate staff who have those documents.

Mr. Warner: Why do we not adjourn the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I mentioned to you that on April 11 an order in council went through. I will do my best to have them here for the estimates on Monday. I refer you back to the fact this sale was not arranged at this moment but was arranged in March 1977. Then, an option to lease was an option to the corporation to buy. These are not terms that were set out now; these terms were set out some two years ago. As the present minister, I do not feel like breaking the terms of that lease. I like to think I am a man of honour.

Mr. Lupusella: You are dealing with public money, $2.6 million.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, an agreement was made two years ago. The present minister is not in a position to remove certain clauses.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Victoria-Haliburton. The member for Oakwood will be next.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: What is your point of order?

Mr. Grande: Mr. Chairman: At one time I was standing on my feet and you had gone as far as to mention my name. I would hope, Mr. Chairman, you would allow me two questions and no more.

Mr. Chairman: If the honourable member is not aware, I would like to inform him it is my duty to make certain every member who wishes to ask questions has the opportunity to ask questions. However, I have to do it on a rotation basis.

Mr. Grande: That is quite correct.

Mr. Chairman: I now recognize the member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Minister, yesterday afternoon the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) announced the closing of the Kawartha Lakes School in Lindsay. During this announcement he did say he has made every attempt to try and find an occupant for that building. I believe they had contacted the federal government through your ministry, and no one could find a proper use at this time for the particular building.

Is the minister aware of the need for additional court facilities in the town of Lindsay, county of Victoria? In fact, the conditions there are dreadful. Are you aware of whether your ministry had looked into the feasibility of using the Kawartha Lakes School for such a purpose? If not, will you look into the feasibility of converting this school to additional court facilities for the county?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in responding to the honourable member, I was here when the announcement was made yesterday, but as you know, I was preparing myself a little bit for the estimates. When the Minister of Community and Social Services responded to a question, I believe he set out some inquiries that were made by his ministry respecting this piece of property.

Until yesterday my staff were not aware of this announcement, so they would not have been involved. But let me repeat for the honourable member what I stated earlier in my estimates: When property of this nature is referred to my ministry as surplus property of the ministry concerned, my ministry circulates this to all government ministries and agencies to see if there is any requirement for it.

Following this, if there is no requirement, it is then circulated to the local governing body to see if they have any requirement for it. Following that, if there is no interest—and I would expect that would be the stage at which the local people would make their suggestions that this would make an excellent park or what have you—then it is put up for either public auction or public tender.

I believe the minister yesterday—I am speaking from hearsay—did give some special mention to the one in Lindsay.

Mr. Eakins: The reason I asked the question is that the minister indicated he had already contacted both federal and provincial governments and that there was no indication of need. I am wondering if this ministry is aware of the great need for additional court space in the county of Victoria?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Additional court space?

Mr. Eakins: Additional court facilities.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We're aware of it, but the Attorney General is the one who sets priorities. Until his ministry gives us the priority, we don't have the opportunity to go ahead. It is an overall package. But it will be kept in mind.

Mr. Eakins: The minister will look into the feasibility of it?

Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Chairman, before I begin, let me apologize to you for what I did earlier.

I just have a few very simple questions. One is about this particular transaction which took place back in 1977. Did one transaction and only one transaction occur with this group? Have any other transactions of this nature occurred with other groups in other communities in Metropolitan Toronto or in Ontario? Has the Ministry of Government Services set as policy that it will do this whenever a particular benevolent corporation or a community group—a corporation on behalf of that community—comes to the minister and says, "We do not have enough funds to buy this property for the community. Would you buy it and then we would agree to buy it back from you?" Is that what the government policy is?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: To answer the member's question, firstly, I am not at this moment aware of any similar circumstances to those of this particular property. This was a unique situation.

A major developer—and I don't know who the developer is—on six and a half acres of land adjacent to the home for the aged had all the approvals, I am told. I don't have this documented, either; I was told this, I remember. He had all the approvals to proceed. Here we were up against a deadline. The benevolent corporation wanted to acquire the land. As I understood—and I told you earlier I have no guarantee it's going to be for a community project—and cabinet understood, they wanted it for a community project. But let me restate I have no guarantee here, and I'm not sure there is one anywhere that it will go for a community project.

It was a time of emergency, and the government of Ontario purchased it to assist the benevolent corporation on a temporary basis. No others come to my mind at this moment.

Mr. Grande: In that particular case, since this is one particular transaction that occurred between the government and a benevolent corporation of one community, is the minister right now saying that if a situation occurs with perhaps the same conditions—that the piece of land is close to an old age home—the minister is going to be ready to assist that community to buy that piece of land?

I would like to find out whether this is one favour that was done at that particular time, or is it something he intends to carry on with? Second, it's very important—and I would like to impress upon the minister the seriousness of this matter; he knows as well as anybody else that in the last week at least one of the directors of that particular company was before the courts, I think it was for bribery. I don't know. Those are allegations. Obviously, the individual will go before the courts and he will be able to either extricate himself or not.

However, the situation is serious. What the member for Dovercourt was talking about is very important—that that particular piece of land remain in the hands of that community. You might or might not know that community has paid for that piece of land through gifts the community has made, through the different telethons run on a yearly basis. And the government should be protecting that piece of land for community use.

I think you have to make that commitment before that transaction or that changeover on Monday, or that particular benevolent corporation buys back the land from you. You have to give an assurance to the Italian community that that piece of land remains for community purposes and community uses. I want to stress that it is a serious matter, and the minister should begin to address it before Monday in a serious way.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'm not aware of any officers of this corporation being charged in the courts. I don't know anything about it. This particular agreement was brought about by the cabinet. Staff do not have any blanket authority. In other words, if there's a future occasion, as the member suggested, similar to this one it would come to the attention of cabinet as a body. Staff wouldn't have the authority to go out and buy it, but the government might grant them that authority. They look at each case on an individual basis.

Again, I say to the member, the minister doesn't have the right to write anything special into this deed at this time. The terms of this particular sale were set out in a purchase option, which was a 10-year option, some two years ago. The minister doesn't have the authority to enter into it and make it into a public property, as suggested by the honourable member.

[11:45]

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell me how much property is being leased by the ministry at the Travelers Tower? I think it was mentioned in the leadoff vote by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon). Can the minister tell me how many square feet his ministry is leasing in the Travelers Tower on University Avenue? If I recall correctly, the rate was $7.50 per foot.

Are we going under the general vote here, Mr. Chairman? Are we doing vote 502 en masse? I guess we'll have to—

Mr. Chairman: With the time remaining, I think, we'll have to.

Mr. Ruston: Yes, because there are four more votes.

I was wondering, too, can the minister tell me the overall amount of property he has that is vacant in the Metropolitan Toronto area? Does he have that figure available?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, it would take quite a lot of research to get the details the member might want.

Mr. Ruston: I believe the minister has available each year the figures as to the percentage of vacant property.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I have two reports here. One is for Metropolitan Toronto and one is for outside Metro. I presume the member is referring to Metro; is that right?

Mr. Ruston: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The figures I'm going to give him are for vacant space as a percentage of our total inventory in Metro. For instance, the figure for disposal, subletting or demolition is 37,615 square feet. This represents 0.67 per cent of the total leased property in Metro. This has dropped. A month ago it was 0.69 per cent; so it has come back to 0.67 in the month. The dollar value of vacant space for the month is $5,664.

For space allocated but not occupied, it is just a small figure, 5,680 feet, or 0.10 per cent. A month ago that was 0.14 per cent; so it's down also. The dollar value of unoccupied space for the month is $2,985.

For space available for allocation, the figure is 24,290 square feet, or 0.43 per cent. The previous month it was 0.23 per cent. The dollar value is $13,230.

The space reserved and awaiting finalization of clients' requirements is 67,750 square feet; as applied to the total inventory, that is 1.21 per cent. The previous month it was 1.45 per cent. The dollar value is $47,177.

As for the overall totals—and he would have to look at them in the four brackets as I've given them to him—the overall total space that is vacant as of this moment is 135,335 square feet. As a percentage of the total inventory in Metro, that is 2.41 per cent; a month ago it was 2.51 per cent. The total dollar value is $69,056.

I believe that is the information that the member requested.

Mr. Ruston: I have a question with regard to the property on University Avenue, just below the new Ontario Hydro building. I think at one time the Ministry of Correctional Services used it. You said the other day the Ministry of Labour or someone was moving into it. Are they moving into the total building? Is it going to be used more or less completely? Are they going to fill it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Is the honourable member referring to the Hydro building?

Mr. Ruston: No, no, the Ontario building.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: At the corner of Dundas and University. The Ministry of Culture and Recreation is putting its welcoming group into that building.

Mr. Ruston: What about the Travelers Tower? What percentage of that building are we leasing now? Do you have that information available?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We'll have that here in a moment. I don't have the total amount for you, but we'll get that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Was the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) trying to get the Chairman's eye. My list here has the member for Yorkview next, that was all. The member for Dovercourt.

Mr. Lupusella: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to go back to the same item I raised previously. I am seeking your advice about whether it is appropriate at this point in time to put a motion before this committee. I would like to read it for the sake of the record, and then maybe you will analyse as to whether or not the motion is appropriate.

I move this committee report to the House on Monday next that the committee recommends to the government that the following course of action be initiated: that before the sale of the land at the corner of Lawrence Avenue and Dufferin Street, Toronto, Ontario, to the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation is completed, a restriction be placed in the terms of agreement that the land cannot be resold to a private corporation or individual.

Again, I would like to re-emphasize my disappointment to the minister that because the terms of the agreement between the government and the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation are going to be completed on Monday next the minister was not able to provide and make available to the members of this Legislature all the material about this particular concern. Again, I would like to emphasize I completely disagree and reprimand the minister for not tabling all the information available, in view of the fact that on Monday such an agreement is going to take place between the government and the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation and we won't be able to take any action to improve the terms of that agreement. I am really, really disappointed.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable member, it puts the minister in a difficult position and it puts the House in a difficult position. I will attempt to get an opinion from the Attorney General.

Mr. Lupusella: It will be too late. On Monday, you are going to sign the agreement. Why don't you postpone that agreement?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I will attempt to get an opinion from the Attorney General to bring to the House on Monday afternoon. I will hold up the signing of the deed until that time. Mind you, only until that time; Monday is supposed to be the closing date. We will be in here at three or 3:30 p.m. I'm going to ask the Attorney General to come in with a legal opinion I can present to you on Monday afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I just speak to the committee for a moment? I'm not sure whether the motion the member for Dovercourt has put forward is or is not in order, but I will take it under advisement and rule on it. If it is in order, we can have a vote on it a little later on, if that's in order with the minister. I have an idea the motion is not in order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Is my proposal not satisfactory to the honourable member? I have agreed that the sale will be held up until I report to the House on Monday afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You want this motion delayed. Is that it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I felt I was answering him without having to put it to a vote. I thought I was abiding by the motion. Am I not?

Mr. Young: Could I interject here? I think the purpose of the honourable member is achieved by the word of the minister which has been given here. I think the word of the minister is as good as gold. We are willing to stand by that.

He is going to bring back a report. The agreement or finalization of this sale is not going to be made until the minister reports to the House. I would hope at that time something can be done to safeguard this matter.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I felt my statement would clarify the request of the motion. That was the reason for my statement.

Mr. B. Newman: We have a motion before the House. I would suggest that the member withdraw the motion and reintroduce it on Monday, if he wishes.

Mr. Lupusella: On the minister's premise, I think it is appropriate for me to withdraw the motion, but again I would urge the minister to do everything possible to postpone such agreement until all legal advice is gathered in order that such clause is put in this agreement.

The minister and this government have a duty to protect public money. You are dealing with around $3 million which you are spending from the public purse. This government has a duty to put a restriction on the agreement in order that the money be utilized for community purposes and to prevent the corporation from reselling the property to private companies or individuals.

I hope the minister will do everything possible to make sure that such a clause will be implemented.

Mr. Warner: On a point of order, a motion has been placed. It is possible to have it withdrawn, provided there is unanimous consent. Before we enter that procedure, I wish to understand quite clearly that the minister intends to report to the House on Monday next during statements with an opinion so that the information is then given prior to our resumption of these estimates in the afternoon of Monday. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The member has added one suggestion. I agreed I would go to the Attorney General and ask him or his staff to search the records to see if we have the right to impose on the deed of sale of the property that certain restrictions be put on the property. I agreed I would bring his opinion back to my estimates on Monday afternoon.

You have put one little extra point in there that the information be supplied during statements. I have to depend on the Attorney General's staff. I am in a bind to give you the undertaking that it will be here at the time for statements. I will do my best, but I can't ensure that. I have to ask another department.

You have my assurance this minister will come back with a statement from the Attorney General. There is just the one bind there. You are putting another hour or two on something that could be vital. Is that part important to you? If I have it, I will be glad to give it to you at the time for statements.

Mr. di Santo: I appreciate the position taken by the minister. I want to make quite clear that on this side we are happy with the sale of that piece of land to a non-profit organization.

[12:00]

What we as members of this Legislature are concerned with is that if the transaction goes through, the government makes sure that if, for some unforeseen reason the corporation cannot keep that centre, perhaps because of financial problems, or there is a bankruptcy and it becomes necessary to resell that land, that it not be sold to private individuals or companies but to a non-profit organization. Or, alternatively, the province puts a clause in the transaction that in such a case it will take back the land in order to give it to organizations or use it for public interest, and not for private interests. Because, I can foresee that if a private corporation or developer gets hold of that land, there would be beautiful highrise apartments built because the bylaw has been changed recently, as the minister knows.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I will request the Attorney General to look at Hansard and to get answers for you, good or bad, one way or the other.

Mr. Lupusella: They must be good.

Mr. Young: I'm sure we thank the minister for his assurance here today. I think this is a very important matter for him, for the government and for the Legislature and I'm glad that he's taking the attitude he is because that's a very healthy point of view. I hope he comes back with the answers that we're looking for.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I gather that the committee has agreed this motion be withdrawn and that the minister will have something further to say to this matter on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, before the members ask further questions, I have a reply to the member for Essex North about 400 University Avenue.

The Attorney General has 3,090 square feet. The rent for that particular—does the member want all the details?

Mr. Ruston: Yes, if you could read them to me.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'll read this. The Attorney General has 3,090 square feet. The rent for this is $25,986.96. That works out to $8.41 per square foot. Again, the Attorney General has 1,350 square feet, the rental for which is $8,680.56. The rate for that parcel works out to $6.43 per square foot.

The Labour ministry has 191,975 square feet. Rental is $1,457,431.20, for a rental rate of $7.59 per square foot.

The Ministry of Culture and Recreation has one parcel, 30,000 square feet; rental, $244,500. I should have read out the dates that these leases run out, too, but I can go back and give them to you. This one runs out in 1981. The rental for it is $8.15 per square foot. Culture and Recreation again, 1,500 square feet; $154,500. This contract runs out in 1983 and the price of it is $10.30 per square foot. Total space rented in the building, 241,415 square feet; the annual rental, $1,891,998. The average rental is $7.87 per square foot. It's a pretty high building.

Mr. Young: There are a couple of questions I want to ask, the first one on behalf of the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) who is tied up in the Hydro committee. She asked me to ask the minister about the Ottawa courthouse, and this is listed here in the report under major capital projects approved for design. It is sort of a long way off yet, but the member for Carleton East is very anxious that she have further information as to just what hopes there are in respect to this courthouse, which is so desperately needed in that particular city. Perhaps the minister can give the answer to that and then I can go on to a further question.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I really thought it would have been the leader of the NDP who would ask about this. It is actually in his riding where we are looking at the possibility of a courthouse.

Mr. Warner: We are all concerned about it.

Mr. Young: The young lady is better looking, you see, so I listen to her.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I really didn't think that you would recognize that.

Mr. Warner: You don't know him well enough.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I know him pretty well. Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable member, I am sure that all members of the House are aware through the Ottawa papers that I visited the chairman of the National Capital Commission in Ottawa late in 1978 and proposed a site for a courthouse, which is the old Normal School site. The reason for approaching the federal government first is that it has some property to the north of our property. Ours is a triangle piece of property. We would like to trade part of the triangle and square it up to approximately four acres for a courthouse.

Mr. Warner: It will take longer than 10 years.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's interesting that you should say that. I believe the date was December 16, but don't pin me down. It was in that week anyhow, in 1978, that I presented that proposal. About the end of February, Mr. Eric Dowd, the well-known reporter, phoned me at home—it was a Friday evening—and told me about a story in an Ottawa paper that I was being offered the Daley building, which many of you people would know. The Daley building is just east of the Chateau Laurier hotel, and I was asked if I would look into the possibility of the Daley building supplying the necessary courtroom space.

I had staff look into this possibility and when I got the full report from the staff, they pointed out several deficiencies and recommended that the Daley building would not be acceptable. You know for the courtroom atmosphere we have to have double ceiling heights and restrictions put on that particular site by the city of Ottawa and by the National Capital Commission. That letter came at the end of February. About a month ago—I could get the actual date—on a Sunday afternoon, I went to Ottawa to convince myself one way or another. I visited the Daley building. I again visited the courthouse in Ottawa. I visited the courtrooms. I visited the total facility. I spent Sunday afternoon there and Monday morning, and when I came back I wrote and rejected the Daley building and told them my original proposal was still my choice.

Mr. McClellan: You still have to square the triangle, do you?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Well, a Tory government can do a lot of things.

Mr. Young: I am sure the member for Carleton East will read Hansard with a great deal of interest, if not with a great deal of satisfaction, at this moment. However, there's hope.

Mr. Chairman, a few years ago, we heard a great deal about decentralization of departments throughout the province; we were going to sort of put a little bomb under Toronto and blow the departments out in all directions. That has happened, to some extent at least. In the latest ministry annual report I read this on page 19: "Major planning was initiated for office buildings to accommodate the Ministry of Health in Kingston and the Ministry of Revenue in Oshawa." But in looking over this report to which I have just referred, Design and Construction Program 1979-80, I don't see any indication of that kind of planning going on; it may be there, or it may be beyond the stage where it would appear in this document. Perhaps the minister can bring us up to date as to what is happening in this process of decentralization.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Was it Kingston the member was especially interested in? I was trying to dig out my documents, and I missed part of his request. Was he asking about the overall decentralization or about Kingston?

Mr. Young: Perhaps the minister could deal specifically with the two examples I used and then tell us more about what is going on in the whole field.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Which two?

Mr. Young: The Ministry of Health to Kingston and the Ministry of Revenue to Oshawa.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The relocation of the head office of the Ministry of Revenue, announced last April, is progressing satisfactorily. A 1.7-acre site in downtown Oshawa has been purchased, and the development of the design and the detailed plant requirements and definition established have been completed.

This building is in our lease-purchase program. The location of this building is the west portion of the block bounded by King Street, Simcoe Street South, Athol Street West and Centre Street South. We expect there will be 1,700 people there. The estimated construction cost of this building is $22.5 million.

The project for the Ministry of Health will be located on a three-acre site in downtown Kingston which has been purchased for $765,000. It is located at the junction of Wellington Street and Place d'Arme, three blocks north of Princess Street. The Ministry of Health is currently finalizing its requirements and when these are received design work will proceed.

Mr. Young: So you have the land in Kingston?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Young: And some hope of further progress in Oshawa?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We have to get the final figure; are we putting 1,000 there, 1,200, 800? The original idea was that there would be about 900. Until we get the final figure from the Ministry of Health, we can't tell our architects and engineers to design such a building.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, does the minister want to elaborate on the whole philosophy of decentralization, or is that something he doesn't want to bother with at the present time? I don't think we need to spend too much time on it; we have these two illustrations of what is happening.

[12:15]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: As the member knows, it's the government's hope to decentralize. These are the only two major proposals with which my ministry has been involved. On other aspects I would be talking in the dark about things in which I do not think you are really interested at this time. If there are specifics, yes, we will answer them; but I think it is just a waste of time for me to start wandering all over.

Mr. Young: That is the answer I wanted. No progress has been made except in these two particular instances.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Wait a minute, Mr. Chairman, there have been lesser amounts.

Mr. Young: But when the time comes for the move the minister knows about it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Ruston: Point of order, Mr. Chairman: I think we have about an hour and a half left. I wonder if we could wind up vote 502 and go on to one of the other votes today?

Vote 502 agreed to.

On vote 503, upkeep of accommodation program; item 1, program administration:

Mr. McClellan: I had an issue I wanted to raise with the minister under this vote. I have raised it with the Ministry of Government Services every year since I was elected in 1975, and I usually raise it as well with the Ministry of Labour because a lot of my constituents are directly affected. The issue, of course, is the government's policy and practice of contracting out the cleaning services for the office buildings, particularly here at Queen's Park.

Just to refresh the minister's memory, these contracts used to be let out for tender without any fair-wage provisions, so that the contracts were awarded at the minimum wage level and that is what the contractors would offer as wages. In 1975 it happened a group of cleaners at one of these companies obtained union certification and managed to bargain their wages up above the minimum wage. When the contract came up for renewal, the company lost the contract to somebody who was prepared to pay the minimum wage. Subsequent to that, and under a lot of pressure both from within the House and outside in the communities, the government instituted a fair-wage provision for its tendering practices. I asked at the beginning of these estimates if the minister would be so kind as to give me the current fair-wage schedule, which he did and I have it before me.

I want to point something out to the minister. The fair-wage rate, for light-duty cleaners in particular in Metropolitan Toronto, is only 30 cents above the minimum wage, $3.30 an hour. The heavy-duty cleaner fair wage for Metropolitan Toronto is $4.05 an hour. Firstly, I do not know how anybody can categorize $3.30 as a fair wage in Metropolitan Toronto. It is not a fair wage, it is an unfair wage.

I make the point that when we look at the wage scale paid to cleaning staff who are civil servants, a light-duty cleaner receives for normal duties $4.56 a hour, $1.26 an hour more than your so-called fair-wage scale. A heavy-duty cleaner receives $5.32 an hour, whereas your so-called fair-wage scale is set at the rate of $4.05 per hour; again there is over a dollar an hour difference.

That suggests to me a very clear rationale for the government's practice of contracting out cleaning services here at the office buildings where we work, and where the majority of the ministry officials and civil servants work in Toronto. The rationale is to cut the wages of the cleaners; it is as simple as that.

I happen to represent a constituency in west Toronto where a great many people, mostly new Canadians, work in the cleaning industry. I am saying again, but I think for the first time since you assumed the Ministry of Government Services portfolio, that I find this practice intolerable. I regard it as exploitative. I regard it as an exploitation of people whom you and I, and your ministry officials and my staff, all of the people who work for the government of Ontario, depend on to provide the cleanliness of the work space in which we do our business. I think we can do a little better than what you are offering.

As a matter of policy, I would prefer if the government would bring essential cleaning staff on to full civil service status. I think ultimately that is the only fair way to deal with it. I don't expect the government to change its practice of contracting out, although I think it is a very regrettable thing that you do contract out essential cleaning services. These are jobs that have to be done every single day of the week. There is no reason why they shouldn't be done by people who have the full protection of civil service status so they can get decent pay and decent working conditions for the very essential work they do.

If you are not prepared to do that, surely at the very least you have the decency to establish a fair-wage scale which bears some relation to the wage rates that are paid to civil service cleaning staff and maintenance staff. How can you possibly justify such incredible differentials, differentials of up to 25 per cent in their wages? That is a ripoff, that's exploitation; there is no other way to describe it.

I want to ask the minister what kind of fair employment practice provisions are put into the tenders on these contracts? I suspect very little in the way of reference to fair employment practices goes into the contract tenders, and very little in the way of minimum-benefit provisions goes into your contracts by way of condition of award.

We go through this exercise year after year, and the discrepancies continue between your so-called fair-wage scale and the civil service salaries that are paid to cleaners on staff. I would like to know when you intend to get around to ending this kind of discrimination, this kind of exploitation of essential personnel here in our own buildings. I invite the minister to respond to this.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The minister brings out several points in his remarks. I said the minister instead of the member.

Mr. Young: The future minister.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Firstly, I am sure the member is aware that the Civil Service Commission sets the wages of all government staff. The fair wage is set by the Ministry of Labour, my staff are not involved in that.

I can't give the member all the answers he would like because I don't have access to that information. They do have a process they go through, they have a factor that they work from. They average up wages of different branches of industry, local government and what have you to come up with a rate. That information should come from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie).

Mr. McClellan: Can I just respond to that? That's precisely the problem, the cleaning industry is a minimum-wage industry. The cleaning industry operates on the basis of a pool of new Canadian workers who are relatively unskilled and who don't have many other job opportunities. The going rate of pay in the cleaning industry is the minimum wage.

The only exceptions to the prevailing wage pattern in the cleaning industry are within the public sector, at the municipal, provincial or federal levels, where there is the protection of collective bargaining at all three levels.

If the minister tells me that he is going to set a fair-wage scale on the basis of prevailing patterns in the industry—no thank you; no thank you very much; keep it. The minister is just talking about the minimum wage or slightly more than the minimum wage.

I get exercised about this because there are literally thousands of constituents in my riding—and in the riding of my colleague the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) and in the riding of my colleague the member for Oakwood (Mr. Grande)—who are working in the cleaning industry and who are trying to support their families and raise their children on these totally inadequate salaries. Many of them are living below the poverty line.

I'm asking the Minister of Government Services to try and understand that; try to understand that we're doing real harm to people with unfair fair-wage scales. We're really hurting people. To make it worse, we're hurting people who look after our offices. Our offices are being cleaned on the basis of exploitation, our very offices here at Queen's Park. Surely that ought to be unacceptable to any government?

I ask the Minister of Government Services to talk to his colleague, the Minister of Labour. I make this appeal every year to this ministry, and to the Minister of Labour whose regressive policies you are implementing.

Don't tell me this wage scale is based on anything other than an exploitative pattern of remuneration, because it isn't. The minister must base his fair-wage scale on the prevailing pattern of wage settlements within the public sector in the maintenance field. That's the only way he can develop a fair-wage scale that's fair.

I'm asking him to look at this seriously, to speak to his colleague the Minister of Labour and tell him that he personally doesn't think it's fair that the people who are cleaning the offices of our public officials and civil servants should be paid such lousy wages.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Labour, as the member suggests, does set the fair-wage scale. Regarding my suggestion that the different brackets were taken into consideration, I was speaking to the minimum wage, all these are taken into consideration.

I personally was not involved in the debates that led to setting the fair-wage scale. I was not involved.

Mr. McClellan: You are now.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: My former statement took into account the minimum wage. I was speaking to both, and maybe I didn't clarify it. I was not involved in the debates that led up to the fair-wage scale. I would suggest that the member bring this to the attention of the Minister of Labour during his estimates.

Mr. McClellan: Oh I fully intend to; but I'm asking you, Mr. Minister, to look at this matter seriously. I think there's a real injustice here, in these very buildings.

Does the minister think $3.30 is a fair wage for cleaning these offices? Does he think that $4.05 an hour is a fair wage in Metropolitan Toronto for a heavy-duty cleaner? Does he really think that himself, personally, as Lorne Henderson? Does he think that's a fair wage?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, it's not up to the Minister of Government Services to decide. That is the responsibility of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Warner: Get rid of the odious contracting out. You can do that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I will let him respond to those questions.

Mr. McClellan: That's the response I've had every year since 1975; it's always the same response and it's as unacceptable from this minister as it was from all his predecessors. He is involved in a practice of exploiting cleaning staff.

[12:30]

If I were you I would want to sit down with the Minister of Labour so that we could, together, develop a wage scale that was really fair. That is to say a fair-wage scale that could provide to the people who are providing essential cleaning services a salary on which they can live and support their families.

I don't think that's unreasonable; but the minister, as all of his predecessors, like Pontius Pilate has washed his hands of the matter and said: "It's somebody else's responsibility." Everybody in the government takes the same attitude so that it's nobody's responsibility. I guess it's just a kind of cosmic force that descends on people that results in them getting exploitative wages.

I'll pursue it with the Minister of Labour and I'll be back to pursue it again next year, whether you're here or some other minister is here.

Mr. Hodgson: You won't be here.

Mr. McClellan: I'll be here, don't you worry about that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I want to say to the member he did not pursue it last year with this ministry.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are we through with vote 503? The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted to ask one simple question of the minister and that is concerning the provision for parking for the handicapped at all government-operated buildings. Are you designating locations as close as possible to the entrance to the buildings for the handicapped, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'm sure the member knows this government is doing everything possible to assist the handicapped. We are assisting in the parking wherever possible. If the member has specific areas in mind I will attempt to answer him, but our overall policy is to try and assist the handicapped in parking in a place suitable to them.

Mr. B. Newman: May I suggest, then, that in the Windsor facility with which I'm familiar, the area right next to the entrance to the building, just off the parking lot, be specifically designated for handicapped only. At least let's show our concern visibly, even if the spot may not be used to the full. The handicapped coming in, or being brought in by someone else should know, there is a location at which they may park the vehicle and not have to manipulate any long distance when they're visiting any one of the province of Ontario offices. I'm not referring to banks now.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not referring to what?

Mr. B. Newman: To a banking facility, you operate certain banking facilities.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the member's recommendation will be brought to the attention of the people who are managing our buildings in the Windsor area. If something of this nature can be worked out we will certainly do our best.

Mr. B. Newman: It's easy to work out, Mr. Minister. All you have to do is tell them: "Look, there are going to be one or two locations, even if they aren't used to the full and are vacant at times." There is no need for me to explain anything, Mr. Minister. You know the difficulty they have and I know you're concerned, as is everyone else in the House, but let's visibly show our concern.

Vote 503 agreed to.

On vote 504, supply and services program; item 1, program administration:

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, this vote has about 16 individual items in it; but in supply and services do you have any policy with regard to buying Canadian? Is there any policy as to considering whether a product is manufactured in Canada or by a Canadian company? Do you have any criteria as far as the amount of difference you might pay if it is manufactured outside of Canada, or if it's manufactured in Canada or Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, we do have a differential. Let's say the tender price of the item is $100—if we have it in small figures it's easier to explain—if it is made in Ontario with some foreign content, let's say it was Dick Ruston's company—has he got many companies?

Mr. Ruston: Afraid not.

Mr. B. Newman: There are a lot of Rustons who are well-to-do, but not this one.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not this one, eh? He's a politician. However, the Ruston company puts in a tender from the Windsor area and its tender is $100. We get another tender from a company outside of Canada. We add 10 per cent to the Canadian content. We will raise your price 10 per cent on the Canadian content.

Only half of your price of $100 might be Canadian content. If $50 of it was Canadian content, we would add 10 per cent to that. That would bring your tender up to $105. If it was 100 per cent Canadian content we would add 10 per cent to that, which would bring it then to $110. The differential for Canadian content is 10 per cent. Have I explained it fully enough, or would you like a further explanation?

Mr. Ruston: I was looking at the supply and administration branch under the special products section with regard to a tender by Purolator Courier Limited. I have the figures here on the tender of Purolator Courier of October 26, 1977, for $329,382, but I have information—and I'm sure you have the letter too—from Swift Sure Courier Service Limited, a Canadian Courier. They are questioning, of course, whether it's an American company. I would like to know what the difference was in the tender on that type of an operation as well. Would it be possible to obtain that information?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'm not sure I got the question. I was preparing myself for the next question and I missed something. Name the company again.

Mr. Ruston: Purolator Courier, on October 26, 1977, had a tender, which apparently was accepted, for $329,382. I was wondering if you could tell me the amount of the tenders of some of the other companies at that same time?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will get that for you Monday. Do you want the other companies that tendered on that?

Mr. Ruston: It was tender number 3111.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Okay. We will have that at the opening of estimates on Monday.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, I have a question on a matter of protocol. I find it interesting that in looking through Hansard the last time anything concerning the flying of flags was dealt with was by John Robarts on May 4, 1965. There may have been more recent statements of policy on that since then, but I could not find any. At that time, Mr. Robarts said the Canadian flag would take precedence over the Ontario flag, at least in flying on parliament buildings and government buildings.

There was an emotional incident that took place at Humber College in my riding a couple of weeks ago when the president of the college received a new Ontario flag and took down the Canadian flag to fly the Ontario flag. Some of the professors started using words like "separatism" and a number of other hostile adjectives against the government for this action. They became quite angry. I understand the next day the Ontario flag was quickly removed and the Canadian flag once more flies high over Humber College.

It does bring out an interesting point. Flags are a symbol and symbols are important to people, particularly at this time when we are concerned about Confederation. I wonder if the ministry has a policy with regard to government buildings. Does the Canadian flag take precedence, and in a case such as happened at Humber College where there is only one flagpole, can you assure us the Canadian flag will fly rather than the Ontario flag?

I have supplied the minister with notice of my question and I am sure he has an answer.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am trying to think. On the right of the honourable member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) is the flag of Canada. The provincial flag flies in front of this building. We have it right up there. That is our position. We fly both flags on all provincial buildings. The flag of Canada on the right takes precedence; on the left of it is the flag of Ontario.

My response to the question of the community colleges, is that we know they are funded by the province and what-have-you, but they are really not provincial buildings. Let me restate the position. All provincial buildings under my jurisdiction fly two flags, the flag of Canada and the flag of Ontario. If one is going to be flown, they will both be flown; but the flag of Canada takes precedence on the right.

Let me go one step further—and I thank the honourable member for sending me advance notice of this question—recently the Ministry of Education sent two flags to all the colleges and universities through my protocol service. They sent a flag of Canada and a flag of Ontario. I am certainly concerned that the flag of Canada would be replaced by the flag of Ontario. I am as interested in one Canada as anybody. The flag of Canada is still our main flag.

The honourable member read from something written in 1965. If memory serves me correctly, on February 2, 1967, we may have attended a flag-raising ceremony for the flag of Ontario out in front of this building—is that date correct?

Mr. Young: Some time or other.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We didn't have a flag of Ontario in 1965. I am trying to think back some 10 or 12 years. I think it was February 2, 1967, we officially dedicated the flag of Ontario.

Mr. Young: We nearly froze.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We nearly froze; that's right, you were there.

Mr. Philip: The position was fairly clearly stated by John Robarts. Perhaps I should have sent this to the minister along with the press clipping. He said: "So far as this government is concerned, the national flag takes the position of precedence when flown over other flags. The policy of government is to continue to fly such flags, including the Canadian flag, over provincial buildings as the occasion requires and custom and usage may determine."

Somewhere in this he mentions a provincial flag. It is the only position I could find concerning the precedence of the national flag over the provincial or other flags. I wonder if the minister would simply communicate with his colleague, the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), since he is the minister responsible for protocol, and suggest to that minister that on college buildings where there is only one flagpole, the Canadian flag be flown until such time as perhaps two flagpoles may be put up. I would be perfectly happy to see both flags flying, I just resent the idea of the Canadian flag being taken down and the Ontario flag being put up. Would he speak to the Ministry of Education about that?

[12:45]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'll be very happy to bring this to the attention of the minister. In fact I will send her a personal letter. I'll enclose a copy of this press clipping you have given us and I'll enclose a copy of the Hansard. But again, I look to my colleague across the way. Did we have something like the flag of St. George previous to 1967 that was an unofficial flag we looked at? There's something runs around in my mind.

Mr. Young: There were a lot of flags looked at at that time, but I've forgotten—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There was no flag, but did we not use that saying—that slogan?

Mr. Philip: If I may, Mr. Chairman, it's the last point I'll make on this. I have found the section where the Honourable John Robarts, noting there was a provincial flag, said, "On the grounds in front of the Parliament Buildings a second flagpole will be erected; the Canadian flag will fly from a pole on the right and the provincial flag will be flown from a pole on the left." I assume that was the provincial flag-raising ceremony that both the minister and the member for Yorkview were referring to.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to go back to an issue my colleague, the member for Essex North, raised about tendering. He asked which of the several tenders one is going to accept—a tender by a company that is American or one Canadian. The city of Windsor council is confronted with that. It was nice to hear the minister say that if there were a 10 per cent differential and the content were 100 per cent American, you would have a 10 per cent differential in the price. In other words, if a Canadian-content item is within a 10 per cent range—it could be 10 per cent more expensive than the American—you would give preferential treatment to the Canadian.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. That's policy of the government; we do that.

Mr. B. Newman: This sets a guideline for municipalities now, Mr. Minister. They would know the province uses this type of policy and they themselves could follow it. In a border town like ours, Americans may tender a little more for items we are going to purchase than in other municipalities. But you've set the guideline and I'll inform council there is a provincial guideline now and they could follow just what you're doing. Thank you.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, my question is a followup on the Canadian content questions that have been asked, but I think this comes under legislative services in this vote. It relates to the program which was put into effect a couple of years ago to allow members to have two reproductions of art work as part of the furnishings for their offices. I think this was a very fine program, so that members' offices had something more than electoral maps and certificates of their election in them. But the design of the program bothered me. We were supplied with a book called Fine Art Reproductions, published by the New York Graphics Society, from which to order the reproductions for our offices. This book contained about 400 old and modern masters but it contained only one Canadian painting.

We had a select committee on economic and cultural nationalism which reported in 1975 that it was necessary to have a Canadian bias in our cultural support. I'll just quote you one phrase from their report: "Canadian culture is at a severe disadvantage because of the enormous promotional resources deployed behind marketing and disseminating foreign cultural products."

The report went on to say: "It is not a question of nationalism versus internationalism, but very much more a question of being selective among possibilities." I protested the fact we were offered a catalogue with only one Canadian painting. Subsequently, the ministry did supply us with a selection of Canadian reproductions and I was able to choose two very good Canadian reproductions for my office, one by David Jean, who is a well-known Canadian artist who happens to live in my riding, and one by Mr. Carlos Marchiori, who did a painting of what's known as the Flatiron Building in Toronto, a very outstanding landmark.

I would like to ask the minister: If this program is continuing, can he not make it a program which has a bias in favour of Canadian reproductions so we can assist Canadian artists in the way the report of the select committee suggested and make sure government money is spent on supporting Canadian art?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable member, there are no books of this nature made in Canada. The one you saw was the one Canadian product and it is the available book. There are no books in Canada. My staff have approached the artists, and have requested they do just what you are requesting of me, but as of this moment, they have not come up with a book. Your proposal is well taken but the artists haven't responded to our request. I would only further add the honourable member had a better opportunity than me. Nobody gave me an opportunity to choose my art. The honourable member is very lucky.

Ms. Bryden: Subsequently, when I asked for Canadian reproductions, I was provided with a portfolio of about 40 reproductions that were available for sale through various agencies. I think that could be made available instead of a book. I think the reason there's no book in the market is a lot smaller in this country, but we can make Canadian reproductions available to the members.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, our own staff may have put that together for the honourable member, but there's no commercially available book. We would like it as much as the member would.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could tell me how many civil servants are furnished with credit cards for gasoline purposes? He may recall an article in the Toronto Star of August 13, 1978. According to this article, there were 10,000 and the cost of gasoline was $28 million in 1977. Can the minister tell us if it can all be verified as being used for business purposes only. What is your policy on that?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, to answer for all government would be very difficult for me. To answer for our department, all drivers driving government vehicles have credit cards. I don't know whether that is enough of an answer, but it is an off-the-cuff answer that all drivers driving government-owned cars have credit cards.

Mr. Ruston: Would the credit cards not be issued through your ministry for all ministries?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, they are issued through our ministry but the allocation is made up by the other ministries. For instance, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications or the Ministry of Education sends us a list of the people who are to get them. We don't decide that.

Mr. Ruston: Does the minister have the total number of credit cards issued?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will get that for you by Monday. We don't have it here.

Mr. Ruston: This article concerns me a little bit because we are handling a great deal of money. I realize that if a person is driving a government car—and naturally that's the easiest way to handle it—and that car is used for purposes other than government business, which happens in some cases, there is a charge back to the individual who is using it. But if the minister can get me that information, I would appreciate it.

The other thing, Mr. Chairman, if I might just say a word about Mr. Laws, who is ill, is that on a number of occasions I have talked to him and asked him for assistance. I want to say that I do appreciate the amount of work he has done in the government service. I do hope he has a speedy recovery from his illness and we are very concerned about him at this time.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions on a matter that is, I suppose, of immediate importance to all of us in the Legislature—at least to those who drive and park in the members' parking lot. I cannot find a breakdown of how much is spent on supervision of the parking lot. I am talking about the commissionaires and so forth. I will ask a series of questions and then perhaps the minister can just answer them all together.

I understand that a number of commissionaires have, in some way, been punished by their supervisors by being docked hours, or that kind of penalty, for "not performing their duties" or for not being at a specific place at a specific time. I am wondering if there is some kind of management problem among the commissionaires? Can the minister give us a breakdown of how much is spent on supervision, that is, in management or quasi-management types of posts with regard to the supervisors, as compared to salaries paid to the commissionaires themselves? Exactly what are the responsibilities of the people who supervise the commissionaires? What is the ratio of management to employees in this case? Can you answer some of those questions?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Laws, who was just referred to by the member for Essex North, is the supervisor over this building. To the best of my knowledge, the case of one employee who was disciplined reached the attention of the minister. The minister supported the decision of the supervisor in that. There were reasons and I supported the supervisor fully in the action he took. Beyond that, if there was some other local incident, we don't have it here in our records.

Mr. Philip: I am not taking a position on one side or the other. I just had the feeling there was some kind of conflict between one or more of the employees and the supervisor. I wonder, perhaps, if the minister can simply write me a note on it; or find the answers and we can discuss it informally.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That's one that will go to the minister, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Philip: I appreciate that. Thank you.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Henderson, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.
